HEATH, Christopher, F.R.C.S., was born in London in 1835, and educated at King's College, London. He was appointed Assistant-Surgeon and Lecturer on Anatomy at the Westminster Hospital in 1862; Assistant-Surgeon and Teacher of Operative Surgery at University College Hospital in 1866; Holme Professor of Clinical Surgery, and Surgeon to University College Hospital in 1875; Fellow of King's College; and Member of Council of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1881, and of the Court of Examiners in 1883; and Consulting Surgeon to the Dental Hospital. He was Examiner in Anatomy at the Royal College of Surgeons in 1875-80; and Examiner for Surgical Degrees at the Universities of Cambridge, Durham, and London, and at the Royal College of Physicians, and President of the Clinical Society of London, 1889-91. He is the author of "A Course of Operative Surgery," illustrated, 2nd edit., 1884; "Manual of Minor Surgery," 10th edit. 1894; "Practical Anatomy," 8th edit. 1893; "Injuries and Diseases of the Jaws" (Jacksonian Prize Essay), 4th edit. 1894; "Student's Guide to Surgical Diagnosis," 2nd edit. 1883; editor of "A Dictionary of Practical Surgery," by various British Hospital Surgeons, 1886, and various contributions to the transactions of learned societies.

HEATH, Francis George, was born at Totnes, Devonshire, Jan. 15, 1843, and educated at Taunton. When very young he began to write the "Autobiographies of Animals." In 1862 he entered the Civil Service, securing the eighth place in a competition of sixty candidates for twenty higher-division appointments in the Customs Department. He now holds the position of Surveyor in the outdoor branch of the same service. For many years he has taken an active part in promoting and supporting movements for the preservation and extension of open spaces, chiefly in and around the metropolis. It was entirely owing to his efforts that the enlargement of Victoria Park, by the addition to it of 24½ acres at a cost of £24,500, was effected in 1872. He also laboured assiduously, from 1872 to 1878, in furtherance of the movement successfully closed by the preservation of Epping Forest. To the literature of that important struggle for "the people's forest," Mr. Heath's pen contributed no less than 300 letters and articles published in various papers. The unique bit of woodland known as Burnham Beeches was also, in 1879, rescued by the Corporation of London upon his suggestion; his letter to the then Lord Mayor, Sir Charles Whetham, being the official document referred for report by the Common Council to its Coal and Corn and Finance Committee. In 1880 he succeeded in defeating the attempt made jointly by the Corporation and the Great Eastern Railway Company to disfigure Epping Forest by the construction of a Chingford and High Beech Railway. In this work Mr. Heath found himself in opposition to his co-defenders of Epping Forest, labouring absolutely alone to obtain press and other influential opposition to the scheme, and so successfully that the House of Commons threw out the joint Bill by a majority of over 150. When, in 1872, the "strike" of agricultural labourers took place in Warwickshire, Mr. Heath undertook a tour of inquiry amongst the peasant population of the West of England; the result being the production of his first book, "The 'Romance' of Peasant Life," which rapidly passed into a second edition, and was followed, in 1874, by "The English Peasantry." In 1875, Mr. Heath (who has been described as "the prophet of fern culture"), with the object of promoting the importation of some of the "green life" of the country into dismal town centres, published "The Fern Paradise: a plea for the Culture of Ferns." A larger volume, "The Fern World," appeared in Aug., 1877, and reached a fourth edition before the end of that year. This was followed in 1878 by an illustrated edition of "The Fern Paradise" and by "Our Woodland Trees." In 1879 Mr. Heath published a little book called "Burnham Beeches," and a new edition of Gilpin's "Forest Scenery," the first republication with copious editorial notes of the overlooked third (and revised) edition of the well-known book, Sir Thomas Dick Lauder Gilpin's editor in 1834 having reissued the second edition. In 1880 he produced a volume under the title of "Sylvan Spring." In the same year appeared "Peasant Life in the West of England," the result of a tour of personal inquiry amongst the peasant population of Wilts, Dorset, Somerset and Devon. "My Garden Wild," a protest against modern systems of horticulture, was produced in 1881, and was followed by "Where to Find Ferns," and "Autumnal Leaves," the first attempt made to produce facsimile representations of the gorgeous colouring of autumnal foliage. Mr. Heath accepted the editorship of the Journal of Forestry in June, 1882, but relinquished it in Oct., 1884, on the change of proprietorship of the journal. In 1885 he published "The Fern Portfolio," a volume containing life-sized coloured plates with brief letterpress descriptions of all the British Ferns. In the same year he issued a collection of miscellaneous writings on sylvan subjects under the title of "Tree Gossip," and a more elaborate work called "Sylvan Winter," designed to exhibit by pen and pencil the charm of wintry woods and the beauty of leafless trees. In 1890 he was returned at the head of the poll in a contest for an honorary Directorship of the Customs Fund, and commenced an active movement for the establishment in this country of a "Letter Express." His efforts in this direction bore speedy fruit, and the "Letter Express" system is now an accomplished fact. Towards the end of 1892 he made an effort to bring about an earlier opening to the public of the Botanical Gardens at Kew; and is now (1895) projecting a scheme for aiding the work of the Imperial Institute by the establishment of an "Imperial Press," an "Imperial Library," and an "Imperial Magazine," all designed "to promote the unity and prosperity of the British Empire."

HEATON, John Henniker, M.P., direct descendant of the Heatons of Heaton, co. Lancaster, is the eldest son of Lieut.-Colonel Heaton, R.E. He was born at Rochester, on May 18, 1848, and educated at Kent House Grammar School, and at King's College, London. At the age of sixteen he emigrated to Australia, where he took to pastoral pursuits with varying fortune, and also became connected with the press, and acquired an interest in the most successful newspapers in New South Wales. He has always been most prominent, in all public and philanthropic works in the Australasian colonies; he represented the Government of New South Wales at the Amsterdam Exhibition in 1883; was appointed by the Government of Tasmania to represent that colony at the Berlin International Telegraphic Conference in 1885, and succeeded in getting a very large reduction made in the cost of cable messages to Australia. In 1884 he was appointed by Mauritius to negotiate its new constitution. He was elected M.P. for Canterbury, England, at the general election in Nov., 1885, and was re-elected in the following year and in 1892. He was appointed Commissioner for the Government of New South Wales to the Indian and Colonial Exhibition in London in 1886. Mr. Heaton is the author of the standard work of reference on Australia, called "The Australian Dictionary of Dates and Men of the Time;" of a work on "The Manners, Customs, Traditions, and Annihilation of the Aborigines of Australia;" also of "A Short Account of a Canonization at Rome, from an Unsectarian Point of View." In Parliament, he is a strong advocate, and first introduced a proposal for a Universal International Penny Postage System, and Cheap Imperial Telegraphs. Owing to his indefatigable exertions, the postage to India and to the principal colonies was, on Jan. 1, 1891, reduced to half the former rates.

HEFNER-ALTENECK, Jacob Heinrich von, a German writer on art, was born at Aschaffenburg, May 20, 1811; went through a complete course of artistic education, and then devoted himself to the diligent study of the history of art, particularly during the Mediæval period. In 1853 he became Conservator of the Royal Vereinigten Sammlungen at Munich; Member of the Royal Bavarian Academy of Sciences (1885); Honourable Member of the Royal Bavarian Academy of Arts; and in 1863 he was appointed Conservator of the Royal collection of prints and drawings. In 1868 he was nominated Conservator-General of the artistic monuments of Bavaria, and Director of the Bavarian National Museum. Among his publications may be mentioned: — "Trachten des Christlichen Mittelalters nach gleichzeitigen Kunstdenkmalen," 1840-54; "Kunstwerke und Geräthschaften des Mittelalters und der Renaissance," 1848-55; "Hans Burgkmaiers Turnierbuch. Nach Maximilian I. Anordnung," 1853; "Die Burg Tannenberg und ihre Ausgrabungen," 1850; "Eisenwerke oder Ornamentik der Schmiedekunst des Mittelalters und der Renaissance," 1861-86; "Serrurerie, ou les Ouvrages en Fer Forgé du moyen-âge et de la Renaissance," 1870; "Die Kunstkammer Seiner Königlichen Hoheit des Fürsten Carl Anton von Hohenzollern," 1866-68; "Trachten, Kunstwerke und Geräthschaften," 1879-90; "Werke deutscher Goldschmiedekunst des 16 Jahrhunderts," 1890; "Entwürfe deutscher Meister für Prachtrüstungen der Könige von Frankreich," 1865; "Original-Zeichnungen deutscher Meister des sechzehnten Jahrhunderts," 1889; "Ornamente der Holzsculptur von 1450-1820, aus dem Bayerischen National-Museum," 1881; Kunstschätze aus dem Bayerischen National-Museum," "Werke Deutscher Goldschmidekunst des 16en Jahrh.," 1890, &c.

HELLMUTH, The Right Rev. Isaac, D.D., D.C.L., was born in Poland, and is of Jewish extraction. Having been converted to Christianity, and ordained in the Anglican Church, he settled in Canada about 1856. By his energy Huron College was established for the education of the future clergy of the diocese. A few months afterwards the London Collegiate School, since named Hellmuth College, was erected. Meanwhile Dr. Hellmuth had been appointed successively Archdeacon and Dean of Huron. Finding that the boys' college (Hellmuth College) was a perfect success, he proceeded to establish a similar college for ladies, which was opened in 1869. On Aug. 24, 1870, he was consecrated Coadjutor-Bishop of Huron, with the title of Bishop of Norfolk, in the Cathedral of St. Paul, London, Canada West. In 1871, on the death of Bishop Cronyn, Dr. Hellmuth succeeded him in the See of Huron. He resigned that See and came to England in 1883, on being appointed Assistant-Bishop in the diocese of Ripon. In 1891 he was appointed Chaplain at Holy Trinity, Pau.

HELY-HUTCHINSON, The Hon. Sir Walter Francis, K.C.M.G., Governor of Natal and Zululand, second son of Richard John, fourth Earl of Donoughmore and Thomasine Jocelyn, his wife, daughter of Walter Steele, of Mognalty, was born in Dublin, Aug. 22, 1849, and educated at Cheam School, Surrey, Harrow, and Cambridge; B.A. Cambridge; Barrister of the Inner Temple 1877. He was Private Secretary to Sir Hercules Robinson, Governor of New South Wales; for Fiji, 1874; for New South Wales, 1875; and was Colonial Secretary of Barbadoes, 1877; Chief Secretary to the Government of Malta, 1883; Lieut.-Governor of Malta, 1884; and Governor of the Windward Islands, 1889; C.M.G., 1883; K.C.M.G., 1888; and Governor of Natal and Zululand, 1893.

HEMSLEY, William Botting, F.R.S., botanist, was born Dec. 29, 1843, at East Hoathley, in the county of Sussex. His father was a gardener and had a large family, and, in consequence of very straitened circumstances during the hard times of the war with Russia, the son was removed from school at the early age of ten years to earn something towards the general support of the family. In 1857 the father undertook the management of a nursery garden at Heathfield, in the same county; and it was there that William, removed from all old associates, first imbibed a taste for botany, and spent most of his little leisure time in studying the wild plants of the neighbourhood. In 1859 the father obtained a more advantageous post at Hassock's Gate. Shortly after, an accident that befel one of William's younger brothers was the means of bringing William under the notice of Mrs. Eardley Hall, a daughter of Mr. William Borrer, a well-known botanist. Through her influence with Sir William Hooker, young Hemsley entered the Kew Herbarium on probation in 1860; and in 1863 he received a regular appointment. In 1867 he broke down in health and was compelled to resign; but after many vicissitudes he returned to Kew again in 1874. Through the assistance of the authorities at Kew, Hemsley soon obtained congenial employment, and he has been actively engaged in botanical work ever since. He is the author of numerous contributions to botanical science, including translations and summaries from various languages; but his principal works are the botany of the "Challenger Expedition," dealing with Insular Floras, the Botany of Salvin, and Godman's magnificent "Biologia Centralis-Americana;" the Botany of Afghanistan, in conjunction with Dr. Aitchison; and the "Index Floræ Sinensis," which is still in progress. In 1875 Mr. Hemsley was elected an Associate of the Linnean Society of London, and in the same year he was appointed Lindley Librarian to the Royal Horticultural Society. In 1876 he was appointed Lecturer on Botany at St. Mary's Hospital, a post he soon resigned. In 1883 he was appointed Assistant for India in the Kew Herbarium, and in 1890 he was promoted to the post of Principal Assistant, a position which he still occupies. One of his latest works, in conjunction with Colonel Collett, on the Flora of the Shan Hills, Upper Burmah, was published in the Journal of the Linnean Society. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London in 1889.

HENDERSON, Lieut.-Col. Sir Edmund Yeamans Walcott, K.C.B., son of Rear-Admiral George Henderson, was born about 1820. Having passed through the ordinary course at Woolwich, he entered the army in 1838, became Lieut.-Col. Royal Engineers in 1862, was for many years Controller of the Convict Department in Western Australia; and was appointed in 1863 to the offices of Surveyor-General of Prisons and Chairman of the Directors of Convict Prisons. He was created a Companion of the Bath Dec. 7, 1868, and appointed on Feb. 12, 1869, Chief Commissioner of Police of the metropolis, in the room of Sir Richard Mayne, deceased. In March, 1878, he was created a K.C.B. Sir Edmund Henderson resigned the post of Chief Commissioner of Police in the early part of 1886, and was succeeded by Sir Charles Warren.

HENEAGE, The Right Hon. Edward, M.P., eldest son of the late George Fieschi Heneage, Esq., of an ancient Lincolnshire family, was born in London, March 29, 1840, and educated at Eton. He accepted a commission in the 1st Life Guards in 1857, but left after six years' service, on succeeding to the family estates. In 1865 Mr. Heneage was returned as a Liberal for Lincoln; he unsuccessfully contested Great Grimsby in 1874, but gained the seat in 1880, and was again returned in 1885, 1886, and 1892. He has always been conspicuous among Liberal members for his great interest in agricultural and sea-fishery questions; and it was probably for this reason that, on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Government in 1885, he was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, with the Vice-Presidency and charge of agricultural interests, a post which he resigned in April, 1886, on account of disagreement with Mr. Gladstone's Irish Bill. Mr. Heneage is High Steward of the Borough of Grimsby, and a Board of Trade Commissioner of the Humber Conservancy. He married, in 1864, Lady Eleanor Cecilia, daughter of the late Lord Listowel.

HENLEY, W. E., poet, critic, dramatist, and editor, was born at Gloucester in 1849, and educated at the same city. In his early years he suffered much from ill-health, and his first book, "In Hospital: Rhymes and Rhythms," was a record of experiences in the Old Infirmary, Edinburgh, in 1873-75. In 1875 he began writing for the London magazines, and in 1877 was one of the founders as well as the editor of London. In this journal much of his early verse appeared. He was afterwards appointed editor of the Magazine of Art, and in 1889 of the Scots Observer, which, under its new title of the National Observer, he still conducts. To these journals, as well as to the Athenæum and Saturday Review, he has contributed many critical articles, a selection of which was published in 1890 under the title of "Views and Reviews" (2nd ed., 1892). In collaboration with Mr. R. L. Stevenson he has published a volume of plays (1893), of which "Beau Austin" was previously acted at the Haymarket Theatre. In 1892 appeared his second volume of poems, "The Song of the Sword," of which a second edition appeared in 1893. These verses mark a new departure in Mr. Henley's style, and may be described as the "poetry of vigour." We have also from his pen "A Catalogue of French and Dutch Pictures at the Edinburgh Exhibition" (1887). He has edited a series of "Tudor Translations," a collection of "Verses for Englishmen," entitled "Lyra Heroica," and, with Mr. Charles Whibley, an anthology of English prose. In 1893 Mr. Henley received the honour of the LL.D. degree at St. Andrews University. He has recently become editor of the New Review.

HENNER, Jean Jacques, a French painter, noted for his Rembrandt-like effects, born at Bernwiller, Alsace, March 5, 1829, was a pupil of Drölling and Picot, and in 1848 entered the École des Beaux-Arts. At the end of two years ill-health compelled him to return home; but he was readmitted in 1858, and gained a prize for his "Adam et Eve retrouvant le corps d'Abel." After this he went to Rome, studied under Hipp, and painted four pictures for the Musée de Colmar, one of which, "Jeune baigneur endormi," was exhibited at the Salon of 1863, together with a fine portrait of Victor Schnetz. "La Chaste Suzanne," 1865, was purchased by the Government, and is now in the Luxembourg. "Alsacienne," 1870, one of his best-known pictures, was presented, in 1872, to M. Gambetta by a committee of Alsatian ladies. His later works are: "Madeleine dans le Désert," and "Le bon Samaritain," 1874; "Le Christ Mort," 1878; "Eglogue" and "Jésus au Tombeau," 1879; "Saint Jérome," 1881; "Herodiade," 1887; "Saint Sébastien," 1888; "Prière" and "Martyre," 1889; "Mélancolie," 1890; "Pietà" and "Pleureuses," 1891; &c. M. Henner has obtained numerous medals at the Salon; was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1873; and was made an Officer in 1878. He was elected a member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts in succession to Cabanel in 1889.

HENNESSY, Professor Henry, F.R.S., M.R.I.A., was born on March 19, 1826, in Cork, where he received an excellent school training in mathematics and languages; but the disabilities regarding higher education for those who were not members of the lately disestablished Church of Ireland prevented him from entering the University. He had thus to pursue the study of the higher parts of mathematics unaided, and at such intervals as his professional work as an assistant engineer permitted. Before attaining to any position of a public nature he had commenced his career as a labourer in scientific investigation. The total amount of published matter which he has achieved amounts to more than eighty original papers, which have appeared in British and foreign scientific journals, the Reports of the British Association, the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy and the Royal Society, and the Comptes Rendus of the Paris Academy of Sciences. In 1851 his "Researches on Terrestrial Physics" appeared in the Transactions of the Royal Society, and in this memoir, as well as others communicated to the Institute of France and to the Royal Irish Academy during subsequent years, he has investigated several questions regarding the figure and structure of the earth and planets. From the first he held to the view of the fluid origin of these bodies, and he has always maintained that all the facts regarding the earth which come under our notice are best explained by the existence of fluid matter at a high temperature enclosed within its crust. He has also written papers on Climatology, which have appeared in various publications, including those of the bodies above mentioned. He claims to have proved laws of temperature distribution in islands, and to have deduced consequences of general application from the physical properties of water. Long before the present tendency to develop inland navigation, Mr. Hennessy published essays in some of the engineering journals, in which he advocated improvements and extensions in canal and river navigation. Besides his scientific papers, Mr. Hennessy is author of pamphlets relating to Education, and, among others, of one relating to the study of science, a considerable portion of which has been reprinted in an Appendix to the Duke of Devonshire's Commission on Scientific Instruction. He has contributed to the discussion on international weights and measures by some publications, and by the proposal of a new standard derived from the earth's polar axis, which was soon afterwards advocated by Sir John Herschel. A series of weights and measures constructed from this standard were made under Prof. Hennessy's superintendence. These are now in the College of Science, Dublin, together with a number of instruments and models of machinery, executed by metal workers in Ireland. Some of these were designed by Prof. Hennessy, and they were intended to promote technical education and skilled industries. With reference to other industries, Prof. Hennessy prepared a report in 1870 on the temperature of the waters surrounding the British Isles, for a Commission of Inquiry into Irish Fisheries, and he afterwards applied some of his meteorological deductions to questions relating to Agriculture. In 1855, on the invitation of Cardinal Newman, he became Professor of Physics in the Roman Catholic University of Ireland; and in 1874 he was appointed by the Duke of Richmond to the Professorship of Applied Mathematics in the Royal College of Science. In this office he occupied himself with inquiries in Hydraulics and Mechanism, some of which have appeared in the publications of the Royal Society. He was elected an F.R.S. in 1858, and has been Vice-President of the Royal Irish Society.

HENRICI, Olaus, Ph.D., LL.D., F.R.S., was born March 9, 1840, at Meldorf, in Holstein, and received his early education in the gymnasium of his native town. In 1856 he left Meldorf in order to study for some years in the workshops of a mechanical engineer. In 1859 he proceeded to the Polytechnic School in Karlsruhe, where he remained until 1862, when he entered the University of Heidelberg. Here, in 1863, he graduated with special honours as Ph.D. Dr. Henrici next proceeded to Berlin in order there to prosecute his mathematical studies. In 1865 he became tutor in the University of Kiel, but left soon afterwards for London. In 1869 Dr. Henrici was appointed Professor of Pure Mathematics in University College, London; and, in 1884, Professor of Mechanics and Mathematics in the Central Institution of the City Guilds of the London Institute; he holds the latter post at the present time. In 1868 he was elected a Member, and in 1883 President of the London Mathematical Society. He is the author of the following papers: "Bemerkung zu 'Hesse' Zerlegung der Bedingung für die Gleichheit der Hauptaxen eines auf einer Oberfläche zweiter Ordnung liegenden Kegelschnittes" (in Crelle's Journal, vol. lxiv., 1864); "Transformation von Differential-ausdrücken erster Ordnung zweiten Grades mit Hülfe der verallgemeinerten elliptischen Co-ordinaten" (Crelle's Journal, vol. lxv., 1865); "On Certain Formulæ concerning the Theory of Discriminants; with Applications to Discriminants of Discr., and to the Theory of Polar Curves" (in the "Proceedings" of the London Mathem. Society, vol. ii., read in Nov. 1868); and "On Series of Curves, especially on the Singularities of their Envelopes: with Applications to Polar Curves," also in the "Proceedings" of the London Mathematical Society, vol. ii.

HENRY of Battenberg (Prince), son of Prince Alexander of Hesse and of the Rhine, was born on Oct. 5, 1858, and on July 23, 1885, married H.R.H. the Princess Beatrice, born April 14, 1857, and has two sons and a daughter. His Royal Highness (a title conferred upon him on his marriage) is Governor of the Isle of Wight, and of Carisbrook Castle.

HENTY, George Alfred, was born at Trumpington, Cambridgeshire, Dec. 8, 1832, and educated at Westminster School and at Caius College, Cambridge. He left Cambridge to go out to the Crimea in the Purveyor's Department. Returning invalided, he was promoted to the rank of Purveyor to the Forces, and was sent out to Italy to organize the hospitals of the Italian legion. At the end of the war he returned home, and had charge first of the Belfast, and afterwards of the Portsmouth, districts. He resigned his commission, and for several years was occupied in mining operations in Wales, Italy, &c. Then he went upon the staff of the Standard newspaper. As a special correspondent of that journal he witnessed the Italo-Austrian war; was with Garibaldi in his campaigns in the Tyrol; at the opening of the Suez Canal; with the Abyssinian Expedition to Magdala, and the Ashanti Expedition to Coomassie. He also went through the Franco-German war, and the Communal Siege of Paris, and was likewise out in the Carlist Insurrection. He went to Russia for the Standard at the time of the Khiva Expedition, and on his return visited the mining regions of the United States, in California, Nevada, Utah, and on Lake Superior. He accompanied the Prince of Wales in his tour through India, and was with the Turkish army in the Turko-Servian war. Mr. Henty is the author of "A Search for a Secret," "All But Lost," and other novels; "The March to Magdala," "The March to Coomassie," "Out on the Pampas," "The Young Franc-Tireurs," "The Young Colonist," and a large number of other books for boys, chiefly of an historical character.

HERBERT, Hon. Hilary A., American statesman, was born at Lawrenceville, South Carolina; removed with his father at the age of twelve years to Greenville, Ala.; was educated at the Universities of Alabama and Virginia; studied law and was admitted to the Bar of the Supreme Court of Alabama. During the Civil War he served in the Confederate Army as Captain and Colonel, and was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness, May, 1864. At the close of the war he resumed the practice of his profession, at Greenville, till 1872, and since then at Montgomery, which is now his home. From 1877 to 1893 he was a Representative in Congress. On the accession of Mr. Cleveland to the Presidency for the second time (March, 1893), Mr. Herbert became Secretary of the Navy.

HÉRÉDIA, José-Maria de, French poet, was born in the island of Cuba, at La Fortune-Laféyère, near Santiago, on Nov. 22, 1842. He was sent to France, and studied history in the École des Chartes, and subsequently wrote for the Revue des Deux Mondes, the Temps, and other leading French periodicals and newspapers. His fame as a poet is chiefly based on his volume of sonnets, which attracted great attention at the time of their publication, their classical polish being particularly admired in literary circles. On Feb. 22, 1894, M. de Hérédia was elected a member of the Academy, in succession to the late M. de Mazade.

HEREFORD, Bishop of. See PERCIVAL, THE RT. REV. JOHN.

HERKOMER, Hubert, R.A., was born in 1849, at Waal, in Bavaria. His father, Lorenzo Herkomer, who is a skilful woodcarver, emigrated with his family, in 1851, to the United States, but in 1857 sought to improve his fortunes in England, and settled in Southampton. As a boy, Hubert was hindered much in his education by ill-health and poverty; but at thirteen he entered the Art School at Southampton, and won a bronze medal there. In 1865 he went to Munich with his father (who had been commissioned to carve copies of figures by Peter Vischer), and while there the young artist was aided in his studies by Professor Echter. In 1866 he entered the schools at South Kensington, but after five months was obliged to return to Southampton, where he was instrumental in establishing a drawing-school for the study of the living model; and at Christmas in that year he and the young artists associated with him held an exhibition of their works, in which he sold his first picture. In 1867 he went again to South Kensington for a few months, and in the following year he established himself in the village of Hythe, and there painted two pictures, which he exhibited at the Dudley Gallery (1868). He then came to London, and occupied himself successfully with water-colour painting and designing for the wood engravers. In 1871 Mr. Herkomer was invited to join the Institute of Painters in Water Colours; and to the gallery of this Society, and subsequently to the Grosvenor and the Academy Exhibitions, he has contributed many drawings, chiefly of Bavarian subjects, and latterly some with figures or portraits about the scale of Nature. The oil picture, "After the Toil of the Day," in the Academy Exhibition of 1873, extended his reputation and prepared the way for "The Last Muster," 1875, the memorable picture of Chelsea pensioners, which, after appearing in the Lecture Room at Burlington House in 1875, figured at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, and was there awarded one of the two grand Medals of Honour carried off by the English school. Subsequently the artist turned his attention to etching and other branches of practice. His later pictures, exhibited at the Royal Academy, are:—"At Death's Door," 1876, a picture of peasants of the Bavarian Alps in prayer, awaiting the arrival of the priest who is to administer the last sacraments of the Church to a member of the family; "Der Bittgang," peasants praying for a successful harvest, 1877; "Eventide: a Scene in the Westminster Union," "A Welshwoman," and "Souvenir de Rembrandt," 1878; "Relating his Adventure," 1879; "God's Shrine," "Grandfather's Pet," "Two Sides of a Question," and "Wind-swept," 1880; "Missing," a scene at the Portsmouth dockyard gates after the loss of the Atalanta, 1881; "Homeward," 1882; and "Natural Enemies," 1883. In 1888 he painted a portrait of Mrs. Gladstone, which was presented to her on the occasion of her golden wedding. In 1889 he exhibited "The Chapel of the Charterhouse;" and it was purchased out of the funds of the Chantry Bequest. Mr. Herkomer was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, June 19, 1879; and in the same year he was elected an honorary member of the Imperial Academy of Vienna. In September, 1881, he received from the Hochstiftung of Frankfort-on-Main a diploma of membership and mastership of the Institute; and in 1886, at the Berlin Exhibition, one of the "Great gold medals" for art. He founded and superintends the Art School at Bushey, Herts, in connection with which a theatre was opened in 1888, where a "romantic fragment," "The Sorceress," by Professor Herkomer himself, has been performed, as well as his musical and pictorial play, entitled "Scenes in ye Olden Time." He was created an officer of the Legion of Honour for his services in connection with the Paris Exhibition in 1889. The honour of Royal Academician was conferred on him in 1890.

HERMITE, Professor Charles, was born on Dec. 25, 1822, at Dieuze (Lorraine), and studied first at Nancy, and then at Paris. He is a distinguished mathematician, Professor of Higher Algebra at the Sorbonne, and Honorary Professor at the Ecole Polytechnique. His publications are chiefly in the scientific and mathematical journals of France and other countries: and deal with the theory of numbers, the theory of algebraical forms, elliptic functions, &c. He has edited, in conjunction with Gerret, the Elementary Treatise of Lacroix on the Differential and Integral Calculi (1867). Professor Hermite is Foreign Member of the Royal Society, and of the Mathematical Society of London; of the Royal Society of Edinburgh; the Royal Irish Academy; and of the Academies of Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Munich, Naples, and Stockholm. He is also a Member of the Royal Academy, and of the Pontifical Academy of the Nuovi Lincei at Rome, and is Commander of the Legion of Honour, and Knight or Commander of other orders.

HERSCHELL, Right Honourable Farrer, First Lord (formerly Sir Farrer Herschell), is the son of the Rev. R. H. Herschell, was born in 1837, and received his education at University College, London, and at the University of Bonn (B.A. Lond., 1867). He was called to the Bar in 1860, and in 1872 became a Q.C. and a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn. In the following year he was appointed Recorder of Carlisle, and in 1874 was returned to Parliament for Durham City, which he represented till 1885 in the Liberal interest. In Mr. Gladstone's Ministry in 1880 he was appointed Solicitor-General, and was knighted in the same year. He was raised to the peerage as Lord Herschell in 1866, and became Lord Chancellor. He took part in the Round Table Conference on Home Rule, the first meeting of which was held in his house. He was unanimously appointed President of the Royal Commission which inquired into the working of the Metropolitan Board of Works. On the return to power of the Gladstonians in 1892 he was again made Lord Chancellor. In 1886 the hon. D.C.L. degree was conferred upon him by the University of Oxford, and in June, 1893, Cambridge University honoured him with the LL.D. degree. In the same year he was made a G.C.B.

HERTSLET, Sir Edward, K.C.B., son of the late Lewis Hertslet, Esq., who for fifty-seven years was sub-librarian and afterwards librarian and keeper of the papers of the Foreign Office, was born in Westminster, Feb. 3, 1824, and educated at private schools. He entered the Foreign Office March 23, 1840, and was promoted to be sub-librarian April 1, 1855; and librarian and keeper of the papers, Nov. 19, 1857; was elected F.R.G.S., Jan. 11, 1858. He is the author of "Hertslet's Commercial Treaties," a work in 18 vols., which was begun by his father in 1820; the "British and Foreign State Papers," a work in 78 vols., also begun by his father in 1825, and compiled for the use of Her Majesty's Government; "The Map of Europe by Treaty," a work in 4 vols., showing the various political and territorial changes which took place in Europe between 1814 and 1891, with numerous maps; "Analyses of Treaties and Tariffs regulating the Trade between Great Britain and various Foreign Powers," in 7 vols.; and the "Foreign Office List," forming a complete diplomatic and consular handbook, which has been published annually since 1852. He was made a Companion of the Bath Feb. 21, 1874, and was attached to the special embassy of the late Earl of Beaconsfield and the Marquis of Salisbury to the Congress of Berlin in June and July, 1878, with a Royal Commission as acting secretary of Embassy in Her Majesty's diplomatic service; and was knighted by Her Majesty, July 30, 1878, in recognition of his services in Berlin. He was one of the British Delegates appointed in June, 1889, to examine into the question of the boundary between the Netherland Territories in Borneo, and those under British protection, and he was made a K.C.B. on August 20, 1892.

HERVÉ, Aimé Marie Edouard, a French journalist, born May 28, 1835, at Saint-Denis, in the island of Réunion, is the son of a Professor of mathematics in the college of that town, where he began his studies, which he terminated in a particularly brilliant manner in Paris at the Collège Napoléon. In 1854 he entered the Normal School, being the first on the list for promotion in the department of literature; but he sent in his resignation shortly afterwards in order that he might devote his undivided attention to journalism. He was connected first of all with the Revue de l'Instruction Publique, and the Revue Contemporaine, to which he contributed (1860) the political summary; and he then became editor of the Courrier de Dimanche (1863), of the Temps (1864), and of the Epoque (1865). The hostility of the Government having rendered it almost impossible to continue his connection with a French newspaper, he transferred his services to the Journal de Genève, of which he became one of the principal correspondents. After the publication of the Imperial letter of Jan. 19, 1867, inaugurating a new system for the press, M. Hervé established, in conjunction with M. Jean Jacques Weiss, the Journal de Paris (1867), which became noted for its persistent attacks on the Imperial régime. At the general election of May, 1869, M. Hervé came forward, in the circonscription of Arras, as the candidate of the Liberal opposition, under the patronage of M. Thiers, but he was defeated at the poll by the official candidate, M. Sens. M. Weiss having retired from the strife of political journalism, on being nominated general secretary of the Ministry of Fine Arts, M. Hervé remained sole editor of the Journal de Paris, and on Feb. 5, 1873, he started the Soleil, a large political halfpenny newspaper, which at the outset was merely an offshoot of the Journal de Paris, and conducted by the same literary staff. After the visit of the Comte de Paris to Frohsdorff which preceded the attempt to re-establish the ancient monarchy, M. Hervé proclaimed loudly "the reconciliation of the House of France," and engaged, with reference to this subject, in an animated controversy with M. Edmond About, the editor of the Dix-Neuvième Siècle. This dispute ended in a duel, in which M. About was slightly wounded. After the proclamation of the Septennate, M. Hervé supported the policy of the Broglie, Cissy, and Buffet Cabinets. On April 28, 1876, M. Hervé announced to the readers of the Journal de Paris the discontinuance of that journal, after nine years of a stormy existence; and since then he has remained editor of the Soleil. M. Hervé has been a consistent adversary of the Republicans for many years. After the death of the Comte de Chambord, he converted his paper into the official organ of the new House of France. He has failed some four times to become a Deputy, but has been decorated with the Legion of Honour, and in Feb., 1886, succeeded the Duc de Noailles in the Academy. He has published in book form, under the title of "Une Page d'Histoire Contemporaine," 1869, a series of articles on the elections in England, and the leading statesmen of this country, and a work on the history of the Irish Crisis (1885).

HEURTLEY, The Rev. Charles Abel, D.D., born about 1806, was educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, of which he was successively Scholar and Fellow; was presented by his college to the rectory of Fenny Compton, Warwickshire, in 1840; discharged the office of Bampton Lecturer in 1845; and was appointed to an Honorary Canonry in Worcester Cathedral in 1848. In 1853 he was elected to the Margaret Professorship of Divinity, to which is attached a Canonry in Christ Church Cathedral; and in 1864 he was chosen a member of the Hebdomadal Council. Dr. Heurtley, who has been three times appointed one of the select preachers of the University of Oxford, is the author of several volumes of sermons, University and Parochial, including his Bampton Lectures "On Justification," and of "Harmonia Symbolica, a Collection of Creeds belonging to the Ancient Western Church," 1858; together with pamphlets on the Eucharist, on Prayer addressed to Christ, and on the Age of the Athanasian Creed. He is the editor of a volume "De Fide et Symbole," containing ancient documents and treatises illustrative of the Creed. Of the Treatises he has published a translation. He is also the author of a Translation of the "Commonitory of Vincent of Lerius," one of a series of Translations of the Post-Nicene Fathers, now in course of publication.

HEYSE, Paul Johann Ludwig, a German poet and novelist, was born March 15, 1830, in Berlin, where his father was a distinguished University Professor and philologist. He was educated in the Frederick-William Gymnasium of his native city, and in the Universities of Berlin and Bonn, where he applied himself to the study of philology. In 1852 he repaired to Italy, to examine the manuscripts in the public libraries of Rome, Florence, and Venice. In May, 1854, he was summoned to Munich by King Maximilian, and he there married the daughter of the eminent writer on art, Franz Kugler. He has written some tragedies, which have been performed in various towns of Germany, viz.: "Francesca di Rimini," 1850; "Meleager," 1854; "The Men of the Palatinate in Ireland (Die Pfälzer in Irland)," 1855; "Elizabeth Charlotte," 1860; "The Counts Von der Esche;" and some others, which, though never presented on the stage, have been eagerly read by a wide circle of readers. He has also produced narrative and epic poems, "The Brothers," 1852; "Thecla," a poem in nine cantos, 1858; and a number of collections of metrical tales and novels ("Gesammelte Novellen in Versen," 1863). Besides these, he has published various works on philology and on old French, Spanish, and Italian poetry. His later productions are "Troubadour-Novellen," 1882; "Don Juan's End," a tragedy, "Buch der Freundschaft," and "Siechentrost," 1883; and "Gesammelte Werke," in 21 vols., 1872-85.

HEYWOOD, James, F.R.S., M.A., Cambridge, fifth son of the late Mr. Nathaniel Heywood, banker, of Manchester, born May 28, 1810, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was a senior optime in 1833, but did not graduate B.A. till 1857, when enforced subscription to a declaration of the Church of England membership was abolished by the Cambridge University Reform Act, which he had done much to promote. He was called to the Bar in 1838, but did not practise; was one of the members for North Lancashire in 1847, and moved the address of the House of Commons to the Queen, in reply to her Majesty's speech. In April, 1850, he moved for an address to the Queen for a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the English and Irish Universities; and on the withdrawal of this motion, the prime minister (Lord J. Russell) intimated his intention of recommending her Majesty to issue a Commission of general inquiry into the seats of learning. On the order of the day (June 24, 1854) for the consideration of the Oxford University Bill as amended, Mr. Heywood moved and carried, by 252 votes against 161, the abolition of religious tests at matriculation, but was beaten the same evening in an attempt to abolish religious tests on taking all secular degrees, though eventually (June 29) he carried a clause by 233 against 78, in favour of their abolition for a bachelor's degree in arts, law, medicine, and music. A clause in the Cambridge University Reform Bill doing away with tests on taking degrees in arts, law, medicine, and music, was carried by 118 to 41 (June 20, 1856), as well as a clause opening college scholarships for undergraduates. Mr. Heywood published in 1853, "The History of University Subscription Tests;" and in 1855, translations of "The Early Cambridge Statutes," "Academical Reform and University Representation;" also "Cambridge University Transactions during the Puritan Controversies," Prof. Huber's "English Universities," Prof. von Bohlen's "Illustrations of the first part of Genesis," and Prof. Heer's "Primæval World of Switzerland." After the removal of religious tests from degrees in arts, law, medicine, and music, at Cambridge, Mr. Heywood took his degree in that University, and voted in the Academical Senate. Mr. Heywood married Annie Escher, and had a daughter, Annie Sophia. For more than twenty years he has resided in Kensington, and he presented to that parish a free library (to which the Vestry added a reference free library), and a free library for Brompton.

HIBBERT, The Right Hon. Sir John Tomlinson, M.P., K.C.B., eldest son of Elijah Hibbert, of Oldham, by Elizabeth, daughter of A. Hilton, Esq., was born at Oldham in 1824, and educated at Shrewsbury school and at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1847; M.A. 1851). He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in 1849. Mr. Hibbert, who is a Liberal in politics, unsuccessfully contested Oldham in 1859, and Blackburn in Sept., 1875. He succeeded in his candidature for Oldham in May, 1862, when he was returned unopposed, and he continued to represent that borough till the general election of Jan., 1874, when he was an unsuccessful candidate; but on the death of Mr. Corbett in 1877 he regained his seat, and he was again returned at the general election of April, 1880. Mr. Hibbert was Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board from 1872 to Feb., 1874, and on the formation of the Gladstone ministry in May, 1880, he was re-appointed to his former office, which he held till June, 1883, when he was nominated Under-Secretary at the Home Office, in succession to the Earl of Rosebery. In 1885 he was appointed Secretary to the Treasury, and he was again returned for Oldham, and was appointed Secretary to the Admiralty in Mr. Gladstone's Government in 1886. At the general election of 1886 he stood as a Gladstonian Liberal, and was defeated by a large majority. In July, 1892, he was again returned for Oldham, and on the formation of the Gladstone Ministry, was appointed Secretary to the Treasury. He is a magistrate and deputy lieutenant of the County Palatine of Lancaster, and is Chairman of the Council of that County and of the County Councils Association.

HICKS, Henry, M.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., son of the late Thomas Hicks, surgeon, of St. David's, Pembrokeshire, by Anne, daughter of William Griffiths, Esq., of Carmarthen, was born in 1837, and was educated at the Collegiate and Chapter School in that city and at Guy's Hospital, London. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons and a Licentiate of the Society of Apothecaries in 1862, and M.D. of the University of St. Andrew's in 1878, and practised medicine at St. David's from 1862 to 1871. During that time he commenced his geological researches amongst the older rocks of that neighbourhood. His first paper was communicated to the Liverpool Geological Society in 1863. In the following years, in conjunction with the late Mr. Salter (Palæontologist to the Geological Survey) he contributed several papers to the British Association, Geological Society, &c. In 1871 he removed to Hendon, Middlesex, and since that time has carried on researches in North Wales and Scotland, the results being communicated in numerous papers to the Geological Society, British Association, London Geologists' Association, Geological Magazine, &c. Of late his investigations have been mainly confined to the oldest (Pre-Cambrian) rocks of Great Britain, and he has shown that they are exposed in many areas in which their presence had been hitherto unsuspected. Dr. Hicks has also described many new fossils discovered by him in the Cambrian, Ordovician, and Silurian rocks, and has written several papers on the classification of those rocks. He has also published results of explorations carried on by him in ossiferous caverns in North and South Wales, in which evidence is given to show that man occupied some of the caverns during a part of the Glacial period. In 1891 he described the Glacial Deposits at Hendon and Finchley, and in 1892 he published an account of the discovery of mammoth and other remains in Endsleigh Street, London, with sections of the deposits in which they were found. He has also written several papers on the rocks of North Devon, and has discovered a rich fauna in the "Monte slates," which until then were considered to be entirely unfossiliferous. A new geological map of North Wales was prepared by him for the International Geological Congress which met in London in 1888. Dr. Hicks was awarded the Bigsby Gold Medal of the Geological Society in 1883, and has been Hon. Secretary and for some time on the Council of that society. He was President of the London Geologists' Association in 1883—1885; and elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1885. He is corresponding member of the Academy of Natural Science, Philadelphia, and hon. member of the Liverpool Geological Society, Chester Society of Natural Science, &c. He married, in 1864, Mary, only daughter of the Rev. P. D. Richardson, Vicar of St. Dogwells, Pembrokeshire.

HICKS, John Braxton, M.D.Lond., F.R.C.P., F.R.S., F.C.S., &c., second son of Edward Hicks, Esq., of Lymington, was born at Rye, Sussex, in 1823, whence he was taken to Lymington two months afterwards. He was educated at Rev. J. O. Lillwood's, Compton Rectory, Winchester, and under Dr. Fluder at Lymington, and at the age of 18 became a student at Guy's Hospital, where he secured First Prize in Anatomy, and otherwise highly distinguished himself. In 1847 he took the first M.B. with honours at the University of London, won the Exhibition and Gold Medal in Materia Medica, and was bracketed first in Anatomy. He became M.D.Lond. in 1851, Fellow of the Linnean Society in 1852, F.R.S. in 1862, Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1866, Obstetric Physician and Lecturer at Guy's Hospital in 1869, Consulting ditto in 1883, President of the Obstetrical Society of London in 1871—1872, Orator to the Hunterian Society in 1878, President of the same in 1879, Examiner in Obstetrics to the University of London and to the Royal College of Physicians in 1872—1878 and 1889—1893. He was Vice-President of the International Medical Congress, London, and is honorary fellow of the leading obstetrical societies here and in America and at Berlin. He retired from active duty at Guy's according to rule, and three years afterwards was asked to become Obstetric Physician and Lecturer at St. Mary's for a term of five years, at the end of which time he was elected Consulting Obstetric Physician to the same hospital. He was also for some years Physician to the Royal Infirmary for Women and Children in Waterloo Road, and to the Southern Branch of the Royal Maternity Charity, to which he is now Consulting Physician. Dr. Braxton Hicks is the author of very numerous papers on original medical subjects, chiefly obstetrical, published in the Transactions of the Obstetrical, Medical, Hunterian, and Harveian Societies and of the International Medical Congresses, and of Papers in Italian, American, and Australian medical journals; in the Lancet, the British Medical Association Journal, the Medical Press and Circular. He has published papers in the Royal Society's "Proceedings" on "The Eyes of Invertebrata;" "On Supplementary Forces concerned in circulation of Uterus, &c.;" and in the Transactions of the Linnean Society on Discoveries of New Sensory Organs in various parts of Insects, &c. He has also published papers on Gonidia of Lichens; on the Unicellular Algæ; and Confervoid Filaments in Mosses; and on New Draparnaldia, &c. Also papers on Volvoy Globator, Amæboid Vegetable Bodies, Gonidia of Lichens, &c., in the Microscopical Journal; and on "Effects of Bodily Movements on Respiration;" on "Tension of Abdomen" (Medical Society Transactions and American Journal). He is the inventor of Apparatus Helpful in Nursing and Moving Patients, making beef tea, &c. He is founder of the Lymington Ambulance Centre, Lecturer for Ambulance Classes, and was for some years Vestryman at St. George's, Hanover Square. He is one of the "Post-Graduate" Lecturers for the Medical Profession.

HICKS, William Mitchinson, F.R.S., was born at Launceston, Sept. 23, 1850, and entered at St. John's College, Cambridge, Oct., 1869. He took the degree of B.A., after Mathematical Tripos, 1873; and was elected Fellow of St. John's College, 1876. The fellowship was extended for five years in 1882. In 1885 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He became Principal of Firth College, Sheffield, and Professor of Mathematics and Physics in 1883; and is the author of the following papers, published in the Transactions of the Royal Society: "On the Motion of two Spheres in a Fluid," 1879; "On Toroidal Functions," 1881; "Steady Motion and Small Vibrations of a Hollow Vortex," 1883; and "Researches in the Theory of Vortex Rings," 1885. At the British Association Meetings, 1881–82, Mr. Hicks read a "Report on Recent Progress in Hydrodynamics." He has contributed also several papers to various other journals, and is the author of "Elementary Dynamics of Particles and Solids," 1889.

HICKS-BEACH, The Right Hon. Sir Michael Edward, Bart., P.C., M.P., D.C.L., eldest son of the late Sir Michael Hicks Hicks-Beach, of Williamstrip Park, Gloucestershire, the eighth baronet, by his wife, Harriet Vittoria, daughter of John Stratton, Esq., of Farthinghoe Lodge, Northamptonshire, was born in Portugal Street, London, in 1837. From Eton he was sent to Christ Church, Oxford (B.A., 1858; M.A., 1861; Hon. D.C.L., 1878). In July, 1864, he was elected M.P. for East Gloucestershire. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Poor Law Board from Feb. till Dec. 1868, with the exception of a few weeks, during which he was Under-Secretary for the Home Department. When the Conservatives again came into office in Feb., 1874, Sir M. Hicks-Beach was appointed Chief Secretary for Ireland. On taking that office he was sworn on the Privy Council, and in 1877 he was admitted to a seat in the Cabinet. In Feb., 1878, he was nominated Secretary of State for the Colonies, in the place of Lord Carnarvon, who had resigned in consequence of a difference with his colleagues on the Eastern Question. Sir M. Hicks-Beach went out of office with his party in April, 1880, and on the accession of Lord Salisbury to power was appointed Chancellor of the Exchequer, with the leadership of the House of Commons, June, 1885. This he held till Mr. Gladstone's return to power. On the dissolution in 1886 he was returned again for West Bristol, which he had previously represented, and accepted the office of Chief Secretary for Ireland, vacated by Mr. John Morley. He resigned this office from ill-health, March, 1887, and in Feb., 1888, was appointed President of the Board of Trade, and retained that office until August, 1892. Sir Michael is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Gloucestershire, and was for fourteen years captain in the Royal North Gloucestershire Militia. He was appointed a Church Estates Commissioner in December, 1893. He has served on the Royal Commissions on Friendly Societies, on Reformatory and Industrial Schools, and on Labour.

HIGGINSON, Mary (Thacher), was born at Machias, Me., Nov. 27, 1843, and is the daughter of Peter and Margaret (Potter) Thacher. She is the niece, by his first marriage, of Henry W. Longfellow, who induced her to publish her first book, "Seashore and Prairies," 1876. She has since published, "Room for One More" (a tale), 1879; and, with her husband (T. W. Higginson), a volume of poems, "Such as They Are," 1893.

HIGGINSON, Thomas Wentworth, was born at Cambridge, Massachusetts, Dec. 22, 1823. He graduated at Harvard College in 1841, studied divinity, and was a minister of the Theodore Parker school until 1858, when, having entered actively into literature and also into political affairs, notably in the anti-slavery conflict in Kansas, he abandoned the pulpit. In 1862 he became captain in a Massachusetts regiment of volunteers, and afterwards colonel of a coloured regiment in South Carolina, this being the first regiment of freed slaves in the United States service. He was severely wounded in Aug., 1863, and left the service in the following year. From the close of the war to 1878 he resided at Newport, Rhode Island, but since 1878 has lived at Cambridge, Massachusetts. He is an earnest advocate of woman suffrage, and in 1880 and in 1881 was a member of the Massachusetts Legislature. From 1881 to 1884 he was a member of the State Board of Education. He has published "Outdoor Papers," 1863; "Malbone, an Oldport Romance," 1869, and "Oldport Days," 1873, both depicting life at the watering-place of Newport; "Army Life in a Black Regiment," which was translated into French, 1870; "The Sympathy of Religions," 1871 (reprinted 1893);

"Harvard Memorial Biographies," 1866; "Atlantic Essays," 1871; "Brief Biographies of European Statesmen," 1875; a "Young Folks' History of the United States," 1875, which has been translated into French, Italian, and German; "Young Folks' Book of American Explorers," 1877; "Short Studies of American Authors," 1879; "Common Sense about Women," 1881; "Margaret Fuller Ossoli," 1884; "A Larger History of the United States," 1885; "The Monarch of Dreams," 1886; "Hints on Writing and Speech-making," 1887; "Women and Men," 1888; "Travellers and Outlaws," and "The Afternoon Landscape," poems, 1889; "The New World and the New Book," 1892; "Concerning All of Us," 1892; "English History for American Readers" (with Professor Edward Channing of Harvard University); and "Such as they Are," poems (with his wife, Mary Thacher Higginson), 1893. He also translated the "complete works" of Epictetus, 1865 (revised edition, 2 vols., 1890). In addition to these he is a frequent contributor to the magazines and papers, particularly to the Atlantic Monthly, The Nation, and Harper's Bazar.

HILES, Henry, Mus. Doc., born at Shrewsbury, Dec. 31, 1826, was educated privately in his native town. Dr. Hiles has held several organ appointments in London and Manchester, and was appointed Lecturer on Harmony and Musical Composition at the Owens College, Manchester, in 1880, which appointment, together with a like office in the Victoria University, he still holds. He is also Professor of Harmony, Musical Composition and History in the Royal Manchester College of Music, as well as conductor of several important musical societies in and near Manchester. He graduated Mus. B. at Oxford in 1862 and Mus. Doc. in 1867. Dr. Hiles gained the prizes for the best organ composition offered by the College of Organists in 1864, 1865, and 1868; also the prize for the best anthem, in 1865; and was by the Council specially elected as a Fellow of the College. In 1868 Dr. Hiles's Anthem for six voices was returned as "incomparably superior to all the other works submitted." In 1878 the prize offered by the Manchester Gentlemen's Glee Club for the best serious glee was awarded to Dr. Hiles for his four-voiced glee "Hushed in Death;" which, with two other of his works, was returned at the head of all the compositions sent in. Dr. Hiles is well known as the author of several standard theoretical works—especially "The Grammar of Music; a Treatise on Harmony, Counterpoint, and Form;" "Part-writing, or Modern Counterpoint," an exhaustive treatise on all styles of pattern writing, invertible or otherwise; and as the composer of a large quantity of church music; also as the author of an Oratorio "The Patriarchs," several cantatas (such as "Fayre Pastorel," "The Crusaders," &c.), of "War in the Household," and other operatic works, of several concert overtures, and of many songs and organ pieces of classical form. In 1882 Dr. Hiles took a leading part in the establishment of "The National Society of Professional Musicians," now called "The Incorporated Society of Musicians," an association of musical artists and teachers, which rapidly developed throughout the kingdom its organization of earnest followers of the art.

HILL, Right Hon. A. Staveley, D.C.L., Q.C., M.P., was born at Dunstall Hall, Staffordshire, in 1825, and was educated at Birmingham Grammar School, in the House of Dr. Lee, the future first Bishop of Manchester, and in company with Rendal, Westcott, Evans, Lightfoot, Benson, and other celebrities. From there he went to Exeter College, Oxford, and in due course, having taken his degree, was elected to a Staffordshire Fellowship at St. John's. He subsequently took his D.C.L. degree, and was appointed one of the Examiners in Law and Modern History, in which capacity he participated in the award of a "first class" to Sir Michael Hicks-Beach. He was called to the Bar of the Inner Temple in 1852, and joined the Oxford Circuit, being elected the same night as Mr. Henry Matthews, Mr. Ward Hunt, and Sir Henry James; and he soon obtained a large practice, eventually becoming leader of the circuit. His practice was very varied, ranging from criminal business, probate and divorce, to Parliamentary; and in addition to all this he found time to devote himself energetically to the Volunteer movement. He was, in fact, one of the first to join the Victoria Rifles in 1859. It was not till 1865 that he was tempted to take any part in politics, and by that time his Parliamentary practice had become exceedingly lucrative. The death of his wife in 1868, and the increasing calls of his profession had, however, decided Mr. Staveley Hill to give up all thought of politics when the offer made by Mr. Disraeli led him to reconsider his decision. He sat for Coventry from 1868 to 1874, for West Staffordshire from 1874 to 1885, and has represented the Kingswinford Division since that date. Perhaps the most interesting part of Mr. Staveley Hill's career is his connection with Canada. He first went out there in 1881 to ascertain, on behalf of his constituents, what sort of place it was for emigration; and speedily becoming alive to the advantages of the New World, he not only established a large cattle ranche in the Far West, but returned there himself in successive autumns, and eventually published his book, "From Home to Home," which sets out in most vivid fashion the wild charm of life among the foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains. This book, which is dedicated, by permission to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, is certainly a valuable one. It is illustrated by beautiful sketches by the present Mrs. Staveley Hill, whom he married in 1876, and who has regularly accompanied him in his Canadian tours. Mr. Staveley Hill is a staunch advocate of a duty on foreign manufactured goods, and has for many years worked in the cause of Imperial federation, having seen enough of our Empire to realize how entirely self-supporting it could become. Mr. Staveley Hill was Treasurer of the Inner Temple in 1886, and is Judge-Advocate of the Fleet and Counsel to the Admiralty, and Deputy High Steward to Oxford University. He is also Deputy Lieutenant and J.P. for Staffordshire.

HILL, Hon. David Bennett, American statesman, was born at Havana, New York, Aug. 29, 1843. He received an academic education, studied law and was admitted to the Bar at Elmira (New York) in 1864. In the same year he was appointed City Attorney. Since 1868 he has been a delegate to many Democratic State Conventions, serving as President of those held in 1877 and 1881. He was also a delegate to the National Conventions of the same party in 1876 and 1884. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1870 and again in 1871; was chosen Mayor of Elmira in 1882; and in Jan., 1883, became Lieut.-Governor of the State. On the resignation of Governor Cleveland in 1884 after his election to the Presidency, Mr. Hill became Governor of New York, a position which by subsequent elections he continued to hold till 1891, when he entered the U. S. Senate for the term ending March, 1897.

HILL, Frank Harrison, born at Boston, in Lincolnshire, Feb. 6, 1830, was educated at Manchester New College, graduated B.A. in the London University in 1851, and was afterwards called to the Bar by the Society of Lincoln's Inn. In 1860 he acted as one of the secretaries of the Trades Union Committee of the Social Science Association, to the printed volumes of whose reports he furnished, among other contributions, a paper on Trade Combinations in Sheffield. In the same year he went to Ireland as editor of the Northern Whig. This post he held until the beginning of the year 1866, when he became one of the assistant-editors and political writers of the Daily News, of which journal he was, from 1870 to 1886, editor-in-chief. He is the author of "Political Portraits," 1873, consisting of sketches of living English statesmen, which appeared originally in the Daily News, a Life of Canning in the "English Worthies" series; a series of papers in the Fortnightly Review, entitled "The Political Adventures of Lord Beaconsfield," since collected and published as a volume in the United States; and an essay on Ireland, published in the volume of "Questions for a Reformed Parliament," 1867. Mr. Hill is the author also of a great number of articles on literary and political subjects in the Nineteenth Century, the Contemporary, Universal, Fortnightly, National and Saturday Reviews, the World, and other periodicals.

HILL, Miss Joanna M. Margaret, was born at Hampstead. She is the youngest daughter of the late Mr. Mathew Davenport Hill, Recorder of Birmingham and M.P. for Hull, and niece of Sir Rowland Hill, of penny-postage fame. For the greater portion of a century the Hill family have been associated with schemes, useful and philanthropic, and from earliest childhood the influences surrounding Miss Joanna Hill were calculated to fit her for a life of intelligent devotion to her fellow-creatures. She was the god-daughter of the well-known writer Joanna Baillie, and a pupil of Mary Carpenter, whose cultured mind left its mark on the character of her pupil. At an early age, Miss Hill became the friend and collaborateur of her father in his labours for the amelioration of the condition of criminal and neglected children. In 1860, she and her elder sisters wrote "Our Examplers," being an account of the lives of persons of all classes who had benefited mankind to a remarkable degree. It was published with a preface by the late Lord Brougham. Circumstances brought to Miss Hill's notice, in 1859, the friendless condition of girls in workhouse schools. She became a member of the Workhouse Visiting Association, and for many years was a constant visitor in the workhouse wards of Bristol, where her father then resided. After her father's acceptance of the Recordership of Birmingham, Miss Hill, with the consent of the guardians of the poor of that town, revived a system of visiting young workhouse girls in service, which had fallen into disuse owing to the failing health of its originator, Mrs. Charles Talbot. While studying the condition of pauper children, Miss Hill heard of a system then being tried in some parts of England, Scotland, and Ireland to restore the pauper child to the privileges of family life under the careful supervision of efficient ladies. To this scheme Miss Hill has devoted her best energies, and, as hon. secretary to the King's Norton Boarding-out Committee, she has accomplished a good work. Miss Hill's evidence before the Select Committee for the Infant Life Protection Bill, will be found in a Blue Book published in Aug., 1890; also a paper in the appendix of the same by Miss Hill, which contains information concerning her plan for the inspection of pauper children by lady visitors.

HILL, Micaiah John Muller, M.A., D.Sc., F.R.S., eldest son of the late Rev. Samuel John Hill, was born Feb. 22, 1856, at Berhampore, Bengal. He was married on Dec. 21, 1892, to Minna Grace, elder daughter of the late Marriott Ogle Tarbotton, Consulting Engineer to the Corporation of Nottingham. From 1864 to 1872 he was educated at the School for Sons of Missionaries, Blackheath. From this school he obtained in June, 1872, the fourth place and first prize at the Matriculation Examination of the University of London, and in the following September, an Andrew's Entrance prize at University College, London. There he devoted his attention chiefly to the study of Mathematics under Professors Henrici and Clifford. In June, 1873, he obtained the Exhibition in Mathematics at the first—or as it is now called, the Intermediate—B.A. Examination. In June, 1874, he obtained a second year Andrew's prize at University College, and in the following November the Scholarship in Mathematics at the B.A. Examination of the University of London. In April, 1875, he competed for the Civil Service of India, and obtained the first place in the open competition, but did not proceed to the further examinations. In October, 1875, he entered as an undergraduate at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, where he had been elected to an open scholarship, and whilst studying there he was elected, in February, 1876, a Fellow of University College, London, and in June of that year he obtained the Gold Medal for Mathematics at the M.A. Examination at the University of London. In January, 1879, he was bracketed equal Fourth Wrangler, and immediately afterwards was bracketed equal Smith's Prizeman. From April, 1879, to June, 1880, he acted as Assistant-Professor of Mathematics at University College, London. In February, 1880, he was appointed Professor of Mathematics at the Mason Science College, Birmingham, commencing work there in the following October on the opening of the College. In 1883 he took the degree of M.A. in the University of Cambridge, was elected a Fellow of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, and a member of the London Mathematical Society. In 1884 he was appointed Professor of Mathematics at University College, London, acting as Dean of the Faculty of Arts from 1888–90, and Member of the Council of the College from 1888–92. From 1877–82 he acted as Assistant-Examiner, and from 1885–90 as Chief Examiner in Mathematics at the University of London. In 1890 he received the degree of Doctor of Science from the University of Cambridge for original work. In 1891 he was elected a Member of the Council of the London Mathematical Society, and in 1894 a Fellow of the Royal Society. He has contributed largely to the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society, Cambridge Philosophical Society, &c., and is the author of the following papers in the Proceedings and Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society:—"On the Motion of Fluid, part of which is moving rotationally and part irrotationally," (Proceedings, No. 229, Transactions, Part II., 1884); "On the Locus of Singular Points and Lines which occur in connection with the Theory of the Locus of Ultimate Intersections of a System of Surfaces," (Proceedings, vol. 50, Transactions, vol. 183, 1892); "On a Spherical Vortex," (Proceedings, vol. 55, Transactions, A., 1894).

HILL, Miss Octavia, Social Reformer, her work being principally among the poor, whom she seeks to benefit morally and physically. The record of her work is given in "Homes of the London Poor," and from it we learn that in 1864, partly at the suggestion and under the guidance of Mr. Ruskin, who advanced the necessary funds for the beginning of the scheme, Miss Octavia Hill purchased three cottages in one of the poorest courts in Marylebone, and became her own rent-collector and manager, and, without any commercial loss, succeeded by kindness and conciliation in effecting the gradual reformation of the tenants. By degrees the whole of the court became hers; and the Countess of Ducie and others entrusted their property in Marylebone and Drury Lane to her management, with the same excellent results.

HILLS, The Right Rev. George, D.D., late Lord Bishop of British Columbia, eldest son of the late Rear-Admiral George Hills, was born at Eyethorn, Kent, in 1816. He was ordained deacon in 1840, and priest in the same year. He received his academical education in the University of Durham, where he graduated B.A. in 1835, M.A. in 1838, and D.D. in 1858. He was appointed lecturer of Leeds parish church in 1841; incumbent of St. Mary's, Leeds, in 1846; vicar of Great Yarmouth in 1848; and honorary canon of Norwich Cathedral in 1850. He was also elected, in Convocation, proctor for Norwich; and was consecrated the first Bishop of British Columbia in 1859. He married in 1865 Mary Philadelphia Louisa, daughter of the late Admiral Sir Richard King, Bart., K.C.B. (died 1888). Bishop Hills resigned the Bishopric of British Columbia, in Nov., 1892, and is now (1893) resident in Dover.

HIND, John Russell, LL.D., F.R.S., astronomer, is the son of a lace-manufacturer, who was one of the first introducers of the Jacquard loom in Nottingham. He was born there May 12, 1823. From the age of six his mind was intent on the study of astronomy. In 1839-40 he contributed a number of astronomical notes to the Nottingham Journal and Dearden's Miscellany. As an assistant to a civil engineer, he was sent, in 1840, to London, but he sought an appointment more in accordance with his tastes. By the proposition of Professor Wheatstone to Mr. Airy, the Astronomer-Royal, he received a post as assistant in the Magnetical and Meteorological Department of the Royal Observatory. For a period of three months, in 1843, Mr. Hind was engaged in the Government expedition sent to ascertain the longitude of Valentia, in Ireland. He received the appointment of observer in the private observatory of Mr. G. Bishop, of Regent's Park, in June, 1844. In that year he was admitted a Fellow of the Astronomical Society. He published his first work, "Solar System," in 1846. In 1847 he accepted the Foreign Secretaryship of the Royal Astronomical Society. During the following year he was elected a corresponding member of the Société Philomatique of Paris. For his discovery of a planet in February, 1847, he received a gold medal from the King of Denmark. He published his "Expected Return of the Great Comet of 1264 and 1556," in 1848. On Sept. 13, 1850, he discovered "Victoria." In May of the same year he was chosen a corresponding member of the National Institute of France, to succeed the late Professor Schumacher. "Irene" he discovered May 19, 1851; "Melpomene," June 24, 1852; "Fortuna," Aug. 22, 1852; "Calliope," Nov. 16, 1852; and "Thalia," Dec. 15, 1852. His "Astronomical Vocabulary" appeared in 1852. During the same year he was awarded the gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society; was granted a pension of £200 per annum; published his "Replies to Questions on the Comet of 1556," and received for the third time the Lalande Medal, from the Academy of Sciences, Paris, and a prize of about 300 francs, for the discovery of four new planets in the short period of a year. His "Illustrated London Astronomy" appeared in 1853. In the same year he discovered, on Nov. 8, "Euterpe;" and "Urania" on July 22 of the following year. The "Elements of Algebra" was published in 1855, and his "Descriptive Treatise on Comets" in 1857. He has contributed his observations to the Transactions of the Royal Astronomical Society, the publications of the Paris Academy, the Astronomische Nachrichten, Comptes Rendus, Nature, the Athenæum, and other periodicals. He was President of the Royal Astronomical Society in the year 1880, and was for long the Superintendent of the Nautical Almanac Office.

HINGESTON-RANDOLPH, The Rev. Francis Charles, M.A., born March 31, 1833, was educated at the Truro Grammar School, and at Exeter College, Oxford (B.A., Double Hon. 4th Classics and Mathematics, 1855: M.A. 1858). Having held a curacy in Oxford (Holywell), he was appointed in 1859 to the Perpetual Curacy of Hampton Gay, near Oxford, and in 1860 to the Rectory of Ringmore, Devon. He was appointed Domestic Chaplain to the Baroness le Despenser (Dowager Viscountess Falmouth), 1859; Rural Dean of Woodleigh, Devon, 1879; and Prebendary of Exeter, 1885. He is the author of "Specimens of Ancient Cornish Crosses, Fonts, &c.," 1850; "Four Years of a Country Friendly Society," 1870; has edited "The Poems of Francis Hingeston," 1857; "The Chronicle of England, by John Capgrave" (under the direction of the Master of the Rolls); "Johannis Capgravii Liber de Illustribus Henricis" (in the same series); "The Book of the Illustrious Henries" (translated from the Latin of Capgrave), 1858; and "A Collection of Royal and Historical Letters during the Reign of Henry IV" (for the Master of the Rolls), 1860; "The Register of Edmund Stafford, Bishop of Exeter," 1886; "The Register of Walter Bronescombe and Peter Quivil, Bishops of Exeter," 1889; "The Register of Walter de Stapeldon, Bishop of Exeter, 1892."

"HISTORICUS," THE nom de plume OF SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT (q.v.).

HOAR, Hon. George Frisbie, LL.D., brother of the Hon. Ebenezer Rockwood Hoar, was born at Concord, Massachusetts, Aug. 29, 1826. A.B. (Harvard), 1846. He was admitted to the Bar in 1849, and began practice at Worcester, where he still resides. He was a member of the State House of Representatives in 1852, and of the State Senate in 1857. He was City Solicitor in 1860, and in 1868 was elected a Member of Congress, and was re-elected three times, declining the nomination for a fifth term. From 1874 to 1880 he was an Overseer of Harvard; was a delegate to the Republican National Conventions of 1876, 1880, 1884, and 1888, presiding over that of 1880. He was elected a United States Senator from Massachusetts in 1877, and re-elected in 1883 and 1889, his present term expiring in 1895. When a Member of the lower branch of Congress he was one of its managers in the Belknap impeachment trial in 1876, and served on the Electoral Commission which decided the disputed presidential question in the same year. He was a regent of the Smithsonian Institution in 1880, and has been President (and is now Vice-President) of the American Antiquarian Society; a trustee of the Peabody Museum of Archæology; and a member of many learned societies. The degree of LL.D. has been conferred upon him by William and Mary, Amherst, Williams, Yale, and Harvard Colleges.

HOBHOUSE, Baron, The Right Hon. Sir Arthur, K.C.S.I., P.C., fourth son of the late Right. Hon. Henry Hobhouse, of Hadspen House, Somersetshire, by Harriet, sixth daughter of John Turton, Esq., of Sugnall Hall, Staffordshire, was born at Hadspen, Nov. 10, 1819. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained a first-class in classics in 1841. In 1845 he became a member of the Chancery Bar, and practised as a conveyancer and equity draftsman, and subsequently as a Queen's Counsel, in the Rolls Court. He was appointed one of Her Majesty's Counsel in 1865; but in the following year he quitted the Bar in consequence of ill-health, and was appointed a Charity Commissioner, and in 1869 an Endowed Schools Commissioner. In 1872 he was nominated Law Member of the Governor-General's Council in India, and on his retirement in 1877, was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Star of India. In 1878 he was appointed arbitrator under the Epping Forest Act; and in 1881 he was made a Privy Councillor and a member of the Judicial Committee. In 1882-84 he was a member of the London School Board, and from 1889-92 was an Alderman of the London County Council. In 1885 he was created Baron Hobhouse, of Hadspen, in the County of Somerset. Lord Hobhouse has taken a keen interest in many social topics, especially in those connected with women's property, with endowments, and with settlements and transfer of land. He has delivered many addresses on these subjects, some of which were collected and printed under the title of "The Dead Hand," 1880. He stood for Westminster in the Liberal interest at the general election of 1880, but was unsuccessful.

HODGSON, John Evan, R.A., was born in London March 1, 1831, and spent some of his early years in Russia, where his father established himself as a merchant in 1835. After receiving his education at Rugby he entered his father's counting-house; but in 1853 he came back to England, abandoned commercial pursuits, and became a student in the Royal Academy. His first picture was exhibited in 1856, since which time he has been a regular exhibitor. He began with domestic and contemporaneous subjects, but painted historical pictures from 1861 till 1869, when his visit to Northern Africa set him upon subjects of Moorish life, to which he has since chiefly confined himself. He was elected a Royal Academician, Dec. 18, 1879. His principal pictures are:—"Arrest of a Poacher," 1857; "Canvassing for a Vote," 1858; "The Patriot Wife" (the wife of a political prisoner bribing his Austrian gaoler to give her access to him), 1859; "A Rehearsal of Music in a Farmhouse," 1860; "Sir Thomas More's Daughter in Holbein's Studio," 1861; "Return of Sir Francis Drake from Cadiz," 1862; "First Sight of the Armada," 1863; "Queen Elizabeth at Purfleet," 1864; "Taking Home the Bride," 1865; "Jewess accused of Witchcraft," 1866; "Even Song" (interior of Tong Church, Shropshire), 1867; "Chinese Ladies and European Curiosities," and "Roman Trireme at Sea," 1868; "Arab Story-teller," 1869; "Arab Prisoners," "The Basha's Black Guards," and "Arab Shepherds," 1870; "The Outpost," and "An Arab Patriarch," 1871; "Army Reorganisation in Morocco," "The Snake Charmer," and "A Fair Customer," 1872; "Jack Ashore," and "A Tunisian Bird-seller," 1873; "A Needy Knife Grinder," "Returning the Salute," and "Odd Fish," 1874; "A Barber's Shop in Tunis," "The Talisman," "A Cock-fight," and "The Turn of the Tide," 1875; "The Temple of Diana at Zaghouan," "Better have a New Pair," and "Following the Plough," 1876; "Commercial Activity in the East," "Pampered Menials," and "Relatives in Bond," 1877; "An Eastern Question," "Loot," and the "Pasha," 1878; "Say what shall be my song to-day," "I'll serenade no more," "Gehâzi, the servant of Elisha," and "The French Naturalist in Algiers," 1879; "Homeward Bound," 1880; "Bound for the Black Sea, 1854," and "Shipwrecked Sailor waiting for a Sail" (his diploma work, deposited on his election as an Academician), 1881; "A Day far spent," "Ilka Lassie has her Laddie," "Painter and Critic," "Hobbema's Country," and "In the Low Countries," 1882; "Ragassel-ma: the Water-dance," 1883; "Robert Burns at the Plough," 1887, etc.

HOEY, Mrs. Frances Sarah, wife of John Cashel Hoey, Esq., C.M.G., of Dromalane, Newry, daughter of the late Charles Bolton Johnston, Esq., was born at Bushy Park, Rathfarnham, co. Dublin, Feb. 15, 1830. She married, in 1846, the late Adam Murray Stewart, Esq., of Cromleich, co. Dublin, and secondly, in 1858, her present husband. Mrs. Cashel Hoey has written for several literary journals since 1860, and is the author of the following novels:—"A House of Cards," "Falsely True," "A Golden Sorrow," "Out of Court," "Griffith's Double," "All or Nothing," "The Blossoming of an Aloe," "No Sign," "The Question of Cain," 1882, new ed., 1890; "The Lover's Creed," 1884; and "A Stern Chase," 1886. Mrs. Cashel Hoey is a contributor to Chambers' Journal, Temple Bar, All the Year Round, Belgravia, London Society, and other periodicals, and is the translator of several works from the French and Italian languages. Among the former are "The Memoirs of Madame de Rémusat," "The King's Secret," "1794: a Tale of the Terror," "The Last Days of the Consulate," "Frederick the Great and Marie Theresa," "The Surprising Exploits of Dr. Quiès," "Ten Centuries of Toilet" (a translation), and "A Friend of the Queen" (Marie Antoinette and Count de Fersen) (a translation), 1894.

HOGAN, James Francis, M.P., was born at Nenagh, Tipperary, in 1855, but while still an infant was taken by his parents to Australia. He was educated in St. Patrick's College, Melbourne, and was for some years in the service of the Education Department of Victoria. In 1881, he joined the staff of the Melbourne Argus, being also a regular contributor to the Melbourne Punch and the Sydney Daily Telegraph. Articles from his pen have appeared in the Melbourne Review, the Victorian Review, and other colonial periodicals. He was the founder and the first President of the Victorian Catholic Young Men's Society, and the heroic bronze statue of Daniel O'Connell by Mr. Thos. Brock, R.A., now standing in front of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Melbourne, was erected by a committee of which Mr. Hogan was Secretary. He is the author of the following books: "An Australian Christmas Collection," 1886; "History of the Irish in Australia," 1887; "The Australian in London," 1888; "The Lost Explorer," 1890; "The Convict King," 1891; and "Robert Lowe, Viscount Sherbrooke," 1893. In February, 1893, Mr. Hogan was elected without opposition for the Mid Division of Tipperary. Since he entered the House of Commons he has been active in the promotion and ventilation of colonial questions. He organised the Colonial Party, and at its first meeting in August, 1893, was unanimously appointed its Secretary. To the Contemporary Review for November, 1893, he contributed an article explanatory of the constitution, aims, and objects of the Colonial Party, whose roll of membership now numbers 35, drawn from all quarters of the House, but bound together by a common interest in colonial questions and the adequate representation of the interests of Greater Britain in the Imperial Parliament.

HOGG, Jabez, M.R.C.S., England, 1850, Fellow of the Royal Microscopical Society; First President of the Medical Microscopical Society, London; Honorary Fellow of the Academy of Science, Philadelphia, the Belgian and Canadian Microscopical Societies, the Medico-Legal Society, the Society of Medical Jurisprudence, New York, &c.; Consulting Surgeon to the Royal Westminster Ophthalmic Hospital, the Hospital for Women and Children, the Royal Masonic Institutions, &c.; formerly and for 25 years Surgeon to the Royal Westminster

Ophthalmic Hospital; Ophthalmic Surgeon to the N.W. London Hospital and the Hospital for Women and Children; Vice-President of the Medical Society, London, F.L.S., &c.; youngest son of John and Martha Hogg (née Mason). Jabez was born on Good Friday, April 4, 1817. He received his early education at Mr. Giles' school, where he found Charles Dickens installed as one of the elder boys. He was subsequently sent to Rochester Grammar School, which he left at the age of 15 and soon afterwards was apprenticed to a Medical practitioner, and for the next five years was incessantly engaged in the drudgery of the open shop or surgery. On the expiration of his term, he took to literary work. He wrote for a magazine, and was induced to prepare for publication "A Manual of Photography," 1843. This brought him into close contact with the late Mr. Herbert Ingram, the founder and proprietor of the Illustrated London News. He had a great idea that Photographic Art could be made available for the purposes of the newspaper, but after many trials, this, for the time being, proved a failure, although it has of late years become a great factor in newspaper as well as in book work. Mr. Ingram's success in combining pictures with letterpress news of the day, led him to undertake the preparation and publication of a number of Illustrated Education Works. The first of the series, "The Illustrated London Spelling Book," proved to be an enormous success, and was quickly followed by others, many of which were issued under the supervision of Mr. Hogg, or were the sole production of his pen, e.g. "Elements of Natural and Experimental Philosophy," 1853; "The History, Construction, and Applications of the Microscope," which has now passed through ten large editions, and remains to this day the text book of the Microscope. "The Illustrated London Almanack" Mr. Hogg has edited year after year from its first inception, forty-nine years ago, to the present publication. Mr. Hogg was for a time on the staff of The Examiner, and his letters to the Times newspaper on the water-question and the negotiation for the purchase of the Water Companies will be long remembered. In these letters he was the first to show that the chemical analysis of water alone was misleading, since it entirely destroyed the more dangerous element, organic life, and that therefore the chemical purity of water is of less importance than the biological. Mr. Jabez Hogg studied medicine at the Charing Cross Hospital, and in 1850 he obtained the diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons. Soon afterwards he became attached to the Royal Westminster Ophthalmic Hospital, to which, in 1855, he was appointed assistant surgeon. He subsequently became full surgeon, and remained for upwards of a quarter of a century one of its medical officers. He was also Ophthalmic Surgeon to the North Western Hospital, and other public Institutions. During this period he wrote and published several useful works on Eye Diseases, "The Ophthalmoscope in the Exploration of the Interior of the Eye," 1858; "A Manual of Ophthalmoscopic Surgery," 1863; "The Impairment of Vision from Spinal Shock," 1878; "The Cure of Cataract," 1878; "A Parasitic or Germ Theory of Disease," 1873, &c. He has been a constant and voluminous contributor to the Medical Journals and to various scientific publications; the Transactions of the Linnean, Microscopical and other societies; and his writings bear largely on subjects of vital importance on hygiene and public health. He was at one time an active member of the "Evicted Tenants' Society," which was set on foot in 1856, under the presidency of the late Lord Shaftesbury, and as such was instrumental in the promotion of the "Artisans' Dwellings Act," for the better housing of the working classes in London and other large towns. The neglected condition of the blind and deaf mute also claimed much of his attention, and some years ago he contributed anonymously a series of letters to the London press, which attracted attention and led to great changes in the education and treatment of this afflicted class of persons. Mr. Hogg is well known in Freemasonry, in which Society he still takes a keen and active interest. Many years ago the Earl of Zetland conferred upon him the dignity of a Grand Officer of Grand Lodge.

HOGG, Quintin, is the youngest son of the late Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., Chairman of the Old East India Company, and also brother of the late Lord Magheramorne. He was born in Feb., 1845, and was educated at Eton, his name first appearing in the school lists at the election of 1859. On leaving Eton, Mr. Hogg at once took an active and personal interest in homeless boys. Eventually he took a large warehouse in the neighbourhood of Drury Lane, which he fitted up as dormitories, and a home for about fifty working boys. All his leisure was devoted to the welfare of the lads, and he practically lived amongst them, sleeping in a special corner of the boy's dormitory. Being a great lover of physical exercise and sport, he also fitted up, in connection with the home, a gymnasium and a limited-sized playground. This initiated the movement which is now being continued by the Committee of the Homes for Working Boys, whose beneficent work has active agencies and branches in all parts of London. In time, evening classes were started in connection with the home by Mr. Hogg, assisted by his old school friends, Mr. (now Lord) Kinnaird, and the Honourable T. H. W. Pelham. A Sunday School also was started, and soon there was a large number of boys in regular attendance, in addition to those who were residents of the Institution. The success of his work stimulated him to fresh effort, and in 1873 he started, in a room in Endell Street, under the title of "The Youth's Christian Institute," an Association for those of his lads who were above sixteen years of age. The work of the Institute was of so acceptable and attractive a character to youths and young men generally, that the membership gradually rose to 1,000, and when the premises of the old Polytechnic in Regent Street, came into the market in 1882, Mr. Quintin Hogg purchased them and adapted them for the work of his Institute. From that time, the membership numbers went up by leaps and bounds; and in 1891, after the lapse of nine years, the members and students exceeded 12,000 all told. The work of the Polytechnic is of a three-fold character—viz., social, educational, and religious, but attendance at any of the religious meetings or classes is perfectly optional. Upon the purchase of the lease, and the adaptation and enlargement of premises, and their maintenance Mr. Hogg has expended over £100,000. For years, from early evening until closing time at night, he has been on the spot, making the acquaintance of members, and in many ways giving the Polytechnic boys the benefit of his experience and advice. All this work is, however, but one aspect of what has been a very active business life. On leaving Eton, Mr. Hogg entered the old-established West Indian House of Bosanquet, Curtis & Co., as a junior, and is now the head of the firm, its present title being Hogg, Curtis, Campbell & Co. At one time he was much pressed to enter Parliament, and was in 1886 invited by the electors of Westminster to stand as their candidate. Indifferent health, however, and a feeling that public life would interfere with his work at the Polytechnic, caused him to decline the invitation. A few years later, however, upon the constitution of the London County Council, he was spontaneously elected Alderman. In 1871 he married the daughter of Mr. William Graham, the late M.P. for Glasgow, a lady warmly interested in her husband's work.

HOHENLOHE - SCHILLINGSFURST, Clodwig Carl Victor, Prince of, born at Rothenburg, March 31, 1819, is the second son of Francis Joseph, Prince of Hohenlohe-Schillingsfurst (of the line of Waldenburg). On the death of his father in 1841, Clodwig had just begun his judicial and historical studies in the University of Göttingen. A year later, after having passed his examination with distinction, he took a subordinate position in the public service as Auscultator in the Office of Justice at Ehrenbreitstein. He next became Referendary of the Government at Potsdam. While working thus diligently at his post in Prussia, the Landgrave of Hessen-Rheinfels-Rothenburg died, and the princely family of Hohenlohe succeeded to a rich inheritance, including the lordships of Ratibor and Corvey. The event, however, did not alter Clodwig's position. His elder brother took the domains of Ratibor and Corvey, to which the King of Prussia, William IV., added the title of Duke. In 1845, on the death of his brother, Philip Ernest, Clodwig succeeded, with the consent of his elder brother, to the old family seat of Schillingsfurst, and, forsaking the Prussian service, took up his permanent residence in Bavaria. Thus at twenty-seven years of age he became an hereditary member of the Bavarian parliament. The ministry, meanwhile, in Frankfort, sent him as Ambassador to Athens, Florence, and Rome. In 1849 he returned to Frankfort. Having married the Princess of Sayn-Witgenstein, by whom he has a numerous family, he retired for some ten years into private life, paying frequent visits to England, France and Italy. In 1860 the prince again entered upon parliamentary life, and favoured throughout an alliance with Prussia. Towards the end of 1866 the youthful king requested Hohenlohe to prepare and lay before him a programme of the principles which were to serve eventually as a ministerial policy. Prince Hohenlohe fulfilled his commission to the satisfaction of the king, and on Jan. 1, 1867, succeeded Pfordten as Bavarian Minister. The whole of Germany at last adopted the Hohenlohe programme. In 1868 and 1869, Prince Hohenlohe was elected Vice-President of the Customs Parliament of the German Federation. In his capacity as Foreign Minister of Bavaria, he issued his famous circular of April 9, 1869, directing the attention of the European cabinets to the serious consequences likely to arise from the decrees of the Œcumenical Council of the Vatican. Hoping to get the Pope to withdraw his political opposition, and viewing mere religious innovations with extreme indifference, the Prussian Government slighted the warnings of the Bavarian minister, and refused to take action against the contemplated decrees. In consequence of this desertion by the principal exponent of the Unity party, Prince Hohenlohe could not hold out against the attacks of the combined Particularists, Catholics, and Austriacanti in the Bavarian Parliament, and had to resign (March 7, 1870). He then resumed his seat in the Munich House of Peers; and in a few months, on France threatening war, made himself conspicuous by insisting upon the participation of Bavaria in the great national feud. Upon the successful termination of the war in 1871, he was elected member of the first German Parliament, and, in recognition of his patriotism, immediately became Vice-President thereof. In May, 1874, after the deplorable exit of Count Harry Arnim, Prince Hohenlohe was chosen German Ambassador in Paris. He was one of the German plenipotentiaries at the Congress of Berlin in 1878. In August of that year he was re-elected to the Reichstag on the second ballot, at Forchheim, Kulmbach, Bavaria, polling 9,800 votes, while his Catholic competitor had 8,600. After the death of Marshal Manteuffel, Prince Hohenlohe was appointed Governor of Alsace-Lorraine, a position which he held till Oct. 1894. During his administration he enforced the strictest passport regulations at the French frontier, until in Sept. 1891 the Emperor issued a rescript rendering it somewhat less difficult for Frenchmen to visit Alsace-Lorraine. In Oct., 1894, he was appointed Chancellor of the German Empire and Prussian Prime Minister in succession to Count von Caprivi and Count von Eulenberg, whose offices will, it is understood, be in future combined.

HOHENZOLLERN, Hereditary Prince of, H.R.H., Leopold-Etienne-Charles-Antoine-Gustave-Edouard-Thassilo, Prince of Hohenzollern, Burgrave of Nurenberg, Count of Sigmaringen and Veringen, Count of Berg and Seigneur of Haigerloch, &c., is the eldest son of the late Prince Charles Antoine of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, and was born Sept. 22, 1835, and studied in the Universities of Bonn and Berlin. His Royal Highness succeeded his father on June 2, 1885; is an hereditary member of the Chamber of Seigneurs of Prussia; general of Prussian infantry in the suite of the first regiment of foot guards; chief of the "Prince Charles Antoine de Hohenzollern" regiment of fusiliers; and Chevalier of the Order of the Black Eagle, &c., and is well known in connection with his candidature for the throne of Spain, which ultimately gave rise to the Franco-German war. On Sept. 12, 1861, the Prince married, at Lisbon, the Princess Antonia of Portugal, Duchesse de Saxe, born Feb. 17, 1845, by whom he has three sons, of whom the second, Prince Ferdinand, is heir to the Roumanian throne, and husband of Princess Mary of Edinburgh.

HOLDEN, the Rev. Hubert Ashton, M.A., LL.D., member of an old Staffordshire family, was born in 1822, educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, under the late Bishops of Peterborough (Dr. Jeune), and Manchester (Dr. J. Prince Lee), and at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1847. After having obtained in his first year of residence the First Bell University Scholarship, he graduated B.A. in 1845 as junior optime and senior classic. He discharged the duties of Assistant-Tutor and Classical Lecturer of his college from 1848 until 1853, when he was appointed the first Vice-Principal of Cheltenham College. From 1858 to 1883 he was Head Master of Ipswich School. In 1890 he was appointed by the Crown to a Fellowship of the University of London, in which he had been Classical Examiner for two periods, 1869—1874, and 1886—1890. Dr. Holden has edited "Aristophanes," with notes (vol. i. 3rd edit., 1868; vol. ii., part only published, 1869); Collections of English Poetry and Prose, for translation into Greek and Latin, in four parts, entitled "Foliorum Silvula" (part I., edit. 11, 1888; part II., edit. 4, 1890, and part III., edit. 3, 1864); and "Foliorum Centuriæ" (edit. 10, 1888); select translations of the same, entitled "Folia Silvulæ" (vol. i. 1865, vol. ii. 1870); Cicero, "De Officiis" (edit. 6, 1886); "Speech for Cn. Plancius" (edit. 2, 1883); Plutarch's "Lives of the Gracchi," 1885; "Life of Sulla," 1886; "Life of Nicias," 1887; "Life of Timoleon," 1889; Xenophon's "Cyropædeia," in 3 vols. 1887—1890; and the "Octavius" of Minucius Felix, 1853, for the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press; also Plutarch's "Life of Themistokles" (edit. 2, 1884), with introduction and commentary; Xenophon's "Hiero" (edit. 3, 1888); and "Œconomicus" (edit. 4, 1889); Cicero "Speech for P. Sestius" (edit. 3, 1889), for Macmillan's Classical Series;

Book VII. of Thucydides, 1891; and Plutarch's "Life of Demosthenes," 1892.

HOLE, The Very Rev. Samuel Reynolds, D.D., Dean of Rochester, was born on Dec. 5, 1819, is the son of Samuel Hole, Esq., of Caunton Manor, Notts, and was educated at the Grammar School, Newark-on-Trent, and at Brasenose College, Oxford. He was ordained Deacon, 1844; Priest, 1845; and became Curate of Caunton, 1844; Vicar, 1850; Rural Dean of Southwell, 1865; Prebendary of Lincoln, 1875; Proctor in Convocation, 1875; Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, 1885; Select Preacher to the University of Oxford, 1885-6; and Dean of Rochester, 1887. Dean Hole is the author of "A Little Tour in Ireland," illustrated by John Leech, 1858; "A Book about Roses," 1859 (this has run through many editions, and has been translated into several languages); "Six of Spades," 1860; "Nice and her Neighbours," 1881; "Hints to Preachers," 1881; and of numerous pamphlets, sermons, and speeches. Among his later works we may mention his "Book about the Garden," 1892; "Memories of Dean Hole," 1892; and "More Memories," 1894.

HOLE, William, R.S.A., only child of Richard Hole, M.D., of Hole in Exbourne, Devon, and Anne, his wife, the daughter of Dr. Fergusson, Governor of Sierra Leone, was born in Salisbury on Nov. 7, 1846. On the death of his father from cholera in 1849, his mother returned to her family then residing in Edinburgh, and her son was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and University. In 1874 he was apprenticed to a firm of Civil Engineers. After four years he took a trip to Italy and developed latent artistic instincts in the congenial studio atmosphere of Rome. On his return he could find no employment as an engineer, and definitely abandoned that profession for art. He was trained, in a sort of way, at the Edinburgh School of Art, and then learned his business under Cameron and Chalmers at the school of the Royal Scottish Academy. He was elected associate of that body in 1878 and full Academician in 1889. He is also a member of the Royal Scottish Water-Colour Society, and of the Royal Society of Painter Etchers. Mr. Hole's claim to distinction is perhaps chiefly due to his power as an etcher, in which art he certainly has taken a foremost place. His principal pictures are: "The End of the '45," 1879; "The Evening of Culloden," 1880; "Prince Charlie's Parliament," 1881; "The Fill of the Boats," 1883; "If Thou hadst known," 1884; "News of Flodden," 1886; "Gethsemane," 1887; and many portraits. His principal original etchings are: "Quasi Cursores," portraits of the professors of the Edinburgh University in its Tercentenary Year, 1884; and "The Canterbury Pilgrims," 1888 (36 inch plate). His other etchings are "Mill on the Yare," after Crome, 1888; "He is Coming," after Mattys Maris, 1889; "The Sawyers," after J. F. Millet, 1890; "Six plates after Thomson of Duddingstone," 1889; and many others. A large plate after Constable's "Jumping Horse," was published in the autumn of 1890, and was followed by two others after Velasquez, viz.:—"Don Gaspar de Guzman" and "Admiral Pulido Pareja." At the Chicago Exhibition Mr. Hole was granted an Award of Merit for his etchings. In 1876 Mr. Hole married Elizabeth, daughter of James Lindsay, Esq., W.S.

HOLLAND, The Rev. Canon Henry Scott, was born at Ledbury, Herefordshire, in 1847, and educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford. He took a first class in the Final Schools in 1870, and in the same year was elected to a senior studentship at Christ Church. He was ordained at Cuddesdon in 1872, and was afterwards Theological Tutor at Christchurch. He was Select Preacher at Oxford in 1882, Proctor in 1882-83, and Censor of Christ Church in 1883. In 1882 he was appointed Canon of Truro and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop, and in 1884 was made Canon, afterwards Precentor of St. Paul's. He has published several volumes of sermons, "Logic and Life," in 1882; "Good Friday at St. Paul's;" "Creed and Character," 1886; "Christ or Ecclesiastes," 1887; "On Behalf of Belief," 1888; articles on "Justin Martyr" and on "Doctor Liddon" in the Dictionary of Christian Biography; an Essay in "Lux Mundi," "Pleas and Claims," 1893; and, in collaboration with Mr. W. Rockstone, a "Life of Jenny Lind."

HOLLAND, The Right Hon. Sir Henry Thurstan, Bart. See KNUTSFORD, LORD.

HOLLAND, Professor Thomas Erskine, D.C.L., LL.D., son of the Rev. T. A. Holland, rector of Poynings, Sussex (author of "Dryburgh Abbey and other poems"), was born at Brighton, July 17, 1835. After entering Oxford as a member of Balliol College, he obtained a Demyship at Magdalen; a First Class in the Final Classical School; a Fellowship at Exeter College; and a Chancellor'

Prize. He was called to the Bar in 1863, and practised on the Home Circuit. In 1874 he was elected Vinerian Reader of English Law at Oxford, but resigned that office on being elected, a few months later, Chichele Professor of International Law. He has frequently been law examiner at Oxford, as also (1870-75) in the University of London, (1891-92) at Cambridge, and (1878-80, and 1893-94) to the Inns of Court. He is a member and now 1r. Vice-Président of the Institut de Droit International; a knight of the Order of the Crown of Italy; D.C.L. of Oxford; Fellow of All Souls' College; Assessor of the Chancellor's Court; Hon. Prof. in the University of Perugia; Hon. LL.D. of the Universities of Bologna, Dublin, and Glasgow; and Hon. Member of the University of St. Petersburg, and of the Judicial Society of Berlin. Among his published works are "An Essay on Composition Deeds," 1864; "Essays on the Form of the Law," 1870; "The Institutes of Justinian as a recension of the Institutes of Gaius," 1873, 2nd edit. 1881; "Select Titles from the Digest" (with Mr. C. L. Shadwell), 1874-81; "Alberici Gentilis de Jure Belli," 1877; "The European Concert in the Eastern Question," 1885; "A Manual of Naval Prize Law," issued by authority of the Lords of the Admiralty, 1888; but he is probably best known by his "Elements of Jurisprudence," which, first published in 1880, is now in its sixth edition, and has become a text book in most English and American Universities and law schools. This work received in 1894 the "Swiney Prize," which is decennially awarded for "the best published work upon Jurisprudence," and was adjudged in 1864 to Sir Henry Maine's "Ancient Law."

HOLLINGSHEAD, John, son of Mr. Henry R. Hollingshead, of the Irish Chamber; born in London, Sept. 9, 1827, was educated at Homerton, and entered business early; but preferring journalism, became connected with several leading daily and weekly newspapers, as well as magazines. He joined the staff of Household Words in 1857; was a constant contributor to that periodical and to All the Year Round, the Cornhill Magazine, Good Words, and Once a Week. From 1859 to 1864 he published several volumes of essays and stories, chiefly on life in London. In 1861, the famine year in London, he was the Special Commissioner of the Morning Post at the East End. The outcome of his mission was "Ragged London" in 1861. In 1862 he was connected with the Great Exhibition, and wrote the historical introduction to its Catalogue. He has written one or two original dramatic pieces, and was for six years the dramatic critic of the Daily News, London Review, &c., and is a member of the Dramatic Authors' Society and of the French Society of Gens de Lettres. Mr. Hollingshead opened the Gaiety Theatre, in the Strand, in Dec. 1868, but he has of late years ceased to be its lessee and manager. He has had three Metropolitan theatres under his direction at one time, with the most powerful combination of actors in London. He has also been the director of the principal theatre in Manchester. In 1879 he induced the whole Comédie Française to visit London and play for six weeks at the Gaiety. A collection of his writings was published under the title of "Miscellanies: Stories and Essays," 3 vols., 1874; two other small collections in 1882 and 1883, called respectively "Plain English" and "Footlights;" and in 1877 he made a successful adaptation of MM. Meilhac and Halévy's "La Cigale," under the title of "The Grasshopper." Mr. Hollingshead is a director of several large variety theatre companies in London, the provinces and abroad, and was the managing director of "Niagara in London," the popular panorama which Mr. Hollingshead organised for some American friends. In 1890 he collected some papers under the title of "Niagara Spray," containing, like "Footlights," a good many reprints from Punch. In 1892 he published "The Story of Leicester Square."

HOOK, James Clarke, R.A., was born in London, Nov. 21, 1819. His father, Mr. James Hook, was the Judge Arbitrator in the Mixed Commission Courts, Sierra Leone, and his mother was the second daughter of Dr. Adam Clarke, the biblical commentator. The future artist was entered as a student of the Royal Academy in 1836, and his progress from the outset was marked and encouraging. He took the first Medals in the life and painting schools in 1852. He obtained the gold Medal for historical painting in 1845, the subject being "The Finding of the Body of Harold." Up to this time Mr. Hook had chiefly confined himself to subjects from English history, and occasional portraits. In 1846 he obtained the travelling pension of the Royal Academy for three years, and in the same year married the third daughter of Mr. James Burton, solicitor, and went to Italy. After eighteen months' absence he gave up half his pension, and returned to England. He now began painting subjects from Italian and French history and poetry, and occasionally from Scripture. Of this class may be mentioned the following, all exhibited at the Royal Academy: "Pamphilus relating his Story," a subject from Boccacio, 1844; "The Song of Olden Time," 1845; "The Controversy between the Lady Jane Grey and Feckenham," 1846; "Bassanio commenting on the Caskets," a scene in the Merchant of Venice, 1847; "The Emperor Otho IV. and the Maid Gualdrada," 1848; "The Chevalier Bayard wounded at Brescia," also, "Othello's First Suspicion," and "Bianca Capello," 1849; "Escape of Francesco Novello di Carrara and the Lady Taddea," and "A Dream of Venice," 1850. Mr. Hook was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1850, and attained the full honours of the Academy in 1860. He exhibited "The Rescue of the Brides of Venice," and "The Defeat of Shylock," 1851; "The Story of Torello," from Boccacio, and "Othello's Description of Desdemona," 1852; "The Chevalier Bayard knighting the Son of the Duke of Bourbon," and "Isabella of Castille and the Idle Nuns," 1853; "Incidents in the Persecution of the Protestants in Paris," 1854; and "Gratitude of the Mother of Moses for the Safety of her Child," 1855. About this period Mr. Hook returned to his first inclination, and devoted himself chiefly to pastoral and modern subjects. Of examples in his later style we may instance the following: "The Birthplace of the Streamlet," "The Market Morning," and "The Shepherd's Boy," 1855; "The Fisherman's Good-Night," 1856; "A Signal on the Horizon," and "The Ship-Boy's Letter," 1857; "A Pastoral," with a quaint inscription from Spenser, and "The Coast-Boy Gathering Eggs," 1858. Of late years Mr. Hook has devoted himself to marine subjects, "Luff, Boy!" "A Cornish Gift," and "The Skipper Ashore," 1859; "Leaving Cornwall for the Whitby Fishing," 1861; "The Trawlers," 1862; "Fish from the Doggerbank," 1870; "Salmon Trappers, Norway," "Norwegian Haymakers," "Market Girls on a Fjord," 1871; "As Jolly as a Sand-Boy," 1872; "Hearts of Oak," and "The Samphire Gatherer," 1875; "Crabbers," 1876; "A Gull Catcher," "The Coral Fisher, Amalfi," 1878; "Little to Earn and Many to Keep," "Mushroom Gatherers," and "Tanning Nets: Witches and Cauldrons from the Macbeth Country," 1879; "King Baby: the White Sands of Iona," "Home with the Tide," "Sea-Pools," and "Mussel-Gardens," 1880; "Diamond Merchants, Cornwall," and "Past Work," 1881; "Caller Herrin'," and "Devon Harvest Cart: the Last Handful Home," 1882; "Catching a Mermaid," "Love Lightens Toil," "The Wily Angler," "Carting for 'Farmer Pengelly,'" 1883; "The Broken Oar," 1886; "The Sea-weed Raker," 1889; "Last Night's Disaster," and "A Jib for the New Smack," 1890. More recently he has exhibited "Good Liquor, Duty Free," 1893; and "Before Sundown," "Herring-packers," "Practising without Diploma," and "Seed-time," 1894.

HOOKER, Sir Joseph Dalton, M.D., K.C.S.I., C.B., P.P.R.S., F.L.S., F.G.S., D.C.L. (Oxon), LL.D. (Cantab., Dubl., Edin., and Glas.), is the second and only surviving son of the late Sir William Jackson Hooker, Regius Professor of Botany in Glasgow University, and subsequently Director of the Royal Gardens, Kew, by Maria, eldest daughter of Mr. Dawson Turner, F.R.S., banker, of Great Yarmouth, Norfolk. He was born at Halesworth, Suffolk, June 30, 1817, and was educated at the High School and University of Glasgow, where he took the degree of M.D. in 1839. At the age of twenty-one he accompanied, officially as assistant-surgeon, but in reality as naturalist, the famous expedition of Sir James Clark Ross, fitted out by the Government for the purpose of investigating the phenomena of terrestrial magnetism in the South Circumpolar seas. The result of his researches during this voyage was a series of superb volumes on the botany of the Southern regions, embracing the flora of the Auckland Islands, New Zealand, and Tasmania. By a comparison of the new plants discovered by him with those of other parts of the world, he succeeded in advancing our knowledge of the laws which govern the distribution of plants over the surface of the earth. He returned to this country after an absence of four years. In 1846 he accepted the appointment of botanist to the Geological Survey of Great Britain under Sir H. de la Bêche, and he contributed a valuable paper to the second volume of the "Records" of that institution on the vegetation of the Carboniferous period as compared with that of the present day; and another on the structure of coal-fossils. In 1847 Dr. Hooker undertook a journey to India for the purpose of investigating the plants of tropical countries, and the flora of a hitherto unexplored region of the Himalayas. In the course of his travels in these remote districts he was for some time kept prisoner by the Rajah of Sikkim.

He returned in 1851, and published two very interesting volumes of "Himalayan Journals," and a number of scientific works on the botany of India. In 1850, while in India, he published some beautiful sketches of rhododendrons from the Sikkim Himalaya, several of which have since been introduced into England. These expeditions, though partly at his own expense, were conducted under the authority of Government, which supplied some of the funds. He was appointed, in 1855, Assistant-Director of Kew Gardens; and, on his father's death, in 1865, succeeded to the Directorship, which he resigned in 1885. He was some time Examiner in Natural Science of candidates for medical appointments in the Royal Army and in the late East India Company's Service, and Examiner in Botany to the London University and Apothecaries Company. In the autumn of 1860 he, the late Admiral Washington, and D. Hanbury, F.L.S., made a tour in Syria, during which he paid special attention to the oaks of that country. Dr. Hooker presided over the meeting of the British Association, held at Norwich in 1868. The main subject of his address, which gave rise to much controversy, was the consideration of the views put forward from time to time by Mr. Darwin on the doctrine of the continuous evolution of life, and in connection with this, on what is termed "natural selection," together with his theory of the "origin of species." To Darwin's notions, expressed in their fullest extent, Dr. Hooker gave his entire adhesion. He was appointed a Companion of the Bath (Civil Division) in 1869. In April, 1871, Dr. Hooker left England for Morocco, in company with Mr. John Ball, F.R.S., and Mr. G. Maw, F.L.S., his purpose being to collect the plants of that comparatively unexplored country. On the 16th of May he and his companions made the ascent of the Great Atlas, the summit of which mountain had never before been trodden by a European; and at the close of June returned to Kew, bringing a large collection of plants. In 1873 Dr. Hooker was elected President of the Royal Society, and resigned in 1878, when the late Mr. W. Spottiswoode was chosen as his successor. In 1877 he was created Knight Commander of the Star of India, for his services to the Government of India. In that year he paid a visit of three months' duration to the United States, where he was most cordially received by the leading scientific men. On his return he presented to Kew a large collection of seeds and museum specimens, and a herbarium of about a thousand species, together with notes on the distribution of the North American trees in particular. In 1854 he was awarded a Royal Medal; and, in 1887, the Copley Medal by the Royal Society. In 1884, the Founders' Medal of the Royal Geographical Society was awarded to him "for his eminent services in scientific geography;" and in 1883 the Society of Arts presented to him their Albert Medal for the services he has rendered to the arts, manufactures, and commerce by promoting an accurate knowledge of the floras and economic vegetable products of the several colonies and dependencies of the Empire. Sir Joseph is a member of various learned societies, and a corresponding member of the Institute of France. His works are:—"Botany of the Antarctic Voyage," 6 vols., 4to, 1847-1860, "Rhododendrons of the Sikkim-Himalaya," 1849-51; "Himalayan Journals," 2 vols., 8vo, 1854; "Genera Plantarum," 1862, et seq.; "The Student's Flora of the British Islands," 1870; "The Flora of British India," 1874; "Journal of a Tour in Morocco and the Great Atlas," 1878.

HOPETOUN, The Earl of, John Adrian Louis Hope, Governor of the Colony of Victoria, in succession to Sir Henry Loch, was born at Hopetoun House, N.B., Sept. 2, 1860, and is the son of the 6th Earl and Etheldred Anne, daughter of C. T. S. Birch-Reynardson, Esq., and was educated at Eton College. He passed at Sandhurst in 1879, but did not enter the army. He was appointed Lieutenant, Lanarkshire Yeomanry 1880; is a Deputy-Lieut. for Linlithgow, Lanark, and Dumfries; and Justice of the Peace for Linlithgow. Earl Hopetoun was Junior Whip in the House of Lords from 1883 to 1886; was Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen from 1885-89; and was Lord High Commissioner to the Church of Scotland 1887-88-89. He is Hon. Colonel of the Forth Submarine Mining Volunteer Corps; and was made Governor of the Colony of Victoria in 1889, and in the same year was made G.C.M.G. He married, in 1886, the Hon. Hersey Alice Eveleigh-de-Moleyns, daughter of the fourth Baron Ventry.

HOPKINS, Edward J., Mus. Doc., Organist at the Temple Church, born in Westminster, June 30, 1818, was admitted at the age of eight, as a chorister in the Chapel Royal, St. James, where he remained till his voice broke in 1833. He then became a pupil of Thomas Forbes Walmisley, organist of the Church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields. About a twelvemonth afterwards, Sept. 17, 1834, Mr. Hopkins played for and obtained his first appointment, that of organist to Mitcham Church, Surrey, at the early age of sixteen. This post he exchanged for that of organist to St. Peter's, Islington, in 1838. The same year he obtained the Gresham gold medal for his anthem, "Out of the Deep;" and in the year 1840 he obtained a similar prize for his anthem, "God is gone up," the umpires being Dr. Crotch, Mr. W. Horsley, and Sir John Goss. In 1841 he accepted the position of organist to St. Luke's Church, Berwick Street, where he remained until 1843. During that time he executed a task calling for much diligence and patience, viz.:—that of "scoring" two sets of old madrigals from the separate and unbarred part books for the Musical Antiquarian Society—Thomas Weelkes's first set of madrigals, 1597, and John Bennet's first set of madrigals, 1599; the former of which was published in the early part of 1843, and the other a few years later. About that time he began to publish a series of arrangements for the organ, the first three numbers of which were devised for the GG organ, to the use of which he had been trained; but the remainder of the series were laid out for the CC organ, to which, in conjunction with Dr. Gauntlett and Henry Smart, Mr. Hopkins became an early adherent. On May 7, 1843, Mr. Hopkins played his first probationary service at the Temple Church, and in the following October he was formally appointed "Organist to the Honourable Societies of the Temple," by the Benchers. In 1849, the octave and a half of F pedals were removed from the Temple organ, and a proper set, of the range of two octaves and a half (from CCC to F), were laid down in their stead. For the opening of the organ with this important improvement, the service known as "Hopkins in F" was written, and was soon followed by the second service in A major. Previous to this, however, he had resumed publication of the series of organ arrangements for the CC organ, introducing the Continental oblong form for the printing; and he had also issued his "Four Preludial Pieces." In Sept., 1850, Mr. Hopkins delivered a course of four lectures at the Collegiate Institution, Liverpool, on "The Construction and Capabilities of the Organ, illustrated with Diagrams, etc.," which, on receiving the request that they should be printed, were developed into the book since entitled "The Organ: its History and Construction," by Dr. Rimbault and E. J. Hopkins. In 1880 Dr. Hopkins's history of the Organ appeared in Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music," and in 1883, at the request of the Treasurers of the two hon. societies, Dr. Hopkins undertook the rather heavy task of preparing a new book of the words of the anthems, and a pointed psalter with chants, for the express use of the Temple Church. Dr. Hopkins has composed a number of anthems, services, and voluntaries, and has received many honourable distinctions in recognition of his services to music.

HOPKINSON, John, F.L.S., D.Sc., was born at Manchester, in 1849, and is the eldest son of Mr. Alderman Hopkinson. His mother is a daughter of the late Mr. John Dewhurst, of Skipton. The rudiments of his education were obtained under Mr. C. Willmore, at Lindow Grove School, and subsequently at Queenwood College. In his sixteenth year he went to Owens College, where he remained for two and a half years, and then went to Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1871 he was senior wrangler, and first Smith's prizeman. While at Cambridge he graduated at London University, where he took the D.Sc. degree. In 1872 he joined Messrs. Chance & Co., near Birmingham, as their Engineer, and resided in Birmingham about six years, and then removed to London. He has introduced many improvements into lighthouse apparatus, notably the group flashing apparatus, and has been uniformly successful in all his designs, which probably now exceed in number, as far as special forms are concerned, those of any other engineer. Upon his removal to London, besides his special work, he commenced general practice as an engineer, and has since then devoted very careful attention to electrical engineering. His work in connection with dynamos has been very important. In his paper before the Mechanical Engineers in 1879 he first introduced the methods of graphically depicting certain phenomena by means of characteristic curves. The use of these curves has become as common and as useful in dynamo work as indicator curves are in engine work. Dr. Hopkinson's purely scientific work relates principally to electrostatics and magnetism, on which subjects he has presented several papers to the Royal Society. Papers by Dr. Hopkinson have been read also before the Institution of Civil Engineers, and the Institution of Electrical Engineers. Dr. Hopkinson was elected a member of the Royal Society in 1878; and, during 1890, one of the Society's medals was awarded to him; and, in the same year, he was elected President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers.

HOPPS, John Page, was born in London, Nov. 6, 1834, and was educated in London and at the Baptist College Leicester. He entered the Baptist ministry at Hugglescote and Ibstock Leicestershire in 1855; and became assistant to the Rev. George Dawson at the Church of the Saviour, Birmingham, in 1858. He then accepted an invitation from a Unitarian Church at Sheffield; and afterwards was Unitarian minister at Dukinfield and Glasgow. At Glasgow he was elected a member of the first School Board, being the only representative there of the principle of secular education only in public schools. In 1876 he became minister of the Great Meeting, Leicester, where he now resides. For thirty years, in addition to the ordinary gatherings of his congregation, he has held meetings of working people on Sunday afternoons in public halls, at Birmingham, Sheffield, Manchester, Glasgow, and Leicester, for worship and "the uplifting of the life." During part of this time in Leicester, he closed his chapel on winter evenings, and gathered together immense audiences of working people in the Floral Hall. He was proprietor and editor of the Truthseeker for twenty-five years, from 1863 to 1887, and is the author of a great number of works on theological and religious subjects, including a "Revised Old Testament" for young people, a "Life of Jesus," for the young, and several volumes of non-controversial sermons, also of various hymns and poems. He is the writer of the most widely circulated statement of the Unitarian Faith, of which four hundred thousand copies have been issued. The following are some of Mr. Hopps's sermons:—"Fear of Evil Mastered by Faith in God," "Self-possession through Endurance," "The Goodness of God in a World of Struggle," "Love for God a Power Working with us for Good." Mr. Hopps has always been a social reformer, and an advocate of co-operation, and a politician. In 1885 he contested South Paddington against Lord Randolph Churchill, and in 1889 was invited to be the Liberal candidate for St. George's-in-the-East. He has written a series of papers on the Irish question, which have had a combined circulation of over a quarter of a million. He has been a frequent contributor to the Pall Mall Gazette, the Daily News, the Star, and the Echo. He is the editor of The Coming Day, the first number of which was published Jan. 1, 1891.

HOPWOOD, Charles Henry, Q.C., son of J. S. S. Hopwood, of Chancery Lane, solicitor, was born in July, 1829, and educated at a private school, and afterwards at King's College, London. He became Barrister, of the Middle Temple, in 1853, practised on the Northern Circuit and in London, and was made Queen's Counsel in 1874. He was elected M.P. for Stockport, 1874, and was returned again in 1880, but rejected in 1885. In 1892 he was elected for the Middleton Division of Lancashire. He was elected Bencher of the Middle Temple, 1876, and Reader, 1885; was appointed Recorder of Liverpool, Feb., 1886; attained considerable practice, and was joint author of "Election Cases," Hopwood & Philbrick, and Hopwood & Coltman. He advocated the cause of Trades Unions, defending at the Bar their members against prosecution and insisting upon protection of their funds against the prejudice of the time. In the House of Commons he assisted in amending the laws as to Employers and Workmen, and pressed forward Reforms in the Summary Jurisdiction of Justices to reduce the frequency and length of imprisonments. He advocated the creation of a Court of Appeal in Indictable cases. He worked for the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts as to Women, as well as of the Vaccination laws. Always advanced in political opinions, he supported every extension of the Suffrage. He is earnest for a merciful administration of the criminal law, which he believes to be harsh and inconsiderate, producing conviction of the innocent, and despair, not reform, of the guilty.

HORE, Annie Boyle, wife of the following Edward Coode Hore, was born in Bloomsbury, London, April 8, 1853. She was educated at Queen's College, and gained the Monteagle Scholarship in 1867. In 1882 Mrs. Hore commenced her travels in Central Africa; the first journey she started from Saadani and reached Mambria, 200 miles inland, trying the experiment of wheels. In 1884 Mrs. Hore started from Quilliname to try to reach Tanganyika by the Nyassa route, but after a five days' journey up the Kwa-kwa river in a little open boat, she was obliged to turn back from Marandeni, on account of war between the Portuguese and the natives. A month later Mrs. Hore joined her husband at Delagoa Bay, and together they took the old road to Ujiji, viâ Saadani, Mpwapwa, Ugogo, and Unyamwezi. Mrs. Hore was the first white woman to reach the shores of Lake Tanganyika, and she spent nearly four years on Kavala Island, teaching the children the first rudiments of Christianity and civilisation. Mrs. Hore is the authoress of "To Lake Tanganyika in a Bath Chair." Mrs. Hore has accompanied her husband to Polynesia (1894).

HORE, Edward Coode, F.R.G.S., was born in Islington on July 23, 1848. His parents were of two old Cornish families. He was educated chiefly in a private school at Cambridge, and was apprenticed, at the age of sixteen, to the owner of a London ship, and visited nearly every part of the world, serving on more than twenty different vessels, from the small coasting schooner to the first-class mail steamer, and passed through all the grades of apprentice, able seaman, boatswain, third, second, and chief officer, and master. In March, 1877, Captain Hore was appointed to the London Missionary Society's pioneer expedition in Central Africa. He lived on the shores of Lake Tanganyika for about ten years, first at Ujiji, then at Niumkorlo (South end) and subsequently on Kavala Island. He surveyed the 1,000 mile coast line of Lake Tanganyika in a little log canoe, and discovered the Lukuga to be the true outlet of the lake. In 1884 Captain Hore returned to England to report upon his work. In 1882 he took the sections of a steel life-boat, on trucks, from Saadani to Ujiji, a distance of 836 miles, in less than 100 days. In 1888 he finished the building of the steam yacht the "The Good News," on Lake Tanganyika. Captain Hore received a gold chronometer from the Government of the French Republic for attention and assistance to the late Abbé Debaize; and, in 1890, received the Cuthbert Peek grant from the Royal Geographical Society. Captain Hore is the author of "Tanganyika; eleven years in Central Africa;" as well as of contributions to various journals descriptive and defensive of the condition and rights of those natives of Central Africa for whom he has deep sympathy. In pursuit of the same subject he has also during three years, delivered many lectures throughout England, and in Australia, New Zealand, and U.S.A.; and exhibited, also in London, a display of models (made by himself) illustrative of Central African life. Early in 1894 Captain Hore accepted a call to further work in the Mission field, and has been appointed Chief Officer of the fine new steamship "John Williams" for the London Missionary Society's work in Polynesia.

HORNBY, Admiral of the Fleet, Sir Geoffrey Thomas Phipps, K.C.B., is the son, by a sister of the late Field-Marshal Sir John Burgoyne, of the late Admiral Sir Phipps Hornby, who served with great distinction in the French wars at the beginning of this century, who was a lieutenant on board the Victory when she carried Lord Nelson's flag, and who received a Gold Medal when in command of the Volage in Sir W. Hoste's action off Lissa. The present Admiral, born in 1825, entered the service on board the Princess Charlotte in 1837, and was present as a midshipman at the bombardment of Acre by Sir Robert Stopford and Sir Charles Napier. He afterwards served under Admiral Percy at the Cape of Good Hope, under his father, Sir Phipps Hornby, in the Pacific and on various other stations. He commanded the first flying squadron as captain, with the rank of commodore, taking the squadron round the world. He has besides had great experience in manœuvring fleets. He was Flag Captain to Sir Sidney Dacres, when that officer commanded the Channel Fleet, and, subsequently, as Rear-Admiral, he himself held that post, succeeding Admiral Wellesley. He attained flag-rank in 1869, and became Vice-Admiral in 1875. He was appointed Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's naval forces in the Mediterranean, and he held that responsible position during the trying times in 1878, when war was apprehended between this country and Russia, and when our fleet was ordered to the Dardanelles. He was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath, Aug. 12, 1878. Subsequently he was appointed to succeed Admiral Sir Charles Shadwell as President of the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, for a term of three years, to date from March 1, 1881. He served under Mr. Ward Hunt as a Lord of the Admiralty in Lord Beaconsfield's Administration, as his father had served in that of the late Lord Derby. In 1885 he was made a G.C.B., and in Jan. 1886, he was appointed first and principal Naval A.D.C. to the Queen. In May, 1888, he was promoted to be Admiral of the Fleet. He is author of "Squadrons of Exercise in the British Navy." He married, in 1853, Emily Frances, daughter of the late Rev. John Coles, of Ditcham Park, Hants. He is a magistrate for Sussex, in which county he owns the residential property of Little Green, near Petersfield.

HORNBY, The Rev. James John, D.C.L., third son of the late Admiral Sir Phipps Hornby, G.C.B., of Little Green, Sussex, was born at Winwick, in 1826, and educated at Eton under the Rev. Dr. Hawtrey, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where, in 1849, he took a first-class in classics. In 1849 he became a Fellow of Brasenose College, and, in 1854, Tutor and Principal of Bishop Cosin's Hall in the University of Durham. Returning to Oxford, in 1864, he became Classical Lecturer at Brasenose; and, in 1866, was Senior Proctor of the University. At the close of the latter year he was elected Second Master of Winchester School, which post he retained till his appointment as Head Master of Eton, in Jan. 1868. Dr. Hornby was appointed one of Her Majesty's honorary chaplains in Feb., 1882, and made D.C.L. of Durham University the same year. He was appointed to the Provostship of Eton, July, 1884.

HORSLEY, John Callcott, R.A., son of the late William Horsley, the well-known musician, and grand-nephew of the late Sir Augustus Callcott, the eminent painter, was born in London, Jan. 29. 1817. His first exhibited picture, painted while he was a youth—"Rent-Day at Haddon Hall in the Sixteenth Century"—was spoken of in high terms by Wilkie. "The Chess Players," "The Rival Musicians," "Waiting for an Answer," were first seen in the British Institution; and he exhibited, for the first time at the Academy, the "Pride of the Village" (now in the Vernon Gallery). This was followed by "The Contrast: Youth and Age," in 1840; "Leaving the Ball," another "Contrast," gay pleasure seekers on the one hand, the homeless outcast on the other, and "The Pedlar," both in 1841; "Winning Gloves," in 1842; and "The Father's Grave," in 1843. In the latter year Mr. Horsley's cartoon of "St. Augustine Preaching," gained at Westminster Hall one of the three prizes in the second rank, of £200; and in the trial of skill of 1844 he obtained, by his two small frescoes, a place among the six painters commissioned to execute further samples for the Palace at Westminster. That of 1845, for "Religion," was approved, and the subject executed at large in the House of Lords. In 1847 his colossal oil painting, "Henry V., believing the King dead, assumes the Crown," secured a premium of the third class. Another fresco, which he has been employed to execute, "Satan surprised at the Ear of Eve," is to be seen in a portion of the New Palace, called Poet's Hall. Amongst his later works are "Malvolio i' the Sun practising to his own Shadow;" "Hospitality;" "The Madrigal—'Keep your Time;'" "The Pet of the Common;" "L'Allegro and Il Penseroso" (painted for the late Prince Consort); "Lady Jane Grey and Roger Ascham;" "A Scene from Don Quixote;" "Flower Girls—Town and Country;" "The Holy Communion;" "The Lost Found;" "A Jealous Eye;" "The Duenna's Return;" "The New Dress;" and "Under the Mistletoe;" "The Bashful Swain;" "The Duenna and Her Cares;" "Attack and Defence;" "Detected;" "The Gaoler's Daughter;" "Caught Napping;" "The Banker's Private Room,—Negotiating a Loan;" "Old Folk and Young Folk;" "Pay for Peeping;" "In with You;" "Stolen Glances;" "The other Name?" "The Poet's Theme;" "Sunny Moments;" and a large religious subject with figures of a colossal size, entitled "The Healing Mercies of Christ," painted as an altar-piece for the chapel of St. Thomas's Hospital; portrait of Thomas Woolcombe, Esq., painted for the South Devon Railway Company; "Under Lock and Key;" "Coming Down to Dinner;" "The World Forgetting;" "Critics on Costume—Fashions Change;" "Le Jour des Morts;" "Life in the Château Gardens at Fontainebleau," 1881; "A Merry Chase in Haddon Hall," 1882; and "Wedding Rings," 1883, &c. In 1893 he exhibited a portrait of Alderman Treloar at the Royal Academy. In 1882 Mr. Horsley was elected Treasurer of the Royal Academy. He has been very active in bringing together the magnificent collections of "Old Masters" displayed every winter since 1870 at Burlington House.

HORSLEY, Victor Alexander Haden, son of Mr. Horsley, R.A., was born on April 14, 1857, in Kensington, and educated at Cranbrook School and University College Hospital with the view of entering on a medical career. After taking the Gold Medal in Anatomy and in Surgery, obtaining the Surgical Scholarship at the University of London, and holding the usual preliminary posts, including the Surgical Registrarship, he was appointed on the surgical staff of the Hospital, having previously taken the F.R.C.S. and London degrees in medicine and surgery. From 1884 to 1890 he held the post of Professor-Superintendent of the Brown Institution, in the laboratory of which he carried out investigations into the localisation of functions of the brain and into the functions of the thyroid gland, by which latter he proved that the disease known as myxoedema was caused by the loss of this organ. In 1885 he was appointed Secretary to the Royal Commission on Hydrophobia, in which capacity he personally sought out and followed up the cases operated on, and became thoroughly convinced of the efficiency of their treatment. In 1886 he was elected Fellow of the Royal Society, to the transactions and proceedings of which he, in conjunction with others, has contributed many papers bearing principally on brain physiology localization. Having been elected Surgeon to the National Hospital for Paralysis and Epilepsy he, in 1886, performed a successful operation for removal of a tumour in the brain of a patient suffering from those diseases. This he followed up by many others of a similar nature, and in 1887 he performed the first successful operation for the removal of a tumour of the spinal cord. The operations in question formed the subject of two papers on Brain Surgery in 1886 in the British Medical Journal. In 1890 he suggested the use of the thyroid gland in the treatment of myxoedema, the method proposed being that of grafting the gland into the bodies of patients suffering from the disease, and in 1891 he contributed a critical and historical review of the subject to Virchow's "Festschrift." In the same year he, in conjunction with Professor Gotch, was appointed to give the Croonian Lecture of the Royal Society, the subject being "The Mammalian Nervous System, its Functions and their Localization, determined by an electrical method." From 1891 to 1893 he held the post of Fullerian Professor at the Royal Institution, and delivered three sets of lectures (of which the first has appeared in book form) on the Brain and Spinal Cord. He was elected President of the Section of Pathology at the British Medical Association in 1892, and in 1893 opened the discussion in the Surgical Section of that Association with a paper on the treatment of Cerebral Tumours. As one of the lecturers before the British Association for that year he delivered an address on the Discovery of the Functions of the Nervous System, showing how largely our knowledge on the subject is the result of experimental research. In the same year he was awarded the Cameron Prize for Therapeutics by the University of Edinburgh. Mr. Horsley is Professor of Pathology at University College, and in the Pathological Laboratory of that Institution, as well as at the Brown, has carried out researches on intra-cranial pressure with Mr. Spencer, on the larynx with Dr. Semon, on rabies, on the Du Buisson hot air treatment for hydrophobia, on the motor function of certain cranial nerves with Dr. Beevor, and on gunshot wounds of the brain with Dr. Kramer. Mr. Horsley is also the author of several papers in the British Medical Journal, especially on the surgical treatment of neuralgia, and on operation, after the method of Lannelongue, for the relief of microcephalic idiocy in children. He is a member of the German Surgical Society, the American Surgical Society, the American Neurological Society, the Société de Biologie in Paris, and a corresponding member of the Royal Association of Physicians of Buda Pesth. He has greatly interested himself in questions of medical politics, is President of the Medical Defence Union, and has devoted much of his leisure time to the study of archæology, especially in reference to prehistoric methods of trephining, on which latter subject he has delivered several lectures, the first being before the Royal Institution in 1886. Mr. Horsley is an ardent advocate of experimental research, and his vindication of himself and his English colleagues at the Church Congress of 1892, followed by his article on the subject in the Nineteenth Century and by many letters in the Times, &c., is well known.

HORTON, The Rev. Robert Forman, M.A., an eminent preacher, was born in London, Sept. 18, 1855, and is the son of the Rev. T. G. Horton, at that time minister of Tonbridge Chapel. He was educated at Shrewsbury School, New College, Oxford, of which he was a Fellow, and was Resident in Oxford as Lecturer until the year 1884; but was excluded from a professorship there by reason of his Nonconformist views. He has been Minister of Lyndhurst Road Church, Hampstead, since 1884; and has published "History of the Romans," and "Inspiration and the Bible."

HOSMER, Harriet, born at Watertown, Massachusetts, Oct. 9, 1830, was educated at Lenox, Massachusetts, and early displayed a taste for art. She received a few lessons in modelling in Boston, and then entered a medical college in St. Louis to study anatomy and dissection. Her first work in marble was a reduced copy of Canova's bust of Napoleon, which was soon followed by an ideal work, "Hesper, or the Evening Star." In 1852 she went to Rome, and became a pupil of Gibson. After two years of study and modelling from the antique, she produced the busts of "Daphne" and "Medusa." Her first full-length figure in marble was Œnone, completed in 1855, and this was followed in the same year by "Puck," of which many copies have been made. Next came a companion piece "Will-o'-the-Wisp." Her reclining statue of "Beatrice Cenci," was completed and exhibited in 1857. A colossal statue of "Zenobia, Queen of Palmyra, in chains," was her next important work, followed by the "Sleeping" and the "Waking Faun," and a design of a memorial monument to Abraham Lincoln. Besides her skill in sculpture, Miss Hosmer has exhibited talents for designing and constructing machinery and devising new processes, especially in connection with her own art, such as a method of converting ordinary Italian limestone into marble. She has resided for many years in Rome, making occasional visits to the United States.

HOUGHTON, The Right Hon. Monckton Milnes, Viceroy of Ireland, is the son of the distinguished poet, the late Monckton Milnes, first Lord Houghton, by a daughter of the second Baron Crewe. He was born in 1858 and received his education at Harrow and Trinity, Cambridge, his father's old college. He entered political life as unpaid private Secretary to the late Earl Granville, and continued to hold his post during his chief's reign at the Foreign Office. Entering the House of Lords on the death of his father, in 1885, he was warmly welcomed by the Liberal peers, and in 1886, on the creation of Mr. Gladstone's Government, he became a Lord in Waiting, and represented the Board of Trade in the Upper House. In 1892, on the return to power of the Liberal party, he was appointed Viceroy of Ireland. The appointment caused general surprise as Lord Brassey had been confidently promoted to the post by the newspapers. Lord Houghton is one of the youngest Viceroys of modern times. He is a widower, his wife, a daughter of Lady Hermione Graham, having died suddenly in 1887. The honours of Dublin Castle are, however, dispensed by his sisters, the wives of the Hon. Arthur Henniker and of Sir Gerald Fitzgerald, K.C.M.G.

HOW, The Right Rev. William Walsham, D.D., Bishop of Wakefield, son of William Wybergh How, Esq., of Shrewsbury, was born in that town, Dec. 13, 1823. From Shrewsbury School he proceeded to Wadham College, Oxford (B.A. 1847). He was successively curate of St. George's, Kidderminster, 1846: and of Holy Cross, Shrewsbury, 1848; and was collated to the rectory of Whittington, Shropshire, in the diocese of St. Asaph, in 1851. In 1853 he was appointed rural dean of Oswestry, and diocesan inspector of schools; in 1860 he obtained an honorary canonry in St. Asaph's Cathedral; and in 1869 was elected Proctor in Convocation for the diocese. He was one of the Select Preachers at Oxford in 1868-69; and in 1878 he was appointed examining chaplain to the Bishop of Lichfield. In 1879 he obtained the rectory of St. Andrew Undershaft with St. Mary Axe, in the City of London, and became Prebendary in St. Paul's Cathedral; in July the same year the Queen appointed him Suffragan Bishop of Bedford; and, in Feb., 1888, he was translated to the Bishopric of Wakefield. He is the author of various works of a theological and practical character, including "Plain Words," four series; "Practical Sermons," "Lent Lectures on Psalm li.," "Daily Family Prayer for Churchmen," "Pastor in Parochiâ," "Plain Words to Children," "The Parish Priest," "Cambridge Pastoral Lectures," "Words of Good Cheer," and "Poems;" also a "Commentary on the Four Gospels," and "Holy Communion."

HOWARD, Sir Henry Francis, G.C.B., second son of the late Henry Howard, Esq., of Corby Castle Cumberland, was born in 1809, educated at Stonyhurst and the University of Edinburgh. He was attached to the mission at Munich in 1828; was several times Chargé d'Affaires; was appointed paid Attaché at Berlin in 1832; Secretary of Legation at the Hague in 1845; was transferred to Berlin in 1846; and was Chargé d'Affaires several times during the succeeding years. He was appointed Envoy-Extraordinary and Minister-Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Brazil in 1853; was transferred to Lisbon, in 1855; and to Hanover in 1859, when he was appointed Minister-Plenipotentiary to Brunswick and to Oldenburg; and was made a K.C.B. in 1863. He was appointed Envoy-Extraordinary and Minister-Plenipotentiary to the King of Bavaria, Jan. 19, 1866; and was created a G.C.B. in 1872.

HOWARD, General Oliver Otis, LL.D., was born at Leeds, Maine, Nov. 8, 1830. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1850; and in 1854 at the Military Academy at West Point, where, in 1857, he was made Instructor, and later Assistant Professor of Mathematics. Upon the breaking out of the civil war he was made Colonel of a regiment of volunteers; commanded a brigade at the battle of Bull Run; and was made (Sept. 3, 1861) Brigadier-General of volunteers. He lost his right arm at the battle of Fair Oaks,

June 1, 1862. He was made Major-General of volunteers, Nov. 29, 1862; and had the command of a division at Burnside's defeat at Fredericksburg, Dec. 13, 1862. Soon after, he was placed in command of the 11th army corps, which was attacked at evening by the Confederate General Jackson, and put to flight, at Chancellorsville, July 1, 1863. He received the thanks of Congress for taking the position of success at Gettysburg. In the following autumn he was sent with his corps to the West; took part in the campaign which followed down to the capture of Atlanta, and commanded the right wing of the army during Sherman's "march to the sea." He was, in Dec., 1864, promoted to Brigadier-General, and in the following March to Brevet-Major-General in the regular army. In May, 1865, he was placed at the head of the Freeman's Bureau, his duties lasting until 1874; and he served also from 1869 to 1873 as President of Howard University. In 1872 he was sent as special commissioner to the Indians in New Mexico and Arizona; and from 1874 to 1881 he commanded the Department of Columbia on the Indian frontier. In 1881 he took charge for two years of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point; and was subsequently transferred to the command of the Department of the Platte. In 1886 he received his full rank of Major-General, and is now (1893) in command of the Dept. of the East. The degree of A.M. was conferred upon him by Bowdoin College in 1853, and that of LL.D. by Waterville and Shurtleff Colleges in 1865, and by the Gettysburg Theol. Seminary in 1866. The French Government made him a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour in 1884.

HOWELLS, William Dean, was born at Martinsville, Ohio, March 1, 1837. In 1840 he removed to Hamilton, Ohio, with his father, who was a printer and journalist. He learned the printer's trade of his father, and was afterwards editorially connected with the Cincinnati Gazette and the Ohio State Journal. From 1861 to 1865 he was United States Consul at Venice. Returning to America he engaged in literary labour, and in 1871 became editor of the Atlantic Monthly, a position which he retained until 1880, when he relinquished it to devote himself exclusively to writing. Besides his papers in that magazine and other periodicals, he has published "Poems of Two Friends," himself and J. J. Piatt, 1860; "Life of Abraham Lincoln," 1860; "Venetian Life," 1866; "Italian Journeys," 1867; "No Love Lost," 1868; "Suburban Sketches," 1870; "Their Wedding Journey," 1872; "A Chance Acquaintance," and "Poems," 1873; "A Foregone Conclusion," 1874; "Counterfeit Presentment," a Comedy, and "A Day's Pleasure," 1876; "The Parlour Car," "Out of the Question," and "Life of Rutherford B. Hayes," 1877; "The Lady of the Aroostook," 1879; "The Undiscovered Country," 1880; "A Fearful Responsibility, and other Stories," and "Dr. Breen's Practice," 1881; "A Modern Instance," 1882; "A Woman's Reason," and "The Sleeping Car," 1883; "The Register," 1884; "The Elevator," "The Rise of Silas Lapham," and "The Garotters," 1885; "Indian Summer," and "Tuscan Cities," 1886; "The Minister's Charge," and "April Hopes," 1887; "Annie Kilburn," and "Modern Italian Poets," 1888; "A Hazard of New Fortunes," 1889; "The Shadow of a Dream," 1890; "An Imperative Duty," 1891; "The Quality of Mercy," 1892-3; "The World of Diamonds," "The Coast of Bohemia," 1893. Under the title of "Choice Biography," he edited, in 1877-78, a series of eight small volumes. For several years he conducted a regular department, The Editor's Study, in Harper's Magazine, but resigned the charge of it in 1891. All his works have been largely circulated in England, where, of late years, he has become almost as well known as in his own country.

HOWLAND, The Hon. Sir William Pearce, C.B., K.C.M.G., was born at Pawlings, Duchess Co., N.Y., May 29, 1811, but removed to Canada in 1830. He at once engaged in business at Toronto, and in time became one of the largest mill-proprietors in the Dominion. He was returned for West York in 1857, and sat in the Legislature of Canada until 1868, when he was appointed Lieut-Governor of Ontario. In 1862 he became a Member of the Executive Council of Canada; from 1862 to 1863 he served as Minister of Finance; 1863-4 as Receiver-General; and 1864-6 as Postmaster-General. In 1866 he succeeded the Hon. A. T. Galt as Finance Minister, and on the formation of the first Dominion Government, in the following year, he accepted the portfolio of Minister of Inland Revenue, and was sworn a member of the Privy Council. That position he resigned in 1868 on accepting the Lieut.-Governorship, held by him till 1873. He was created a C.B. in 1867 and a K.C.M.G. in 1879.

HOWORTH, Sir Henry Hoyle, K.C.I.E., M.P., Corr. Member of the Royal Academy of Lisbon and of the Geographical Society and Anthropological Society of Italy, Hon.

D.C.L., F.R.S., F.S.A., F.G.S., &c., is the son of the late Henry Howorth, of Lisbon, merchant, and was born in Lisbon, July 1, 1842, educated at Rossall School, and called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, June 11, 1867. He has devoted himself chiefly to literature and politics, and is the author of a large work on the "History of the Mongols," of which several volumes are published, and which is still in progress; a "History of Chinghiz Khan and his Ancestors," based upon an entirely new chronicle of the race found in the Peking Library (this work has been published in a series of over 30 chapters in the Indian Antiquary); of a considerable geological work entitled "The Mammoth and the Flood," discussing the problems arising out of the destruction of so-called palæolithic man and his contemporaries; of a second work entitled "The Glacial Nightmare and the Flood," in which the theories of the more extravagant glacialists are attacked, and the effects which they largely assign to ice are attributed to water. These two works, which have been favourably reviewed in the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviews and elsewhere, involve an attack upon the current theories of Uniformity. Sir Henry Howorth has also edited a work on the "History of the Vicars of Rochdale," for the Chetham Society. In addition he has written more than seventy scientific memoirs, chiefly on geological, ethnographical and historical subjects. Among these are several series of papers on the Westerly Drifting of Nomades, on the Early Ethnography of Germany, on the Spread of the Slavs, in the Journal of the Anthropological Institute; a similar series on the Northern Frontiers of China, in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society; and a series on the Early Expeditions of the Scandinavians, in the Journal of the Royal Historical Society. He has also contributed memoirs to the International Congress of Orientalists, to the Journal of the Royal Geographical Society, the Archæologia, the Geological Magazine, the Journal of the Numismatic Society, the Quarterly, Edinburgh, and other reviews; and has contributed numerous letters to the Times, Spectator, &c., on political and social subjects, &c. He is a magistrate for Lancashire; and for more than twenty years he has been actively interested in Lancashire politics. He is a Trustee of Owens College and a Feoffee of Chetham's College and Library. Sir Henry Howorth was elected a Conservative Member for South Salford at the general election of 1886, and again in 1893. In recognition of his works upon Eastern history, &c., he was created a K.C.I.E. in 1892, and a F.R.S. in 1893.

HUDLESTON, Wilfrid H., M.A., F.R.S., is the son of John Simpson, of Knaresborough, M.D., who in April, 1867, assumed by royal license the surname of Hudleston, in right of his wife, Elizabeth, heiress of line of the Hudlestons of co. Cumberland. He was born at York, June 2, 1828, and educated at York and at Uppingham, and afterwards at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1850. During the period between 1855 and 1860 he travelled in Lapland, Algeria, Greece, Turkey, and other countries, as an ornithologist, and contributed articles to the earlier numbers of the Ibis. Of late years he has paid much attention to the study of geology, and has written numerous papers, reviews and addresses, which have appeared in the Proceedings of the Geologists' Association, the Geological Magazine, the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, the Mineralogical Magazine, the issues of the Palæontographical Society, and in other publications. He is a Past President of the Geologists' Association, of the Mineralogical Society, of the Malton Field Naturalists' Society, and of the Yorkshire Naturalists' Union. He was elected President (1889-90) of the Devonshire Association for the Advancement of Science, Literature and Art, and in 1892-1894 was President of the Geological Society of London, of which he had previously been Secretary.

HUDSON, Charles Thomas, M.A., LL.D. (Cantab.), F.R.S., son of John Corrie Hudson, Esq., of Guildford, was born at Brompton, London, in 1828, and was educated at The Grange, Sunderland. He entered St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1848, and was 15th Wrangler in 1852. He was President of the Royal Microscopical Society in 1888, 1889, and 1890, and elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1889. He is joint author with Mr. P. H. Gosse, F.R.S., of Hudson and Gosse's "Rotifera," and is the discoverer of Pedalion mirum, and of numerous new genera and species of Rotifera, described in papers published in the Journal of the Royal Microscopical Society, Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science, and the Annals and Magazine of Natural History, from 1869 to the present year. Dr. Hudson is specially distinguished for his knowledge of the Rotifera, concerning which he is the chief living authority.

HUGGINS, William, F.R.S., Hon. F.R.S.E., D.C.L. (Oxon.), LL.D. (Can-

tab., Edin., Dublin, and St. Andrew's), Ph.D. (Leyden), was born in London, Feb. 7, 1824, and received his early education at the City of London School. He afterwards continued his studies in mathematics, classics, and modern languages with the assistance of private masters. Much of his time was given to experiments in natural philosophy, and he collected apparatus by the use of which he gained considerable practical knowledge of the elements of chemistry, electricity, magnetism, and other branches of physical science. In 1852 he was elected a member of the Microscopical Society, and for some years he applied himself with much assiduity, with the aid of the microscope, to the study of animal and vegetable physiology. In 1855 Dr. Huggins erected an observatory at his residence at Upper Tulse Hill, and occupied himself for some time with observations of double stars, and with careful drawings of the planets Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn. From the first establishment of his observatory it was his desire not to continue in the beaten track of astronomical observation, but, if possible, to bring to bear upon the science of astronomy the practical knowledge which he had obtained of general physics. For his important discoveries and researches by means of the spectroscope applied to the heavenly bodies, Dr. Huggins received, in November, 1866, one of the Royal Medals placed at the disposal of the Royal Society, of which he had previously, on June 1, 1865, been elected a Fellow. In 1867 the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society was awarded to Dr. Huggins and Dr. Miller for their conjoint researches. Dr. Huggins has since continued his prismatic researches by a re-examination of the nebulæ with a more powerful spectroscope, by which his former results have been confirmed. He has also examined the spectra of four comets, and has found that the greater part of the light of these objects is different from solar light. Dr. Huggins has made observations of the spectra of the solar prominences, and devised the method by which the forms of these objects may be seen. From 1875 Dr. Huggins has been engaged in obtaining photographs of the ultra-violet portions (invisible to eye observation) of the spectra of the stars. This difficult research has led to important results, and has opened quite a new field of work to the astronomer; it furnishes one of the chief data which we at present have as to the probable relative ages of the stars and of the sun. Dr. Huggins has extended this method of research to the planets, to comets, to the Great Nebula in Orion and to other nebulæ; new results of importance being obtained. For these newer researches, and for that on the motion of stars in the line of sight, Dr. Huggins has a second time received a medal from the Royal Society, the Rumford Medal being conferred upon him in 1880; also a Prix Valtz (1883) from the Institute of France; and the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society for the second time (1885). The research on the motions of the stars in the line of sight was indeed a new departure of the utmost importance in astronomical physics. It has since been followed up at Greenwich, and at Potsdam and Harvard, by means of photography. Besides revealing to us the orbits of many stars, and otherwise indetectable companion stars, the study of line of sight motions must certainly widely increase our knowledge of the general laws and arrangements of the stellar universe. Dr. Huggins delivered the Rede Lecture at the University of Cambridge in 1869, when he gave an account of his researches in astronomy by means of the spectroscope. In May, 1870, he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge, and at the Commemoration at Oxford the same year, the degree of D.C.L. On the occasion of the meeting of the British Association at Edinburgh in 1871, he was created honorary LL.D. of that University. A large duplex telescope, by Messrs. Grubb, of Dublin, consisting of an achromatic of fifteen inches, and of a reflector of eighteen inches, constructed at the expense of the Royal Society, was placed, in 1871, in Dr. Huggins's hands, and fixed in the observatory erected by him at Upper Tulse Hill. In July, 1872, he was elected a Foreign Member of the ancient University, Dei Lincei, in Rome. In the October of the same year the Academy of Sciences of Paris awarded the Lalande Prize for Astronomy to Dr. Huggins, as an acknowledgment of his researches in the physical constitution of the stars, planets, comets, and nebulæ. The Emperor of Brazil, who has twice paid long visits to Dr. Huggins's observatory, honoured him with the distinction of Commander of the Order of the Rose in March, 1873. About the same time he was elected a Foreign Member of the Royal Society of Denmark, and also of the Philosophical Society of Lund. In January, 1874, he received the honour of being elected a Corresponding Member of the Academy of Sciences of Paris. At the tercentenary commemoration of the University of Leyden, in 1875, Dr. Huggins received the honorary degree of Doctor of Physics and Mathematics. In 1877 he was elected a Corresponding Member of the Royal Society of Göttingen, and a member of the Royal Society of Bohemia. In 1886 he received the degree of LL.D., honoris causâ, from Trinity College, Dublin; and in 1888 the Prix Janssen from the Institute of France. He is also an Hon. Fellow of the Royal Society of New South Wales; an Hon. Foreign Member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, Boston; and a Fellow of various other learned Societies at home and abroad. Dr. Huggins was President of the Royal Astronomical Society from 1876 to 1878; and President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science in 1891-2.

HUGHES, Professor David Edward, F.R.S., was born in London in 1831; his parents, however, emigrated to the United States. He was, in 1850 (on account of his great musical talents), appointed Professor of Music at the College of Bardstown in Kentucky. His equal talents for physical sciences and mechanics later on procured him the appointment to the Chair of Natural Philosophy at the same College. His first great invention was that of the printing telegraph which bears his name. In 1854, Professor Hughes went to Louisville to superintend the making of his first instrument, but the patent for it was not taken out in the United States until 1855. In that year the invention became a practical success, and no sooner was this the case, than Professor Hughes received a telegram from the editors of the American Associated Press summoning him to New York. The American Telegraph Company was then in possession of the Morse instrument, and levied rates for transmission which were felt to be excessive. The Hughes type-printer was therefore taken up in opposition to the Morse. A company was formed, and the lines of several small companies were leased. In 1857 these smaller companies united to form one large corporation—the present Western Union Telegraph Company. In that year Professor Hughes came to England in order to effect its introduction here, but the English authorities metaphorically threw cold water on his invention, and he could not, at that time, persuade the telegraph companies here even to try it; so, after three years' fruitless efforts, he went to France, where the French Imperial Government at once put the instrument in practical use as an experiment between Lyons and Paris. At the end of that trial a provisional contract was made with Professor Hughes for the right to the use of the instrument for all the French lines; stipulating that the experimental trials should be continued and extended between Marseilles, Lyons, Paris and Bordeaux for twelve months, during which a committee of the highest scientific experts should watch and report upon the results obtained. The report of this committee being highly favourable, the French Government, in 1861, adopted the Hughes instrument for all their important lines. The Emperor Napoleon III. took great interest in the invention, and often sent for Professor Hughes in order to consult him privately upon several of his majesty's own electrical inventions. Professor Hughes was nominated, in 1862, Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur, and made a member of the Telegraph Commission de Perfectionnements. In the latter capacity he undertook, in conjunction with Professor Guillemin, at the request of the Government, a series of experiments upon the comparative value of the lightning protectors then in use. These experiments were made at the laboratory of the École de St. Cyr, and formed the subject of memoirs published in the Comptes rendus of the Academy of Science. At the end of the year 1862, the Italian Government invited Professor Hughes to visit Italy, and instruct their officers in the use of his instrument. This was done, and the instrument was tried probationally for six months between Florence, Genoa, and Turin, at the end of which time the Hughes system was adopted for all their important lines. In 1863, the United Kingdom Telegraph Company of England adopted the Hughes instrument for their lines. In 1864, Professor Hughes was invited by the Russian Government to visit St. Petersburg, where he remained nine months, during which he had the honour of being a guest of the Emperor in the Summer Palace of Czarskvizelo, where he was requested to explain his invention, and also to give a lecture on electricity to the Czar and his court. His instrument was adopted for all long Russian telegraph lines, and he was made a Knight of the Order of St. Anne. Between 1864 and 1876, Professor Hughes was called successively to Germany, Austria, Turkey, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, and Spain, where his telegraph system met with the same thorough adoption. In 1878, Professor Hughes announced through a paper to the Royal Society his discovery of the microphone. This instrument not only transmits speech, but magnifies the smallest sound, so that it is easy to render audible the faintest sound, such as the walk of a fly. The microphone is now universally employed as the transmitter to the telephone. In 1879, he presented to the Royal Society his invention of the Induction Balance, now well known to the scientific world. In 1880, Professor Hughes was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; and he has since read numerous papers upon electricity and magnetism before that Society, for which, together with his discovery of the microphone and invention of the Induction Balance, the Royal Society, in 1885, bestowed upon him their Royal Gold Medal. The Post Office in England now makes use of the Hughes system for all its Continental messages, and it is in active service in all the large cities of the Continent. In 1881, Professor Hughes represented Great Britain as one of the Commissioners at the Paris Electrical Exhibition; and in 1886 he was elected President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers. He has received numerous orders of knighthood, Medals and Diplomas from the different countries which have appreciated his works. Professor Hughes is Commander of the Légion d'Honneur (France); Charles III. (Spain); Iron Crown (Austria); Medjidieh (Turkey); and Knight of St. Anne (Russia); St. Maurice and St. Lazarus (Italy); St. Michael's (Bavaria); and he received the special Gold Grand Prix, (one of ten only) Paris Exhibition, 1867; as well as the Grand Diplome d'Honneur, Paris Electrical Exhibition, 1881; besides numerous other medals and titles of less importance.

HUGHES, Col. Edwin, M.P., was born at Droitwich, Worcestershire, May 27, 1832, and educated at the Grammar School, Birmingham. In 1862 he was commissioned second lieutenant in the Plumstead Artillery Volunteers, and became a prize-winner at many county and Wimbledon competitions. In 1865, Mr. Hughes was appointed chief county Conservative agent, and was successful in gaining enough on one revision to win six seats, which have ever since been kept by the Conservatives. In 1874 he was transferred to the City of London Conservative Association, and increased the Conservative majority by thousands, so that in 1880 they polled two to one, and in 1885 four to one. After twenty-five years' exertions he procured the return in 1880 of two Conservative members for Greenwich. He took an active part in the agitation against the School Board in 1885, and on the triumph of the "economical" party he was elected to the post previously held by the Hon. Lyulph Stanley. In 1885 he was elected first member for Woolwich by a large Conservative majority, after a somewhat unedifying squabble had taken place between himself and Baron H. de Worms, as to the representation of Greenwich; and again in 1886 he was returned by a still larger majority. In 1887 retiring from the Volunteers, he became Honorary Colonel of the Artillery Brigade he had raised and commanded for 28 years. He is an authority on Metropolitan Local Government, and in 1889 he was elected Member of the London County Council. In 1892 he was re-elected to Parliament by a majority of 1,892 over Mr. Ben Jones. Bostal Woods, near Plumstead, were acquired for the public through his influence in 1893.

HUGHES, Rev. Hugh Price, M.A., London, a celebrated Wesleyan preacher, was born in 1847, at Carmarthen, South Wales, and is the son of John Hughes Esq., surgeon, coroner, senior magistrate, chairman of School Board, etc., in Carmarthen. He was educated privately, and afterwards attended lectures at University College, London, and at the Theological College of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, at Richmond, Surrey, where Dr. Moulton was his tutor, His first appointment was to Dover in 1869. He remained there, and at every other place to which he was appointed, for the three years permitted by the itinerancy law of his Church. His successive appointments were, Dover, Brighton, Stoke Newington, London; Mostyn Road, London; Oxford, and Brixton Hill. At the conclusion of his three years at Brixton Hill, he was appointed to his present position as superintendent of the West London Mission, which conducts services in St. James's Hall, Prince's Hall, Wardour Hall, and Cleveland Hall, and has a centre of social philanthropy in Lincoln House, 60, Greek Street, Soho Square; a residence for young men at Wiclif House, Fitzroy Square; and a Sisterhood in Katherine House, Montague Street, Russell Square. During 1888 he joined in the Education Controversy which arose in relation to the Majority Report of the Commission. He published in 1889, "Social Christianity," now in its third edition; and "The Philanthropy of God," in 1890. In 1892 he came prominently forward at the "Review of the Churches" Conference at Grindelwald, when his remarks on a possible reconciliation between English Dissenters and the Church of England led to much discussion. He was present also at the Conferences at Lucerne in 1893. He is editor of the Methodist Times, the most influential Methodist newspaper; is an active total abstainer, and Vice-President of The United Kingdom Alliance. He took a prominent part in the Social Purity movement; is a permanent member of the Methodist Conference; and a leader of "The Forward Movement," which aims at the promotion of Social as well as Individual Salvation.

HUGHES, Thomas, Q.C., second son of Mr. John Hughes, of Donnington Priory, near Newbury, Berks, by Margaret Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Thomas Wilkinson, was born on Oct. 20, 1823, at Uffington, in Berkshire, of which parish his grandfather was vicar. His father afterwards removed to Donnington Priory. In 1830 he was sent to a school at Twyford, near Winchester, and at the end of the year 1833 he was removed to Rugby, where he studied under Dr. Arnold. Thence he proceeded to Oriel College, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1845. Previous to that time he had turned his attention to political problems, and when he left Oxford he was an advanced Liberal. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Jan., 1848. He was one of the members for Lambeth from 1865 to 1868, when he was returned for the borough of Frome, which he continued to represent till Jan. 1874. At the general election of Feb. of that year, he was nominated as a candidate for Marylebone; but he retired on the day before the poll was taken, when 294 votes were recorded in his favour. Mr. Hughes was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1869, and in the following year he made a tour in the United States. In July, 1882, he was appointed Judge of the County Court Circuit, No. 9, vacant by the resignation of Mr. Yates. Of late years he has made occasional appearances on the public platform, and is a well-known speaker on Co-operation. He is also active in the crusade against gambling. He is the author of "Tom Brown's School Days, by an Old Boy," 1857, which has passed through several editions, and a French version of which "imité de l'Anglais avec l'autorisation de l'auteur" par J. Levoisin, appeared in Paris in 1875; "The Scouring of the White Horse," 1858, though dated 1859; "Tom Brown at Oxford," 3 vols., and "Religio Laici," 1861, being the first of a series of "Tracts for Priests and People," and afterwards reprinted as "A Layman's Faith," 1868; "The Cause of Freedom: which is its Champion in America, the North or the South?" 1863; "Alfred the Great," in the "Sunday Library for Household Reading," 1869; "Memoir of a Brother" [Geo. C. Hughes], (2nd edit., 1873); a Prefatory Memoir to Charles Kingsley's "Alton Locke," 1876; "The Old Church; what shall we do with It?" a volume directed against the movement for the disestablishment of the Church of England, 1878; and "A Memoir of Daniel Macmillan," 1882. He also contributed a preface to "Whitmore's Poems;" and edited J. R. Lowell's "Biglow Papers," 1859; the Comte de Paris' work on "The Trade Unions of England," 1869; F. D. Maurice's treatise on "The Friendship of Books," 1874; and "Gone to Texas: Letters from Our Boys," 1885; "Life of Bishop Fraser," 1887; "Livingstone," 1889. In 1891 he wrote an introduction to an edition of the Poetical Works of J. R. Lowell. Mr. Hughes married, in 1847, Anne Frances, eldest daughter of the Rev. James Ford, Prebendary of Exeter.

HULL, Professor Edward, M.A., LL.D. F.R.S., late Director of the Geological Survey of Ireland, and Professor of Geology in the Royal College of Science, Dublin, was born at Antrim, in Ireland, on May 21, 1829; his father, the late Rev. J. D. Hull, Vicar of Wickhambrook, in Suffolk, being then the curate of the parish. Professor Hull was educated at Edgworthstown school, and graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, in 1850, obtaining in the same year the Diploma of Civil Engineering in the school attached to Dublin University. It was while attending the lectures of Professor Oldham, that he acquired his first knowledge of geology, and developed a taste for that branch of science which determined his future course of life. On the recommendation of his instructor and friend, he was appointed, in 1850, to the staff of the Geological Survey of Great Britain, under the general direction of Sir H. T. de la Bêche, Professor (now Sir Andrew C.) Ramsay, being Local Director; and he served the first years of his official life in company with the late Professor Jukes (whom he afterwards succeeded) and Dr. Selwyn, the Director of the Geological Survey of Canada. During the period of about twenty years in which Mr. Hull was engaged on the survey of Great Britain, he geologically mapped a large portion of the central counties of England, including the coal-fields of Lancashire, Cheshire, and Leicestershire. In 1867, he was appointed District-Surveyor to the Survey of Scotland; and, in 1869, Director of the Geological Survey of Ireland (in succession to Professor J. B. Jukes), and Professor of Geology to the Royal College of Science, Dublin. Under his directorate the northern half of Ireland has been geologically surveyed, and a large portion of the southern half revised and brought into harmony with the British formations. Mr. Hull was elected Fellow of the Geological Society of London in 1855, and of the Royal Society in 1867. During the inquiries made by the Royal Commission, under the Presidency of the Duke of Argyll, Prof. Hull gave much information regarding the resources of the British and Irish coal-fields, which are recorded in the Report of the Commission issued in 1871. The Report on the Irish coal-fields was drawn up by himself. In 1873, Professor Hull was elected President of the Royal Geological Society of Ireland, and, in 1874, he was appointed Examiner in Geology to the University of London in conjunction with Professor T. R. Jones, F.R.S., which appointment he held for three years. At the meeting of the British Association in Belfast, in 1874, he was President of the Geological Section (C), and read an address on the volcanic phenomena of the North of Ireland. In 1879, he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Glasgow on the occasion of the installation of the late Duke of Buccleuch as Chancellor. One of the most important events in Professor Hull's life was his visit to Arabia Petræa and Palestine towards the close of 1883. On the recommendation of Colonel Sir Charles Wilson, R.E., he was nominated by the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Society to take the command of an expedition organised for making a geological and topographical survey of the Arabah Valley and adjoining territories between the Sinaitic Peninsula on the south, and Southern Palestine on the north. In that expedition he was accompanied by Colonel Kitchener, R.E., Mr. H. C. Hart, his son, Dr. E. G. Hull, and several assistants; and in November of the above-named year (1883), the party, with an escort of twenty-nine camels and their drivers, left Suez, and traversed the Sinaitic Peninsula, the Arabah Valley from Akabah to the Dead Sea, visiting Mount Hor and Petra, and thence across Southern Palestine to Gaza by Beersheba, the period occupied being about three months. By this expedition the surveys of Sinai and Palestine were connected, and the geological phenomena mapped and described. Collections of plants and animals were made by Mr. Hart, and meteorological observations were carried out daily by Mr. Reginald Laurence. The narrative of the expedition was drawn up and published by the Palestine Exploration Committee, under the title of "Mount Seir, Sinai, and Southern Palestine;" and the geological details are contained in the memoir, "On the Physical Geography and Geology of Arabia Petræa, &c.," 1886. At the annual meeting of the Geological Society of London, in 1890, the Murchison Medal was presented to Professor Hull by the President, in consideration of his contributions to geological literature, and of his investigations regarding the physical structure of the British Isles and other countries, including the Holy Land. Professor Hull is the author of several works and scientific memoirs, of which the following are the more important: "The Coal-fields of Great Britain: their history, structure, and resources," 1865, 4th edit., 1881; "A Treatise on the Building and Ornamental Stones of Great Britain and Foreign Countries," 1872; "Contributions to the Physical History of the British Isles," 1882; "Sketch of Geological History," 1887; "A Text-Book of Physiography or Physical Geography," 1888; "The Physical Geology and Geography of Ireland," 1878; "Mount Seir, Sinai and Southern Palestine," 1885; "Memoir on the Physical Geology and Geography of Arabia Petræa, Palestine, and adjoining Districts," 1886; also several memoirs of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, and papers in the Transactions of learned and scientific societies. Professor Hull is an Honorary Member of the Geological Societies of Belgium, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Manchester; and of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society, and of the Academy of Science, Philadelphia. On the completion of the Geological Survey of Ireland in 1890, Professor Hull retired from the public service.

HUMBERT, I., Rénier-Charles-Emmanuel-Jean-Marie-Ferdinand-Eugène, King of Italy, the eldest son of the late King Victor Emmanuel II., and of Adélaide, Archduchess of Austria, was born at Turin, March 14, 1844. At an early age he obtained an insight into political and military life under the guidance of his father, whom he attended during the war of Italian Independence, although he was then too young to take an active part in the struggle. The youthful heir to the throne was more closely connected with the movement for the unification of Italy, which followed the events of 1859. In particular he took part in the work of reorganizing the ancient Kingdom of the Two Sicilies; and in July, 1862, he visited Naples and Palermo, where he shared the popularity of Garibaldi. When the war between Prussia and Austria was imminent, Prince Humbert was despatched to Paris to ascertain the sentiments of the French Government in reference to the alliance between Italy and Prussia. On the outbreak of hostilities he hastened to take the field; obtained the command of a division of General Cialdini's army with the title of Lieutenant-General; and was present at the disastrous battle of Custozza (June 23, 1866), where it is said he performed prodigies of valour. On April 22, 1868, he married, at Turin, his cousin, the Princess Marguerite Marie Thérése Jeanne of Savoy, daughter of the late Duke Ferdinand of Genoa, brother of King Victor Emmanuel. The Queen is a most accomplished lady, an artist, and a mountaineer of courage and endurance. A son was born at Naples, Nov. 11, 1869, who received the names of Victor Emmanuel Ferdinand Mary Januarius, and the title of Prince of Naples. After the occupation of Rome by the Italian troops in 1870, Prince Humbert and the Princess Marguerite took up their residence in the Eternal City. He succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, Jan. 9, 1878. As he was entering Naples, Nov. 17, 1878, a man named Giovanni Passanante approached the Royal carriage, and attempted with a poniard to assassinate his Majesty. The King escaped with a slight scratch, but Signor Cairoli, the Prime Minister, who was with him, was wounded rather badly in the thigh. Passanante was condemned to death, but the punishment was commuted by the King to penal servitude for life. King Humbert received the Order of the Garter by the hands of the Duke of Abercorn at the Quirinal, March 2, 1878. He is a Chevalier of the Order of the Black Eagle; and of the Austrian Order of the Golden Fleece, &c. King Humbert and Queen Marguerite celebrated their silver wedding at Rome in April, 1893.

HUMPHREY, The Rev. William, S.J., son of John Humphrey, Esq., J.P., of Pitmedden, Aberdeenshire, was born at Aberdeen, July 31, 1839. He was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen, and is a member of the General Council of the University of Aberdeen. He studied law at the University of Edinburgh; was ordained a clergyman of the Church of England by Dr. Forbes, Bishop of Brechin, and held the living of St. Mary Magdalene, Dundee. He became a Roman Catholic in March, 1868, and went to Rome where he made his theological studies at the Collegio Romano. He was ordained priest by Cardinal Manning in 1871, and served on the mission in London till 1874, when he entered the Society of Jesus. Father Humphrey is the author of "The Divine Teacher," 5th edit.; "Mary Magnifying God," 5th edit.; "The Written Word;" "Other Gospels;" "Mr. FitzJames Stephen and Cardinal Bellarmine;" "The Religious State;" "The Bible and Belief;" "Christian Marriage;" "The One Mediator;" and several sermons, and has contributed to the "Catholic Academia" and the Month.

HUMPHRY, Professor Sir George Murray, M.D., Cantab, LL.D., Edin., S.T.D., Dublin; F.R.S.; born July, 1820, at Sudbury, in Suffolk, is the son of a barrister-at-law. He was apprenticed to Mr. J. G. Crosse, a surgeon of Norwich, in 1836; studied at the hospital of that city, and subsequently at St. Bartholomew's. In 1856 he took his degree of M.D., at Cambridge. He became Professor of Anatomy in 1866, a member of the Council of the College of Surgeons in 1868, of the Court of Examiners, 1877; represented the University of Cambridge as Member of the General Medical Council, from 1869 to 1889; and was Professor of Surgery at Cambridge, in 1883. He is a Senior Surgeon to Addenbrooke's Hospital, a Fellow of King's College and Honorary Fellow of Downing College, Corresponding Member of the Imperial Surgical Society, Paris, Foreign Associate of the Anthropological Society of Paris, Honorary Fellow of the Medical Society of London, Honorary Member of the Medical Society of Edinburgh, vice-President of the British Medical Association, First President of the Anatomical Society of the United Kingdom. Professor Humphry is the author of "A Treatise on the Human Skeleton," 1858; "On Myology," 1872; "Old Age and Changes Incidental to it," 1889; "The Hunterian Oration," 1879; and various articles in the Journal of Anatomy, Medico-Chirugical Transactions, &c. The honour of knighthood was conferred on Professor Humphry in Jan., 1891.

HUNGARY and BOHEMIA, King of. See FRANCIS JOSEPH I., EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA AND KING OF HUNGARY AND BOHEMIA.

HUNT, Alfred William, M.A., R.W.S., was born at Liverpool, in 1830, and educated at the Collegiate School in that town. In 1848 he gained a scholarship at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. In 1851, he won the "Newdigate," and in 1852, took his degree with a second-class in classics. In the following year he became a Fellow of his College. He first exhibited in the Royal Academy, in 1854, "Stychead Pass, Cumberland." In 1856, he made a first success in the Academy, with his picture "Llyn Idwal," which was much praised by Mr. Ruskin; and the same year he became a member of the Hogarth Club, which was then just founded, and the centre of Pre-Raphaelite force. Mr. Hunt's next year's pictures were also much admired by Mr. Ruskin, but they were unfortunately hung, and Mr. Ruskin's comments on their hanging were of a kind that did not advance the artist's fortunes for the future. He continued, however, at intervals, to exhibit in the Royal Academy until 1862, when he was elected an Associate of the Society of Painters in Water Colours, of which he was made a full member two years later, and for about seven years worked only through that medium. In 1870 he again sent a picture to the Academy, and has since then exhibited both oil and water-colours. Mr. Hunt's best known pictures since that time are "Loch Maree;" "Goring Lock;" "Dunstanborough Castle;" "A Mountain joyous with Leaves and Streams;" "Summer Days for Me;" "Whitby: Morning and Evening;" "Leafy June;" "The Wreck of the Globe;" "Whitby Churchyard;" and "Sonning." Mr. Hunt's water-colours are so numerous, that it is difficult to make a selection from them. Perhaps the most important are the "Durham;" "The Rainbow;" "Ullswater;" "Llandecwyn;" "Loch Corinsk;" and "A Land of Smouldering Fire." A large number of fine specimens of his art were grouped together at one of the Winter Exhibitions of the Grosvenor Gallery a few years ago; and a large collection of his works in water-colours and oil was shown at the Fine Art Society's Rooms in 1884. Mr. Hunt is generally considered to be one of the most distinguished followers of Turner, and the chief upholder of the system of landscape art which endeavours to unite truth of light and poetical feeling with fidelity to nature. In 1882, Mr. Hunt was elected Honorary Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.

HUNT, William Holman, painter, one of the most prominent of the three working members of the Pre-Raphaelite movement, was born in London in 1827, and exhibited his first picture at the Academy in 1846. The earlier works were adopted from poetry and fiction, such as "Dr. Rochecliffe performing Divine Service in the Cottage of Joceline Joliffe at Woodstock," in 1847; "The Flight of Madeline and Porphyro," from Keats's "St. Agnes," in 1848; and "Rienzi vowing to obtain Justice for the death of his young Brother," in 1849. He began that series of religious and mystical subjects, whereby he has since made himself best known, with "A Converted British Family, sheltering a Christian Missionary from the Persecution of the Druids," in 1850; followed by the symbolical "Hireling Shepherd," in 1852. His picture in 1851 was in a different class of sentiment—"Valentine receiving Sylvia from Proteus;" that of 1853, "Claudio and Isabella," and "Our English Coasts," a study of the Downs at Hastings. Three of these pictures were awarded £50 and £60 prizes at Liverpool and Birmingham. The occult meaning of his "Light of the World," and of the "Awakening Conscience," of 1854, was explained by Mr. Ruskin in some letters to the Times. "The Scapegoat," of which the scene was painted upon the margin of the salt-incrusted shallows of the Dead Sea, was exhibited in 1856. The "Finding of the Saviour in the Temple" was exhibited in 1860; and "Isabella and the Pot of Basil," in 1866. His more recent pictures are "London Bridge on the Night of the Marriage of the Prince of Wales;" "The After-Glow;" and "The Festival of St. Swithin." The last-mentioned was in the Royal Academy Exhibition of 1868. The largest of his works, which exclusively occupied his time during a residence of four years in Palestine, was finished in 1873. It is styled "The Shadow of Death," and represents a prevision of the Crucifixion. "Plains of Esdraelon," an oriental landscape with shepherd and sheep, taken at Nazareth, was exhibited in 1877. "The Ship," an illustration of lines from "In Memoriam," represents the deck of a ship by night; exhibited in 1878. A "Portrait of Sir Richard Owen, C.B.," was exhibited in 1880, &c. "The Triumph of the Innocents" was exhibited in Bond Street in 1885. This work was retarded in its completion by a defect in the linen on which the picture was first undertaken, the picture exhibited being repeated on a fresh canvas from the original design. It represents a company of the Spirits of the Children of Bethlehem accompanying the Holy Family on their flight into Egypt. "The Child Jesus in the Temple," which is intended for Clifton College Chapel, was exhibited in 1890. In the year 1880 he delivered a lecture at the Society of Arts upon the need of greater knowledge and care on the part of artists in the preparation of the materials upon the perfection of which they have to rely for the permanence of their works. This at the time awakened much attention to the matter, and still encourages research for better methods of obtaining superior preparations. A nearly complete collection of Mr. Holman Hunt's works was exhibited at the Fine Arts Society's rooms in 1886. He has written in the Contemporary Review, two articles of reminiscences of the Pre-Raphaelite movement. In the columns of the Times he subsequently led the attack upon the Royal Academy, in which, of course, he no longer exhibits.

HUNTER, Colin, A.R.A., was born in Glasgow, July 16, 1841, and is the son of John Hunter, Bookseller and Postmaster, of Helensburgh. He was educated in that town, and began painting at twenty years of age, after four years' clerkship. His education as a painter was derived from nature. His principal pictures are "Trawlers Waiting for Darkness," exhibited in the Royal Academy, 1873; "Salmon Stake Nets" (R.A.), 1874, now in the Sydney Government collection; "Give Way" (R.A.), 1875; "Digging Bait" (R.A.), 1876; "Their Only Harvest" (R.A.), 1878, now the property of the Chantry Bequest Trustees; "Silver of the Sea" (R.A.), 1879; "Mussel Gatherers," and "In the Gloaming" (R.A.), 1880; "The Island Harvest" (Fine Art Society's Rooms), 1881; "Waiting for the Homeward Bound" (R.A.), 1882, now in the Adelaide collection; "A Pebbled Shore" and "Lobster Fishers" (R.A.), 1883; "Herring Market at Sea" (R.A.), 1884, now in Manchester Corporation collection; "The Rapids of Niagara" (R.A.), 1885; "The Woman's Part" (R.A.), 1886; "Their Share of the Toil" (R.A.), 1887; "Fishers of the North Sea" (R.A.), 1888; "Baiters" (R.A.), 1889; "The Hills of Morven" (R.A.), 1890; and, more recently, "Ireland" and "Lobster Fishers," 1893; and "The Gleanings of the Herring Harvest," and "Wintry Weather," 1894. These latter pictures were also exhibited in the Royal Academy. Mr. Hunter was elected an associate of the Royal Academy in Jan. 1884, and is also a Member of the Royal Scottish Water Colour Society.

HUNTER, Sir William Guyer, K.C.M.G., M.P., eldest son of the late Mr. Thomas Hunter, of Catterick, Yorkshire, was born in 1831, and educated at King's College, London, at Aberdeen University, and at various hospitals. He entered the Indian Medical Service, Bombay Presidency, in 1850, and served through the Burmese War and the Indian Mutiny. In 1876 he was appointed Principal of the Grant Medical College; and in 1879 Vice-Chancellor of the University of Bombay. He retired in 1880, and in 1883 went out to Egypt to serve on the Cholera Commission. For his services on this occasion he was made a K.C.M.G. In 1885 he entered Parliament as Conservative member for Central Hackney, and was again returned for the same constituency in 1886.

HUNTER, Sir William Wilson, K.C.S.I., C.I.E. (M.A. Oxford, Hon. LL.D. Cambridge and Glasgow), son of the late A. Gallowway Hunter, Esq., of Denholm, was born July 15, 1840, and educated at the University of Glasgow, at Paris, and Bonn. He headed the list of Indian civilians appointed in 1862; and after distinguishing himself in Calcutta by proficiency in Sanskrit and the modern vernaculars in India, passed through the appointments of a junior civil servant in the Bengal districts. On the outbreak of the Orissa Famine of 1866, he was appointed Inspector of public instruction in the province of Orissa and the south-western division of Bengal. At the end of the dearth he received the thanks of the Government, but was invalided to England. While on sick leave Sir William Hunter wrote "The Annals of Rural Bengal," which in the next ten years passed through five editions; and a "Dictionary of the Non-Aryan Languages of India and High Asia." On his return to Bengal, he received the gazetted acknowledgments of the Governor-General and the Secretary of State for his services; together with a present of Rs. 20,000 of public money, also notified in the Government Gazette, for his services. In 1869 he was attached on special duty to the Secretariat of the Government of Bengal; in 1870 to that of the Supreme Government of India, acting for a time as Under-Secretary; in 1871 he was appointed Director-General of Statistics to the Government of India. As the head of this Department he organised, and carried out from beginning to end, the Statistical Survey of India. The first census of India was taken in 1872. In 1876 he issued the "Statistical Account of Bengal" in twenty volumes. For the other eleven provinces of India a statistical survey was executed under his direction in each district of an area "equal to all Europe less Russia." Sir William Hunter again received the gazetted thanks of the Government. His labours had done much to throw light on the causes and management of famines, and to bring them within control. In 1878 he was appointed one of the first members of the new Order of the Indian Empire. By 1880 the Statistical Survey of India had been brought to completion under his direction, and its records had been made available to the public in 128 printed volumes. In 1881 he issued a condensation of this vast work, alphabetically arranged in the "Imperial Gazetteer of India," in nine volumes. In the same year he was appointed a Member of the Viceroy's Legislative Council, and in 1882 he was made President of the Education Commission in India. As a Member of the Indian Legislative Council, Sir William Hunter took an active part in the important series of measures, especially those affecting the Land Law, which issued from the Indian Legislature between 1881 and 1887, and those affecting the Tenancy Rights of cultivators. As President of the Indian Education Commission he was largely instrumental in consolidating Public Instruction in India on its present basis. The results of these labours have been briefly but accurately described, as the development of the Department of Public Instruction in India into a truly national system of education for that country. For these services he again received the gazetted thanks of the Government, and was appointed a Companion of the Star of India. In 1884 Sir William Hunter was deputed to England, by the Governor-General in Council, to give evidence before the Parliamentary Committee upon the economic aspects of Indian railway development. In 1886, in addition to his duty in the Viceroy's Legislative Council, Lord Dufferin placed him upon the Finance Commission, to conduct a searching enquiry into Indian expenditure, and to revise the financial relations of the Provincial Governments to the Supreme Government of India. Among the honorary offices discharged by Sir William Hunter during the course of his Indian career was that of the Vice-Chancellorship of the University of Calcutta. In 1887 he was appointed a Knight Commander of the Star of India, and having completed his twenty-five years of service, he retired from that country. On his return to England he completed the expanded edition of the "Imperial Gazetteer of India" in fourteen volumes. Since then he has been a consistent and powerful advocate of moderate reform in India. As an examiner and occasional lecturer in the Honours School of Oriental Studies he for some years took an active part in the university life of Oxford. Under his impulse the University Press undertook the series of short histories and biographies now well known as "The Rulers of India." Of this series Sir William Hunter was the projector and editor, and of its twenty-five volumes three are from his hand. Sir William Hunter has received honorary degrees from the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Glasgow; and is an honorary member of many learned societies in Europe and Asia. He is an acting magistrate and J.P. for Berkshire, and a Deputy-Lieutenant of that county. His best-known books are the "Annals of Rural Bengal;" "Orissa, or an Indian Province under Native and British Rule;" "The Indian Mussulmans;" "A System of Famine Warnings;" "A Life of Lord Mayo," 2 vols.; a shorter life of the same in one volume; "The Life and Work of the Marquess of Dalhousie;" "A Dictionary of the Non-Aryan Languages of India and High Asia;" "The Imperial Gazetteer of India," 14 vols.; "The Indian Empire, its History, People, and Products," which condenses into one volume, for popular use, the main results of the Statistical Survey of India. His "Brief History of the Indian Peoples" has been translated into five languages, and in its English editions has reached seventy-eight thousand copies. Sir William Hunter married the daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Murray, LL.D., J.P., the author of "The Literary History of Galloway," and other antiquarian works.

HUNTINGTON, Daniel, LL.D., American artist, was born at New York, Oct. 14, 1816. He was prepared for college by Rev. Horace Bushnell at New Haven, and entered Hamilton College in 1832; and in 1835-36 was a pupil of S. F. B. Morse in the art department of the New York University. In 1836 he exhibited "The Toper Asleep," a "Bar-room Politician," and several landscapes. In 1839 he studied in Florence and Rome, where he painted "The Sacred Lesson" and "Christian Prisoners;" and, on his return to America, painted "Mercy's Dream," and "Christiana and her Children." In 1844 he again went to Rome, where he painted the "Roman Penitents," "Italy," "The Communion of the Sick," and several landscapes. In 1851 he visited England, where he painted the portraits of several distinguished personages, among them Sir Charles Eastlake (then President of the Royal Academy) and the Earl of Carlisle, now in the collection of the Historical Society. Among his later works, besides numerous portraits, are, "Lady Jane Grey and Feckenham in the Tower," "Henry VIII. and Queen Catherine Parr," "Queen Mary signing the Death-Warrant of Lady Jane Grey," "The Good Samaritan," "The Sketcher," "Ichabod Crane and Katrina van Tassel," "The Counterfeit Note," another "Mercy's Dream," "The Republican Court," a number of Shaksperian subjects, "Chocurna Peak," "Philosophy and Christian Art," "Sowing the Word," and "Titian and Charles V." In 1882 he visited Spain and painted "The Goldsmith's Daughter," "The Doubtful Letter," as well as portraits. Since his return he has painted "A Burgomaster of New Amsterdam," and many portraits of distinguished people. He was one of the founders of the Century Club, of which he is now (1894) President, and he is a Vice-President of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He was President of the National Academy of Design, New York, from 1862 to 1891, with the exception of a few years.

HUNTINGTON, Rt. Rev. Frederick Dun, S.T.D., LL.D., Bishop of Central New York, was born at Hadley, Mass., May 28, 1819. He was graduated from Amherst College in 1839, studied divinity at Cambridge, and in 1842 became pastor of a Unitarian Church in Boston. In 1855 he was elected preacher to Harvard University, and Plummer Professor of Christian Morals. In 1860 he withdrew from the Unitarian denomination, and was ordained in the Protestant Episcopal Church. He organized a new parish, which he named Emmanuel Church. In 1861 he was one of the founders of the Church Monthly. In 1869 he was consecrated Bishop of Central New York, taking Syracuse for his Cathedral City. Among his publications are "Sermons for the People," 1856; "Lessons on the Parables," 1856; "Christian Believing and Living," 1860; "Lectures on Human Society, as illustrating the Power, Wisdom, and Goodness of God" (Lowell Lectures), 1860; "Elim, or Hymns of Holy Refreshment," 1865; "Lessons for the Instruction of Children in the Divine Life," 1868; "Helps to a Holy Lent," 1872; "Steps to a Living Faith," 1873; "New Helps to a Holy Lent," 1876; "Personal Christian Life in the Ministry," 1887; "Forty Days with the Master," 1891; a Pamphlet on "Strikes," 1891; "The Golden Rule applied to Business and Social Life," 1892; besides other pamphlets, sermons, charges, and contributions to various periodicals. In 1883, by appointment, he wrote the Pastoral Letter of the House of Bishops.

HUTCHINSON, Professor Jonathan, F.R.S., LL.D., was born in July, 1828, at Selby, Yorkshire, and educated there. He was admitted a Fellow of the College of Surgeons in 1862; was appointed President of the Hunterian Society in 1869 and 1870; President of the Pathological Society in 1879 and 1880; of the Ophthalmological in 1883; of the Neurological in 1887; and was Professor of Surgery and Pathology in the Royal College of Surgeons from 1877 to 1883. He was elected President of the College in 1889. Professor Hutchinson was a member of the Royal Commission appointed in 1881 to inquire into the condition of the London hospitals for small-pox and fever cases, and into the means of preventing the spread of infection. He is a member of the Royal Commission on Vaccination, which is still sitting. The degree of LL.D. (Hon.) was conferred upon him by Glasgow University in 1887, and by that of Cambridge in 1890. At the Tercentenary of Trinity College, Dublin, he received the Honorary diploma of M.D. He holds also the Honorary Fellowship of many learned societies in connection with Medicine on the Continent and in America. He has taken much interest in "Educational Museums" as a means of popular education, and has arranged one at Haslemere which possesses novel features.

HUTCHINSON, Joseph Turner, Chief Justice of the Gold Coast Colony, was born at Braystones, Cumberland, on March 28, 1850. His father was one of the old Cumberland "Statesmen," whose forefathers had lived on the same small estate for upwards of three centuries. He was educated at St. Bees Grammar School; elected to a foundation scholarship at Christ's College, Cambridge, in 1870; took his degree there in 1873 in the first class of the Classical Tripos, and proceeded to M.A. in 1876. After leaving Cambridge he became Sixth Form Master at Dulwich College, where he, in conjunction with Arthur Gray, edited for the Pitt Press the Hercules Furens of Euripides; afterwards was Sixth Form Master at the City of London School from 1876 to 1879; and in 1879 was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple. He practised for eight years as an Equity draftsman and conveyancer. In April, 1888, he was appointed Queen's Advocate of the Gold Coast Colony; and in Jan., 1890, on the retirement of Mr. Macleod, was appointed Chief Justice.

1832. At the age of thirteen he was apprenticed to a wood-carver in the High Street, Edinburgh, and in the evenings, during his apprenticeship, studied drawing and modelling in the Trustees' Academy and the School of Arts. In 1852 he was employed to execute the wood-carvings and other decorations in relief for the Picture Gallery then in course of erection at Hospitalfield, Arbroath, by Patrick Allan Fraser, H.R.S.A. Returning to Edinburgh, he studied in the Antique and Life School of the Trustees' Academy, then under the able direction of Robert Scott Lauder, R.S.A. He first exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy, in 1856. In 1859 he exhibited there a colossal bust of "Harald Hardrada, the Norse Sea King," which was purchased by the Hon. Mrs. Norton for Lord Dufferin; it is now at Clandeboys, Ireland. In 1860 he visited Rome and studied with the late Alfred Gatley, an able and enthusiastic sculptor. Returning to Edinburgh with several works in marble, executed at Rome, he exhibited in the 1862 Exhibition a bust in marble of a Roman matron. Again visiting Italy in 1863, he executed several works in marble, "Pasquccia," a Roman Girl, now in the National Gallery, Edinburgh; and a life-size statue in marble of a "Roman Dancing Girl Resting." While in Italy Mr. Hutchison enjoyed the friendship of the Italian sculptors Tenerani and Dupre, and Hiram Powers, the American. In 1862 he exhibited for the first time in the Royal Academy a marble bust of John Philip, R.A.—a commission from Mr. Philip—and has contributed to Royal Academy Exhibitions for many years; in 1889 he exhibited a study in bronze, "Il Condottiere." He has executed colossal bronze statues of James Carmichael, engineer (inventor of the fan-blast), erected in Dundee; Adam Black, M.P., publisher, for Edinburgh; Dr. Grigor, M.D., for Nairn. For Lochmahen a colossal statue of King Robert Bruce in freestone; a statue in bronze-gilt of a Greek Torch Racer for the summit of the dome of the University of Edinburgh; four statues—life-size—for the Scott Monument, Edinburgh, viz.—Baron Bradwardine, Hal-o'-the-Wynd, The Glee Maiden, and Flora McIvor. For the relic-room of the Scott Monument, eight historical portrait-heads alto-relievo in bronze. Amongst many other monuments which Mr. Hutchison has designed and executed may be mentioned a marble monument in Leyland Church, Lancashire, a recumbent figure of a lady (Mrs. Farington) resting on an altar-tomb; and a monument in memory of G. Paul Chalmers, R.S.A., in the Dean Cemetery, Edinburgh. He has also executed and exhibited in the Royal Academy and Royal Scottish Academy various busts of distinguished characters; likewise studies in marble and bronze of Hamlet, Dante, Don Quixote, Bonny Kilmeny, Genevieve; and Marietta, a Roman Girl, now in the National Gallery, Edinburgh. By command of the Queen, Mr. Hutchison has executed busts of the late Principal Tulloch and Dr. Norman Macleod for Balmoral, and has also designed and executed the marble monument in memory of the Royal Stewarts, buried in Paisley Abbey. In 1888 Her Majesty honoured Mr. Hutchison with sittings for her bust at Windsor Castle. The bust of the Queen and that of the late Prince Consort were executed for the Victoria Art Galleries, Dundee. Mr. Hutchison was elected Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1862; Academician in 1867; Librarian in 1877; and Treasurer in 1886.

HUTTON, Sir John, J.P., Chairman of the London County Council, was born in London in 1842, and educated by private tutors. He began life as a journalist, and for more than twenty years was connected with the Weekly Times, of which he eventually became editor and proprietor. He also partly owned the Sporting Life newspaper, and had at one period an interest in four important journalistic or literary properties. In 1889 he stood for the London County Council, and was returned by a large majority as senior member for South St. Pancras, for which he was again elected by an increased majority in 1892. While in the Council he acted for three years as Chairman of the Building Act Committee, in which position he established a reputation for industry. When the second Council met he was elected Vice-Chairman, and upon the resignation of Lord Rosebery succeeded him as Chairman. In March, 1893, he was re-elected to this post. Mr. Hutton, who was at one time a man of leisure, devotes the whole of his time to his presidential duties, and has only on very rare occasions missed a meeting. His annual address is an ample commentary on the Council's work. He is a Progressive. The honour of knighthood was conferred upon him in May, 1894, his name being among the "birthday honours" on the 26th.

HUXLEY, Thomas Henry, P.C., LL.D., Ph.D., D.C.L., M.D., F.C.S. Eng., F.R.S., was born on May 4, 1825, at Ealing, Middlesex, and was for some years educated at the school in his native place, where his father was one of the masters. This preparatory course was followed by industrious private study, including German scientific literature, and medical instruction received from a brother-in-law, who was a physician. Afterwards he attended lectures at the Medical School of the Charing Cross Hospital. In 1845 he passed the first examination for the degree of M.B. at the University of London, and took honours in physiology. Having passed the requisite examination, he was, in 1846, appointed assistant-surgeon to H.M.S. Victory, for service at Haslar Hospital. His next appointment was as assistant-surgeon to H.M.S. Rattlesnake, and he spent the greater part of the time from 1847 to 1850 off the eastern and northern coasts of Australia. Some of the results of the studies in natural history, for which this cruise afforded facilities, appeared in various memoirs communicated to the Linnean and Royal Societies, and in a work entitled "Oceanic Hydrozoa, a Description of the Calycophoridæ and Physophoridæ observed during the voyage of H.M.S. Rattlesnake" (1859). Mr. Huxley returned to England in 1850, and in the following year he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1852 one of the two Royal Medals annually given by the Society was awarded to him. In 1854 he was appointed Professor of Natural History, including Palæontology, at the Royal School of Mines in Jermyn Street, and, in the same year, Fullerian Professor of Physiology to the Royal Institution, and Examiner in Physiology and Comparative Anatomy to the University of London. In 1856 he accompanied his friend Dr. Tyndall in his first visit to the glaciers of the Alps. In 1858 he was appointed Croonian Lecturer to the Royal Society, when he chose for his subject the "Theory of the Vertebrate Skull." In 1859 his large work on "The Ocean Hydrozoa; a Description of the Calycophoridæ and Physophoridæ," observed during his voyage, with illustrative plates, was published by the Royal Society. When, in 1860, it became Professor Huxley's duty to give one of the courses of lectures to the working men in Jermyn Street, he selected for his subject "The Relation of Man to the Lower Animals." The questions arising out of this topic became the subject of warm controversy at the meeting of the British Association in that and subsequent years. A summary of the whole discussion was given in the work entitled "Evidence as to Man's Place in Nature," 1863, and excited great popular interest both in this country and abroad. Mr. Darwin's views on the origin of species were the subject of Professor Huxley's lectures to the working men in 1862, which have been published under the title of lectures "On our Knowledge of the Causes of the Phenomena of Organic Nature." He also delivered lectures on the "Elements of Comparative Anatomy," and on the "Classification of Animals and the Vertebrate Skull." In 1862, in consequence of the absence of the President, it devolved upon Mr. Huxley, who was then one of the secretaries of the Geological Society, to deliver the annual address to the Geological Society, and as President of Section D at the meeting of the British Association at Cambridge, he gave an address on the "Condition and Prospects of Biological Science." He was elected Professor of Comparative Anatomy to the Royal College of Surgeons in 1863, and held that office for seven years. He became President of the Geological and the Ethnological Societies in 1869 and 1870, and presided over the meeting of the British Association held at Liverpool in 1870. Professor Huxley's name came prominently before the general public in connection with the London School Board, to which he was elected in 1870. He took a very active part in the deliberations of that body, having rendered himself particularly conspicuous by his opposition to denominational teaching, and by his fierce denunciation in 1871 of the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church. Professor Huxley was compelled by ill health to retire from the Board in Jan., 1872. He was elected Lord Rector of Aberdeen University for three years Dec. 14, 1872, and installed Feb. 27, 1874. In 1873 he was elected Secretary of the Royal Society. During Professor Wyville Thompson's absence with the Challenger expedition, Professor Huxley acted as his substitute as Professor of Natural History at the University of Edinburgh in the summer sessions of 1875 and 1876. In the latter year he received the Wollaston medal of the Geological Society. He has received the honorary degree of Ph.D. from the University of Breslau, M.D. from the University of Würzburg, LL.D. from the Universities of Edinburgh, Dublin (1878), and Cambridge (1879), D.C.L. from the University of Oxford (1885), and he was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1884. He is a foreign and corresponding member of the Academies of Brussels, Berlin, Göttingen, Haarlem, Lisbon, Lyncei (Rome), Munich, St. Petersburg, Philadelphia, Stockholm; of the Belgium Academy of Medicine, of the Royal Irish Academy, the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and the Cambridge Philosophical Society. He is a Knight of the Pole Star of Sweden, a purely scientific distinction; and was, for some years, a Fellow of Eton College, and a member of the Governing Body of that school. He is a Trustee of the British Museum, and a Member of the Senate of the University of London. Mr. Huxley has served on many Government and Royal Commissions, relating to Fisheries and to Science, Contagious Diseases, Vivisection, the Scottish Universities, and other matters. In 1881 he was appointed Inspector of Salmon Fisheries, at first in conjunction with Mr. Spencer Walpole, but afterwards alone. In 1885 he was compelled by ill health to resign this and all his other public offices, but he retained his connection with the Normal School of Science and Royal School of Mines, as Dean and honorary Professor of Biology, at the request of the Lord President. In June, 1879, the French Academy of Sciences elected Professor Huxley a corresponding member in the section of anatomy and zoology, in the place of the late Karl E. von Baer. On July 5, 1883, he was chosen President of the Royal Society, in place of the late Mr. Spottiswoode; and in the same year he was elected by the council of the United States National Academy as one of their foreign members. He delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge, June 12, 1883, the subject being "The Origin of the Existing Forms of Animal Life—Construction or Evolution." In 1885 Professor Huxley resigned his official duties, including the Inspectorship of Fisheries and the Presidency of the Royal Society. He is now living quietly at Eastbourne. Professor Huxley is celebrated as a writer on natural science, being the author of numerous papers published in the Transactions and Journals of the Royal, the Linnean, the Geological, and the Zoological Societies, and in the Memoirs of the Geological Survey of Great Britain. In addition to the works mentioned above, he has written "Lessons in Elementary Physiology," 1866, and many subsequent editions; "An Introduction to the Classification of Animals," 1869; "Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews," 1870; "Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals," 1871; "Critiques and Addresses," 1873; "American Addresses, with a Lecture on the Study of Biology," 1877; "Physiography: an Introduction to the Study of Nature," 1877; "Anatomy of Invertebrated Animals," 1877; "The Crayfish: an Introduction to the Study of Zoology," 1879; "Hume," 1879; an Introduction to the "Science Primers," 1880; and "Science and Culture, and other Essays," 1882. In 1890 he wrote to the Times, severely criticising General Booth's scheme; and in 1892 he published "Essays on some Controverted Questions." In May, 1893, he delivered the second Romanes Lecture at Oxford. He was called to the Privy Council in August, 1892.

HYACINTHE, Father. See Loyson, Abbé Charles (Père Loyson).

HYNDMAN, Henry Mayers, Socialistic leader, was born in 1842; educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; B.A. 1864; and entered the Inner Temple in 1863. He was special correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette during the war between France and Italy in 1866. He is the author of "The Indian Famine and the Crisis in India," 1887; "England for All," 1881; "Historic Bases of Socialism in England," 1883; "The Social Reconstruction of England," "Socialism and Slavery," and "A Summary of the Principles of Slavery," and "Will Socialism Benefit the English People?" 1884. More recently he has published "Socialism and Slavery," and "General Booth's Book Refuted," 1890; and "The Commercial Crisis of the Nineteenth Century," 1892.

I.

IBSEN, Henrik, an eminent Norwegian poet and dramatist, was born at Skien, March 20, 1828. He is of German descent on his mother's side, and speaks German with fluency; but he has never written anything in that language. He at first studied medicine, but soon abandoned that profession for literature. Under the pseudonym of Brynjolf Bjarme he published in 1850 "Caitlina" (Catiline), a drama in three acts. In the same year he entered the University, where, in conjunction with others, he founded a literary journal, in the columns of which appeared his first satire, "Norma, or a Politician's Love." Through the influence of Ole Bull, the violinist, he became director of the National Theatre at Bergen, and in 1857 went to Christiania, where several of his plays were produced with complete success. In this year he received the post of director of the Norske Theatre at Christiania, which he managed till 1862. For some time he lived in Rome, and in 1866 obtained from the Storthing a pension, and has since lived chiefly in Germany, at Dresden or Munich. His best known works are "Fru Inger til Oesteraad," 1857; "Haer Maendene paa Helgeland," 1858; "Brandt," 1866; "Peer Gynt," 1867; "De Unges Forbund," 1869; "Keiser og Galilaeer," 1875; and a volume of poems, "Lyriske Digte," 1871. "The Pillars of Society," 1877, contains, perhaps, the best embodiment of his social philosophy. Other works of his are "Ghosts," 1881; "A Social Enemy," 1882; "The Wild Duck," 1884; "Rosmersholm," 1886; "Hedda Gabler," 1890, and "The Master Builder," 1892. His latest play, "Little Eyolf," has recently appeared. Herr Ibsen of late years has been the object of a devout cultus in England. Many of his plays have been translated into English, and his play "Nora, or the Doll's House," was produced in 1887 at the Novelty Theatre and again in 1889 at the Olympic, with Miss Achurch in the leading part. Originally published in 1880, it is a pronouncement in dramatic form on much that is now involved in the so-called "New Woman" question. In Feb., 1891, "Rosmersholm," "Ghosts," and "Hedda Gabler," were produced at the Vaudeville in English, and early in 1893 two series of performances of a translation of "The Master Builder" were given by Miss Robins. Ibsen plays were for a time the rage, and "Hedda Gabler," "Rosmersholm," parts of "Brandt," and "The Enemy of the People," were produced at various London Theatres. In 1891 the Théâtre Libre in Paris reproduced "Hedda Gabler," but with slight acceptance. Ibsen has a son named Sigurd, a young man of good parts, who holds the position of Secretary to the Swedish Legation in Vienna. Mrs. Ibsen is the step-daughter of the Norwegian poetess, Magdelena Thoreson, and the daughter of the Provost Thoreson in Bergen. Magdelena Thoreson is still living, and one of her plays, "Inden Dore" (Indoors), was given recently in the Dagmar Theatre at Copenhagen.

IGNATIEFF, Nicholas Pavlovitch, a Russian General and diplomatist, was born in 1832. He is the son of Count Paul Ignatieff, a captain of infantry, who at the time of the military insurrection that occurred at St. Petersburg in consequence of the somewhat forcible accession of the Grand Duke Nicholas to the throne of Russia in 1825, was the first to pass over, with his company, to the side of the new Czar—a defection which it was his duty to make in this manner in opposing the defection of the rebels, and which ensured the triumph of the former, and gained for Captain Ignatieff and his family the powerful protection of Nicholas I. The subject of this notice had at the very outset of his career the Emperor Alexander II. for his god-father. He was educated at home and in the Corps des Pages, and, according to custom, quitted that select establishment for young aristocrats to enter the Guard; and in the Military Academy, after three years' study, he was appointed as staff officer. At the beginning of the Crimean war he was ordered to be on the staff of General Berg. He occupied at Riga the post of Quarter-Master-General of the Baltic corps. He then passed from the military to the diplomatic service, finding his point of transition in the military attaché-ship to the Embassy at London. His chief performance in this capacity was a report on England's military position in India, which so pleased the Emperor that he summoned Captain Ignatieff to Warsaw for a personal interview. In 1858 Ignatieff, now a colonel and aide-de-camp to the Emperor, was sent on a special mission to Khiva and Bokhara. He was afterwards made a major-general in the Imperial suite, and sent as a plenipotentiary to Pekin, 1860, where he concluded a treaty by which the province of Ussuri was ceded by China to Russia. On his return to Russia he was made Director of the Asiatic Department in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. In 1864 he was appointed Minister at Constantinople, where his legation was afterwards (1867) raised to the rank of an embassy. Apart from his rank as ambassador, he was a lieut.-general, and general aide-de-camp to the Emperor. The object which General Ignatieff steadily pursued at Constantinople was to secure for Russia a powerful influence over Turkey. He completely reassured the late Sultan Abdul Aziz as to the intentions of the Government of St. Petersburg, while on the other hand he gained the good-will of the Christian subjects of the Porte by his courteous behaviour and his simulated anxiety to protect them. In the negotiations between the various European Powers prior and subsequent to the war between Russia and Turkey, General Ignatieff took a very prominent part. He was recalled from the embassy at Constantinople May 2, 1878, when Prince Labanoff was sent there in his place. Afterwards he was appointed Minister of the Interior, from which post he was dismissed in June, 1882, owing to disagreements with the pacific M. De Giers. He remained, however, a member of the Council of the Empire. He is a bitter enemy of the Nihilists.

IGNATIUS, Father. See LYNE, THE REV. JOSEPH LEYCESTER.

ILBERT, Sir Courtenay Peregrine, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., was born June 12, 1841, at Kingsbridge, Devon, and is the eldest son of the Rev. Peregrine A. Ilbert, Rector of Thurlestone, Devon. He was educated at Marlborough, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained an open scholarship, and also the Hertford, Ireland, and Craven University Scholarships. He was placed in the first class in the Classical Moderations 1862, and in the Classical Final Examination 1864, and was elected to a Balliol Fellowship. After taking his degree he read for the Bar, and was elected to the Eldon Law Scholarship in 1867. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1869, and practised as a parliamentary and equity draftsman and conveyancer. For many years he did work in connection with the Parliamentary Counsel's office, and had a considerable share in the drafting of important Government measures. He was Counsel to the Education Department from 1879 to 1882; Legal Member of the Council of the Viceroy of India from 1882 to 1886; and Vice-Chancellor of the University of Calcutta in 1885. During Lord Dufferin's absence in Burmah in 1886 he was President of the Viceroy's Council with the powers of the Governor-General. As Legal Member of Lord Ripon's Government in India, Mr. Ilbert's name was associated with a measure for the Amendment of Criminal Procedure, in pursuance of the Viceroy's policy, which became the subject of vehement contention, and was popularly known as the Ilbert Bill. He was also responsible for an important measure for revising the relations between landlord and tenant amongst an agricultural population of 60 millions, known as the Bengal Tenancy Bill, which, as finally amended after long and careful discussion, is now part of the law of India. This was only one of a series of similar measures, affecting the tenure of land in almost every part of India, for which Mr. Ilbert was responsible, as Legal Member of the Council, first under the Marquis of Ripon, and afterwards under the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava. On returning from India in 1886 Mr. Ilbert was appointed to the permanent office of Assistant Parliamentary Counsel to the Treasury, which he still holds. In 1874 he married Jessie, daughter of the Rev. C. Bradley, and niece of the present Dean of Westminster. Knighted, Feb. 26, 1895.

INCE, The Rev. William, D.D., eldest son of the late William Ince, sometime President of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, was born in the parish of St. James's, Clerkenwell, June 7, 1825, and educated at King's College, London, and Lincoln College, Oxford, where he gained a scholarship in 1843. He graduated B.A. with First Class in Classics in 1846; and became Fellow of Exeter College in 1847; a Sub-rector of Exeter, 1857-1878, when he was appointed Regius Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church in succession to Dr. Mozley. Dr. Ince was Whitehall Preacher, 1860-62; Public Examiner of Oxford, 1866-68; and Chaplain to the Bishop of Oxford, 1871. He has published "Some Aspects of Christian Truth," 1862; "Religion in the University of Oxford," 1874; "Education of the Clergy at the Universities," 1882; and various university and college sermons, two funeral sermons, and some addresses.

INGELOW (Miss), Jean, daughter of William Ingelow, Esq., of a Lincolnshire family, was born at Boston, Lincolnshire, in 1820, and is the author of "Poems by Jean Ingelow," 1863 (23rd edition); "A Story of Doom," 1867; and a third volume of poems published in 1885. She has also written various prose books, "Stories told to a Child," "Mopsa the Fairy," 1869; "Studies for Stories," &c., likewise four novels, "Off the Skelligs," 1872; "Fated to be Free," 1875; "Sarah de Berenger," 1880; and "Don John," 1881.

INGRAM, John H., was born in London, Nov. 16, 1849. In 1863 he published a small volume of verse, subsequently suppressed. This was followed, in 1868, by "Flora Symbolica," a work on the folk-lore of flowers, which has passed through numerous editions. In 1873 he began a series of articles in English and American periodicals, calling attention to misrepresentations about the life and character of Edgar Allan Poe; and in Oct., 1874, embodied some of the results of his investigations in a short "Memoir of Poe," prefixed to a four-volume edition of the poet's works, which was followed in 1880 by an exhaustive two-volume biography of Edgar Allan Poe; new one-volume editions of which work have since been published, latterly in "The Minerva Library of Famous Books," 1891; for which series Mr. Ingram has also edited Lockhart's "Life of Burns," 1890. In 1879, under the name of "Don Felix de Salamanca," he published a jeu d'esprit, entitled, "The Philosophy of Handwriting," wherein the characters of several celebrated contemporaries were assumed to be portrayed by their caligraphy. In 1881 he published a volume of "Fairy Tales," translated from the Spanish of "Fernan Caballero," and in 1882 a collection of historical sketches, styled "Claimants to Royalty." In the winter of 1883 he published a volume of historical ghost stories, entitled "The Haunted Homes of Great Britain," and in 1884 a second series of similar narratives. In the same year appeared his life of "Oliver Madox Brown," the young poet-painter, who died in 1874, a new edition of whose works Mr. Ingram is preparing for publication. In 1884 Mr. Ingram edited an illustrated édition de luxe of Edgar Poe's "Tales and Poems," in 4 vols., and a selection from Poe's works, in 2 vols., for the Tauchnitz collection. In 1885 he published a monograph on Poe's "Raven," in 1887 a collection of Mrs. Browning's Poems, with Memoir, and in 1889 a variorum edition of Poe's "Poetical Works." He is editing a series of original biographical manuals, entitled "The Eminent Women Series," and wrote for it, in 1888, a Life of Elizabeth Barrett Browning. It is the only complete memoir of Mrs. Browning yet published, has gone through several editions, and has been adopted as a University text-book. In 1892 Mr. Ingram edited, with a biographical introduction, a reprint of George Darley's "Sylvia," and wrote various papers for Mr. Miles's "Poets and Poetry of the Nineteenth Century." He is a contributor to many of the leading reviews of Europe and America, and has occasionally lectured on behalf of educational institutions. He holds an appointment in the Civil Service.

INGRAM, John Kells, LL.D., born in the county of Donegal, Ireland, in 1823, was educated at Newry School and Trinity College, Dublin. He was elected scholar of his College in 1840, and Fellow in 1846, Professor of Oratory and English Literature in 1852, Regius Professor of Greek in 1866, and Librarian in 1879. He was President of the Statistical Section of the British Association in 1878, and in that capacity delivered an address on "The Present Position and Prospects of Political Economy," which attracted much attention at home and abroad, and was translated into German by the well-known economist, Dr. H. Von Scheel, and into Danish by A. Peterson. He also gave an address to the Trades Union Congress in 1880 on "Work and the Workman," of which a French translation appeared in the following year. He is author of the article "Political Economy," in the Encyclopædia Britannica (9th edit.), which has since been reprinted in a separate volume (1888), and which has been translated into French, Italian, German, Swedish, Russian, and Polish (1890). He also contributed to the same Encyclopædia the article "Slavery," and many biographical notices, amongst which may be mentioned those of Quesnay, Turgot, Petty, Adam Smith, Ricardo, Arthur Young, and Cliffe Leslie. He is author of "Greek and Latin Etymology in England," "The Etymology of Liddell and Scott," and other articles in Hermathena, a university journal which he edited for some years; of papers on "The Opus Majus of Roger Bacon," on "The First English translation of the De Imitatione Christi," on "Mediæval Moral Tales," and other subjects, in the Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy; of a paper on "The Weak Endings of Shakespere," in the Transactions of the New Shakespere Society, vol. i.; of Lectures on Shakespere and Tennyson in Afternoon Lectures (Dublin, 1863 and 1866), and of the Etymological portion of Dr. William Smith's Latin School Dictionary, 2nd edit., 1883. He edited for the Early English Text Society in 1893 the old English version of the Imitation mentioned above. He was President of the Library Association in 1884, and delivered an address on "The Library of Trinity College, Dublin." He has also been President of the Statistical Society of Ireland, and is now President of the Royal Irish Academy, and one of the Trustees of the National Library of Ireland, a visitor of the Science and Art Museum, Dublin, and a Commissioner for the Publication of the Ancient Laws and Institutions of Ireland. He received in 1893 the Honorary Degree of LL.D. from the University of Glasgow.

IRVING, Henry, the name assumed by John Henry Brodribb, the actor, who was born Feb. 6, 1838, at Keinton, near Glastonbury, and educated at Dr. Pinches' school, in George Yard, Lombard Street, London. He made his first public appearance at the Sunderland Theatre, Sept. 29, 1856, and after a series of engagements at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Manchester, and Liverpool, extending over nine years, he was engaged on July 30, 1866, to play, with Miss Kate Terry, at Manchester, by Mr. Dion Boucicault, in an original play of his, entitled "Hunted Down." This led to a London engagement, when he came out at the St. James's Theatre as Doricourt in the "Belle's Stratagem." He subsequently played at Drury Lane, the Haymarket, and the Gaiety theatres. In May, 1870, he transferred his services to the Vaudeville Theatre, playing Digby Grant in Mr. Albery's comedy of the "Two Roses," which character he sustained for 300 consecutive nights. His representation of "Hamlet" at the Lyceum Theatre (Oct. 31, 1874) produced a great sensation among the playgoing public, and opinion was at first much divided as to the merits of the performance, but it is now generally admitted that by his rendering of this and of other Shakespearian parts, Mr. Irving has placed himself at the head of English tragedians. "Hamlet" was played for 200 nights, the longest run of the play on record. He appeared in "Macbeth" Sept. 18, 1875; in "Othello" in 1876; and next as Philip in Tennyson's drama of "Queen Mary." Afterwards Mr. Irving played his Shakespearean parts in the provinces, in Scotland, and in Ireland. When in Dublin, he played "Hamlet" by the request of the University, he having been presented with an address in the Dining Hall of Trinity College. In Jan., 1877, he added to his Shakespearean repertory by playing "Richard III." at the Lyceum. The withdrawal of Mrs. Bateman from the Lyceum gave Mr. Irving supreme control over the theatre, of which he had long been the mainstay. It opened under his management on Dec. 30, 1878, when he again played "Hamlet" for 100 nights. The most remarkable incidents of Mr. Irving's management have been the production of "Othello" (in which he alternated the parts of the Moor and Iago with Mr. Edwin Booth), "The Merchant of Venice," "Much Ado about Nothing," The Cup," "Twelfth Night," and 'Faust," all which have been played n conjunction with Miss Ellen Terry. A public banquet was given to Mr. Irving at St. James's Hall, on July 4, 1883, shortly before his departure with the Lyceum company for a theatrical tour in the United States. A second visit to America was made in 1884, and before its close Mr. Irving delivered an address to the students of Harvard University on the art of acting. He also delivered an address by the invitation of the Vice-Chancellor (Mr. Jowett) at Oxford, on June 26, 1886. On May 5, 1887, Mr. Irving was elected a Life Trustee of Shakespeare's Birthplace. On June 1 he produced Byron's "Werner" at the Lyceum Theatre for the benefit of Dr. Westland Marston, with the fine result of giving over £800 to the distressed dramatist. On October 17 he visited Stratford-on-Avon for the purpose of making the dedicatory speech at the presentation of a public fountain by Mr. G. W. Childs, of Philadelphia, and the next day left Liverpool for a third tour in America, lasting until March 24, 1888. During his stay in the States he was given, on March 15, a reception by the American Goethe Society, and on March 19, by special desire of the War Department, he took his company to the Military Academy at West Point, where, with Miss Ellen Terry, he gave "The Merchant of Venice" in Elizabethan dress and without scenery of any kind. On March 12 the great blizzard occurred which paralyzed New York for a week, and on that evening the Star, where Mr. Irving was performing, was the only theatre open. After a short season at the Lyceum he took "Faust" on tour, and at Bolton laid the foundation-stone of a new theatre. On Nov. 28 he was entertained at a public banquet in Birmingham. On Dec. 29 he produced "Macbeth" at the Lyceum, with Miss Ellen Terry as Lady Macbeth, and ran it until the following summer, nearly 200 nights, which is the longest run of the play on record. In April of the year 1889 he visited Germany, where "Julius Cæsar" and "The Merchant of Venice" were presented for him at the Berliner Theatre by Herr Barnay; and on his return home he played, with Miss Ellen Terry, before the Queen at Sandringham. On Sept. 28 he revived at the Lyceum Watts-Phillips' play "The Dead Heart." The play ran the whole season, ending in the summer of 1890, after which, with Miss Ellen Terry, he made a short provincial tour, giving recitals of "Macbeth" with the accompaniment of Sir Arthur Sullivan's music. On Sept. 20, 1890, he produced "Ravenswood," by Herman Merivale, founded on Sir Walter Scott's "Bride of Lammermoor." This was followed in 1891 by a revival of "Much Ado," "The Lyons Mail," and "The Corsican Brothers." During the season of 1892 Mr. Irving's company played "Henry VIII.," a notable revival, at the Lyceum, the great actor taking the part of Cardinal Wolsey. His next part was not dissimilar to this, for he appeared as "Becket" in the late Lord Tennyson's great play of that name. At the end of 1893 Mr. Irving gave numerous revivals of familiar pieces in his répertoire. He then took his company to America, and, on his return to the Lyceum in the spring of 1894, revived "Faust." In September, 1894, he appeared at Bristol in a little play by Dr. Conan Doyle, in which he figures as a Waterloo veteran.

ISABELLA II. (Maria Isabella Louisa), ex-Queen of Spain, was born at Madrid,

Oct. 30, 1830. Her father, Ferdinand VII., had been induced, by the influence of his wife, to issue the Pragmatic Decree, revoking the Salic law; and at his death, Sept. 29, 1833, his eldest daughter, then a child, was proclaimed Queen, under the regency of her mother, Maria-Christina. This event proved the signal for civil warfare, as the claims of the late king's brother were warmly supported by certain classes of the people. The war of succession lasted seven years, and the country was desolated by the struggle between the contending Carlist and Christina parties, until the Cortes confirmed the claims of Isabella by pronouncing sentence of exile on Don Carlos and his adherents. In 1840 the Queen-regnant, finding it impossible to carry on the government without making concessions to public feeling, for which she was indisposed, retired to France, resigning her power into the hands of Espartero, whom she had been previously compelled to summon to the head of affairs. For the following three years, whilst that constitutional leader was able in great measure to direct her education and training, the young Queen was subjected to purer and better influences than she had before experienced. She was declared by a decree of the Cortes to have attained her majority, Oct. 15, 1843, and took her place among the reigning sovereigns of Europe. Maria-Christina returned to Madrid in 1845, and her restoration to influence was marked by the marriage of Isabella II. to her cousin, Don Francisco d'Assisi, the elder son of her maternal uncle, Don Francisco de Paula, which took place Oct. 10, 1846. Sacrificed to the intrigues of a party whose interests were based on this uncongenial union, Isabella II. never knew the beneficial influence of domestic happiness; estrangements and reconciliations having succeeded each other alternately in her married life. It deserves special mention, however, that during her reign Spain rose to take rank among the great powers of Europe, while the internal progress of the country advanced with rapid strides. On Sept. 16, 1868, a great revolution broke out in Spain, starting with the fleet off Cadiz, and gradually spreading over the whole peninsula. The speedy result was the formation of a Republican Provisional Government under Prim, Serrano, and others at Madrid, and the flight of Queen Isabella to France. On Nov. 6 her Majesty took up her residence in Paris, where she remained during her exile, with the exception of an interval spent at Geneva during the Franco-Prussian War. On June 25, 1870, she renounced her claims to the Spanish throne in favour of her eldest son, the Prince of the Asturias. After eight years of exile she returned to Spain, and was received at Santander by her son, the late King Alphonso XII. (July 29, 1876). Queen Isabella has had five children:—1. Infanta Marie-Isabel-Françoise-d'Assise-Christine-de-Paule-Dominga, born Dec. 20, 1851. 2. Alfonso XII., late King of Spain. 3. Infanta Maria del Pilar, born June 4, 1861. 4. Infanta Maria della Paz, born June 23, 1862; and 5. Infanta Maria Eulalie, born Feb. 12, 1864.

ISRAELS, Josef, a Dutch painter, was born at Groningen in 1824. He studied in Amsterdam, under Kruseman, and next in Paris, under Picot; and received Gold Medals of Honour in Paris, Brussels, and Rotterdam. He also had conferred upon him the Belgian Order of Leopold, and was nominated a member of the French Legion of Honour. His principal paintings are, "The Tranquil House;" "The Shipwrecked," and "The Cradle;" "Interior of the Orphan's Home at Katwyk;" "The True Support;" "The Mother;" and "The Children of the Sea" (in the Queen of Holland's collection). In 1873 he exhibited at the French Gallery in Pall Mall, "Minding the Flock," and since that time has continually added to that long list of pictures in which he has recorded the sadder aspects of humble life. Among his later pictures we may mention "The Little Sick Nurse," and the "Sewer," 1888. At the Paris Exhibition of 1889 he obtained a grand prix. He was elected a correspondent of the Academy of Fine Arts in January, 1885. Mr. Israels has resided in the Hague for many years. His brother, Mr. Lehman Israels, born at Groningen in 1833, went at an early age to the United States, where he acquired a considerable reputation as a journalist. He was for several years foreign editor of the New York World.

ITALY, King of. See HUMBERT IV.

ITO, Count, Premier of Japan, and High Admiral of the Japanese fleet during the war with China, was apparently not very popular in Japan before the outbreak of hostilities with the Chinese. The Japanese Diet was opened by the Emperor on May 15, 1894, and Count Ito's opening speech was received amid great excitement and disorder by the Japanese Liberal representatives. A motion of want of confidence in his ministry was only defeated by 149 to 144 votes. In the summer of 1894 he was put in command of the Japanese naval forces engaged against China off the coast of Korea. On Sept. 7, 1894, a great naval battle took place between the Chinese and Japanese fleets. Twelve Chinese cruisers and warships were convoying transports full of Hunanese soldiers to the scene of war, when twelve Japanese ironclads and cruisers and five torpedo-boats under Admiral Count Ito engaged them. The fight lasted some seven hours, and resulted in the sinking or destruction of four Chinese men-of-war, and the disablement of many others. Only one Japanese war-ship was disabled, but the troops had all been landed before the engagement. The Japanese fleet was again ordered to sea in October, after it had been refitted at Port Arthur. Admiral Count Ito explained the tardy progress of Japanese influence in Korea on the ground that it was necessary to restore order in that country, to crush the brigands swarming in the mountain districts, to erect works in order to keep open the line of communication with the Japanese armies, and to enrol and train the Koreans as soldiers. In November he cooperated with the land forces attacking Port Arthur. Towards the end of Jan., 1895, he was reported to be narrowly watching Wei-hai-wei, the forts of which had fired upon his ships on the 21st. In February the whole place, together with the Chinese fleet, was surrendered to him by Admiral Ting, who subsequently committed suicide, together with three principal Chinese officers. Admiral Ito, in compliance with the dead man's request, allowed all the soldiers in Wei-hai-wei and all the sailors in the Chinese fleet to return home free, and even conceded them the honours of war.

IVEAGH (late Sir Edward Cecil Guinness, Bart.), first Lord, J.P., D.L., of Castlenock, co. Dublin, born in 1847, formerly a member of the great firm of brewers in Dublin, is the younger brother of Lord Ardilaun, and is well known as a munificent philanthropist, who has given a quarter of a million to be applied to the better housing of the poor, and also as a scion of a house whose wealth has been systematically employed for the promotion of schemes of public utility. His father, it will be remembered, rebuilt St. Patrick's Cathedral in Dublin; and even the most rigid of teetotalers, when they see the purposes to which the great fortune of the Guinness family has been devoted, may almost be expected to forgive the source from which it has been derived. Sir Edward married, in 1873, Adelaide Maria, daughter of Richard Samuel Guinness, M.P. for Deepwell, co. Dublin. He was raised to the peerage on Jan. 1, 1891.

J.

JACKSON, The Right Hon. William Lawies, M.P., eldest son of the late Mr. William Jackson, of Leeds, was born at Otley in 1840, and was educated privately and at a Moravian school. He is a Director of the Great Northern Railway Company, and a prominent figure in the leather and woollen trades. He represented Leeds from April, 1880, until the dissolution in 1885, after having unsuccessfully contested the borough in 1876. In 1885, 1886, and 1892, he was returned for the Northern division of Leeds. In Lord Salisbury's first administration he received the important appointment of Financial Secretary to the Treasury, in succession to Sir Henry Holland, and in the ministry of 1886 again held the same post. He was regarded as one of the strongest of the subordinate members of the administration, and in 1891-92 was Chief Secretary for Ireland. In 1890 he was made a Privy Councillor.

JACKSON, The Right Rev. William Walrond, D.D., Bishop of Antigua, born in Barbadoes, about 1810, received his education at Codrington College, Barbadoes, of which he was a Licentiate in Theology. He was formerly Chaplain to the Forces in Barbadoes, and was consecrated Bishop of Antigua in 1860. His episcopal jurisdiction includes the islands of Antigua, Nevis, St. Christopher, Montserrat, the Virgin Islands, and Dominica; and the gross income of the See is £2,000, paid out of the Consolidated Fund. Bishop Jackson's son, the Rev. William Walrond Jackson, is Fellow of Exeter College, Oxford, and was Censor of Unattached Students in the University.

JACOBS, Joseph, was born in 1854, and educated at Sydney University, and thence came to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he was senior in the Moral Science Tripos, in 1876. He also took a scholarship at London. He has made his mark as editor, critic, anthropologist, and folk-lorist. He wrote in 1882 the article in The Times, on the persecution of the Jews, which attracted much attention. He has contributed to the Archæological Review, Journal of Anthropological Institute, and the principal magazines. He was philosophical critic of The Athenæum, from 1878 to 1888, and also contributed to it the necrologies of George Eliot, Browning, Newman, Matthew Arnold, &c., which have since been collected in book form. Recently he did the necrologies of Tennyson and Renan in The Academy. He is editor of Folk-lore, and Chairman of the Literary Committee of the International Folk-lore Congress. Among the books he has edited, with volumes of Introductions and Notes, are "The Fables of Bidpai," "The Fables of Æsop," "Daphnis and Chloe," "The Palace of Pleasure," and "The Letters of James Howell." He has also translated Balthasar Gracian's "Art of Worldly Wisdom" for the "Golden Treasury Series." He published "Celtic Fairy Tales" in 1890; "Indian Fairy Tales" in 1891; "Studies in Jewish Statistics," in 1892; "Tennyson and In Memoriam," in 1892; and the "Jews of Angevin England," and "More English Fairy Tales," in 1893.

JAMES, The Right Hon. Sir Henry, Q.C., M.P., son of Philip Turner James, Esq., of Hereford, by Frances Gertrude, third daughter of John Bodenham, Esq., of Presteign, Radnorshire, was born at Hereford, Oct. 30, 1828, and received his education at Cheltenham College. He was called to the Bar in the Middle Temple in 1852, and went the Oxford Circuit. He had already distinguished himself in his Inn, having been Lecturer's Prizeman at the Inner Temple in 1850, and again in 1851. Mr. James was nominated to the ancient order of "postman" of the Court of Exchequer in 1867; was made a Queen's Counsel in June, 1869; and became a Bencher of his Inn in 1870. In March, 1869, he obtained a seat in the House of Commons as one of the members for Taunton, unseating, on a scrutiny, his opponent, Mr. Serjeant Cox (who had been returned at the general election of the previous December), and continued to represent that borough in the Liberal interest until 1885, when he was returned for Bury (S. E. Lancashire). During the session of 1872 he took a prominent part in the debates on the Judicature Bill. In Sept., 1873, Mr. Gladstone appointed him Solicitor-General in succession to Sir George Jessel, and in November of that year he became Attorney-General, and received the honour of knighthood. He went out of office with the Liberal party in Feb., 1874. He was again appointed Attorney-General on the return of the Liberals to power under Mr. Gladstone in May, 1880. During this second tenure of office he introduced and carried through Parliament the Corrupt Practices (Parliamentary Elections) Act. In Mr. Gladstone's administration of 1886 Sir Henry James (who had been offered the Lord Chancellorship) declined to take office, on the ground of disagreement with the Prime Minister's Home Rule policy. He was returned unopposed for Bury, as a Unionist Liberal, at the general election of 1886, and has since then been one of the fighting leaders of the Liberal Unionist party. He was one of the counsel for the Times in the action of O'Donnel v. Walter, and as one of the leading counsel for that paper in the Parnell Commission delivered an able address, forming a retrospect of the history of Ireland from his point of view. In 1892 he was again returned for Bury, and took a leading part in the discussion of the Home Rule Bill in 1893, moving several amendments which were adopted.

JAMES, Henry, American novelist and essayist, was born at New York City, April 15, 1843. He is the son of the late Henry James, a forcible writer on religious and philosophical topics (born 1811, died Dec. 18, 1882). In his eleventh year his family went abroad, and after some stay in England made a long sojourn in France and Switzerland. On their return to America in 1860 they first resided in Newport, Rhode Island, removing to Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1866. Mr. James attended the Harvard Law School for a year or two while his family were at Newport, but a few years after their removal to Cambridge, 1869, he went abroad, where he has since remained, with the exception of occasional brief visits home. He now lives in London, though he spends considerable time in Italy. He has been a contributor to most of the American magazines, but his celebrity rests mainly upon his novels, which usually deal with the American as found abroad. His published books are: "Watch and Ward," 1871; "A Passionate Pilgrim, and other Tales," 1875; "Roderick Hudson," 1875; "Transatlantic Sketches," 1875; "The American," 1877; "French Poets and Novelists," 1878; "The Europeans," 1878; "Daisy Miller," 1878; "An International Episode," 1879; "Hawthorne" (one of the "English Men of Letters" series), 1879; "A Bundle of Letters," 1879; "Confidence," 1879; "Diary of a Man of Fifty," 1880; "Washington Square," 1880; "The Portrait of a Lady," 1881; "Siege of London," 1883; "Portraits of Places," 1884; "Tales of Three Cities," 1884; "A Little Tour in France," 1884; "Author of Beltraffio," 1885; "The Bostonians," 1886; "Princess Casamassima," 1886; "Partial Portraits," 1888; "The Aspern Papers," etc., 1888; "The Reverberator," 1888; "A London Life," 1889; "The Tragic Muse," 1890; "The Real Thing," 1892; "The Private Life," 1893; "Essays in London," 1893; and "Picture and Text," 1893. He also produced in London, Sept., 1891, a play founded on his novel "The American," and bearing the same title, and more recently, at the St. James's Theatre, London, "Guy Domville," a drama with an eighteenth-century hero.

JAMES, Thomas Lemuel, born at Utica, New York, March 29, 1831, was a pupil at the Utica Academy until he was fifteen years of age. His first journalistic experience was upon The Liberty Press, an anti-slavery paper. Entering actively upon political life before he had even attained his majority, he was made associate editor (1849) of The Madison County Journal, the organ of the Seward wing of the Whig party in New York. Upon the formation of the Republican party Mr. James entered the new organization, and during the Fremont canvass for the Presidency became sole proprietor and editor of the Journal, which he retained for ten years. During part of this time he was a collector of tolls on the Chenango Canal, which is owned by the State of New York. Upon the inauguration of President Lincoln in 1861 he was appointed Inspector of Customs, and accordingly sold his paper, and removed to New York City. In 1874 he was made Weigher, and in 1876 Deputy Collector of Customs. The efficiency he displayed in these positions induced President Grant, in 1877, to make him Postmaster at New York City, a position which he filled with such signal ability as to effect almost a revolution in the postal administration of the city. He removed the office entirely "out of politics," making merit the only test for appointments and promotions, largely increased its revenues, introduced many mechanical improvements, and in other ways added greatly to its usefulness. His success was so marked that President Garfield appointed him Postmaster-General in March, 1881, but the assassination of Mr. Garfield led him to tender his resignation to Mr. Arthur, and, in Jan., 1882, he retired from political life to accept the presidency of the Lincoln National Bank in New York City, a position which he still retains.

JAMESON, Dr., C.B., Administrator for the British South Africa Company's territories in Mashonaland and Matabeleland, is the son of a Scotch journalist and Writer to the Signet, and was educated for the medical profession, in which he had already begun to make his mark as a Glasgow practitioner before he decided to go to Africa. In the early seventies he reached the Diamond Fields, and quickly acquired a very remunerative practice and high professional reputation. "Camp fever," a typhoid-malarial disease of a dangerous and mysterious nature, was very prevalent, and Dr. Jameson proved most successful in his treatment of it. When about to retire altogether from practice and to return to Scotland, Dr. Jameson was persuaded by Mr. Cecil Rhodes to enter the service of the Chartered Company, in which for the last few years he had shown great administrative ability. He was at the head of affairs in Mashonaland during the Matabele campaign. When the raids of the Matabele had become intolerable he was asked by a representative meeting of white settlers, held at Victoria, to "settle once for all the Matabele Question;" and when the enemy at last fired on the white police near Fort Victoria, he was ordered by the High Commissioner to take all necessary steps for the protection of the interests and lives of those under his command. The forces at his disposal were estimated at 2,000. In 1894 Dr. Jameson visited England, and was made a C.B. in October.

JANET, Paul, a French author, was born in Paris on April 30, 1823. He is a follower of Cousin, and has been a Professor at Bourges and Strasbourg, and at the Lycée of Louis-le-Grand, Paris. In 1864 he became Professor of the history of Philosophy at the Sorbonne, and a member of the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, which institution awarded prizes for his "La Famille," 1855; and "Histoire de la Philosophie dans l'antiquité et dans les temps modernes," 1858. Among his more recent works are "Histoire de la Science Politique," 1871; "Problèmes du XIX. Siècle," 1872; "Philosophie de la Révolution Française," 1875; "Les Causes-Finales," 1876; "La Philosophie Française Contemporaine," 1879; "Les Maîtres de la Pensée Moderne," and "Les Origines du Socialism Contemporain," 1883; "Histoire de la Philosophie," in collaboration with M. G. Séailles, 1887; a centenary history of the French Revolution, 1889; "La Philosophie de Lamennais," 1890. He has also contributed to the Revue des Deux Mondes, Dictionnaire des Sciences Philosophiques, Le Temps, &c., and is an officer of the Legion of Honour. He is also a member of the Higher Council of Public Instruction.

JAPAN, The Mikado, or Emperor of. See MUTSU-HITO.

JAPP, Francis Robert, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Dundee in 1848, and educated at schools in Dundee and St. Andrews, and at the Universities of St. Andrews, Edinburgh, Heidelberg, and Bonn. In 1881 he was elected to the post of Lecturer on Chemistry in the Normal School of Science, South Kensington. In 1885 he was elected Foreign Secretary of the Chemical Society, and in the same year received the Fellowship of the Royal Society. In 1888 the University of St. Andrews conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. His various researches, which deal exclusively with questions relating to organic chemistry, have been published chiefly in the Journal of the Chemical Society. He has also published jointly with Professor E. Frankland, F.R.S., a text-book of inorganic chemistry.

JAY, Hon. John, American statesman, grandson of the first Chief Justice of the United States, was born at New York City, June 23, 1817. He graduated at Columbia College in 1836, and was admitted to the Bar in 1839. He became identified with the anti-slavery movement, and assisted in the formation of the Republican party. During the Civil War he acted with the Union League Club, of which he was President in 1866, and again in 1877. From 1869 to 1875 he was American Minister to Austria; in 1877 he was Chairman of the Commission appointed to investigate the system of the N.Y. Custom House; and from 1883 to 1888 was President of the N.Y. State Civil Service Commission. Mr. Jay was active in the early history of the American Geographical and Statistical Society; was long Corresponding Secretary of the New York Historical Society, and was the first President of the Huguenot Society, organized in New York in 1855. Among his many speeches and pamphlets which have been circulated are: "America Free or America Slave," 1856; "The Church and the Rebellion," 1863; "On the Passage of the Constitutional Amendment Abolishing Slavery," 1864; "Rome and America," 1868; "The American Foreign Service," 1877; and "The Public School a Portal to the Civil Service."

JAYNE, The Right Rev. Francis John, M.A., Bishop of Chester, was born Jan. 1, 1845, and educated at Rugby School and Wadham College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar. He took a First Class in Moderations in 1866, and a double First Class in the Final Schools, 1868, in which year he became a Fellow of Jesus College. He was ordained in 1870, and was for a year curate of St. Clement's, Oxford, afterwards becoming Tutor of Keble College, where he remained until 1879. In that year he was appointed Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter, of which institution he greatly increased the efficiency. In 1886 he accepted the important vicarage of Leeds, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Gott, who became Dean of Worcester. In 1889 he was consecrated Bishop of Chester. In 1892 the Bishop initiated a discussion on public-house reform, and has since urged the necessity of temperance legislation on constructive lines. He is a warm advocate of what is known as the "Gothenburg System" of State-controlled liquor-traffic, and both on the platform and in the press has constantly advocated his views.

JEAFFRESON, John Cordy, is a member of an East Anglian family, which has been seated more than two centuries at Dullingham House, Cambridgeshire. He was born on Jan. 14, 1831, at Framlingham, Suffolk, where his father, William Jeaffreson, F.R.C.S., was an eminent surgical operator. He was educated at the Grammar Schools of Woodbridge and Botesdale, and began to study medicine. But changing his plan of life, he entered Pembroke College, Oxford, and took his degree in 1852, proceeding afterwards to Lincoln's Inn, where he was called to the Bar in 1859. His first novel, "Crewe Rise," was published in 1854, and has been followed by "Olive Blake's Good Work," 1862; "Live It Down," 1863; "Not Dead Yet," 1864; "A Woman in Spite of Herself," 1872. In connection with these works of fiction, mention may be made of their author's history of the literature of prose fiction in England, entitled "Novels and Novelists from Elizabeth to Victoria," 1858. Mr. Jeaffreson's principal contributions to the social history of England are his three well-known books on the three learned professions, "A Book about Doctors," 1860; "A Book about Lawyers," 1866; "A Book about the Clergy," 1870; also the "Annals of Oxford," 1871; "Brides and Bridals," 1872, a history of marriage in England; "A Book about the Table," 1874; and "A Young Squire of the Seventeenth Century," 1877, containing selections from the papers (A.D. 1676—A.D.

1686) of the author's ancestor, Christopher Jeaffreson, of Dullingham House, Cambridgeshire. Shortly after the death of Robert Stephenson, C.E., Mr. Jeaffreson was retained by the great engineer's representatives to write the story of his life, in conjunction with Professor Pole, C.E., who contributed the scientific appendix to the "Life of Robert Stephenson," 1864. He was a contributor in past times to Fraser's Magazine, the Dublin University Magazine, Temple Bar, and other periodical publications. Mr. Jeaffreson has also been a copious contributor to the Athenæum, and a diligent writer on the daily press of London. The annual Blue Book Reports of Her Majesty's Commission on Historical Manuscripts show that, as one of their inspectors of Records and Documents, Mr. Jeaffreson has of late years spent much time in the examination of ancient writings in different parts of the kingdom, and has done much service to literature in collecting materials for future historians. Since the beginning of 1886 Mr. Jeaffreson has edited for the Middlesex County Records Society four volumes of historical matters, taken from the Middlesex Sessions' Rolls, Files and Books from 3 Edward VI. to 4 James II. Mr. Jeaffreson's latest original works are: "The Real Lord Byron: New Views of the Poet's Life," 2 vols., 1883; "The Real Shelley," 2 vols., 1885; "Lady Hamilton and Lord Nelson: an Historical Biography based on Letters and other Documents in the Possession of Alfred Morrison, Esq., of Fonthill, Wiltshire," 2 vols., 1888; "The Queen of Naples and Lord Nelson," based on letters and other documents in the British Museum and the Morrison MSS., 2 vols., 1889; "Cutting for Partners," a Novel, 1890; "Victoria, Queen and Empress," 1893; and "A Book of Recollections," 1893, an autobiographical medley of personal reminiscences and social memorabilia.

JEBB, Professor Richard Claverhouse, LL.D., D.C.L., born at Dundee, Aug. 27, 1841, is son of Robert Jebb, Esq., formerly counsel for the Revenue in Ireland; grandson of the late Mr. Justice Jebb, and grand-nephew of Bishop Jebb; while, on the maternal side, he is great-grandson of Bishop Horsley. He was educated at St. Columba's College, co. Dublin; at Charterhouse School, London; and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated as senior classic in 1862, and was soon afterwards elected a Fellow. As a classical lecturer of his College he took a foremost part in organising at Cambridge the system of Inter-Collegiate Classical Lectures, and was the first secretary of an association of college lecturers for that purpose. Along with Professor E. B. Cowell, he was also instrumental in founding the Cambridge Philological Society, of which he was the first secretary. In 1869 he was chosen by the Senate to be Public Orator of the University. In 1871 he was nominated by the University as a Governor of Charterhouse School, a post which he ceased to hold from 1875 (when he went to Glasgow) till 1893, when he was re-elected to it; in 1872 he was elected Classical Examiner in the University of London; and was also appointed Tutor of Trinity College; but resigned these posts on being called, in 1875, to fill the chair of Greek in the University of Glasgow. In 1878 he received from the King of the Hellenes the Order of the Saviour, in recognition of his services to Greek studies; and in the following year the University of Edinburgh conferred upon him the honorary Degree of Doctor of Laws. In 1884, on visiting the United States, he received the honorary Degree of Doctor of Laws from Harvard University. In 1885 the Degree of Doctor of Letters was conferred on him by the University of Cambridge; in 1888 he received the Degree of LL.D. from the University of Dublin, and that of Ph.D. from the University of Bologna; in 1891 the degree of LL.D. from the University of Glasgow, and that of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford. In 1889 he was elected Regius Professor of Greek at Cambridge; and, in 1890, he succeeded the late Bishop Lightfoot as President of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies. In 1891, on the death of the Right Hon. H. C. Raikes, he was elected M.P. for the University of Cambridge, and was re-elected at the general election in 1892. He is the author of a work in 2 vols. on "The Attic Orators;" also of "Selections from the Attic Orators," with notes; "The Characters of Theophrastus," with notes and translation; "Modern Greece;" "A Primer of Greek Literature;" "A Life of Richard Bentley" (in "English Men of Letters," which has appeared in a German translation); an "Introduction to Homer," which has been translated into German and Russian; "Lectures on Greek Poetry," given at the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore; "Translations" into, and from, Greek and Latin; the "Electra" and "Ajax" of Sophocles, with notes; and important articles on classical literature, history, and archæology, in the "Encyclopædia Britannica" and Journal of Hellenic Studies. He is now engaged on a complete edition of Sophocles, of which Part I. (Œdipus Ty-rannus), Part II. (Œdipus Coloneus), Part III. (Antigone), Part IV. (Philoctetes), and Part V. (Trachiniae) have already been published (Cambridge Univ. Press, 1883-90). He has taken an active part in promoting the study and teaching of Modern Greek.

JEFFERSON, Joseph, actor, was born at Philadelphia, Feb. 20, 1829. His grandfather and great-grandfather were distinguished actors, and his mother, Mrs. Burke, was a celebrated vocalist. He appeared on the stage at a very early age, and gradually rose to the front place as a comedian, and his merits are recognized in both England and America. His range of characters is very wide, covering almost the entire field of comedy and farce, without degenerating into burlesque. His most famous rôle is that of Rip Van Winkle in Mr. Dion Boucicault's play by that name, founded upon the story of Washington Irving; a character which Mr. Jefferson may be said to have created, as well as to have made his own. Perhaps he is equally successful as Bob Acres in "The Rivals," Dr. Pangloss in "The Heir at Law," and Caleb Plummer in "The Cricket on the Hearth." Besides playing in every city in the United States, he has made professional visits to England, Australia, and New Zealand.

JEFFERY, Henry Martyn, M.A., F.R.S., mathematician, was born at Lamorran, near Truro, in Cornwall, Jan. 5, 1826, at the rectory of his grandfather, the Rev. W. Curgenven. Several members of his family were eminent calculators, especially his great-uncle and namesake, Rev. H. Martyn, B.D., of Truro, Senior Wrangler of 1801, the celebrated orientalist and missionary. Mr. Jeffery was trained at Sedbergh School, under the Rev. J. H. Evans, the editor of "Sections of Newton's Principia," and at Cambridge by Rev. Harvey Goodwin, now Bishop of Carlisle. He graduated in Jan., 1849, as Sixth Wrangler; and in March took a second class in the Classical Tripos. His closing University distinction was the first Tyrwhitt University Scholarship for Hebrew in 1852. From 1856 to the present year Mr. Jeffrey has published in various journals a continuous series of mathematical memoirs on "Pure Analysis," and "Analytical Geometry," the value of which was formally recognized in 1880 by his admission into the Royal Society. His most important work has been the classification of class-cubics, both in Plane and Spherical Geometry; two instalments of the similar classification for class-quartics also have been published in the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics. Mr. Jeffery has been occupied in other fields of labour. In 1853 he wrote as a coadjutor, "On Classical Composition in Greek Iambics and Latin Prose," and in 1878 contributed an essay on a set subject at the Social Congress. He was appointed by the President and Fellows of C.C.C., Oxford, Second Master of Pate's Grammar School, Cheltenham, in 1852, and was promoted, in 1868, to the Head-Mastership in succession to Rev. Dr. Hayman, the eminent Homeric Scholar. Many of his pupils have attained high distinction at the Universities and in the various Competitive Examinations for admission into the public services. Since his retirement to Falmouth from office in 1882, he has continued his scientific writings, and contributed papers on literary subjects to the local Polytechnic Society and the Royal Institution of Cornwall, in both which societies he is a Vice-President.

JENKINS, Ebenezer E., LL.D., Honorary Secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, was born in Exeter, May 10, 1820, educated in a grammar school in that city, and entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1845. He was appointed the same year to India, where he laboured many years, chiefly in Madras, as head of the Royapettah High School. In 1856 he was in England on furlough, advocating the claims of his Mission during the excitement awakened by the Indian Mutiny. He returned to the East in 1857 as General Superintendent of Wesleyan Missions in Southern India. In 1862 he explored the district of the Godavera River, at that time little known to the European traveller, with the view of establishing a mission among the aboriginal tribes of Central India. He finally left the Indian field, and joined the Home Ministry in 1864, where he became pastor in the Hackney, Brixton, Southport, and other circuits. In 1875 he was sent to Madras on a visit of inspection, and extended his journey to China and Japan. In 1877 he became one of the General Secretaries of the Missionary Society. In 1880 he was elected President of the Conference. In 1884 he was deputed to visit the native churches in India, Ceylon, and China, and to furnish his committee and the Conference with a report of their condition and prospects. He is the author of the Fernley Lecture for 1877, entitled "Modern Atheism, its position and promise." He published a volume of sermons preached in Madras; and also "Sermons and addresses delivered during his Presidential Year," and "Sermons preached on behalf of the London and Baptist Missionary Societies." He is also the author of "My Sources of Strength," one of the series of devotional books published by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

JENNER, Sir William, Bart., G.C.B., M.D. London, D.C.L. Oxon, LL.D. Cant., LL.D. Edinburgh, F.R.S., Commander Order of Leopold of Belgium, Hon. Member Academy of Medicine, Belgium, born at Chatham in 1815, was educated at University College, London, and began his professional career as a general practitioner, his first public appointment being that of Surgeon-Accoucheur to the Royal Maternity Charity. He graduated M.D. London, in 1844, when he retired from general practice. In 1848 he became a member of the Royal College of Physicians, and in the same year was appointed Professor of Pathological Anatomy in University College, and Assistant-Physician to University College Hospital. He was elected Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, and appointed to deliver the Gulstonian Lectures before the College in 1852, was nominated Physician to the Hospital for Sick Children on its establishment in that year, Assistant-Physician to the London Fever Hospital in 1853, Physician to the University College Hospital in 1854, and Professor of Clinical Medicine in 1857. On the death of the lamented Dr. Baly, in 1861, Dr. Jenner was appointed to succeed him as Physician Extraordinary to the Queen, and in 1862 was gazetted Physician in Ordinary to Her Majesty. In 1862 he became Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine at University College, and in 1863 Physician in Ordinary to the Prince of Wales. On his appointment as Physician to the Queen, he resigned his connection with the London Fever Hospital, and in 1862 resigned the post of Physician to the Hospital for Sick Children. In 1864 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He has written several series of papers on Fever, the Acute Specific Diseases, Diphtheria, Diseases of Children, Diseases of the Heart, Lungs, Skin, &c. Dr. Jenner was one of the Physicians who attended the late Prince Consort in his last illness. He is well known, not only to the profession, but to the public at large, as having been the first to establish beyond dispute the difference in kind between typhus and typhoid fevers. He was created a baronet in 1868, made a K.C.B. Jan. 20, 1872, in recognition of services rendered during the severe illness of the Prince of Wales, and G.C.B. May 24, 1889. Sir William Jenner was elected President of the Royal College of Physicians, London, in 1881, and held that office for seven years. He retired from the practice of his profession in 1889. In 1893 he published "Lectures and Essays on Fevers and Diphtheria," 1849-1879." In July, 1894, he was awarded the Moxon Medal of the Royal College of Physicians, which is presented triennially to persons who have rendered distinguished services in the field of clinical medicine.

JENNINGS, Sir Patrick Alfred, LL.D., K.C.M.G., M.L.C., was born in 1831, in the town of Newry, north of Ireland, and is a direct descendant of a Flemish family, which originally came to England in the fifteenth century and afterwards settled in Ireland. Parliamentary records show that in the year 1633 an ancestor of Sir Patrick Jennings was dispossessed of his estates in Grey Abbey for refusing to conform to the religion of the Church of England. Sir Patrick received his early education at Newry School, where he learnt civil engineering and surveying. Having finally resolved to leave England for Australia, he landed in Melbourne in 1852 and went to the goldfields, settling at St. Arnaud in 1855. He was among the first to introduce into that district quartz-crushing machinery on a large scale. In 1857 he was created a magistrate of Victoria, and was chairman for some years of the local Bench. In 1867, when Sir James Martin was Premier, and Sir Henry Parkes Colonial Secretary, Sir Patrick was summoned to the Legislative Council, of which he remained a member until 1870, when he resigned his seat and was elected a member of the Legislative Assembly for the Murray district. He occupied the seat during two Parliaments, until 1873, in which year he came to Sydney. In 1874 he received the order of St. Gregory the Great from Rome. In 1879 he accepted the post of Executive Commissioner to the first Sydney International Exhibition, and for his services in that position was appointed C.M.G., and in 1880 K.C.M.G. He has acted as Commissioner from New South Wales to the Victorian Exhibition, and as representative Commissioner for New South Wales, Queensland, and Tasmania to the Great Centennial Exhibition of Philadelphia in 1876. On a visit to Europe he was presented to the late Pope, when he received the distinction of Knight Commander of Pius IX., and was also created a Commander of St. Gregory the Great. In 1880 he was returned to the Assembly to represent the Bogan. He was Vice-President of the Executive Council, without portfolio, in the Stuart Government, and was Colonial Secretary in the Dibbs Administration. In Feb., 1886, Sir Patrick Jennings formed a Government, of which he was Premier and Treasurer, and also Vice-President of the Executive Council. These positions he resigned in January, 1887. The same year he proceeded to England, in company with the late Sir Robert Wisdom, as delegate to the Colonial Conference held in London. On revisiting his native country he was admitted an honorary LL.D. of Dublin University, and subsequently visited Rome, when he received the Grand Cross of Pius IX. from Pope Leo XIII. He was for some years Vice-President of the Agricultural Society, and prominent as a leader in benevolent and social movements. He is a magistrate of Queensland, Victoria, and New South Wales, and is a landowner in the three colonies. He is also a member of the Sydney University Senate, a Fellow of St. John's College, and a trustee of the Sydney National Art Gallery.

JERMYN, The Right Rev. Hugh Willoughby, D.D., Bishop of Brechin, was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge (B.A., 1841, M.A., 1847, D.D., 1872). Having accepted an appointment in the West Indies, he was made Archdeacon of St. Christopher. In 1858 he became Rector of Nettlecombe, Somersetshire, and in 1871 was appointed Bishop of Colombo, being consecrated in the chapel of Lambeth Palace, Oct. 28, 1871. He resigned this See early in 1875, and came home. Soon afterwards he was elected Bishop of Brechin, and was formally installed at Dundee, Jan, 18, 1876. In Sept. 1886, he was elected Primus of the Episcopal Church of Scotland in succession to Bishop Eden.

JEROME, Klapka Jerome, was born at Walsall, May 2, 1861, and is the son of a gentleman belonging to a west of England family, a colliery proprietor. He came to London when a child, and has lived there ever since. He was educated at the Philological School, Marylebone, served a good many callings, was clerk, schoolmaster, shorthand writer, reporter, actor, and journalist. In 1885 he published "On the Stage—and Off," a brief account of his own stage experiences: in 1886 "Idle Thoughts of an Idle Fellow," a book of essays; in the same year he produced at the Globe Theatre "Barbara," a one-act comedy. In 1888, he produced "Sunset," a one-act comedy; "Fennel," an adaptation of a poetical play from the French; "Wood Barrow Farm," a three-act comedy. In 1889 he wrote "Stage-land," a skit on stage conventionalities, and "Three Men in a Boat," a humorous story which has had an immense success. In 1890 he produced a three-act farce, "New Lamps for Old," and "Ruth," a play. In 1891 he published "The Diary of a Pilgrimage," and in 1892 he started "The Idler" Magazine in co-editorship with Robert Barr. In 1893 he produced, in America, "The Councillor's Wife," a three-act comedy; published "Novel Notes," and "John Ingerfield;" and started the weekly magazine-journal "To-Day."

JERSEY (Earl of), Victor Albert George Child Villiers (7th Earl), was born March 20, 1845, succeeded to the earldom in 1859. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, and was appointed, on the retirement of Lord Carrington in 1890, to be Governor of New South Wales, where he was succeeded in 1893 by Sir R. W. Duff. He is a J.P. for Oxfordshire, and J.P. and D.L. for Warwickshire; was formerly Cornet in the Oxfordshire Yeomanry Cavalry; and a Lord-in-Waiting to Her Majesty, 1875-77. The Earl married, in 1872, the Hon. Margaret Elizabeth Leigh, daughter of the 2nd Baron Leigh, and has two sons and three daughters.

JERVOIS, His Excellency Lieut.-General Sir William Francis Drummond, G.C.M.G., C.B., F.R.S., eldest son of the late General Jervois, was born at Cowes, Isle of Wight, in 1821, and entered the Royal Engineers in 1839. For seven years from 1841 he was actively employed at the Cape of Good Hope. In 1842 he acted as Brigade-Major in an expedition against the Boers, and during the three following years was professionally engaged at various frontier stations, making roads, building bridges, and establishing military posts. In 1845, having been appointed Acting Adjutant to the Royal Engineers, he accompanied the Chief Engineer over the whole frontier of the Cape Colony and the settlement of Natal, and in the earlier part of 1846 he was Major of Brigade in the garrison of Cape Town, until the arrival of Sir H. Pottinger as Governor, and Sir G. Berkeley, as Commander-in-Chief, with whom he proceeded to the frontier against the Kaffirs. During the Kaffir War he made a military survey and map of Kaffraria, a work of great difficulty. In 1852 he was ordered to the island of Alderney, for the purpose of designing plans for the fortifications, and the superintendence of their execution; a work strongly advocated by the great Duke of Wellington. In 1854 Major Jervois was promoted to the rank of major; and in 1855 he was transferred to the London District, and was nominated by Lord Panmure a member of a Committee on Barrack Accommodation, whose labours contributed much to the improvements which have of late years been effected in the construction of barracks, as well as in the sanitary condition of our troops. In 1856 he was appointed Assistant Inspector-General of Fortifications, under Sir John Burgoyne, and on the appointment, in 1859, of a Royal Commission to report upon the defences of the country, he was selected by the Government to be Secretary. He was at the same time Secretary to the Permanent Defence Committee, under the presidency of the Duke of Cambridge. He became the Confidential Adviser of Lord Palmerston and of several Secretaries of State, on matters relating to defence, and designed the fortifications of Portsmouth, Plymouth, Pembroke, Portland, Cork, the Thames, the Medway, and other places. During his long service, nearly twenty years, in the War Office, he was also a member of the Special Committee on the Application of Iron to Ships and Fortifications. In 1861 he attained the rank of Lieut.-Colonel, in 1862 was appointed Deputy Director of Fortifications, and in 1863 was nominated a Companion of the Bath, and was sent on a special mission to report on the defences of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, on which occasion he visited the fortifications at the principal ports on the seaboard of the United States. In 1864 he was sent again on a special mission to Canada to confer with the Canadian Government on the question of the defence of that province. On his return to England his report was laid before Parliament, and the Imperial Government undertook to carry out the defences of Quebec on the plan recommended by him. He was also sent on special missions to Bermuda, Halifax (N.S.), Malta and Gibraltar, and planned improvements and additions to the fortifications of those places. In 1871-2 he was ordered to India, to advise the Government of India, respecting the defences of Bombay, Aden, the Hooghly, Rangoon, &c. He was created a Knight Commander of the Order of SS. Michael and George in 1874, and was appointed Governor of the Straits Settlements, April 7, 1875. He held the latter post for two years, and during that period he quelled a formidable insurrection in the Malay Peninsula. The subsequent prosperity and quiet of the Malay States resulted mainly from his action. In April, 1877, he was appointed to advise the Governments of the Australian Colonies on the defence of their chief ports. While in Australia he wa selected to be Governor of South Australia. He was nominated a G.C.M.G. in 1878; and in Dec. 1882, he was appointed Governor of New Zealand, where on his advice the fortification of the principal ports was undertaken by the Colonial Government. Indeed, throughout his stay in Australasia till the year 1889, he continued to be the chief adviser of the Governments there on matters relating to defence. He has (Jan. 1891) been publicly advocating, as a means of removing the friction complained of between the Navy and Army, that Naval Stations and Coast Defences shall be handed over to the Naval Department.

JESSOPP, The Rev. Augustus, D.D., was born in 1824, at Albury Place, Cheshunt, Herts, where his father was J.P. for the county and a Deputy-Lieutenant. He was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he is M.A.; and he is D.D. of Worcester College, Oxford. He was appointed Head-Master of Helston Grammar School, Cornwall, 1855; Head-Master of Norwich School, 1859; and Rector of Scarning, Norfolk, 1879. He was select preacher before the University of Oxford in 1870, and before the University of Cambridge in 1888. Dr. Jessopp is the author or editor of "Donne's Essays in Divinity," with life, 1855; "Tales by Emile Souvestre with Notes and Life of the Author," 1860, which has passed through five editions; "Norwich School Sermons," 1864; "A Manual of the Greek Accidence," 1865, 3rd edit. 1879; "The Fragments of Primitive Liturgies and Confessions of Faith contained in the writings of the New Testament," 1872; "Letters of Father Henry Walpole, S.J.," from the MSS. at Stonyhurst College, 1873; "One Generation of a Norfolk House, a contribution to Elizabethan History," 1878, 2nd edit. 1879; "Husenbeth's Emblems of Saints," edited for the Norfolk Archæological Society, 1882; "History of the Diocese of Norwich" (S.P.C.K.), 1884; and contributions to the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviews, Nineteenth Century, and other serials. His volume of social papers entitled "Arcadia, for Better for Worse," which was first issued in 1887, is already in the 5th edition; and his "Coming of the Friars, and other Historical Essays," published in 1888, and treating of some important social and religious movements during the middle ages, have been widely read in England and in the American States and three editions were absorbed within a year. Dr. Jessopp has contributed some important articles to the "Dictionary of National Biography;" the most notable being the life of Queen Elizabeth. He has likewise contributed many papers on historical and antiquarian subjects in the Proceedings of the Norfolk and Norwich Archæological Society, of which he is Literary Secretary. Among his recent works should be mentioned "Doris, an Idyl of Arcady," 1892; "Pity the Poor Birds," and "Studies by a Recluse," 1893; and "Random Roaming and other Papers," 1894.

JEUNE, Sir Francis Henry, Q.C., a Judge of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division, eldest son of a late Bishop of Peterborough, was born in 1844, and educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained firsts in Classical Moderations and Literæ Humaniores (1863 and 1865). He also won University prizes for historical essays, the Stanhope in 1863 and the Arnold in 1867. He has been a Fellow of Hertford, but immediately after taking his degree in 1865 he came to London to read for the Bar. Called at the Inner Temple in Nov., 1868, he was created a Queen's Counsel twenty years after. He was well known as an ecclesiastical lawyer, and has held several ecclesiastical appointments. He was also extensively engaged in commons and rights of way cases, and was junior counsel for the claimant in the historic Tichborne Case. In Jan. 1891, Mr. Jeune was appointed a Judge of the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division in succession to the late Sir James Hannen, who had been promoted to be a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary. The late Justice Butt was at that time President of the Probate Division. Sir Francis, then Mr., Jeune married in 1881 Mary Susan Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. Stewart Mackenzie of Seaforth, and widow of Colonel the Hon. John Constantine Stanley, brother of the present Lord Stanley of Alderley. Lady Jeune is well-known in London society as a hostess and as an authority on social questions. She has recently (1894) republished some articles chiefly on social topics, contributed by her to various leading reviews and magazines.

JEX-BLAKE, The Right Rev. Thomas William, D.D., Dean of Wells, was born in London on Jan. 26, 1832, and is the only son of Thomas Jex-Blake. J.P. for Norfolk, and Maria Emily, daughter of T. Cubitt, J.P. and D.L. for the same county. He was educated at Rugby, under Dr. Cotton, and at University College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar, and where he obtained "firsts" in Classical Moderations and in Greats, and graduated B.A. in 1855. He took his M.A. in 1857, and D.D. in 1873. In 1855 he was appointed by Dr. Cotton composition master to the VIth form at Marlborough College, and was elected a Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, in the same year. He vacated his fellowship on his marriage in 1857. Ordained deacon in 1856 and priest in 1857, he became an Assistant Master at Rugby in 1858. In 1868 he was appointed Principal of Cheltenham College, and in Feb. 1874, succeeded Dr. Hayman as Head-Master of Rugby at a difficult period of the school's history. He resigned the Head-Mastership of Rugby in 1886, and in 1887 was appointed to the Rectory of Alvechurch, Redditch, in the diocese of Worcester. He succeeded the late Dean Plumptre at Wells in Feb. 1891, and is a justice of the Peace for Worcestershire. He is the author of "Long Vacation in Continental Picture Galleries," 1858; of "Life in Faith," 1875; and of Latin Sermons to the Clergy in St. Paul's, August, 1892.

JOACHIM, Joseph, a celebrated violinist, born at Kitsee, near Presburg, in Hungary, of Jewish parents, July 15, 1831 entered while very young the Conservatory of Music at Vienna, where he studied under Joseph Böhm. From the age of twelve years he attracted much attention at Leipzig by his rare skill on his instrument, and obtained an engagement, which he held for seven years, in the orchestra of the Gewandhaus. Meanwhile, however, he assiduously pursued his studies under the guidance of Ferdinand David, and also received lessons in the theory of music from Moritz Hauptmann. In 1850 he paid his first visit to Paris, and in the same year he was appointed Director of the Concerts at Weimar. In 1853 he became Master of the Chapel Royal at Hanover. After this he appeared in most of the capitals of Europe, and paid annual visits to London, where he gave several series of concerts. In 1869 he became a member of the Senate of the Berlin Academy, and was nominated Director of the School of Instrumental Music in the Conservatory of Music then recently established in the Prussian capital. He was created an honorary Mus. Doc. of the University of Cambridge, March 8, 1877. Herr Joachim's fame rests mainly on his extraordinary skill as an instrumentalist, but he is too great an artist not to keep his own wonderful technical ability always subordinate to the interpretation of the music he is playing. As a composer he belongs to the school of Schumann. The "Concert à la Hongroise" ("Hungarian Concerto") is one of his chief compositions for violin and orchestra. In August, 1882, he was appointed conductor of the Royal Academy of Music in Berlin, and Musical Director of the Royal Academy of Arts. He has frequently visited England since then, and has been principal violinist at the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts at St. James's Hall since they were first started. On March 17, 1889, the fiftieth anniversary of his first appearance in public was celebrated, he being presented with a magnificent violin by his admirers. Oxford University has conferred on him the D.C.L. degree.

JOHNSON, Eastman, American artist, was born at Lovell, Maine, July 29, 1824. From the age of seventeen he devoted himself seriously to art work, and in 1849 went to Düsseldorf, where he studied two years, and afterwards resided for four years at the Hague, where, besides numerous portraits, he executed "The Savoyard" and "The Card Players," his earliest elaborate pictures in oil. After visiting the principal European galleries, he established himself in Paris, but was soon after called home to Washington. In 1858 he settled at New York, where he still remains. His favourite subjects are American rural and domestic life, including the negro and other subjects, though of late he has devoted himself almost exclusively to portrait-painting. He revisited Europe in 1885. Among his best works, many of which have been reproduced in engraving and chromo-lithography, are: "The Old Kentucky Home," "Mating," "The Farmer's Sunday Morning," "The Village Blacksmith," "The Pension Agent," "The Maple Sugar Camp," "Milton Dictating to his Daughters," "Cousnelo," "A Light unto his Feet," "Corn Husking Bee," "The Cranberry Harvest at Nantucket," and "The School of Philosophy at Nantucket."

JOHNSON, The Right Rev. Edward Ralph, Bishop of Calcutta, fifth son of William Ponsonby Johnson, of Castlesteads, Cumberland, was born at Castlesteads, Feb. 17, 1828, and educated at Rugby, and at Wadham College, Oxford (B.A. 1850; M.A. 1860). He was ordained deacon and priest by the Bishop of Worcester—deacon, with a title to the curacy of Farnborough, in the county of Warwick—in 1851. He was appointed, in 1860, to a minor canonry in the cathedral of Chester, and to the curacy of the cathedral parish of St. Oswald. In 1866 the Dean and Chapter appointed him to the rectory of Northenden, in the county of Chester, where he succeeded the late Archdeacon Woolrough. He was selected by the Bishop of Chester, in 1871, to fill the post of Archdeacon of Chester, upon the resignation of the late Archdeacon Pollock. In October, 1876, he was appointed to the bishopric of Calcutta, vacant by the death of the late Dr. Robert Milman. He was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, Nov. 30, 1876.

JOHNSON, Professor Sir George, M.D., F.R.S., was born in November, 1818, at Goudhurst, in Kent. He was educated at the Goudhurst Grammar School and at King's College, London, where he entered as a medical student in 1839. He is a graduate of London—M.B., with the Scholarship for Physiology, in 1842; M.D. in 1844. In 1843 he was appointed the first Medical Tutor at King's College; in 1550, when he resigned that office, he was elected an honorary Fellow of the College; in 1857 he was appointed Professor of Materia Medica; and in 1863 he succeeded the late Dr. George Budd as Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine. In 1876 he was appointed Professor of Clinical Medicine, with the office of Senior Physician of King's College Hospital. Having resigned these offices in 1886, he was elected by the Council Emeritus Professor of Clinical Medicine and Consulting Physician to the Hospital. In 1862 he was elected a Fellow or Senator of the University of London, and in 1872 a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1846 he became a member of the College of Physicians; and in 1850, having been elected a Fellow, he was appointed to give the Gulstonian Lectures. In 1877 he delivered the Lumleian Lectures; and in 1882 the Harveian Oration. In this oration he defended Harvey from the attacks of the modern Italians, who maintain that their countryman Cesalpinus, and not Harvey, was the discoverer of the circulation of the blood. He has served in succession as Examiner in Medicine for the College Licence, as a Junior Censor, as Senior Censor in 1875-76, and Vice-President in 1887. For the usual period of two years, from 1884 to 1886, he was President of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society. He is Honorary Consulting Physician to the Royal College of Music, an office to which he was appointed by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales; in 1889 he was appointed Physician Extraordinary to Her Majesty the Queen; and in 1892 Her Majesty conferred on him the honour of Knighthood. Sir George Johnson has published the following works:—"On Diseases of the Kidney," 1852; "Lectures on Bright's Disease," 1873; "Epidemic Diarrhœa and Cholera," 1855; "Notes on Cholera," 1866; "The Laryngoscope: Directions for its Use and practical Illustrations of its Value," 1864; "Medical Lectures and Essays," 1887; "An Essay on Asphyxia," 1889; also numerous Lectures and Papers on various subjects, especially on "Nervous Disorders, the Result of Over-work and Anxiety;" and "The Pathology and Treatment of Diphtheria."

JOHNSON, The Right Hon. William Moore, Q.C., P.C., is the only son of the Rev. William Johnson, M.A., formerly Chancellor of Ross and Cloyne, and rector of Clenore, county Cork, by Elizabeth Anne, daughter of the Rev. William Hamilton, F.T.C.D., and was born in 1828. He graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, taking his Bachelor's degree in 1849, and that of M.A. in 1856. He was called to the Irish Bar in Michaelmas term, 1853, was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1872, and was Law Adviser to the Crown in Ireland from 1868 till 1874. Mr. Johnson was returned as M.P. for Mallow at the general election of April, 1880; and on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's Administration in the following month he was appointed Solicitor-General for Ireland, and re-elected M.P. for Mallow. He succeeded Mr. Law as Attorney-General for Ireland in November, 1881, and was appointed Judge of the High Court of Justice in Ireland, Queen's Bench Division, 1883. He is a Bencher of the King's Inns, Dublin (1880), and was made a Privy Councillor (Ireland), 1881.

JOHNSTON, Henry Hamilton, C.B., F.R.G.S., African traveller, born June 12, 1858, at Park Place, Kennington, Surrey, is the third son of John Brookes Johnston, Esq., and was educated at Stockwell Grammar School and King's College, London. He is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, Zoological Society, Anthropological Institute, and Royal Colonial Institute, and was appointed H.M. Vice-Consul for the Cameroons and the Oil Rivers in Oct., 1885. He was Acting-Consul for Bights of Benin and Biafra, 1887-88, and was promoted to be Consul for Portuguese East Africa, Dec., 1888. He has written a great deal in the leading journals and reviews on subjects connected with natural history, travel, and political matters, and published, in 1884, a work entitled "The River Congo;" in 1886; "The Kilimanjaro Expedition;" in 1889, "The History of a Slave;" and in 1891, the "Life of Livingstone." He studied painting as a student of the Royal Academy of Arts in London, and has frequently exhibited pictures at the Royal Academy and in other galleries. In 1880 he travelled through Tunis and Algeria; in 1882-83, visited the River Congo and other parts of West Africa; and in 1884, conducted an expedition to Mount Kilimanjaro in East Africa. In 1887, he surveyed a portion of the Niger Delta, and in 1889-90, visited Lakes Nyasa and Tanganyika, for the purpose of making peace between the Arabs and the African Lakes Company. In 1890, he was made a C.B., and in 1891, was appointed Commissioner and Consul-General in British Central Africa, and has since that time been administering the extensive territories of that protectorate. He visited England in 1894, and frequently lectured on the subject of Central Africa, and in the autumn of that year published, as a Government publication, a short and interesting account of his charge.

JOHNSTON, General Joseph Eccleston, was born in Prince Edward county, Virginia, Feb., 1807. He graduated at the Military Academy at West Point in 1829, and served in various military capacities, chiefly in the Typographical Engineers, until the outbreak of the Civil War, at which time he was Quartermaster-General, with the rank of Brigadier-General. He resigned his commission April 22, 1861, and entered the Confederate service as Brigadier-General, subsequently being made General. During the earlier part of the campaign of 1862 he was in command of all the Confederate forces in Virginia, and was severely wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks, near Richmond, May 31. In Nov., 1862 he was assigned to the command of the military department of Tennessee, embracing the departments of Alabama and Mississippi. After the defeat of General Bragg, at Chattanooga, Nov. 25, 1863, he was given the command of all the Confederate forces in the south-west. In 1864 he was at the head of the forces which opposed Sherman in his famous "march to the sea." Compelled to fall back from point to point, the authorities at Richmond became dissatisfied, and on July 17 Johnston was ordered by President Davis to turn over his command to General Hood. Near the close of Feb., 1865, when Sherman had marched into South Carolina, Johnston, at the express urgency of General Lee, was directed to assume the command of the remnant of the army of Tennessee, and of all the forces in South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, to "drive back Sherman." The force which he could concentrate was greatly inferior to that of Sherman, and he was unable seriously to check his march. Having learnt that Lee had surrendered the army of Virginia to Grant, Johnston capitulated to Sherman at Durham's Station, North Carolina. From the close of the war he was engaged in business until March, 1885, when he was appointed Commissioner of Railroads by President Cleveland, which position he now holds. He published, in 1874, a "Narrative of Military Operations conducted by General Johnston during the Civil War between the States."

JOHNSTON, Richard Malcolm, American writer, was born in Hancock county, Georgia, March 8, 1822. He graduated at Mercer University, Georgia, in 1841, and, after teaching for a year, was admitted to the Bar. In 1857 he was offered a judgeship, but declined it, to accept the Chair of Literature in the University of Georgia, where he remained until the outbreak of the Civil War. Retiring to his country home near Sparta, Georgia, he there opened a boarding-school for boys, which in 1867 he removed to Baltimore, Maryland, where he has since resided. He has published, in addition to contributions to periodicals, in conjunction with Wm. Hand Browne, two volumes, a "Life of Alexander H. Stephens," 1878; and "A History of English Literature," 1879; "Dukesborough Tales," 1883; "Old Mark Langston," 1884; "Two Gray Tourists," 1885; Mr. Absalom Billingslea and other Georgia Folk," 1888; "Ogeechee Cross-Firings," 1889; "Widow Guthrie," 1890; "The Pines and their Neighbours," 1891; "Studies Literary and Social" (1st series), 1891, (2nd series), 1892; "Mr. Fortner's Marital Claims," 1892; and "Mr. Billy Downs and his Likes," 1892.

JOHNSTON, William, M.P. (known as Mr. Johnston of Ballykilbeg), was born in Downpatrick, Feb. 22, 1829, and received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated B.A. in 1852, and M.A. in 1856. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1872. He was elected M.P. for Belfast, in the Conservative interest, in 1868, was re-elected in 1874, and sat for that borough till 1878, when he was appointed Inspector of Irish Fisheries. He held that office till 1885, when he was dismissed by Lord Spencer for a speech in the General Synod of the Church of Ireland. Mr. Johnston has been since 1848 a member of the Orange Institution, and was imprisoned for two months, in 1868, for taking part in an Orange procession at Bangor, co. Down, on July 12 in the previous year. He is the author of the novels—"Nightshade," 1857; "Freshfield," and "Under which King;" 1872. In 1885 he was returned for South Belfast by a large majority, and was again elected in 1886 and 1892. In the House he is a leading representa- of the Orange Party.

JOHORE, Tunkoo Abubeker bin Ibrahim, K.C.S.I., the Maharajah of Johore (commonly called the Tumongong), born in 1835, is grandson of one of the Malay princes by whom the island of Singapore was first ceded to Sir Stamford Raffles, as political agent for the British Government, and succeeded to the sovereignty of the Johore territories on the death of his father in 1861. He is one of the most enlightened princes of Eastern Asia, and is a firm ally of the British Government. In 1866 he visited England, delegating the exercise of his powers during his absence to his brother, the Prince Unkoo Abdulrahman. The government long maintained a flotilla, in conjunction with our own, for the suppression of piracy in the narrow seas of their respective possessions; and the Tumongong's father was presented by the government of India with a sword, in acknowledgment of the services he has rendered in suppressing piracy. In 1885-86 he visited England again.

JOINVILLE (Prince de), Francois-Ferdinand-Philippe-Louis-Marie-d'Orleans, son of the late Louis-Philippe, king of the French, was born at Neuilly, Aug. 14, 1818. Soon after his father's accession to the throne in 1830, he began his naval studies, was sent to sea at the age of thirteen, received, like his brothers, the Dukes of Orleans, Nemours, and Aumale, a liberal education in the public colleges of France, and passed a brilliant examination at Brest. From that time he devoted himself entirely to his profession, and became a great favourite with the French navy. The ordinary hard work of the service was not sufficient to satisfy his ardent desire to distinguish himself. Being with the Mediterranean squadron in 1837, he disembarked and rode up to Constantine, in the hope of taking part in the storming of that stronghold, but arrived just too late. Not long afterwards he received the command of the corvette Créole, and joining the fleet of Admiral Baudin, was entrusted with the difficult mission of obtaining reparation from the Mexican Government. The Créole took a prominent part in the bombardment of St. Juan d'Ulloa, and at Vera Cruz the Prince, at the head of the storming party, was the first to enter the gates, under a heavy fire, and was only saved from certain death by the devotion of one of his officers. In 1841 he was selected by the king to command La Belle Poule frigate, charged with the service of conveying to France the body of the Emperor Napoleon, and he married, at Rio Janeiro, May 1, 1843, Donna Francisca de Braganza, sister of Don Pedro II., Emperor of Brazil. Becoming Rear-Admiral, he took part in the sittings of the Admiralty; and the French Navy is deeply indebted to him for the manner in which he helped to solve the great question of the adaptation of steam to vessels of war, in 1845. When war broke out between France and Morocco he commanded a squadron, with which he bombarded Tangiers and took Mogador. After this decisive expedition he was raised to the rank of Vice-Admiral. Being almost always on active service, the Prince de Joinville was in Algiers with his brother the Duc d'Aumale when the Revolution of Feb., 1848, overthrew the constitutional monarchy. Resolving to share the misfortune of their family, the two brothers sought refuge in England, and joined King Louis Philippe at Claremont. The Prince distinguished himself by actively aiding in the rescue of many of the passengers and crew of the ship Ocean Monarch, when burning off Ormes Head, Aug. 24, 1848. Driven suddenly from a brilliant position into the narrow limits of private life, he accepted his new situation with simplicity and dignity, and remaining at heart a French sailor, endeavoured to render himself useful to the navy of his country by his pen, if not by his sword. He had already in 1844, begun publishing in the Revue des Deux Mondes his studies on the French navy. One of his articles, published in 1865, was a comparative review of the fleets of the United States and of France, and excited much attention at the time. Happening to be in the United States about a twelvemonth after the breaking out of the Civil War, he accompanied his nephews, the Comte de Paris and the Duc de Chartres, to the camp of General McClellan, with whose staff he witnessed the principal actions of the Virginian campaign of 1862, and gave an account of the events in a well-written and impartial article published in the Revue des Deux Mondes of 1863. After the downfall of the Napoleonic dynasty, he went back to France with the other Orleanist princes; the Law of Exile having been abrogated. He and the Duc d'Aumale took their seats in the National Assembly, towards the close of 1871 after their election had been declared valid. In 1873 he assisted at the downfall of M. Thiers, but did not vote the constitution, and in 1876 begged the electors of the Haute Marne not to re-elect him. He retired into private life, but remained on the books of the navy till the members of former reigning houses in France were expelled from all public employments in 1886. His son, the Duc de Penthièvre, at that time a naval lieutenant, suffered at the same time. The Prince de Joinville has written on naval topics and has published a work on England and self-government.

JÔKAÏ, Maurus (or Mór), the most productive and genial of Hungarian novelists, was born Feb. 19, 1825, at Komorn. His father was an advocate, of good and ancient family, and a strict Calvinist, so that his son was puritanically brought up, until his twelfth year, when he was left an orphan. For two years before his father's death he had been learning German at Presburg, but he was then left to teach himself, until in 1840 he went to the High School at Pápa, and in 1842 to that of Kecskemêt, at both having the Hungarian poet Alexander Petöfi as his schoolfellow. In 1844 he went to Pesth, where he was articled to an advocate, and obtained his diploma, of which, however, he never availed himself; for, in 1846, he was already editor of the then very famous Wochenblatt. In 1848 he proclaimed the "Twelve Points of Pesth," and in the same year he married Rosa Laborfalvi, the greatest of Hungarian tragedians. In 1849 he followed the Hungarian government to Debreczin, where he edited the Abendblätter, and was present at the capitulation of Villagos, Aug. 28. To escape being made prisoner, he resolved on suicide, but was hindered by the fortunate arrival of his wife from Pesth. She had converted all her jewels into gold, and the pair found their way on foot through the Russian Army, reached a safe hiding-place in the wood of Bukk, and at last got safe to Pesth. Ten years followed, during which Hungarian literature became well nigh extinct. Almost alone this young man created a new one, and since political journalism was impracticable he betook himself to fiction. He has published in 160 vols. 25 romances of several vols. each, 320 novelettes, and six dramas, of which more than half a million copies have been sold amongst six millions of Magyars, besides translations into various languages. Amongst his most popular romances are: "The Good Old Assessors," "A Hungarian Nabob," and its continuation, entitled "Zoltán Kárpáthy," "Sad Times," "Oceania," "The White Rose," "The Accursed Family," "Transylvania's Golden Age," "The Turks in Hungary," "The Last Days of the Janissaries in 1820," "Poor Rich Men," "The World turned Upsidedown," "Madhouse Management," "The New Landlord" (translated into English by A. Patterson, London, 1865), "The Romance of the Next Century," "Black Diamonds," "Die Zonen des Geistes," "Beloved to the Scaffold," 1882, "The White Woman of Leutschan," &c. Among his dramas may be mentioned "King Koloman," 1858; "The Martyrs of Sziquetvar," and "Milton," 1878. In 1863 Jókaî established, as an organ of the Left, the Hon (Fatherland), the most widely circulated Hungarian journal in which many of his romances appeared. He has also become chief editor of the Governmental journal, the Nemzet (Nation).

JOLY, John, M.A., B.E., Sc.D., F.R.S., was born in 1857 in Hollywood, King's County, Ireland. He is the youngest son of the late Rev. J. P. Joly, M.A., Rector of Clonsast, by Julia, daughter of Frederick, Count de Lusi, President Prussian Minister in Greece. Owing to the early loss of his father his education and preservation during a delicate boyhood, devolved upon his mother, to whose influence he ascribes what enthusiasm for science he possesses. He was partly educated, also, at the Rathmines School, Dublin; entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1876, and took the degree of Bachelor of Engineering in 1883. He received the degree of M.A. (Stip. Con.) in 1887, and of Doctor of Science in 1889. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1892. He is Member of Council of the Royal Dublin Society, has occupied successively the posts of Assistant Lecturer in Engineering and in Experimental Physics in Trinity College, and is Professor of Physics in the Alexandra College, Dublin. He is author, among others, of the following papers:—"On the Direct Experimental Determination of Specific Heats of Gases at Constant Volume," Phil. Trans. R.S., vol. 182; "On the Method of Condensation in Calorimetry," Proc. Roy. Soc., vols. 45 and 47; "On the Specific Heats of Minerals," ibid. vol. 41; "Observations on the Spark Discharge over the Surface of Dielectrics," ibid. vol. 47; "On the Steam Calorimeter," ibid. vol. 47; "On the Volcanic Ash of Wrakatoa," Proc. Roy. Dublin Soc., vol. 4; "On a Method of Determining the Density of a Gas," Phil. Mag., 30, 5; "On the Uses of the Meldometer," Proc. Roy. Irish Ac., II., 3; "On the Reading of Meteorological Instruments distant from the Observatory," Proc. Roy. Dublin Soc., IV.; "On the Beryl and Iolite of Glencullen," ibid. V.; "The Abundance of Life," ibid VII.; "On the Formation of Crystals of Calcium and Magnesium Oxide," ibid. VI.; "On a Diffusion Photometer," Phil. Mag. 28, 5; "On the Thermal Expansion of Diamond," Nature, 49; "On the Bright Colours of Alpine Flowers," Proc. Roy. Dublin Soc., VIII.; "A Speculation as to a Pre-material Condition of the Universe," ibid. VII.

JONES, Lieut.-Col. Alfred Stowell, V.C., Assoc. M. Inst. C.E., was born at Liverpool, Jan. 24, 1832, and is the youngest son of the late Archdeacon J. Jones, M.A., and his wife Hannah, daughter of the late Thomas Pares, Esq., J.P., of Hopwell Hall, Derby. He was educated at the Liverpool College. While serving as a Lieutenant in the 9th Lancers he passed his examinations by the Public Works Department, India, 1857, for employment as a Civil Engineer, and graduated at the Staff College, 1860. Lieut.-Colonel Jones was present at the battle of Buddleekeserai, and at Delhi throughout the siege operations, including the assault and capture of the city, having been Deputy Assistant Quarter-Master-General to the Cavalry Brigade from Aug. 8 to Sept. 23, 1857. He served with the 9th Lancers in Greathed's pursuing column, and was present in the actions of Bolundshuhur and Allyghur, and battle of Agra, where he was dangerously wounded, having received a musket-shot wound and twenty-two sabre cuts. He was mentioned in the despatches of Sir Hope Grant on three different occasions (Brevet of Major, Victoria Cross, Medal with Clasp). He was awarded the V.C., for the following service:—"The cavalry charged the rebels and rode through them. Lieutenant Jones, of the 9th Lancers, with his squadron, captured one of the guns, killing the drivers, and, with Lieutenant-Colonel Yule's assistance turned the gun upon a village occupied by the rebels, who were quickly dislodged. This was a well-conceived act, gallantly executed." As has been stated, he was Deputy Assistant Quarter-Master-General at the Siege of Delhi, 1857, and held a similar Staff appointment at the Cape of Good Hope, 1861-67; Adjutant of the Staff College, 1869-70, when that appointment was abolished on his own evidence before a Royal Commission on Military Education, resulting in a saving of 400*l.* per annum on the Army Estimates for the last twenty years, while the duties have been carried out efficiently as Lieut.-Col. Jones had proposed. In civil matters, he has been Consulting Engineer to the Borough of Wrexham for Sewage Disposal; Corporate Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, 1876; Membre de la Société Française d'Hygiène, 1877; Fellow of the Sanitary Institute, 1880; and Member of the Association of Municipal Engineers, 1883. He is the author of "Will a Sewage Farm Pay?" 1874, 3rd edit. 1885, and many papers on Sewage Disposal in the Transactions of the Society of Arts, and of the Sanitary Institute, and in other professional publications. But Lieut.-Col. Jones is perhaps best known in connection with the Canvey Island scheme, introduced by himself and other engineers and approved and recommended by Lord Bramwell's Royal Committee on Metropolitan Sewage Discharge, in their Final Report, 1884. This scheme has been elaborated and perfected by Lieut.-Col Jones and his partner, Mr. J. Bailey Denton, Member Inst. C.E., and has been under the consideration of the London County Council since 1889. In 1879 he was awarded one of the only two 100*l.* prizes ever offered by the Royal Agricultural Society of England, for the best managed Sewage Farms.

JONES, Emily Elizabeth Constance, was born in 1848, at Langstone Court, Herefordshire, and is the eldest daughter of J. Jones, Esq., M.D., J.P., and his wife, Emily Edith, who was daughter of Thomas Oakeley, Esq., J.P., of Lydart House, Monmouth, and his wife, Elizabeth Pearce, co-heiress of Llanrumney Court, Monmouthshire, and was descended from the ancient Welsh families of Lewis of Llanthewy and Morgan of Llanrumney. Miss Jones was educated at Miss Robinson's, Alstone Court, Cheltenham, and at Girton College, Cambridge, and took a First Class in the Moral Sciences Tripos in 1880 (was bracketed with the Senior), and appointed Resident Lecturer in Moral Science at Girton College in 1884, and Librarian in 1889. Miss Jones was joint translator with Miss Elizabeth Hamilton, of "Lotze's Micro-cosmus," and editor of the translation, which was published in 1885, and reached a 3rd edition in 1888. Miss Jones is also the author of "Elements of Logic as a Science of Propositions," published in 1890.

JONES, Henry Arthur, was born on September 20, 1851, at Grandborough, in Buckinghamshire. After receiving the middle-class education of that period at the Winslow School, he was sent into the world at thirteen to shift for himself. He was engaged in commercial pursuits for some years, devoting all his leisure to the study of literature and to writing, and it was not until December 11, 1878, that his first play, "Only Round the Corner," was produced by Mr. Rousby at the Exeter Theatre. In the summer of 1879 he made his first appearance before a London audience as a dramatic author. This was in the comedietta "A Clerical Error," which was accepted by Mr. Wilson Barrett and produced by him at the Court Theatre. His next essay in dramatic writing was a play entitled "His Wife," an adaptation of Mark Hope's "Prodigal Daughter," which was written for and produced by Miss Bateman at Sadler's Wells Theatre, and was afterwards played in the provinces. In November, 1882, "The Silver King" was produced by Mr. Wilson Barrett at the Princess's Theatre. This play ran for over a year, and has been since played without intermission in America, Australia, and the English provinces. In 1884 Mr. Henry Arthur Jones wrote the first of the series of plays of modern English life with which he has since become so closely identified. This play, "Saints and Sinners," was produced at the Vaudeville on September 25 of that year. The propriety of dealing with religious matters on the stage provoked a considerable amount of discussion, but the play ran for over 200 nights. After the production of "Saints and Sinners" Mr. Jones reverted for a time to melodrama, and wrote, amongst other plays, "Hoodman Blind," "The Noble Vagabond," "The Lord Harry," "Heart of Hearts," "Hard Hit," &c. But it was not until 1889 that he was able to devote himself to the class of work that was really congenial to his inclination. On August 27, 1889, "The Middleman" was produced at the Shaftesbury Theatre with Mr. Willard in the leading part. This achieved an instantaneous success, and ran for over two hundred nights, and was followed on May 21, 1890, by "Judah" a psychological play which achieved equal popularity. Both these plays have been translated and produced in Germany, Austria, Holland, Belgium and Denmark. On January 15, 1891, "The Dancing Girl" was produced at the Haymarket Theatre, with Mr. Tree in the leading part. This ran for over a year. In the autumn of 1891 Mr. Jones went into theatrical management, and his new comedy "The Crusaders" was pro duced by him at the Avenue Theatre, running for one hundred nights. "The Bauble Shop" was produced by Mr. Chas. Wyndham at the Criterion Theatre on January 26, 1893, and in the following autumn "The Tempter," a four-act tragedy, was produced by Mr. Tree at the Haymarket Theatre. Nearly all of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's plays have been produced in America. Mr. Jones's most recent play (1894) is "The Case of Rebellious Susan," which has achieved a great success with Mr. Wyndham and Miss Mary Moore in the leading parts.

JONES, Morris Charles, F.S.A., was born in Montgomeryshire, May 9, 1819, and educated at Bruce Castle School, Tottenham. He is the author of numerous genealogical and antiquarian articles and privately-printed pamphlets, and of "The Abbey of Valle Crucis: its Origin and Foundation Charter," 1866; and "The Feudal Barons of Powys," 1868. He is the founder and chief supporter of the Powysland Club, an archæological society for Montgomeryshire, and also of the Powysland Museum and Library connected therewith. He has devoted much time to the illustration of the archæology and history of his native country, and since 1867 has been the editor of "The Montgomeryshire Collections," issued by the Powysland Club, which contain elaborate and useful contributions to local topography and history, and afford complete and extensive materials for the history of the county of Montgomery. In 1876 his archæological services were acknowledged by a testimonial raised by public subscriptions, which were devoted chiefly to the purchase of a fine life-size bronze group, representing a scene in Welsh history, which, at his request, was placed in the Powysland Museum.

JONES, Thomas Rupert, F.R.S., F.G.S., late Professor of Geology at the Staff College, Sandhurst, Naturalist, Geologist, Palæontologist, and Antiquary, was born Oct. 1, 1819, at No. 6, Wood Street, Cheapside, London, and is the son of John Jones, silk merchant and silk-throwster, of London and Taunton, (descendant of the old Powys family of North Wales) and Rhoda Jones (née Burberry) of Coventry. He was educated at Foster's, at Taunton, and the Rev. John Allen's, at Ilminster; and was apprenticed to a surgeon (Hugh Norris), at Taunton, Somerset, in 1835; at his death he finished apprenticeship with Dr. Joseph Bunny, of Newbury, Berks, in 1842. After some years of desultory medical and scientific education, he was, in 1850, appointed Assistant-Secretary to the Geological Society of London; Lecturer on Geology at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, in 1858, and Professor, in 1862, and subsequently at the Staff College. He is the author of "Monograph of the Cretaceous Entomostraca," in 1849; and of "The Tertiary Entomostraca in England," in 1856; "Monograph of the Fossil Estheriæ," 1862; article "Tunicata," in Todd's "Cyclopædia of Anatomy," 1850; and of articles in Cassell's "Natural History," "Science for All," and "Encyclopædic Dictionary," also of numerous articles and memoirs on Geology, Fossils, and Pre-historic Man, and especially on recent and fossil Foraminifera and Entomostraca, in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, the Natural History Review, Annals of Natural History, the Geologist, the Geological Magazine, "Proceedings of the Geologists' Association," and many other periodicals as well foreign as British. Joint-author of the "Monograph of the Arctic and North-Atlantic Foraminifera," 1865; the "Foraminifera of the Abrohlos Bank," 1888; "Foraminifera of the Crag," 1866; "Nomenclature of the Foraminifera," XV. Parts, 1859-72; of the "Micrographical Dictionary," 1874 and 1882; "Monograph of the Carboniferous Cypridinadæ," 1874 and 1884; "Palæozoic Phyllopoda," 1888; "Geology," Part I. Heads of Lectures, &c., 1870; and of numerous papers on Carboniferous and other Entomostraca. Mr. Jones was the editor of the "Arctic Manual," 1875; and the editor and joint-author of the "Reliquiæ Aquitanicæ," and of the second edition of "Dixon's Geology of Sussex," 1878. He was formerly Examiner to the London University, and to the Victoria (Manchester) University; and to the New Zealand University; also Examiner to the College of Preceptors; Assistant-Examiner to the Civil Service Commission, and to the Department of Science and Art. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, and of the Geological Society of London; Honorary Member of numerous scientific societies, British and Foreign, and is Lyell Medalist of the Geological Society, 1890.

JONES, The Right Rev. William Basil, D.D., Bishop of St. David's, the eldest son of the late William Tilsey Jones, Esq., of Gwynfryn, Cardiganshire, by Jane, daughter of the late Henry Tickell, Esq., of Leytonstone, Essex, was born in 1822. He was educated at Shrewsbury School under Dr. Butler and Dr. Kennedy, and was thence elected, in 1840, to a Scholarship at Trinity College, Oxford, where he obtained the Ireland University Scholarship in 1842, and took his B.A. degree with second-class honours in classics in 1844. Subsequently he held a Michel Fellowship at Queen's College, and a Fellowship at University College. He became tutor of the latter college in 1854, and held various University offices. He became a Prebendary of St. David's in 1859; incumbent of Haxby, Yorkshire; a Prebendary of York in 1863; Vicar of Bishopthorpe in 1865; Archdeacon of York in 1867; Chancellor of the Church of York in 1871; and Canon Residentiary of York in 1873. For many years he was Examining Chaplain to the Archbishop of York. The Queen nominated him to the bishopric of St. David's when the See was vacated by the resignation of Dr. Thirlwall, and he was accordingly consecrated in Westminster Abbey, Aug. 24, 1874. He has written "Vestiges of Gael in Gwynedd," 1851; "The History and Antiquities of St. David's," 1856; jointly with Mr. E. A. Freeman, "Notes on the Œdipus Tyrannus of Sophocles," 1862; "The New Testament, illustrated and annotated, with a plain commentary for private and family reading," 1864; jointly with Archdeacon Churton; "The Peace of God: Sermons on the Reconciliation of God and Man," 1869; various pamphlets and single sermons, and several papers and reviews in literary and antiquarian periodicals. The Bishop married (1st), in 1856, Frances Charlotte, younger daughter of the late Rev. Samuel Holworthy, rector of Croxall, Derbyshire, who died in 1881; and (2nd), in 1886, Anne Loxdale, daughter of George Henry Loxdale, Esq., of Aigburth, Liverpool, by whom he has issue.

JOY, George W., painter, was born at Dublin in 1844, and is the son of W. Bruce Joy, M.D. He received his education at Harrow, and afterwards studied art as a Royal Academy student and in Paris. His principal works, exhibited at the Royal Academy, are "Domenica," his first picture, 1871; "Joan of Arc," "Nelson's first Farewell," "Wellington at Angiers," "Danaids," "Truth," "The King's Drum shall never be beaten for Rebels;" and in 1894 the "Death of General Gordon." He has won medals at the Paris Salon and at the Chicago World's Fair. Mr. George Joy is well known as a volunteer, and has shot several times in the Irish Volunteer team at Wimbledon.

JOYNT, Miss Maud, M.A., is the second daughter of Deputy Surgeon-General Christopher Joynt, Indian A.M.D., and entered Alexandra College, Dublin, in 1881. In 1883, at the intermediate examinations, she gained an exhibition in the middle grade and three gold Medals; at the same examinations in 1884 she gained highest marks of all Ireland, two gold and three silver Medals. She matriculated at the Royal University in 1886, taking first honours in Latin, first place and first honours in German, first place and second honours in English, first honours in experimental physics, and later in the same year the scholarship of modern literature. She obtained first-class exhibitions in 1887-88; gained in the latter year the Henry Hutchinson Stewart scholarship (Mod. Literature), a very distinguished honour. Her B.A. was obtained in 1889, with first exhibition honours in modern literature, and the degree of M.A. was conferred on her on Oct. 29, 1890.

JUDD, Professor John W., F.R.S., geologist, was born at Portsmouth, Feb. 18, 1840; but when he was only eight years of age his family removed to the neighbourhood of London. During his earlier years he was engaged in teaching, first in London and afterwards in Lincolnshire, but his taste for science, and especially for geological studies, led him, in 1863, to become a student in the Royal School of Mines. In the following year he accepted the post of Analytical Chemist in one of the great iron and steel works at Sheffield, but while there met with a railway accident that interrupted his work and studies for a considerable period. Upon his recovery, he determined to devote himself entirely to his favourite studies, and commenced a geological survey of the county of Lincolnshire, the results of his investigations being published in a number of memoirs on the Neocomian formation, which he showed to be admirably developed in that and the adjoining counties. In 1867 he was invited to join the staff of the Geological Survey and to continue his work in connection with that body. During a period of four years he was engaged in working out the relations between the Jurassic rocks of the Midland district as compared with those of the Northern and Southern areas in England, and his book on the Geology of Rutland, &c., deals with this very important question. In 1871 he was induced by his friend the late Matthew Arnold, to act with him for a time as a School Inspector, and to assist in the work of preparing the way for the operation of the Education Act of 1870 in the north-eastern suburbs of London. After a year of this work, however, he returned to his geological studies, and commenced the execution of a long-cherished project, that of unravelling the complexities of the whole of the Secondary Strata of the Scottish Highlands. Not only was he able to show what are the true relations of the great series of Triassic and Jurassic rocks in that area, but he also discovered and studied very interesting deposits of Carboniferous and Cretaceous age, the existence of which in the district had been previously overlooked. These studies led him to the investigations of the relics of the great Tertiary Volcanoes of the Western Isles of Scotland; and during several years he was engaged in travelling in various volcanic regions, and making comparisons between these and the districts in the British Isles in which igneous action was rife during past geological times, a long series of memoirs being published as the result of these researches. In 1877 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in the same year, upon the retirement of Sir Andrew Ramsay, became Professor of Geology in the Royal School of Mines; in 1881 he accepted the same position in the Royal College of Science. From 1877 to 1885 Professor Judd was Secretary to the Geological Society, and during the years 1886 and 1887 held the office of President of that Society. In 1891 the Geological Society awarded Professor Judd the highest honour in their gift—the Wollaston Medal.

K.

KALNOKY, Count Gustav Siegmund, is descended from the Moravian branch of an old Bohemian family, and was born at Lettowitz, in Moravia, in 1832. He entered the diplomatic service in 1850; and, from 1860 to 1870, he was Councillor of Legation at the Austrian Embassy in London. In 1874 he was Minister at Copenhagen; in 1880 he was sent as Ambassador to St. Petersburg; and, in 1881, he was appointed Austro-Hungarian Minister of Foreign Affairs, a post which he ably fills at the present time. He is a strong supporter of the Triple Alliance, and of Austrian influence in Bulgaria. He yearly explains the Austrian anti-Russian policy to the Delegations of the Austrian and Hungarian Parliaments, and his action is yearly approved by them. At the close of 1891 Count Kalnoky, who is a devout Roman Catholic, declared that the "Roman question" of the Papacy was still open, and lacked solution. This statement caused some excitement in Italy. He also declared against the policy of the Vatican when of late years the Pope seemed to be too friendly to Russia, and therefore unfriendly to Austria. The Star of the Black Eagle in briliants was conferred on Count Kalnoky by the late Emperor William in 1888; and, in the same year, the Order of the Annunciade was bestowed upon him by the King of Italy.

KAWASÉ, Viscount Masataka, late Japanese Minister at the Court of St. James's, was born in 1839, and belongs to a family who in former times were vassals of the Prince of Choshiu, in Japan. During the disturbed period preceding the restoration of the Mikado, Kawasé experienced many vicissitudes, but his first important appearance was in command of a force raised to defend the territory of Choshiu from the army of the Shogun. The latter was completely defeated, and terms of peace were arranged. Kawasé then visited Europe, and resided for some time in England, being one of the first Japanese who devoted themselves to the study of Western institutions with the view of engrafting such as appeared suitable on those of their own country. On his return to Japan he was appointed Vice-Minister of Public Works by the present Emperor, and subsequently Vice-Chamberlain of the Imperial Household. In 1874 he was sent to Italy to represent Japan. He then successively filled the position of Senator and Vice-Minister of Justice, and in 1884 was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of St. James's, a post which he filled until the beginning of 1894, when he was succeeded by Viscount Aoki. He was created Viscount in 1887, and is the holder of numerous decorations.

KAY, The Hon. Sir Edward Ebenezer, Lord Justice of Appeal, was born July 2, 1822, at Meadowcroft, near Rochdale, being a son of Robert Kay, Esq., and Hannah his wife. He is a brother of the late Sir James Kay-Shuttleworth, Bart., Secretary of the Committee of Council on Education, and of the late Joseph Kay, Esq., Q.C., Judge of the Manchester and Salford Palatine Court. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1844, and M.A. in 1847. Having resolved to adopt the legal profession, he read in the chambers of the late George Lake Russell, Esq., and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Trinity term, 1847. He became authorized reporter in the Court of Lord Hatherley, then Vice-Chancellor Wood, and published "Kay's Reports" and a part of "Kay and Johnson's Reports." He obtained the honour of a silk gown in 1866, and practised as a Queen's Counsel in the Court presided over successively by Vice-Chancellor Wood, Vice-Chancellor Giffard, Vice-Chancellor James, and Vice-Chancellor Bacon. In April, 1878, he relinquished the leadership of that Court, and confined his practice thenceforward to the House of Lords and special business. He was appointed a Judge of the Supreme Court, March 30, 1881, on the resignation of Vice-Chancellor (afterwards Sir Richard) Malins, and shortly afterwards he was knighted by the Queen at Windsor. He succeeded Sir H. Cotton as a Lord Justice of Appeal, Nov. 11, 1890. Sir E. E. Kay is a magistrate for Norfolk, in which county he owns the estate of Thorpe Abbotts, near Scole. He married, in 1850, Miss Mary Valence French, daughter of the late Rev. William French, D.D., Master of Jesus College, Cambridge, and Canon of Ely; and was left a widower in 1889.

KAYSERLING, M., born in Hanover (Germany), June 17, 1829, was educated there and at the University of Berlin. He was appointed by the Government of Aargau, in 1861, Rabbi of the Swiss Jews, and in Sept., 1870, Rabbi and Preacher of the Jewish Community in Pesth, Hungary. In 1861 he married a daughter of the celebrated Dr. Ludwig Philippson. Dr. Kayserling is the author of "Sephardim: Romanische Poesien der Juden in Spanien," Leipzig, 1859; "Ein Feiertag in Madrid, zur Geschichte der Spanische Portugiesischen Juden;" "Geschichte der Juden in Spanien und Portugal"; 1859-61; "Menassie Ben Israel, sein Leben und Werken," Berlin, 1867; "Geschichte der Juden in England," Berlin, 1861; "Der Dichter Ephraim Kuh, ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Deutschen Literatur," Berlin, 1867; "Moses Mendelssohn, sein Leben und Werken," Leipzig, 1862; "Zum Siegesfeste, Dankpredigt und Danklieder von M. Mendelssohn," Berlin, 1866; "Die Rituale Schlachtfrage, oder Ist Schächten Thierquälerei?" Aarau, 1867; "Schlachten Bibliothek Jüdischer Kanzelredner," Berlin, 1870, 1871. He also published a volume of Sketches of Distinguished Jewish Women; a biographical work on Jewish diplomatists and statesmen; several series of historical and literary articles in the Deutsche Museum of Prutz, Frankel's Monatsschrift, Jahrbuch für Israeliten in Wien, Steinschneider's Hebr. Bibliographie; and some sermons. Among his most recent works we may mention "Biblioteca Española-Portugueza-Judaica," 1890; "The First Jew in America," and "Gedenkblätter," a book on prominent Jews of the nineteenth century, 1892.

KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH, Right Hon. Sir Ughtred James, Bart., M.P., P.C., is the eldest son (born 1844) of the late Sir James Phillips Kay-Shuttleworth, Bart., D.C.L. (for many years Secretary of the Committee of Council on Education), by Janet, his wife, only child and heiress of R. Shuttleworth, Esq., of Gawthorpe Hall, Lancashire. Sir Ughtred was educated at Harrow, at home, and at the London University, and is author of the "First Principles of Modern Chemistry" (the second edition of which was published in 1870). At the invitation of the Liberal party in North-East Lancashire, he contested that division in 1868, and was defeated by a majority of 131. In October, 1869, he became member for Hastings. His maiden speech in parliament was delivered on the second reading of the Elementary Education Bill in 1870. In 1871 he called the attention of the House to the subject of the London water supply. In 1874 he was re-elected member for Hastings, and brought before the House the state of the dwellings of working people in London, eliciting the promise of Mr. Secretary Cross, which resulted, in 1875, in the passing of the Artizans' Dwellings Act. In 1878 he moved resolutions on the Government of London. At the next general election (1880) he lost his seat for Hastings, and having failed at a by-election in 1881, at Coventry, he was out of the House of Commons till he was returned by a majority of 2,359, in 1885, for the Clitheroe Division of North-East Lancashire. During the time he was not in the House he served for two years on the London School Board. He was also a member of the Royal Commission on Reformatory and Industrial Schools. At the General Election of 1886, Sir U. Kay-Shuttleworth was returned unopposed for North-East Lancashire, as a Gladstonian Liberal. He became Under-Secretary for India when Mr. Gladstone's third administration was formed in 1886, and subsequently was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and a Privy Councillor, again returned unopposed by his constituency. He has been Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons, and is Vice-President of University College, London. In 1892, at the general election, he was again returned for the Clitheroe Division of Lancashire, and in August was appointed Secretary to the Admiralty. He married, in 1871, Blanche Marion, youngest daughrer of Sir Woodbine Parish, K.C.H.

KEANE, Right Rev. John Joseph, American Roman Catholic Prelate, was born at Ballyshannon, county Donegal, Ireland, Sept. 12, 1839. He went with his family to America in 1846, and was educated at St. Charles's College, and at St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, and in 1866 was ordained to the priesthood. He was assistant pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Washington, until 1878, when he was consecrated Bishop of Richmond, Virginia. In 1887 he was appointed rector of the Catholic University of America, which was formally opened at Washington in 1889. In that year he received the degree of D.D. from Laval University, Quebec, and in 1893 that of LL.D. from Harvard University. At the request of the Catholic Archbishops of the United States, he organised and superintended the representation of the Catholic Church in the World's Parliament of Religions held during the Columbian Exposition in Chicago, 1893.

KEBBEL, Thomas Edward, M.A., youngest son of the late Rev. Henry Kebbel, vicar of Wistow and Kilby, in the county of Leicester, was born Nov. 23, 1828, and was educated at Oxford. He was called to the Bar in 1862. Mr. Kebbel's first introduction to journalism was in 1855, when he was invited to join the staff of the Press newspaper, then newly established by the late Lord Derby and Mr. Disraeli as the weekly organ of the Tory party. In 1867, when the Day newspaper was founded, representing the views of the "Cave," Mr. Kebbel was engaged as the leading political writer in support of the Conservative Reform Bill. Since that time Mr. Kebbel has been a contributor to the principal publications of the day—the Quarterly, Fortnightly, Nineteenth Century, and National Reviews, Blackwood's, the Cornhill, Fraser, and Macmillan's Magazines, and, under Mr. Delane, he was a frequent contributor to the literary columns of the Times. In 1864 he published "Essays on History and Politics;" in 1881, on the death of Lord Beaconsfield, he was employed to edit a collection of his speeches published in two volumes by Messrs. Longman. In 1886 he published "Tory Administrations from the Accession of Mr. Pitt to Power in 1783 to the death of Lord Beaconsfield in 1881." In 1887 he brought out "The Agricultural Labourer," an account of the English peasantry, pronounced by the Edinburgh Review to be the best of its kind. A new edition of this work came out in 1893. And in 1888 he contributed a life of the poet Crabbe to the series of "Eminent Writers." He is also the author of lives of Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Derby in the "Statesmen Series," and has recently published "The Old and the New English Country Life," 1891, and "Sport and Nature," 1893."

KEELEY, Mrs., widow of Mr. Robert Keeley, the popular comedian (who died in 1869), was born at Ipswich in 1806, acquired reputation as an actress as Miss Goward, and made her first appearance in London at the Lyceum in 1825, as Rosina, in the opera of that name, and Little Pickle. Mrs. Keeley acquired great fame by her rendering of the characters of Smike, Mrs. Peerybingle, and Clemency Newcome, in stage adaptations of Mr. Dickens's novels, "Nicholas Nickleby," "The Cricket on the Hearth," and "The Battle of Life." She has now for many years lived in retirement in her London home, though on occasion she has appeared at dramatic gatherings where she has been honoured as the oldest living representative of the drama. Her husband, also a well-known comedian in his time, died many years ago, as did her daughter, "Polly" Keeley, who at one time acted constantly with her parents, the group being famous as "the Keeleys."

KEKEWICH, Sir Arthur, Q.C., late Standing Council to the Bank of England, was born in 1832; called to the Bar in 1858; made Q.C. in 1877; Bencher of his Inn in 1881; and was raised to the Judicial Bench (Chancery Division) in 1886.

KELVIN, Lord (lately Professor Sir William Thomson), President of the Royal Society, F.R.S., L. & E., LL.D., D.C.L., was born in Belfast in June, 1824. His father, the late James Thomson, LL.D., was lecturer on mathematics at the Royal Academical Institute in Belfast, but on his appointment to the professorship of that science in the University of Glasgow, he removed thither with his family. At the early age of eleven William entered the College, and shortly after completing his course at Glasgow he removed to Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1845 as second Wrangler, being immediately afterwards elected to a Fellowship. In 1846 he was made Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Glasgow, and still occupies that post. In the same year he accepted the editorship of the Cambridge and Dublin Mathematical Journal. To this magazine, which he continued to edit for about seven years, he contributed valuable additions to the mathematical theory of electricity, and among the principal of these was his paper on the "Distribution of Electricity on Spherical Conductors," published in 1848. In 1855 Professor Thomson delivered the Bakerian Lecture. It was entitled "Electrodynamic Properties of Metals," and contained a series of experimental investigations of the highest value. Among the most important of his contributions to the advancement of electrical science are the construction of several beautiful instruments, and their application to the study of atmospheric electricity. His quadrant and portable electrometers, owing to their diversities of application and extreme delicacy and accuracy, have been of the greatest service; a modification of the former has been very successfully used at the Kew Observatory, to indicate and self-register changes in the electric state of the atmosphere. But it is in connection with submarine telegraphy that Sir W. Thomson's labours in electrical science are best known, he being the inventor of the Mirror Galvanometer and the Siphon-Recorder, which, owing to their extreme delicacy, can be worked by very low battery power, a circumstance that tends greatly to the preservation of the cables. To the science of magnetism also Sir W. Thomson has made important additions. In the investigation of the nature of heat, his extraordinary power of mathematical insight is seen to great advantage; and many communications from his pen on the subject of Vortex Motion have appeared in the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. Amongst his many valuable scientific papers we may mention those on "Thermal Effects of Fluids in Motion; the "Mathematical Theory of Elasticity;" the "Rigidity of the Earth;" the "Determination of a Ship's place at Sea from Observation of Altitudes;" and on "Approach caused by Vibration." On the successful completion of the Atlantic Cable in 1866 he received the honour of knighthood, and was presented with the freedom of the city of Glasgow. The degree of LL.D. was conferred on him successively by the Universities of Dublin, Cambridge, and Edinburgh, and that of D.C.L. by Oxford. He is a Fellow of both the London and Edinburgh Royal Societies, from the former of which he received the Royal Medal, and from the latter the Keith Prize. He delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge in 1866; was President of the British Association at its meeting in Edinburgh in 1871; and was elected President of the Geological Society of Glasgow for the year 1872. On Oct, 29, 1872, he was elected a Fellow of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, under the provisions of the College statutes, empowering the Master and Fellows to elect men eminent for science or learning. He has also received various decorations from abroad. He is Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, Commander of the Order of Leopold, and has received the German Ordre pour le Merite. In Dec. 1877, he was elected by the Paris Academy of Sciences to fill the place of the late Von Baer as Foreign Associate. He was President of the Section of Mathematical and Physical Science at the meeting of the British Association, held at York in Sept. 1881, when he delivered a remarkable address on the sources of energy in nature available to man for the production of mechanical effect. Sir W. Thomson was appointed one of the British Commissioners for the Electrical Exhibition held in Vienna in Aug. 1883. Three volumes of "Mathematical and Physical Papers" by him, "collected from different scientific periodicals," were published at Cambridge in 1882, 1884, and 1890. He has been President of the Mathematical and Physical Section of the British Association five times, viz., Belfast, 1852; Dundee, 1867; Glasgow, 1876; York, 1881; Montreal, 1884. He is the inventor of a very extensively used improved form of the Mariner's Compass, in which complete and perfect correction against disturbance by the ship's magnetism, temporary and permanent, is provided; and of a Sounding Machine, by means of which soundings are taken in depths up to 100 fathoms, without even slackening the speed of the ship. Sir William Thomson has also of late years devoted much attention to the subject of electric lighting, and is the inventor of a great variety of instruments designed for measuring the electric currents and potentials used in that industry. Sir William Thomson succeeded Sir George Gabriel Stokes, Bart., as President of the Royal Society, in 1890, and was created first Lord Kelvin in 1892.

KELLOGG, Clara Louise, American vocalist, was born at Sumterville, South Carolina, July, 1842. In 1843 her parents returned with her to Connecticut, where they remained until 1856, when they went to New York. At an early age she gave evidence of musical talent, and after some years of careful study made her first appearance at the Academy of Music in New York in 1861. After four more years of study, she appeared as Marguerite in Gounod's "Faust," in the season of 1864-5. Her success was not less complete, within the next two years, in "Crispino," as "Linda di Chamounix," in the "Barber of Seville," "La Sonnambula," "Lucia di Lammermoor," and other operas. On Nov. 2, 1867, she made a successful debut in London as Marguerite in "Faust." She returned to the United States in 1868. In 1872 she again visited England, appearing at the Drury Lane Opera. In the winter of 1873-4 she organised an English Opera Company, continuing until 1876. Returning to Europe once more in 1879, she sung at Her Majesty's, in London, and at the Imperial Opera Houses of Vienna and St. Petersburg, and has since that time appeared in opera and concerts in the principal cities of the United States. She was married a few years ago to Mr. Strakosch.

KELLY, Rev. Charles Henry, President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, 1889, was born at Salford, Manchester, Nov. 25, 1833, and educated at the School of the Society of Friends, and the Wesleyan College, Didsbury. He spent the first eleven years of his ministry as Chaplain to Methodist troops; and was actively engaged during that time in securing the recognition of the religious rights of Nonconformists in the British Army and Navy. For fourteen years he was at the head of the Wesleyan Sunday School Department as the Connexional Secretary: and he was appointed to the superintendence of the great Book Concern of Methodism in 1889. Mr. Kelly was the Delegate from the British Conference to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church which met in New York in 1888.

KELLY, The Right Rev. James Buller Knill, Bishop of Moray, Ross, and Caithness, N.B., was born in 1832, and educated at Clare College, Cambridge, where he took his B.A. in 1854, M.A. in 1858, and D.D. in 1867. He was consecrated Coadjutor Bishop of Newfoundland in 1867, and succeeded as Bishop of that See in 1876. He was appointed Bishop-Commissary to the Bishop (Jacobson) of Chester in 1879; Archdeacon of Macclesfield in 1880; Bishop-Commissary to Bishop (Moberly) of Salisbury in 1884; and was elected Bishop-Coadjutor of Moray, Ross, and Caithness in 1885; and succeeded to that See in 1886.

KEMBALL, General Sir Arnold Burrowes, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., born in 1820, was educated for his profession at Addiscombe, and received his first commission as second lieutenant in the Bombay Artillery, Dec. 11, 1837. His battery formed part of the Army of the Indus under Lord Keane, and with it he served in the first campaign in Afghanistan, 1838-9, including the siege and storming of Ghuznee and subsequent occupation of Cabul, for which he received the Medal. His real field of utility, however, was determined by his appointment as Assistant Political Resident in the Persian Gulf in 1842, where he was employed in various political duties for 28 years, and acquired a special and valuable experience of Turkish and Persian affairs, and mastery of the Turkish, Persian, and Arabic languages. He was made Political Resident in the Persian Gulf in 1852, and Consul General at Bagdad and Political Agent in Turkish Arabia in 1855, after having acted in both capacities at various times during the absences of previous incumbents. He took part in the Persian Expedition in 1857, under Sir James Outram, and was present at the capture of Mohumrah and subsequent operations in the field. He was specially mentioned several times in the despatches of both the General and the Commodore commanding the land and sea forces, for his valuable assistance, advice, and gallantry. Lord Canning, in his notification of June 18, 1857, publicly thanked him for his zealous services, "afforded on every occasion of difficulty and danger, and especially in the brilliant expedition against Ahwas." For his services in the Persian War, Captain Kemball was rewarded with the Medal and Clasp, a Brevet Majority, and the C.B. In 1866 he was nominated to the second class of the Star of India, and in 1874 was promoted to General Officer's rank. He was in attendance upon the Shah of Persia during His Majesty's first visit to England in 1873; was Her Majesty's Commissioner for demarcating the frontier of Turkey in Asia between the Turks and Persians when these countries demanded the mediation of England and Russia in 1875; Military attaché at Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople and to Head Quarters of the Turkish Army during the Servian Campaign in 1876; and British Commissioner in Armenia during the Turco-Russian War. He is a J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant for Sutherland.

KEMPE, Alfred Bray, M.A., F.R.S., is the third son of the Rev. John Edward Kempe, Rector of St. James, Piccadilly. He was born on July 6, 1849, at Kensington, was educated at St. Paul's School and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was a Scholar. He graduated B.A. in 1872 as 22nd wrangler, was called to the Bar in 1873 at the Inner Temple, and joined the Western Circuit. In 1881 he was appointed by Mr. Gladstone to be the Secretary of the Royal Commission on the Ecclesiastical Courts which sat during the years 1881-3. In January, 1887, he was appointed Chancellor of the diocese of Newcastle, in October of the same year Chancellor of the diocese of Southwell, and in 1891 Chancellor of the diocese of St. Albans. He was the junior counsel for the Bishop of Lincoln in the historical trial of that prelate before the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1889-90. Mr. Kempe is the author of a number of papers on mathematical subjects, the value of which has been recognised by his election to a Fellowship of the Royal Society in 1881. The earlier of these papers were mainly about "linkages;" the most important being one published in the Proceedings of the Royal Society for 1875 "on a general method of producing exact rectilinear motion by linkwork," and a little book "how to draw a straight line," published in 1877. Later papers related to some interesting theorems as to the movement of a plane (Nature, vol. xviii. p. 149), the colouring of maps (id. vol. xxi. p. 399); the graphical representation of invariants and covariants (Pro. Lon. Math. Soc., vol. xvii. p. 108, and vol. xxiv. p. 97); the connection between logic and geometry (id. vol. xxi. p. 147) and knots (Pro. Roy. Soc. Edinburgh, 1886). In 1886 Mr. Kempe communicated to the Royal Society an important paper on the nature of the subject matter of exact thought, entitled "A Memoir on the Theory of Mathematical Form," which was printed in the "Philosophical Transactions" for that year. He has taken an active part in the management of the London Mathematical Society, of which body he was for some years the Treasurer, and is now (1894) the President.

KEMPE, The Rev. John Edward, M.A., son of A. J. Kempe, Esq., F.S.A., a distinguished antiquary was born March 9, 1810, educated at St. Paul's School and Clare College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1833 as a senior optime, and first-class in classics; and M.A. in 1837. He was appointed Curate of Tavistock, Devon, in 1833, and elected a Fellow of his college in 1841. He became Curate of Barnet, Herts, in 1844; Incumbent of St. John's, St. Pancras, on the presentation of Bishop Blomfield, in 1846; of St. Barnabas, Kensington, in 1848; and Rector of St. James's, Piccadilly, on the presentation of Lord Aberdeen, as Premier, 1853. In 1861 he was appointed by Bishop Tait to the Prebendal Stall of Chamberlainewood, in St. Paul's; in 1864 he became one of Her Majesty's Chaplains; and in 1868 he was elected one of the Proctors in Convocation for London, being re-elected in 1874. In 1880 he retired from Convocation. He is a rural Dean of the diocese, and is considered to have rendered great services to the Anglican Church in general, and especially to its cause in London by having established, and conducted as President for many years, monthly conferences, at which clergy and laity meet for the discussion of Church questions. Mr. Kempe has published lectures on the Book of Job, and on Elijah; occasional sermons and prefaces to lectures delivered in St. James's Church on "The Use and Abuse of the World," "Companions for the Devout Life," and "Classic Preachers of the English Church." Mr. Kempe is also the founder of the St. James's diocesan Home for Female Penitents; and he was one of Bishop Tait's principal counsellors and coadjutors in the origination and earlier working of the Bishop of London's Fund. In 1886 Mr. Kempe was offered the Bishopric of Calcutta by Lord Cranbourne (now Marquis of Salisbury), who was then Indian Minister, but declined it for family reasons.

KENDAL, Mrs. William Hunter. See GRIMSTON, MRS. WILLIAM HUNTER.

KENNAN, George, American traveller, was born at Norwalk, Ohio, Feb. 16, 1845. He received an academic education, completing his studies at the Columbus (Ohio) High School, while working as a night telegraph operator. Having risen to be assistant Chief Operator at Cincinnati, he was sent, in Dec. 1864, by the Russo-American Telegraph Company to superintend the location and construction of lines in Siberia, and spent three years in travelling through the north-eastern part of that country on this mission. He returned to the United States in 1868, and two years later published an account of his arctic experience in a volume entitled "Tent Life in Siberia." In 1870 he went again to Russia and spent some months in an exploration of Daghestan and the mountains of the eastern Caucasus, returning to America in 1871 by way of the Black Sea, Constantinople, and the Danube. In 1885-86 he made a third journey to the Russian empire, this time for the especial purpose of investigating the Siberian exile system. The results of his observations on this trip, during which he travelled 15,000 miles in northern Russia and Siberia, were published in a series of twenty-eight articles in the Century Magazine, between the years 1887 and 1890, and were republished in book form in 1891, under the title "Siberia and the Exile System." This work attracted wide attention, and was translated into most of the European languages, including Russian, Polish, Bohemian, Bulgarian, German, Swedish, and Dutch.

KENNEDY, Hon. Sir William Rann, K.B., eldest son of the Rev. W. J. Kennedy, Vicar of Barnwood, was born in 1846, and received his education at Eton and at King's College, Cambridge, of which he was subsequently a Fellow, and at Pembroke College in the same University. In 1863 he was Senior Classic. After leaving Cambridge he entered at Lincoln's Inn, was called to the Bar in 1871, and joined the Northern Circuit. He enjoyed a large practice at the bar, and in 1885 was made a Q.C. He was Private Secretary to the President of the Poor Law Board from 1870 to 1871, and a Member of the Bar Committee from 1883 to 1892. In the latter year he was appointed a Judge of the High Court (Queen's Bench Division), and was made a K.B. He unsuccessfully contested St. Helen's in the Gladstonian interest at the July general election. In 1874 he married the daughter of a well-known Royal Academician.

KENNEDY, Professor Alexander Blackie William, Vice-President of the Inst. of Mechanical Engineers, F.R.S., &c., born March 17, 1847, at Stepney, is the son of Rev. J. Kennedy, D.D., late President Congregational Union, and was educated chiefly at the City of London School, afterwards, for a year, at the School of Mines, Jermyn Street. He served as an engineering pupil for four and a half years with Messrs. J. & W. Dudgeon, Engineers and Shipbuilders, Millwall; in 1868 became leading draughtsman at Palmer's Engine Works, Jarrow; in 1871 chief draughtsman to Messrs. T. M. Tennant & Co., Ltd., Leith; in 1872 became consulting engineer in Edinburgh with Mr. H. O. Bennett, as Bennett & Kennedy. In 1874 he was appointed Professor of Civil and Mechanical Engineering at University College, London, the title of the Chair being changed later to that of Engineering and Mechanical Technology. In 1875 he established the Engineering Laboratory at University College, which was the precursor of the similar Laboratories now to be found at nearly all the colleges in the country where Engineering is taught. In 1889, owing to the pressure of professional work, he resigned his chair, but received the honorary title of Emeritus Professor of Engineering from the Council of University College. In 1876 he translated and edited Reuleaux's "Theoretische Kinematic," under the title of "Kinematics of Machinery." In 1886 he published the "Mechanics of Machinery." Has been connected with the Research Committees of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers since their foundation, and as Reporter of the Committee on Rivetted Joints, carried out an elaborate series of experiments, which are published in the Proceedings of the Institution 1881, 1882, 1885, and 1888. As Chairman of the Committee on Marine Engine Trials he has carried out a number of extended trials at sea, the results of which have been published in the Proceedings of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, 1889 and 1890. He contributed a paper on "Engineering Laboratories," to the Institution of Civil Engineers (Proceedings, vol. 88, 1887). Among his published experiments are the following:—Tests of the Griffin Gas Engine, the Beck Gas Engine, Easton & Anderson's Pumping Station at Addington, the Popp Compressed Air System in Paris (Brit. Assoc. 1889, and Engineering. Sept. 1889); the Otto, Atkinson & Griffin Gas Engines, and the Davey Paxman Steam Engine (Society of Arts Motor Trials, 1888); the Thornycroft Boiler (Proc. I. C. E., Vol. 99); the Willans Central Valve Engine (Proc. I. C. E., Vol. 96); the Thomson Electric Welding Process, &c. Among other structural work he has designed the iron and concrete internal structure of the present Alhambra Theatre, probably the first building in which all the floors were simply flat concrete slabs, made in situ and carried by a wrought-iron skeleton, and also the Promenade Pier at Trouville, the first purely arched steel structure of the kind which has been built. He has been, since 1878, largely occupied with the practical testing of materials of construction, having now tested over 18,000 pieces of various kinds, and has fitted up for himself at Westminster a testing machine embodying the results of his experience in this work. He has also acted for some time as Engineer in Chief to the Westminster Electric Supply Corporation, Ltd., a Company which has Parliamentary powers for supplying Electricity in Westminster, Pimlico, Belgravia and Mayfair. He became a Member of the Institutions both of Civil and of Mechanical Engineers in 1879, and in 1883 was elected an Honorary Life Member of the latter. In 1885 he became a Member of Council, and in 1890 a Vice-President of the Inst. of Mechanical Engineers. He is also a Member of Council of the Society of Arts, and a Member of the Iron and Steel Inst., of the Inst. of Naval Architects, and of the Inst. of Electrical Engineers. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1887.

KENNEDY, Captain Alexander William Maxwell Clark, F.R.G.S., F.L.S., was born at Rochester, Sept. 26, 1851, being the eldest son of the late Colonel John Clark Kennedy, C.B., of Knockgray, N.B. He was educated at Eton, where at the age of sixteen he published "The Birds of Berkshire and Buckinghamshire, a Contribution to the Ornithology of the two Counties," 1868, by "an Eton Boy." He entered the Coldstream Guards as Ensign in 1870, became Lieutenant in 1872, and Lieutenant and Captain in 1874, and retired the same year. He is the author of various poems and verses, and of a work of travels "To the Arctic Regions and Back in Six Weeks," being travels in Lapland and Norway, 1878. He has contributed articles to the Ibis, Zoologist, Land and Water, The Field, and other natural history periodicals; and is a fellow of several learned societies. He is a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for Kirkcudbrightshire, for which county he came forward as Conservative candidate at the general election of 1874, but retired.

KENNION, The Right Rev. George Wyndham, D.D., B. of Bath and Wells, born about 1846, was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1867, M.A. 1871). He was ordained deacon in 1869 by the Bishop of Tuam, and priest in the following year by the Archbishop of York. He was domestic chaplain to the Bishop of Tuam 1869-70; curate of Doncaster 1870-71; York Diocesan Inspector of Schools 1871-73; vicar of St. Paul's, Sculcoates, Kingston-on-Hull, 1873-76; and vicar of All Saints', Bradford, from 1876 until his advancement to the episcopate. On Nov. 30, 1882, he was consecrated, in Westminster Abbey, Bishop of Adelaide, in succession to Dr. Short, who had resigned the See, which comprises the whole of South Australia. He was made Bishop of Bath and Wells in 1894, in succession to the late Lord Hervey, and arrived in England in the autumn.

KENRICK, The Most Rev. Peter Richard, D.D., Roman Catholic Archbishop of St. Louis, Missouri, was born in Dublin, in 1806. He was educated at Maynooth, and ordained a priest in Ireland, but soon afterwards removed to Philadelphia, where his brother (the late Archbishop of Baltimore) was then coadjutor to the Bishop. Here he edited his Catholic Herald for several years, and published various works, original and translated. He was also made Vicar-General of the diocese. In 1841 Bishop Rosati, of St. Louis, requested his nomination as his coadjutor with the right of succession. He was consecrated Bishop of Drasa in partibus, and coadjutor of St. Louis, Nov. 30, 1841. In 1843, on the death of Bishop Rosati, Dr. Kenrick became Bishop of St. Louis, and in 1847 the first Archbishop of that city. He has been very successful in promoting the interests of the See, having established a large hospital, an orphanage, two convents, numerous schools and charitable institutions, and one of the most extensive and beautiful cemeteries in the United States. Besides the translations already referred to, and editions of devotional works, the Archbishop has published "The Holy House of Loretto; or, an Examination of the Historical Evidence of its Miraculous Translation;" and "Anglican Ordinations." Archbishop Kenrick was present at the Vatican Council, and was reported to have maintained the inopportuneness of defining the dogma of Papal Infallibility. He, however acquiesced in the definition, and published it, together with the other decrees of the Council, in his diocese.

KENT, William Charles Mark (known as Charles Kent), poet and journalist, was born in London, on Nov. 3, 1823, and was educated at Prior Park and Oscott Colleges. His father, William Kent, R.N., who was born on Dec. 23, 1799, in the Government House at Sydney in Australia, when his great uncle, Captain (afterwards Admiral) Hunter was Governor of New South Wales, and who, on Aug. 27, 1816, was a midshipman on board the Leander frigate at the battle of Algiers under Viscount Exmouth, was the only son of Captain William Kent, R.N., the discoverer of Kent's Group and the Gulf of St. Vincent, and who died in 1812, while in command, during the great Napoleonic War, of H.M.S. Union, 98 guns, then stationed off Toulon. Mr. Kent's mother, Ellen, was the only daughter of Judge Baggs, of the Court of Vice Admiralty in Demerara, by a lady of good Irish family. At an early age Mr. Charles Kent adopted literature as a profession. When 19 he had written and published, in three series, more than forty Essays and Stories. When 22 he began, in the Christmas of 1845, his twenty-five years Editorship of The Sun daily newspaper, of which journal, during the last eight years of that quarter of a century, he was both editor and sole proprietor. Beginning with 1874 he was for seven years editor of the Weekly Register. He is the author, among other works, of "The Vision of Cagliostro, a tale of the Five Senses," 1847; "Aletheia, or the Doom of Mythology, and other poems," 1850; "Dreamland, or Poets in their Haunts, and other poems," 1862; "Footprints on the Road," 1864; his "Poems." in a collected edition, 1870; a "Mythological Dictionary," (virginibus puerisque), 1870; "Charles Dickens as a Reader," published simultaneously in London and Philadelphia, 1872; "Corona Catholica," in fifty languages, in which work he was translated by the chief linguistic scholars of Europe, Asia, and Africa, among them being Professor Paley into Greek, Professor Max-Müller into Sanskrit, Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte into Basque, Professor Mir Aulad Ali into Persian, Professor Dillmann into Ethiopic, Professor Sayce into Assyrian, Professor Nöldeke into Syriac, and Professor Novalevsky into Russian. He has written, besides this, "The . Modern Seven Wonders of the World," profusely illustrated, in 1890. He has also published under various assumed names such entirely different productions as "Catholicity in the Dark Ages," by an Oscotian, 1847; "The Derby Ministry," by Mark Rochester, 1858; and "The Gladstone Government," by a Templar, 1869. He edited in 1875 "The Centenary Edition of Charles Lamb," which has been frequently reprinted and has had a very wide circulation. Besides this, he edited, in 1879, "The Centenary Edition of Thomas Moore." Prefixed to these two last-mentioned works, he wrote a Memoir, embellished with facsimiles, in which he brought together a mass of entirely new facts, especially in regard to Charles Lamb, from sources until then wholly overlooked by preceding biographers. In a similar way he edited also, in 1874, "The Works of Robert Burns," in 1881, those of "Father Prout," and, in 1888, those of his own personal friend, "Leigh Hunt." Under his supervision the miscellaneous works of the first Lord Lytton, including his poems, plays, essays and minor romances, were added, in 12 volumes, to the "Knebworth Edition," of his more famous Novels and Romances. In 1879 he presented to the British Museum the "Last Letter of Charles Dickens," and, in 1887, the "First Letter of Lord Lytton," both addressed to himself, and both now permanently displayed there, under glass, in the Manuscript Department. Beyond this, he published, in 1883, "The Wit and Wisdom of Lord Lytton;" and, in 1884, "The Humour and Pathos of Charles Dickens." He has contributed largely for years to many of the leading periodicals, such as the Westminster Review, Blackwood's Magazine, Household Words, and All the Year Round; writing besides a great number of memoirs in the "Dictionary of National Biography," the Illustrated Review, and the Ninth Edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He was called to the Bar on June 10, 1859, at the Middle Temple, and was awarded in 1887 a Pension from the Crown of £100 a year on the Civil List, in recognition of his contributions to literature as poet and biographer.

KEPPEL, Admiral The Hon. Sir Henry, G.C.B., D.C.L., a younger son of the late Earl of Albemarle, born June 14, 1809, entered the navy at an early age, was made Lieutenant in 1829, and Commander in 1833. In command of the Childers, 16 guns, he served on the south coast of Spain during the civil war of 1834-35, afterwards on the west coast of Africa, was made Captain in 1837, and commanded the Dido from 1841 till 1845, during which time he was employed in the China war of 1842, and afterwards in the suppression of piracy in the Eastern Archipelago. From Nov., 1847, till July, 1851, he commanded the Meander, 44 guns, on the China and Pacific stations; in May, 1853, was appointed to the command of the St. Jean d'Acre, 101 guns; served in the Baltic and in the Black Sea, and having in July, 1855, exchanged into the Rodney, 74 guns, obtained command of the Naval Brigade before Sebastopol. After the fall of that stronghold he returned to England and was appointed to the Colossus. In Sept., 1856, he hoisted his pennant as Commodore on board the Raleigh, 52 guns, and proceeded to China, where his ship was lost by striking on an unknown rock. He commanded a division of boats at the destruction of the Chinese war fleet in the Fatshan Creek, June 1, 1857, for which service he was made a K.C.B., and on attaining flag-rank he returned to England. In 1859 he was made Groom in Waiting to the Queen, which office he relinquished in May, 1860, on being appointed to the Cape of Good Hope as naval Commander-in-Chief, from which he was transferred to the Brazilian Station. In Jan., 1867, he hoisted his flag on board the Rodney, as Vice-Admiral Commander-in-Chief on the China and Japan station. He returned to England, in Dec., 1869, on attaining the rank of full Admiral, and was made D.C.L. of Oxford in 1870. He was created a G.C.B. in 1871, and he became an Admiral of the Fleet in 1877. He retired in 1879. He is a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and Medjidieh of the second class. Sir H. Keppel has written "Expedition to Borneo, with Rajah Brooke's Journal," published in 1847, and "Visit to the Indian Archipelago."

KÉRATRY, Emile, Comte de, was born in Paris, March 20, 1832, of an ancient Breton family, his father being Count Auguste Hilarion Kératry, who died in 1859. Having completed his studies at the Lyceums of St. Louis and of Louis-le-Grand, he entered as a volunteer the 1st regiment of Chasseurs d'Afrique, in 1854, went through the Crimean campaign, removed successively to the 1st regiment of Spahis and of Cuirassiers, and, in 1859, was appointed sous-lieutenant in the 5th regiment of Lancers. In 1861 he exchanged into the 3rd regiment of Chasseurs d'Afrique, in order that he might make the campaign in Mexico; and, in 1864, he was detached as Captain commanding the second squadron of Colonel Dupin's famous counter-guerilla. In this dangerous service he distinguished himself by his bravery and decision, and afterwards he was appointed officer of ordnance to Marshal Bazaine. The Comte de Kératry was several times mentioned in the "Order of the Day" in Africa and Mexico. In 1865 he was recommended for a lieutenant's commission, but he sent in his resignation and retired from the service. At this period he had received the Legion of Honour, and had been decorated with several foreign Orders. On his return to France he devoted himself to literary pursuits, and contributed to the Revue Contemporaine a remarkable series of articles on the Mexican expedition, in which he severely attacked the Government and the conduct of Marshal Bazaine. Soon afterwards he became editor of the Revue Moderne, in which periodical he continued his accusation. In 1869 he was returned by the electors of Brest to the Corps Législatif, when he associated himself with the new Liberal Tiers-Parti. On the establishment of the Government of the National Defence in Sept., 1870, he was made Prefect of Police; but in the following month he escaped in a balloon, from Paris, then besieged, and proceeded on a diplomatic mission to Madrid, where, soon afterwards, he was succeeded by M. Edmond Adam. On Oct. 22 he was appointed General of Division, commanding the mobilised forces in Brittany, and recruited a number of old sailors, but shortly afterwards resigned his command. When M. Thiers came to power he was appointed Prefect of the Bouches-du-Rhone, but his severe repression of disorder excited the hostility of the Republican press, and he eventually retired. After several unsuccessful attempts to get into parliament he retired into private life, and has latterly devoted himself to the question of international copyright. He is the author of "Le Contre-Guérilla," 1867; "La Créance Jecker," 1867; "L'Elévation et la Chute de Maximilien," 1867; a work on French events entitled "Le 4 Septembre et le Gouvernement de la Défense Nationale, 1871"; "Armée de Bretagne, 1870–1," published in 1874; "Mourad V., prince, sultan, prisonnier d'état," 1878; and "A travers le passée, Souvenirs Militaires," 1887. In 1872 he was promoted to be a Commander of the Legion of Honour.

KERNAHAN, Coulson, F.R.G.S., author, and journalist is the son of the Rev. James Kernahan, M.A., Ph.D., F.G.S., (editor and joint author of "Suggestive and Homiletic Commentaries on the New Testament," and other important theological works) was born at Ilfracombe on Aug. 1, 1858; and educated at the Grammar School, St. Albans. He has contributed largely in prose and poetry to both English and American quarterlies, monthly magazines, and other periodicals. His poems are characterized by much feeling, and by great power and imagination, with striking mastery over poetic form; while some of his tales show a depth of gloomy thought akin to that of Poe. A very remarkable original story by him was issued anonymously in one of the monthlies, has since been printed in volume form, and has rapidly passed into the fourth edition; we refer to that strange work, "A Dead Man's Diary." Mr. Kernahan's critical essays on Heine, Robertson of Brighton, Emerson's poetry, &c., place him high among literary critics. Recently he has published a "Book of Strange Sins" and "Stranger than Fiction," 1893, and "Dead Faces," 1894.

KERR, Robert, architect, was born at Aberdeen, 1823, and became a pupil of John Smith, City Architect of Aberdeen. He was the first President of the Architectural Association in 1847, was elected a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1857, and was appointed Professor of the Arts of Construction at King's College, London, in 1861, retaining that post until his retirement in 1890. He is the author of "The English Gentleman's House," 1864, and other works, and amongst other buildings, has designed and executed Bearwood, Berkshire, the residence of the late Mr. John Walter, of the Times.

KERR, Robert Malcolm, LL.D., Judge of the City of London Court, was born in Scotland in 1821, and called to the English Bar in 1848. Mr. Commissioner Kerr is well known for his just administration of the law for the protection of the victims of unscrupulous usurers; and has edited several valuable legal works. He twice unsuccessfully contested Kilmarnock in the Liberal interest.

KESTELL-CORNISH, The Rev. Robert, Bishop of Madagascar, only surviving son of the Rev. George James Cornish, of Salcombe Hill, Sidmouth, Devon, Prebendary of Exeter, was born in 1824, and educated at Winchester School, and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford (B.A. 1846; M.A. 1849). He was vicar of Coleridge, Devon, 1856-61; vicar of Revelstoke in the same county, 1861-66; and vicar of Landkey, Barnstaple, from 1866 till 1874, when he was appointed the first Bishop of Madagascar. In 1871 he assumed the additional name of Kestell, as the sole surviving representative of the ancient family of Kestell of Kestell, Cornwall.

KHAN, His Highness Prince Malcom, See MALCOM KHAN.

KIDD, George Hugh, M.D., F.R.C.S.I., Past President of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, was born in Armagh, June 12, 1824. His father was a lineal descendant of Walter Kyd, a native of Irving, Ayrshire, who settled in the North of Ireland early in the 17th century. His mother (also of Scotch extraction) was Eliza, youngest daughter of Thomas McKinstry, of Keady. He was educated partly at home, and partly at the school kept by the Rev. John Bleckley, at Monaghan, and that of Dr. Lyons, at Newry. His professional studies were conducted at the College of Surgeons, Trinity College, and in the Park Street and Marlborough Street Schools, Dublin, and were completed at Edinburgh University. He obtained the licence of the College of Surgeons on July 25, 1842, and on Oct. 25, 1844, was co-opted a Fellow, but was not enrolled till 1849. In 1845, he graduated M.D. in Edinburgh University and obtained one of the "Graduation" gold Medals of the year. At that time it was usual to give three Medals for the best graduation theses of the year; but on this occasion four were granted, his name being "first called." From the beginning of his professional career his course has been one of distinction and success. In 1845, he became a Demonstrator of Anatomy in the Park Street School, and subsequently lectured on Anatomy and Physiology in the Peter Street School. He has, for many years, acted as Obstetric Surgeon to the Coombe Hospital, and was Master of it from 1876 till 1883. He is consulting Obstetric Surgeon to the House of Industry Hospitals, and Mercers Hospital, Dublin, and is an Honorary Fellow of the London and Edinburgh Obstetrical Societies, and Corresponding Member of several foreign societies. He has served the offices of President of the Obstetrical and Pathological Societies, and of the Obstetrical Section of the British Medical Association, and of the Irish Academy of Medicine, Ireland. In 1883 the University of Dublin conferred on him the degree of Magister in Arte Obstetriciâ Honoris Causâ, on which occasion the other recipients of honorary degrees were Earl Spencer, Lord Wolseley, and Professor Crawford. In 1884 he was elected to give the address on Obstetric Medicine at the meeting of the British Medical Association in Belfast. His contributions to medical literature are numerous, the majority being on Obstetrical and Gynecological subjects. He was for many years Proprietor and Editor of the Dublin Quarterly Journal of Medical Science. An important event in the life of Dr. Kidd is his instrumentality in the foundation of the Institution for Idiotic and Imbecile Children. It bears the name of "The Stewart Institute for Idiotic and Imbecile Children, and Asylum for Middle-Class Lunatic Patients," in honour of Dr. Stewart who generously supported Dr. Kidd's efforts, and eventually, by liberal gifts and testamentary endowments, became its most munificent benefactor. It was however, due to Dr. Kidd's personal influence and labour that this excellent Institution had any existence at all. Dr. Kidd has been elected annually a Member of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, since 1872; and in 1876 he was elected President. Dr. Kidd has held, in succession, the positions of Examiner in Midwifery to the Royal College of Surgeons, the Queen's University, and Dublin University; and, before he became a Member of the General Medical Council, was appointed by them to inspect and report on the Midwifery Examinations of the Universities of Cambridge, Edinburgh Aberdeen, and Durham. Dr. Kidd married Frances Emily, daughter of the late William Rigby, of Dublin, who died in 1884. In 1887 he was married to Ada Isabella, daughter of the Rev. J. Panton Ham, of London.

KILLALOE, Bishop of. See CHESTER, THE RIGHT REV. WILLIAM BENNETT.

KIMBERLEY (Earl of), The Right Hon. John Wodehouse, K.G., born Jan. 7, 1826, was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1847, taking a first-class in classical honours, He succeeded his grandfather as third Baron Wodehouse, May 29, 1846, and was raised to the earldom of Kimberley, June 1, 1866. In Dec., 1852, he accepted the post of Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, which he held under Lords Aberdeen and Palmerston until 1856, when he was appointed Envoy at St. Petersburg. He returned from Russia in 1858, and resumed his post as Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs in Lord Palmerston's second administration, June 19, 1859, retiring Aug. 14, 1861. In 1863 he was sent on a special mission to the north of Europe, with the view of obtaining some settlement of the Schleswig-Holstein question; and in 1864 he was appointed Under Secretary for India. In Oct. of the same year he succeeded the late Earl of Carlisle in the Lord Lieutenancy of Ireland, resigning that post on the fall of Lord Russell's second administration, in July, 1866. He held the office of Lord Privy Seal in Mr. Gladstone's administration from Dec. 1868, to July, 1870, and that of Secretary of State for the Colonies from the latter date until the retirement of Mr. Gladstone in Feb., 1874. In Feb., 1878, he was nominated Chairman of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the working of the Penal Servitude Acts. He was reappointed Secretary of State for the Colonies on Mr. Gladstone's return to power in May, 1880; and in June, 1882, he was also appointed to hold provisionally the seals of the office of Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, resigned by Mr. Bright. On Dec. 16, 1882, he received from the Queen the seals of the office of Secretary of State for India, which he held till June, 1885, and to which he was reappointed on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's third Government in Feb. 1886. In August, 1892, on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's fourth Government, he again received the seals of the Secretary of State for India, and was at the same time appointed Lord President of the Council. These offices he held until March, 1894, when, on Lord Rosebery becoming Premier, he received the seals of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. In 1885 he was made a Knight of the Garter. He is a member of the Senate of the University of London.

KING, the Right Rev. Edward, D.D., Bishop of Lincoln, was born about the year 1829, and was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1851, M.A. 1855). He was ordained deacon in 1854, and priest, 1855, by the Bishop of Oxford, and became curate of Wheatley. In 1858 he was appointed Chaplain and Assistant Lecturer of Cuddesdon College, and from 1863-73 he was Principal of the College. In 1873 he became Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Pastoral Theology, in which position he exercised a wide influence throughout the University. On the death of Dr. Christopher Wordsworth in 1885, Dr. King was appointed to the Bishopric of Lincoln, and was consecrated in Lincoln Cathedral. Dr. King is a High Churchman; and at Lincoln carried ritualistic practices to such a point that he was cited before the Archbishop of Canterbury for non-conformity to the Rubric; the result being that he promised to obey the Archbishop's injunctions, and abstain from certain forms which gave offence.

KIPLING, Rudyard, author, was born in Bombay in 1864, and is the son of John Lockwood Kipling, C.I.E., Head of the Lahore School of Art. He was educated at the United Services College, Westward Ho, North Devon; returned to India in 1882, as sub-editor of the Lahore Civil and Military Gazette, and was special correspondent for that paper and for the Pioneer of Allahabad, on the frontier, at Rajputana and elsewhere. He published in India, "Departmental Ditties," and "Plain Tales from the Hills," followed by six small books of military, native, and social life in India, of which "Soldiers Three" deserves special mention. He left India in 1889, and travelled in China, Japan, and America, and thence to England. He has written the following books in recent years:—A one-volume novel, "The Light that Failed," published in 1891; "Life's Handicap," a collection of tales, mostly oriental, in the same year; "Ballads and Barrack-room Ballads," 1892; "Many Inventions" and "The Jungle Book," 1893, etc. He has also published stories and poems in the Pall Mall Gazette. He is at present (1894) residing in Brattleboro', Vermont. Mrs. Kipling is a sister of the late Mr. Wolcot Balestier, in collaboration with whom her husband published a novel, "The Naulakha," 1891.

KIRK, Sir John, M.D., G.C.M.G., K.C.B., F.R.S., LL.D. (Honorary), Edinburgh, was born at Barry, near Arbroath, Forfarshire, in 1832. He graduated M.D. in the University of Edinburgh in 1854, and early distinguished himself in botany and other departments of natural history. He served on the Civil Medical Staff during the Crimean War, and subsequently, for five years, Feb., 1858, to July, 1864, as Chief Officer and Naturalist to the late Dr. Livingstone's second exploring expedition, sent out by the British Government. In 1866 he was Vice-Consul and Assistant Political Agent at Zanzibar. In 1873 he was appointed Her Majesty's Consul-General, and in 1880. Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar. He accompanied the Sultan of Zanzibar in his visit to England in 1875, having previously, by his great influence with that potentate, induced him to enter into a treaty for the abolition of the slave-trade in his dominions. By his own exertions, and the aid he has afforded to other explorers, Dr. Kirk has materially assisted the progress of geographical discovery in East Africa, for which he received the Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society of London; but his great achievement is the almost complete suppression of the slave-trade in the greater part of Eastern Africa. In 1875 he was appointed Consul in the Comoro Islands, in addition to his other duties. In 1890 he was Her Majesty's Plenipotentiary at the Slave Trade Conference at Brussels. He was made a C.M.G. in Aug. 1879; K.C.M.G. in Sept. 1881; G.C.M.G. Feb. 16, 1886, and a K.C.B. in 1890.

KIRKPATRICK, Professor The Rev. Alexander Francis, D.D., is the son of the late Rev. F. Kirkpatrick, who was descended from a younger branch of the family of the Kirkpatricks of Closeburn in Scotland, and was born at Lewis in 1849. He received his education at Haileybury College, under the Rev. A. G. Butler, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained a Minor Scholarship in 1867, and a Foundation Scholarship in the following year. He was elected Bell Scholar and Porson Scholar in 1868, and Craven Scholar in 1870; and graduated B.A. in 1871, as second in the first-class of the Classical Tripos. In the same year he was elected to a Fellowship of Trinity College. He was placed in the first class of the Theological Examination in 1872, obtaining the Evans Prize, and being equal for the Scholefield and Hebrew Prizes, and in 1874 was elected Tyrwhitt Hebrew Scholar. He was ordained deacon in 1874, and priest in 1875, by the Bishop of Ely. He held the office of Assistant Tutor of his College from 1871 to 1882; served as Junior Proctor and Examiner for the Classical and Theological Triposes; was Whitehall Preacher, 1878-80, and Lady Margaret's Preacher, 1882 and 1893; and has also been University Preacher upon other occasions. In 1882 he succeeded Professor Jarrett as Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Cambridge, an office to which a Canonry in Ely Cathedral is attached. He is a member of the Council of the Senate of the University, and of various Boards and Syndicates. He was Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Winchester (Harold Browne) from 1878 to 1890, and was Warburtonian Lecturer at Lincoln's Inn, 1886-90. Since 1891 he has been Evening Chaplain to the Bishop of Rochester. Professor Kirkpatrick has written commentaries on the First and Second Books of Samuel and the Book of Psalms in "The Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges," and has contributed to the Church Quarterly Review and the Expositor. He has also published "The Divine Library of the Old Testament," 1891, and "The Doctrine of the Prophets," 1892, being the Warburtonian Lectures for 1886-90.

KITCHENER, Colonel Sir Horatio Herbert, C.B., K.C.M.G., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, Sirdar of the Egyptian Army; was born in 1851; obtained his commission as Lieutenant, Jan. 4, 1871; became Captain, Jan. 4, 1883; Major, Oct. 8, 1884; Lieut.-Colonel, June 15, 1885; and Colonel, April 11, 1888. The eight years between 1874 and 1882 were spent in Civil employment. In 1874 he joined the survey of Western Palestine under Major Conder. After the attack on the party at Safed, in 1875, he returned to England; and until 1877 was engaged in laying down the Palestine Exploration Fund's map. Returning to the Holy Land in 1877, he executed the whole of the Survey of Galilee. In 1878 he was sent to Cyprus to organize the courts. He was next appointed Vice-Consul at Erzeroum; subsequently he returned to Cyprus and made a survey of the entire island. In 1882, hearing that an Egyptian army was being organized by Sir Evelyn Wood, he volunteered for the service, and was appointed one of the two majors of the cavalry. He was Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant and Quarter-Master-General in the Nile Expedition 1884-5 (mentioned in despatches, Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel, Medal with Clasp, 2nd class of the Medjidieh, and Khedive's Star); was in command of a Brigade of the Egyptian Army in the operations near Suakin in Dec., 1888, and was present in the engagement at Gemaizah (mentioned in despatches). Colonel Kitchener was also in the engagement at Toski on the Soudan frontier in 1889 (mentioned in despatches, C.B.). He is at present Sirdar of the Egyptian army, and in Feb., 1894, was made K.C.M.G. He is decorated with the 1st Cl. of the Medjidieh and the 3rd of the Osmanieh.

KITCHIN, The Very Rev. George William, D.D., F.S.A., Dean of Durham, was born Dec. 7, 1827, at Naughton parsonage, Suffolk, being the son of the Rev. I. Kitchin, Rector of St. Stephen's, Ipswich, by his wife, a daughter of Rev. W. Bardgett, Rector of Melmerby, Cumberland. He was educated at Ipswich Grammar School, King's College, London, and Christ Church, Oxford, Student of Christ Church, 1846 (B.A.—double first-class—1850; M.A., 1853; D.D., 1883). He was appointed Tutor of Christ Church in 1853; Head Master of Twyford School in 1855; Censor and Tutor of Christ Church in 1861; Proctor of the University in 1863; Tutor to H.R.H. the Crown Prince of Denmark in 1863; Censor of Non-collegiate Students, 1868-1883; History Lecturer at Christ Church, and History Tutor at Christ Church, in 1882; Dean of Winchester in 1883, in succession to Dean Bramston, who retired, and Dean of Durham in 1894. He was Select Preacher at Oxford in 1863 and 1864; and Whitehall Preacher in 1866 and 1867. He was a member of the Hebdomadal Council of the University of Oxford, 1879-83; Governor of Ipswich and Portsmouth Endowed Schools; also Chairman of the Cheltenham Ladies' College; and was formerly Examining Chaplain to Dr. Jacobson, Bishop of Chester. His works include editions of Bacon's "Novum Organum," 2 vols., 1855; Bacon's "Advancement of Learning" and "Twyford Prayers," 1860; "Spenser's Faëry Queene," i., ii., 1867, 1869; "Catalogue of MSS. in Christ Church Library," 1867; translations of "Brachet's French Grammar," 1869; and of the same author's "French Dictionary," 1873. Dr. Kitchin is the translator of part of Ranke's "Englische Geschichte," and author of a "History of France," 3 vols. (Clarendon Press), 1873, &c.; "Life of Pope Pius II.," for the Arundel Society, 1881; and of "Winchester," 1890, for Messrs. Longman's series of Historic Towns. He has also edited "Winchester Cathedral Records, No. I.," being a Consuetudinary of the Refectory of St. Swithin's Priory, 1886, and No. II., being the "Charter of Edward III. for the St. Giles' Fair, Winchester," 1886; also Vol. I. of the publications of the Hampshire Record Society, "Documents relating to the Foundation of the Chapter of Winchester, A.D. 1541-1547," 1889; and "Rolls of the Obedientians of St. Swithin's Monastery," 1893.

KNAUS, Ludwig, Hon. R.A., a celebrated German genre-painter, was born at Wiesbaden, Oct. 10, 1829, and entered the Academy at Düsseldorf, where he studied under Sohn and Schadow. He then went to Paris, and, with a break of one year in Italy, lived there for eight years, perfecting himself in the technical part of his art by close study of modern French masters. His first important pictures were "The Golden Wedding," 1858, and "The Christening," 1859. In the following year he returned to Wiesbaden, but in 1861 went to Berlin, in 1866 to Düsseldorf, whence in 1874 he once more returned to Berlin, in order to fill an important post in the Academy. Besides the abovenamed works may be mentioned "Funeral in a Hesse Village," 1871; "His Excellency Travelling," "The Village Musician," "The Inn," 1876; "The Refractory Model," 1877; "Solomon's Wisdom," 1878; and "A Peep Behind the Scenes," 1880. He was promoted to be an officer of the Legion of Honour in 1867.

KNIGHT, Francis Arnold, field naturalist and writer on country life, was born in 1852, at Gloucester, and now resides at Weston-super-Mare, in Somersetshire, where he has a school. Since 1888 Mr. Knight has been a regular contributor, mainly on Natural History subjects, to the leader columns of the Daily News, and he has also written for the Contemporary Review, The Speaker, The Spectator, The Globe, and various provincial journals. He has published four volumes of Essays, chiefly on Natural History and Country Life, entitled, "By Leafy Ways," "Idylls of the Field," "Rambles of a Dominie," and "By Moorland and Sea," the last of which appeared in the autumn of 1893. His literary style suggests that of the late Richard Jefferies.

KNIGHTON, William, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., born in Dublin, 1834, the son of Richard Ingham Knighton, is of the same family to which belonged Henry de Knyghton, Canon of Worcester, and Chronicler of English History, about A.D. 1400, and Sir William Knighton, Bart., Keeper of the Privy Purse in the reign of George IV. He was educated in Glasgow, and appointed Head Master of the Normal School of Colombo, Ceylon, before he was twenty years of age. He was partner in a Coffee Plantation in the interior of the island, and wrote the "History of Ceylon," from native chronicles, and "Forest Life in Ceylon," from his own experience. He was the first Hon. Sec. of the Ceylon Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society. He was subsequently appointed Professor of History and Logic in the Calcutta University; and, in 1860, was transferred as Assistant Commissioner to Oudh by Lord Canning. His "Private Life of an Eastern King," published before the great Indian Mutiny broke out, gave a faithful account of the career of Nussir-ood-deen, King of Oudh, and incidentally of the state of that country before its annexation. This work was translated into most of the languages of Europe, and was referred to in Parliament, by supporters of the Government of the day, as proving the necessity for the annexation of Oudh to the British Dominion in India. In Fraser's Magazine, when edited by Mr. Froude, Mr. Knighton published his "Village Life in Oudh," and, in 1864, he issued his "Private Life of an Eastern Queen." Mr. Knighton retired from the Oudh Commission in 1878, and has since devoted himself to literature. In 1887 he was elected a Vice-President of the Royal Society of Literature in London, and of the International Literary and Artistic Association of Paris. In 1889 he erected a statue of Shakespeare on the Boulevard Haussmann, in Paris—a statue in bronze modelled by Paul Fournier, the eminent French sculptor. Mr. Knighton is a Master of Arts, a Doctor of Philosophy, and a Doctor of Laws of the Giessen University, in Germany. These degrees were granted to him when Baron Liebig was Dean of the Philosophical Faculty in that University. His most recent work, "Struggles for Life," was translated into French by M. Léon Delbos, under the title of "Les Luttes pour la Vie," and has been very popular in Paris, in London, and in Berlin. Of Mr. Knighton's contributions to the Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature the most remarkable are, "Early Roman History," "Cleon the Democrat," "The Philosophy of Epicurus and Modern Agnosticism," and "Greek and Latin Wit."

KNOWLES, James, F.R.I.B.A., born in 1831, was educated as an architect at a private school, at University College, in his father's office, and in Italy. He is a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and has executed many architectural works, chiefly in London and its neighbourhood—amongst which may be mentioned, Aldworth, the Surrey residence of Lord Tennyson; Kensington House, with its gardens and adjuncts; the Thatched House Club, St. James's Street; the public garden and fountain in Leicester Square; Albert Mansions in Victoria Street; and St. Saviour's, St. Philip's, and St. Stephen's Churches at Clapham. Mr. Knowles has also been engaged in literature from an early age, contributing many articles to journals and reviews, and in 1860 compiling (from Sir Thomas Malory) "The Story of King Arthur," which reached a sixth edition. In 1869 he originated "The Metaphysical Society," a club consisting of forty members, being chiefly eminent representatives of the most various forms of belief and contemporary thought, on speculative subjects—Anglican, Roman Catholic, Nonconformist, Positivist, Agnostic, and Atheistic—and constituted for the full, free, and confidential discussion of philosophical questions. In 1870 he succeeded Dean Alford in the editorship of the Contemporary Review, which, by enlisting the aid of the members of the Metaphysical Society, he raised to a position of influence and importance. In 1877, owing to a change in the proprietorship of the Contemporary Review, a separation took place between it and Mr. Knowles, when—supported by more than one hundred writers of celebrity (mostly members of the Metaphysical Society, and contributors to the Contemporary Review)—he established The Nineteenth Century, a monthly review, in which, as his own property, the principle of the unfettered and unbiassed discussion of all topics of public interest, by authors signing their own names, might be preserved without interference. The Nineteenth Century immediately attained and still preserves a very wide circulation.

KNOX, Mrs., née Isa Craig, was born in Edinburgh, Oct. 17, 1831. At an early age she began to contribute anonymously to several periodicals, and at last her poetical contributions to the Scotsman, under the signature "Isa," attracted attention, and led to her employment in the literary department of that journal. In 1856 she published a collection of her poems. In 1857 she came to London, and her services were engaged by Mr. Hastings in organizing the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, to which she acted as secretary and literary assistant, until her marriage with her cousin, Mr. John Knox. In 1859 she won the first prize for her Ode (against 620 competitors), recited at the Burns Centenary Festival, and in 1865 published "Duchess Agnes," and other poems. Among later works from her pen may be mentioned "Songs of Consolation," 1874, and "Esther West," a story, which, in 1880, was in its fifth edition. In 1892 selections of her poetry were edited by Dr. Japp.

KNUTSFORD (Baron), The Right Hon. Sir Henry Thurstan Holland, M.P., P.C., G.C.M.G., eldest son of Sir Henry Holland, the famous physician, and President of the Royal Institution of Great Britain, was born on Aug. 3, 1825, and educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, taking his university degree in 1847. After the usual preliminaries he was called to the Bar in 1849 by the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple, and joined the Northern Circuit. Undertakings of a difficult and delicate nature soon devolved upon him, and he was frequently employed by the Treasury, in conjunction with Sir W. Stephenson, the late Mr. George Hamilton, then Secretary to the Treasury, and the late Mr. George Arbuthnot, also attached to the same office, to revise and reorganize the establishment of various public offices, among the number being the Ecclesiastical Commission, the Poor Law Board, and the Woods and Forests Commission. In 1851, although only twenty-six years of age, he was appointed by the then Lord Chancellor to the onerous duty of drawing up the Bill which, in 1852, became law under the title of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852. This task he carried out under the direction of the late Mr. Justice Willes, one of the Royal Commissioners. The Common Law Procedure Act of 1854, which followed the measure just mentioned, was the next work upon which Sir Henry Holland was engaged as draftsman. He was next employed by Lord Chief Baron Sir Fitzroy Kelly in drafting two of the criminal measures which became law in 24th and 25th Vict. The County Court Judgeship of Northumberland was offered him by Lord Campbell when Lord Chancellor, but the appointment was declined. Sir Henry continued to practise at the Bar until the beginning of the year 1867, when Lord Carnarvon selected him to fill the office of legal adviser to the Colonial Office. In 1870 he was promoted to an assistant under-secretaryship, and remained in that office until August, 1874, when he resigned in order to stand for the borough of Midhurst; he was elected without a contest, and took his seat in the House of Commons in the following session. In 1885, after the borough of Midhurst was disfranchised, Sir H. T. Holland stood for the new Borough of Hampstead, and beat his opponent, the Marquis of Lorne, by a large majority. In June, 1885, when Lord Salisbury took office, Sir H. T. Holland accepted the post of Financial Secretary to the Treasury, and held that post till the September following, when he was appointed Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education, and became a Privy Councillor. He was again returned for Hampstead in 1886, and again appointed Vice-President of the Council on Education. In January, 1887, he was appointed Secretary of State for the Colonies, and as Secretary of State presided over the Colonial Conference which was held that year in London. In 1888 he was raised to the Peerage and took the title of Knutsford. In 1889 he carried through the House of Lords a Bill for giving a constitutional government to Western Australia, but it was rejected in the House of Commons. It was, however, passed in 1890 by both houses. Baron Knutsford is a Bencher of the Inner Temple, a Deputy-Lieutenant of Middlesex, and a magistrate for the adjoining county of Surrey. He married (1st), in 1852, Elizabeth Margaret, daughter of Mr. N. Hibbert of Watford, and (2nd), in 1858, Margaret Jean, daughter of the late Sir Charles Trevelyan.

KOCH, Professor Dr. Robert, the eminent bacteriologist, was born at Klausthal in Hanover on Dec. 11, 1843. He studied medicine at the University of Göttingen from 1862 to 1866, and having taken his degree, was appointed assistant-surgeon in the General Hospital at Hamburg, and afterwards practised privately at Langenhagen in Hanover, and at Rackewitz in Posen. In 1872, when District Surgeon at Wallstein, he began his bacteriological investigations, and consequently was appointed a member of the Imperial Board of Health. About that time he discovered a method of colouring microscopical preparations, by means of which he, in 1882, isolated the tubercle bacillus, and produced tuberculosis by its inoculation in animals. In 1883 he was appointed a Privy Councillor, and given the direction of the German Cholera Commission, which visited Egypt and India. He then discovered the so-called "comma" cholera bacillus, and for his services received a gift of 100,000 marks (£5000). Two years later he went to France to make further investigations in regard to the cholera bacillus, and on his return was appointed Professor of the newly-founded Institute of Hygiene in Berlin. At the beginning of the year 1890 he became famous for his discovery of the phthisis bacillus, and for a specific agent which arrests the ravages of the same. Invalids crowded to Berlin to be inoculated with Dr. Koch's lymph, of which the secret was closely kept. The German Government even sought to obtain a monopoly of its sale. The lymph was sent to various hospitals in Germany and abroad, notably to King's College, London, and scientific men await results with interest. A committee of French doctors, however, visited Berlin in 1890 in order to study the newest Koch method, and announced, as a result of their investigations, that in several cases the lymph had aggravated the disease it was meant to cure. The celebrated Virchow also maintained that the injected lymph tended to produce centres of irritation. The whole matter is, however, still sub judice, as true consumption takes six years to run its course, and no Koch cure can therefore be considered fairly established before 1896 or thereabouts.

KOLTZOFF-MASSALSKY, Princess von, whose literary pseudonym is the Princess Dora d'Istria, was one of the daughters of Michael Ghika, and niece of Prince Gregory IV., who was the first to spread among the people of Wallachia the liberal institutions of civilization. She was born at Bucharest in 1829, and was married in 1849 to the Russian Prince Koltzoff-Massalsky. Disliking the absolutist system of Government in Russia, she quitted that country in 1855. She spent five years in Belgium and Switzerland, carefully studying the customs and laws, and, having made a tour through Greece, she went to Italy in 1861. At this period Garibaldi addressed to her a letter, requesting her to exert her influence over the Roumanians, to induce them to rise in rebellion against Austria. The Princess, who resides in Florence, is said to be thoroughly acquainted with the Italian, German, French, Roumanian, Greek, Latin, Russian, and Albanian languages, and has written much on the essential and vital questions affecting the political and social future of the Greeks, the Albanians, and the Slavs of Northern Europe. She is an enthusiastic advocate of "Women's Rights," and an indefatigable champion of oppressed nationalities. Since 1850 she has been a contributor to the Revue des Deux Mondes; and she has written many articles in the French, Belgian, Greek, German, Italian, English and American journals. Among her works are: "La Vie Monastique dans l'Eglise Orientale," Brussels, 1855; 2nd edit., Paris and Geneva, 1858; "La Suisse Allemande et l'Ascension du Mönch," 4 vols., Paris and Geneva, 1856, translated into English and German; "Les Femmes en Orient," 2 vols., Zurich, 1858; "Excursions en Roumélie et en Morée," 2 vols., Zurich, 1863; "Des Femmes, par une Femme," 2 vols., Paris and Brussels, 1865; "La Nazionalitá Albanese secondo i canti popolare," Cosenza, 1867; "Discours sur Marco Polo," Trieste, 1869; "Venise en 1867," Leipzig, 1870; "Gli Albanesi in Rumenia," a history of the Princesses Ghika in the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries, published in the Rivista Europea, 1871-73; "Eleonora de Hallingen," and "Ghizlaine," two novels, 1871; "La Poésie des Ottomans," 2nd edit., Paris, 1877; and "The Condition of Women among the Southern Slavs," 1878. A detailed list of her works is given in the "Bibliografia della Principesse Dora d'Istria," 6th edit., Florence, 1873.

KOUROPATKIN, Major-General, of the Russian Army (sometimes spelled Koropatkin and Kuropatkin), said to have been born in 1843, and was first famous as the chief of the staff to General Skobeleff. He was left for dead at the Shipka Pass. After the Russo-Turkish war he wrote a book upon its operations. Although Skobeleff's right-hand man, he held the rank of Captain only, during the Russo-Turkish war; after which, however, he obtained the command of the light troops in Turkestan. He was again with Skobeleff at the attack on Geok Tepe, where he had the rank of Colonel.

KREHL, Ludolf, is Professor of Arabic at Leipzig, and Chief Librarian of the University. For the past 48 years he has been Editor of the Zeitschrift, the organ of the German Oriental Society, and has contributed many important papers to its pages. His principal work is the edition of Bukhäry's "Corpus of Mohammedan Traditions." Other works by Professor Krehl are "The Religion of the Preislamic Arabs," 1863; "Essays on the Koranic Doctrine of Predestination and Faith," 1877; "The Life of Mohammed," 1884, &c.

KROPOTKIN, Prince Petr Alexeievitch, a Russian revolutionist, was born at Moscow, Dec. 9, 1842. At the age of fifteen he entered the Corps of Pages at St. Petersburg, and was promoted Lieutenant in 1862. Attracted by the desire of travelling, he joined a regiment of Cossacks of the Amur, and spent five years in Eastern Siberia, first as Aide-de Camp to the Military Governor of Transbaikalia, and, after 1863, as Attaché for Cossacks' Affairs to the Governor-General of Eastern Siberia. During these five years he thrice visited the Amur and Usuri, and made extensive journeys in Siberia and Mantchuria. In 1863 he crossed North Mantchuria from Transbaikalia to the Amur, viâ Merghen; in the same year he took part in the first steamer-expedition up the Sungari to Ghirin. Accounts of these journeys, and several others, are published in the Memoirs of the Russian and the Siberian Geographical Society, from the former of which he received the Gold Medal. Promoted Captain in 1865, he returned in 1867 to St. Petersburg, and studied four years at the Mathematical Faculty of that University, and acted as Secretary to the Physical Geography Section of the Geographical Society. He then published the reports of his chief expeditions to the Olekma and Vitim Highlands, as well as a general sketch of the Orography of Eastern Siberia. In 1871 he was sent by this society to explore the glacial deposits in Finland and Sweden, the account of which is embodied in a larger work on the Glacial Period, the first volume of which was published by his brother Alexander, in the Memoirs of the Geographical Society, while he was confined in prison. In 1872 he paid a visit to Switzerland and Belgium, and became acquainted with the International Working Men's Association, and joined the most advanced anarchist section of it. He returned to Russia and became a member of the widely-spread organization of the Tchaykovtzy; was arrested in March, 1874, and confined to the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul, where he continued to write on the Glacial Period. He was transferred to the prison of the Military Hospital, and escaped on July 12, 1876, and went to England. The next year he rejoined, in Switzerland, the Jura Federation of the International Working Men's Association, and in Feb., 1879, founded at Geneva the anarchist paper La Révolte, now published in Paris, under the name of La Révolte. Expelled from Switzerland in Sept. 1881, he stayed first for a few months at Thonon, while his wife passed her examination of B.Sc., and then went to reside in England, where he roused an agitation against the Russian Government both in the press (Newcastle Chronicle, Fortnightly Review, and Nineteenth Century), and by a series of lectures at Newcastle and in Scotland. In Oct. 1882, he went again to stay at Thonon, where he was arrested Dec. 20, 1882. On Jan. 19, 1883, he was condemned by the Police Correctionnelle Court at Lyons to five years' imprisonment for participation in the International Working Men's Association. He was liberated on Jan. 15, 1886, by decree of the President of the French Republic. His anarchist papers contributed to La Révolte have been collected by his friend Elisée Reclus, and were published in Oct. 1885, in a separate volume, under the title "Paroles d'un Révolté," parts of which have had a wide circulation in the shape of pamphlets, in English, German, &c. His review-articles on prisons were published in book form, in 1887, under the title "In Russian and French Prisons." In 1892 appeared in French one of his latest nihilistic utterances, entitled "A la Récherche du Pain."

KRÜGER, S. J. Paul, President of the Transvaal Republic, was born at Rastenburg in 1825. In 1872 he became a member of the Executive Council of the South African Republic under President Burgers; and in 1882 he became President for the first time. In 1883 he was re-elected President for five years; and in 1888 was, for the third time, elected President.

KYLLACHY, Lord, William Mackintosh, M.A., LL.D., D.L., Edinburgh and Inverness-shire, was born in Inverness on April 9, 1840, and is the eldest son of the late William Mackintosh, of Inshes House, Inverness-shire. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy, and the University of Edinburgh, and passed as Advocate in 1866; was Procurator of the Church of Scotland, 1880; Sheriff of Ross, Cromarty, and Sutherland, 1881; Dean of Faculty, 1886; and was appointed Judge of the Court of Session, 1889.

L.

LABOUCHERE, Henry, M.P., eldest son of the late John Labouchere, of Broome Park, Surrey, and nephew of the late Lord Taunton, was born in 1831, and educated at Eton. He entered the diplomatic service in 1854, and was successively Attaché at Washington, Munich, Stockholm, Frankfort, St. Petersburg, and Dresden; he was appointed Third Secretary in 1862, Second Secretary at Constantinople in 1863, and retired in 1864. In 1865 he entered Parliament as Liberal member for Windsor; but in April, 1866, he was unseated on petition, and from 1867 to 1868 sat for Middlesex. In February, 1874, he unsuccessfully contested Nottingham, but in 1880 was returned at the head of the poll for Northampton, and has since sat for that borough, his fellow member for some years being the late Charles Bradlaugh. Mr. Labouchere was returned at the last general election as a strong Gladstone Liberal, and was one of the most energetic supporters of the ex-Premier. In February, 1893, he took part in drafting a simple Bill providing that after Jan. 1, 1895, all members of Parliament should be elected by popular vote. Had this Bill become law, it would have had the effect of putting an end to the existence of a hereditary House of Lords. In March, 1894, Mr. Labouchere was conspicuous in his opposition to Lord Rosebery's being appointed Premier. He headed a "cave" of some twenty members who are understood to have been in favour of Sir William Harcourt's premiership, but he eventually withdrew his opposition. He is proprietor and editor of Truth, and was part proprietor of the Daily News.

LAING, Samuel, son of Mr. Samuel Laing, of Rapdale, county Orkney, and nephew of Mr. Malcolm Laing, author of a "History of Scotland," was born at Edinburgh in 1810, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his B.A. degree in 1832, being second wrangler and second Smith's prizeman. He was elected a Fellow of St. John's, resided in the university as a mathematical tutor, and entered at Lincoln's Inn, where he was called to the Bar in 1840, and soon after became private secretary to the late Mr. Labouchere, then President of the Board of Trade. Upon the formation of the Railway Department he was appointed secretary, and thenceforth distinguished himself in Railway legislation under successive presidencies of the Board of Trade. In 1844 he proved the results of his experience in "A Report on British and Foreign Railways," gave much valuable evidence before a committee of the Commons upon Railways, and to his suggestions the humbler classes are mainly indebted for the convenience of parliamentary trains at a minimum rate of payment of one penny per mile. In 1845 Mr. Laing was nominated a member of the Railway Commission, presided over by Lord Dalhousie, and drew up the chief reports on the railway schemes of that period. Had his recommendations been followed, much of the commercial crisis of 1845 would, as has since been proved, have been averted. The reports of the commission having been rejected by Parliament, the commission was dissolved, and Mr. Laing, who resigned his post at the Board of Trade, returned to practice at the Bar. In 1848 he accepted the post of Chairman and Managing Director of the Brighton Railway Company, and under his administration the passenger traffic of the line was in five years nearly doubled. In 1852 he became Chairman of the Crystal Palace Company, from which he retired in 1855, as well as from the chairmanship of the Brighton Railway Company. In July, 1852, Mr. Laing was returned in the Liberal interest for the Wick district, which he represented till 1857, and having been re-elected in April, 1859, resigned in Oct., 1860, on proceeding to India as Finance Minister, and was once more elected in July, 1865. He was an unsuccessful candidate for Wick in Nov. 1868, but in Jan. 1873, he again obtained a seat in the House of Commons as member for Orkney and Shetland. Mr. Laing, who was Financial Secretary to the Treasury from June, 1859, till Oct., 1860, again accepted the chairmanship of the Brighton Railway in 1867; and still holds the appointment. Of late years he has written books, and his "Modern Science and Modern Thought," 1886, has been read with interest. Among his later publications we may mention "A Modern Zoroastrian," 1887; "Problems of the Future and Essays," 1889; "The Antiquity of Man," 1890; and "Human Origins," 1892.

LAMB, Horace, M.A., F.R.S., was born on Nov. 27, 1849, at Stockport, and educated at Stockport Grammar School, Owens College, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was second wrangler and second Smith's prizeman in 1872; Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity in 1872; Professor of Mathematics in the University of Adelaide (South Australia) in 1875; and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1884; and Professor of Mathematics in Owens College, Victoria University, Manchester, 1885. He is the author of a treatise on "Hydrodynamics," and of various papers on Applied Mathematics, principally on Hydrodynamics, Elasticity, and Electro-magnetism. In the year 1890 he was awarded the "Hopkins Prize" of the Cambridge

Philosophical Society "for his various important contributions to Mathematical Physics."

LAMBER, Juliette. See ADAM, MME. EDMOND.

LAMONT, Hon. Daniel Scott, American statesman, was born at Eastlandville, N.Y., Feb. 9, 1851, and was educated at the McGrawville Academy and Union College (Schenectady, N.Y.). He was English reporter and managing editor for some years of the Albany (N.Y.) Argus; Private Secretary and Military Secretary to Mr. Cleveland during his Governorship of N.Y. State (1883-85); and Private Secretary of President Cleveland during his first term of office, 1885-89. At the beginning of Mr. Cleveland's second term of the Presidency (March, 1893), Mr. Lamont entered the Cabinet as Secretary of War, a position which he still retains (1894).

LANCASTER, Albert Benoit Marie, was born at Mons, Belgium, on May 24, 1849, and is Meteorological Inspector and Librarian of the Royal Observatory, Brussels; Director of the journal Ciel et Terre; and Associate of the Liverpool Astronomical Society. M. Lancaster has written many articles on meteorology, earthquakes, and astronomy, in various Belgian scientific publications, and many separate works, e.g.—"Instructions pour les Stations météorologiques belges" (two editions); "Discussion des Orages en Belgique;" "La Pluie en Belgique;" "Quatre Mois au Texas, de la Nouvelle Orléans à la Havane;" also, jointly with the late M. Houzeau, the "Traité élémentaire de Météorologie" (2 editions); "Catalogue des ouvrages d'Astronomie et de Météorologie qui se trouvent dans les principales bibliothèques de la Belgique," and the colossal "Bibliographie générale de l'Astronomie," now completed.

LANE-POOLE, Stanley, born in London, Dec. 18, 1854, eldest son of E. S. Poole, of the Science and Art Department (who died in 1867), was educated at home under the direction of his great-uncle, E. W. Lane, the Orientalist, and proceeded to Corpus Christi College, Oxford, whence he took his B.A. degree in 1878. As early as 1870 his studies had been turned towards numismatics by his uncle, R. S. Poole, the Keeper of Coins in the British Museum, and in 1872 he published his first treatise on Arabic Coins in the Chronicle of the Numismatic Society. In 1874 he was appointed by the Trustees of the British Museum to write the official "Catalogue of the Oriental Coins" in the national collection; the work appeared in 8 volumes, 1875-83, and was couronné by the French Institute. Three volumes of a subsequent "Catalogue of Indian Coins" were published in 1884–1892, and two volumes of "Additions to the Oriental Collection" in 1890. A "Catalogue of the Arabic Glass Weights in the British Museum," making the fourteenth volume of catalogue, followed in 1891; and a "Catalogue of the Mohammedan Coins in the Bodleian" was published in 1888. On the death of Mr. Lane, in 1876, the duty of completing his great Arabic Lexicon devolved on his grand-nephew, who brought out vols. 6-8, between 1877 and 1893, and published a "Life of E. W. Lane" in the former year. In 1883 he was sent to Egypt by the Science and Art Department, for which he wrote a handbook of the "Art of the Saracens," 1886. With a view to collecting materials for a Corpus of Mohammedan numismatics, he visited Russia in 1886, and examined the coin cabinets of Stockholm, St. Petersburg, and Constantinople. In 1888 he published in 2 vols. the "Life of Stratford Canning, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe," from the ambassador's private and official papers, of which a popular edition appeared in 1890; and in the latter year he edited the despatches of Sir G. F. Bowen, the colonial governor, and published a memoir of Sir Richard Church, the Generalissimo of the Greeks in the War of Independence. His latest biography (1894) is the "Life of Sir Harry Parkes, late Minister to China and Japan, in which Mr. F. V. Dickens collaborated. His chief works, besides those already mentioned, are "Speeches and Table-talk of the Prophet Mohammed" (Golden Treasury Series); and "Le Koran, sa Poésie et ses Lois" (Bibliothèque Elzévirienne), 1882; "Arabian Society in the Middle Ages," "Studies in a Mosque," 1883, 2nd. ed., 1893; "Picturesque Egypt" (edited by Sir C. Wilson), and "Social Life in Egypt," 1883; "Prose Writings of Jonathan Swift," 1884; "Swift's Letters and Journals," "Coins and Medals: their place in History and Art," 1885; "The Moors in Spain," 1886; "Turkey," 1888; "The Barbary Corsairs," 1890; "History of the Mogul Emperors," 1892; "Cairo," 1892; "Auzangib" (Rulers of India), 1893; "The Mohammedan Dynasties," 1893. In all, he has published about sixty volumes. He is also a contributor to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," "Chambers's Encyclopædia," the "Dictionary of National Biography," and is a member of the Russian Archæological and other learned societies, and of the Athenaeum Club, and an honorary member of the Egyptian Commission for the preservation of the monuments of Arab art.

LANG, Andrew, M.A., hon. LL.D., critic, poet, and anthropologist, was born at Selkirk, March 31, 1844, and educated at the Edinburgh Academy, St. Andrews University, and Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained first classes in Classical Moderations and the Final Schools. In 1868 he was elected a Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. In 1888 he was appointed Gifford Lecturer, at St. Andrews University, on Natural Religion, and delivered his inaugural address on Jan. 17, 1889. He has published, in verse, "Ballades in Blue China," 1881; and "Helen of Troy," 1882; "Rhymes à la Mode," 1884; and "Grass of Parnassus," 1888; and in prose, "Custom and Myth," 1884; "Myth, Ritual, and Religion," 1887. He has published also a prose translation of the "Odyssey" (with Prof. Butcher), and of the "Iliad" (with Messrs. E. Myers and Walter Leaf), and of "Theocritus," "Aucassin and Nicolette," "Perrault's Popular Tales," "The Gold of Fairnilee," 1888; "Lost Leaders" (a reprint of Daily News articles), 1889; "Prince Prigio," "Blue Fairy Tale Book," "Red Fairy Tale Book;" "True Stories;" and "Cinderella: Three hundred and forty-five variants of," 1893; and, in collaboration with Mr. Rider Haggard, in 1890, "The World's Desire;" also "The Life, Letters, and Diaries of Sir Stafford Northcote, the First Lord Iddesleigh," 1890, and, quite recently, a volume of verse, entitled "Ban et Arrière Ban," and a discussion of the spiritualist controversy, entitled "Cock-Lane and Common Sense." Among other recent works of his may be mentioned "Famous Golf Links," "Angling Sketches," "The Blue Poetry Book," and "Essays in Little," 1891, his introductory essays and notes to numerous books including the Border Edition of the Waverley Novels, 1892, and his series of "Fairy Books" of many colours. Mr. Lang writes literary articles for the Daily News, and is a frequent contributor to periodical literature. The monthly causeries "At the Sign of the Ship," in Longmans Magazine, are from his pen.

LANGE, Fräulein Helene, was born at Oldenburg in 1848. She stands in the foremost ranks of those who represent the new ideas of women's education in Germany. After the death of her father, when she was sixteen, a wish began to make itself felt in her to lead a useful life, to test her strength and capabilities, to create for herself a world with which she could feel in sympathy, and this at last induced her to take up the life of a teacher, a choice which proved a happy one in every way. In 1870 she settled permanently at Berlin, and, after duly qualifying for the profession, she was called to the head of a training college for teachers, which, under her distinguished leadership, very soon established her reputation. Her position brought her into contact with colleagues of all shades of opinion, and she felt that something must be done to stop the mischief of a system which leaves girls' education in the hands of men. She consulted, and earnestly deliberated with, women whom she knew to be thoroughly of one mind with herself, and in 1887 a petition was laid before the Prussian House of Deputies, signed by Frl. Lange and others, praying for a reform of the obnoxious system, and for institutions where women might qualify for appointments as Oberlehrerinnen. The petition was accompanied by a pamphlet, written by Frl. Lange, in which she thoroughly exposed the hollowness and mischievous tendency of girls' education as then carried on, and at the same time warmly vindicated the right of women to educate their own sex. The plain truth had never been told so plainly before, and it was enough to set public opinion on fire even outside the profession. Although the petition was unsuccessful, the Government, in curious contrast to their previous uncompromising attitude, soon after sanctioned the opening of classes for history, German, and literature for women students at the Victoria Lyceum, which was to be equivalent to university study, and by which the capacities of women for serious study were to be tested. A further step towards a realisation of Frl. Lange's plans was the opening of an institution where women might receive instruction in those branches of science which are the indispensable basis for any profession. These classes, called Realkurse (comprising mathematics, chemistry, natural sciences, national economy, and languages), were opened in Oct., 1889, in the presence of the Empress Frederick, on which occasion Frl. Lange delivered an address on the necessity of training women's faculties, which is greater in our day than it has ever been before. The advancement of women's education and culture is Frl. Lange's one aim and object, to which she makes every other interest subservient. She is identified with every movement tending to strengthen the capacities of women and to widen their spheres of influence and usefulness. The small band of those who are working for a near solution of the Woman's Question in Germany is increasing rapidly, and their eyes are fixed with hope and confidence on Frl. Lange, who has shown ability and courage to take the initiative where it is necessary.

LANGEVIN, The Hon. Sir Hector Louis, Q.C., M.P., K.C.M.G., C.B., LL.D., born in Quebec, Aug. 25, 1826, was educated at the Seminary in his native city, studied law at Montreal, and was called to the Bar in 1850. He was created Q.C. March 30, 1864. He was for some time chief editor of the Mélanges Religieux, Montreal; was afterwards one of the editors of Le Courrier du Canada, Quebec, and wrote "Droit Administratif des Paroisses, or Parochial Laws and Customs of Lower Canada," 1862, second enlarged edition, 1875. Mr. Langevin, elected Mayor of Quebec in Dec., 1857, was re-elected in 1858 and 1859, has filled the chair of the Institut Canadien, and has been President of the St. Jean Baptiste Society of Quebec. He was elected, Jan. 2, 1858, member of the Provincial Parliament, by the county of Dorchester, and has always supported the Conservative party. In March, 1864, Mr. Langevin became Solicitor-General for Lower Canada, with a seat in the Cabinet in Sir E. P. Tache's Administration, and exchanged the former post for the Postmaster-Generalship in Nov., 1866. He was one of the Canadian delegates to the conference at Prince Edward Island, on the question of the Confederation of the British North American Provinces in the summer of 1866, and afterwards to the Quebec Conference, and repaired to London with other commissioners towards the end of that year, in order to complete the arrangements. On the organisation of the Dominion Cabinet in 1867, Mr. Langevin became a Privy Councillor, Secretary of State of Canada, Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs, and Registrar-General; and in Nov., 1869, exchanged that office for that of Minister of Public Works, which he retained until the fall of the Macdonald Government in 1873. At the general elections of 1878 he was returned for Three Rivers (which he still represents), and was sworn in as Postmaster-General in the Liberal-Conservative Government of that year. This portfolio he resigned, in May, 1879, for that of the Ministry of Public Works, which he continued to fill until he resigned the office in Aug., 1891. He was made a C.B. after the arrangements for the organisation of the Dominion Government, and, in 1881, had the order of K.C.M.G. conferred upon him. He is also a Knight Commander of the Roman Order of St. Gregory the Great, and LL.D. of Laval University.

LANGFORD, John Alfred, LL.D., F.R.H.S., was born at Birmingham, Sept. 12, 1823, and was educated at the Mechanics' Institute; but, in 1851, took private lessons in classics and mathematics from Professor Lund, at Queen's College in that town. He was a member of the Birmingham Free Libraries Committee, 1864-74; teacher of English Literature in the Birmingham and Midland Institute, 1868-74; a Fellow of the Royal Historical Society from its foundation; was elected member of the Birmingham School Board in 1874, and re-elected in 1876, 1879, 1882, 1885, and 1888. In 1891 he retired, after having been a member of the Board for seventeen years. In 1892 he was elected a member of the Yardley School Board, and was appointed Chairman of the Attendance and Appeals Committee. He has been local editor of the Birmingham Daily Gazette, and the Birmingham Morning News. Dr. Langford is the author of "Religious Scepticism and Infidelity," 1850; "A Drama of Life and Aspiranda;" and "Religion and Education in Relation to the People," 1852; "English Democracy," 1855; "The Lamp of Life: a Poem," 1856; "Poems of the Fields and Town," 1859; "Shelley, and other Poems," 1860; "Prison Books, and their Authors," 1861; "Pleasant Spots and Famous Places," 1862; "A Century of Birmingham Life," 2 vols., 1868; "Modern Birmingham," 2 vols., 1874-7; "Staffordshire and Warwickshire, Past and Present," 2 vols., 1874; "Birmingham: a Handbook," 1879; "The Praise of Books," 1880; "Child-Life as learned from Children," 1884; "On Sea and Shore," 1887; "Heroes and Martyrs, and other Poems," 1890. He has contributed to the last edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica;" read a number of papers at the meetings of the Birmingham Archæological Society, published in its Transactions; and is the author of several pamphlets on current topics. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Greeneville and Tusculum College in 1869.

LANGLEY, John Newport, M.A., F.R.S., was born at Newbury on Nov. 10, 1852. He is the second son of John Langley, by his wife, Mary Groom, eldest daughter of Richard Groom, formerly Assistant-Secretary in the Tax Department, Somerset House. Mr. Langley's earlier education was carried on partly at home and partly at the Exeter Grammar School.

In Oct., 1871, he entered at St. John's College, Cambridge; was elected a Foundation Scholar in May, 1874; and obtained a First Class in the Natural Science Tripos in December of the same year. He was elected a Fellow of Trinity College in Oct., 1877, and a Fellow of the Royal Society in June, 1883. In 1884, he was appointed a Lecturer in Natural Sciences in Trinity College, and a Lecturer in Histology in the University. On the lapsing of his Fellowship in 1885 he was re-elected. Mr. Langley's observations have been chiefly directed to determining the fundamental changes which take place in glands during secretion and the nature of these changes. His principal papers on this subject are: "On the Salivary Glands" (Proc. Roy. Soc., and Jour. Physiol., 1879; Proc. Roy. Soc., 1886; Jour. Physiol., 1889); "On Gastric Glands" (Trans. Roy. Soc., 1881; Jour. Physiol., 1882; and, with Dr. Sewall, Proc. Roy. Soc., and Jour. Physiol., 1879); "On the Liver" (Proc. Roy. Soc., 1882 and 1885), together with a series of six papers on the Physiology of the Salivary Secretion (Jour. Physiol., 1878, 1885, 1888 to 1890). He has written also in connection with this subject, "On the Destruction of Ferments in the Alimentary Canal" (Jour. Physiol., 1882); with Miss Eves "On the Amylolytic Action of Saliva" (Jour. Physiol., 1883); with Mr. Edkins, "On Pepsinogen and Pepsin" (Jour. Physiol., 1886); with Mr. Fletcher, "On the Secretion of Salts in Saliva" (Trans. Roy. Soc., 1888). Mr. Langley has also made investigation with regard to the physiological action of poisons, and the central nervous system. On the former subject may be mentioned: Pilocarpin (Jour. Anat. and Physiol., 1876); The Antagonism of Poisons (Jour. Physiol., 1880); Pituri and Nicotin (Jour. Physiol., 1890), in conjunction with Mr. Dickinson; on the latter subject, "The Structure of the Dog's Brain" (Jour. Physiol., 1883); "Secondary Degeneration" (Jour. Physiol., 1884), made in conjunction with Mr. Sherrington; and (Jour. Physiol., 1890), made in conjunction with Mr. Grünbaum. He has much interested himself in Hypnotism; and has recently, with the aid of Mr. Dickinson, made observations by a new method upon the connections of nerve-cells in peripheral ganglia (Proc. Roy. Soc., 1889 and 1890; Jour. Physiol., 1890). Mr. Langley is the joint author with Professor Foster of a "Practical Physiology and Histology," now in its sixth edition.

LANGLEY, Samuel Pierpont, Ph.D. LL.D., American astronomer, was born at Roxbury, Boston (Mass.), Aug. 22, 1834. Upon graduating from the Boston Latin School he devoted himself at first to civil engineering, and then for a time to architecture, but soon abandoned these professions for astronomy. In 1863 he went to Europe, and upon his return to America in 1865 became an assistant in the Harvard observatory. He remained there, however, only for a few months, being called to the professorship of Mathematics in the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis. From 1867 to 1887 he occupied the chair of astronomy in the Western University of Pennsylvania (at Pittsburg); and in Jan., 1887, was appointed Assistant-Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, succeeding to the full secretaryship in Nov., 1887. From this position he retired in 1894. Professor Langley has accompanied many of the parties sent out by the U. S. Government to observe eclipses of the sun in various parts of the world, the study of that body being the work to which he has largely devoted himself, and by which he is best known. Besides his lectures and addresses in America, he in 1885 lectured before the Royal Institution in London, and in 1882 made an address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science at Southampton. He received, in 1886, the first Henry Draper medal awarded by the National Academy of Sciences, and in 1887 the Rumford medals from both the Royal Society of London and the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He is a member of many scientific societies, American and European. The degree of Ph.D. was conferred upon him by Stevens Institute of Technology in 1882, and that of LL.D. by Harvard University in 1888, as well as by other institutions of learning. In addition to his numerous strictly scientific papers, he published in 1884-5 in The Century Magazine some more popular articles on "The New Astronomy."

LANGTRY, Lillie, actress, is the daughter of the Rev. W. C. Le Breton, Dean of Jersey, and was born in 1852. In 1874 she was married to Mr. Langtry, a native of Belfast, and about 1881, after having been for some years celebrated for her beauty in London society, determined to go on the stage. Mrs. Langtry made her first public appearance on Dec. 15, 1881, at the Haymarket Theatre, in "She Stoops to Conquer." In January of the following year Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft engaged Mrs. Langtry to play at the Haymarket Theatre, and she appeared in the character of Blanche Haye in Robertson's play of "Ours." She appeared as Rosalind in "As You Like It," at the Imperial Theatre, on Sept. 23, 1882, and subsequently went to America. Mrs. Langtry has twice leased the Prince's Theatre (now the Prince of Wales' Theatre). At the end of the summer season of 1885 she went once more to America. In 1891 she leased the Princess's Theatre in London, and appeared as Cleopatra in "Anthony and Cleopatra."

LANKESTER, Professor Edwin Ray, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S., eldest son of Edwin Lankester, M.D., F.R.S., coroner for Middlesex, was born May 15, 1847, at 22, Old Burlington Street, London, and educated at St. Paul's School, London, and Christ Church, Oxford. He was appointed Fellow and Lecturer of Exeter College, Oxford, in 1872, and Professor of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy in University College, London, in 1874. He is an honorary LL.D. of the University of St. Andrews (1885), Examiner in the Universities of Cambridge, London, and New Zealand, and one of the Honorary Fellows of Exeter College, Oxford, his colleagues being the late Ld. Chf. Justice, Mr. Froude, Sir E. Burne-Jones, Mr. William Morris, and the Regius Professor of Divinity. In 1878 the professorship in London held by Mr. Lankester was selected by Mr. Jodrell for endowment, with the interest of £7,000, and subsequently large laboratories and a museum adapted both to class teaching and to the pursuit of original investigations in the field of natural history were placed at his disposal by the Council of the College. Professor Lankester was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1875. He has published more than a hundred scientific memoirs (dating from 1865), mostly on comparative anatomy and palæontology, the chief of which are "A Monograph of the Fossil Fishes of the Old Red Sandstone of Britain," Part I., 1870; "Comparative Longevity," 1871; "Contributions to the Developmental History of the Mollusca" (Philos. Trans. Royal Society), 1875; "Degeneration, a chapter in Darwinism," 1880; "Limulus an Arachnid," 1881; "Rhabdopleura and Amphioxus?" 1889; and the English editions of Haeckel's "History of Creation," and of Gegenbaur's "Comparative Anatomy." Besides these he has published numerous shorter memoirs, and has constantly contributed reviews and articles to the pages of the Athenæum, the Academy, and Nature, and is the author of the articles Hydrozoa, Mollusca, Polyzoa, Protozoa, Vertebrata and Zoology in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." Since 1869, when he joined his father, the late Dr. Edwin Lankester, in that work, he has been chief editor of the Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science. During the years 1870-74, he was one of the sectional secretaries of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, and organised the annual museum which has become a feature of the meetings of that body. In 1883 he was President of the Biological Section of the Association when it met at Southport. In the autumn of 1876 Professor Lankester prosecuted the spirit-medium Slade, and procured his conviction by Mr. Flowers at Bow Street, as "a common rogue and vagabond." He has also taken a prominent part in the defence of scientific experiment on live animals, and in the discussion of University Reform. In April, 1882, the Regius chair of Natural History in the University of Edinburgh was, on the death of Sir Wyville Thomson, offered by the Home Secretary to Professor Lankester, and accepted by him. This had been the most coveted post to which a naturalist could aspire on account both of its pecuniary value and of its educational importance. It was, however, intimated by the Government, at the moment of making the appointment, that the division of the chair and the alteration of the curriculum in such a way as greatly to reduce the professor's income from students' fees, were in contemplation. Finding that he would be unable in these circumstances to develop the museum and laboratories of the University in a satisfactory manner, on account of the general uncertainty as to the contemplated changes, Professor Lankester resigned the Regius Professorship a fortnight after his appointment, and was immediately re-elected to the Jodrell Professorship in London. In November of the same year he was elected by the Royal Society to be a member of the Council of that body, and for a second term of service in Nov., 1888. In 1884 Professor Lankester founded the Marine Biological Association, of which he is President. The Association has erected at Plymouth, on a site granted by the War Office, a large laboratory and aquarium for the study of marine fishes and shell-fish. The Association has obtained support from the Fishmongers and other City Companies, and from the Government, so that it has been able to spend £12,000 on the laboratory, and has an income of £1,000 a year to maintain it. In 1885 the Council of the Royal Society awarded to Professor Lankester one of the Royal Medals in recognition of his discoveries in the field of Zoology and Palæontology. In 1891 Professor Lankester was appointed to the Linacre Professorship of Human and Comparative Anatomy at Oxford. In 1890 he published "The Advancement of Science," and in 1891 issued in book-form his Zoological articles in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," Ed. IX.

LANMAN, Charles, was born in Monroe, Michigan, June 17, 1819. He received an academical education at Plainfield, Connecticut, and became successively a clerk in a mercantile house in New York, a journalist, traveller, private secretary to Daniel Webster, and librarian of the House of Representatives. From 1871 to 1882 he was the American Secretary of the Japanese legation at Washington, and since then has devoted himself to landscape painting, and writing a large number of books, of which the most important was his "Dictionary of Congress," of which a number of editions were issued until it was superseded, in 1876, by "Biographical Annals of the Civil Government of the United States." Several of his books have been republished in Great Britain. The total number of his works was about thirty, and of these twenty-one are in the National Library at Washington. His biographies include such names as Daniel Webster, William Woodbridge, Octavius Perinchief, and J. B. Lockwood; and among the localities that he was the first American to describe as a tourist and angler are, the Saguenay River, the Upper Mississippi and Lake Superior, the Rivers of Florida, the mountains of North Carolina and Virginia, and Block Island.

LANSDELL, The Rev. Henry, D.D., is known as author, editor, traveller, and divine. He was born at Tenterden, Kent, received his early education from his father, and subsequently studied at St. John's College of Divinity, Highbury, whence he was ordained in 1867 to the Curacy of Greenwich. In 1869 he was appointed Metropolitan Association Secretary to the Society for Irish Church Missions, and during the following ten years preached and spoke on its behalf in 12 Countries, 40 Counties, 300 Churches, &c. In 1873 he planned, and, as Honorary Secretary, was the principal worker in founding, the Church Homiletical Society, which had for its object the improvement in preaching and pastoral work of the younger clergy and candidates for Holy Orders, and which brought within its membership or influence about one-fifth of the English Clergy. In connection with the foregoing society he originated, and for twelve years was editor of, the Clergyman's Magazine, of which about 300,000 copies were circulated among the English and American clergy throughout the world. He edited also about the same time a volume of "Homiletical and Pastoral Lectures," and "Three Lectures on Preaching, delivered in St. Paul's Cathedral." Dr. Lansdell is, however, better known as traveller and author than as editor. It occurred to him to make his holidays a means of philanthropic and religious usefulness, partly by the visitation of hospitals and prisons, in which he had recently become interested, and partly by the distribution therein, and elsewhere, of religious literature. Accordingly he visited, in 1874, prisons in Scandinavia, Finland, Russia, and Poland; in 1876, Norway, Sweden, and both shores of the Gulf of Bothnia; in 1877, during the Russo-Turkish War, Austria-Hungary, Roumania, and Sclavonia, and, in 1878, St. Petersburg and Archangel. The foregoing were tours, each of a few weeks only, after which he was asked whether he could not do something for Siberia. This led, in 1870, to his traversing the Eastern Hemisphere in a tolerably straight line from Calais to the Pacific, crossing America, and in seven months finishing the circuit of the world. Another journey of five months took him, in 1882, through Russian Central Asia, including Kuldja, Bokhara, and Khiva; and this was followed by a tour of three months, in 1885, through eight of the kingdoms of Europe. Among the results of these journeys may be mentioned in gross the distribution in public institutions, and elsewhere, of about 150,000 publications, in twenty languages, and in particular the providing at least one copy of some portion of Holy Scripture for each room of every hospital and prison throughout Siberia, Russian Central Asia, Finland, and, less completely, the Caucasus and certain parts of European Russia. Accounts of these travels have appeared in about 100 articles, reports, papers, &c., in periodical literature, the Times, and other newspapers; also in two vols., published 1882, entitled "Through Siberia" (now as one volume in its fifth edition), and translated into German, Swedish, and Danish; also, in 1885, "Russian Central Asia," in two vols., translated likewise into German, and abridged into one vol., published in 1887, and entitled "Through Central Asia; with an Appendix on the Russo-Afghan Frontier." As a parochial clergyman, in addition to his curacy at Greenwich, Dr. Lansdell served as Assistant Minister of St. Germans, Blackheath, in 1880-2; and in 1885-6 was in sole charge of St. Peter's, Eltham; after leaving which he was asked whether he would "come out and lead the way," by a Pioneer Mission through Mongolia towards Tibet. This led to the last and greatest of his honorary missionary journeys, namely, of 950 days, through five of the kingdoms of Europe, four of Africa, and every kingdom of Asia, in the course of which he distributed Scriptures in eleven languages through five new countries, and also came in contact with about four hundred missionaries, residing at one hundred and seventy mission stations, in one hundred and ten localities, and working under fifty societies. He also collected some few thousands of specimens of the fauna of Russian and Chinese Turkistan. In 1892 Dr. Lansdell was appointed by the Trustees, Chaplain of Morden College, Blackheath, S.E., where he now resides. In the same year he married Mary Ann, eldest child of Charles and Mary Ann Colyer of Farningham and Greenhithe, and proceeded on a tour to Spain and Portugal, thereby completing his visits to every kingdom of Asia and Europe. In 1893 he published another considerable work, in two volumes, entitled "Chinese Central Asia: a Ride to Little Tibet," a record of part of his last journey in Asia. Dr. Lansdell was elected a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society in 1876, and in 1880 became a member of the General Committee of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, before the annual meeting of which, at Swansea, he read a paper. In 1882 he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from the Archbishop of Canterbury, confirmed by Her Majesty's letters patent. He is, by invitation of the Council, member of the Victoria Institute, member of the Royal Asiatic, and sundry other societies.

LANSDOWNE (Marquis of), The Right Hon. Henry Charles Keith Fitz-Maurice, G.C.M.G., G.M.S.I., G.I.M.I.E., late Viceroy and Governor-General of India, eldest son of the fourth Marquis of Lansdowne, K.G., by his second wife, the Hon. Emily Jane, eldest daughter of the Comte de Flahault and the Baroness Keith and Nairne, was born in Jan., 1845. He was educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford (M.A. 1884; Hon. D.C.L. 1888; Hon. LL.D. McGill University, Canada, 1884), and was formerly a Captain in the Wilts Yeomanry Cavalry. He succeeded his father in the Marquisate and other titles in 1866. Lord Lansdowne was a Lord of the Treasury from 1868 to 1872, and Under-Secretary for War from the latter date till 1874. He was appointed Under-Secretary for India when Mr. Gladstone took office again in 1880, but retired two months afterwards (July 8), owing to a disagreement with the Government on the subject of the Compensation for Disturbance (Ireland) Bill. In May, 1883, the Queen approved the appointment of Lord Lansdowne as Governor-General of Canada, in succession to the Marquis of Lorne, who retired in Oct. of that year, on the completion of the period for which he was appointed. Lord Lansdowne was created G.C.M.G. a few months later. At the expiration of his term of office as Governor-General of Canada (the chief events of which were the suppression of Riel's rebellion in the North-west, the execution of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the satisfactory settlement of the long-standing controversy concerning the North American Fisheries), Lord Lansdowne was appointed by Her Majesty Viceroy and Governor-General of India. His excellency took his seat at Calcutta on Dec. 10, 1888. In Dec., 1893, he was succeeded by the Earl of Elgin. He was appointed a Trustee of the National Gallery in 1894. His lordship is a magistrate for Wiltshire, and also for the county of Kerry. He married, in 1869, Lady Maud Evelyn Hamilton, youngest daughter of the first Duke of Abercorn.

LA RAMÉ, Mdlle. Louise de, commonly known to her readers as "Ouida," was born at Bury St. Edmunds in 1840. At a very early age she commenced authoress, and contributed to Colburn's New Monthly. She has written a large number of popular novels, some of which possess high literary charm. Of these the principal are "Held in Bondage," 1863; "Chandos," 1866; "Idalia," 1867; "Under Two Flags," 1867; "Folle Farine," 1871; "In a Winter City," 1876; "In Maremma," 1882; "Bimbi" (stories for children), 1882; "Wanda," 1883; "Othmar," "Guilderoy," 1889; "Signa," 1875; "Moths," 1880; "Syrlin," "Ruffino," "Santa Barbara," "The Tower of Taddeo," "Two Offenders" (tales), 1894. "Ouida" lives in Florence and is a well-known figure in Anglo-Florentine circles. Her novels deal with all phases of European society, and the scenes of many of them are laid in Italy.

LASCELLES, Sir Frank Cavendish, is the second son of the late Right Hon.

William Sebright Lascelles, M.P., third son of the second Earl of Harewood, and of Lady Caroline Georgiana Howard, daughter of the sixth Earl of Carlisle. Born in 1841, he entered the Diplomatic Service at the age of 20, and was soon afterwards appointed Attaché at Madrid. Until 1878 he filled many subordinate posts in Paris, Berlin, Copenhagen, Rome, Washington and Athens, and in all these varied positions gained the character of an able, painstaking diplomatist, especially when he acted as Chargé d'Affaires. In 1878 and 1879 he on three occasions for several months was Agent and Consul-General in Egypt, and in that capacity convinced his official superiors of his fitness for higher and more independent spheres of action. Accordingly he was sent to Bulgaria in November, 1879, and displayed in that difficult position so much ability and discretion that in 1886 he was made a K.C.M.G., and on Jan. 1, 1887, was appointed to the vacant post of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Bucharest. From thence in July, 1891, he was transferred to the Court of Teheran, succeeding Sir Henry Drummond Wolff there as Minister Plenipotentiary. His activity and vigilance in Persia caused him to be so much appreciated by the Foreign Office that they appointed him to one of the most important posts in the Diplomatic Service. He was made Ambassador to St. Petersburg at the close of 1893, in succession to the late Sir Robert Morier.

LATHAM, Professor Peter Wallwork, M.A., M.B., F.R.C.P., the eldest son of Mr. John Latham, a physician practising in Wigan, Lancashire, was born Oct. 21, 1832. He was educated at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge; and took the B.A. degree in 1858 as 19th Wrangler; and in 1859 was placed first, with distinction in five subjects, in the Natural Science Tripos. In 1860 he was elected into a Medical Fellowship at Downing College. He studied Medicine at Cambridge, Glasgow, and at St. Bartholomew's, London; graduated as M.A. and M.B. in 1861, and as M.D. in 1864. In 1866 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of London, where he has held the offices of Councillor 1886-7, and Censor 1887-8-9; and in 1886 delivered the Croonian Lectures; and in 1888 the Harveian Oration. In 1868 he was appointed Deputy for the Downing Professor of Medicine in the University of Cambridge, and succeeded Dr. Fisher in the Professorship in 1874. He has twice been an Examiner for the Natural Science Tripos, and on several occasions for Medical Degrees at Cambridge. He is Senior Physician to Addenbrooke's Hospital, and has published several works and papers relating to medicine: "On Nervous or Sick Headache," 1873; "On the Formation of Uric Acid in Animals," 1884; "On some Points in the Pathology of Rheumatism, Gout and Diabetes," Croonian Lectures, 1886; articles in "Quain's Dictionary of Medicine," and the Harveian Oration for 1888.

LAURIER, The Hon. Wilfrid, Canadian statesman, was born at St. Lin, Quebec, Nov. 20, 1841. He was educated at L'Assomption College, graduated in law at McGill University in 1864, and was admitted to the Bar in 1864. From 1871 to 1874 he was in the Quebec Assembly. He then entered the Dominion Parliament, and in 1877 was appointed Minister of Inland Revenue in the Mackenzie Government, a position which he held until the resignation of the Ministry in 1878. Since that year he has held no office, though he has continued to sit in Parliament. M. Laurier at one time edited Le Défricheur. On the retirement of Mr. Blake from the Liberal leadership in 1887, M. Laurier, who had already been recognized as the head of the French-Canadian wing of that party, was unanimously chosen to succeed him.

LAWES, Sir John Bennet, Bart., F.R.S., LL.D., son of the late Mr. John Bennet Lawes, of Rothamsted, Hertfordshire, by Marianne, daughter of Mr. John Sherman of Drayton, Oxfordshire, and widow of the Rev. D. G. Knox, was born at Rothamsted Dec. 28, 1814; and succeeded to his estate there in 1822. He was educated at Eton and at Brasenose College, Oxford. On leaving the University he spent some time in London, for the purpose of studying in a practical manner the science of chemistry. In Oct., 1834, he started regular experiments in agricultural chemistry on taking possession of his property and home at Rothamsted, and from that date up to the present time he has unceasingly been applying his scientific knowledge to the solution of questions affecting practical agriculture. Among his earliest experiments, the effect of bones as a manure on land occupied his attention for some time. Mr. Lawes afterwards established large works in the neighbourhood of London for the manufacture of superphosphate of lime, by which name the manure is known which has produced quite a revolution in the science of agriculture. In 1843 Mr. Lawes engaged the assistance of Dr. Gilbert, the present director of Rothamsted Farm, and undertook with him a systematic series of agricultural investigations in the field, the feeding-shed, and the laboratory. Mr. Lawes was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1854, and in 1867 the Royal Medal was awarded to him conjointly with Dr. Gilbert by the council of the society. He also received a Gold Medal from the Imperial Agricultural Society of Russia. In June, 1881, the Emperor of Germany by Imperial decree awarded the Gold Medal of Merit for agriculture to Mr. Lawes and Dr. Gilbert jointly. In 1893 the Society of Arts awarded the Albert Medal to Sir John Lawes and Professor Gilbert for their joint services to scientific agriculture. The results of the Rothamsted investigations are to be found in the "Journals of the Royal Agricultural Society of England," the "Reports of the British Association for the Advancement of Science," the "Journal of the Chemical Society of London," the "Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society of London," the "Journal of the Society of Arts," the "Journal of the Horticultural Society of London," the Edinburgh Veterinary Review, the "Reports of the Royal Dublin Society," the Philosophical Magazine, the Agricultural Gazette, the Chemical News, and in official reports and scattered pamphlets and newspaper letters. In 1870 he published his views on the valuation of unexhausted manures; and in 1873 wrote an interesting pamphlet on the same subject with reference to the Irish Land Act of 1870. In 1892 he published a work on the Rothamsted Farm. He was created a baronet in May, 1882.

LAWRANCE, The Hon. Sir John Compton, one of the Justices of the High Court, is the only son of Mr. T. M. Lawrance, late of Dunsby Hall, Lincolnshire, and was born in 1832, was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1859, was created a Queen's Counsel in 1887, and was elected a Bencher of his Inn in 1879. He has been for some years the leader of the Midland Circuit. He has held the appointment of Recorder of Derby (1879); represented South Lincolnshire in the Conservative interest from 1880 until 1885; and sat, until 1892, for the Stamford division of the county, his return being unopposed in 1886. He was made one of the Justices of the High Court in Feb., 1890.

LAWRENCE, William, The Right Rev., S.T.D., D.D., son of Amos A. and Sarah E. Lawrence, was born in Boston, May 30, 1850. He was graduated from Harvard in 1871; studied for the ministry at Andover, the Divinity School in Philadelphia, and the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, taking the degree of B.D. at the latter place in 1875. He was ordained deacon in 1875 and entered the priesthood in 1876. On April 1, 1876, he entered upon the duties of assistant minister of Grace Church, Lawrence, Mass., and accepted the position of Rector of the same church in March, 1877. In 1884 he became Professor of Homiletics and Pastoral Care in the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Mass., and accepted the office of Dean in addition to the above Chair in 1889. From 1888 to 1893 he was Preacher to Harvard University. In 1888 he published the "Life of Amos A. Lawrence," and also a pamphlet on "Proportional Representation in the House of Deputies of the General Convention." The degree of S.T.D. was conferred upon him in 1890 by Hobart College, and that of D.D. by Harvard in 1893. He was consecrated seventh Bishop of Massachusetts, Oct. 5, 1893.

LAWSON, Sir Wilfrid, Bart., M.P., son of the late Sir Wilfrid Lawson, of Aspatria, Cumberland, was born Sept. 4, 1829, and succeeded to the title and estates on his father's death, in 1867. From an early age he has been an enthusiastic advocate of the temperance movement, and is now the leader and President of the United Kingdom Alliance, and is its spokesman in Parliament. At the general election of 1859 he stood, in conjunction with his uncle, the late Sir James Graham, as a candidate for the representation of Carlisle, and succeeded by a narrow majority over his opponent, Mr. Hodgson. In March, 1864, he first moved for leave to introduce the measure now so well known as the Permissive Bill, the main principle of which is the giving to two-thirds of the inhabitants of any parish or township an absolute veto upon all licences for the sale of intoxicating liquors granted within their districts. It was supported by forty members. In 1865 he was displaced at the general election by his former opponent, Mr. Hodgson; but, at the general election of 1868, on appealing to the enlarged constituency as a supporter of Mr. Gladstone, he was returned at the head of the poll. Sir Wilfrid Lawson succeeded, on June 18, 1880, in carrying his "Local Option" resolution by a majority of 26, and in 1881 and 1883 he again got it passed. In 1885 he stood for the new Cockermouth division of Cumberland, but was defeated by a Conservative majority of 10. In 1886, as a Gladstonian Liberal, he gained the seat by a large majority, and was again returned in 1892. Sir Wilfrid is an advanced Radical, and is in favour of the Disestablishment of the Church, and of the abolition of the House of Lords and of standing armies.

LEA, Arthur Sheridan, M.A., Sc.D., F.R.S., was born in New York, of English parents, on Dec. 1, 1853. He came to England in 1859, where he has since resided, and was educated in a private school, and at the Royal Institution School, Liverpool. He entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in October, 1872, reading at first for Honours in Mathematics. In his second year he turned his attention to Natural Science, and was elected to a Foundation Scholarship in May, 1875, being placed in the First Class of the Natural Science Tripos in December of the same year. Immediately after taking his degree he proceeded to Germany and worked with Professor W. Kühne, of Heidelberg, in conjunction with whom he published his first paper, "Beobachtungen über die Absonderung des Pankreas" (Untersuch. Physiol. Inst. Heidelb., Vol. II.). After his return to England he acted as Head Assistant to Professor Michael Foster, during which time he lectured on Chemical Physiology. He was appointed Lecturer to Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, in 1881, and University Lecturer in 1884. In Oct., 1855, Gonville and Caius College elected him to a Fellowship, whereupon he migrated to this Society from Trinity. While actively engaged in teaching and in endeavouring to promote the progress of science he published a short series of papers, dealing chiefly with enzymas or soluble ferments, which appeared in the Journal of Physiology and in the Proc. Roy. Soc., the most important being "A Comparative Study of Artificial and Natural Digestions" (Jour. Physiol., Vol. XI., 1890). He has further been responsible for the Appendix to the several editions of Foster's "Text-book of Physiology," publishing it in an enlarged and extended form as a separate volume in 1892. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1890.

LEADER, Benjamin Williams, A.R.A., C.E., was born at Worcester, March 12, 1831. He received his earliest instruction in art at the School of Design in his native city. In 1854 he was admitted a student in the Royal Academy, and in the same year exhibited his first picture, "Cottage Children Blowing Bubbles," which was bought for £50 by an American gentleman. Two years later Mr. Leader visited Scotland, having till then seen no hills higher than the Malverns. Since then he has become a popular delineator of mountain scenery, Wales and Switzerland being his favourite sketching-grounds. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, Jan. 16, 1883, and has exhibited pictures in the Royal Academy since 1856. His most important pictures since then are "A Moated Grange," 1868; "The Streams through the Birch Wood," 1871; "Mountain Solitude," 1873; "Wild Waters," 1875; "Barges passing a Lock on the Thames," "An English Hayfield," and "A November Evening after Rain," 1876; "The Valley of Clear Springs," and "Lucerne," 1877; "View of the Wetterhorn," 1878; "The Last Gleam," 1879; "A Gleam in the Storm," 1880; "February fill Dyke," 1881; "In the Evening there Shall be Light," 1882; "Parting Day," "Green Pastures and Still Waters," and "An Autumn Evening," 1883. In 1886 he exhibited three pictures, one of them, "With Verdure Clad," being the largest he has yet painted. Since then he has painted "An April Day," 1887; "Sands of Aberdovey," and "A Summer's Day," 1888; "Sabrina's Stream," "Cambria's Coast," and "The Dawn of an Autumn Day," 1889; "The Sandy Margin of the Sea," "The Silent Evening Hour," 1890; "The Manchester Ship Canal Works in Progress" (a large picture), 1891; "Conway Bay" and "Across the Common," 1892; "By Mead and Stream," "An Old Country Church," and two Surrey scenes, 1893, and "Worcester Cathedral," 1894. Several of his pictures have been very successfully etched by Chauvel and Brunet-Debaines. He received the Gold Medal at the Paris Exhibition, 1889, and was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honour.

LEAF, Walter, was born, in 1852, at Norwood, and is the eldest son of Charles John Leaf, F.L.S., F.S.A., and Isabella Ellen, daughter of the late John Tyas, of the Times. He was educated at Harrow, 1866–1869, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, 1870–1874; Minor Scholar, 1869; Scholar, 1871; Craven University Scholar, 1873; B.A. Senior Classic (bracketed), 1874; Chancellor's Medallist, 1874; Fellow of Trinity, 1875; M.A., 1877; Doctor of Letters (Litt.D.), 1888. He entered the firm of Leaf, Sons and Co., wholesale warehousemen, in 1877, and became Chairman of Leaf and Co., Limited, in 1888, retiring in 1892. He was one of the founders and first members of the Council of the London Chamber of Commerce; Deputy Chairman of the Council, 1885-6; Chairman, 1887; and is now Vice-President of the Chamber. He is a Director of the London and Westminster Bank, and member of the Senate of the University of London, of the Governing Body of Harrow School, Marlborough College, the Central Foundation Schools of London, and the Warehousemen, Clerks', and Drapers' School; of the Councils of the Society for Physical Research, and the Hellenic Society, joint Editor of the Journal of Hellenic Studies, and Treasurer of the British School at Athens. He is author of "The Story of Achilles" (with J. H. Pratt), 1880; "The Iliad of Homer translated into English Prose" (with Messrs. A. Lang and E. Myers), 1882; "The Iliad, Edited with English Notes and Introduction," 1886-8; "Companion to the Iliad," 1892; "A Modern Priestess of Isis" (translated from the Russian), 1894; and of numerous papers in the Journal of Philology, the Journal of Hellenic Studies, the "Proceedings of the Society for Physical Research," and elsewhere. He married, in 1894, Charlotte Mary, daughter of the late John Addington Symonds, of Clifton Hill and Am Hof, Davos.

LEATHES, Professor the Rev. Stanley, D.D., was born March 21, 1830, at Ellesborough, Bucks, being the son of the Rev. Chaloner Stanley Leathes, rector of that parish. He was educated at Jesus Collége, Cambridge (B.A. 1852, Tyrwhitt University Scholar, 1853, M.A. 1855), was ordained in 1856, and became curate successively of St. Martin's, Salisbury, St. Luke's, Berwick Street, and St. James's, Westminster. Mr. Leathes succeeded Dr. M'Caul as Professor of Hebrew in King's College, London, in 1863. He was appointed Boyle Lecturer in 1867, and held this office from 1868 to 1870. He became minister of St. Philip's, Regent Street, 1869. He was elected Hulsean Lecturer in the University of Cambridge for the year 1873, Bampton Lecturer at Oxford for the year 1874, and was appointed Warburtonian Lecturer at Lincoln's Inn in 1876. The University of Edinburgh conferred on him the honorary degree of D.D., March 2, 1878. He was appointed Prebendary of St. Paul's, 1876, rector of Cliffe at Hoo, 1880, and Rector of Much Hadham, Herts, 1889. In 1885 he was elected Honorary Fellow of his College. Dr. Leathes, who was invited by Convocation to join in the revision of the Authorized Version of the Old Testament, is the author of "The Witness of the Old Testament to Christ," being the Boyle Lectures for 1868; "The Witness of St. Paul to Christ;" "The Witness of St. John to Christ;" a "Hebrew Grammar;" "Structure of the Old Testament," a series of popular essays, 1873; "The Gospel its Own Witness," 1874, being the Hulsean Lecture delivered in the preceding year; "Religion of the Christ" (Bampton Lecture), 1874; "The Christian Creed; its Theory and Practice: with a Preface on some present Dangers of the English Church," 1878; "The Law in the Prophets," 1890; and Introductions to the Books of Ezekiel and Daniel.

LECKY, William Edward Hartpole, was born at Newton Park, near Dublin, March 26, 1838, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated B.A. in 1859 and M.A. in 1863. Devoting himself to literature, he soon gained distinction as an author. His acknowledged works are: "The Leaders of Public Opinion in Ireland," published anonymously in 1861, and republished in 1871-2; "History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe," 2 vols., 1865, 5th edit., 1872; "History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne," 2 vols., 1869; "History of England in the Eighteenth Century," vols. i. and ii., 1878, vols. iii. and iv. 1882, vols. v. and vi., 1887, vols. vii. and viii. (completing the work), 1890. A Cabinet Edition of the History in twelve volumes was published in 1892, the five last being devoted to Ireland and Irish affairs down to the Addington Ministry. Mr. Lecky published a small volume of poems (1891). His first three works and a large part of his History of England have been translated into German, and some of them into other languages. Most of his works have gone through many editions in England. Mr. Lecky has received the honorary degree of LL.D. from his own university of Dublin, and from the University of St. Andrews; the degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford, and the degree of Litt.D. from the University of Cambridge. In 1894 he was elected Corresponding Member to the Institute of France. He has contributed occasionally, but not frequently, to periodical literature; and since the division in the Liberal party, in 1886, he has both spoken and written in support of the Unionist cause.

LECOCQ, Charles, a celebrated French composer of popular operatic music, was born in Paris in 1832, and studied under Halévy. His first operetta was produced in 1857 at the Bouffes Parisiens, and was entitled "Le Docteur Miracle." This was followed by "Le Myosotis," 1866,

"Fleur de Thé," 1868; "Fille de Madame Angot," his most popular achievement, 1873, which ran 500 nights; "Girofié Girofla," 1874; "La Marjolaine," 1877; "Le Petit Duc," 1878; "Le Jour et la Nuit," 1882; "La Princesse des Canaries," 1883; "Plutus," 1885; "Les Grenadiers de Montcornette," 1887; "La Volière," 1888; "Ali-Baba," ballet at the now defunct Eden, 1889; and "L'Egyptienne," 1890. He has also written a number of melodies and chansonnettes under the title of "Miettes musicales."

LE CONTE, Joseph, M.D., LL.D., born in Liberty County, Georgia, Feb. 26, 1823, graduated at Franklin College in 1841, and the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons in 1845, and practised his profession at Macon, Georgia. In 1850 he went to Cambridge, Massachusetts, where he studied under Agassiz. He subsequently held several professorships, and since 1869 has been Professor of Geology and Natural History in the University of California. He has published many essays on education and the fine arts, and on philosophical subjects, a work on "The Mutual Relations of Religion and Science," 1874; "Elements of Geology," 1878; "Sight," 1881; "A Compend of Geology," 1884; and "Evolution and its Relation to Religious Thought," 1888. Among his strictly scientific publications are papers on "The Agency of the Gulf Stream in the Formation of the Peninsula of Florida;" "On the Correlation of Vital Force with Chemical and Physical Forces;" "On the Phenomena of Binocular Vision;" "A Theory of the Formation of the Great Features of the Earth's Surface;" "On Some of the Ancient Glaciers of the Sierras;" "On the Great Lava Flood of the Northwest;" "On the Structure and Age of the Cascade Mountains;" "Critical Periods in the History of the Earth and their Relation to Evolution;" "Genesis of Sex;" "Psychical Relation of Man to Animals;" "Structure and Origin of Mountains;" "Genesis of Metalliferous Veins;" "Interior Condition of the Earth;" "Flora of the Coast Islands of California in relation to recent Changes in Physical Geography;" "A Post-tertiary Elevation of Sierra Nevada as shown in the River Beds;" "Tertiary and Post-tertiary Changes on the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts;" "The Mutual Relations of Land Elevation and Ice-accumulation during the Glacial Period;" "Evolution and Human Progress;" "The Relation of Philosophy to Psychology and to Physiology;" "The Race Problem in the South from a scientific Point of View;" "Theory of the Origin of Mountains," Presidential Address before the Am. Assn. Adv. of Sci. (1893).

LEDOCHOWSKI, His Eminence Miecislas, Cardinal of the Roman Church, Archbishop of Gnesen and Posen, and Primate of Poland, was born at Gork, of an illustrious Polish family, Oct. 29, 1822. He began his theological studies under the Lazarists in the College of St. John, Warsaw, and at the age of eighteen received the ecclesiastical tonsure and habit from the Bishop of Sandomir. After some studies at Vienna he proceeded to Rome, where he joined the "Academia Ecclesiastica," founded by Pius IX. to impart a special training to young ecclesiastics distinguished by their acquirements. His Holiness named Ledochowski Domestic Prelate and Protonotary Apostolic, and also sent him on a diplomatic mission to Madrid and as Auditor of the Nunciature to Lisbon, Rio de Janeiro, and Santiago de Chili. He was nominated Archbishop of Thebes, in partibus infidelium, on his appointment, Sept. 30, 1861, to the Nunciature of Brussels, where he remained four years. In Jan., 1866, he was translated to the archbishopric of Gnesen and Posen, and as the occupant of that See he possesses the title of Primate of Poland. In consequence of his resistance to the laws enacted in Prussia against the Church, he was, in 1874, cast into prison, and he was actually incarcerated in the dungeons of Ostrowo when he was proclaimed a Cardinal by the Pope in a secret consistory held in Rome, March 15, 1875. He was released from captivity, Feb. 3, 1876. Being banished from his diocese, he proceeded to Rome, where he took possession of his "title," the church of Santa Maria in Araceli (May 11). He was cordially received by Pius IX., and lived in the Vatican, whence he continued administering the affairs of his diocese. Legal proceedings were several times taken against him by the Prussian Government, and at last he was condemned in default to seventy days' imprisonment and to the payment of a large fine for having excommunicated one of his lesser clergy. He was closely confined in the Vatican for fear of being handed over by the Italian to the Prussian Government, who, however, denied that they had asked for his extradition (1883). In 1884 the Pope appointed the cardinal Secretary of Memorials, which necessitated his living in Rome and resigning his archiepiscopal seat. This concession to the Prussian authorities put an end to the attacks on Cardinal Ledochowski, who in Jan., 1892 was appointed Prefect of the Propaganda.

LEE, The Rev. Frederick George, D.D., born Jan. 6, 1832, at Thame Vicarage, Oxfordshire, is the eldest son of the late Rev. Frederick Lee, M.A., rector of Easington, in that county. He was educated at the Grammar School, Thame, and at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he graduated S.C.L., and became both a University and a College prizeman in 1854. His Newdigate Prize, "The Martyrs of Vienne and Lyons," has passed through four editions. He was afterwards a student of Cuddesdon Theological College, and was ordained deacon in 1854, and priest in 1856, by the Bishop of Oxford. He has been curate of Sunningwell, Berks, assistant minister of Berkeley Chapel, and incumbent of St. Mary's, Aberdeen. He was created hon. D.D. of the Washington and Lee University at Lexington in Virginia, in June, 1879. At present he is vicar of All Saints', Lambeth. Dr. Lee founded and edited the Union Review from 1863 to 1869, and was hon. secretary of the Association for the Promotion of the Unity of Christendom, from 1857 to 1869. He was likewise one of the originators and officers of the Order of Corporate Reunion, established in 1877. He is the author of "Poems," 2nd edit., 1855; "The Words from the Cross," 3rd edit., 1880; "The Gospel Message," 1860; "The King's Highway, and other Poems," 2nd edit., 1872; "The Martyrs of Vienne and Lyons, an Oxford Prize Poem," 4th edit., 1866; "The Message of Reconciliation," 2nd edit., 1868; "Petronilla, and other Poems," 2nd edit., 1869; "The Beauty of Holiness," 4th edit., 1869; "Parochial and Occasional Sermons," 2nd edit., 1873; "Death, Judgment, Heaven and Hell," 3rd edit., 1870; "The Christian Doctrine of Prayer for the Departed," 2nd edit., 1875; "Memorials of the Rev. R. S. Hawker," 1876; "A Glossary of Liturgical and Ecclesiastical Terms," illustrated by A. W. Pugin, etc., 1877; "The Sinless Conception of the Mother of God, a Theological Essay," 1881; "A Manual of Politics," 1889; "The Validity of the Holy Orders of the Church of England maintained and vindicated," 1870; "The Bells of Botteville Tower," 1874; "The Words from the Cross," 3rd edit., 1879. As editor, Dr. Lee has issued two series of "Sermons," and one of "Essays on the Reunion of Christendom," "Lyrics of Light and Life," 2nd edit., 1878; "Order out of Chaos," 1881; and has published "Altar Service Book of the Church of England," "The Book of Epistles," "The Book of Gospels," "Directorium Anglicanum," 4th edit. He has also written "Glimpses of the Supernatural," 2nd edit., 1877; "More Glimpses of the World Unseen," 1880; "Glimpses in the Twilight," 1855; and "Sights and Shadows; being Examples of the Supernatural," 1894. His work, "The History and Antiquities of the Prebendal Church of the B. V. Mary of Thame," an illustrated folio of considerable size, was published in 1883, and resulted in the restoration of that church under Mr. J. Oldrid Scott. His studies in history, chiefly bearing on the Tudor changes in the sixteenth century, have resulted in the issue of "Historical Sketches of the Reformation," 1879; "The Church under Queen Elizabeth," 2nd edit., 1892; "Edward the Sixth, Supreme Head," 2nd edit. 1889; and "Cardinal Reginald Pole, Archbishop of Canterbury," 1888. In all of the above, numerous original MSS. have been largely made use of, and fresh light thrown upon past events. Dr. Lee has likewise been a contributor to the Nineteenth Century, the Christian Remembrancer, the Contemporary Review, the National Review, and other similar serials.

LEE, Rev. Richard, M.A., born Sept. 5, 1846, at Odogh, near Kilkenny, is the son of the late Rev. Richard Lee, B.A., Scholar of Trinity College, Dublin, and Curate of Odogh (died May, 1850, aged 28). The son was educated (1853-1865) at Christ's Hospital; 1865–1869 at Jesus College, Cambridge, of which College he was a Foundation and Rustat Scholar, R.S. He took the degree of B.A. in 1869; First (bracketed) of Second Class of Classical Tripos, and M.A. in 1872; and M.A. (ad eundem) Trinity College, Dublin, 1882. He was ordained Deacon by the Bishop of London in 1873, and Priest in 1874. In 1873 he became Curate of Holy Trinity, Finchley; Lecturer in 1875 of St. Benet's, Paul's Wharf; and Curate of St. Margaret's, Lothbury, in the Diocese of London. He was appointed Assistant Master in Christ's Hospital in 1871; and became Head Master in 1876.

LEFEBVRE, Jules Joseph, a French painter, born at Tournan in 1836, was a pupil of Léon Cogniet. He gained the Grand Prix de Rome in 1861 for "The Death of Priam," and in 1870 exhibited at the Salon "Truth" and a portrait. These were followed, amongst others, by "The Grasshopper," 1872; a portrait of "The Prince Imperial," 1874; "Mary Magdalene," 1876; "Pandora," 1877; a portrait of "M. Pelpel," 1880 "Fia-metta," and "Ondine," 1881; "La Fiancée," 1882; "Morning Glory," 1887; "Lady Godiva," one of his most elaborate works; and "Une Fille d'Eve," 1892. M. Lefebvre has obtained three Medals, in 1865, 1868, and 1870, and a first-class Medal at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, and a grand Prize in 1889. He was decorated with the insignia of the Legion of Honour in 1870, and made an officer in 1878. He was elected a member of the Academy of Fine Arts in Nov., 1891. He is one of the leading painters of his school and style, an excellent example of which is the beautiful "Psyche," at one time exhibited in London, and engraved by François.

LEFEVRE, The Right Hon. George John Shaw. See SHAW-LEFEVRE.

LE GALLIENNE, Richard, poet and journalist, was born in Liverpool on Jan. 20, 1866. His family came originally from Guernsey, but his father had for some time been settled in England. He was educated at Liverpool College, and at the age of sixteen entered the office of a chartered accountant. Here he privately printed his first volume of poetry, "My Ladies' Sonnets" (1887). In February, 1889, he became literary secretary to Mr. Wilson Barrett, and stayed with him some months, though ill-health prevented him accompanying Mr. Barrett to America. In 1889 he returned to Liverpool, and in 1891 (Feb.) joined the Star in London, becoming literary critic to that journal, and writing thenceforth a series of cultivated and kindly appreciations of contemporary literature over the signature "Logroller." Shortly after becoming critic to the Star he joined the staff of the Daily Chronicle and of the Speaker. Mr. Le Gallienne is the author of the following volumes of prose and verse:—"My Ladies' Sonnets," 1887; "Volumes in Folio," "The Book bills of Narcissus," and "George Meredith: some Characteristics," 1889; "English Poems," 1892; "The Religion of a Literary Man," 1893, and "Prose Fancies," 1894. He has contributed to "The Book of the Rhymers' Club," 1892 and 1894, and to the Nineteenth Century, the New Review, and other leading magazines, and writes weekly causeries in the Pall Mall Budget. In Feb., 1893, he engaged in a newspaper controversy with Mr. Robert Buchanan on the question "Is Christianity played out?" which led to the publication of the "Religion of a Literary Man." He has latterly delivered lectures at South Place Chapel and elsewhere on such subjects as "The Influence of the Press upon Society," "The Nonconformist Conscience," "The Revolt of the Daughters," and "The World, the Flesh, and the Puritan." Mr. Le Gallienne married, on Oct. 22, 1891, Mildred, daughter of Alfred Lee, of Liverpool. She died on May 21, 1894, their child, Hesper, having been born on Dec. 6, 1893.

LEGGE (Professor), James, LL.D., D.D., was born at Huntly, Aberdeenshire, in 1815, and educated at Huntly, and the grammar schools of Aberdeen and Old Aberdeen. He entered King's College and University in 1831; graduated M.A. in 1835; studied subsequently at Highbury Theological College, London, and received from the University of Aberdeen the degree of LL.D. in 1870; and the same degree again at the Tercentenary of the University of Edinburgh in 1884. He was appointed a missionary to the Chinese in connection with the London Missionary Society, in 1839, and arrived at Malacca in that capacity in December of the same year. In 1840 he took charge of the Anglo-Chinese College founded there by the Rev. Dr. R. Morrison in 1825. In 1842 he received the degree of D.D. from the University of New York. In 1843 he removed to Hong Kong, where he continued till 1873 in the discharge of missionary duties. In 1875 several gentlemen connected with the China trade formed themselves into a committee to promote the establishment of a Chair of the Chinese Language and Literature at Oxford, to be occupied in the first place by Dr. Legge. The University liberally responded to the proposal, and the Chair was constituted in March, 1876. Corpus Christi College was forward in aiding the foundation, and Dr. Legge is now a Fellow and M.A. of it. In certain philological discussions which arose in China in 1847 about the proper rendering in Chinese of the words "God" and "Spirit," Dr. Legge took a prominent part, his principal publication being a volume, in 1852, under the title of "The Notion of the Chinese concerning God and Spirits." His chief claim to literary distinction, however, rests on his edition of the Chinese Classics with the Chinese Text, a translation in English, with notes critical and exegetical, and copious prolegomena. He conceived the idea of this work in 1841. His plan was to embrace what are called "the four Shu," and "the five King." The Shu were published in two volumes in 1861. Three of the King have since been published in two volumes each, in 1865, 1871, and 1872, and with these volumes there were incorporated translations of various other important ancient Chinese works. Smaller editions of the Shu have been published without the Chinese part, and also a version of the second King, or Book of Ancient Chinese Poetry, rendered by the author in English verse, in 1875. For these works the Julien prize, on occasion of its first award, was given to Dr. Legge, by the Académie des Belles Lettres et Inscriptions of the Institute of France in 1875. He attended the Congress of Orientalists held at Florence in 1878; and is one of the workers on the series of "The Sacred Books of the East," edited by Professor F. Max Müller; and a translation of the fourth King was published in it in 1882. The remaining King has also been translated, and forms the 27th and 28th volumes of the series. Four lectures on the Religions of China, Confucianism, and Taoism, described and compared with Christianity, were published in 1880, after being delivered in the English Presbyterian College, London.

LEGGE, Hon. and Right Rev. Augustus, Bishop of Lichfield, was born in 1839, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a Second Class in Law and History in 1861, and at Lichfield College. B.A. 1861, M.A. 1864, D.D. 1891. Ordained in 1864, he was Curate of Handsworth in Staffordshire from that year till 1866, Curate of St. Michael's, Bryanston Square, from 1866 to 1867, Vicar of St. Bartholomew's, Sydenham, from 1867 to 1879, and Vicar of Lewisham from 1879 to 1891, when he was promoted to the see of Lichfield. He was Rural Dean of Greenwich from 1882 to 1886, and of Lewisham between 1886-91, and Proctor of the Diocese of Rochester between 1885-91. In June, 1891, he succeeded Dr. Maclagan as Bishop of Lichfield. In 1891 he published "In Covenant with God."

LEGOUVÉ, Ernest Wilfred, a French dramatist, the son of Gabriel Legouvé, author of "Mérites des Femmes," was born in Paris, Feb. 14, 1807. At an early age he wrote novels, plays, and poems, and his lectures on l'Histoire Morale des Femmes were published in 1848. In 1849, in conjunction with Scribe, he produced "Adrienne Lecouvreur," which gained great popularity through the personation of the heroine by Rachel. She, however, paid a fine of 5,000 francs rather than perform in his "Médée," a play which in Montanelli's Italian version was in 1856 very successful with Ristori. In 1856 he succeeded Ancelot as a member of the Academy. Among his works are "Beatrix," 1861; "La Croix d'Honneur et les Comédiens," 1863; "Miss Suzanne," 1867; "Messieurs les Enfants," 1868; "Bataille de Dames," 1873; "Études et Souvenirs de Théâtre," 1880; "Le Mérite des Femmes," 1882; "La Lecture en Action," 1883; "Une Éducation de Jeune Fille," 1884; "Soixante Ans de Souvenirs" (2 vols., 1886-87); "Fleurs d'Hiver," &c., and "Une Élève de Seize Ans," 1890. His collected plays were published in three volumes in 1887-90. He rose to the rank of Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1887.

LEGROS, Alphonse, a French artist and etcher, born of poor parents at Dijon in 1837. While following his vocation as house-painter, he spent his spare time in a Parisian school of art studying drawing and etching; and in 1857 he sent to the Salon a portrait of his father which attracted some notice. In 1859 he sent an "Angelus;" in 1861, an "Ex-Voto;" in 1863, "A Mass for the Dead." After this he came to England; and, in 1876, was appointed Professor in the Slade School, in University College. Among his other works worthy of notice may be mentioned "Death and the Woodman," a very beautiful etching, exhibiting much feeling in its conception and great delicacy in its execution. In 1877 was published "A Catalogue Raisonné of Legros' Work in Etching," containing 165 pieces. Among his engravings may be mentioned his portraits of Carlyle, Victor Hugo, and Cardinal Manning. In 1867-8 he obtained two medals.

LEHMANN, Rudolf, artist, was born Aug. 19, 1819, at Ottensen, near Hamburg, and educated at Hamburg. His art education he received in Paris, Munich, and Rome, where he afterwards resided for some time, and where his studio was much frequented. He has lived in London since 1866, and has quite recently published his reminiscences. He obtained three Gold Medals at three Paris Exhibitions, and was created a Knight of the Order of the Falcon by the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar. His portrait, painted by himself at the request of the Director of Public Galleries in Florence, is placed in the Galleria degli Uffizi of that city, in the room set apart for portraits of distinguished artists painted by themselves. M. Lehmann's chief pictures are—"Sixtus V. blessing the Pontine Marshes," bought by the French Government for the Museum at Lille; a "Madonna," and a "St. Sebastian," ordered by the French Government for two churches in France; "Graziella," from Lamartine's "Confidences;" "Early Dawn in the Pontine Marshes;" numerous pictures of modern life and costume in Italy; numerous portraits of distinguished persons in England, amongst whom are Lord Houghton, Mr. Browning, Mr. James Payn, Sir Wm. Ferguson, the Duke and Duchess of Leinster, &c.; and a collection of pencil sketches, portraits of distinguished contemporaries, with their autographs, 100 in number. He has recently published his reminiscences.

LEIGHTON, Sir Frederic, Bart., P.R.A., LL.D., D.C.L., was born at Scarborough, Dec. 3, 1830, and from childhood evinced a strong passion for painting. This his parents encouraged, and gave him every opportunity for gratifying it. They opposed, however, for some years, his desire to study art with a view of making it a profession. His first systematic instructions in drawing were received in Rome in the winter of 1841-42 from a painter named Filippo Meli. In 1842-43 he entered, as a student, the Royal Academy of Berlin. Then followed a comparative withdrawal from art for a year, during which the embryo painter was receiving his general education at a school at Frankfort-on-Maine. The winter of 1845-46 was spent in Florence; and here it was that the father at last yielded to the son's desire to embrace painting as a profession. Some of the young student's drawings were submitted to the celebrated American sculptor, Hiram Powers, and the father promised that his decision should depend on the results of his interview with the sculptor. The estimate formed by Powers of the drawings being highly favourable, the youthful Leighton was permitted from that day forward to devote the whole of his time to painting. During part of the time, from 1846 to 1848, he studied in the Academy of Frankfort-on-Maine. The winter of 1848-49 he passed in Brussels, painting his first finished picture, which represented the story of Cimabue finding Giotto drawing in the fields. The succeeding twelvemonth he spent in Paris, copying in the Louvre, and attending a life school. Thence he returned to Frankfort, where he became, and continued till the early part of 1853, a pupil of E. Steinle, of Vienna (one of the followers of Overbeck), Professor of Historical Painting at the academy of that city. During this period several pictures were painted by Mr. Leighton, amongst others a large one of "The Death of Brunellesco." The whole of three winter seasons were next passed in Rome in diligent study, and in painting a large picture of "Cimabue," representing the procession (consisting of the picture of Cimabue, his scholars, and principal Florentine contemporaries) which is said to have accompanied Cimabue's picture of the Madonna, with great honour and rejoicing, through the streets of Florence, to the church of Santa Maria Novella. The exhibition of this work by Mr. Leighton at the Royal Academy in 1855 was a great surprise to the London public, coming as it did from an artist unknown in England. It was at once purchased by the Queen, and it was re-exhibited at the Manchester Art Treasures and the International Exhibitions. During four years after this early and great success, the artist resided in Paris, studying, however, under no master, though aided by the counsel of Ary Scheffer, Robert Fleury, and other French painters. Subsequently he resided in London, and in 1856 he contributed to the Academy Exhibition a picture entitled "The Triumph of Music," the subject being Orpheus, by the power of his art, redeeming his wife from Hades. The following is a list of Sir F. Leighton's later contributions to the Academy:—"The Fisherman and the Siren," and "Romeo and Juliet, act iv., scene v.," 1858; "Pavonia," "Sunny Hours," and "La Nanna," 1859; and "Capri—Sunrise," 1860; "Paolo and Francesca," "A Dream," "Lieder ohne Wörte," and "Capri—Paganos," 1861; "Odalisque;" "The Star of Bethlehem," "Sisters," "Michael Angelo nursing his Dying Servant," "Duett," and "Sea Echoes," 1862; "Jezebel and Ahab," "A Girl with a Basket of Fruit," "A Girl Feeding Peacocks," and "An Italian Cross-bowman," 1863; "Dante in Exile," "Orpheus and Eurydice," and "Golden Hours," 1864; "David," "Mother and Child," "Widow's Prayer," "Helen of Troy," and "In St. Mark's," 1865; "Painter's Honeymoon," and "Syracusan Bride," 1866; "Pastoral," "Spanish Dancing Girl—Cadiz," "Knucklebone Player," "Roman Mother," and "Venus Unrobing," 1867; "Jonathan's Token to David," "Ariadne abandoned by Theseus," "Acme and Septimius," and "Actæ," 1868; "St. Jerome," "Dædalus and Icarus," "Electra at the Tomb of Agamemnon," and "Helios and Rhodos," 1869; "A Nile Woman," 1870; "Hercules wrestling with Death for the Body of Alcestis," "Greek Girls picking up Pebbles by the Sea," and "Cleoboulos instructing his Daughter Cleobouline," 1871; "After Vespers," "Summer Moon," and "A Condottiere," 1872; "Weaving the Wreath," "The Industrial Arts of Peace," 1873; "Moorish Garden: a Dream of Granada," "Old Damascus," "Antique Juggling Girl," and "Clytemnestra from the Battlements of Argos watching for the Beacon Fires which are to announce the Return of Agamemnon," 1874; "Portion of the Interior of the Grand Mosque of Damascus," "Little Fatima," "Venetian Girl," and "Eastern Slinger scaring Birds in the Harvest Time," 1875; "Portrait of Captain Burton," "The Daphnephoria," "Teresina," and "Paolo," 1876; "Music Lesson," and "Study," 1877; "Nausicaa," "Serafina," and "Winding the Skein," 1878; "Biondina," "Caterina," "Elijah in the Wilderness," "Amarilla," and "Neruccia," 1879; "Sister's Kiss," "Iostephane," "The Light of the Harem," "Psamathe," and "Crenaia," 1880; "Elisha raising the Son of the Shunamite," "Portrait of the Painter," painted by invitation for the collection of portraits of artists painted by themselves, in the Uffizi Gallery, Florence; "Idyll," "Whispers," "Viola," and "Bianca," 1881; "Day-dreams," "Wedded," "Phryne at Eleusis," "Antigone," and "Melittion," 1882; "The Dance," a decorative frieze for a drawing-room in a private house, "Vestal," "Kittens," and "Memories," 1883; "Letty," and "Cymon and Iphigenia," 1884; "Serenely wandering in a Trance of Sober Thought," "Phœbe," "Music" (a decorative frieze). In 1886 he exhibited a bronze statue, "The Sluggard," and a design for a ceiling; "Hero watching for Leander," 1887; "Greek Girls playing at Ball," 1889; "Solitude," "The Tragic Poetess," and "The Bath of Psyche," 1890; and more recently (1893) "Farewell!" "Hit!" "Atalanta," "Rizpah," "Corinna of Tanagra," "The Frigidarium," and (1894) "Fatidica," "Summer Slumber," "The Bracelet," "The Spirit of the Summit," and "At the Window." In the Portfolio for 1870 is a photograph of the group of "The Five Foolish Virgins," reproduced from the reredos of St. Michael's Church, Lyndhurst, situate on the borders of the New Forest. In painting this wall-picture Sir F. Leighton made use of a new medium tried by Mr. Gambier Parry at Highnam, near Gloucester, and in the nave-vault of Ely Cathedral. Sir F. Leighton has executed many drawings for the wood-engravers, among which may be named the illustrations to George Eliot's Florentine tale of "Romola." Mr. Leighton was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1864, and an Academician in 1869. He was chosen President of the Royal Academy in succession to the late Sir Francis Grant, Nov. 13, 1878, and a few days later received the honour of knighthood. In the same year he was nominated an Officer of the Legion of Honour. In that year he completed a large fresco at the South Kensington Museum, "The Industrial Arts applied to War." In 1879 he was created an honorary LL.D. of Cambridge, an honorary D.C.L. of Oxford, and an honorary LL.D. of Edinburgh at the tercentenary celebration. In 1886 he was created a Baronet. Sir F. Leighton was for many years Colonel of the Artists' Corps of Volunteers; he resigned that command in July, 1883; and accepted, in Aug. of the same year, the presidency of an English Commission which was formed for the International Exhibition of the Graphic Arts in Vienna. Sir F. Leighton is a member of several foreign artistic societies, and at the Paris Exhibition of 1878 was nominated President of the International Jury of Painting. In 1888 Sir Frederic was elected a member of the Society of Painters in Water Colours.

LEIGHTON, John, F.S.A., artist, descended from the Leightons of Ulysses-haven, Forfarshire, was born in St. James's, Westminster, Sept. 15, 1822, became a pupil of Mr. Howard, R.A., and was one of the pioneers of industrial and technical art education, aiding by example the formation of the Department of Science and Art. His first published work, a series of outlines, came out in 1844, but he had previously contributed to cartoon exhibitions. In 1848-50 he published several serio-comic brochures, satires on certain art principles, under the name of "Luke Limner." In 1851 he published a series of twenty-four outlines, entitled "Money," and at the same time a book, "Suggestions in Design," which was greatly enlarged in 1881, and was the first ever issued in all styles. He was a member of the Copyright Committee of the Society of Arts that met in 1858-59 and codified the law as it now stands, and has since been at the International Copyright Congresses, at Antwerp, 1877, and Paris, 1879. He has lectured on "Libraries and Books," "Oriental Art," and "Binocular Perspective;" the advantages of "a System of a Postal Ballot," and "Pictorial Advertising, its Use and Abuse;" and has also travelled in Russia, Caucasia, and Georgia, for the purpose of studying the Byzantine art of the Greek Church. He has illustrated "Moral Emblems," "Lyra Germanica," "The Life of Man Symbolised," and "Madre Natura." In 1871 he edited, with illustrations, "Paris under the Commune." He was one of the original proprietors of the Graphic, and a founder of the Ex. Libris Society, of which he is a Vice-President. Mr. Leighton served on the Commissions of the Exhibitions of 1851 and 1862, also in Paris, 1855 and 1867, and Philadelphia, 1867, and was a Juror in Paris in 1878. He has three times contested the Borough of North St. Pancras in the Liberal-Unionist interest, and once retired when an Unionist was returned.

LEITNER, Gottlieb William, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., D.O.L., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, was born at Pesth, capital of Hungary, Oct. 14, 1840. He was educated at Constantinople, Brussa, Malta, and King's College, London; was appointed First-class Interpreter to the British Commissariat during the Russian War, in 1855, with the rank of full Colonel; was Lecturer in Arabic, Turkish, and Modern Greek at King's College, London, in 1859; and Professor of Arabic with Muhammadan Law at the same Institution, in 1861, when he founded the Oriental Section. The degrees of M.A. and Ph.D. were conferred upon him by the University of Freiburg, in 1862. He has founded over eighty institutions, including the Punjaub University, a number of schools of various grades, literary societies and free public libraries in India and elsewhere; and has started six journals in English, Arabic, Urdu, &c. (see the Parliamentary Report on his services to India). Dr. Leitner discovered the languages and races of the countries between Kabul and Kashmir, which he called "Dardistan," in 1866; and he has since incorporated in his researches other languages between Dardistan and Badakhshan. He was the only British exhibitor at the Vienna Universal Exhibition of 1873, who, in competition with the Ministries of Education of all civilised countries, received a Grand Diploma of Honour that was awarded for "promotion of education." He brought over the first Yarkandi, the first Hunza man, and the first Siah Posh Kafir to Europe, as well as the largest Central Asian and other collections of curiosities and antiquities. He excavated sculptures, which he named "Græco-Buddhistic," in 1870, and established a link between Greece at the time of Alexander the Great and Buddhist art and religion. He was deputed by Punjaub chiefs in 1869 to solicit H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to visit India. Dr. Leitner originated and defended the title "Kaisar-i-Hind" in connection with Her Majesty's assumption of the Imperial dignity in India, long before its adoption by the Indian Government. On the historical occasion of the Delhi Imperial Assemblage, held on January 1, 1877, the Viceroy (Lord Lytton) referred to his "successful services in the cause of education as an honour to India and to all of us," in reply to the address of an influential deputation of native chiefs and others which Dr. Leitner headed. On this occasion also the Viceroy promised to raise Dr. Leitner's main creation, the Punjaub University College, to the rank of a full University in all the ordinary faculties, with the exception of Theology, besides recognizing its functions not only as an examining, but also as a teaching, body, and an academy for the initiation of original research and the production of original works in the Oriental languages, and of translations from European languages into the Vernaculars of India. Dr. Leitner also caused considerable excavations to be made by his retainers in Swat, which yielded numerous Græco-Buddhistic sculptures, and proved that Greek art had once influenced that now inhospitable region. In the course of his literary activity, Dr. Leitner has brought together one of the largest collections of curiosities in the possession of a private individual; and it is unique in many respects. Besides its ethnographical and numismatic interest, it chiefly illustrates the influence of Greek art when in contact with barbaric sculpture, whether Egyptian, Indian, Assyrian, or Persian. It is now deposited at the Oriental University Institute at Woking. Dr. Leitner was made a Knight of the Iron Crown by the Emperor of Austria in 1870; a Knight of the Crown of Prussia; and a G.C. of the Order of Francis Joseph of Austria. He was created a Doctor of Laws by the University of Heidelberg honoris causâ, for his knowledge of International and Oriental Laws, a distinction very rarely conferred by that University, which is the highest legal University in Europe, and is the consulting body of the German Government in matters of Law. Dr. Leitner was the first Principal of the Lahore Government College (in which the Delhi College was incorporated); Principal of the Oriental College, Lahore; and the first Registrar of the Punjaub University He also officiated as Director of Public Instruction of the Punjaub and was often on special missions by Government connected with education and explorations. He was also the President of an important body which he founded in 1864, namely, the Punjaub Association, or Anjuman-i-Punjaub, an institution for social, political, and educational reforms.

He is the President, Honorary Member, or Councillor, of several Corporations in Germany, France, England, Austria, and other countries. Count Liancourt dedicated his "Laws of Language" to him. Dr. Leitner, who is probably the greatest living linguist, in fact, a second Mezzofanti, speaks, reads, and writes 50 languages. He represented India at the Congress of Orientalists held at Florence in Sept., 1878. His published works comprise:—"Theory and Practice of Education;" "Philosophical Grammar of Arabic;" the same translated into Urdu and Arabic; "The Sinîn-ul-Islam" (History and Literature of Muhammadanism in their relations to Universal History); "The Races of Turkey, with principal reference to Muhammadan Education;" "Comparative Vocabulary and Grammar of the Dardu Languages; with Dialogues in the same;" "Results of a Tour in Dardistan, Kashmir, Little Thibet, Ladak, Zanshar, &c.," Lond., 1868, et seq.; "History of Dardistan, Songs, Legends, &c.;" "Græco-Buddhistic Discoveries;" "A National University for the Punjaub;" "Adventures of a Siah Posh Kafir;" and "A Vocabulary of Technical Terms used in Elementary Vernacular School Books, Hindustani-English," 1879. Among other works published by Dr. Leitner are: "Report to the Government on the History of Indigenous Education in the Punjaub before annexation and in 1882," large 4to volume; "Self-Government in India;" "Fragments of Trade Dialects, including that connected with the manufacture of Shawls;" "Dialects of Criminal and Wandering Tribes;" "The Changars, Samés and Més;" "The Kalasha Kafirs;" and numerous other publications. Dr. Leitner acquired the Royal Dramatic College building at Woking near London in 1884, and adapted it to the foundation of an Oriental University and Nobility Institute in England for the training of Orientals in any of the learned professions, and for the linguistic preparation of Europeans proceeding to various parts of the East. He has recently published the second and enlarged edition of an extensive Report on the Language and People of Hunza for the Foreign Department of the Government of India, to which he has added an illustrated work on "Dardistan" in 1866, 1886, and 1893. Dr. Leitner was engaged as representative of the Founders and of 600 Orientalists in 37 countries, in organizing the Statutory ninth International Congress of Orientalists, which was held in London in Sept., 1891, on the basis of the original principles laid down in Paris in 1873. This Congress lasted from the 1st to the 10th Sept. 1891, and was divided into 30 Sections, embracing all branches of Oriental learning and their practical application in Education, Art, Art-Industry, and Commerce. Several antiquarian, geographical, and other discoveries were communicated to it. Summaries of research in 16 specialities, bringing them up to date, were written for it, for the first time in the history of the Oriental Congresses. The Governments of France, Italy, Russia, Greece, Spain, Portugal, and Persia, as also the Secretary of State for the British Colonies, and 40 Universities and other learned Corporations from various parts of the world, were officially represented, and 160 papers on subjects connected with Oriental studies were sent to it, the publication of which has been entrusted to the Oriental University at Woking, which has been constituted the custodian of the Foundation Stone, Diploma, Medals, &c., of the Statutory Oriental Congresses. The Institute also publishes the "Imperial and Asiatic Quarterly Review and the Oriental Colonial Record." The Congress also stimulated the creation of the "Japan Society," and of other movements for the encouragement of Oriental studies in this and other countries. He has kept up friendly relations with some of the Chiefs of the countries which he has discovered, and has thus, indirectly, paved the way for the extension of British influence in the countries between the Russian and the English possessions in Asia. He notably defended the cause of the fugitive Mihtar Nizám-ul-Mulk, late the friendly ruler of Chitrál, Yasin, and a part of Kafiristan. He also on numerous occasions and long before the Durand Mission, showed the sincerity of the friendship for England of the Amir Abdurrahman of Kabul, and his desire to accept an invitation to this country. He is now engaged in translating a Persian manuscript of the year 967, which he has discovered, after many years of fruitless search, on the secret religion of the so-called "Assassins" of the Crusades (now the Druses of the Lebanon and the Maláis of the Hindukush) and is editing a series of 77 Oriental works at the Woking Institute, which also issues a Critical Sanscrit Monthly. In the grounds of this Institute, Dr. Leitner has built a Mosque, with the necessary appurtenances, for the benefit of Muhammadan residents as also of Muhammadan visitors generally to this country, but not for any purpose of religious propaganda, the object of the Institute being purely academical and to promote Oriental studies and learning, whilst permitting each religion or caste to observe its rites without interference one with the other, a purpose to facilitate which special buildings and arrangements have been provided by Dr. Leitner, as an instance of Christian and British toleration to members of other creeds. He married in 1869 Caroline Olympia Schwaab, daughter of the late Austrian and American Consul at Brussa, and she has greatly assisted him in his literary and philanthropic undertakings. Their only child, Henry, has recently obtained the first Scholarship (in Arabic) awarded by the Imperial Institute, and is now studying Aramaic in Berlin.

LE JEUNE, Henry, A.R.A., of Flemish extraction, was born in 1819. In early life he was sent to study at the British Museum, and in 1841 obtained the Gold Medal of the Royal Academy, for a picture of "Samson bursting his Bonds." He was Head Master of the Government School of Design from 1845 to 1848, when he became Curator of the Painting School at the Royal Academy; from which post he retired in 1864. He has been a frequent exhibitor since 1841, was chosen an A.R.A. in 1863, and retired in 1886. His last exhibited picture is "Idleness," 1894.

LELAND, Charles Godfrey, American writer, was born at Philadelphia, Aug. 15, 1824. He graduated at Princeton College in 1846, and subsequently studied at the Universities of Heidelberg and Munich, and in Paris. He was admitted to the Bar in 1851, but soon relinquished law for literature, and contributed largely to periodicals. For several years he resided at New York, and edited the Illustrated News, but returned to Philadelphia in 1855, and for three years was connected with the Evening Bulletin. In the early part of the Civil War he established at Boston the Continental Magazine. On the conclusion of the war he travelled through a portion of the Southern States, in connection with coal and petroleum fields in which he was interested. Later he became editor of the Philadelphia Press. In 1869 he went abroad, and remained, chiefly in London, until 1880. On his return to America he introduced, and for a number of years supervised, a system of industrial-art education in the public schools of Philadelphia. Mr. Leland has taken part in and read papers before the Social Science Congresses of Great Britain, the Brit. Philological Society, and the Oriental Congresses of Florence, Vienna, Stockholm and London. He co-operated with Miss R. Jebb in founding the Home Arts and Industries Association of Great Britain, originated the Rabelais Club of London, and has been from the first the President of the Gypsy Lore Society of Great Britain and Hungary. It was at his instance that the Folk-Lore Societies of Hungary and Italy were established, and he was one of the first institutors and hon. President of the first European Folk-Lore Congress, Paris, 1889, where he was deputed to organise and direct the Second Congress, held in London in 1891. He was Hon. and Vice-President at the establishment of the Italian Folk-Lore Society in 1893. His works, many of which are of a humorous or burlesque character, include, "The Poetry and Mystery of Dreams," and "Meister Karl's Sketch-Book," 1855; "Pictures of Travel," a translation of Heine's "Reisebilder," 1856; "Sunshine in Thought," 1862; "Legends of Birds," 1864; "Hans Breitmann's Ballads," 1867-70; "The Music Lessons of Confucius, and other Poems," 1870; "Gaudeamus," a translation of the humorous poems of Scheffel, 1871; "Egyptian Sketch-Book," and "The English Gypsies and their Language," 1873; "Fu-Sang, or the Discovery of America by Chinese Buddhist Priests in the Fifth Century," and "English Gipsy Songs," 1875; "Johnnykin and the Goblins," and "Pidgin-English Sing-Song," 1876; "Abraham Lincoln," 1879; "The Minor Arts," 1880; "The Gipsies," 1882; "The Algonquin Legends of New England," 1884; "Art-Work Manuals," 1885; "Gipsy Sorcery and Fortune-Telling;" "Practical Education;" "Brand New Ballads;" "Manual of Design;" "Manual of Wood-Carving;" "Metal Work;" "Etruscan-Roman Remains in Popular Tradition," 1892; "The Book of One Hundred Riddles," 1892; "The Book of Copperheads," 1863; "Memoirs," 1893; "Dictionary of English Slang," 2 vols., 1889; "The Art of Conversation," 1863; "Snooping," 1888; "France, Alsace and Lorraine," 1870; "Centralisation versus State Rights," 1868; "Three Thousand Miles in a Railway Car," 1868; and "Industrial Art Education," 1882. He has also now (1894) in course of publication a work on "Repairing and Mending," and is engaged upon a translation of the complete works of Heinrich Heine. Among his officially published works are the papers in English, German, French and Italian, read at different Congresses. He was on the staff of Appleton's Cyclopædia, to which he contributed 200 articles, and was subsequently the European editor or agent for Johnson's Cyclopædia. He has of late years lived chiefly in Italy.

LEMAIRE, Mme. Jeanne Madeleine, née Coll, French artist, born in 1850, at St. Rossoline, near Cannes, was brought up by her aunt, Mme. Herbelin. She from her earliest years imbibed a love of art from that eminent miniaturist. There was never any doubt as to what the pursuit of her life would be. As soon as the little girl could move about, a pencil was her greatest joy, so that even at the age of five or six the childish mind dictated attempts in imitative art. It is unfortunately but too seldom that the first efforts of those who afterwards become eminent in their profession are preserved, and we are not aware that any of Mme. Lemaire's juvenile artistic productions are in existence. Those, however, having charge of the child were, luckily, most careful not to neglect any evidence of unusual talent, so that at the age of nine the child was placed with a Mme. Cavá to learn drawing, this being followed by four years' instruction at M. Chaplin's school. In 1865, and when but fifteen years of age, the artist exhibited her first picture at the Salon—a portrait in oils of her grandmother—the talent in which was so fully recognised by the judges, that it was only the extreme youth of the artist that prevented a prize being adjudged for the work. Then followed a succession of pictures at the Salon—most of them being in oils—"A Columbine," an exceedingly clever work that was greatly admired, and one that at once foreshadowed the artist's future fame; "Diana Vernon," and another fancy figure in "Corinne," showed a sense of beauty of form and colour that fairly took the public by surprise. Rapidly developing into a facile and productive painter, the artist's works became as numerous as they were diversified in manner. Season after season her works were to be seen at the exhibitions of the Société d'Aquarellistes Français, of which she was a member, her subjects embracing flowers, genre and portraits. Mme. Lemaire also engaged somewhat extensively in book illustration, producing a series of forty water-colour drawings for the work "The Abbé Constantin," by Ludovic Halévy, and a large number for the novel "Flirt," by Paul Hervieu. In 1890 the artist had two oil paintings—"Ophelia" and "Sommeil,"—at the exhibition of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts, in the Champ de Mars. In 1891 she exhibited "Five," and, in 1892, "Le Char des Fées, &c. In addition to all this, Mme. Lemaire has entered the field as a pastellist, for which branch of art French painters are noted. She is a member of the Société des Pastellistes Français, and a series of her drawings were at one time on view at the Goupil Gallery. As an illustrator she is also distinguished, and her coloured plates to an édition de luxe of "L'Abbé Constantin" deserve mention.

LENBACH, Franz, a distinguished German portrait-painter, was born at Schrobenhausen in Bavaria, Dec. 13, 1836. He at first followed the trade of his father, a master-mason, but on his father's death in 1856, he entered the Munich Academy to study painting, and afterwards was a pupil of Gräfle and Piloty. He first confined himself to genre-painting, and his "Peasant Family in a Storm" excited much interest. In 1858 he went with Piloty to Rome, and there painted a picture of the Forum, which by its realism and colour created a great sensation in Munich. He then turned to portrait-painting, taking the old masters, especially Rembrandt, as his models. In 1860 he received an appointment at the School of Art at Weimar, but left it soon in order to pursue further studies in Rome. In 1867 he exhibited a masterly portrait of the artist, Von Hagn; and after further travels in Italy and Spain, he returned to Munich, and soon became renowned for his portraits. Commissions came to him from all parts, and for two years he worked in Vienna, but in 1874 settled again in Munich, where, when not travelling in Greece and Egypt, he has since resided. He is an honorary Professor at the Munich Academy. Amongst his most celebrated pictures are portraits of Paul Heyse, Frans Lachner, Moltke, Bismarck, Dr. Döllinger, Wagner, Liszt, and the late King of Bavaria.

LENG, Sir John, Senior Member of Parliament for the city of Dundee, was born in Hull in 1828. He is the second son of the late Mr. Adam Leng, by Mary, daughter of Mr. Christopher Luccock, landsurveyor, Malton, Yorkshire, and is the younger brother of Sir William Christopher Leng, of Sheffield. Sir John was educated at the Hull Grammar School under the Head-mastership of Mr. J. D. Sollit. In 1847, when only nineteen years of age, he was appointed sub-editor of the Hull Advertiser, and thus began a very successful career as journalist. Four years afterwards (1851) he went to Dundee to fill the position of editor and general manager of the Dundee Advertiser. That journal had then passed its jubilee, having been founded in 1801, but although advocating advanced Liberal principles in politics, in consonance with the prevailing sentiment in the locality, it was so handicapped by the heavy paper duty and stamp taxes that its bi-weekly circulation was very limited, and its condition languishing. Sir John set vigorously to work to improve and infuse new life into the Dundee Advertiser, which has since become a power of considerable magnitude, not only locally but throughout the country. About ten years after he undertook the management—that is, as soon as "the taxes on knowledge" were abolished—the Advertiser was changed from a bi-weekly to a daily journal, the price being reduced to one penny. In 1858 Sir John established the People's Journal, a weekly paper whose circulation is now about 250,000, there being eleven separate editions specially adapted to the several districts of Scotland. Another enterprise which has proved successful was the founding by Sir John, in 1877, of the Evening Telegraph, a daily halfpenny newspaper, the several editions of which have a very large circulation. Several years before he had founded a literary journal named the People's Friend, which was began as a monthly, but was received with so much favour that it was changed into a weekly. This publication has been the means of introducing many new writers to the public, such popular novelists as Annie S. Swan and Adeline Sergeant having first appeared in print as contributors to its columns. In addition to the journalistic work, an extensive business in commercial printing and lithography is conducted by the proprietors of the People's Friend, &c., under Sir John's management; and the small office which was sufficient for the Dundee Advertiser in 1851 has now developed into a very extensive establishment. The Liberal principles which Sir John professed in 1851, when he undertook the editorship of the Dundee Advertiser, have been consistently maintained and advocated by him in his various journals. He has from the first been an adherent of Mr. Gladstone; an advocate of Home Rule for Ireland, Scotland, England and Wales; and a supporter of measures calculated to bring about conciliation between Capital and Labour; while on temperance questions he has striven to introduce methods whereby the liquor traffic would be controlled by the people. The prominence given to his political convictions on popular questions naturally suggested that he would be found of great service in Parliament, but he was reluctant to abandon his journalistic career, and it was after he had declined no fewer than fifteen invitations that he at length consented to enter the field of politics. The death of Mr. Firth in Sept., 1889, caused a vacancy in the representation of Dundee, and Sir John was induced to become a candidate. On that occasion he was elected without opposition. At the General Election in 1892, Sir John was returned at the top of the poll as representative for Dundee in conjunction with Mr. Edmund Robertson, Civil Lord of the Admiralty in Mr. Gladstone's fourth Administration. On the distribution of birthday honours in 1893, he received a knighthood, and this dignity was accepted by him chiefly as an honour to the Press, and to the city of his adoption. He is a Magistrate for the counties of Forfar and Fife, and President or Vice-President of numerous Societies. Besides his journalistic work, Sir John has published a number of books and pamphlets, amongst which are the following:—"Impressions of America," 1876; "The Electric Light recommended to Gas Companies and Corporations," 1878; "Scottish Banking Reform," 1881; "American Competition and British Agriculture," 1881; "Practical Politics," 1885; "How best to deal with the Unemployed," 1886; "Trip to Norway," 1886; "Home Rule all round," 1890; "On Excessive Patent Fees," 1891; "On Canadian Cattle Importation," 1893; "On Disestablishment in Scotland," 1894.

LEO THE THIRTEENTH, The Pope, is the son of Count Ludovico Pecci, by his wife Anna Prosperi. He was born at Carpineto, in the diocese of Anigni, in the State of the Church, March 2, 1810, and was baptised by the names of Vincenzo and Gioacchino. His mother always called him by his first name, which was also used by himself up to the termination of his studies, when he began to use his second name, Gioacchino. In 1818 his father sent him, along with his elder brother Giuseppe, to the Jesuit College of Viterbo. There he was taught grammar and humanities under Father Leonardo Giribaldi, a man of great learning, until the year 1824, when, on his mother's death, he was sent to Rome to the care of an uncle, and took up his residence in an apartment of the palace of the Marchese Muti. In November, 1824, he entered the schools of the Collegio Romano, then restored to the Jesuits, and had for his teachers Fathers Ferdinando Minini and Giuseppe Bonvicini, both distinguished for eloquence and virtue of no common order. Three years later he began to study mathematics. He had for instructors Father Giovanbattista Pianciani, nephew of Leo XII., and Father Andrea Carafa, a mathematician of renown. Young Pecci signalised himself by his assiduity and talent, and in 1828 got the first premium in Physico-Chemistry, and the first accessit in mathematics. Then he passed to the course of philosophy, and in the four years of that curriculum he attended the lectures of Fathers Giovanni Perrone, Francesco Manera, Michele Zecchinelli, Cornelius Van Everbroeck, and Francesco Xaverio Patrizi, brother of the late Cardinal Patrizi. While studying philosophy Pecci was entrusted, despite his youth, to give repetitions in philosophy to the pupils of the German College. In his third year of philosophy he sustained a public disputation, and obtained the first premium (1830). The following year, being then but 21 years old, he obtained the laurea in philosophy. Even in Viterbo young Pecci was noticed for his ability and for his perfect propriety of conduct. In Rome he seemed entirely devoted to study, and took no part in entertainments, conversazioni, amusements, or plays. At the age of 12 or 13 he wrote Latin, prose or verse, with facility; and it may be mentioned that since he became Pope a volume of his verses, chiefly Latin, has been printed at Udine. Having entered the College of Noble Ecclesiastics, the Abbate Pecci frequented the schools of the Roman University to learn canon and civil law. Pecci and the Duke Sisto Riario Sforza (afterwards Cardinal Archbishop of Naples) were the two brilliant youths who eclipsed all the rest of their companions in study. Cardinal Antonio Sala took much interest in Pecci, and assisted him with advice and instruction. Becoming a Doctor in Laws, he was made by Pope Gregory XVI. a domestic prelate and Referendary of the Segnatura, March 16, 1837. Cardinal Carlo Odescalchi, famous for his humility in renouncing the purple to enter the Society of Jesus, gave Pecci holy orders in the chapel of St. Stanislas Kostka, in S. Andrea al Quirinale, and on Dec. 23, 1837, conferred the priesthood upon him in the chapel of the Vicariate. Gregory XVI. bestowed upon him the title of Prothonotary Apostolic, and appointed him Apostolic Delegate at Benevento, Perugia, and Spoleto in succession. In these important posts he ruled with firmness and prudence, and while at Benevento he, by his energy, put a stop to the brigandage which had before infested that district. In 1843 he was again promoted by Pope Gregory XVI., being sent as Nuncio to Belgium, and on Jan. 17 in that year he was created Archbishop of Damietta, in partibus infidelium, to qualify him for his office of Nuncio. He remained in Brussels for three years, and was then nominated Bishop of Perugia on Jan. 19, 1846, about four months previous to the death of Gregory XVI. He was created and proclaimed a Cardinal by Pius IX. in the Consistory of Dec. 19, 1853. He was a member of several of the Congregations of Cardinals—among them those of the Council, of Rites, and of Bishops and Regulars. In September, 1877, he was selected by Pope Pius IX. to fill the important office of Cardinal Camerlengo of the Roman Church, which post had become vacant by the death of Cardinal de Angelis. In that capacity, after the death of the late Pope (Feb. 7, 1878), he acted as Head of the Church in temporal matters, made the arrangements for the last solemn obsequies of the Pontiff, received the Catholic ambassadors, and superintended the preparations for the Conclave. Sixty-two Cardinals attended the Conclave, which was closed in the Vatican on Monday, Feb. 18, 1878, and the Cardinal Camerlengo was made Pope by the acclamation of all. The news was officially proclaimed to the outside world at a quarter-past one o'clock from the gallery of St. Peter's, when it was announced that his Holiness had assumed the name of Leo XIII. On March 3, he was crowned in the Sistine Chapel, all the ancient ceremonies being observed, save the benediction Urbi et Orbi, from the loggia of St. Peter's. At the end of 1887 the Pope celebrated his Jubilee, commemorative of his having been fifty years in the Priesthood, on which occasion he received congratulations from all parts of the world. The Queen of England sent the Duke of Norfolk as her Special Envoy with valuable gifts and an address of congratulation. In June, 1891, the Pope issued an important Encyclical Letter on Labour, which presents the Papacy in a new and liberal light. Later his Holiness bade the French clergy recognise the Republic, the result being that many hitherto disaffected Monarchists have accepted the present order of things in France. On Feb. 19, 1893, his Holiness celebrated his episcopal Jubilee, and held a State celebration at St. Peter's before immense crowds of pilgrims. The English pilgrims on this occasion were headed by the Duke of Norfolk. In Oct., 1894, the Pope summoned a conference of the Patriarchs of the Greek and other Eastern Churches at the Vatican, but the gathering was without results.

was born in Naples on March 8, 1858. He enjoyed the friendship of Wagner, and for a long period of time lived in Paris, where he composed songs and occasional pieces, and planned his trilogy of Italian history, of which the "Medici" constitutes the first part. In May, 1892, he produced his short dramatic opera, "I Pagliacci," at Milan, and in November, 1893, his "Medici" was first performed in the same city. The success of Mascagni's short operas may be said to have paved the way for his own.

LEOPOLD II. (Leopold-Louis-Philippe-Marie-Victor), King of the Belgians, son of the late King Leopold I., upon whose death, which occurred Dec. 10, 1865, he succeeded to the throne as Leopold II., was born in Brussels, April 9, 1835, and married, August 22, 1853, the Archduchess Marie of Austria, by whom he has had three children—two daughters and one son, the Duke of Brabant, who died in January, 1869, at the age of ten. In 1855, in company with the Duchess of Brabant, he made a lengthened tour through Europe, Egypt, and Asia Minor. As Duke of Brabant, he took a prominent part in several important discussions in the Senate, especially in that relating to the establishment of a maritime service between Antwerp and the Levant. His Majesty has visited this country very frequently. His "silver wedding" was celebrated with great rejoicing in August, 1878. His Majesty takes a great interest in the development of the Congo Free State, and is head of the International Association which was formed to open up the Congo river and its tributaries. Having no son living, and daughters being excluded from the succession by the Belgian Constitution, the elder son of his brother, the Comte de Flandre, was heir presumptive to the throne; and he, unfortunately, died Jan. 23, 1891, aged 22. Now Prince Albert, a youth of 16, the only brother of the late Prince Baldwin, is heir presumptive.

LESLIE, George Dunlop, R.A., the youngest son of the late Charles Robert Leslie, R.A., was born at 12, Pineapple Place, St. John's Wood, London, July 2, 1835, and educated at the Mercers' School in the City. From his father he received, of course, a great deal of instruction in art; and the pure and tender feeling, as well as the simplicity and method, which distinguish so many works of the father, seem to be reflected in the productions of the son. Young Leslie was, however, placed by his father at Mr. F. Cary's School of Art, Bloomsbury, whence he was admitted a student in the Life School of the Royal Academy in April, 1854. The first picture he exhibited, called "Hope," appeared at the British Institution in 1857, and was purchased by Lord Houghton. In the same year two small pictures by him were hung at the Royal Academy, where he has since regularly exhibited. In the spring of 1859 his father died, leaving the young artist entirely to his own resources. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 18 , and a Royal Academician June 29, 1876. The principal pictures which he has exhibited are:—"The Defence of Lathom House," 1865; "Clarissa," 1866, which was also exhibited at the Paris International Exhibition; "Nausicaa and her Maids," 1871; "School Revisited" (his most celebrated picture), 1875; "Cowslips" and "The Lass of Richmond Hill" (his diploma picture), 1877; "Home, Sweet Home," 1878; "Naughty Kitty" and "Alice in Wonderland," containing portraits of the artist's wife and daughter, 1879; "All that Glitters is not Gold," 1880; "Hen and Chickens," 1881; "Molly," "Sally in our Alley," "Pique," and "A Daughter of Charity," 1882; "Daughters of Eve" and "Wayside Rest," 1883; "A Girl with a Silver Bowl full of Roses" and "A Thames Boat House," 1887; and "Sun and Moon Flowers," 1889. In 1881 Mr. Leslie gave up his house in St. John's Wood and removed with his family to an old-fashioned riverside house at Wallingford, where he has lived ever since. Mr. Leslie has at times used the pen as well as the pencil, being the author of "Our River," the first edition of which was published by Messrs. Bradbury and Agnew in 1881. In 1893 Messrs. Macmillan published his "Letters to Marco," which were written to Mr. Leslie's old friend, H. Stacy Marks, R.A., on subjects from natural history and country life. Both these books are illustrated by the author.

LESLIE, Henry David, musical composer, son of John Leslie, born in London, June 18, 1822, and educated at the Palace School, Enfield, began his musical studies in 1838, under the direction of Charles Lucas. He was appointed Hon. Sec. of the Amateur Musical Society of London on its formation in 1847, and from 1855 until its dissolution in 1861 was its conductor. In 1856 he founded the choral society known by his name, and is Principal of the College of Music, an institution founded in 1864. He has composed "Te Deum" and "Jubilate in D," published in 1841; "Orchestral Symphony in F," in 1847; Festival Anthem, "Let God Arise," for soprano and tenor solo, double chorus and orchestra, in 1849; dramatic overture, "The Templar," in 1852; oratorio, "Immanuel," in 1853; operetta, "Romance, or Bold Dick Turpin," and oratorio, "Judith," in 1857; cantata, "Holyrood," in 1860; wedding cantata, "The Daughter of the Isles," in 1861; besides various compositions for stringed instruments, and some sixty or seventy single songs, duets, anthems, and pianoforte pieces. Mr. Leslie in 1864 composed a romantic opera in three acts.

LESSAR, Paul, was born in 1851, and comes of a Montenegrin family. He was educated at the École des Ingénieurs in St. Petersburg, and on account of his ability he was selected to accompany General Skobeleff into Asia to survey for railways. In 1880 he joined General Komaroff as an expert in surveying and exploring the Turcoman country between the Caspian and Afghanistan. He established himself at Askabad, and in Nov., 1881, he penetrated beyond Sarakhs, across the Afghan frontier, to within a few miles of Herat. In the course of two years he rode a distance of nearly 6,000 miles, exploring the whole of the ground of the Russo-Persian and Russo-Afghan frontier. He became Diplomatic Attaché to the Governor of the Transcaspian, and to him was committed the real direction of the matter of the Afghan frontier. In 1885 he was sent on a special mission to London as geographical expert, to assist the Russian Ambassador in the negotiations which accompanied the despatch of the Afghan Boundary Commission.

LETHBRIDGE, Sir Roper, K.C.I.E., M.P., eldest son of the late Mr. E. Lethbridge, was born in 1840, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford, where he graduated in double honours (classical and mathematical). He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1880. In 1868 he was appointed Professor in the Bengal Educational Department. He was subsequently elected a Fellow of the Calcutta University, and acted as an Examiner of that University (and also of the University of Lahore), at various times from 1868 to 1876, in Political Economy, History, English Language and Literature, Mathematics, and Mental and Moral Philosophy. In 1877 he was appointed Secretary to the Simla Educational Commission, and placed on special duty to write the articles on the Feudatory States for the "Imperial Gazetteer of India." In the following year he was transferred to the Indian Political Department as Political Agent and Press Commissioner under Lord Lytton's Viceroyalty. He was for many years editor of the only Indian quarterly, the Calcutta Review; and is the author of a "History of India," also a "History of Bengal," and many other works. In 1885 he was elected Conservative member for North Kensington, and was again returned in 1886. He was created a Companion of the Indian Empire in 1877, a Knight Bachelor in 1885, and a Knight Commander of the Indian Empire in 1890.

LEWIS, Professor Bunnell, is descended from Philip Henry, the celebrated Nonconformist, father of Matthew Henry the Commentator, and from a Huguenot family which seems to have migrated into England at the time of the Reformation. He was born in London in 1824; educated at the Islington Proprietary School, under the late Dr. Jackson, afterwards Bishop of London, and at University College, London; he also read privately with the late Mr. Charles Rann Kennedy. He took the degree of B.A. at the University of London in 1843, with the University Scholarship in Classics; and was elected a Fellow of University College in 1847. He graduated M.A., Branch I. (Classics), in 1849, with the Gold Medal, then awarded for the first time; and was appointed Professor of Latin in Queen's College, Cork, in 1849. At the foundation of the Queen's University in Ireland he took an active part in its administration, and held the office of Examiner in Latin for four years. He was elected F.S.A. in 1865; and Foreign Corresponding Associate of the National Society of Antiquaries of France in 1883. He is a Member of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, the Royal Historical and Archæological Association of Ireland, and the Huguenot Society of London. At the request of the Council of University College, London, he delivered courses of lectures on Classical Archæology in 1873, 1874, in connection with the Slade School of Art. Professor Lewis has visited, for purposes of archæological research, Ravenna, Brittany, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, the south-west of France, Tarragona, Palermo, Constantinople, Autun, Reims, Switzerland, Langres and Besançon, the Middle Rhine and the Upper Danube, Pola, Aquileia and Buda-Pest. The results of these investigations have appeared in the Journal of the Archæological Institute, 1875-1893. Many facts have been mentioned with which the English public was not previously acquainted, and ancient monuments have been specially considered as illustrating the Greek and Latin authors. With the view of making classical instruction more realistic and interesting, Professor Lewis has collected objects of art and antiquity for the museum of his College; and has laboured in various ways to introduce the study of antiquities as an integral part of University education. He has contributed to the second revised edition of Dr. William Smith's Latin Dictionary. A great part of his paper on Autun was translated into French and published by the Société Eduenne, of which M. Bulliot, the explorer of Mont Beuvray, is the President.

LEWIS, Sir George, a celebrated solicitor, was born in 1833. He made his first mark in conducting the prosecution of the directors of Overend & Gurney's bank, and subsequently had the management of many other mercantile and financial prosecutions. He was engaged also in the prosecution of Madame Rachel, and of Slade, the medium; and more recently in the preparation of the case for Mr. Parnell and the Irish party against the Times at the Parnell Commission. He has by far the largest practice, in criminal cases, of any solicitor in London. He was knighted in June, 1893.

LEWIS, Most Rev. John Travers, D.D., LL.D., Archbishop of Ontario, born in 1825, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated as senior moderator in ethics and logic, and was Gold Medallist. He was ordained in 1848, and held the curacy of Newtown Butler; went to Canada in 1849, and was appointed by the Bishop of Toronto to the pastoral charge of the parish of Hawkesbury, which he exchanged in 1854 for the rectory of Brookville. He was consecrated first Bishop of Ontario, in Upper Canada, March 25, 1862. On Jan. 25, 1893, he was elected Metropolitan of Canada, and on Sept. 19 of the same year he was made Archbishop of Ontario at the General Synod held in Toronto for the Consolidation of the Church of England in Canada.

LEWIS, The Right Rev. Richard, D.D., Bishop of Llandaff, born in 1821, was educated at Worcester College, Oxford (B.A., 1843; M.A., 1846). He was instituted to the rectory of Lampeter-Velfry, Narberth, Pembrokeshire, in 1851, and was appointed Archdeacon of St. David's in 1875. In 1883 he was appointed Bishop of Llandaff in succession to Dr. Ollivant, and was consecrated to that See by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson), in St. Paul's Cathedral, on April 25 of that year.

LEWIS, Thomas Hayter, F.S.A., was born in London, July 9, 1818, and articled pupil to Joseph Parkinson, architect, of Sackville Street, Piccadilly. In 1837 he was admitted as a student of the Royal Academy, and in 1839 obtained the Silver Medal for Architectural Drawing. He subsequently entered the office of Sir W. Tite. In 1841-42 he travelled through France, Germany, Italy, Sicily and Greece, his principal sketches being published in the Dictionary of the Architectural Publication Society. He then entered into partnership with Mr. Finden, brother of the well-known engraver. In 1854 he designed the Alhambra as a scientific institution — the Panopticon. In 1860 he succeeded Sir M. D. Wyatt as Honorary Secretary to the Royal Institute of Architects. In 1864 he was Examiner, in conjunction with Sir G. G. Scott and A. Ashpital, in the Voluntary Examination at the Royal Institute. In 1865 he was elected Professor of Architecture at University College, and afterwards designed the extensive additions to the College buildings, and in 1871 was appointed Dean of the Faculty of Arts. In subsequent years he travelled in Germany, Italy, Greece, Algeria, Egypt, Palestine, &c.; papers by him relating to the architecture and antiquities of those countries being published in the Transactions of various Societies. He designed and carried out numerous works, public and private, both in London and in the provinces, but in 1869, owing to a severe illness, he retired, to a considerable extent, from general practice; and in 1881, for the same reason, resigned his professorship, being then elected Emeritus Professor by the College. He is the author (in addition to various detached essays) of the articles on "Ancient and Modern Architecture" in the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica (the mediæval portion being by Mr. G. E. Street, R.A.), also of the "Annual Review of Architecture" in the Companion to the Almanac for 1885, 1886 and 1887, and with Colonel Sir C. W. Wilson, he annotated Mr. Aubrey Stewart's translation of Procopius' work on "Justinian's Buildings." In 1888 he wrote and published, after two visits to the Holy Land, "The Holy Places of Jerusalem," and in 1894 wrote an appendix on Byzantine sculpture to Naville's "Aanas el Medineh." He has also recently edited works for the Palestine Pilgrims Text Society.

LEWIS, William James, M.A., born near Newtown, Montgomeryshire, Jan. 16, 1847, was elected a scholar of Jesus College, Oxford, in Oct. 1865, and obtained a first-class in the University examinations in mathematics and natural science. He was elected a Fellow of Oriel College in April, 1869. For some time he was assistant-master at Cheltenham College. He was a member of the Total Eclipse expeditions (English) of 1870 and 1871, and his observations on the polarisation of the corona have been published in the volume of "Solar Eclipses" issued under the auspices of the Royal Astronomical Society. In 1874 he began to study mineralogy, and for that purpose went to Cambridge, where he received the valuable assistance of Professor William Hallows Miller. He held an appointment in the Mineral Department of the British Museum from 1875 to 1877, in which latter year he resigned, owing to ill-health. He has contributed several papers on Crystallography to the Philosophical Magazine. In Feb., 1881, he was elected Professor of Mineralogy at Cambridge, in succession to the late Dr. William Hallows Miller. In 1884 he organized, and has since conducted, as Honorary Secretary, the Cambridge University Scholastic Agency.

LEYDE, Otto Theodor, R.S.A., R.S.W., was born in 1835, at Wehlau, East Prussia (where his father, Ernest Leyde, was rector), and studied at the Royal Academy of the Fine Arts at Kœnigsberg under Professor Rosenfelder, and continued his studies in Edinburgh, in 1858, where he settled. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1870, and a full member in 1880. He was one of the original members of the Royal Scottish Society of Painters in Water-colours, also of the Liverpool Water-colour Society, and the Painter-Etchers Society, London. His works are principally portraits and domestic genre.

LICHFIELD, Bishop of. See LEGGE, HON. AND RIGHT REV. AUGUSTUS.

LIDDELL, The Very Rev. Henry George, D.D., late Dean of Christ Church, Oxford, eldest son of the late Rev. H. G. Liddell (formerly rector of Easington, Durham, and uncle of the late Lord Ravensworth), was born in 1811. Having been educated at the Charterhouse, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a double first-class in 1833, he became successively Tutor and Censor of Christ Church, Public Examiner in Classics, Select Preacher, and Proctor of the University, Head Master of Westminster School, a member of the Oxford University Commission (1850), Domestic Chaplain to the late Prince Albert, and Chaplain Extraordinary to the Queen. He succeeded Dr. Gaisford as Dean of Christ Church in 1855, and became Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford in 1870. He retired in 1891, and now lives at Ascot. He has written "A History of Rome," published in 1855, which has gone through many editions, and he is joint author of "Liddell and Scott's Greek Lexicon," which first appeared in 1843, and of which the seventh edition, greatly augmented, was published in 1883.

LIDDERDALE, William, late Governor of the Bank of England, was born at St. Petersburg on July 16, 1832, and educated at a private school in Cheshire. He entered commercial life in the office of Heath & Co., Russia merchants, in Liverpool, and afterwards became Cashier to Messrs. Rathbone Brothers & Co., in the same city, representing that firm in New York from 1857 to 1863, and becoming a partner in 1864, when he opened their London house. In 1870 he was elected a Director of the Bank of England. In November, 1890, Mr. Lidderdale, then Governor of the Bank, saved the City "from what would otherwise have undoubtedly been the greatest financial panic this generation has seen," by his wise, firm, and rapid measures during the Baring crisis. In these measures he was materially assisted by Mr. Powell, the Deputy-Governor, and by Lord Rothschild and a few other leaders of finance, but it was chiefly owing to his initiative that the Baring difficulty was smoothly tided over. In the Vagliano case he has also done good service to the banking interest at large, having afforded important assistance to Sir Richard Webster in his arguments before the House of Lords. Mr. Lidderdale, after the Baring crisis was over, was continued in office as Governor of the Bank of England a year longer than is customary. In 1868 he married Mary, elder daughter of Wadsworth D. Busk, Esq., formerly of St. Petersburg.

LIEBKNECHT, Herr, a leading German socialist, was born at Giessen, March 29, 1826, and received his education there and at Berlin. He showed socialistic tendencies at an early age, and was charged with taking part in one of the Polish revolutionary movements. He was accordingly expelled from Austria in 1846, joined the Swiss army, and fought on the side of the ouvriers in the Paris revolution of 1848. Returning to Germany, he worked in the interests of his cause as a journalist, schoolmaster, and lecturer. He was imprisoned and exiled, and lived in England from 1850 to 1862. In 1867 he was elected for Schneeburg Stolberg in Saxony, and subsequently represented Offenbach on the Maine. He at present represents Berlin in the Reichstag. He is editor of Vorwärts, the principal socialist daily paper in Germany, and is an eloquent parliamentary and public speaker.

LI HUNG CHANG, General, ex-Prime Minister of China, was born at Ho Fei Shieun in the Anu-Huei province, Feb. 16, 1823. In 1860 he co-operated with General (then Colonel) Gordon in suppressing the Taeping rebellion, being then Governor of the Thiang-Sin province. The other Thiang province being added to his rule, he was created Viceroy of the United Countries, May, 1865. The following year he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary, and in 1867 Viceroy of Hong-Kuang, and a Grand Chancellor in 1868. After the Tien-Tsin massacre in 1870, he was despoiled of his titles, and otherwise punished on the charge of not assisting the General in command, but in 1872 the then Emperor restored him to favour and the office of Grand Chancellor. He was the mediator for fixing the indemnity for the murder of Mr. Margary, who was killed, in 1876, while endeavouring to explore South-western China. He has also negotiated important treaties with Peru and with Japan. Li Hung Chang was till lately the Viceroy of the Metropolitan provinces of Pe-Chih-Li, and as such was the actual ruler or chief administrator of the Chinese Empire. He is a man of liberal views, has permitted coal-mining and coast-steamer traffic to be carried on by English companies, and is thought to be favourable even to railways. He was the originator of the Chinese Navy. During the recent war with Japan, General Li Hung Chang, though an old man, and more than once discouraged and disgraced by the Emperor, has borne up to 1895 the whole burden of responsibility which in a constitutional country would be divided between various ministers. He has performed the functions of a War Ministry, Marine Ministry, and Finance Ministry, and that without any staff or civil service to assist him. The Emperor issues edicts, but does not provide the means for carrying them out. On Li Hung Chang has devolved the task of providing means, whether in gross or in detail. Indeed, he has been fitly described as the Atlas on whose shoulders the whole rotten fabric of Chinese administration has rested for thirty years past. At the beginning of the recent war he was invested by the Emperor with the supreme charge of the naval and military forces sent to Corea, but early in the war was deprived of the Yellow Jacket and the Peacock's Feather, and was afterwards superseded in the chief command. He, however, still continued Prime Minister. In December it was rumoured that influential Chinese merchants and others at Canton were anxious that he should be impeached on the charge of being under Japanese, and even German, influences. Later it was reported that he had been definitely superseded in all his offices, and then again restored to complete favour (Feb., 1895) in view of the peace negotiations with Japan, which he is said to have undertaken.

LILLEY, Sir Charles, K.C.M.G., Chief Justice of Queensland, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1830, and was educated at University College, London. He went out to New South Wales in 1856; was articled to a solicitor in Moreton Bay; and became editor of the Moreton Bay Courier. He was admitted to the Bar in 1861; and, after becoming Q.C., was made in succession Attorney-General, Colonial Secretary, Premier, Puisne Judge, and Chief Justice of Queensland. He held the latter post from 1879 to 1893, when he resigned.

LILLY, William Samuel, was born at Fifehead, Dorsetshire, in 1840, and educated at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, where in 1858 he obtained the senior scholarship and the Classical Prize. He graduated in 1861 in the Law Tripos, and in the same year obtained an appointment, by open competition in the Civil Service of India. He was sent to the Presidency of Madras, where, after filling various public offices, he was appointed, in 1869, Under-Secretary to the Government. He left India on account of ill-health in 1870. He was called to the English Bar in 1873, and in 1874 was appointed Secretary to the Catholic Union of Great Britain, which office he still holds. He published in 1884 "Ancient Religion and Modern Thought," in 1886 "Chapters in European History" (2 vols.), in 1889 "A Century of Revolution," in 1890 "On Right and Wrong," in 1892 "On Shibboleths" and "The Great Enigma," in 1893 (with J. E. P. Wallis) a "Manual of the Law specially affecting Catholics," and in 1894 the "Claims of Christianity;" and is well known as a contributor to the Quarterly, Contemporary, and Fortnightly Reviews, and to the Nineteenth Century, upon philosophical and historical subjects. He is a Justice of the Peace for the counties of Middlesex and London.

LIMERICK, Bishop of. See GRAVES, THE RIGHT REV. CHARLES.

LINCOLN, Bishop of. See KING, THE RIGHT REV. EDWARD.

LINCOLN, The Hon. Robert Todd, American Statesman, is the son of the sixteenth President of the United States, and was born at Springfield, Illinois, Aug. 1, 1843. He was prepared for college at Phillips Academy (Exeter, N.H.), and graduated at Harvard in 1864. After a short stay at the Harvard Law School he was commissioned a Captain in the Union Army, and served through the final campaign of the Civil War. He then resumed the study of law, was admitted to the Bar, and began the practice of his profession at Chicago. All offers to enter public life were steadily refused by him until President Garfield, in 1881, tendered him the portfolio of Secretary of War in the Cabinet, and this he accepted. On the assassination of Mr. Garfield, Mr. Lincoln was requested by President Arthur to retain his seat, which he did until the accession to the presidency of Mr. Cleveland in 1885. In the latter year he resumed the practice of law in Chicago, where he remained until sent by President Harrison, in 1889, as the American Minister to England. He resigned this position at the beginning of Mr. Cleveland's second Administration, and again returned to his professional work in Chicago.

LINDLEY, The Right Hon. Sir Nathaniel, P.C., one of the Lords Justices of Appeal, is the eldest son of the late Dr. John Lindley, F.R.S. (Professor of Botany at University College, London, and author of numerous well-known botanical works), by Sarah, daughter of Mr. George Anthony Freestone, of St. Margaret's, Suffolk. He was born at Acton Green, Middlesex, in 1828, and educated at University College, London. He was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple, in Michaelmas term, 1850, and practised in the Chancery Courts. In 1872 he obtained a silk gown. He was appointed a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas in May, 1875, on which occasion he received the honour of knighthood. He became one of the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Nov. 1881, and a member of the Privy Council in the following month. He is the author of an "Introduction to the Study of Jurisprudence," and of a "Treatise on the Law of Partnership and Companies," of which a sixth edition appeared in 1893.

LINDSAY, Sir Coutts, of Balcarres, born in 1824, late Lieut.-Colonel Grenadier Guards; Lieut.-Colonel commanding the Fife Rifle Volunteers; and late Major commanding the first regiment of the Italian Legion, has, since his retirement from active military life, devoted himself to artistic pursuits. During his residence in Rome he became an intimate friend of the late Mr. Gibson, and embracing art as a serious study enjoyed the advantage of the instruction of Ary Scheffer. Sir Coutts Lindsay, whom professional artists used not to consider as an amateur, has exhibited many pictures at the Royal Academy, notably the "Good Shepherd," and a portrait of Lord Somers. His most important work is, perhaps, to be found in Dorchester House, the central hall of which is decorated entirely from his designs, and mainly by his own hand. Strongly imbued with the Early Italian idea of painting, for decorative purposes, upon a golden ground, he has left in Mr. Holford's mansion a substantial record of his skill. He was on the English Commission, and a member of the Fine Arts Committee, of the Paris Exhibition. He was the owner of the Grosvenor Gallery in the days of its greatness. In building it, however, he was not actuated by any spirit of opposition to the Royal Academy, but rather by the idea of affording an increased area to artists for the exhibition of their works.

LINDSAY, David, F.R.G.S., Australian explorer, was born at Goolwa, on the Lower Murray, South Australia, June 20, 1856, and is the younger son of John Scott Lindsay, master-mariner, of Dundee, Scotland. He was educated at the Goolwa Public School, and at the Rev. John Hotham's Private School at Port Elliot; was appointed Cadet in the South Australian Survey Department in June, 1873; Surveyor in March, 1874; Junior Surveyor for the Northern Territory in 1878; resigned his post in the Government service, in June, 1882; was appointed, by the South Australian Government, as Leader of the Arnheims Land Exploring Expedition in 1883, during which journey much new country was discovered and mapped down, much hardship endured through shortness of rations, they having, for the last three weeks, to subsist on horseflesh dried in the sun. The expedition lost sixteen horses through accidents and starvation, and four horses were speared by natives at one camp. Mr. Lindsay carried out a private exploration at his own risk and expense right across Australia from South to North, occupying twelve months, from Nov. 1885, to Dec. 1886 (during which time only three showers of rain fell). He surveyed and marked on the ground 550 miles of Run boundary lines, connecting the Queensland border-line with the Adelaide and Port Darwin telegraph line; and discovered the "Rubies" in MacDonnell Ranges, Central Australia. The journals of these two explorations have been published in the South Australian parliamentary papers, and by the Royal Geographical Society of England. Mr. Lindsay is a Member of the Council of the South Australian Institute of Surveyors, Member of the Board of Examiners for Licensed Surveyors, Honorary Member of the South Australian branch, and Honorary Corresponding Member of the Victorian branch of the Royal Geographical Society of Australasia, and Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society of London.

LINGEN (Lord), Ralph Robert Wheeler, K.C.B., D.C.L., Baron Lingen, of Lingen, in the county of Hereford, only son of Mr. Thomas Lingen, and of Ann, daughter of Mr. Robert Wheeler, of Birmingham, born in that town on Feb. 19, 1819, was educated at Bridgnorth Grammar School, whence he was elected, in 1837, to a scholarship at Trinity College, Oxford. He obtained the Ireland University Scholarship in 1838, the Hertford University Scholarship in 1839, graduated B.A. as a first-class in classics in 1840, was afterwards elected to a Fellowship at Balliol College, and obtained the Chancellor's prize for a Latin Essay in 1843, and the Eldon Law Scholarship in 1846. He was created an honorary D.C.L. in 1881. He studied in the chambers of the late Mr. Peter Brodie and the late Mr. Heathfield, and was called to the Bar in 1847, but shortly afterwards entered the Educational Department of the Privy Council, and in 1849 succeeded Sir J. P. Kay-Shuttleworth, Bart., as Secretary. In Jan., 1870, he was appointed to succeed the Right Hon. G. A. Hamilton as Permanent Secretary of the Treasury, and held this post till 1885. He was nominated C.B. in 1869, and K.C.B. in 1878. He was created a Peer, July 3, 1885, and elected an Alderman of the First London County Council in 1889, but resigned in 1893. He married, in 1852, Emma, second daughter of Mr. Robert Hutton, of Putney Park, Surrey, formerly M.P. for the city of Dublin.

LINTON, Mrs. Elizabeth, better known as Mrs. Lynn Linton, youngest daughter of the late Rev. J. Lynn, vicar of Crosthwaithe, Cumberland, was born at Keswick in 1822. Her first work of fiction, entitled "Azeth, the Egyptian," appeared in 1846; "Amymone: a Romance of the Days of Pericles," in 1848; and "Realities," a story of modern life, in 1851; since which time this authoress has been connected with the press. Her "Witch Stories" appeared in 1861; "The Lake Country," illustrated by her husband, in 1864; "Grasp your Nettle," 1865; "Lizzie Lorton of Greyrigg" and "Sowing the Wind," 1866; "The True History of Joshua Davidson, Christian and Communist," 1872; "Patricia Kemball," 1874; "The Mad Willoughbys, and other Tales," 1876; "The Atonement of Leam Dundas" and "The World Well Lost," 1877; "The Rebel of the Family," 1880; "My Love," 1881; "Ione," 1883; "The Autobiography of Christopher Kirkland," a mixture of truth and fiction, like Goethe's "Dichtung und Wahrheit," 1885; "Paston Carew, Millionaire and Miser," and "Stabbed in the Dark," 1886; "Through the Long Night," 1888; "About Ireland," 1890; "About Ulster," 1892; "An Octave of Friends," 1891; and "The One Too Many," a novel, 1894. Mrs. Linton, long credited with the authorship of the "Girl of the Period" in the Saturday Review (and many of the papers that have appeared in that journal on the woman question), at last acknowledged the authorship; and of several other essays of the same kind, published in two volumes by Messrs. Bentley, 1883. "Ourselves," a book of essays on the same subject, by Mrs. Linton, appeared in 1867. In 1858 she was married to Mr. William James Linton, the engraver and author.

LINTON, Sir James Dromgole, President of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours, was born in London, Dec. 26, 1840. He soon showed talent for drawing, and was sent to the Newman Street School of Art, then conducted by Leigh, a pupil of Etty. He continued his studies there till the age of twenty-one, and then began to exhibit water colours at the Dudley Gallery and the Institute of Water Colour Painters; of the latter he was, in 1867, elected a member, and his pictures soon became a special feature of the exhibitions. At the same time he became a member of the staff of artists on the Graphic. Among his pictures exhibited at the Institute may be mentioned "Maunday Thursday," "1793," "Love the Conqueror," "Off Guard," "The Cardinal Minister," "The Earl of Leicester," and "Priscilla." Mr. Linton worked hard to obtain for the art of water-colour painting a recognised position. In 1863 he, together with other artists, opened the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, a development of the New Society which had been formed in 1832 by painters dissatisfied with the manner in which their art was treated by the Royal Academy. The exhibition was for many years confined to the works of members, but in 1883, having moved to large new quarters in Piccadilly, it was thrown open to all comers, and Mr. Linton was elected President. The Queen granted the title "Royal," and in 1885 conferred on the President the honour of knighthood. Sir James has also produced a number of pictures in oil; in 1878 he exhibited a small picture "Biron," at the Academy, and in 1879 five oil paintings at the Grosvenor Gallery. In the same year he received a commission for a series of pictures representing the conflict between Islam and Christianity in the sixteenth century. In 1885 he exhibited at the Academy "The Marriage of H.R.H. the Duke of Albany," painted by command of the Queen. Sir J. Linton is also President of the Institute of Painters in Oil Colours, which holds its exhibitions in the winter at the rooms of the Water-Colour Institute.

LINTON, William James, engraver and writer, was born in London in 1812. He was apprenticed to Mr. G. W. Bonner in 1828, became the partner in 1842 of the late Mr. Orrin Smith, and was engaged with him on the first works of importance published in the Illustrated London News. As an engraver on wood he ranks in the first class. In his younger days, as a zealous chartist, he became intimately associated with the chief political refugees; in 1844 he was concerned with Mazzini in calling the attention of the House of Commons to the fact that the exiles' letters had been opened by Sir James Graham; and in 1848 was deputed to carry to the French Provisional Government the first congratulatory address of English workmen. In 1851 he was one of the founders of the Leader newspaper; in 1855 he became the manager and editor of Pen and Pencil; and was for several years a regular poetical contributor to the Nation, during the editorship of Mr. Duffy. In 1866 he went to America, and after remaining for a while in New York, finally settled in New Haven, Conn. He is a Member of the American Society of Painters in Water Colours, and also a Member of the National Academy of Design. He has contributed to the Westminster Review, Examiner and Spectator, and has published three volumes of "The English Republic," 1851-55; a series of "The Works of Deceased British Artists," 1860; "Claribel, and other Poems," 1865; "Practical Hints on Wood Engraving," 1879; "A History of Wood Engraving in America," 1882; and "A Manual of Wood Engraving," 1884. In 1882 he edited "Rare Poems of the 16th and 17th Centuries;" in 1883, in conjunction with R. H. Stoddard, 5 vols. of "English Verse;" in 1889 published a volume of "Poems and Translations;" and in the same year brought out, by subscription, "The Masters of Wood Engraving," a folio volume with numerous illustrations. His latest works are a "Life of Whittier," 1893; and his reminiscences, 1895.

LIPPINCOTT, Sara Jane (Clarke), known by her pseudonym of "Grace Greenwood," was born at Pompey, New York, Sept. 28, 1823. She was educated at Rochester, New York. She removed with her father's family to New Brighton, Pennsylvania, in 1843, and soon began writing for magazines and other periodicals. In 1853 she was married to Mr. Leander K. Lippincott, of Philadelphia. In 1854 she established the Little Pilgrim, a paper for children, which for some years had a wide circulation. She has appeared on the stage as a dramatic reader and as a lecturer. Besides frequent contributions to periodicals she has published "Greenwood Leaves," 1850-52; "History of my Pets," 1850; "Poems" and "Recollections of my Childhood," 1851; "Haps and Mishaps of a Tour in Europe," 1854; "Merrie England," 1855; "Forest Tragedy, and other Tales," 1856; Stories and Legends of Ireland," and "History for Children," 1858; "Stories from Famous Ballads," 1859; "Bonnie Scotland," 1860; "Stories of Many Lands," 1866; "Stories of France and Italy," and "Records of Five Years," 1867; "New Life in New Lands," 1873; "Heads and Tails," 1875; "Queen Victoria," 1883; and "Stories for Home-Folks," 1885. She has been perhaps best known as a correspondent of the New York Tribune and New York Times, writing from Washington and from Europe, where she spent a number of years.

LISTER, Sir Joseph, Bart., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., Surgeon-Extraordinary to the Queen, Emeritus Professor of Clinical Surgery in King's College, London, is the son of the late Joseph Jackson Lister

Esq., of Upton, Essex, and was born in 1827. He is an M.B. of the University of London, 1852; a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, England, 1852; and a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Edinburgh, 1855. He was for some time Regius Professor of Surgery in the University of Glasgow, and afterwards Regius Professor of Clinical Surgery in the University of Edinburgh. In 1876 he was one of the members appointed to the General Medical Council for Scotland by the Privy Council. In 1880 he received the Medal of the Royal Society, and in the following year the prize of the Academy of Paris was awarded to him for his observations and discoveries in the application of the antiseptic treatment in surgery, which has often been referred to as "Listerism." He received the degree of LL.D. at Glasgow University in 1879; D.C.L. at Oxford in 1880; LL.D. at Cambridge in 1880; and in 1883 was made a Baronet on Mr. Gladstone's recommendation. He has also been the recipient of various other honorary degrees and distinctions. He is the author of papers "On the Early Stages of Inflammation," &c., in the "Philosophical Transactions;" "On the Minute Structure of Involuntary Muscular Fibre," in the "Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh;" and of various other papers on "Surgical Pathology," &c. One of his latest papers on "Principles of Antiseptic Surgery" appeared in Virchow's Festschrift, in 1891.

LITTLE, The Rev. William John Knox, M.A., Canon of Worcester, is a son of Mr. John Little, of Stewartstown, co. Tyrone, and was born about 1839. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took his Bachelor's degree in 1862 as a third-class in the Classical Tripos, and proceeded M.A. in due course. He was successively assistant master in Lancaster and Sherborne Grammar Schools; curate of Christ Church, Lancaster; curate in charge of Turweston, Bucks; and curate of St. Thomas's, Regent Street. He was collated to the rectory of St. Alban's, Cheetwood, in 1875, and remained there until 1885. In Sept., 1881, he was nominated by Mr. Gladstone to the canonry in Worcester Cathedral that had been vacated by the promotion of Canon Bradley to the Deanery of Westminster. Canon Knox Little is well known as a most eloquent popular preacher of the High Church School. He is the author of "Characteristics of the Christian Life," "Meditations on the Three Hours' Agony of our Blessed Redeemer," "Motives of the Christian Life," and a volume of "Sermons," and some novels, one of which is "The Child of Stafferton," 1889. One of his most recent publications is "The Christian House, its Foundation and Duties," 1891. He married, in 1866, Annie, eldest daughter of Mr. Henry Gregson, of Moorlands, Lancashire, and has issue.

LIVEING, George Downing, M.A., F.R.S., eldest son of Edward Liveing, of Nayland, Suffolk, surgeon, was born in 1827, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He graduated B.A. 1850; M.A. 1853; and became in the same year Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College. He was one of the Cambridge Essayists, 1855. He was appointed Professor of Chemistry at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, 1860; Professor of Chemistry in the University of Cambridge, 1861; and was elected Fellow of the Royal Society, 1879; and is J.P. for Cambridgeshire. Professor Liveing is joint author with Professor Dewar, of "Ultra-Violet Spectra of the Elements," in the "Transactions of the Royal Society," 1883; and of many papers on spectroscopic subjects in the "Proceedings of the Royal Society," the "Proceedings of the Cambridge Philosophical Society," and Philosophical Magazine; and of "Chemical Equilibrium the Result of the Dissipation of Energy," 1885. Besides his scientific work, Professor Liveing's energies have been much given to the spread of education. Before 1852 there were no laboratories in Cambridge in which students could learn the practical applications of science. In that year he established, at his own expense, the first chemical laboratory for undergraduates in Cambridge, and subsequently, for twelve years, he presided over the laboratory built for him by St. John's College. This was the beginning of that system of experimental teaching which has now so prominent a place at the University. In the first establishment of the local examinations of the University he took a leading part, and for several years he was the organizing Secretary for these examinations. During that time, and in great measure through his exertions, the examination and inspection by the University of secondary schools and the admission of girls and girls' schools to the examinations were commenced. He also took an active part in the establishment, in 1873, of the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board. In 1875 he promoted, and in great measure organized, the examinations of the University in State Medicine, open to the whole Medical Profession, which have since taken the name of Examinations for the Diploma in Public Health, and have been the model for similar examinations by other bodies. In recent years he has actively promoted the establishment of a School of Agricultural Science at Cambridge, which has received the support of several County Councils.

LIVERPOOL, Bishop of. See RYLE, THE RIGHT REV. JOHN CHARLES.

LIVERSIDGE, Professor Archibald, M.A., F.R.S., Vice-President Royal Society of New South Wales, was educated at a private school, and by private tutors in science in London. He entered the Royal College of Chemistry and Royal School of Mines, London, 1866, and obtained a Royal Exhibition at these places in 1867; this privilege was tenable for three years with £50 per year and remission of all fees, equal to about £100 in addition. At the same examination he obtained Medals in chemistry, mineralogy, and metallurgy. During his first year as student at the Royal College of Chemistry he was given charge of the Chemical Laboratory at the Royal School of Naval Architecture for one term, during the illness of the lecturer, and published his first paper on Supersaturated Saline Solutions. He was trained in Chemistry at the College of Chemistry, under Professor Frankland, F.R.S., D.C.L., &c. He took the Associateship of the School of Mines, in Metallurgy and Mining, 1870, after having studied and passed in Physics, under Professor Tyndall, Geology under Sir Andrew Ramsay, Mineralogy and Mining under Sir W. Warrington Smyth, Mechanics under Professors Willis and Goodeve, and Metallurgy under Dr. Percy. He also spent some time in Dr. Frankland's private chemical laboratory, as a senior student upon research work. In 1870 he obtained an open scholarship in science at Christ's College, Cambridge. During his first year at Cambridge he held the post of Demonstrator of Chemistry in the University Laboratory for two terms in the absence of Dr. Hicks. He was one of the first two students in the new Physiological Laboratory at Cambridge, just started by Professor Michael Foster, Secretary to the Royal Society. In 1872 he was offered the appointment of Professor of Chemistry and Mineralogy in the University of Sydney, and went out in September of that year. He was a Representative Commissioner at the Paris Exhibition in 1878, and a juror in chemistry and metallurgy. He has been a trustee of the Australian Museum, Sydney, since 1874, and during visits to Europe, America, &c., purchased most of the non-Australian mineral and geological collections which it possesses. Professor Liversidge has also been a member of the Sydney University Senate since 1878, and Dean of the Faculty of Science since the formation of that faculty in 1883. He made the chemical investigations upon the Sydney water supply for the Government in 1876; was one of the original members of the Board of Technical Education, and Hon. Secretary of the Royal Society of N.S.W. from 1874 to 1889, except when he was President in 1883-84. He was the President for 1889-90 (this being an annual office). He was elected to the Fellowship of the Royal Society, England, in 1882. He published a work on the minerals of N.S.W. in 1888, to show the progress made in the knowledge of the mineralogy of N.S.W. during the first 100 years of its history. He originated the Australasian Association for the Advancement of Science, as a centennial record of the progress of the colonies. This Association held its first meeting in Sydney in 1890. He has visited Tasmania and New Zealand several times, Fiji, Java, China, Japan, and the United States in 1887. Professor Archibald Liversidge is an Associate of the Royal School of Mines, London; Fellow of the Chemical Society, London; Fellow Inst. Chemistry of Gt. Brit. and Irel.; F.G.S.; F.L.S.; F.R.G.S.; Mem. Phy. Soc. London; Mem. Mineralogical Soc. Gt. Brit. and Irel.; Cor. Mem. Roy. Soc. Tas.; Cor. Mem. Senckenberg Institute, Frankfort; Cor. Mem. Soc. d'Acclimat., Mauritius; Hon. Fel. Roy. Hist. Soc. Lond.; Mem. Min. Soc. of France; Professor of Chemistry in the University of Sydney; Editor, for many years, of the Journal of the Royal Society of New South Wales; and is the author of nearly a hundred scientific papers and reports on chemistry, mineralogy, &c.

LLANDAFF, Bishop of. See LEWIS, THE RIGHT REV. RICHARD.

LLOYD, The Right Rev. Daniel Lewis, M.A., Bishop of Bangor.

LLOYD, Edward, the famous tenor vocalist, was born in London in 1845. When seven years of age he entered Westminster Abbey choir. Afterwards he became solo tenor at the Chapel Royal, St. James's. Mr. Lloyd sang in Novello's Concerts in 1867, and at the Gloucester Festival in 1871, where he attracted much attention by his part in Bach's "Passion." In 1888 he went on a tour in America, and sang in the Cincinnati Festival. He repeated his visit in 1890 and 1892. In 1888 he sang also in the Handel Festival; and was principal tenor in the Leeds Musical Festival in 1889. Since that year he has frequently taken part in musical festivals at the Crystal Palace and elsewhere, notably at the Handel Festival in 1891. In 1890 and 1892 he again received an enthusiastic welcome in the United States, and in 1894 he sang with his accustomed power at the Handel Festival.

LOCH, Sir Henry Brougham, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., Chief Commissioner at the Cape. In his diplomatic career he was taken prisoner during the war with China; and with Mr. Boulby, the Times correspondent, was carried about in a cage by his captors, and exhibited to the natives. After his liberation he returned to England, and was appointed Governor of the Isle of Man, and subsequently Governor of Victoria; and, in 1889, was appointed to succeed Sir Hercules Robinson as Chief Commissioner at the Cape. Here he has been energetic in developing the resources of his colony. He was conspicuously before the public during the Matabele War in his character of representative of Imperial interests in South Africa. He has several times visited England, and once more arrived in this country, with Dr. Jameson, in Nov., 1894. He is now (March, 1895) about to retire from the Governorship of Cape Colony, and will be succeeded by Sir Hercules Robinson.

LOCKER-LAMPSON, Frederick, was born in 1821. His father, Mr. E. H. Locker, F.R.S., was a Civil Commissioner of Greenwich Hospital, and founded the Naval Gallery there. Mr. Locker's grandfather was Captain William Locker, R.N., Lieutenant-Governor of Greenwich Hospital. The late Mr. Arthur Locker, editor of the Graphic, was his younger brother. Mr. Locker was for some years in the Admiralty, as Précis Writer. He has contributed reviews to the Times, and is the author of "London Lyrics," and "Patchwork." In 1867 he edited the "Lyra Elegantiarum," with an essay prefixed. Mr. Locker is also known for his collection of drawings by the Old Masters, and for his library of rare Elizabethan literature, of which he has printed a Catalogue raisonné. He married first a sister of the late Earl of Elgin, and secondly the daughter of the late Sir Curtis Lampson, Bart., of Rowfant, after whose death Mr. Locker added the name of Lampson to his own.

LOCKHART, William Ewart, R.S.A., was born in Dumfriesshire on Feb. 14, 1846. He exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy at the early age of fourteen, and a few years later in the Royal Academy. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1870. Eight years later, in 1878, Mr. Lockhart was made a full Academician. He is the representative of the Scottish Academy among the Trustees of the British Institution, and is a Member of the Royal Water-Colour Society. In June, 1887, Mr. Lockhart was commissioned by her Majesty the Queen to paint, for the royal galleries at Windsor, a picture of the "Jubilee Celebration in Westminster Abbey," which large work engrossed his whole attention for almost three years. His principal works exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy are: "Priscilla," 1870; "Don Quixote," 1875; "Gil Blas," 1878; "Alnaschar," 1879; "Cardinal Beaton," 1881; "The Cid," 1882; "Swineherd," 1885; "Church Lottery," 1886; "Glaucus," and "The Jubilee Celebration in Westminster Abbey," 1887, &c.

LOCKROY, Edward Simon, a French journalist and politician, born in Paris, July 18, 1840, studied painting under Eugène Giraud, and at the Ecole des Beaux Arts. He accompanied M. Renan as Secretary on his archæological tour through Judæa and Palestine, 1860-61, and took part, under Garibaldi, in the expedition of Sicily. On his return to France he made his début in journalism and wrote for the Figaro, the Diable à Quatre, and the Rappel. For these articles he was condemned to four months' imprisonment, and fined 3,000 francs. During the siege of Paris he was chief of a battalion of the National Guard, and on Feb. 8, 1871, was elected to represent the Seine in the National Assembly, and voted against the preliminaries of peace. After the insurrection of March 18, he was arrested in the environs of Paris, taken first to Versailles, and then to Chartres, but was liberated in June, without a trial. On July 23, following he was elected a Member of the Municipal Council of Paris. He then became editor of the Peuple Souverain, a popular political journal, and for an article entitled "Mort aux traitres," he was tried and acquitted; but a few days afterwards, owing to a noisy duel with M. Paul de Cassagnac, he and his adversary were condemned to eight days' imprisonment. On March 27, 1873, he was again condemned to a month's imprisonment and a fine of 500 francs for an article, "La Libération du Territoire."

During his imprisonment M. Lockroy was elected representative for the department of Bouches du Rhône by 55,830 votes. At the general election in Feb., 1876, he was returned simultaneously for the 17th arrondissement of Paris and for Aix, and was one of the 363 deputies who refused a vote of confidence in the Broglie cabinet. In 1883 he acted with M. Floquet in carrying through his Exile Bill. M. Lockroy was Minister of Commerce under M. de Freycinet in 1886, and of Public Instruction in 1888 under M. Floquet; and in 1886 was charged with the organisation of the International Exhibition of 1889. In the September elections of 1889 he was elected for the second district of the 11th arrondissement of Paris, beating the Boulangist Massard by a large majority. M. Lockroy was for long an important member of Victor Hugo's circle, having married the widow of Charles Hugo in 1877. He has published several volumes, composed mainly of articles contributed to various journals: "Les Aigles du Capitole," 1869; "La Commune et l'Assemblée," 1871; "L'Isle Révoltée," 1877; "Ahmed-le-Boucher," 1887. He has also edited "Le Journal d'une Bourgeoise pendant la Revolution, 1791-1793," the lady in question having been his maternal grandmother, Mme. Jullien.

LOCKWOOD, Sir Frank, Q.C., M.P., was born in 1846, and was educated at Cambridge; called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, 1872; Q.C. 1882; Bencher, 1886. He was appointed one of the Commissioners to inquire into corrupt practices at Chester, 1880; made Recorder of Sheffield, 1884; and elected Liberal Member for York, 1885, a constituency which he still represents. He appeared, in company with other eminent counsel, on behalf of the Irish Party before the Parnell Commission. He is an accomplished caricaturist, and, in 1889, he illustrated Mr. C. J. Darling's facetious legal work, "Scintillæ Juris." In October, 1894, Mr. Lockwood was appointed Solicitor-General in succession to Sir J. Rigby, who was elevated to the Bench. It was decided when he offered himself for re-election, to return him unopposed for York. Under latest arrangements the Solicitor-General will be precluded from taking any private practice. Mr. Lockwood received the honour of knighthood on Nov 30, 1894.

LOCKYER, Joseph Norman, C.B., F.R.S., born at Rugby, May 17, 1836, was educated in various private schools in England, and on the Continent, where he attended the scientific lectures at the Sorbonne in Paris. He was appointed to the War Office in 1857, and from Lord de Grey received the appointment of editor of Army Regulations in 1865; and, in conjunction with Mr. Thomas Hughes, M.P., placed the legislation of the War Office on an improved basis. In 1870 he was appointed Secretary of the Royal Commission on Scientific Instruction and the Advancement of Science, presided over by the late Duke of Devonshire, and, on the termination of the labours of that commission in 1875, was transferred by the then Prime Minister, Mr. Disraeli, to the Science and Art Department. In this Department he organized the Loan Collection of Scientific Apparatus, opened by her Majesty in 1876. He was subsequently employed in connection with the Science Museum, and the inspection of the scientific teaching in the Training Colleges. He was appointed a Member of the Solar Physics Committee on its establishment in 1878, and Professor of Astronomical Physics in the Royal College of Science on its reorganization in 1881. Mr. Norman Lockyer is known as a worker in astronomical physics, a large contributor to scientific literature, and a lecturer on scientific subjects. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1860, and he contributed an important paper on "The Planet Mars" to the Memoirs of that Society. About that time he began telescopic and spectroscopic observations of the sun, and in 1866 proposed a method for observing the red flames without an eclipse, which method he and M. Janssen independently applied in 1868. To commemorate this discovery a Medal was struck by the French Government in 1872. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1869, and independently, and in conjunction with Dr. Frankland, announced many important solar and physical discoveries to the Society in that and the following years. Since 1876, when his observatory was removed from his private residence at Hampstead to the Science and Art Department at South Kensington, he has communicated many memoirs to the Royal Society dealing, among other matters, with the dissociation of the terrestrial elements in the sun, the spectra of sun spots, a revision of Kant's hypothesis on the origin of celestial bodies, the spectra of meteorites, the classification of stars as determined by their spectroscopic phenomena when photographed on a large scale, and on the origin of new stars. He was chief of the English Government Eclipse Expeditions to Sicily in 1870, to India in 1871, to Egypt in 1882, and the West Indies in 1886. He also observed the total eclipse of the sun in the United States in 1878 and 1888. He was elected Rede Lecturer to the University of Cambridge in 1871, and Bakerian Lecturer to the Royal Society in 1874. He received the Rumford Medal from the Royal Society in 1874, and the Janssen Medal from the Institute of France in 1891. In 1875, the Institute of France (Academy of Sciences) elected him a corresponding member in the Section of Astronomy. He has since been elected a member of the Academy of the Lincei of Rome, and of a large number of other academies in Europe and America. Mr. Lockyer has published "Elementary Lessons in Astronomy," 1870; "Contributions to Solar Physics," 1873; "The Spectroscope and its Applications," 1873; "Primer of Astronomy," 1874; "Studies in Spectrum Analysis," 1878; "Star-Gazing, Past and Present," 1878; "The Chemistry of the Sun," 1887; "The Movements of the Earth," 1887; "The Meteoritic Hypothesis," 1890; and "The Dawn of Astronomy," 1894. Many of these works have been translated into German, and some of them into Russian, Greek, and Chinese. During the years 1890-93, Mr. Norman Lockyer carried on an investigation of the orientation of ancient temples, with a view of ascertaining the astronomical basis of the old temple worships. For this purpose he visited Egypt in 1891 and 1893; the results of his inquiries are included in his last published work. Mr. Norman Lockyer is a Knight of the Brazilian Order of the Rose, and he received the distinction of C.B. for his public service on the occasion of the New Year Honours in 1894. On Nov. 22, 1894, a complimentary dinner, attended by many eminent men of science, was given to Mr. Norman Lockyer to commemorate the jubilee of Nature, of which he is editor.

LODGE, Professor Oliver Joseph, D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S., was born on June 12, 1851, at Penkhull, near Stoke-upon-Trent, Staffordshire, and is the son of Oliver and Grace Lodge, and grandson of Rev. Oliver Lodge, of Barking, Essex, and of Elsworth, Cambridgeshire (formerly of co. Tipperary), and of the Rev. Joseph Heath, of Lucton, Herefordshire. At the age of eight he went to Newport Grammar School, in the house of Rev. John Heawood; with whom also, when rector of Combs, Suffolk, he was under private tuition between the ages of twelve and fourteen. At fourteen he was taken into business to help his father, who was in failing health, and he continued in business till the age of twenty-one; matriculating at the London University and taking honours in Physics at the intermediate B.Sc., by evening work. He also obtained, through the Science and Art Department, a winter's work at the Chemical Laboratory, South Kensington. In 1872 he was proxime accessit to a scholarship at St. John's College, Cambridge, and in the same winter went to University College, London, to study mathematics, and to work in Professor Carey Foster's laboratory. He took the D.Sc. degree, and married in 1877; lectured on Physics at the Bedford College (for ladies), became Assistant Professor of Physics at University College, London, and, during Professor Clifford's illness, took charge of most of his classes. In 1880 he was appointed Professor of Physics at the University College, then just established in Liverpool. This office he continues to hold. In 1887 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; and in 1888 the honorary LL.D. of St. Andrews University was conferred upon him. He is best known as a teacher, and he has examined for both the London University and the Science and Art Department. His writings are a text-book of "Elementary Mechanics," 1877; and "Modern Views of Electricity," 1889; a treatise on the phenomena of lightning and other disruptive discharges called "Lightning Conductors and Lightning Guards" (1892); and a popular illustrated work on astronomical biography and discoveries called "Pioneers of Science" (1893). His scientific papers have appeared chiefly in the Philosophical Magazine, but he has written considerably in Nature and the Electrician; occasionally also in the Engineer. He has lectured at the London Institution on "Electricity and Light," and on "The Ether and its Functions;" also at the British Association at Montreal on "Dust;" and at the Royal Institution on the "Deposition of Dust Fume and Fog by Electricity;" on "The Leyden Jar," and on "Aberration." His chief experimental work has been connected with the alternating character of lightning and other discharges, and with the propagation of electro-magnetic waves (see Philosophical Magazine, Aug., 1888). In this latter subject, he was on the track of the nearly simultaneous discoveries made by the late Dr. Hertz. These discoveries verify the electrical and optical theories of Clerk Maxwell, and owe their importance and rapid acceptance to his scientific insight. In conjunction with the late J. W. Clark, Professor Lodge discovered the now well-known power of electricity to coagulate or condense suspended particles of fume or fog. He has also written largely on Electrolysis and on Contact Electricity, and has devised models illustrating Clerk Maxwell's theories. In 1891 he was President of Section A of the British Association at Cardiff, where he delivered an address, which is often quoted, concerning the need for scientific recognition and investigation of "occult" phenomena. He is, in fact, an active member of the Society for Psychical Research, and frequently contributes to their Proceedings. Recently he has been engaged in examining the question whether moving matter is able to disturb the Ether of space, and other questions connected with the subject of astronomical aberration (Phil. Trans. Roy. Soc., 1893).

LOEWE, The Rev. Dr. Louis, was born at Zülz, in Prussian Silesia, in 1809, and educated at Rosenberg, in Silesia, subsequently at the theological colleges of Lissa, Nicholsburg, and Presburg, and the University of Berlin. He was appointed in 1839 Hebrew Lecturer and Oriental linguist to the late Duke of Sussex; in 1856, Head Master of the Jews' College, Finsbury Square; in 1858, Examiner for Oriental Languages to the Royal College of Preceptors; and in 1868, Principal and Director of Sir Moses Montefiore's Theological College at Ramsgate. Dr. Loewe travelled under the auspices of the Duke of Sussex, the Duke of Northumberland (then Lord Prudhoe), the Earl of Munster, and the late Admiral Sir Sydney Smith, in the years 1836, 1837, 1838, in Egypt, Nubia, part of Ethiopia, Syria, Palestine, Turkey, Asia Minor, and Greece, for the cultivation of the study of the Arabic, Coptic, Nubian Turkish, and Circassian languages and literature, and accompanied Sir Moses Montefiore, Bart., on nine of his philanthropic missions to the East, and on four to Russia, Poland, Roumania, and Rome. He has published "The Origin of the Egyptian Language proved by the Analysis of that and the Hebrew," in the Asiatic Journal, 1837; "Briefe aus dem Orient" (Letters from the East), in Dr. Philippson's Allgemeine Zeitung des Judenthums, No. 18-79 in 18 numbers, Leipzig, 1839; a translation of J. B. Levinsohn's "Efés Dámmim," a series of conversations at Jerusalem between a patriarch of the Greek Church and a chief Rabbi of the Jews, London, 1841; a translation of the Rev. David Nieto's "Mátteh Dán," being a supplement to the book "Kuzári," 1842; "Observations on a Unique Cufic Gold Coin," issued by Al-Aamir Beákhcám Allah, Abú Ali Manzour Ben Mustali, tenth caliph of the Fatimite dynasty, London, 1849; "A Dictionary of the Circassian Language," in two parts, English-Circassian-Turkish and Circassian-English-Turkish, 1854; "Memoir on the Lemlein Medal," 1857; besides numerous "Discourses" and papers in the Transactions of learned societies.

LOFTIE, Rev. William John, F.S.A., was born at Tandragee, in the county Armagh, 1839, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1864. Subsequently he turned to literature, writing first on antiquarian subjects in the People's Magazine (S.P.C.K.), of which he became editor in 1872. Elected F.S.A. in 1872, he published a "Century of Bibles," and in 1873 "The Latin Year," a collection of hymns. After holding temporary Church appointments he became Assistant Minister of the Chapel Royal, Savoy, 1871, and in 1879 published "Memorials of the Savoy;" meanwhile, having spent some winters on the Nile, he wrote "A Ride in Egypt," and has since published "An Essay of Scarabs," and written papers in the Archæological Journal on "Egyptology." Being also a student of old prints, he published, in 1877, a catalogue of the works of Hans Sebald Beham. He became connected with the Guardian in 1870, and was a weekly contributor for six years. In 1874 he joined the staff of the Saturday Review, and has written on art and archæology in the Portfolio, the Magazine of Art, and many other periodicals. The "Art at Home Series," begun in 1877, resulted in the issue of twelve volumes, by various writers, including Mrs. Loftie, Mr. Andrew Lang, Mrs. Oliphant, and Mr. Walter Pollock. He then turned his attention to municipal antiquities, and besides a short guide entitled "Through London," and other books, has published two editions of "A History of London;" "Windsor," "Kensington, Picturesque and Historical," "Westminster Abbey," a volume on the "City" for Mr. E. A. Freeman's series of "Historic Towns," the authorized "Guide to the Tower," for the Government, of which 10,000 copies were sold in the first three weeks; "The Cathedral Churches of England," 1892; and "Inns of Court and Chancery," 1894. Besides these literary labours, he was one of the founders of the Society for the Protection of Ancient Buildings.

LOFTUS, The Right Hon. Lord Augustus William Frederick Spencer, G.C.B., P.C., commonly called Lord Augustus Loftus, the fourth son of the second Marquis of Ely, by the daughter of Sir H. W. Dashwood, Bart., was born in 1817, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A. Entering the Diplomatic Service, he was appointed Attaché at Berlin in 1837, and paid Attaché at Stuttgart in 1844. He accompanied Sir Stratford Canning (afterwards Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe) on his special mission to the Courts of Berlin, Vienna, Munich and Athens, in March, 1848. He was appointed Secretary of the Legation at Stuttgart in 1852; and in Berlin in 1853; and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in Vienna in March, 1858. He was appointed by the Queen to represent Her Majesty at the marriage of His Serene Highness Prince Leiningen with the Princess Mary of Baden, at Carlsruhe, in Aug. 1858. In Dec. 1860, he was transferred to Berlin. On the elevation of the Mission in Berlin to the rank of an Embassy, he was transferred, Oct. 28, 1862, to Munich, which was on that occasion raised to the rank of a First-class Mission. He was created a K.C.B., Dec. 12, 1862; was promoted to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the King of Prussia, Jan. 19, 1866; and was made a G.C.B., July 6, 1866. He was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the North German Confederation, Feb. 24, 1868; was sworn a Privy Councillor, Nov. 11, 1868; and was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Russia, Oct. 16, 1871. The latter post he held till Feb. 1879, when he was appointed Governor of New South Wales, a post held by him till 1885. In 1892 he published his "Diplomatic Reminiscences" between the years 1837 and 1862.

LOMBROSO, Cæsar, an Italian physician and anthropologist, is of Jewish origin, and was born in Venice in Nov. 1836. He studied medicine at the University of Turin, obtained his doctor's degree, and served as an army surgeon during the campaign of 1859. He was afterwards appointed Professor of Mental Diseases at the University of Pavia, whence he was appointed Director of the Lunatic Asylum at Pesaro, and then Professor of Forensic Medicine and Psychiatry at the University of Turin. Professor Lombroso is one of the greatest European authorities on insanity, especially in its relation to genius, and on crime in its relation to insanity and to physical organization. He has published many works, amongst which may be cited: "Insanity in China and Egypt," 1863; "Genius and Insanity," 1864; "Criminal Insanity in Italy," 1872; "Anthropometric Measurements of 400 Venetian Malefactors," 1872; "Microcephalism and Cretinism," 1873. His greatest work, in which he unfolds his theory of congenital criminality, is called "l'Homme Criminel." It was published in 1875, and in 1886 was in its fourth edit. Among his most recent works are: "The Man of Genius," 1888, and "Criminal Anthropology and its Recent Progress," 1890.

LONDON, Bishop of. TEMPLE, THE RIGHT REV. FREDERICK.

LONDONDERRY, Marquis of, The Right Hon. Charles Stewart Vane-Tempest Stewart, son of the fifth Marquis, was born in 1852, and educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford. As Viscount Castlereagh, he unsuccessfully contested South Kensington in 1874, and Montgomery District in 1877, and sat for County Down from 1878 to 1884. On the death of his father in 1884 he succeeded to the title, and on the formation of Lord Salisbury's second administration in 1866, was appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. He remained at Dublin till 1889. He married the eldest daughter of the Earl of Shrewsbury, and is the owner of extensive collieries in Durham. His ancestor, the second peer, was the celebrated Viscount Castlereagh.

LONGLEY, Sir Henry, K.C.B., son of the late Archbishop Longley, was educated at Rugby and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1856, M.A. in 1859, and B.C.L. in 1863. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1860, and after going the Northern Circuit for a short time, ultimately practised at the Equity Bar and as a conveyancer. He was appointed a Poor Law Inspector in 1868, and was in charge of the Metropolitan Poor Law District from 1872-74. In the latter year, he was appointed third Charity Commissioner upon the transfer of the duties of the Endowed Schools Commissioner to the Charity Commission. He was appointed Second Charity Commissioner in 1879, and Chief Charity Commissioner in July, 1885, upon the death of Sir W. R. Seymour Fitzgerald, G.C.S.I. Sir H. Longley was created C.B. in 1887, and K.C.B. in 1889; he is the author of a report on the Local Government Board made in 1873, on "Poor Law Administration in London, with special reference to the disposal by Boards of Guardians of Applications for Relief."

LONGSTREET, Gen. James, was born in South Carolina in 1821; graduated at the Military Academy at West Point in 1842; and was on duty in Missouri, and on the Mexican frontier till 1846; took part in the Mexican war, 1846-1848, where he was wounded; attained the rank of Captain and brevet Major; served subsequently in Texas, and as Paymaster in the U. S. army, and became a Major on the staff in 1858. He resigned his commission to take part with the South in the civil war, June 1, 1861; and was appointed to the command of the 4th Brigade of Gen. Beauregard's first corps, near Centreville. He was in command in the affair at Blackburn's ford, July 18, 1861; and engaged in the battle of Bull Run, July 21. He commanded the Confederate troops in the battle of Williamsburg, May 6, 1862; and commanded the left wing of the Confederate army in the battle of Chickamauga, Sept. 20, 1863. In the latter part of 1861 he was made Major-General, and won reputation under Gen. Lee, in the campaigns against McClellan, Pope, Burnside, and Meade. After the battle of Sharpsburg, 1862, Longstreet was promoted to the command of a corps, with the rank of Lieutenant-General. He took an active part in the battle of Gettysburg, July, 1-3. He was also conspicuous in the campaign of the Wilderness, May 1-6, 1864, where he was severely wounded; but recovered in time to lead his corps during the siege of Petersburg. He surrendered with Gen. Lee, in April, 1865. After the war, Gen. Longstreet acted zealously for the restoration of harmony between the two sections. Having been amnestied by President Johnson, he was so cordial towards the Administration that President Grant appointed him surveyor of the Port of New Orleans. In 1875 he took up his residence in Georgia, and in 1880 was sent as Minister to Turkey, where he remained until 1881. He was subsequently U. S. Marshal for the Northern District of Georgia, but at present holds no official position. He resides at Gainsville, Georgia.

LOPES, The Right Hon. Sir Henry Charles, P.C., Lord Justice of the Court of Appeal, third son of the late Ralph Lopes, the second baronet of Maristow, Devon, by Susan Gibbs, eldest daughter of the late A. Ludlow, Esq., of Heywood House, Wiltshire, was born at Devonport, Oct. 3, 1828, and received his education at Winchester School, and at Balliol College, Oxford (B.A., 1850). He was called to the Bar of the Inner Temple, June 7, 1852, and for some time he practised as an equity draughtsman and a conveyancer. In 1857 he joined the Western circuit, of which he became, in course of time, the leading "stuff gown." Mr. Lopes was made Recorder of Exeter in 1867, obtained his silk gown in 1869, and was elected a Bencher of his Inn shortly afterwards. In April, 1868, he was returned to the House of Commons, in the Conservative interest, as member for Launceston. He was re-elected in Dec. 1868, and he continued to sit for that borough till Jan. 1874. The Warrington Park property having in the meantime changed hands, it then became necessary for Mr. Lopes either to oppose the new owner or to seek for another seat. Choosing the latter alternative, he determined to stand for Frome, near which borough he had a residence and property. After a severe contest he was returned by 642 votes, against 557 recorded in favour or Mr. Willans, the Liberal candidate. He continued to represent Frome until his elevation to the judicial bench. Mr. Lopes was a frequent speaker in the House of Commons, and he succeeded in carrying through that House a Jury Bill containing more than a hundred sections, but there was not sufficient time to get it passed by the House of Peers. On Nov. 3, 1876, Mr. Lopes accepted the vacant judgeship in the Court of Common Pleas, in succession to the late Mr. Justice Archibald, and very shortly afterwards he received the honour of knighthood. In Nov. 1876, on the death of his maternal uncle, Sir Henry Lopes became the owner of Heywood, near Westbury, Wiltshire, a place which had been for many years in his mother's family, and where he now resides. On Dec. 1, 1885, he was appointed a Lord Justice of Appeal, and subsequently sworn of the Privy Council. In 1854 he married Cordelia Lucy, daughter of Erving Clarke, Esq., of Efford Manor, near Plymouth, and thus became connected with the old Cornish families of Molesworth and Trelawney. She died in Dec. 1891. Sir Henry was Treasurer of the Inner Temple for the year 1890; and is a Member of the Council of Legal Education.

LORNE, Sir John Douglas Sutherland Campbell, G.C.M.G., called by courtesy the MARQUIS OF, is the eldest son of the Duke of Argyll, and was born at Stafford House, London, in 1845. He was elected M.P. for Argyllshire, in the Liberal interest, in Feb., 1868, and in Dec. of the same year he became private secretary to his father at the India Office. He married the Princess Louise, fourth daughter of Queen Victoria, on March 21, 1871. The marriage ceremony was performed in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, by the Bishop of London, assisted by the Bishops of Winchester, Oxford, and Worcester. He was created a Knight of the Thistle in 1872. He has written "A Trip to the Tropics and Home through America," 1867; "Guido and Lita: a Tale of the Riviera," a poem, 1875; "The Psalms literally rendered in verse," 1877; "A Life of Lord Palmerston," 1890. In July, 1878, he accepted the post of Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada, in succession to Lord Dufferin. He was soon afterwards created a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of SS. Michael and George. Accompanied by the Princess Louise, he proceeded to Canada (Nov., 1878), where he had an enthusiastic reception. His term of office (during which he had travelled very extensively throughout the Dominion) expired in 1883, when he was succeeded by the Marquis of Lansdowne. He has since written on Imperial Federation and on many public topics. At the General Election in 1885, Lord Lorne contested Hampstead as a Liberal, against Sir Henry Holland. In 1892 he contested Bradford. He is Governor of Windsor Castle, and has the Volunteer Order for Long Service.

LOSSING, Benson John, LL.D., born at Beekman, New York, Feb. 12, 1813. After working some years at watchmaking, he became, in 1835, joint owner and editor of the Poughkeepsie Telegraph. He soon added to this a semi-monthly literary journal called the Poughkeepsie Casket, and studied wood-engraving and drawing, to be able to illustrate it. Later on he settled in New York as a wood-engraver, and for two years (1838-40) edited the Family Magazine, the first fully illustrated periodical in America. In 1841 his "Outline History of the Fine Arts" was published. In 1847 he wrote "Seventeen Hundred and Seventy-six," and in 1848, "Lives of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence." His "Pictorial Field Book of the Revolution" followed in 1851, and a large number of other popular historical and biographical works by him have since appeared. Besides these, he has contributed to Harper's Magazine and other periodicals, a number of papers, and is a very industrious collector of documents relating to American history. He is the author of a fully illustrated "History of the Civil War;" a "Cyclopædia of United States History;" and was in 1890 engaged on a three-volume work entitled "A History of the City of New York, Political, Social, Commercial, and Industrial." He has also in preparation, a "Cyclopædia of Universal History." In 1873 he received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Michigan.

LOTI, Pierre. See VIAUD, LIEUT. JULIEN.

LOVÉN, Sven, Ph.D., Foreign Member of the Royal Society, and Corresponding Member of the Institute of France, and G.C. Pole Star, is a Swedish naturalist, who was born at Stockholm, Jan. 6, 1809, graduated D. Phil. at the University of Lund in 1829, and after a year in Berlin, 1830-31, devoted himself to the study of zoology. He made several voyages on the coasts of Scandinavia, in 1837, extended to Spitzbergen, and in 1841 was appointed Keeper of the Department of Lower Evertebrates in the Swedish State Museum of Natural History at Stockholm. He is the author of several memoirs, all published by the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences, as: On "Evadne," 1835; on "Campanularia and Syncoryne," 1836; on the "Progress of Zoology, Evertebrate Animals," three vols., 1840-1849; on the "Marine Mollusca of Scandinavia," 1846; on the "Development of the Lamellibranchiates, 1848; on "Glacial marine Crustacea surviving in the lakes of Sweden," 1862; on "Echinoidea," 1874; on "Portalesia," 1873; on "The Species of Echinoidea described by Linnæus," 1887; on "Echinoconidæ," 1888.

LOW, The Hon. Seth, LL.D., was born at Brooklyn, New York, Jan. 18, 1850. He was graduated from Columbia College (New York City) in 1870, and immediately entered the mercantile house of his father, in which in 1875 he became a partner. In 1881 he was nominated as an independent (Reform) candidate for the mayoralty of his native city, and was elected. He served for two terms (1882-1885), and during his administration accomplished much in purifying municipal politics. On leaving that office he again became engaged in active business, until his election, in 1889, as the successor of the late Dr. F. A. P. Barnard to the Presidency of Columbia College, of which he was already a trustee. Mr. Low has been for a number of years a member of the New York Chamber of Commerce; is President of the Archæological Institute of America; a Vice-President of the New York Academy of Sciences; was the founder and first President of the Brooklyn Bureau of Charities; and one of the organizers and the first President of the Young Men's Republican Club of Brooklyn. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of the State of New York and Amherst College in 1889, and by Harvard University, University of Pennsylvania, and Trinity College, in 1890.

LOW, Sidney, Editor of the St. James's Gazette, was born in 1858, and educated at King's College School and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he obtained a Scholarship in 1877, and in 1880 was placed in the first class of the Final School of Modern History. In 1883 he was appointed Lecturer on History at King's College, London, and as such was deputy for Prof. S. R. Gardiner. He was appointed editor of the St. James's Gazette in 1888 in succession to Mr. Frederick Greenwood, he having been previously connected with that journal. He was part editor of a "Dictionary of English History," 1884, and has contributed to such leading reviews as the Fortnightly, the Contemporary, and to Blackwood's Magazine.

LOWE, Lieut.-General Sir Drury Curzon Drury, K.C.B., son of the late Mr. William Drury Lowe, of Lacko Park, Derbyshire, by the Hon. Caroline Esther Curzon, daughter of the second Lord Scarsdale, was born in 1830 and educated at Oxford University, of which he is a graduate. He entered the army in 1854, became Captain in 1856, Major in 1862, Lieut.-Colonel in 1866, Colonel in 1871, and Major-General in 1881. He served with the 17th Lancers in the Crimea, from June 18, 1855, including the battle of the Tchernaya, the siege and fall of Sebastopol (Medal with Clasp, and Turkish Medal); also in the Indian campaign of 1858-59, including the pursuit of the rebel forces under Tantia Topee, and the action of Zeerapore (Medal with Clasp for Central India). He commanded the 17th Lancers and the Cavalry of the 2nd Division in the Zulu war of 1879, and led the charge at the conclusion at the battle of Ulundi, in which he was wounded (C.B., Medal with Clasp). He served in the Boer war of 1881, under Sir Evelyn Wood, in command of the Cavalry Brigade; served in the Egyptian war of 1882 in command of the Cavalry Division, and was present at the engagements of El Magfar Mahsama, the two actions at Kassassin, and the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, immediately after which he commenced a forced march with the Cavalry by which he obtained possession of Cairo, the surrender of its citadel, and of the rebel chief Arabi (six times mentioned in despatches, received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, K.C.B., Medal with Clasp, 2nd Class of the Osmanieh, and Khedive's Star). From 1885-1890 he was in command of the Cavalry Brigade at Aldershot, and was also I.G. of Cavalry for Great Britain. From 1890-1891 he was I.G. of Cavalry at the Head-Quarters of the Army, and in 1892 was appointed Colonel of the 17th Lancers.

LOWE, The Rev. Edward Clarke, D.D., born at Everton, near Liverpool, Dec. 15, 1823, youngest son of S. Lowe, Esq., solicitor, formerly of Whitchurch, Salop, and subsequently of Liverpool, was educated at Liverpool at a private school, and afterwards at Oxford, where he entered under Rev. W. Jacobson (who became Bishop of Chester), at Magdalene Hall in 1842, whence he was elected to the Bible Clerkship at Lincoln College in June 1844, where he was a pupil of the late Mark Pattison. He graduated B.A. in 1846, in the third class, and the following year became Second Master of the King's School, Ottery St. Mary, and was ordained deacon by Bishop Philpotts in September of the same year, and priest in September of the year following. In 1849 he joined, at Shoreham, the Rev. N. Woodard, who had just begun his effort to found, by public boarding schools, a system of Church of England education for the middle classes. In Jan. 1850, he opened, as Head Master, at Hurstpierpoint, the first middle school of the system, and remained in that office till the end of 1872, when he was appointed Provost of the Midland district of St. Nicolas' College, as head of the Society of SS. Mary and John of Lichfield in union with St. Nicolas' College, and directing the large schools at Denstone and Ellesmere for boys, and two for girls at Abbot's Bromley, as well as a boys' day-school at Dewsbury. In 1891, on the death of Canon Woodard, he was elected Provost of St. Nicolas College in succession to the founder, and returned into Sussex. In Sept., 1873, he was preferred to a Canonry in Ely Cathedral, upon a vacancy falling to the Crown, sede vacante; and since 1880 up to the present time has represented the Chapter as Proctor in Convocation. He has published several small educational works; among others, "Porta Latina," Erasmus College Series, "An English Primer," and an annotated edition of G. Herbert's "Church Porch."

LOWE, Edward Joseph, F.R.S., elder surviving son of the late Alfred Lowe, Esq., J.P., of Highfield, near Nottingham, was born at Highfield, Nov. 11, 1825; and in 1840 began that valuable series of daily meteorological observations which were continued to April, 1882. In 1846 he published "A Treatise on Atmospheric Phenomena." About 1848 he assisted the late Professor Baden Powell in the meteor observations for the British Association, and was the first to point out the convergence of meteors to a point in the heavens. "Prognostications of the Weather," a small work by him, appeared in 1849. In 1850 he became a member of the Royal Meteorological Society, of which he was one of the founders. In 1853 he wrote two valuable local works, entitled "The Climate of Nottinghamshire," and "The Conchology of Nottinghamshire." In the same year he likewise assisted the late Professor Edward Forbes in the compilation of his work on "British Mollusca," and issued the first parts of the well-known "Natural History of British and Exotic Ferns." His next work, on "British Grasses," appeared in 1858, and he subsequently wrote two other botanical works on "Beautiful-leaved Plants," and "New and Rare Ferns," in 1861 and 1862; and "Our Native Ferns," in 1865. His last work, entitled the "Chronology of the Seasons," is yet in progress, the first part only having been issued. In 1860 he was one of those who accompanied the Government expedition to Spain for the purpose of observing the solar eclipse, and was placed in charge of the meteorological departments in the Santander district. In 1866 he was local secretary to the British Association. In 1868 he was president of the Nottingham Literary and Philosophical Society. Besides being the author of the works enumerated, Mr. Lowe has contributed many papers on scientific subjects to various learned societies, and to the British Association; and he sent daily meteorological telegrams to the Board of Trade, and synchronous meteorological observations to the United States Government up to 1882. He was the inventor of the dry powder tests for the ozone observations used in the scientific balloon ascents. He was also the discoverer of an entirely new and distinct species of British worm, the Megascolex rigida (Baird); has been the raiser of many abnormal British ferns; and has succeeded in producing hybrids between Polystichum aculeatum and P. angulare. Since 1886 he has devoted his time to the hybridization of ferns, and flowering-plants, and has recently discovered that divisions of a prothallus will grow and produce several ferns also that ferns can have multiple parents, and hundreds of distinct varieties have resulted from this discovery. In 1891 he published a "Handbook on the Varieties of British Ferns," and is now publishing a large work, "The Ferns of Great Britain and their Varieties." For some years past Mr. Lowe has been a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for Nottinghamshire, and a Commissioner of Income Tax. In 1882 he went to reside at Shirenewton Hall, near Chepstow, which estate he purchased from Lord Kintour. He is a Fellow of the Royal, the Royal Astronomical, the Geological, the Linnæan, the Royal Meteorological, and the Royal Horticultural Societies.

LOWELL, Percival, son of Augustus Lowell and Katharine Bigelow (Lawrence) Lowell, was born in Boston, Massachusetts, United States of America, March 13, 1855; and took his degree at Harvard University in 1876. He has travelled considerably, especially in the Far East. While in Japan, in 1883, he was appointed Foreign Secretary and Counsellor to the Korean Special Mission to the United States, the first to go from Korea to a Western Power. He returned to Korea with the mission the same year, and spent the winter of 1883-4 in Söul, its capital. He published, in 1885, "Chosön, a Sketch of Korea;" in 1888, "The Soul of the Far East;" in 1889, "Noto, an unexplored corner of Japan," and poems in Scribner's Magazine, and lectured before the Q.B.K. Society at Cambridge, Massachusetts. He is a Member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Japan.

LOWTHER, The Right Hon. James, M.P., younger son of Sir Charles Hugh Lowther, Bart., by Isabella, daughter of the late Rev. Robert Morehead, D.D., Rector of Easington-cum-Liverton, Yorkshire; was born at Swillington-house, Leeds, in 1840, and educated at Westminster School and at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A., 1862; M.A., 1866). He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1864. The next year he was elected M.P. for York in the Conservative interest, and continued to sit for that city until 1880. He unsuccessfully contested East Cumberland in February, 1881, and in September of the same year was elected Member for North Lincolnshire, which constituency he represented until Nov. 1885. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Poor Law Board from Aug. to Dec. 1868, and Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies from Feb. 1874 till Feb. 1878, when he was appointed Chief Secretary of Ireland, which office he held until the resignation of Lord

Beaconsfield's Government in May, 1880. He unsuccessfully contested the East Lindsey Division of Lincolnshire, Nov. 1885, also North Cumberland at the General Election of 1886; but was returned for the Isle of Thanet Division of Kent, in June, 1888, and again in 1892. Mr. Lowther is a magistrate, deputy-lieutenant, and county alderman for the North Riding of York. He is well known as a member of the Jockey Club.

LOYSON, Charles, known as PÈRE HYACINTHE, was born at Orleans in 1827, was educated at Pau by private professors, where his father was Rector of the University. His mother was of the noble family Burnier-Fontonel, of the Chateau de Reiquier, Savoy. In 1845 he entered Saint-Sulpice, was ordained priest after five years of theological study, taught philosophy at the great Seminary at Avignon, and theology at that of Nantes, and officiated in his ecclesiastical capacity at St. Sulpice, in Paris. He afterwards spent two years in the convent of the Carmelites at Lyons, entered that Order, and attracted much attention by his preaching at the Lycée of that city. In June, 1869, Père Hyacinthe delivered before the International League of Peace an address, in which he spoke of the Jewish religion, the Catholic religion, and the Protestant religion as being "the three great religions of civilized peoples." This expression elicited severe censures from the Catholic press. On Sept. 20 of the same year Père Hyacinthe published his famous Manifesto, addressed to the General of the Barefooted Carmelites at Rome, but evidently intended for the governing powers of the Church, in which he protested against the "sacrilegious perversion of the Gospel," and went on to say :—"It is my profound conviction that if France in particular, and the Latin races in general, are given up to social, moral, and religious anarchy, the principal cause is not Catholicism itself, but the manner in which Catholicism has for a long time been understood and practised." This manifesto against the alleged abuses in the Church created intense excitement, not only in France, but throughout the civilized world, and the young monk was hailed as a powerful ally by all the open opponents of the Papacy. Soon after this he left France for America, landing in New York, Oct. 18, 1869. He was warmly welcomed by the leading members of the various Protestant sects in the United States, but, though he fraternized with them to a certain extent, he constantly declared that he had no intention of quitting the Catholic Faith. On Sept. 3, 1872, he was married in London, at the Marylebone Registry Office, to Emilie Jane, daughter of Mr. Amory Butterfield, and widow of Captain Edwin Ruthven Merriman, of the United States. The late Dr. Stanley, Dean of Westminster, and Lady Augusta Stanley, his wife, were present at the marriage. Soon after his marriage, Père Hyacinthe was called to Geneva; and after giving a series of conferences in the Salle de la Réformation, which found echo throughout Europe, he was invited by the Swiss Government to take charge of the Catholic Church in Geneva, and thus he became the founder of the Old Catholic State Church, or as it is officially styled, the Christian Catholic Church of Switzerland. In the spring of 1894 Père Hyacinthe, in consequence of pecuniary and other discouragement, asked Archbishop Gerard Gul, head of the Dutch Jansenist body, to take over his Gallican mission. The mission was taken over, but Père Hyacinthe was informed that, as a married priest, he would have to sink into the position of a layman. He protested, and now continues his Gallican services at an Anglican church at Neuilly.

LUBBOCK, The Right Hon. Sir John, Bart., M.P., D.C.L., LL.D., M.D., V.P.R.S., was born at 29, Eaton Place, London, April 30, 1834, being the son and heir of Sir John William Lubbock, of Mitcham Grove, Surrey, and High Elms, Down, Kent, a gentleman eminent as an astronomer and a mathematician, by his wife, Harriet, daughter of Lieut.-Col. George Hotham, of York. The baronetcy was created in 1806, in favour of the great-great-uncle of the present baronet, who succeeded to it in 1865, and who resides at High Elms, Down, in Kent. From a private school he was transferred to Eton. His father, owing to the sudden illness of several of his partners, took him when but fourteen years of age into his bank in Lombard Street, a business with which the family has been connected for several generations. He became a partner in that establishment in 1856. Among the improvements which he introduced in banking affairs were the "Country Clearing" and the publication of the Clearing House returns. So high was his professional reputation that he was chosen Honorary Secretary to the Association of London Bankers, the first President of the Institute of Bankers, an association numbering over 2,000 members, and he was nominated by the Crown to serve on the International Coinage Commission.

He was also a member of the Public School Commission, the Advancement of Science Commission, the Education Commission, the Gold and Silver Commission, and Chairman of the Committee which settled the designs of the new coins. It is, however, by his works on the ancient vestiges and remains of man that Sir John Lubbock has most distinguished himself. He has written "Prehistoric Times, as illustrated by Ancient Remains and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages," 1865, 5th edit., 1889; "The Origin of Civilization and the Primitive Condition of Man," 1870, which also has passed through five editions, and which, like the preceding work, has been translated into all the principal languages; "The Origin and Metamorphoses of Insects," 1874; "On British Wild Flowers, considered in Relation to Insects," 1875; "Monograph of the Thysanura and Collembola;" two volumes of Lectures and Addresses; a work on Ants, Bees, and Wasps, which in less than a year ran through five editions; "The Pleasures of Life;" this is the most popular of Sir John Lubbock's works, and has run through no less than 30 editions; "The Senses of Animals;" "Fifty Years of Science;" "Flowers, Fruits, and Leaves;" "Representation;" "Chapters in Popular Natural History;" "The Beauties of Nature," and over a hundred separate memoirs on zoological, physiological, and archæological subjects in the Transactions of the Royal Society, the Society of Antiquaries, the Linnæan, Ethnological, Geological, and Entomological Societies, and the British Association. He was chosen as President of the British Association for the "Jubilee" year (1881), and presided over the meeting held at York. He is now President of the Linnæan Society. He has been President of the Ethnological and Entomological Societies, and of the Anthropological Institute, Vice-President of the British Association, and of the Royal Society. Sir John Lubbock was twice chosen to represent Maidstone in Parliament. In Feb., 1870, after he had been defeated as a Liberal candidate for West Kent by only fifty votes, he was returned for the county town, an honour which was renewed at the general election of 1874; in 1880, however, he lost his seat, but was immediately returned by the University of London, for which he now sits. In the House of Commons he has spoken principally on financial and educational subjects. He has been so fortunate as to succeed in carrying no fewer than 20 important public measures, including the Bank Holidays Act (1871), by which four new statute holidays were added to the two previously in existence. Amongst the other measures were: the Absconding Debtors' Bill, the Apothecaries' Company Medical Act Amendment Bill, the University of London Medical Act Amendment Bill, the Falsification of Accounts Bill (by which, for the first time, it became an offence to falsify accounts for the purpose of fraud), the Bankers' Books Evidence Bill, the College of Surgeons' Medical Act Bill, the Factors' Acts Amendment Bill, Shop Hours Regulation Act, and the Bills of Exchange Act, which consolidates and codifies the whole law relating to bills of exchange, cheques, and promissory notes; the Public Libraries Amendment Act, the Open Spaces Act, and the Metropolis Management Act. More recently his name has been associated with the "Ancient Monuments Bill," which has received the sanction of the Legislature. In 1877 he moved the "previous question" to Mr. Gladstone's famous resolutions on the Eastern Question. Sir John was a member of the Public School Commission and of the Advancement of Science Commission. In March, 1878, he was appointed a Trustee of the British Museum, in the place of the late Sir William Stirling Maxwell. In the same year the University of Dublin conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. He is also a D.C.L. of Oxford, LL.D. of Cambridge and of Edinburgh, and M.D. of Würzburg. He was Vice-Chancellor of the University of London for eight years, but resigned the office on his election to represent the University in Parliament. This seat he held without a contest till 1886, but on the dissolution Mr. Frederic Harrison was brought forward as a Home-Rule candidate, Sir J. Lubbock standing as a Unionist. The latter easily won the seat, polling 1,314 votes against Mr. Harrison's 516. On the formation of County Councils he stood for the City on a requisition signed by the leaders of all parties, and out of 10,000 votes recorded, received 8,900, the largest number of votes recorded for any candidate in the whole country. He was unanimously elected Vice-Chairman of the London County Council, and re-elected 1889; and in 1890 was elected Chairman, on the resignation of the Earl of Rosebery, and occupied this post to 1892. He is President of the London Chamber of Commerce and of the Working Men's College.

LUCAS, John Seymour, A.R.A., was born in London on December 21, 1849. Leaving school at the age of fifteen, he spent three months in the studio of a sculptor, and a further term of nine months with Gerard Robinson, the wood-carver, from whom he received his first notions of composition. His uncle, John Lucas, the painter, then articled him to his son, John Templeton Lucas, who was to teach him the art of painting. During the term of his apprenticeship Mr. Lucas attended the evening classes of the St. Martin's School of Art, in connection with South Kensington; and in 1871 he became a student of the Royal Academy, exhibiting his first picture there in 1872. It was not until 1875, however, that Mr. Lucas contributed to the annual exhibition at Burlington House a work of any mark; this was entitled "By Hook or Crook." The following year he sent two pictures, "Fleeced," and "For the King and the Cause;" and in 1877, "Intercepted Despatches." "An Ambuscade, Edge Hill," appeared in 1878. The technical excellence of all this artist's work is of a high order, and is especially noticeable in "The Gordon Riots," which was exhibited in 1879. In 1877 he was elected full member of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, and in 1886 was elected A.R.A. His recent works are "The Armada in Sight," 1880; "Charles before Gloucester," 1881; "The Favourite," 1882; "A Whip for Van Trompe," 1883; "After Culloden," 1884; "From the Field of Sedgmoor," 1885; "Peter the Great at Deptford," 1886; and "The Latest Scandal," 1887, &c. Quite recently he exhibited "The Call to Arms," and four portraits at the Royal Academy's Exhibition in 1894.

LUCCA, Pauline. See WALLHOFEN, MADAME.

LUCY, Henry W., born at Crosby, near Liverpool, Dec. 5, 1845; was apprenticed to a Liverpool merchant; joined the staff of the Shrewsbury Chronicle as chief reporter in 1864; in 1869 went to Paris to attend lectures at the Sorbonne; in Jan., 1870, returned to London to join the staff of the morning edition of the Pall Mall Gazette; and in Oct., 1873, joined the Daily News as special correspondent, chief of the Gallery Staff and writer of the Parliamentary Summary. Mr. Lucy is the author of "A Handbook of Parliamentary Procedure;" and "Men and Manner in Parliament." He is a frequent contributor to London and American periodical literature. In 1882 his first novel, "Gideon Fleyce," was published. In the autumn of 1883 he made a journey round the world, visiting the United States, Japan, and India. He wrote an account of the journey in a series of Letters which first appeared in the Daily News and the New York Tribune, and were subsequently published in book form under the title "East by West." In 1885 the first volume of his "Diary of Two Parliaments" was published simultaneously in this country, the United States, and Australia. The second and concluding volume appeared in 1886. On the death of Mr. Tom Taylor, who, in succession to Mr. Shirley Brooks, had written the "Essence of Parliament," for Punch, Mr. Lucy was invited to continue the work. This he did in a new style, now familiar as "The Diary of Toby, M.P." In 1878 his letters to the Daily News, describing the condition of the people in South Wales owing to the strike, resulted in a public subscription, which in the course of three weeks amounted to over £10,000 in cash, in addition to many gifts in kind. With a portion of the money the rector of Merthyr was enabled to feed daily for seventeen weeks 5,000 children. In January, 1886, Mr. Lucy accepted the editorship of the Daily News, resigning the post in July, 1887, preferring his earlier work in the Press Gallery of the House of Commons.

LUDLOW, Sir Henry, Knt., Chief Justice of the Leeward Islands, was born in 1834, and is the son of Mr. George Ludlow, late of Hertford, who was first cousin to Mr. Serjeant Ludlow, sometime Recorder of Bristol. Sir Henry was educated at Christ's Hospital and St. John's College, Cambridge, and graduated as B.A., 8th Wrangler, in 1857, and subsequently M.A. and Fellow of St. John's. He obtained, in 1861, the studentship granted by the Inns of Court to the student who passed the best examination previous to his call to the Bar; and was called to the Bar in 1862, appointed Attorney-General of Trinidad in 1874, and Chief Justice of the Leeward Islands in 1886. In conjunction with E. Chisholm Batten, Esq., he published "Batten and Ludlow on the Jurisdiction of the County Courts in Equity," and in conjunction with H. Jenkyns, Esq., published "Ludlow and Jenkyns on Trade-Marks."

LUGARD, General The Right Hon. Sir Edward, G.C.B., P.C., son of Capt. John Lugard, born at Chelsea in 1810, was educated at the Military College, Sandhurst, and having entered the army in 1828, proceeded to India, where he served with distinction for many years. During the Afghan War of 1842, he was Brigade-Major to the fourth Brigade; and during the Sikh war of 1845-6, Assistant Adjutant-General of the first division.

Throughout the Punjaub campaigns of 1848-9, he was Adjutant-General to the Queen's forces, for which service he was made a C.B. and Aide-de-Camp to the Queen. He was made K.C.B. for his services as chief of the staff in the Persian expedition of 1856-7, and was appointed Adjutant-General in India at the close of 1857. At the capture of Lucknow, and the subsequent operations against the rebels, he commanded, as Brigadier-General, the second division of infantry, and for his distinguished services on these occasions was specially promoted to the rank of Major-General in 1858. He received the colonelcy of the 31st Foot, June 1, 1862, was made Lieutenant-General Jan. 12, 1865, and G.C.B. in 1867; was appointed Secretary for Military Correspondence in the War Department in Feb., 1859, and permanent Under-Secretary of War in May, 1861. He resigned the latter office in Nov., 1871, on being appointed President of the Army Purchase Commission. This latter office he resigned in April, 1880. He was sworn of the Privy Council Nov. 3, 1871. He attained the rank of General in Oct., 1872.

LUGARD, Captain Frederick D., D.S.O., who comes of a race of fine soldiers, is nephew of the preceding General Sir Ed. Lugard. He was born at Fort George, Madras, in 1858, his father being an army chaplain there at the time. He was educated at Rossall, and passed from that school into Sandhurst direct. In 1879 he went with his regiment, the (9th) Norfolk, to India, and later joined the expedition despatched to avenge the murder of Sir Louis Cavagnari. Lugard occupied his leisure during the next three or four years in preparation for different service examinations, and in studying the phases of animal life, thus gaining a knowledge which stood him in good service when he wrote the zoological part of his work on Africa. In 1885 he was appointed by telegram Transport Officer of the Indian Contingent under General Hudson, for Suakin. In 1886 he went as Transport Officer to the Ruby Mines Column in Burmah. As there are no roads in this part of the country, and the way led through a dense bamboo jungle and over mountains 8,000 feet high, the difficulties in the path were very great, but so successfully did Lugard overcome them that he was made a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, then recently instituted. Afterwards, during sick-leave, he was appointed Representative in Uganda of the British East African Company, and on his return to England in 1893 published his important work on "The Rise of our East African Empire; or, Early Efforts in Uganda and Nyassaland," and in a series of public lectures and letters to the Times strenuously advocated the retention of those countries under British rule.

LUITPOLD, Prince Charles Joseph William Louis, Regent of Bavaria, was born at Würzburg, March 12, 1821. He is General and Inspector-General of the Bavarian Army, Chief of the Regiment of Bavarian Artillery, and proprietor of the first regiment of Austrian Artillery. He married April 15, 1844, the Princess Augusta, Archduchess of Austria, and has four children. On the death of Louis II., King of Bavaria, on June 10, 1886, he was appointed Regent on account of mental derangement of Prince Otto, the succeeding titular king.

LUMBY, The Rev. Joseph Rawson, D.D., born at Stanningley, in Yorkshire, was educated at the Leeds Grammar School, entered as a scholar at Magdalene College, Cambridge, in 1854; and took his degree in the 1st Class of the Classical Tripos in 1858. He was elected a Fellow of Magdalene College in 1858, obtained the Crosse Divinity Scholarship and the Tyrwhitt Hebrew Scholarship, and was also for some time Classical Lecturer at Magdalene College and at Queen's College. He had been subsequently elected Fellow of the St. Catherine's College. Dr. Lumby was one of the founders of the Early English Text Society, for which he has edited several works: "King Horn," "Ratis Raving," and "Floriz and Blauncheflour." He is one of the editors of the historic documents published by Government under the superintendence of the Master of the Rolls. The 9th volume of Higden's Polychronicon has appeared under his editorship, and still more recently the first volume of Knighton's Chronicle. He has published several works for the Pitt Press, as "Bacon's Life of Henry VII.," "More's Utopia," "More's Life of Richard III.," and, in conjunction with Professor Mayor, he has published Books III. and IV. of "Beda's Ecclesiastical History." He has also written a "History of the Creeds," and a small work on "Greek Learning in the Western Church during the Seventh and Eighth Centuries." He has edited the "Acts of the Apostles" in the Cambridge Bible for Schools, 1879, and the same in the Cambridge Greek Testament. One of his latest works is a general edition of the "Cambridge Companion to the Bible," 1893. Dr. Lumby was for some time Vicar of St. Edward's Church in Cambridge, but on his election in 1879 to the Norrisian Professorship of Divinity he resigned that charge. He resigned his professorship in 1892. He is one of the editors of the Cambridge Bible for Schools; also a contributor to the "International Commentary on the New Testament." He has likewise taken part in the work of the "Speaker's Commentary." He is a writer in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica;" and has published many articles in the Expositor and other journals. He was a member of the Old Testament Company for the Revision of the Authorised Version of the Bible. Dr. Lumby has also been on many occasions Select Preacher before the University of Cambridge, and was Examining Chaplain to the Archbishop of York from 1883-90, and is Canon of Wetwang in York Minister.

LUMLEY, Sir John Saville. See SAVILLE, THE RIGHT HON. JOHN.

LUMSDEN, General Sir Peter Stark, G.C.B., C.S.I., son of the late Colonel Thomas Lumsden, C.B., was born in 1829. He entered the Indian Army in 1847, and has risen to his present rank by constant and active service, principally on the North-West and other frontiers of India. In 1857 he was employed in a difficult mission to Afghanistan, at the crisis of the Indian Mutiny, and creditably discharged his arduous and perilous duties. He served in Central India in 1858, under Major-General Sir R. Napier. He accompanied the expedition to China in 1860, and was present in all the actions there, including the assault and capture of the Taku Forts. He was Quartermaster-General of the Army in India from 1868 to 1873, and Adjutant-General from 1874 to 1879, and Chief of the Staff to the Commander-in-Chief, Sir F. P. Haines, during the last Afghan War. He was appointed Commissioner for the demarcation of the North-Western Boundary of Afghanistan, July 16, 1884. After the Penjdeh "incident," Sir Peter Lumsden returned home to report on the state of things to the British Government, and his place was taken by Colonel (now Sir West) Ridgway. He attained General's rank in 1890, and joined the Indian Staff Corps in that year. Sir Peter Lumsden is a member of the Council of India, and was made a G.C.B., July 3, 1885.

LUXEMBURG-NASSAU, Adolphus-William - Charles - Augustus - Frederick, The Grand Duke of, was born at Biebrich, July 24, 1817, and married, at Dessau, April 23, 1851, his second wife, Princess Adelaide of Anhalt; his first wife, the Grand Duchess Elisabeth Michailovna of Russia, having died in 1845 without issue. His only daughter, Princess Hilda, was married to the Crown Prince Frederick of Baden in 1885, a grandson of the Emperor William I., with a settlement of a million sterling. The Hereditary Prince Alexander is likewise an only son, born in 1852, and serves as major-general in the Austrian army. Should his sister die without issue her dower will ultimately revert to him, and he will be one of the wealthiest princes in Europe, his father possessing, in addition to a fortune of at least three millions sterling, vast estates in Austria and Germany. Prince Alexander married on June 21, 1893, Marie-Anne, Princess of Braganza. Through this union his family hope to secure the succession to the Luxemburg throne in the direct line, thus eventually avoiding complications with Prussia.

LYALL, Sir Alfred Comyns, K.C.B., son of the Rev. Alfred Lyall, was born at Coulston, Surrey, in 1835, and educated at Eton. He was appointed Home Secretary in India in 1873; Foreign Secretary in 1878; and Lieut.-Governor of the North-West Provinces in 1882, having in the previous year been created a K.C.B. He was formerly Secretary to the Order of the Star of India, and the Order of the Indian Empire. Sir Alfred Lyall, who is no less distinguished in literature than in the public service, is the author of "Asiatic Studies, Religious and Social," 1882, and of a volume of poems. In 1889 he published a biography of Warren Hastings in the English Men of Action Series, and in 1891 delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge on "Natural Religion in India." In 1893 appeared his "Rise of the British Dominion in India," 3rd edit., 1893. In Jan., 1888, he was appointed a Member of the Council of India.

LYALL, Edna. See BAYLY, MISS ADA ELLEN.

LYDEKKER, R., F.R.S., was born in 1849, went to Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1868, and in 1871 was second in the first class of the Natural Science Tripos, the late Mr. A. H. Garrod being senior. In 1874 he went with three friends on a tour to Kashmir, and while there in the autumn was appointed by Lord Salisbury (then Secretary for India), to the Geological Survey of India. He held this appointment until 1882, when he resigned on his marriage with the elder daughter of the Rev. Canon Davys, rector of Wheathampstead, Herts, for which county he became J.P. during the same year. During his service on the Geological Survey of India, he surveyed nearly the whole of the territories of the Maharaja of Kashmir. The results of this difficult work were written after the author's return home, and published, with a map, by the Government of India in the Memoirs of the Geological Survey of India. In the winters during his Indian service, Mr. Lydekker was occupied in descriptions of the large series of vertebrate fossils from the Siwalik Hills at the foot of the Himalayas, this being continued (by special grant from the Indian Government) after his return to England. The results were published by the Indian Government in the Palæontologia Indica. In 1884 Mr. Lydekker undertook for the Trustees the writing of catalogues of the fossil mammalia, birds, reptilia, and amphibia in the British Museum. Of this work the mammalia occupy five volumes; reptiles and amphibians four, and the birds one volume. In the autumn of 1893, Mr. Lydekker, under the auspices of the Royal Society, went out to Argentina to study the fossil mammals in the La Plata Museum, the results of his investigations having been published in a volume illustrated by nearly 50 folio plates. He has written a number of papers on vertebrate palæontology, published in the Records of the Geological Survey of India, Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Proceedings of the Zoological Society, Qarterly Journal of the Geological Society, etc. While in India he was a Fellow of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. In 1880 he was elected a Fellow of the Zoological Society, and in 1883 he became a Fellow of the Geological Society, and was elected a member of the Council of the latter Society in 1886, and again in 1893, while in the following year he was chosen one of the Vice-Presidents. Mr. Lydekker is also joint-author with Professor H. A. Nicholson of the only "Manual of Palæontology" extant in this country; while, in co-operation with Sir W. H. Flower, the Director of the British Museum (Natural History), he has written "The Study of Mammals." To the general public he is, however, probably better known as the editor and chief author of the "Royal Natural History," now in course of publication by Messrs. F. Warne & Co. Among his other contributions to scientific literature may be mentioned "Horses and Hoofs," "Forms and Phases of Animal Life," and "Life and Rock."

LYNE, The Rev. Joseph Leycester, called "Father Ignatius," was born Nov. 23, 1837, at Trinity Square, by the Tower of London, educated at St. Paul's School, then by Rev. G. N. Wright, at Ayscough Free Hall, Spalding, Lincoln, and Britannia House, Worcester; next at Trinity College, Glenalmond, Perth. He was ordained in 1860, to the curacy of St. Peter's, Plymouth; and was then Mission Curate to the late Mr. Lowder at St. George's in the East, but left him in 1862 to begin the attempt of restoring monasticism in the Church of England. He began at Claydon, near Ipswich, and moved to Norwich, Jan. 30, 1863. Next he moved to the Isle of Wight, to a house of Dr. Pusey's, at Chale, then to Laleham, Chertsey, for three years, and finally he purchased land among the Black Mountains, and built Llanthony Abbey, five miles beyond the old ruined Llanthony Priory. There is a Priory of Nuns attached to the Church, as well as an Abbey for Monks, after the example of many of the old double Monasteries of the Saxon Church. The monks claim to follow the ancient rule of St. Benedict, and use the Benedictine Breviary for Choir Office and the Sarum Missal of the ante-Reformation Church of England. They wear the old English Benedictine dress. Mr. Lyne's monastic name is "Ignatius of Jesus." During the last few years Father Ignatius has inaugurated a special crusade in defence of the Holy Scriptures and Orthodox Christianity against the "Higher Critics" and other opponents of Orthodoxy within the Church of England. During the year 1893, he initiated at Llanthony Abbey a petition to the Archbishop of Canterbury and convocation, praying that Church Authority should arrest the attacks upon the Faith of Christ, now so common among the Clergy. The petition was largely signed first in Oxford, then throughout the country. It was presented by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. In the early part of 1893 the Monk's preaching at the University Church of St. Mary the Virgin in Oxford, caused much excitement being commented on as a significant fact, by The Times and most newspapers throughout the country. At the Church Congress at Birmingham in 1893, Father Ignatius denounced the author of "Lux Mundi" as "an impugner of Holy Scripture and of Our Lord Jesus Christ." He is the author of many published sermons, poems, hymns; the "Tales of Llan-thony;" "Brother Placidus;" "Leonard Morris;" and "Tales of the Monastery." He is the composer of many pieces of Sacred Music, 1860-82; also editor of "Llanthony Monastery Tracts."

LYNN, William Thynne, B.A., F.R.A.S., eldest son of the late William Bewicke Lynn, F.R.C.S., for many years one of the surgeons of Westminster Hospital, and descended from a family long resident in the county of Durham, was born at Chelsea, Aug. 9, 1835, and educated privately in the neighbourhood of Esher, Surrey. His first appointment, after a short preliminary training at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, was that of an assistant at the Cambridge Observatory, under the late Professor Challis, in the year 1855, whence, in the following year, he returned to Greenwich as a member of the staff of the Royal Observatory, where Professor (afterwards Sir George) Airy was Astronomer Royal. For several years he superintended the greater part of the astronomical calculations, during which he found time to devote some of his evenings to attending lectures at King's College, London, of which he was elected an associate in 1862. In that year he also graduated as B.A. in the University of London, after passing the requisite examinations in 1860 and 1861. In February, 1862, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, to the Monthly Notices of which he afterwards made several contributions. In the following year he published a small educational work called "The First Principles of Natural Philosophy." A long and serious illness compelled him to desist from night exposure, in consequence of which he retired from the Observatory in the month of January, 1880. He continued, however, to give much of his time to astronomical literature, and numerous contributions from his pen appeared in the pages of the Observatory, the Athenæum, the Companion to the British Almanac, and other periodicals; besides his editing and revising various astronomical works. In 1884 he published a concise and popular summary of the most interesting facts known respecting the heavenly bodies (especially their movements) under the title "Celestial Motions: a Handy Book of Astronomy," of which an eighth edition appeared in 1894. In 1886 he was elected an Honorary Associate of the Liverpool Astronomical Society. In 1880 he had been admitted a Lay Reader in the diocese of Rochester; and in 1889 he published two small volumes, intended chiefly for Sunday-school teachers, on "Bible Chronology," and "Brief Lessons on the Parables and Miracles of Our Lord," and early in 1891 a third, entitled "Eminent Scripture Characters," and in 1892 a "Short Catechism of English Church History" in pamphlet form. In 1893 appeared also a small treatise on "Remarkable Comets" (of which a second edition was published in 1894), and "Brief Lessons on Astronomy." The columns of Notes and Queries since 1882 contain a large number of contributions from his pen on literary, scientific, and Biblical subjects. "Celestial Motions" has been translated into French.

LYSONS, General Sir Daniel, G.C.B., Constable of the Tower of London, son of the late Rev. Daniel Lysons, M.A., F.R.S., of Hempsted Court, Gloucestershire (well known as an antiquary and a topographer), by his second wife Josepha Catherine Susanna, daughter of John Gilbert Cooper, Esq., of Thurgarton Priory, Nottinghamshire, was born at Rodmarton, Gloucestershire, in 1816, and educated at Shrewsbury School. Entering the army as ensign in the 1st Royals in 1834, he served through the Canadian rebellion (1838-39), including the actions of St. Denis (mentioned in despatches) and St. Eustache. He was Deputy-Assistant Quartermaster-General from 1838 to 1841. Afterwards he was promoted to a captaincy in the 3rd West India Regiment for distinguished conduct at the wreck of the transport Premier, and in 1844 he was transferred to the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusileers. He was Brigade-Major at Barbadoes from 1844 to 1847. In 1849 he was appointed Town Major at Portsmouth. He served throughout the Crimean War (1854-5), was present at the battles of the Alma (mentioned in despatches) and Inkermann, at the affairs of Bulganac and McKenzie's Farm, the capture of Balaklava, and throughout the siege of Sebastopol; he led the main column of attack on the Redan by the Light Division on June 18 (mentioned in despatches), and commanded a brigade in the latter part of the action; he was engaged in the final assault on the Redan on Sept. 8, when he was severely wounded (mentioned in despatches), and he commanded the second Brigade, Light Division) from October, 1855, to the end of the war. In 1857 he exchanged to the 25th King's Own Borderers. In November, 1857, he was appointed Assistant Adjutant-General to the Inspector-General of Infantry. In December, 1861, he was sent out to organise the militia of Canada at the Trent affair. He was Deputy Quartermaster-General in Canada from 1862 to 1867; was appointed to the command of a brigade at Malta in 1868, and to a brigade at Aldershot in 1869. From 1872 to 1874 he was in command of the Northern district of England, and in 1876 he was appointed Quartermaster-General of the forces. He was created a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath in 1877, a Grand Cross in 1886, and attained the rank of General in 1879. In July, 1880, he was appointed to the command of the troops at Aldershot, and in 1890 was appointed Constable of the Tower of London. Sir D. Lysons has received the Crimean Medal with three Clasps; is an officer of the Legion of Honour, and has the third class of the Order of the Medjidieh, the Turkish and Sardinian Medals.

LYTE, Henry Churchill Maxwell, C.B., F.S.A., Royal Commissioner on Historical MSS., is the son of the late J. W. Maxwell Lyte, Esq., grandson of the Rev. H. F. Lyte, the well-known hymn-writer, and the representative of the families of Lyte of Lytescary, co. Somerset, and Lyte of Falkland, co. Monaghan. He was born in London in 1848, and educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took honours in Law and History and became M.A. In 1875 he published a "History of Eton College," of which a new edition, revised and enlarged, was issued in 1889. In 1880 and 1881 he contributed to the Archæological Journal a series of papers on "Dunster and its Lords," which was afterwards reprinted with additions as a volume for private circulation. This was followed, in 1886, by a "History of the University of Oxford from the earliest times to the year 1530." In the meanwhile Mr. Maxwell Lyte had been acting for some years as an Inspector for the Historical Manuscripts Commission. Reports by him on the collections of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, the Duke of Rutland, and upwards of twenty other owners, have at different times been presented to Parliament. In January, 1886, he was appointed Deputy Keeper of the Records, in succession to the late Sir William Hardy, and as such was entrusted with the direction of all official publications and arrangements connected with the national archives, upon which he presents an annual report. In the following month he was nominated one of the Royal Commissioners on Historical Manuscripts. He was made a C.B. in January, 1889. He married, in 1871, Frances Fownes, daughter of the late J. C. Somerville, Esq., of Dinder, co. Somerset.

M.

MAARTENS, Maarten, novelist, was born in Holland, and received his education in Germany, and at the University of Utrecht. He is a barrister by profession, but has latterly devoted himself entirely to literature. His best-known works are "The Sin of Joost Avelingh," "An Old Maid's Love," "A Question of Taste," "God's Fool," and "The Greater Glory." These works, originally written in faultless English, are also published by the author in Dutch. They present a not too pleasant picture of bourgeois existence in the Netherlands, but are admitted by Dutchmen to be singularly true to life.

MACALISTER, Alexander, F.R.S., son of Robert Macalister, Esq., was born in Dublin, 1844, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He became L.R.C.S. in 1861, L.R.C.P. 1862, and M.A. and M.D. of the Universities of Dublin and Cambridge. In 1869 he was appointed Professor of Zoology in Dublin University, and of Anatomy in 1872. In 1883 he accepted the Professorship of Anatomy at Cambridge, and he was elected a Fellow of St. John's College. He is F.R.S. and member of the Senate of the Royal University of Ireland, and has published "Introduction to Animal Morphology," 1876; "Morphology of Vertebrate Animals," 1878; "Text-Book of Human Anatomy," 1889; "History of the Study of Anatomy in Cambridge," 1891; and "Some Morphological Lessons Taught by Human Variation" (3rd Boyle Lecture), 1894.

MacALISTER, Donald, M.A., M.D. Cantab., B.Sc. London, F.R.C.P. London, was born May 17, 1854, at Perth, Scotland, and is the son of Donald MacAlister, Esq., formerly of Tarbert, Lochfyne, representative of the ancient family who were hereditary keepers of Tarbert Castle. He was educated at Aberdeen and at Liverpool Institute, and his scholastic successes were probably unique. He took the highest place in successive years in Oxford Senior, Cambridge Senior, and London Matriculation; five Gold and Silver Medals in the Science and Art Examinations; Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society; and five scholarships at Oxford and Cambridge. He entered St. John's College, Cambridge, Oct. 1873, gained all college honours open to him, including the Herschel prize for Astronomy; graduated B.A. as senior wrangler and first Smith's prizeman 1877, and B.Sc. London the same year. He was Master at Harrow in 1877, and subsequently examiner, and was elected Fellow of St. John's in the same year. He studied medicine at Cambridge and St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, where he was Lecturer in Natural Philosophy, and graduated M.B. in 1881. He made researches in the physiology of heat-production under Professor Ludwig at Leipzig in 1881, and studied the mechanism of the heart, on which he has published papers. He graduated M.D. in 1884 and was elected Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, 1886; appointed Gulstonian Lecturer 1887, and first Croonian Professor, 1888; Secretary and Recorder in the Section of Mathematics and Physics of the British Association for Advancement of Science, 1879-84, and Vice-President, 1886; is member of the Council, Tutor, and Medical Lecturer, St. John's College; Physician to Addenbrooke's Hospital; Member and Secretary of the University Council of Senate, 1886-94; Secretary of the Special Board for Medicine, Examiner and University Lecturer in Medicine; Assessor to the Regius Professor of Physic; Elector to the Professorships of Medicine, Surgery, Anatomy, Zoology, and Physics; member of the General Board of Studies, and of the Local Examinations Syndicate; Representative of the University on General Medical Council (elected 1889), Thomson Lecturer at Aberdeen 1889, editor of the Eagle and of the Practitioner, member of the editorial committee of the British Pharmacopœia, and editorial referee of the British Medical Journal. He is editor of Ziegler's Pathological Anatomy, 1885-6 (3 vols., second edition, 1888), and is the author of "The Nature of Fever," 1887; "Antipyretics," 1888; "Law of the Geometric Mean," 1879; and other literary, scientific, and professional memoirs. He is also Fellow of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and of the Physical, Mathematical, and Physiological Societies of London.

McCARTHY, Justin, M.P., was born at Cork on Nov. 22, 1830. After receiving a liberal education there, he became attached to the staff of a Liverpool paper, in 1853. He entered the Reporters' Gallery of the House of Commons in 1860, for the Morning Star, became foreign editor of that paper the following autumn, and chief editor in 1864; he resigned the latter post in 1868, and travelled through the United States for nearly three years, visiting thirty-five of the thirty-seven States. Since that time he has more than once revisited America. Mr. McCarthy has contributed to the London Review, the Westminster Review, the Fortnightly Review, the Nineteenth Century, the Contemporary Review, to several English magazines, and to many American periodicals, including the North American Review. He is the author of "The Waterdale Neighbours," 1867; "My Enemy's Daughter," 1869; "Lady Judith," 1871; "A Fair Saxon," 1873; "Linley Rochford," 1874; "Dear Lady Disdain," 1875; "Miss Misanthrope," 1877; "Donna Quixote," 1879; "The Comet of a Season," 1881; "Maid of Athens," 1883; "Camiola," 1885 (novels); of "Con Amore," a volume of critical essays; and "Prohibitory Legislation in the United States," an account of the working of the Liquor Laws in Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Iowa, and other States of the Union. In collaboration with Mrs. Campbell-Praed he has written three novels, "The Right Honourable," 1886; "The Rebel Rose," 1887; and "The Ladies' Gallery," 1888. More lately he has published "The Dictator," a novel, 1893; and "Red Diamonds," a novel, 1893. Mr. McCarthy's most important work is "A History of Our Own Times" (1878-80), being an account of what happened in these countries, from the accession of Queen Victoria to the general election of 1880. He has published the first and second volumes of a "History of the Four Georges." He has also written a short history of "The Epoch of Reform," the period between 1830 and 1850, published in 1882, and a Life of Sir Robert Peel, in the series called "The Prime Ministers of Queen Victoria," published in 1891. Mr. McCarthy is a political writer for one of the London daily papers. He was elected to Parliament as member for the county of Longford, Ireland, in March, 1879, and was re-elected when the dissolution took place in 1880, in both instances without a contest. At the general election, 1885, he contested Derry, and was defeated by a majority of 29, but was immediately elected for Longford, by an immense majority. In 1886 he contested Derry again, and was defeated by a majority of 3, while at the same time he was returned unopposed for Longford. He claimed the Derry seat and obtained it on petition, and then elected to sit for Derry. He has since lectured in America. He is a Home Ruler, and was Vice-President of the Irish Parliamentary party in the House of Commons before the rejection of Mr. Parnell by the majority, when Mr. McCarthy was by them elected President.

MACAULAY, James, M.A., M.D., was born at Edinburgh, May 22, 1817. His early education was received at the Edinburgh Academy, where he was from 1824 to 1830. The Rector of the school in those years was the Venerable Archdeacon Williams. Tait, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, was "Dux" of the school in 1826. In 1830 he entered the University of Edinburgh, where he took degrees in arts and in medicine, attending also the classes in theology. After graduating in 1841, Dr. Macaulay studied in Paris, and travelled in Italy and Spain. In 1850 he became joint editor of the Literary Gazette, on the retirement of William Jerdan, and retained the appointment till 1857. In the following year he became editor of the Leisure Hour, and the Sunday at Home. From the Leisure Hour office was issued, about fifteen years ago, The Boy's Own Paper, which was started in order to take the place of the pernicious weekly literature which had previously been provided; and was followed by The Girl's Own Paper. Both were founded by Dr. Macaulay. He has also written many books of biography, travel, and adventure; some of them chiefly for juvenile reading, such as "All True," "Stirring Stories of Peace and War," "Wonderful Tales from Real Life," "Anson's Voyage Round the World," and his story, "From Middy to Admiral of the Fleet." The last of these Christmas books is entitled, "Strange, yet True; or, Interesting and Memorable Stories retold." "Notes of a Tour in the United States," which first appeared in the Leisure Hour, was afterwards issued as a volume, entitled "Across the Ferry," which passed through several editions. "The Truth about Ireland" contains the result of personal observation during repeated visits. One of Dr. Macaulay's volumes in the "Pen and Pencil Series" is "Sea Pictures," which Mr. Ruskin said was the best book he had ever seen on the subject. He has also published books on Luther, Dr. Johnson, and General Gordon; and in 1887 "Victoria R.I., Her Life and Reign." On the occasion of the silver wedding of the Prince and Princess of Wales he issued an annotated collection of the "Speeches and Addresses of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, during twenty-five years, 1863-1888." Dr. Macaulay has been for thirty-five years the editor-in-chief of the Religious Tract Society's periodicals. He is now "Consulting Editor" of the magazines, and only an occasional contributor to the Leisure Hour and Sunday at Home, to which he devoted so long a service as editor.

McCLINTOCK, Admiral Sir Francis Leopold, K.C.B., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., &c., is a younger son of the late Henry McClintock, Esq., uncle to the first Lord Rathdonnell. He was born at Dundalk in 1819, and entered the navy in 1831. After some years of foreign service Lieutenant McClintock returned to England, about the time when great anxiety began to be felt for the safety of Sir John Franklin and his companions. He accompanied Sir James Clarke Ross as second lieutenant on board H.M.S. Enterprise, in the Arctic Expedition sent out by the Admiralty in 1848. Returning unsuccessful in November, 1849, McClintock joined a second expedition sent out early in 1850, under the command of Captain Horatio Austin, as senior lieutenant of H.M.S. Assistance, Captain (Sir) Erasmus Ommaney. It was his fortune in August, 1850, to see, at Cape Riley, the first traces of the missing expedition. In the following spring, whilst frozen up at Griffith's Island, he signalized himself by an unprecedented sledge journey of 80 days and 760 geographical miles, reaching the most westerly point which had then been attained from the east, in the Arctic regions. Upon the return of this expedition to England in October, 1851, Lieutenant McClintock was promoted to the rank of Commander. The following spring he again proceeded to the Arctic regions in command of H.M.S. Intrepid, one of five vessels composing the third searching expedition, under Sir Edward Belcher's command. In accordance with instructions from the Admiralty, the Intrepid, in company with the Resolute, Captain Kellett, wintered at Melville Island, in order to search for the heroic Captain McClure and his companions; and most fortunately, they were discovered and rescued, after their three years' imprisonment in the ice. McClintock again distinguished himself by his sledge journey of 105 days and 1,210 geographical miles, into the hitherto unexplored region northward of Melville Island. The comparative perfection to which Arctic sledge-travelling has been carried is almost entirely due to the improvements effected by him. Abandoning four out of the five ships imbedded in the ice, and also McClure's ship, the Investigator, the personnel of this expedition, with McClure and his companions, returned to England in October, 1854, in the dépôt ship North Star, and two relief ships, freshly arrived out, under Captain Inglefield. McClintock was now advanced to the rank of Captain. In 1857 he accepted the command of Lady Franklin's own search expedition—to be fitted out at her expense. He selected, and appropriately equipped, the steam-yacht Fox, of 177 tons, and with 24 companions sailed on July 1, 1857. He returned on September 20, 1859, having discovered, upon the north-west shore of King William's Island, a record announcing the death of Sir John Franklin and the abandonment of the Erebus and Terror. McClintock brought home intelligence of their great discoveries and the fate of their crews, and many relics of the bold expedition. He published a very interesting account of his most important and successful searching voyage. Captain McClintock was received with great distinction. Knighthood, the Freedom of the City of London, and the highest degrees of the chief Universities were conferred upon him. Her Majesty, by her order in council, sanctioned his time in the Fox to count as sea-time served in the navy, for having brought home the only authentic intelligence of the death of Franklin and the fate of his companions. During the next six years Sir Leopold commanded, in succession, H.M.S. Bulldog, Doris, and Aurora, fulfilling various important and delicate duties abroad. From 1865 to 1868 he served as Commodore of the Jamaica Station. From 1868, until promoted to Rear-Admiral in 1871, he was a naval Aide-de-Camp to the Queen; from 1872 to 1877 Admiral-Superintendent of Portsmouth Dockyard, when he was promoted to Vice-Admiral; and from 1879 to 1882 he served as Commander-in-Chief of the North American and West Indian Stations. In 1884 he became a full Admiral and also an Elder Brother of the Corporation of the Trinity House; in 1887 he was selected for one of the few pensions open to admirals, for "good and meritorious services;" and in 1891 he was created a Knight Commander of the Bath. He is the author of "The Voyage of the Fox in the Arctic Seas," which has gone through five editions. In 1870 Sir Leopold McClintock married Annette Elizabeth, second daughter of Robert Foster Dunlop, Esq., of Monasterboice House, co. Louth, by Anna Elizabeth, sister of tenth Viscount Massereene and Ferrard, and has issue.

MacCOLL, The Rev. Canon Malcolm, was born March 27, 1838, at Glenfinan, a sheep farm, occupied by his father, in Inverness-shire, and was educated at Edinburgh, at Trinity College, Glenalmond, and at the University of Naples. He was appointed assistant-curate of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, in 1861; chaplain to the British Ambassador of St. Petersburg, 1862-3; curate of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, 1864-7. He spent the period between 1867 and 1869 in Southern Italy; and was collated to the rectory of St. George, Botolph Lane, in the city of London, in 1871. In 1884 he became a Canon of Ripon, and was appointed Savoy Chaplain in succession to the late Canon Curtis towards the close of 1894. He is the author of "Mr. Gladstone and Oxford," by "Scrutator," 2nd edit., 1865; "Science and Prayer," 4th edit. 1866; "Is there not a Cause? a Letter to Col. Greville Nugent, M. P. [now Lord Greville], on the Disestablishment of the Irish Church," 2nd edit. 1868; "The Reformation in England," 2nd edit. 1869; "The Ober-Ammergau Passion Play," 7th edit. 1870; "Is Liberal Policy a Failure?" by "Expertus," 1870; "Who is Responsible for the [Franco-German] War?" by "Scrutator," 2nd edit. 1871; "The Damnatory Clauses of the Athanasian Creed rationally explained," in a letter to Mr. Gladstone, 1872; "Lawlessness, Sacerdotalism, and Ritualism," 3rd edit. 1875; "The Eastern Question: its Facts and Fallacies," 1877; "Three Years of the Eastern Question," 3rd edit. 1878; "Christianity in Relation to Science and Morals," 4th edit. 1889; besides contributions to periodical literature, and, in 1886, a pamphlet on the Irish Question.

MAC CORMAC, Sir William, was born at Belfast, Jan. 17, 1836, being the eldest son of Henry Mac Cormac, M.D., and Mary Newsam. He was educated in the Belfast Institution, in Dublin, and in Paris; he became Bachelor and Master of Arts, also Master in Surgery, and Doctor of Science honoris causâ of the Queen's University, and received its gold medal. He was afterwards a member of the Senate, and Examiner in Surgery of the University. He was appointed Surgeon, and subsequently Consulting Surgeon, to the Belfast Royal Hospital. He saw service at Metz and Sedan, during the Franco-German war, 1870-1, as surgeon-in-chief of the Anglo-American ambulance, and during the Turco-Servian war, 1876. He was one of the Senior Surgeons, and Lecturer on Surgery, at St. Thomas's Hospital during twenty years; is Consulting Surgeon and Emeritus Lecturer on Clinical Surgery to the Hospital, and Consulting Surgeon to the French Hospital, the Italian Hospital, and Queen Charlotte's Hospital. He is a Fellow of the English and Irish Colleges of Surgeons, and lately Examiner in Surgery in the University of London. He is a member of the Council and of the Court of Examiners of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and Examiner in Surgery for her Majesty's Army, Indian and Naval Medical Services. In 1881 he acted as honorary Secretary-General of the International Medical Congress in London, and in consideration of his services in this capacity the Queen conferred upon him the honour of knighthood. He is an officer of the Legion of Honour, Commander of the Orders of the Dannebrog, the Crown of Italy, and the Takovo; also possessor of the orders of the Crown of Prussia, North Star of Sweden, St. Iago of Portugal, Ritter Kreuz of Bavaria, Merit of Spain, and Medjidieh. Sir William Mac Cormac is the author of "Work under the Red Cross," and treatises on "Antiseptic Surgery," and "Surgical Operations," besides numerous surgical papers contributed to medical journals and addressed to medical societies.

M'CORMICK, The Rev. Joseph, M.A., D.D., was born in the year 1834, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1857, M.A. 1860, D.D. Dublin ad eundem, 1884.) While at Cambridge he rowed in the University Eight, and was Captain of the University Eleven. He was ordained in 1858, and was for two years curate of St. Peter's, Regent Square, London; he was then appointed Rector of Dunmore East, Waterford, Ireland, where he remained until 1864, when he became Assistant Minister of St. Stephen's, Marylebone. In 1867 he was appointed Perpetual Curate of St. Peter's, Deptford, and in 1875 he accepted the important Vicarage of Hull. He was made Rural Dean of Hull in 1875, Canon of York in 1884, and Hon. Chaplain to the Queen in 1890.

McCOY, Professor Sir Frederick K., C.M.G., M.A., D.Sc. (Cantab.), F.R.S., son of Dr. Simon McCoy, M.D., was born in Dublin, in 1823, and educated originally for the medical profession; attending lectures, hospital practice, &c., in Dublin and Cambridge; but while yet too young to be admitted to the profession, devoted himself entirely to the study of all the branches of natural science, classifying the collections of the Geological and Royal Societies of Dublin, with the object of applying recent Zoology to Palæontology as the basis of Stratigraphical Geology. He then accepted the offer of Sir Richard Griffith to make the palæontological investigations required for the Geological Map of Ireland for the Boundary Survey, publishing the results in a large quarto volume in 1844, with numerous plates of the several hundred new species, entitled "Synopsis of the Carboniferous Limestone Fossils of Ireland," and a smaller one in 1846, "Synopsis of the Silurian Fossils of Ireland." He was then invited by Colonel Sir Henry James, R.E., and Sir Henry de la Beche to join the Imperial Survey of Ireland then commenced, and after completing the maps of the districts surveyed by him in the field, he was appointed by Sir Robert Peel's government as one of the first Professors of the Queen's University in Ireland, the Chair of Geology and Mineralogy in the Northern College being assigned to him, lecturing in the Queen's College, Belfast, and Examining in Dublin. About this time he undertook, in conjunction with Professor Sedgwick, the large work on British Palæozoic Rocks and Fossils, based on the materials in the Woodwardian Collection at Cambridge, and made the critical examination of the great series of Fossils of the older formations brought together by Professor Sedgwick; the results of these labours being deemed worthy of the compliment of publication by the Syndics of the University Press of Cambridge, in a large quarto volume, with numerous plates of new discoveries in the Carboniferous, Devonian, Silurian, and Cambrian Formations, issued in 1852, as the second volume of a proposed joint work (of which the first volume, to have been on the Rocks, by Professor Sedgwick, was never published), entitled "British Palæozoic Rocks and Fossils, by Professor Sedgwick and Professor McCoy. He was then appointed by Sir J. Herschel, and the Astronomer Royal, Sir G. B. Airy, as the first Professor of Natural Science in the University of Melbourne, where, having taken part in the formation of the University, he lectured on Chemistry and Mineralogy, Botany, Comparative Anatomy and Zoology, and Geology and Palæontology, for upwards of thirty years. He also established the National Museum of Natural History and Geology at Melbourne, of which he is Director, raising it to a distinguished position by the extent of the collections and perfection of the classification. He was Chairman of the first Royal Commission on the Gold Fields of Victoria; Member from the first of the Royal Commission on Technological Instruction; Member of the Royal Commission on Education; Member of the various Royal Commissions for International and Intercolonial Exhibitions of Victoria. He was appointed Government Palæontologist at the early stage of the Geological Survey, determining the ages of the various tracts published on the maps. For over thirty years he has prepared, and continues to publish in decades at short intervals, two works for the Government of Victoria, one entitled "Prodromus of the Zoology of Victoria,' with coloured figures from the life, and another, "Prodromus of the Palæontology of Victoria." He is a Justice of the Peace for Victoria. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London in 1880, created one of the first Doctors of Science honoris causâ, by the University of Cambridge; and the Royal University of Ireland has also conferred on him their highest degree in Arts and Sciences. He was created a Knight or Chevalier of the Royal Order of the Crown of Italy by King Victor Emanuel, and has been offered similar distinctions by other foreign sovereigns in recognition of his scientific work. In 1886 he received the decoration of C.M.G. from her Majesty, and was created a Knight Commander of the Order in 1891. He has also received the Emperor of Austria's great gold medal for Arts and Sciences; the Murchison medal from the Geological Society of London, and other similar distinctions. He was elected one of the few (only 30 subjects of the Queen being eligible) Honorary Members of the Cambridge Philosophical Society. Is honorary active Member of the Imperial Society of Naturalists of Moscow, and Honorary Fellow and Member of many other British and Foreign scientific bodies. He has published about a hundred memoirs on every branch of Zoology and Palæontology in the Annals of Natural History and other periodicals.

MAC CUNN, Professor Hamish, composer, was born at Greenock, March 22, 1868, and is the son of James Mac Cunn, formerly shipowner in Greenock. He was educated at various schools in Greenock, and by private tutors, and commenced the study of music at the early age of six years. In 1883 he gained an Educational Scholarship for composition at the then newly-established Royal College of Music, London. There he studied principally under Dr. C. H. Hubert Parry until 1886, when he resigned his scholarship. His first introduction to the public was at the Crystal Palace, in 1886, when at one of the Saturday concerts Mr. Manns produced his overture entitled "The Land of the Mountain and the Flood," which gained for its composer immediate fame. His principal works are: "Chior Mhor," overture for orchestra; "Bonnie Kilmeny," cantata for soli, chorus and orchestra; concert overture, "The Land of the Mountain and the Flood;" "Lord Ullin's Daughter," ballad for chorus and orchestra; "The Ship o' the Fiend," ballad for orchestra; "The Dowie Dens o' Yarrow," ballad—overture for orchestra; "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," dramatic cantata for soli, chorus and orchestra; Album of Ten Songs; Cycle of six Love-lyrics; "The Cameronian's Dream," a ballad for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra; "Three Songs from William Black's "Rhymes by a Deerstalker," and (Nov. 1894) an opera, produced at Edinburgh, and entitled "Jeannie Deans." Besides the above-mentioned, he is the author of many other songs, part-songs, &c. Mr. Mac Cunn worships, in his art, the spirit which inspired the old Bards of Scotland. He is a Professor of Composition at the Royal Academy of Music, London. In June, 1889, he married the only daughter of the late John Pettie, R.A.

MACDONALD, Frederic William, born in Leeds, Feb. 25, 1842, is the son of the Rev. G. B. Macdonald, a well-known Wesleyan minister, and grandson of the Rev. James Macdonald. He was educated at St. Peter's Collegiate School, London, at Oxenford House, Jersey, and Owens' College, Manchester, where he was Senior Prizeman in Classics, Greek Testament, and English Literature, session 1861-62. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1862. First stationed at Burslem, afterwards in Liverpool, Waterloo, Manchester, Southport, Kensington and Clifton. In 1880 he was the representative of the British Methodist Conference to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States at Cincinnati. In 1881 was Fernley Lecturer on "The Dogmatic Principle in relation to Christian Belief," and was appointed Professor of Systematic Theology at the Birmingham branch of the Wesleyan Theological Institution. In 1885 he published "The Life of Fletcher of Madeley;" and in 1887, "The Life of William Morley Punshon, LL.D." He was Assistant-Editor of the London Quarterly Review, 1872-76, and was elected a member of the Birmingham School Board in 1888. In 1891 he retired from his professorship to become Secretary of the Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society, and in this capacity travels largely at home and abroad.

MACDONALD, George, LL.D., poet and novelist, was born at Huntley, Aberdeenshire, in 1824, and was educated at the parish school there, and at King's College and University, Aberdeen. After taking his degree he became a student for the ministry at the Independent College, Highbury, London, and was for a short time an Independent minister, but soon retired, became a lay member of the Church of England, and settled in London to pursue a literary career. His first work was "Within and Without, a Dramatic Poem," 1856; followed by "Poems," 1857; "Phantastes, a Faërie Romance," 1858; "David Elginbrod," 1862; "Adela Cathcart," 1864; "The Portent, a Story of Second Sight," 1864; "Alec Forbes of Howglen," 1865; "Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood," 1866; "Guild Court," 1867; "The Disciple and other Poems," 1868; "The Seaboard Parish," 1868; "Robert Falconer," 1868; "Wilfrid Cumbermede," 1871; "The Vicar's Daughter," and "Malcolm," 1874; "St. George and St. Michael," 1875; "Thomas Wingfield, Curate," 1876; "The Marquis of Lossie," 1877. Besides these Mr. Macdonald has written books for the young; "Dealings with the Fairies," 1867; "Ranald Bannerman's Boyhood," 1869; "The Princess and the Goblin," 1871; "At the Back of the North Wind," 1870; and others. He is also the author of "Unspoken Sermons," 1866; and a treatise on the "Miracles of our Lord," 1870. In 1877 he received a Civil List Pension of £100, in consideration of his contributions to literature. His later works are "The Gifts of the Child Christ, and other poems," 2 vols., 1882; "Castle Warlock," 3 vols., 1882; "The Princess and Curdie," a fairy romance, 1882; "Weighed and Wanting," 1882; "The Wise Woman," a parable, 1883; and "There and Back," a novel, and "A Rough Shaking," 1891, and "Vicar's Daughter," 1893. In May, 1893, his poetical works were published in two volumes. For some years past, Dr. Macdonald has lived principally at Bordighera, but pays annual visits to England.

MACDONALD, Greville, M.D., eldest son of George Macdonald, LL.D., the novelist and poet, was born in Manchester on Jan. 20, 1856. He was educated at King's College School, subsequently obtaining his medical education at King's College Hospital, where he gained several scholarships and prizes. In 1879 he took the membership of the Royal College of Surgeons; in 1881 he graduated with honours at the University of London, taking the degree of M.B., and his M.D. in the following year. After travelling in the East and on the continent for some years, he was appointed Resident Medical Officer to the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat in 1886; since which time he has devoted his attention solely to the study of affections of the nose, throat and ear. In the following year he was appointed Honorary Physician to the same institution, which office he holds at the present time. In 1893 he was appointed Throat Physician and Lecturer on Diseases of the Throat and Nose to King's College Hospital. During the year 1888 Dr. Macdonald devoted his attention specially to a scientific investigation of the functions of the nose; the results of his experiments being published in a volume entitled "On the Respiratory Functions of the Nose." He had previously published, 1887, a brochure entitled "The Forms of Nasal Obstruction in relation to Throat and Ear Disease." He has since added to these "Board School Laryngitis," 1889; "A Treatise on Diseases of the Nose and its Accessory Cavities," 2nd ed., 1892; "Hay Fever and Asthma," 1893. Besides the above he has contributed many articles and papers to the Medical Societies and Journals, and is one of the editors of and contributors to the Medical Annual.

McDONALD, John Blake, R.S.A., a descendant of the family of McDonalds of Keppoch, was born in the parish of Boharm, Morayshire, in 1829. He received his early education at his native place, and was for a short period attached to farm life. Developing a taste for art he came to Edinburgh in 1852, where he attended the Board of Trustees' School of Art; and afterwards, for several years, studied under Robert Scott Lauder, receiving previous to 1862 from the Royal Scottish Academy several prizes, and in that year the first prize for painting from life. In the same year he was elected Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy. In 1862 he painted "Prince Charlie leaving Scotland, or the last of the Stuart Race," which was exhibited at the Edinburgh Exhibition of 1886, and there greatly admired by the Queen and the Prince of Wales. Within the next few years he produced the following pictures: "A Scene from the Legend of Montrose;" "The Quest of Henry Morton;" "King James and the Witches;" and "The Massacre of Glencoe;" the latter being now in the National Gallery. He also produced numerous paintings of subjects from various of Sir Walter Scott's Works, including "The Lady of the Lake;" "The Antiquary;" "The Heart of Mid Lothian;" "Waverley" and "Rob Roy;" all of which were engraved for the Royal Association for the Promotion of Fine Arts, by Lumb Stocks, R.A., Bell, Le Conte, and others. "Van Tromp's Duel" was another picture of this period. In 1876 he went to Venice for six months, where he made several sketches of Venetian scenery, which, on his return, he painted in water-colours and oil. He has made several visits at various times to other places on the Continent in connection with his art, including Paris, Jena Brussels, and Cologne. After 1876 he turned his attention to landscape painting. His first painting of this class was "Strathyre, at the head of Loch Leven." This was followed by "The Garry above Struan," in the Edinburgh Exhibition of 1891. In 1877 he was elected a Royal Scottish Academician.

MACDONALD, John Denis, M.D., F.R.S., Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets, R.N., youngest son of the late James Macdonald, Esq., of Cork, and Catherine his wife (daughter of the late Denis Mc Carthy, Esq., of Kilcoleman), was born Oct. 26, 1826, and educated under his father's supervision. In 1841 he became the apprentice and pupil of the late Dr. Wm. L. Meredith, House-Surgeon to the South Infirmary, Cork; and commenced his professional studies in the Cork School of Medicine, but completed them in King's College, London, where he succeeded Dr. Martin Duncan, F.R.S., as prosector to the late Professor R. B. Todd, F.R.S., and Sir William Bowman, Bart., then joint professors of physiology. Here he had the advantage of attending the Botanical Lectures of the late Professor Edward Forbes and the Zoological course of Professor T. Rymer Jones, who may be said to have first inspired him with a taste for natural history. He was the winner of Sir William Fergusson's prize in Surgery, the Medical Society's prize, and a Certificate in Medicine, while connected with the College. Having passed the College of Surgeons he entered the Navy as Assistant Surgeon in 1849; was appointed to the Royal Naval Hospital, Plymouth; took charge of the Medical Museum, and made numerous pathological drawings and records, preserved in the Library. Subsequently he was appointed to H.M.S. Herald, Captain Henry Mangles Denham, F.R.S., Feb. 18, 1852, for surveying and exploring service in the S.W. Pacific. Before proceeding to join the ship Dr. Macdonald profited much by the advice and information communicated to him by Professor Huxley, whose discoveries of South Sea fame he afterwards had numerous opportunities of verifying, whilst himself studying the topography and natural history of the different localities visited either in the ship or in the steam-tender the "Torch." These included both sides of the Australian Continent, Tasmania, the Islands in Bass's Strait, the Percy Islands, New Hebrides, New Caledonia, the Isle of Pines and the Fiji Group. Microscopical drawings and determinations of all the more important soundings and products of dredge and towing net obtained in the expedition were communicated from time to time to the learned societies at home. He materially assisted Mr. John Macgillivray, the appointed naturalist, and Mr. Frederic Matthew Rayner, the surgeon, in making the large collection of objects of natural history which were sent home, and presented by the Lords of the Admiralty to the British Museum. He headed a perilous exploring expedition into the interior of Viti Levu, ascending the Rewa river to its source at the Moli vei tala, with a terrestrial horizon, for nearly a month. An abstract of the report sent home by the captain was published by the Geographical Society in the volume for 1857. Soon after this, the Rev. Mr. Baker, Wesleyan Missionary, and a party of native teachers were clubbed and eaten in the Solo ira district. Much information was furnished from time to time to the Colonial Office, and on leaving the Colony a gold chronometer was presented to Dr. Macdonald by the Governor-General, Sir William Denison, R.E., F.R.S., members of the Legislative Assembly, and other gentlemen in recognition of services rendered. He was also made Corresponding Member of the Australian Museum by the late William Sharp Macleay, Esq., author of the "Horæ Entomologicæ," whose splendid library at Elizabeth Bay was frequently consulted when objects of interest presented themselves. On arriving in England in 1859, at the age of 33, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and was promoted and appointed the same year to H.M.S. Icarus (Commander Nowell Salmon) and in the West Indies encountered almost single-handed (two medical officers dying in succession) one of the most formidable epidemics of yellow fever on record. Some of the particulars connected with it will be found in the article on Yellow Fever in Reynolds' System of Medicine. He was awarded the McDougall Brisbane Gold Medal of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, was also adjudged but not awarded the Keith prize, the technical reason being that he could not be called a Scottish Naturalist, as specified in the bequest. He gained the Sir Gilbert Blane Gold Medal for the journal of H.M.S. Lord Warden flag-ship, Mediterranean Station (1871), and was frequently engaged as one of the medical board of examiners, and he subsequently superintended the Naval Medical Officers entering the Army Medical School, as Professor of Naval Hygiene and a member of the Senate. Dr. Macdonald was promoted to the rank of Inspector-General of Hospitals, &c. in 1880; appointed to the Royal Naval Hospital, Plymouth, in 1883; and placed on the retired list in 1886. The following are some of his published works:—"Sound and Colour," setting forth the undulatory theory as the only trustworthy basis of analogy, 1869; "Guide to the Microscopical Examinations of Drinking Water," 1875; "Outlines of Naval Hygiene," 1881.

MACDONALD, The Right Hon. John Hay Athole, P.C., C.B., Volunteer Decoration, LL.D., Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland and Lord President of the Second Division of the Court of Session, son of M. N. Macdonald-Hume of Ninewells, W.S. by Grace, daughter of Sir John Hay of Smithfield and Haystoune, Bart., was born Dec. 27, 1836; educated at Edinburgh Academy and the Universities of Edinburgh and Basle (LL.D. Edin. 1884); became Advocate, Scotland, 1859, and Q.C. 1880. He was Sheriff of Ross, Cromarty and Sutherland 1874-76, and of Perthshire 1880-85; Solicitor-General for Scotland 1876-80; and Commissioner of Northern Lighthouses 1876-80 and 1885-88; Member of H.M. Prison Board for Scotland and H.M. Board of Supervision, 1875-76 and 1880-85; Dean of the Faculty of Advocates 1882-85, and Lord Advocate of Scotland 1885-6; reappointed 1886-88; sworn of the Privy Council 1885, and Member of the Committee of Council on Education 1885-88. He was created C.B. 1886, and received Volunteer Decoration 1892, and is a J.P. and D.L. for the County of the City of Edinburgh, and a member of H.M. Board of Manufactures. He was Colonel-Commandant of the Queen's Rifle Vol. Brigade (Royal Scots) 1882 to 1890, and Brigadier-General of the Forth Brigade, 1888; F.R.S.E. 1886 and F.R.S. 1888; Member of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, 1886; a Brigadier-General and Member of the Council of the Royal Company of Archers (Queen's Body Guard for Scotland); Chairman of Royal Commission on Boundaries of Glasgow 1888; unsuccessfully contested Edinburgh 1874 and 1880, and Haddington Burghs 1878. He sat as M.P. for the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews, 1885-88. He is an eminent electrician, having received numerous Medals at International Exhibitions for inventions; is an authority on Criminal Law; and his books and lectures on Drill and Tactics have been used as a basis for the British Infantry drill. His chief works are "Macdonald on Tactics;" "Treatise on the Criminal Law;" "Our Trip to Blunderland;" "Common Sense on Parade or Drill without Stays," &c. He married, in 1864, Adelaide Jeanette, daughter of Major Doran of Ely House, Wexford; she died in 1872.

McDOUGALL, The Hon. William, C.B., Q.C., and a Privy Councillor for Canada, was born at Toronto, Jan. 25, 1822. He was educated at Toronto and at Victoria College, and afterwards studied law. From 1848 till 1858 he conducted at Toronto a monthly journal on agriculture, and from 1850 edited the North American, which was merged in the Toronto Globe in 1857. He was first elected to Parliament as a Reformer in 1858; was appointed Commissioner of Crown Lands, and a member of the Executive Council in a Reform Ministry in May, 1862; and resigned office with his colleagues in March, 1864, on questions of constitutional changes; in June of the same year accepted the office of Provincial Secretary in a coalition ministry, formed to carry a measure to unite British America under one government. During the Fenian troubles in the summer of 1866, Mr. McDougall was charged with the duties of Minister of Marine. In the first Dominion Government of 1867 he was made Minister of Public Works, which position he held until 1869. In 1868 he and Sir George Cartier were sent to England to confer with the Imperial Government on some questions that had arisen between the Provinces, including the acquisition of the North-West Territory and Rupert's Land, then claimed by the Hudson Bay Company, under its charter from Charles II. After five months' negotiations the delegates concluded the purchase of nearly one half the North American continent for £300,000, and one twentieth of the prairie land surveyed within twenty years. In 1869 he was commissioned Lieut.-Governor of Rupert's Land and the North-West Territories, but the half-breed rebellion at the time prevented his entering the country. Returning to Ottawa he resumed his place in Parliament, and declined to assume the Governorship after the suppression of the outbreak. In 1873 he was the Special Commissioner of the Dominion Government to confer with the Imperial authorities on the subject of the Fisheries and Emigration. Mr. McDougall sat for South Simcoe in the Ontario Legislature from May, 1875, to Sept. 1878, when he resigned to contest Halton in the Dominion Parliament, which he represented until 1882. He was offered the Governorship of British Columbia or the Chief Justiceship of Manitoba in 1878, both of which he declined. He has resumed the practice of his profession at Ottawa as Consulting Council in special cases. In 1867 he was created C.B. (Civil).

MACDUFF, The Rev. Dr. J. R., second son of Alexander Macduff of Bonhard, Perthshire, was born in 1818, and educated at the High School and University of Edinburgh. From New York and Glasgow he received the degree of D.D. In 1843 he was ordained minister of the parish of Kettins, Forfarshire, and in 1849 was presented to the parish of St. Madoes, Perthshire, where he remained until appointed to the new church of Sandyford, Glasgow. Dr. Macduff has published a very large number of religious works, which have attained an immense circulation (upwards of three millions) in this country and America: amongst them may be mentioned "Memories of Bethany, "Memories of Gennesaret," "The Prophet of Fire," "The Shepherd and his Flock," "Sunsets on the Hebrew Mountains," "Comfort ye, Comfort ye," "Brighter than the Sun, a life of Christ for Youth," "The Golden Gospel," "Morning and Night Watches," "The Bow in the Cloud," "Morning Family Prayers," "Gloria Patri, a book of private devotion," "In Christo, the Monogram of St. Paul," "Pillar in the Night," a Book for Mourners; "The Bible Forget-me-not Series." Amongst his poems are "Wells of Baca," "Knocking," "Gates of Praise." He has also written a number of story-books, of which "The Story of a Dewdrop," "The Story of a Shell," "The Parish of Taxwood," are the best known. After 15 years of work in Glasgow Dr. Macduff retired to Chislehurst, Kent, where he now occupies himself with writing.

McGRATH, Terence. See BLAKE, HENRY ARTHUR.

McGREGOR, ROBERT, R.S.A., was born, of Scottish parents, in Yorkshire, July 6, 1848. Both his father and grandfather were artistic designers for table linen and silk goods. He was educated in Manchester and Edinburgh; and elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy (A.R.S.A.) in 1882, and Royal Scottish Academician (R.S.A.) in 1889.

MacGREGOR, Sir William, M.D., K.C.M.G., Administrator of British New Guinea, was born in 1846, and educated at Aberdeen and Glasgow, and in Berlin and Paris. In 1875 he was appointed Administrator of the Government and Acting High Commissioner and Consul General for the Western Pacific; and in 1888 Administrator of British New Guinea. In 1889 he was made Knight Commander of the Order of Saint Michael and Saint George.

McILWRAITH, Sir Thomas, LL.D., K.C.M.G., was born at Ayr, N.B., in 1835, and was educated at the Glasgow University. He went out to Victoria in 1854, and was civil engineer on the Government railways. He entered the Queensland Parliament in 1869; was Minister of Works, 1873; and Premier, 1879-83, and again in 1888; but resigned in 1890, and became Treasurer in the Griffith Ministry. In 1892 he became Premier, Chief Secretary, and Minister of Railways, but resigned the Premiership in 1893.

McINTOSH, Professor William Carmichael, LL.D., St. Andrews, F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.L.S., was born at St. Andrews, Oct. 10, 1838; and was educated at the Madras College, St. Andrews, the University of St. Andrews, and the University of Edinburgh, graduating in Medicine in 1860 (with a Thesis Gold Medal); L.R.C.S., Edinburgh, 1860; Cor. Memb. Z. S.; Soc. Psychol. Par. Soc. Honor., 1866; Soc. Centrale d'Agricult. de France Soc. Honor.; and Hon. Member of other societies. Dr. McIntosh was Assistant Physician, Perth Asylum, from Aug., 1860, to March, 1863; Physician to the Perth District Asylum, from March 1863, to Nov. 1883, and a Consulting Physician to the latter till 1893. He was Examiner in Natural History, University of Edinburgh, from Oct. 1874, to Jan. 1885; Professor of Natural History, University of St. Andrews, Aug., 1882; President Biol. Sect. Brit. Assoc., 1885; Member of the Fishery Board for Scotland; Convenor of the University Science and University Museum Committees, and Hon. President of various students' societies. He is also J.P. for Fife, and Vice-President Lit. and Antiq. Soc., Perth. He has published "Observations and Experiments on the Shore Crab," 1860; "The Marine Invertebrates and Fishes of St. Andrews," 1875; "Monograph of the British Annelida (Ray Society)," 1872-73; "The Annelida of H.M.S. Challenger," 1885; "Report on Trawling," for H.M. Commission under Lord Dalhousie, 1884; "On the Development and Life-Histories of the British Food-Fishes" (with E. E. Prince, B.A.), 1889. Dr. McIntosh is Neill Gold Medallist, Royal Society of Edinburgh; Gold Medallist, Edinburgh Fisheries Exhibition, 1882; Gold Medallist, International Fisheries Exhibition, London, 1883. Has written numerous medical papers. Of scientific papers (Zoological) he has published upwards of a hundred, some of them of considerable size, and the majority illustrated by original plates. He has made large additions to the Perth Museum and to the University Museum, St. Andrews; while the St. Andrews Marine Laboratory owes its existence to him, with the aid of the Government and the Fishery Board.

MacINTYRE, Miss Margaret, operatic singer, is a daughter of General MacIntyre, late of the Royal Artillery. She received her musical education at Dr. Wylde's branch of the London Academy of Music at Brighton, and subsequently studied under Signor Garcia at the London Academy of Music. She won the Bronze Medal of the Academy in 1883, the Silver Medal in 1884, the Gold Medal in 1885, and obtained an Associate's diploma. On the occasion of the late Abbé Liszt's visit to England, Miss Maggie MacIntyre sang the soprano music in that composer's oratorio of "St Elizabeth," and won his warm approval. In May, 1888, she appeared as Michaela in "Carmen," and won an instant success. At the Royal English Opera House she sang the part of Rebecca in "Ivanhoe," and in 1891 took part in the Handel Festival. She has also won great applause in Australia and the Colonies.

McKENDRICK, Professor John Gray, LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.R.C.P., was born in Aberdeen on Aug. 12, 1841. He was educated in Aberdeen and in Braco Village, Perthshire, spent several years in a law office in Aberdeen, and then taking to the study of medicine, he graduated as M.D. and C.M. at the University of Aberdeen in 1864. He held in succession the offices of Visiting Surgeon to the Chester General Infirmary, Resident Medical Officer to the Eastern Dispensary, London, and Surgeon to the Belford Hospital, Fort William. He then became Assistant to the late Professor Hughes Bennett, in the Chair of the Institutes of Medicine or Physiology in the University of Edinburgh. Owing to Professor Bennett's illness, he discharged the entire duties of the Chair for three sessions, then became an Extramural Lecturer on Physiology in Edinburgh for two years, and was appointed to the Chair of Institutes of Medicine in the University of Glasgow in 1876. For two years he held the office of Fullerian Professor of Physiology in the Royal Institution of Great Britain; and for one year that of the Thomson Lecturer on Natural Science in the Free Church College of Aberdeen. He has written various papers on physiological subjects, such as on the Action of Light on the Retina, on the Antagonism of Drugs, on Anæsthetics, &c., published in the Medical Journals and in the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh. He published a work entitled "Outlines of Physiology" in 1878, and a larger "Text-Book of Physiology" in two volumes, in 1889. He is LL.D. of the University of Aberdeen, 1882; F.R.C.P. Ed. 1872; F.R.S.E. 1873; and F.R.S. 1884.

MACKENZIE, Alexander Campbell, Mus. Doc. St. And. & Camb., Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, is the son of a favourite Edinburgh musician, was born in Edinburgh in 1847, and sent to Germany, at the age of ten, to study under Ulrich Edward Stein. Four years later he entered the ducal orchestra at Schwarzburg-Sondershausen, and remained in Germany till 1862, when he came to London to study the violin under M. Sainton. The same year he was elected King's Scholar at the Royal Academy of Music. In 1865 he returned to Edinburgh as a teacher of the pianoforte, then resided for some years in Italy, devoting himself entirely to composition. His earlier works comprise "Cervantes," an overture for orchestra; a scherzo for the same; overture to a comedy; string quartette, and many other pieces in MS., but the composition which made him famous was his opera "Colomba," based upon Mérimée's celebrated story. This work (of which the Libretto was written by Dr. Hueffer) was produced with very great success by the Carl Rosa Company at Drury Lane, in 1884. This was followed by "Jason," for a Bristol musical festival; "La Belle Dame sans merci," for the Philarmonic Society, and the "Rose of Sharon" for Norwich; two "Scottish Rhapsodies" for orchestra, and a violin concerto for Birmingham. His second opera, "The Troubadour," was produced in the summer of 1886; and at the Leeds Festival of 1886 his cantata "The Story of Sayid" was performed with success, and in 1890 "Ravenswood" was equally successful at the Lyceum. Among other works from his pen are "A Jubilee Ode" for the Crystal Palace, "The New Covenant" for the Glasgow Exhibition of 1888, a Twelfth Night "Overture," "The Cottar's Saturday Night," "The Dream of Jubal" for Liverpool, a "Pibroch" for Leeds, "Veni Creator Spiritus" for Birmingham. His latest published work is "Bethlehem," an oratorio. He was elected Principal of the Royal Academy of Music in Feb., 1888, in succession to the late Sir George Macfarren, and in 1893 Conductor of the Philarmonic Society.

McKENZIE, Marian. See SMITH-WILLIAMS, Mrs., A.R.A., singer.

McKINLAY, Mrs. John, née Antoinette Sterling, an eminent contralto, was born in the State of New York in 1850, and was educated as a vocalist under Abella, Marchesi, Pauline Viardot, and Manuel Garcia. She made her début at one of the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts in 1873, and at once became a general favourite for ballads and Scotch songs. Her rendering of "The Better Land," and "The Lost Chord," is celebrated. In 1875 she married Mr. John McKinlay.

McKINLEY, Hon. William, Jr., American statesman, was born at Niles, Ohio, Jan. 29, 1843. He was educated at the Public Schools and at the Poland (Ohio) Academy. In 1861, at the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted as a private in the Union Army, and before its close had risen to the rank of Captain and brevet Major. In 1867 he was admitted to the Bar and began its practice at Canton, Ohio. He was chosen prosecuting attorney of Stark Co., Ohio, in 1869. In 1871 he was elected a Representative in Congress, and was continuously re-elected until 1891. Mr. McKinley was Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that framed the Revenue Bill of 1890, and hence that measure has been known as "the McKinley tariff." Since 1891 he has been Governor of the State of Ohio.

McLACHLAN, Robert, F.R.S., was born in London, April 10, 1837, and educated principally at Ilford in Essex. His father, Hugh McLachlan, a native of Greenock, settled in London early in life, and was eminently successful as a chronometer maker. His mother, whose maiden name was Thompson, was from Northamptonshire. Robert, the youngest of five children, early showed a taste for natural history, which, as years sped on, concentrated itself upon botany, and subsequently upon entomology. A voyage to New South Wales and China in 1855-56, led to his collecting Australian plants; and on his return to England his desire to have them named led to his acquaintance with Robert Brown, then Keeper of the Botanical Department of the British Museum. Contact with this celebrated botanist had a distinct influence on his subsequent scientific career. In 1858 he was elected a Member of the Entomological Society of London, of which he became successively Secretary, Treasurer, and President, the latter in 1885-86. He was elected, in 1862, a Fellow of the Linnæan Society, and of the Royal Society in 1877, and is also a Fellow of the Zoological and of the Royal Horticultural Societies, and on the Honorary List of the New Zealand Institute, the Royal Society of Liège, the Entomological Societies of Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Sweden, Russia, &c. His attention has been directed to entomology in general, and he has, on several occasions, acted as scientific adviser to the Colonial Office. Repeated visits to the Continent have kept him in frequent intercourse with the entomologists of other countries. Amongst his general works perhaps the principal are the article "Insects," in the 9th edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and "The Entomological Results of the last Arctic Expedition," published in the Journal of the Linnean Society. As a specialist he has particularly attended to the Order Neuroptera, upon which his publications are very numerous, the principal separate work, a bulky 8vo, of upwards of 600 pages, with 76 plates, "Revision and Synopsis of the Trichoptera (or Caddis-flies) of the European Fauna, with Supplement," 1874-84, the first attempt which has been made at working out exhaustively a special group of insects on characters based on certain structural peculiarities, and which has served as a departure in the case of workers of other groups. In 1893 came out his "Catalogue of the Library of the Entomological Society." Mr. McLachlan has been a frequent contributor to most of the Natural History Journals during his time, and was for 17 consecutive years a contributor to the "Zoological Record," and has acted as an editor of the Entomologist's Monthly Magazine since its establishment in 1864.

MACLAGAN, Professor Sir Douglas, eldest son of the late David Maclagan, M.D., F.R.S.E., Physician to the Forces, and Surgeon in Ordinary to the Queen in Scotland, was born at Ayr, N.B., in 1812, and educated at the High School of Edinburgh, and subsequently at the University of Edinburgh. He became Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh, 1863, and has been President of both the Royal College of Surgeons and of Physicians (Edin.), an honour held only by his father; is P.R.S.E., and Deputy-Lieutenant of the City of Edinburgh. Sir D. Maclagan holds the following posts;—Professor of Medical Jurisprudence and Public Health in the University; Surgeon-General of the Royal Company of Archers, the Queen's Body-Guard for Scotland; Brigade-Surgeon, Lt.-Col. Firth Infantry Brigade (V.D.); Medical Adviser to H.M. Prisons Commissioners for Scotland; and Supervisor, on behalf of the Privy Council, of Pharmaceutical Examinations in Scotland. He is the author of "Nugæ Canoræ Medicæ," and of numerous papers on Medical Jurisprudence, and on Materia Medica and Therapeutics, in the medical journals. He was made Knight Bachelor in 1886.

MACLAGAN, The Right Hon. and Most Rev. William Dalrymple, D.D., Archbishop of York, Primate of England and Metropolitan, is brother of the foregoing, and was born at Edinburgh in 1826, and educated there. In early life he served in the army in India, and retired with the rank of lieutenant in 1852. Then he went through the ordinary university course at St. Peter's College, Cambridge (B.A. 1856; M.A. 1860; D.D. jure dignatus, 1878). He was ordained deacon in 1856, and priest in 1857. He served the curacies of St. Saviour, Paddington, and St. Stephen, Marylebone, till 1860, when he was appointed Secretary to the London Diocesan Church Building Society. In 1865 he was appointed Curate-in-charge of Enfield, and in 1869 Lord Chancellor Hatherley gave him the Rectory of St. Mary, Newington. When Newington was transferred to Rochester, the Bishop of London, in order to retain Mr. Maclagan in his diocese, promoted him to the vicarage of St. Mary Abbotts, Kensington, where he remained till 1878, when he was nominated by the Crown, on the recommendation of Lord Beaconsfield, to the Bishopric of Lichfield, which had become vacant by the death of Dr. Selwyn. He was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, June 24, 1878. In 1891 he was translated to York. The same year he was made an Hon. Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge. In Oct., 1894, he became President of the Church Sanitary Association, and of the Church Society for the Promotion of Kindness to Animals. Dr. Maclagan has published one or two detached sermons; a Charge delivered to the Clergy and Churchwardens of his Diocese in 1880; and several other addresses to the Clergy, and Parochial Papers. In conjunction with Dr. Archibald Weir, he edited "The Church and the Age: Essays on the Principles and present Position of the Anglican Church," 1870; and in 1891 published his "Pastoral Letters and Synodal Charges."

MACLURE, The Very Rev. Edward Craig, D.D., Dean of Manchester, eldest brother of Mr. J. W. Maclure, M.P., was educated at the Manchester Grammar School, where he was the exhibitioner of his year. He graduated B.A., M.A., and D.D. at Brasenose College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar and Hulmeian Exhibitioner. After occupying curacies at St. John's, Ladywood, Birmingham, and St. Pancras, Middlesex, he became vicar of Habergham Eaves, Burnley, in 1863, where he remained for fourteen years chairman of the Burnley School Board. On the death of Dr. Molesworth, in 1877, he was appointed vicar of Rochdale by the late Bishop of Manchester. In 1878 he became Honorary Canon of Manchester, and in 1879 Rural Dean. In Rochdale, and previously at Burnley, he has carried out important works of church restoration and extension. Canon Maclure has always undertaken a very considerable share of diocesan work, being honorary secretary of the Diocesan Conference and the Diocesan Board of Education. He is also honorary secretary to the Training College at Warrington. In 1888 he was one of the honorary secretaries of the Church Congress in Manchester, and was appointed Dean of Manchester in July, 1890. He is Chairman of the School Board, Manchester, and Governor of Owens College, the Grammar School, Children's Hospital, besides holding other public offices.

MACMAHON, Major Percy Alexander, R.A., F.R.S., is the second son of the late Brigadier General P. W. MacMahon, C.B., and was born at Sliema, in the island of Malta, Sept. 26, 1854. He was educated at the Proprietary School, Cheltenham, and afterwards at Cheltenham College, where he obtained the Junior Mathematical Scholarship in Jan., 1868. He entered the Royal Military Academy as a cadet in Jan., 1871, and subsequently in Sept., 1872, entered the Royal Artillery as a Lieutenant. He was promoted Captain in Oct., 1881, and, in March, 1882, was appointed Instructor of Mathematics at the Royal Military Academy. From that date he has been engaged in research in Pure Mathematics. Numerous memoirs from his pen, chiefly connected with Higher Algebra, have been published in the American Journal of Mathematics, the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, the Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society, the Messenger of Mathematics, and the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society; a member of the Council of the London Mathematical Society, and he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in June, 1890.

MACMILLAN, The Rev. Hugh, D.D., LL.D., F.R.S.E., F.S.A. Scot., born at Aberfeldy, Perthshire, Sept. 17, 1833, was educated at Breadalbane Academy and Edinburgh University. He was appointed Free Church Minister of Kirkmichael, Perthshire, in 1859, translated in 1864 to Free St. Peter's Church, Glasgow; and in 1878 to the Free West Church, Greenock, his present charge. He received the degree of LL.D. from the University of St. Andrews in February, 1871; was elected two months afterwards F.R.S.E. In April, 1879, the degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Edinburgh; and in 1883 he became an F.S.A. Dr. Macmillan is the author of "Bible Teachings in Nature," 1866, now in its 25th edition, translated into Danish, Swedish, German, and other Continental languages; "First Forms of Vegetation;" "Holidays on High Lands;" "The True Vine;" "The Ministry of Nature;" "The Garden and the City;" "Sunglints in the Wilderness;" "The Sabbath of the Fields," translated into Danish and Norwegian; "Our Lord's Three Raisings from the Dead;" "Two Worlds are Ours," translated into German; "The Marriage in Cana of Galilee;" "The Olive Leaf;" "Roman Mosaics; or, Studies in Rome and its Neighbourhood;" "The Riviera;" "The Mystery of Grace;" "The Gate Beautiful, and other Bible Teachings for the Times;" "My Comfort in Sorrow." Nearly all these books have passed through numerous editions, and have been popular in this country and America. Dr. Macmillan has published besides numerous contributions to quarterly reviews and religious and scientific periodicals. He delivered the "Thomson Lectures" on Science in the New College, Aberdeen, in 1886; and he was appointed to give the "Cunningham Lectures" on the Archæology of the Bible in the light of recent researches in the New College, Edinburgh, in 1894, and the "Gunning Lectures" on Science and Revelation, the same year, in the University of Edinburgh.

MACNAGHTEN, Edward, The Right Hon. Lord, Lord of Appeal, is the son of Sir Edward Macnaghten, 2nd Baronet, and was born in 1830. He was educated at Cambridge, where he was a Fellow of Trinity; called to the Bar 1857 made Q.C., 1880; Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, 1883; and appointed a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, 1887, in succession to Lord Blackburn. He was returned to Parliament as Conservative member for Antrim in 1880, and continued to sit for that constituency, or for North Antrim, until his appointment as Lord of Appeal.

MACRORIE, The Right Rev. William Kenneth, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Maritzburg, and Canon of Ely, born Feb. 8, 1831, in Liverpool, is the son of David Macrorie, M.D., a well-known physician in that town, and received his education at Winchester and at Brasenose College, Oxford (B.A., 1852, M.A., 1855). He held the Rectory of Wapping in the Diocese of London from 1861 to 1866, when he was appointed Vicar of Accrington, Lancashire, which preferment he held until his consecration as Bishop of Maritzburg, or Pietermaritzburg, Jan. 25, 1869. The ceremony was performed at Capetown, the consecrating prelate being the metropolitan, Dr. Robert Gray, Bishop of Capetown, assisted by the Bishops of Grahamstown, St. Helena, and the Orange Free State. A protest signed by 129 persons having been presented against Dr. Macrorie's consecration, on the ground that Maritzburg was in the See of Natal, which already had a legal Bishop (Colenso), the Metropolitan replied that it could not be accepted as a protest, the signers having no right to protest, but that he would receive it as "the expression of views of certain individuals." Bishop Macrorie was made a Canon of Ely in 1892 on his return from South Africa, and now resides at The College, Ely. He is the author of some charges and addresses.

McVAIL, Professor, was born in Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, October, 1845, and studied Medicine in Anderson's College, Glasgow. He is L.R.C.P. Edin., 1866; M.B. Glasgow, 1876; FF.P.S. Glasg., 1878; and was formerly House Surgeon in Alnwick Infirmary, late Professor of Physiology in Anderson's College, and subsequently Lecturer on the Practice of Medicine in the Western Extra-mural School, and Member of the General Medical Council of the United Kingdom. At the present time he is Extra Physician to the Glasgow Royal Infirmary, and Professor of Clinical Medicine in St. Mungo's College, Glasgow. Dr. McVail is the author of various valuable contributions to medical literature, principally with reference to diseases of the respiratory organs, e.g., "The Mechanism of Respiration in Normal and Abnormal Conditions" (Lancet, 1882); "The Wavy Respiratory Sound of Phthisis" (Brit. Med. Journ. 1882); "Pathology of Pulmonary Emphysema" (Ibid. 1884), &c. He is widely known in connexion with what may be termed academic politics. For the past decade he has been the acknowledged and energetic leader of the reform party in the University of Glasgow; and it is very largely to him, and to the movement in which he has taken so active a part, that the recent thoroughgoing Universities (Scotland) Act is due. The main plank of the reform platform has been the destruction of the practical monopoly of teaching, of examining, and of degree granting, enjoyed by the professors in the Scottish Universities, while the principal means urged for the accomplishment of this object have been an entire re-casting of the governing body of the Universities, the fuller recognition of extra-mural teaching, the prohibition of the degree-examination of candidates by their own teachers, and the affiliation of new colleges. Dr. McVail has also been the moving spirit in the erection and incorporation of St. Mungo's College, the medical faculty of which is in intimate connexion with the Royal Infirmary of Glasgow. On the board of directors of the College, he occupies a seat as one of the representatives chosen by the managers of the Royal Infirmary. He was elected in 1891 a member of the Court of Glasgow University, and in 1892 he was appointed by her Majesty to be Crown member for Scotland of the General Medical Council.

MACWHIRTER, John, R.A., was born in 1839, at Slateford, near Edinburgh, and educated at Peebles. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1863. In the following year he came to London, and was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy on Jan. 22, 1879, and R.A. in 1893. He was elected an Honorary Member of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1882; elected member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours, same year; exhibited in R.A. 1884, "The Windings of the Forth," "A Sermon by the Sea," and "Home of the Grizzly Bear;" 1885, "Track of a Hurricane," "Iona," "Loch Scavaig;" "The Three Witches," 1886. Mr. MacWhirter has painted "Loch Cornisk, Skye," 1867; "A great while ago the world began, with hey ho, the wind and the rain," 1871; "Caledonia," 1875; "The Lady of the Woods," 1876; "The Three Graces," 1878; "The Valley by the Sea," 1879; "The Lord of the Glen," 1880; "Sunday in the Highlands," and "Mountain Tops," 1881; "A Highland Auction" and "Ossian's Grave," 1882; "Corrie, Isle of Arran," "Sunset Fires," "Nature's Mirror," "A Highland Harvest," 1883; and "Edinburgh from Salisbury Crag," 1887. More recently he has exhibited "A Highland Storm," and a set of three pictures, "The Shamrock," "The Rose," and "The Thistle," 1893; and "Subsiding Flood," "Nature's Archway" (Diploma Work, deposited on his election as an Academician), and three other pictures in 1894.

MADAGASCAR, Queen of. See Ranavalo Manjaka III.

MADDEN, Thomas More, M.D., was born in the island of Cuba, where his father, the late Dr. R. R. Madden, F.R.C.S. Eng., then filled the office of British representative at the Havanna, in the International Commission for the Abolition of the Slave Trade, to which he was appointed by Lord Palmerston, and for which he had relinquished his practice as a London physician. Dr. Madden, senior, who died in 1886, was not only a prominent member of the anti-slavery party, but was also a prolific and well-known writer, having in the course of his long and varied life published more than forty volumes. Amongst these we may here mention his "Travels in the East," "History of the United Irishmen," "Life and Correspondence of Lady Blessington," "Biography of Savonarola," "The Infirmities of Genius," "History of Periodical Literature," &c., Dr. More Madden entered on medical studies at the age of fourteen, when he was apprenticed to the late Mr. Cusack, Surgeon-in-Ordinary to the Queen in Ireland. Shortly before the completion of pupilage, however, he was forced by symptoms of pulmonary disease to remove to a more genial climate, and the next few years he passed in the South of Spain, Italy, and France, completing his professional studies in Malaga and at the University of Montpellier. Having graduated as a physician, after he returned home in 1862 he became a member of the London College of Surgeons, and is also a Member of the Dublin College of Physicians, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. After a further period of health-travel in Southern Europe, Egypt, Africa, and Australia, he settled down in practice in Dublin. In 1868, having adopted obstetric and gynæcological practice as a specialism, Dr. More Madden was appointed Assistant Physician to the Rotunda Lying-in Hospital. On retirement from that office three years later, he was accorded the special thanks of the governors for "zealous and efficient discharge of his duties, and uniform kindness to the patients." In 1872 he received the French bronze cross, in recognition of services in connection with the organisation of the Irish Ambulance Corps employed during the Franco-Prussian War. In that year, being also Examiner in Obstetric Medicine in the Queen's University, he was appointed Physician to the newly-established Hospital for Sick Children, Dublin; and not long afterwards became Obstetric Physician and Gynæcologist to the Mater Misericordiæ Hospital. In addition to these appointments Dr. More Madden is Consultant to the National Lying-in Hospital, and other institutions. In 1878 he was elected Vice-President of the Dublin Obstetrical Society; in 1885 Vice-President of the British Gynæcological Society; in 1886 President of the Obstetric Section of the Academy of Medicine; and more recently he held the office of President of the Obstetric Section of the British Medical Association. He received the degree of M.D. (honoris causâ), from the Medical College of Galveston in 1890; and was accorded a Gold Medal by the Accociazione dei Benemeriti Italiani. In 1892 he was Hon. President of the first International Congress of Obstetrics and Gynæcology at Brussels. He has been also made Honorary or Corresponding Member or Fellow of many medical and scientific societies at home and abroad. Besides a vast number of contributions to medical journals, and several articles in Quain's "Dictionary of Medicine," and other standard books, Dr. More Madden's writings include the last edition of "The Dublin Practice of Midwifery;" "Change of Climate in Chronic Disease," 3rd edit. 1876; "Spas of Germany, France, and Italy," 1874; "Contributional Treatment of Chronic Uterine Disease," 1878; "Mental and Nervous Disorders Peculiar to Women," 1883; "Child Culture—Mental, Moral, and Physical," 3rd edit. 1890; "On Uterine Tumours," 1887; "Treatment of Dysmenŏrrhœa and Sterility," London, 1889. In 1893 he edited "A Manual of Obstetric and Gynæcological Nursing;" and in the same year was published in Philadelphia and in London his "Clinical Gynæcology—a Handbook of Diseases of Women," profusely illustrated. Finally, in the list of this writer's works may be mentioned: "The Health Resorts of Europe and Africa," 3rd edit. 1891. The latter work has been also republished in America. Dr. More Madden married the eldest daughter of the late Thomas McDonnell Caffrey, Esq., of Crosthwaite Park, Kingstown, by whom he has two sons and one daughter surviving. Of his sons the eldest, Dr. Richard R. More Madden, follows his father's profession, and the youngest, Captain T. M. D. Madden, is an officer in the Wicklow Artillery.

MAGNUS, Sir Philip, was born in London on Oct. 7, 1842. He was educated at University College School from 1854-58, and afterwards at University College, London. He graduated B.A. (1st class with honours in Philosophy and Physiology) in 1863, and B.Sc. (1st class with honours) in 1864 at the University of London. In 1865-66 he was a student at the University of Berlin. During his residence in Germany he made inquiries into the German system of education, visited schools, and studied methods of teaching. He embodied the results of these inquiries in a paper first read to the members of a College Society and afterwards published. This was his earliest essay on educational subjects. On his return to England he was busily engaged in tutorial, literary, and examining work, and held for some years the Professorship of Applied Mathematics at the Catholic University College. As a result of his lectures in Physics there appeared, in 1875, the first edition of his "Lessons in Elementary Mechanics" (Longmans, Green and Co.), which he re-wrote in 1890, and of which more than 35,000 copies have been sold. Later he was associated with Professor Carey Foster in editing for the same publishers a series of Science Class-books, to which he contributed the volume on "Hydrostatics and Pneumatics." Subsequently he became editor for Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench and Co. of a series of books on educational topics, called the "Education Library," to which in 1888 he contributed a volume consisting of reprints of essays and addresses delivered at various times, under the title of "Industrial Education." In 1880 Sir Philip (then Mr.) Magnus was appointed Organising Director and Secretary of the newly-formed Association of Livery Companies, known as the City and Guilds of London Institute for the Advancement of Technical Education. At that date little or nothing was known of technical education, and the wide development of that movement during recent years has followed pretty closely the lines laid down by those originally responsible for the organisation of the City Guilds Institute. In 1881 Mr. Magnus was a member of the Royal Commission on Technical Education. The Commission sat for three years, during which Mr. Magnus, together with his colleagues, devoted all the time he could spare from official duties to the inspection of schools and factories in France, Germany, Belgium, Italy, Holland, Switzerland, Austria, and England. In 1883 he was appointed Principal of the Finsbury Technical College, and delivered his inaugural address on Feb. 19 in that year. In 1884 he was Chairman of the Technical Section of the International Conference on Education held in London, and presided over by Lord Reay. In 1886 he received the honour of Knighthood, and in the autumn of that year he represented this country at an Educational Conference held in Bordeaux. In 1890 Sir Philip Magnus was co-opted a member of the School Board for London, but did not seek re-election when the Board dissolved. In the same year he was elected by Convocation on the Senate of the University of London, to the work of which he had devoted considerable time. Sir Philip Magnus is a member of the Physical and Mathematical Societies, a Life Governor of University College, London, Honorary Fellow of College of Preceptors, Member of Central Governing Body of the City Parochial Charities and of Technical Education Board of London County Council, Representative of University of London on Joint Board for University Extension, and member of the governing body of more than one of the London polytechnics and other educational institutes. Sir Philip Magnus was married in 1870 to Katie, only daughter of the late Alderman E. Emanuel, J.P., of Southsea.

MAGRATH, The Rev. John Richard, D.D., son of Nicholas Magrath, Surgeon, R.N., of Manor House, Guernsey, was born in Guernsey, Jan. 29, 1839, and educated at Elizabeth College, before proceeding to Oxford, where he gained a Scholarship at Oriel College. At the University he obtained the Stanhope Prize for an essay on "The Fall of the Republic of Florence." He graduated B.A., with a first class in 1860, was Johnson's Theological Scholar (Queen's College), 1861, and took his M.A. degree, 1863. From 1860-78 he was Fellow of Queen's College; Chaplain from 1867-78, and Bursar from 1874-78. He was Select Preacher before the University in 1867-69, and Senior Proctor in 1877-78. In 1878 he was elected Provost of Queen's College, and he took the degrees of B.D. and D.D. Dr. Magrath has published "A Plea for the Study of Theology in the University of Oxford," 1868; "Selections from Aristotle's Organon," 1868, 2nd edit. 1877; "Two Papers on University Reform," 1876. He was Chairman of the Oxford Local Board from 1882-87. He is a Justice of the Peace for Oxfordshire, Alderman of the City of Oxford, and Member of the Hebdomadal Council of the University since 1878. He married in 1887 Georgiana Isabella, daughter of the Ven. W. Jackson, D.D., formerly Archdeacon and Canon of Carlisle and Provost of Queen's College, Oxford, 1862-78.

MAHAFFY, Professor The Rev. John Pentland, D.D., was born on Feb. 26, 1839, at Chapponnaire, near Vevay, on the Lake of Geneva, in Switzerland, and was educated in Germany by his parents, till he entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1856. He was elected to a scholarship in 1858, and obtained two Senior Moderatorships (in Classics and in Philosophy) at his degree in 1859; gained his Fellowship by competition in 1864; was appointed Precentor of the Chapel, with control of the college choir in 1867; Professor of Ancient History, 1871 (which office he now holds); and Donnellan lecturer in 1873; he received the degree of D.D. in 1886. He was decorated with the Gold Cross of the Order of the Saviour by the King of Greece in 1877, and was elected an Honorary Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1882. He is a J.P. for the County of Dublin, and one of the Governors of the Irish National Gallery. Professor Mahaffy has published a translation on Kuno Fischer's "Commentary on Kant," 1866; "Twelve Lectures on Primitive Civilisation," 1868; "Prolegomena to Ancient History," 1871; "Kant's Critical Philosophy for English Readers," 1871; "Greek Social Life from Homer to Menander," 1874, 6th edit. 1889; "Greek Antiquities," 1876; "Rambles and Studies in Greece," 1876, 3rd edit., 1887; "Greek Education," 1879; "A History of Classical Greek Literature," 2 vols., 1880, 3rd edit., 1891; "A Report on the Irish Grammar Schools" (in the Royal Commission of 1880-81); "The Decay of Modern Preaching," 1882; "The Story of Alexander's Empire," 4th edit. 1890; "Greek Life and Thought from Alexander to the Roman Conquest," 1887; "The Art of Conversation," 2nd edit., 1889; "The Greek World under Roman Sway," and "Greek Pictures," 1890, and "Problems in Greek History," 1892; "A Sketch of the Life and Teaching of Descartes," and has edited the English edition of "Duruy's Roman History," 1883-86; besides many papers in periodicals and Reviews. Professor Mahaffy is Examiner and Lecturer in Trinity College, Dublin, in Classics, Philosophy, Music, and in Modern Languages.

MAITLAND, Agnes Catharine, Principal of Somerville College, Oxford, was born in London in 1849, and is the second daughter of David John Maitland (only son of Col. Maitland, H.E.I.C.S., of Chipperkyle, Galloway), and of Matilda Leathes Mortlock, daughter of Sir John Cheetham Mortlock, Commissioner in Excise. She resided two years at Moulton Rectory, Suffolk, and removed to Liverpool in 1855; was educated at home, and was appointed Examiner to Northern Union of Schools of Cookery, 1877; Visiting Examiner to Elementary Schools under Liverpool School of Cookery, 1881; Principal of Somerville Hall, Oxford, in succession to Miss M. Shaw-Lefevre, 1889. Miss Maitland is the author of "Elsie," a Lowland sketch, 1875; "A Woman's Victory," 1877; "Rhoda," 1885; and several volumes of stories for children, various cookery books, both for schools and other establishments; also "Cottage Lectures on Health," 1889. Miss Maitland has always taken great interest in questions affecting women, especially in the movement for their higher education; and has lectured on those and other subjects; and carried on successfully a considerable amount of philanthropic work. Somerville Hall has grown and extended its buildings considerably since Miss Maitland entered on her duties as Principal, and became a college in 1894.

MAJENDIE, Col. Vivian Dering, C.B., Chief Inspector of Explosives, began his military career in the Royal Artillery, and served with distinction at Sebastopol and at the capture of Lucknow. In 1861 he was appointed a Captain-Instructor of the Royal Laboratory at Woolwich, and in 1886 became Assistant Superintendent, a post whence he was promoted to be Chief Inspector of Explosives, Home Office, in 1870. It has fallen to his lot during the last quarter of a century to examine and report upon all kinds of bombs, infernal machines, and explosives found by the police in the pursuit of their avocation. In so doing he has run innumerable risks with the utmost coolness and bravery. It is said of him that he carried an india-rubber bag full of nitro-glycerine, found in the lodgings of a Fenian, in a four-wheel cab to Woolwich, and that on this occasion he warned the driver not to collide with any other vehicle on the way, else "he might hear no more about it." When the cloak-room at Victoria Station, London, had been blown up, he opened a clockwork infernal machine which was working at the time, and might have exploded and killed him at any moment.

MALABARI, Behramji Merwanji (né Mehta), an Indian poet, philanthropist, and national reformer, was born at Baroda, in 1853, and is the son of Dhanjibhai Mehta, a poor Parsi clerk, who was in the service of the Gaekwar of Baroda, and died when his son was only two years of age. The child was adopted by a maternal relative, named Merwanji Nanabhai Malabari, who subsequently became his stepfather, and whose name the orphan boy took, in lieu of Mehta. His mother, whose name was Bhikhibai, was a remarkable woman, possessing the rare qualities of irrepressible energy combined with great gentleness of disposition. Her largeness of heart and loving sympathy for the friendless procured for her the esteem of all who had the happiness to know her. She died when her son was eleven years of age. To the ennobling influence of her character her son owes many of the traits which have made him the philanthropist that he is—one who has sacrificed his fortune and devoted his life to the amelioration of the condition of the girls and women of India; and who, in the name of God and of humanity, has undertaken a noble crusade against infant marriages and enforced widowhood among the Hindu races. Malabari began life as a poet, and of his "Niti Vinod" it has been said that some of the poems will live as long as the vernacular of Gujarat endures. He has likewise written English verse which has elicited the admiration of Lord Tennyson, Professor Max Müller, and others. His poetical works are "Niti Vinod," "Wilson Virah," "Tarod-i-Ittefaq," and "The Indian Muse in an English Garb." He has also written "Gujarat and Gujaratis," which has passed into three editions, and is esteemed for its humorous and picturesque style. Mr. Malabari is editor and proprietor of the Indian Spectator, the leading native journal of India, which is known to have done most valuable service to the state and the country; and also of the Voice of India. He has written largely on important political and moral questions, and is the greatest social reformer in India, known to be in touch with high authorities and leading thinkers in this country. He visited England in 1890, and his "Appeal from the Daughters of India," with his eloquent pleadings on their behalf in the Times and other journals, created a profound impression in the highest circles. An influential committee was formed to aid his efforts. It consisted of former Secretaries of State for India, Viceroys, Governors, high legal and medical authorities, and prominent representatives of Church and State.

MALCOM KHAN, His Highness Prince Nazem ud Dowleh, was born at Ispahan in 1832, and is descended from a noble family of great antiquity in Persia. His father, Yacoub Khan, was one of the ablest and most learned statesmen of Persia. After receiving a careful training at home under his father's immediate care, Malcom Khan was, at the age of twelve, sent to Paris, where he successfully applied himself to the study of mathematics and other sciences, literature, &c., and more especially to the study of the institutions of Europe as compared with those of Persia. When he returned to Persia he was at once appointed Conseiller Intime, and A.D.C. to the Shah at Teheran. At the age of twenty-two Malcom Khan was sent to Europe with the special mission of elaborating and concluding treaties of friendship and commerce with the Governments of Europe and of the United States of America. On his return to Persia he ardently promoted the introduction of reforms in the Persian administration. To this end he had already written several pamphlets and books on literary, religious, and political subjects connected with Persia. As an author he introduced into the Persian language the methods and best style of European writers, and entirely transformed the diplomatic language of Persia. In 1860 the ideas of Prince Malcom Khan were found too advanced for immediate realisation; he therefore obtained leave of absence and went to take up his residence at Constantinople, where he married, in 1865, the Princess Dadian, by whom he has had four children, three daughters, and a son now being educated at Eton. In 1872 he was asked to draw up a comprehensive programme of reforms to be carried out in Persia; and was recalled to Teheran and occupied the post second to that of the Grand Vizier, in which position all the great home and foreign affairs of the State passed through his hands; and in consequence of many important reforms realised under his immediate direction, he was created Nazem ud Dowleh (Reformer of the Empire), a title which ranks among the highest in the land. One of his best successes was to decide the Shah to undertake his first journey to Europe in 1873. The Prince was accordingly sent on an extraordinary mission to all the Courts of Europe to prepare for the visit of his sovereign. After accompanying the Shah during his tour, Prince Malcom Khan, unwilling to return to Persia, remained in Europe as Persian Minister at the Courts of London, Vienna, Berlin, and other countries. During the Shah's second visit to Europe, 1878, Prince Malcom Khan was sent to the Congress of Berlin as Persian Plenipotentiary, where he succeeded in obtaining the restitution by Turkey of a disputed province, and on that occasion was raised to the rank of Highness. Prince Malcom Khan has constantly promoted various reforms; finding that the regeneration of Oriental countries could be effected only by radical religious transformations, and by a new system of public instruction, he devoted a large portion of his time and means to modify the Arabic alphabet. He recently published an edition of the celebrated "Gulistan" and other works in his new phonetic system of Arabic writing. It is generally considered that the improvement of the relations between Great Britain and Persia, and the success which attended the visit of the Shah to this country in 1889, are due mostly to Prince Malcom Khan. Upon his sovereign's return to Persia he resigned the Embassy of London, on account of personal differences with the acting Grand Vizier. In the early part of June, 1890, the Shah offered him the Persian Embassy at Rome, but his Highness declined the appointment on the plea of his health.

MALET, The Right Hon. Sir Edward Baldwin, G.C.M.G., G.C.B., P.C., born at the Hague, Oct. 10, 1837, is the son of Sir Alexander Malet, K.C.B., formerly British Minister at Frankfort. He was educated at Eton, and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and entered the diplomatic service in 1854 as attaché at Frankfort. In 1858 he was transferred to Brussels, to Rio de Janeiro in 1861, and to Washington in 1862, where he was made Second Secretary. In 1865 he served at Lisbon and Constantinople; was appointed to act temporarily as a supernumerary Second Secretary at Paris, in July, 1867, and was transferred to Paris in January, 1868. During the Commune he was Chargé des Archives; was made a C.B. July 10, 1871, and promoted to be Secretary of Legation at Pekin in August of the same year. From 1873 to 1875 he was acting Chargé d'Affaires at Athens, and then proceeded to Rome as Secretary of Embassy. In connection with the renewal of the Treaty of Commerce with Italy, Sir Edward Malet visited the manufacturing districts, and was appointed with Mr. Kennedy to confer with the Italian Commissioner in November, 1875, with respect to the renewal of the Treaty of August 6, 1863, between Great Britain and Italy. On April 29, 1878, he was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary at Constantinople in the absence of the Ambassador. The following year he went to Egypt as Agent-Consul-General, and a Minister Plenipotentiary in the diplomatic service. Was made a K.C.B. in 1881, and received the medal and Khedive's star for his services in Egypt in 1882. In August, 1883, he was promoted to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Brussels, and Ambassador at Berlin, Sept. 20, 1884. He is also at present accredited as Minister Plenipotentiary to Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Saxe-Weimer, Anhalt, Oldenburg, and Brunswick. He was British Plenipotentiary at the Congo Conference in 1884-85, and at the Samoa Conference in 1889. Sir Edward Malet was sworn a Privy Councillor in March, 1885, and in June of the same year was made a G.C.M.G., and G.C.B. in February, 1886. He married Lady Ermyntrude, daughter of the Duke of Bedford, in 1885.

MALLET, John William, M.D., LL.D., Ph.D., F.R.S., was born in Dublin, on Oct. 10, 1832; and is the son of Robert Mallet, C.E., F.R.S., and Cordelia Watson. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and the University of Göttingen; and is A.B. of the former and Ph.D. of the latter of these. He is Hon. M.D. of Medical Department, University of Louisiana; and LL.D. of William and Mary College, Virginia, and of the University of Mississippi, in the United States of America; chemist to the Geological Survey of Alabama, and Professor of Chemistry in the University of Alabama, and the Medical College of Alabama. During the Civil War of 1861-65 in America, he was First Lieutenant of Infantry, and subsequently Captain, Major, and Lieut.-Colonel of Artillery in the service of the Confederate States; and for the latter part of the war was in general charge of the Ordnance Laboratories of that service. He was for several years Professor of Chemistry in the Medical Department of the University of Louisiana, New Orleans, and has been such for more than twenty years past in the University of Virginia. He has also lectured on Chemistry in the John Hopkins University, Baltimore, in the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and in the State University of Texas. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society of London, Fellow of the Chemical Society of London; Member of the Chemical Society of Paris, and the German Chemical Society; Member and past-President of the American Chemical Society of New York; Member of the American Philosophical Society of Philadelphia; Hon. Fellow of the Medico-Chirurgical Society of Maryland, Baltimore; Member of the State Medical Society of Virginia; and Hon. Member of Scientific Societies in the cities of Mexico and Rio Janeiro. Jointly with his father he is author of the Earthquake Catalogue of the British Association, 1858; author of a work on the conditions of the cultivation of cotton, 1861; of reports as one of the Judges in the Chemical Department of the Philadelphia Exhibition of 1876, and of sundry Scientific Papers in the Philosophical Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, Journal of the Chemical Society, American Chemical Journal, American Journal of Science, Chemical News, Reports of the British Association, &c. Though long resident in the United States, he is, and has always been, a British subject.

MALLOCK, William Hurrell, son of the Rev. Roger Mallock, of Cockington Court, South Devon, was born in Devonshire in 1849. His mother is a daughter of the late Ven. R. Hurrell Froude, Archdeacon of Totnes, and sister of Mr. Anthony Froude, the historian. Mr. Mallock was educated by a private tutor, the Rev. W. B. Philpot, of Littlehampton, Sussex, and afterwards at Balliol College, Oxford, where in 1871 he gained the Newdigate Prize Poem, the subject being "The Isthmus of Suez." He took, at Oxford, a second-class in the final classical schools. Mr. Mallock has never entered any profession, though at one time he contemplated the diplomatic service. "The New Republic," most of which he wrote when he was at Oxford, was published in 1876, having first appeared in a fragmentary form in Belgravia. A year later he published "The New Paul and Virginia." In 1879 he published "Is Life Worth Living?" which first appeared in fragments in the Contemporary Review and the Nineteenth Century. In 1880 he brought out a small edition of "Poems," written, most of them, many years previously. The following year he published "A Romance of the Nineteenth Century;" and in 1882 "Social Equality: a Study in a Missing Science," the substance of which had already appeared in fragments in the Nineteenth Century and the Contemporary during the three previous years. In 1884 he published "Property and Progress," an examination of the theories of contemporary radical and socialistic agitation. This had been formerly published in the Quarterly Review in the shape of three essays. The year following he published "Atheism and the Value of Life, or Five Studies in Contemporary Literature," being criticisms of Professor Clifford, Lord Tennyson, George Eliot, the author of "Ecce Homo," and Herbert Spencer. In 1886 he published "The Old Order Changes," a novel which first appeared in the National Review. His most recent works are "A Human Document," a novel, and "In an Enchanted Island," 1892; "Labour and the Popular Welfare," an edition of the Letters and Remains of the twelfth Duke of Somerset, and a volume of "Verses," 1893. In 1889 he published his experiences in Cyprus, under the title, "In an Enchanted Island."

MANCHESTER, Bishop of. See MOORHOUSE, THE RIGHT REV. JAMES.

MANCHESTER, Dean of. See MACLURE, THE VERY REV. EDWARD CRAIG, M.A.

MANN, Horace, son of Thomas Mann, Esq., solicitor, and afterwards Chief Clerk in the General Register Office, was born Oct. 4, 1823, and educated privately and at Mercers' School, London. He entered at Lincoln's Inn in 1842, and was called to the Bar in 1847, practising on the Home Circuit until, in Oct. 1850, he was appointed Assistant Commissioner for conducting the Census of 1851. In that capacity he wrote special Reports on "Education" and "Religious Worship." In June, 1855, he was appointed Registrar, and in Dec. 1875, Secretary to the Civil Service Commission, from which post he retired, on pension, in 1887.

MANN, Tom, Labour Leader, was born at Foleshill, Warwickshire, on April 15, 1856. As a lad he worked in a mine till he was fourteen years of age, when his people removed to Birmingham. In 1877 he came to London, and became connected with the Amalgamated Engineers. He was employed at first at Messrs. Thorneycroft's, but in 1889, during the great Dock Strike of that year, devoted himself to labour organisation among the dock labourers, or "dockers" as they were familiarly known. He came forward again and took a prominent part as labour leader in the Hay's Wharf strike of January, 1890. He was elected President of the Dock, Wharf, Riverside, and General Labourers' Union of Great Britain, Ireland, and the Netherlands, but retired from his position in Sept., 1892. At the Bristol Conference of 1893 he accepted the position of Hon. President, being strongly urged to do so by the delegates present. He is now Honorary Secretary of the London Reform Union. Mr. Mann possesses that kind of eloquence which appeals to democratic gatherings, and he is therefore constantly called upon to speak at labour demonstrations. He also shares with Messrs. Burns and Tillett the reputation of being an admirable organiser of strikes and labour combinations of all kinds. It was rumoured in October, 1893, that he meant to take Orders in the Church of England, so as to "democratise" the forces of the Establishment. He, however, preferred eventually to become Secretary of the Independent Labour Party. In Sept., 1894, he endeavoured to obtain the Parliamentary Secretaryship of the Trades Union Congress, but was unsuccessful. He is the adopted Independent Labour Candidate for the Colne Valley.

MANNS, August, well known as a musical conductor, was born in 1825, at Stolzenburg, in Prussia. He showed such ability in conducting a military band as to be appointed in 1855 musical director at the Crystal Palace, where for nearly forty years he has wielded the baton at the famous winter and spring Saturday Concerts. During this long period he has done much to popularise certain French, German, and other foreign masters who would otherwise have remained comparatively unknown to the English music-loving public. In 1883 he became conductor to the Handel Festival, in succession to Sir Michael Costa, who retired owing to ill-health. He has conducted at all subsequent Handel Festivals.

MAPOTHER, Edward Dillon, born at Fairview, Dublin, Oct. 14, 1835, was educated in the Queen's University. Before he had attained his nineteenth year he was elected Demonstrator of Anatomy in the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland, and in 1867 became its Professor of Physiology, and afterwards filled the presidential chair in that institution. He was also President of the Statistical Society of Ireland. In 1888 he resigned his official position to practise in London, having purchased the residence of the eminent surgeon Quain, a house also interesting as having been the abode successively of three famous portrait painters, Francis Cotes, George Romney, and Sir M. A. Shee, P.R.A. Dr. Mapother's writings include "A Manual of Physiology," 3rd ed., 1882; "Lectures on Public Health," 2nd ed., 1867; "Lectures on Skin Diseases;" "The Body and its Health" (six editions). By this primer a knowledge of Physiology and Hygiene has been diffused in the National Schools of Ireland and of most other English-speaking countries. He also gained the Carmichael Prize (£200) for an essay on Medical Education.

MARCH, Francis Andrew, LL.D., L.H.D., fifth in descent from Hugh March of Newbury, 1620-1693, was born at Millbury, Massachusetts, Oct. 25, 1825. He graduated at Amherst College in 1845, and was tutor there 1847-49. He was admitted to the New York Bar in 1850. In 1852, broken in health, he engaged in teaching in Virginia, and in 1855 in Lafayette College, Easton, Pennsylvania, where, in 1857, he was chosen Professor of the English Language and Comparative Philology, a position which he still holds. He was a pioneer in the Philological Study of English Classics, this professorship being the first of its kind. Many of his pupils have held similar professorships in other colleges. He devoted himself specially to the Anglo-Saxon language, and ranks among the foremost scholars in that department. In 1873 he was chosen President of the American Philological Association, and he has been the most frequent contributor to its Proceedings. He is chairman of the Committee of that Association, appointed in 1874, which is working with a committee of the Philological Society (of England) for a scholarly and authoritative revision of English spelling, and has prepared addresses, articles, and reports on that subject for various associations and for the U. S. Bureau of Education, 1880-93. He was Chairman of the Commission on Amended Orthography established by the Legislature of Pennsylvania in 1887. He also took the direction, in 1879, of the work in America for the "New English Dictionary on Historical Principles" of the Philological Society (of England), now in publication by the University of Oxford. He has been engaged since 1890, with many other scholars, in preparing a comprehensive "Standard Dictionary," in which the words in amended spelling recommended by the Philological Societies are given vocabulary place, and the scientific alphabet of the Am. Phil. Ass. is used for the pronunciation, and special treatment is given to the technical terms of the modern sciences. Volume I., pp. 1060, appeared in December, 1893. In 1891 he was chosen President of the Modern Language Association of America, succeeding James Russell Lowell. He is President of the Spelling Reform Association, Councillor of the American Educational Association, Vice-President of the New Shakespere Society, honorary member of the Philological Society, London, L'Assoc. Fonetique des Professeurs de Lang. Vivantes, Paris, the American Philosophical Society, &c. Besides contributions to the Transactions of learned societies, to periodicals and cyclopædias, and pamphlet orations and addresses, he has published, "A Method of Philological Study of the English Language," 1865; "Parser and Analyser for Beginners," 1869; "A Comparative Grammar of Anglo-Saxon," 1870; "An Introduction to Anglo-Saxon," 1871; and "A B C Book," 1880. He also edited a volume of "Latin Hymns," and a series of "Christian Greek and Latin Writers," 1874-77. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Princeton College in 1870, and by Amherst College in 1871, and that of L.H.D. by Columbia College in 1887.

MARGOLIOUTH, Professor David Samuel, son of Ezechiel Margoliouth, was born in London in 1858, and educated at the Hackney Collegiate School; afterwards he was scholar of Winchester College, 1872-77; whence he became scholar of New College, Oxford, 1877-81, where he gained most of the University scholarships for Classics and Oriental languages. In 1881 he was elected Fellow of New College, where he became subsequently Lecturer, Tutor, and Librarian. In 1889 he was elected to the Laudian Professorship of Arabic at Oxford. In 1884 he published his critical edition of the "Agamemnon" of Æschylus; in 1887 "Analecta Orientalia ad Poeticam Aristoteleam;" in 1889 "The Commentary of Jephel ibn Ali on Daniel." He assisted Dr. Edersheim in his commentary on Ecclesiasticus in the "Speaker's Commentary," and in 1890 published "An Essay on the Place of Ecclesiasticus in Semitic Literature," with replies to criticisms upon it, in the Expositor for April and May of that year. He has also published various articles in learned journals, chiefly connected with Arabic literature.

MARIA CHRISTINA, Queen-Regent of Spain, born July 21, 1858, is the second daughter of the late Archduke Charles of Austria. She married, on Nov. 29, 1879, Alfonso XII., King of Spain, as his second wife, and upon his death on Nov. 25, 1885, she was appointed Regent. Her son, the present King, was born on May 17, 1886.

MARIOTTI, L. See GALLENGA, PROFESSOR A. C. N.

MARKBY, Sir William, K.C.I.E., D.C.L., fifth son of the Rev. William Henry Markby, B.D., rector of Duxford St. Peter, in the county of Cambridge, was educated at King Edward's School, Bury St. Edmunds, and Merton College, Oxford (B.A. 1850, M.A. 1853, D.C.L. 1879). He was called to the Bar, 1856, and became Recorder of Buckingham, 1865-66; Judge of the High Court at Calcutta, 1866-78; Vice-Chancellor of the University of Calcutta, 1887-88; and was appointed Reader of Indian Law in the University of Oxford, 1878, which office he still holds. He is a Fellow of All Souls and of Balliol Colleges, and Justice of the Peace and County Councillor for the county of Oxford. He has written "The Elements of Law" (Oxford: Clarendon Press). In 1892 he was appointed a Commissioner to inquire into the administration of justice in the Island of Trinidad.

MARKHAM, Clements Robert, C.B., F.R.S., F.S.A., son of the Rev. David F. Markham, Canon of Windsor, and of Catharine, daughter of Sir W. Milner, Bart., of Nunappleton, co. York, was born July 20, 1830, at Stillingfleet, near York, was educated at Westminster School, and entered the Navy in 1844. He was appointed Naval Cadet on board H.M.S. Collingwood, bearing the flag of Sir George Seymour, on the Pacific station, Midshipman in 1846, passed for a lieutenant in 1850, and left the Navy in 1851. He became a clerk in the Board of Control in 1855, Assistant Secretary in the India Office in 1867, and was in charge of the Geographical Department of the India Office from 1867 to 1877, when he retired. From 1862 to 1864 he was Private Secretary to Mr. T. G. Baring (now Earl of Northbrook). He was Secretary to the Hakluyt Society from 1858 to 1889, and Secretary to the Royal Geographical Society from 1863 to 1888. In 1888 he received the Society's Gold Medal. Mr. Markham served in the Arctic expedition in search of Sir John Franklin, in 1850-51; explored Peru and the forests of the Eastern Andes in 1852-54; introduced the cultivation of the cinchona plant from South America into India in 1860-61; visited Ceylon and India in 1865-66; served as Geographer to the Abyssinian expedition, and was present at the storming of Magdala in 1867-68; and was created a Companion of the Bath in 1871. He received a "Grand Prix" at the Paris Exhibition of 1867 for introducing cinchona cultivation into India. In 1874 he was created by the King of Portugal a Commendador of the Order of Christ; and by the Emperor of Brazil a Chevalier of the Order of the Rose. In 1890 he became President of the Hakluyt Society. In 1893 he was elected President of the Royal Geographical Society. He is the author of "Franklin's Footsteps," 1852; "Cuzco and Lima," 1856; "Travels in Peru and India," 1862; "A Quichua Grammar and Dictionary," 1863; "Spanish Irrigation," 1867; "A History of the Abyssinian Expedition," 1869; "A Life of the Great Lord Fairfax," 1870; "Ollanta, a Quichua Drama," 1871; "Memoir on the Indian Surveys," 1871 (2nd edit. 1878); "General Sketch of the History of Persia," 1873; "The Threshold of the Unknown Region," 1874 (four editions); "A Memoir of the Countess of Chinchon," 1875; "Missions to Tibet," 1877 (2nd edit. 1879); "Peruvian Bark," 1880; "Peru," 1880; "The War between Chili and Peru," 1879-81 (3rd edit. 1883); "The Fighting Veres," 1888; "Life of John Davis the Navigator," 1889; "Life of Columbus," 1892; "History of Peru," 1893. In 1893 the National Congress of Peru voted him a Gold Medal for his historical works. He has translated and edited several works for the Hakluyt Society, and has contributed numerous papers to the Royal Geographical Society's Journal. He also wrote the reports on the Moral and National Progress of India for 1871-72 and 1872-73; and the Peruvian chapters for Winsor's "History of America." Mr. Markham was editor of the Geographical Magazine, 1872-1878. In 1857 he married Murica, daughter of the Rev. J. H. Chichester, Rector of Arlington, co. Devon.

MARKS, Henry Stacy, R.A., was born in London, Sept. 13, 1829. He studied drawing at Leigh's Academy in Newman Street, and gained admission as a student to the Royal Academy in 1851. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in Jan., 1871; an Associate of the Water-Colour Society in March the same year; and a Royal Academician Dec. 19, 1878. Mr. Marks, whose forte is genre and quaint mediævalism, has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy since 1853. His principal pictures are "Toothache in the Middle Ages," 1856; "Dogberry's Charge to the Watch," 1859; "The Franciscan Sculptor," 1861; "Experimental Gunnery in the Middle Ages," 1868; "St. Francis preaching to the Birds," 1870; "Bookworm," 1871; "Ornithologist" and "What is it?" 1873; "Capital and Labour," 1874; "Jolly Post-Boys," 1875; "The Apothecary," 1876; "The Spider and the Fly," 1877; "Convocation," 1878; "Old Friends" and "Science in Measurement," 1879; "Author and Critics," 1881; "Jack Cade and Lord Say," 1882; "The Old Clock," "The Gentle Craft," and "The Professor," 1883; "Foolish Justices," 1884; "A Good Story" and "A Treatise on Parrots," 1885; "A Delicate Question," 1886; "Dominicans in Feathers" and "The Old Tortoise," 1887; "From Sunny Seas" and "The Hermit and Pelicans," 1888; and "News in the Village," 1889. In 1893-94 he exhibited several pictures, of which the latest is entitled "An Odd Volume." Mr. Marks has also executed several decorative works, both for private houses and public buildings. Among these may be named the proscenium friezes of the Gaiety Theatre, London, and of the Prince's Theatre, Manchester, the "Canterbury Pilgrims," and a series of 12 panels of birds for Eaton Hall, Chester, the seat of the Duke of Westminster, together with a series of four large lunettes of Storks, Flamingoes, &c., for the staircase of Mr. Stewart Hodgson's house in South Audley Street. In the autumn of 1889 Mr. Marks held an exhibition of "Birds" at the Fine Art Society's Rooms in New Bond Street, which attracted considerable public notice.

MARRIOTT, The Right Hon. Sir William Thackeray, Q.C., M.P., P.C., son of the late Mr. Christopher Marriott, of Crumpsall, near Manchester, was born in 1834, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He took orders and worked for some time as a curate, but feeling conscientious scruples he gave up his clerical career, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1864. He became a Queen's Counsel in 1877, and was made a Bencher of his Inn in 1879. He first entered Parliament as Liberal Member for Brighton in 1880; but in 1884, having differed from his party on the question of the clôture, he announced a change in his political opinions, and accepted the Chiltern Hundreds. He was re-elected as a Conservative, and returned as such in 1885 and again in 1886 and 1892. In Lord Salisbury's first administration (having been sworn of the Privy Council) he was Judge-Advocate-General, a post to which he was again appointed in 1886. Mr. Marriott at one time gained notoriety by his violent attacks on the Liberal Party, and in particular on Mr. Chamberlain. The truth of his charges was on the point of being decided in the Law Courts, but when Mr. Chamberlain espoused the Unionist cause the quarrel was made up. In 1888 he received the honour of knighthood, and in 1890 became Deputy Provincial Grand Master of the Sussex Freemasons.

MARRYAT, Florence (Mrs. Francis Lean), sixth daughter of the late Captain Frederick Marryat, R.N., C.B., F.R.S., was born at Brighton, in Sussex, and educated at home. She began to write in 1865, when her first novel, "Love's Conflict," was published, since which time she has written a large number of works, most of which have been republished in America and Germany and translated into French, German, Russian, Flemish, and Swedish. She was appointed editor of London Society in 1872, and has been a constant contributor to magazines and newspapers. She is known on the stage as an operatic singer and high-class comedy actress, and has been most successful as an entertainer and lecturer. She published, in 1886, "Tom Tiddler's Ground," and has since published "Gentleman and Courtier;" "The Crown of Shame;" "A Fatal Silence," 1891; "The Nobler Sex" and "How Like a Woman!" 1892; "Parson Jones," 1893; "A Bankrupt Heart" and "The Hampstead Mystery," 1894, besides a group of works dealing with spiritualism, in which she takes much interest. The last-named are "There is no Death," 1891, of which several editions have been published; and "The Risen Dead," a novel, 1893, and "Spirit World," 1894.

MARSDEN, Alexander, M.D., F.R.C.S., F.R.A.S., Consulting and Senior Surgeon to the Royal Free and Cancer Hospitals, London, is the son of the late William Marsden, M.D., founder of the above Institutions. He was born Sept. 22, 1832, and educated at Wimbledon School, and King's College, London. He entered the army in 1854, and served at the General Hospital, Scutari. Early in 1855 he was appointed Surgeon to the Ambulance Corps before Sebastopol, was engaged in several actions with the enemy, and remained on active service till the end of the Crimean war, when he received the Crimean and Turkish war medals. On his return home, in 1856, he had the honour of being presented to her Majesty the Queen by H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge. He was also appointed full Surgeon to the Royal Free and Cancer Hospitals, and subsequently Curator of the Museum and General Superintendent of the former institution. For fifteen years Dr. Marsden worked at these two hospitals, seeing as many as 300 patients a week at the Royal Free, and about 70 to 80 at the Cancer. During the last twelve years he has devoted himself to the latter institution only. He is the author of "A New and Successful Mode of treating Certain Forms of Cancer;" "Cancer Quacks and Cancer Curers;" "The Treatment of Cancer by Chian Turpentine and all other Methods;" "Our Present Means of Successfully Treating or Alleviating Cancer and Tumours of the Breast, Tongue, Lip," &c." He is editor of the 4th edition of the late Dr. W. Marsden's "Treatise on the Nature and Treatment of Cholera," and is the author of numerous other papers.

MARSH, Miss Catherine, is the youngest daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Marsh, Rector of Beddington, Surrey, who died in 1864. Her best known works are "English Hearts and English Hands," "Memorials of Captain Hedley Vicars," the "Life of the Rev. William Marsh, D.D.," a volume of songs and hymns, entitled, "Memory's Pictures," and "Light for the Line; or, the Story of Thomas Ward, a Railway Workman;" also "Brief Memories of the late Earl Cairns." Miss Marsh resided for some time at Beckenham, Kent, to the then rector of which parish her sister is married. During the visitation of cholera in 1866, whilst watching over sufferers from that disease in the wards of the London Hospital, she founded a Convalescent Hospital at Blackrock, Brighton, which has since been established as a permanent institution

MARSH, Professor Othniel Charles, Ph.D., LL.D., was born at Lockport, New York, Oct. 29, 1831. He graduated from Yale College in 1860, and from the Yale Scientific School in 1862, and from 1862 to 1865 studied in the Universities of Berlin, Heidelberg, and Breslau. On his return to America in 1866 he was chosen Professor of Palæontology in Yale College, a position he still retains. He has devoted himself to the investigation of extinct vertebrate animals, especially of the Rocky Mountain districts, and nearly every year since 1868 has organised and led a scientific expedition to those regions. In these explorations more than 1,000 new species of vertebrates have been discovered, many of which represent wholly new orders, and others not before discovered in America. Of these about 500 have already been described by Professor Marsh in papers, most of which have appeared in the American Journal of Science. These papers are more than 200 in number. Since 1876 he has been engaged in preparing a series of Reports, to be published by Government, giving full illustrated descriptions of his Western discoveries. The first of these, on the Odontornithes, or birds with teeth (34 plates), was issued in 1880, and a second memoir, on the Dinocerata (56 plates), appeared in 1884. A third volume, on the Sauropoda (90 plates), has lately been completed, and several others are in preparation. In 1878 Professor Marsh was President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and since 1883 has been President of the National Academy of Sciences, having recently been re-elected for six years. He is a Fellow of the Geological Society, Zoological Society, and of many other scientific bodies. In 1886 he received the honorary degree of Ph.D. from Heidelberg University, and that of LL.D. from Harvard University.

MARSHALL, Alfred, M.A. Camb., Hon. LL.D. Edin., born in 1842, was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, whence he obtained the title to a probationary fellowship at St. John's College, Oxford, awarded for classical attainments, but preferring mathematical studies he proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge. He was second Wrangler in 1865, and was elected Fellow of his College in the same year, and Lecturer on Moral Science in 1868. He held this position till 1877, when he was appointed Principal of University College, Bristol. In the same year he married Miss Paley, and in conjunction with her he published, in 1879, the "Economics of Industry." His health having broken down, he resigned his post in 1881 and went abroad. In 1885 he was appointed Lecturer on Political Economy at Balliol College, Oxford, and in 1884 he was made a Fellow of that College. In the same year he was elected to the Chair of Political Economy at his old university, vacant by Professor Fawcett's untimely death; and in the following year he was re-elected a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. In 1889 he delivered the opening address at the Cooperative Congress at Ipswich; and was President of Section F of the British Association for 1890. He was a member of the Royal Commission on Labour. He published the first volume of his "Principles of Economics" in 1890, and an abridgment of the second edition of that volume in 1892, under the title "Elements of Economics of Industry." A list of his minor writings may be found in the "Handwörterbuch der Staatswissenschaften" under his name.

MARSHALL, George William, LL.D., the eminent genealogist, was born at Ward End House, co. Warwick, April 19, 1839, only son of George Marshall, of Ward End, by Eliza Henshaw, youngest daughter of John Comberbach. He was educated at St. Peter's College, Radley, under private tuition, and at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1860, and as LL.D. in 1873. He became a Barrister of the Middle Temple in 1865, is a J.P. for co. Hereford, a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and an Honorary Member of several American Antiquarian Societies; and Rouge Croix Pursuivant of Arms from 1887. He has edited a number of genealogical works, among them: "The Visitations of Nottinghamshire," and "Le Neve's Knights," for the Harleian Society, of which he has been a member of the Council since its foundation; "A Handbook to the Ancient Courts of Probate;" and the first seven volumes of The Genealogist, which magazine was founded by him in 1875. He is probably best known as the compiler of "The Genealogist's Guide," a work which contains between seventy and eighty thousand references to pedigrees, and which has passed through three editions, the first having been issued in 1879.

MARSHALL, Herbert Menzies, youngest son of the late Mr. T. H. Marshall, Judge of the County Court, Leeds, was born at Leeds, Aug. 1, 1841, and educated at Westminster School, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1864 second class in the Natural Science Tripos. In the same year he went to Paris for the purpose of studying architecture, and entered the atelier of M. Questel, architect to the Château of Versailles. On his return from Paris, 1867, he became a student of the Royal Academy, and in the following year obtained there the Travelling Studentship in architecture. The result of travelling in Italy and of constant sketching under a bright sun was to weaken his eyesight so much that he was obliged to give up all work for two years, and especially any architectural drawing. This accident induced him to turn his attention to water-colour painting, as being less trying to the eyes, and in 1871 he exhibited his first drawing at the Dudley Gallery. In 1879 he was elected an Associate of the Society of Painters in Water-Colours, and became full member in 1882. Mr. Marshall has held two exhibitions, in 1886 and in 1890, at the galleries of the Fine Art Society, illustrating the scenery of London, his special aim being to show how beautiful and mysterious is the common life of the streets and on the river when seen under the atmospheric effects which are found only in London.

MARTIN, Lady, née Helen Faucit, born in 1819, a daughter of Mrs. Faucit, an actress of considerable repute, made her début in London, Jan. 5, 1836, at Covent Garden, in the character of Julia, in the "Hunchback." Miss Helen Faucit was the original representative of the heroines in Lord Lytton's "Lady of Lyons," "Money," "The Sea Captain," "Richelieu," and the "Duchess de la Vallière;" in Mr. Robert Browning's "Strafford," the "Blot on the Scutcheon," and "Colombe's Birthday;" in Mr. Westland Marston's "Patrician's Daughter," "The Heart and the World," and "Marie de Meranie;" in Mr. Troughton's "Nina Sforza;" and in many other plays. Her rendering of the Shakesperian characters Juliet, Beatrice, Constance, Imogen, Hermione, Cordelia, Desdemona, Portia, Rosalind, and Lady Macbeth, placed her in the first rank of the interpreters of our great dramatist. Miss Helen Faucit also obtained distinguished success in her representation of "Antigone," "Iphigenia in Aulis," and in "King René's Daughter," an adaptation from the Danish, by Mr. Theodore Martin, now Sir Theodore Martin, K.C.B., to whom she was married in 1851. This lady continued to appear on the stage at rare intervals after her marriage, chiefly for public or charitable purposes only, her last appearances being as Beatrice at Stratford-on-Avon, at the opening of the Memorial Theatre there in April, 1879, and at Manchester as Rosalind in October of that year, for the benefit of the widow of Mr. Charles Calvert, formerly manager of the Princess's Theatre, Manchester. Lady Martin is the authoress of a volume "On some of the Female Characters of Shakespeare," viz., Ophelia, Portia, Desdemona, Juliet, Imogen, Rosalind, and Beatrice, which has since passed through several editions.

MARTIN, John Biddulph, M.A., F.S.S., F.Z.S., banker, of Lombard Street, was born in 1841, and educated at Harrow, and afterwards proceeded to Exeter College, Oxford, where he took honours in Classical Moderations, and the degree of M.A. On leaving Oxford, in 1863, he entered the banking firm, the business of which has been carried on in Lombard Street, tradition says, from the reign of Edward the Fourth, in the latter part of the fifteenth century, and is therefore more than two hundred years older than the Bank of England. The Institute of Bankers elected him as their Treasurer; and he has, from time to time, read papers before the members of the Institute which are printed in the Journal of that body. These include papers on "Our Gold Coinage," "Bank Notes," "Seigneurage," "Movements of Coin and its Equivalents," &c. He has long made the question of the "wear and tear" of our gold coinage a matter of special study, and among other posts of honour which Mr. Martin has occupied has been that on the Coinage Committee appointed by the Institute of Bankers. He is a member of the Council of the Association of Country Bankers, foreign secretary of the Royal Statistical Society, to whose Journal he contributed papers on "Electoral Statistics," 1874 and 1884; and a paper on "The Effects of a Crisis on the Banking Interest," 1879. Mr. Martin has written also "The History of the Grasshopper," as his bank is called. He is an honorary member of the Statistical Society of Paris; Treasurer of the International Statistical Institute; a member of the Council of the Society of Arts, and of the British Association; and was President of the Statistical and Economic Section of the B. A. in 1886. He is a Life Governor of St. George's Hospital, and Treasurer of the Charing Cross and the Royal Orthopædic Hospitals, and also of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies; and has contributed to the periodical press various papers on matters of archæological interest. He married Mrs. Victoria C. Woodhull.

MARTIN, Sir Theodore, K.C.B., LL.D., son of the late James Martin, Esq., solicitor, of Edinburgh, was born there in 1816, and received his education at the High School, and at the University of his native city, of which he is an honorary LL.D. After practising as a solicitor in Edinburgh for several years, he came, in 1846, to London, where he established himself as a parliamentary agent. He first became known as an author by his contributions to Fraser's Magazine and Tait's Magazine, under the signature of "Bon Gaultier," and in conjunction with the late Professor Aytoun he composed the "Book of Ballads" which bears that pseudonym, and a volume of translations of the "Poems and Ballads of Goethe," 1858. He prepared a translation of the Danish poet Henrik Hertz's fine lyrical drama, "King René's Daughter," the principal character, Iolanthe, being played by Miss Helen Faucit, who in 1851 became Sir T. Martin's wife. His translations of Œhlenschläger's dramas, "Correggio," and "Aladdin or the Wonderful Lamp," published in 1854 and 1857, have made these masterpieces of the Danish poet's genius familiar to a large circle of English readers. His metrical translation of the "Odes of Horace" appeared in 1860, and was immediately republished in the United States. It was followed, ten years later, by a critical essay on Horace's Life and Writings, in the "Ancient Classics for English Readers." In 1882 Sir T. Martin completed his Horatian labours in a translation of Horace's whole works, with a life and notes, in 2 vols. His poetical translation of Catullus (1861, 2nd edit., 1875), was followed by a privately printed volume of "Poems, Original and Translated," 1863, a translation of the "Vita Nuova" of Dante, and a translation of the first part of Goethe's "Faust." In 1866 he published a metrical version of the Second Part of "Faust." In 1867 he published a memoir of Professor Aytoun. It was while he was engaged on this biography that he was requested by the Queen to write the "Life of His Royal Highness the Prince Consort," the first volume of which appeared in 1874. His metrical version of Heine's "Poems and Ballads" appeared in 1878. The fifth and concluding volume of the "Life of the Prince Consort" was published on March 15, 1880, and five days afterwards the author received from the hands of the Queen the honour of knighthood, and was invested with the insignia of a Knight Commander of the Bath. On Nov. 25, 1880, he was elected Rector of the University of St. Andrews. In 1883 he published a "Life of Lord Lyndhurst," founded on papers furnished by his lordship's widow and family. His last published works are "The Song of the Bell, and other Translations from Schiller, Goethe, Uhland and others," 1889; and "Madonna Pia, and other Dramas," 1894. He is a J.P. for Denbighshire, where he has considerable property, and he resides at Bryntisilio, near Llangollen, during the summer months.

MARTINEAU, James, D.D., LL.D., D.C.L., younger brother of the late Miss Harriet Martineau, was born at Norwich, April 21, 1805, and educated at the Norwich Grammar School, Dr. Lant Carpenter's School at Bristol, and Manchester New College, York. He was appointed second minister of Eustace Street Presbyterian Meeting House, Dublin, in 1828; second minister of Paradise Street Chapel, Liverpool, in 1832; Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy in Manchester New College, in 1840; removed to London, 1857; was minister of Little Portland Street Chapel, 1859-72; and was appointed Principal of Manchester New College, London, in 1869. Dr. Martineau is the author of "The Rationale of Religious Inquiry," published 1836; "Lectures in the Liverpool Controversy," 1839; "Hymns for the Christian Church and Home," 1840; "Endeavours after the Christian Life," vol. i., 1843; vol. ii., 1847; "Miscellanies," 1852; "Studies of Christianity," 1858; "Essays Philosophical and Theological," 2 vols., 1868; "Hymns of Praise and Prayer," 1874; and "Religion as affected by Modern Materialism," an address delivered in Manchester New College, London, 1874; "Modern Materialism: its Attitude towards Theology," 1876; "Ideal Substitutes for God considered," 1879; "The Relation between Ethics and Religion," 1881; "Hours of Thought on Sacred Things," 2 vols., 1876-80; "A Study of Spinoza," 1882; "Types of Ethical Theory," 2 vols., 1885; "A Study of Religion," 2 vols., 1888; "The Seat of Authority in Religion," and "Essays, Reviews, and Addresses," 1890. He was a constant contributor to the National Review, of which he was one of the founders. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass., U.S.A., in 1872; that of Doctor of Theology by the University of Leyden, in 1875; and that of D.D. by the University of Edinburgh in 1884; that of D.C.L. by the University of Oxford in 1888; and of Litt.D. by the University of Dublin, in 1892.

MARTINEZ CAMPOS, Arsenio, a Spanish general and statesman, born in 1834, the son of a brigadier-general, left the Staff School at Madrid with the rank of lieutenant, went through the campaign in Morocco, in 1859, as a member of the staff of the commander-in-chief, O'Donnell, and was there promoted to the rank of major. In 1864 he joined the army of Cuba as colonel, and he remained six years in that island. On his return to Spain in 1870 he was sent, with the title of brigadier-general, to join the Army of the North, which was engaged in repelling the Carlist rebellion. After the abdication of King Amadeo he declined to give in his adhesion to the new order of things, and made no secret of his antipathy to the Republic. He was put on the retired list in 1873, and shortly afterwards was confined in a fortress as a conspirator. From his prison he addressed to General Zabala, Minister of War, the well-known letter in which he requested permission to go and fight, as a private, under the orders of General Concha, the Carlist forces in Navarre and the Basque provinces. This letter obtained for him his liberty, and he was sent to the Army of the North, in April, 1874, to command a division of the 3rd Corps. He took part in the engagements of Las Munecas and Galdames, which led to the siege of Bilbao being raised, and he was the first to enter the liberated city on May 1, 1874. When General Concha reorganized the Liberal army, Martinez Campos was appointed general in command of the 3rd Corps. He fought at the head of his troops, on the 25th, the 26th, and particularly on the 27th of June, the day on which the Commander-in-Chief, General Concha, was killed in the attack on Monte Moru, near Estella. General Martinez Campos, besieged at Zurugay, on the same day, by the main body of the Carlists, opened a passage through the enemy's ranks, at the head of a column which numbered barely 1,800 men, and went to rejoin, at Murillo, the head-quarters, where he was able to organize the retreat of the army on Tafalla. Returning to Madrid, he continued to conspire almost overtly in favour of Don Alfonso, whilst Marshal Serrano, chief of the executive power, was operating against the Carlists. In conjunction with General Jovellar he made the military pronunciamiento of Sagonto, which gave the throne of Spain to Alfonso XII. The new Government sent him into Catalonia, as Captain-General and Commander-in-Chief of that military district. In less than a month he pacified the country, put down the Carlist bands, and took the command of the Army of the North. He brought the civil war to a close by the defeat of Don Carlos at Pena de Plata, in March, 1876. The high dignity of Captain-General of the Army, which is equivalent to that of a Marshal of France, was the recompense for his signal services. A year afterwards he was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the army in Cuba, which the rebels had held in check for seven years. Under his leadership the Spaniards were uniformly victorious, but neither these triumphs nor the strategical talents of the Commander-in-Chief would have succeeded in bringing about the complete pacification of the island if the recognition of the political rights of the Cubans and new Liberal concessions had not satisfied the demands of the insurgents. On his return to Spain, General Martinez Campos accepted the portfolio of War, and the Presidency of the Council (March 7, 1879), and endeavoured to procure the fulfilment of the promises made to the Cubans; but not obtaining the support of the Cortes, he resigned, and was succeeded by Señor Cánovas del Castillo (Dec. 9, 1879). Early in 1881 the Conservative Government of Señor Cánovas del Castillo was overthrown, and a coalition between Señor Sagasta and General Martinez Campos came into power, and retained it till Oct., 1883, when it resigned in consequence of being unable to obtain from the French Government a satisfactory apology for the insult offered to King Alfonso by the Paris mob on his visit to Paris. In March, 1883, he warmly opposed the project for a Pyrenean railroad, on the ground that it would lay Spain open to French attacks. On Jan. 18, 1884, he received the command of the Spanish Army of the North, and resigned it in Feb., 1885. The following December he was elected President of the Senate. In 1888 he was appointed Captain-General of New Castille.

MASCAGNI, Pietro, composer, was born at Leghorn. He was the son of a baker, but his father intended him to adopt a learned profession. He, however, when a child, showed such a taste for music and musical composition, that his father was at length induced to send him to the Conservatoire at Milan. Here he failed to agree with his teachers, and joined a travelling opera company. In 1886 he married and settled in Cerignola, as a music-master. He had been a composer from early youth upwards, and his first important opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana," was written here, and soon made him famous in every European capital. It was written in competition for a prize offered for a one-act opera. In many European cities he has personally conducted the opera, which has been performed in the principal European languages and in Russian. His later operas have been "L'Amico Fritz," founded on "L'Ami Fritz," of Messrs. Erckmann and Chatrian, "I Rantzau," also founded on a work by the same authors, and "Ratcliffe." "I Rantzau" was performed for the first time at Florence in November, 1892, and, in June, 1893, it was put on the stage in London, when Signor Mascagni himself conducted. In the following month he conducted selections from his compositions before the Queen at Windsor.

MASPERO, Gaston, a French Egyptologist, was born at Paris, June 24, 1846, and after a brilliant course of study at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand, he entered the Ecole Normale in 1865. Devoted early to erudite studies, he was appointed teacher and assistant professor of Egyptian archæology and philosophy at the College of France, Feb. 4, 1874. He is the author of "Essai sur l'Inscription Dédicatoire au Temple d'Abydos," 1869; "Une Enquête Judiciaire à Thèbes au Temps de la XX^e^. Dynastie," 1872; "De Carchemis oppidi situ et Historiâ Antiquissimâ," 1873; "Histoire Ancienne des Peuples de l'Orient," 1875; "De Quelques Navigations des Egyptiens sur les Côtes de la Mer Erythrée," 1879; "Les Contes Populaires de l'Égypte Ancienne," 1881; "Les Mastaba de l'Ancien Empire," 1882; "Guide du Visiteur au Musée de Boulaq," 1883; "The Royal Mummies of Deir-el-Bahari," 1886; "Egyptian Archæology," 1887; and a large number of important memoirs in the Revue Archæologique and kindred periodicals. He has also edited works left in manuscript by Mariette Bey, and is directing the publication of the "Bibliothèque Egyptiologique," which contains the scattered and hitherto unpublished works of French Egyptologists. Among his recent publications should be mentioned "Etudes de Mythologie et Archéologie Egyptienne." On the death of Mariette Bey, Prof. Maspero was appointed Keeper of the Boulak Museum, and till his retirement in June, 1886, he did much to promote archæological discovery in Egypt. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour, Jan. 15, 1879, and promoted officer in 1882. He was elected a member of the Academy of Inscriptions in 1883.

MASSENET, Jules Emile Frédéric, a French composer, born at Montaud, May 12, 1842, is the youngest of twenty-one children of an engineer officer of the First Empire, who established himself as a blacksmith near Saint Etienne. He studied at the Paris Conservatoire under Laurent, Reber, Savard, and Ambroise Thomas, obtained the first prize for pianoforte in 1859, the first for fugue, and the Prix de Rome for his cantata, "David Rizzio," in 1863. He travelled through Italy and Germany, and made his début at the Opéra Comique, Paris, in 1868, with "La Grand-Tante." In 1878 he was appointed Professor of Composition at the Conservatoire, and elected a member of the Académie des Beaux Arts. He is the author of "Poème d'Avril," 1868; "Suite d'Orchestre," played at the Pasdeloup Concerts, 1868; "Poème du Souvenir," 1860; "Don César de Bazan," produced at the Opéra Comique in 1873; "Les Erinnyes," a tragedy by Leconte de Lisle, and "Marie-Madeleine," a sacred drama produced at the Odéon the same year; "Eve," an oratorio performed under the direction of M. Lamoureux at his concerts of the Sacred Harmony, 1874; "Le Roi de Lahore," an opera, 1877; "The Virgin," a sacred legend performed at the Historical Concerts of the Académie Nationale de Musique, 1880; "Herodiade," an opera first performed at the "Monnaie" of Brussels, 1881, and in Paris at the Italian Opera in 1883; "Manon," an opéra comique, with the late Mme. Heilbronn in the principal part, 1883; "Le Cid," an opera, from Corneille's tragedy, 1885; "Esclarmonde," a romantic opera which had a run of 100 representations without interruption, 1889; and a large number of melodies which are now popular, pieces for the pianoforte, and a series of seven "Suites d'Orchestre," amongst which: "Scènes Pittoresques," "Scènes Alsaciennes," "Scènes Hongroises," "Scènes de féerie," and "Scènes Napolitaines," and two cantatas: "Narcisse" and "Biblis." He has written also some entr'acts and stage music for Sardou's dramas "Theodora" and the "Crocodile." "Le Mage," a new opera of his, the words by Jean Richepin, was produced at the Grand-Opéra in Paris; and a drame lyrique, adapted from Goethe's "Werther," was first performed two years ago.

MASSEY, Gerald, was born of very poor parents near Tring, in Hertfordshire, May 29, 1828, and received a scanty education at the British and National Schools. At eight years of age he was working twelve hours a day in a silk manufactory. At the age of fifteen he went to London and found work as an errand-boy, and at twenty-one he became editor of the Spirit of Freedom. The following year he was one of the secretaries of the "Christian Socialists," and a personal friend of Charles Kingsley and F. D. Maurice. In 1854 he published "The Ballad of Babe Christabel, and other Poems," which entered its fifth edition at the end of the year. He then joined the staff of the Athenæum, and for ten years wrote a considerable number of its reviews. For several years he wrote on literary subjects in the Quarterly Review. As early as 1852 Mr. Massey began to take a great interest in mesmerism, spiritualism, and kindred subjects, and he has since delivered many lectures on such matters, both in London and abroad. He has lectured all through America, Australia, and the Colonies, twice from New York to San Francisco, where he is better known and more highly thought of than in England. Of late years he has written very little poetry, but has recently published his "Collected Poems," in 2 vols., under the title of "My Lyrical Life." He has also re-written his work on the "Secret Drama of Shakspeare's Sonnets." His principal works are "Voices of Freedom and Lyrics of Love," 1850; "The Ballad of Babe Christabel," etc., 1854; "War Waits," 1855; "Craigcrook Castle," 1856; "Havelock's March," etc,, 1860; "The Secret Drama of Shakspeare's Sonnets," 1864-88; "A Tale of Eternity, and Other Poems," 1869; "Concerning Spiritualism," 1872; "A Book of the Beginnings," 1882; "The Natural Genesis," 1884; "My Lyrical Life," 1889, besides numerous contributions to English and American periodical literature.

MASSON, David, Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in the University of Edinburgh, was born Dec. 2, 1822, in Aberdeen, and educated at Marischal College in that city, and at the University of Edinburgh. He began his literary career at the age of nineteen, as editor of a Scotch provincial newspaper, and repairing, in 1844, to London, where he remained about a year, contributed to Fraser's Magazine and other periodicals. He established himself in Edinburgh for two or three years as a writer for periodical publications, besides having special engagements with the Messrs. Chambers, but returned to London in 1847, where he resided for eighteen years, and was appointed to the Chair of English Language and Literature at University College, London, on the resignation of the late Professor Clough in 1852. He retired from his post in Oct., 1865, having been appointed Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in the University of Edinburgh. He contributed numerous articles to the Quarterly, National, British Quarterly, and North British Reviews, to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and the "English Cyclopædia," and in 1859 became editor of Macmillan's Magazine, which he conducted for a good many years, and to which he has largely contributed. His papers on Carlyle's "Latter-Day Pamphlets," "Dickens and Thackeray," "Rabelais," "Literature and the Labour Question," "Pre-Raphaelism in Art and Literature," "Theories of Poetry," "Shakspere and Goethe," "Hugh Miller," and "De Quincey and Prose-writing," are the best known. His "Essays, Biographical and Critical: chiefly on English Poets," appeared in 1856, and have been reprinted, with additions, in 3 vols., 1874, one being entitled specially, "Chatterton: a Story of the year 1770;" his "Life of John Milton, narrated in connection with the Political, Ecclesiastical, and Literary History of his Time," vol. i. was published in 1858, vol. ii., in 1871, vol. iii. in 1873, and vols. iv. and v. in 1878; "British Novelists and their Styles: a Critical Sketch of the History of British Prose Fiction," in 1859; "Recent British Philosophy; a Review with Criticism, including some Remarks on Mr. Mill's Answer to Sir W. Hamilton," being an explanation of some lectures delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain, in 1865. Among his most recent publications are an edition of Milton's Poetical Works, called "The Cambridge Edition," in three volumes, with introductions, notes, and an essay on Milton's English, and a smaller edition of the same, called "The Golden Treasury Edition," in two volumes, with introductions, notes, and a memoir. Both appeared in 1874. In 1873 he published a biography of the poet Drummond, entitled, "Drummond of Hawthornden: the Story of his Life and Writings;" in 1874 "The Three Devils: Luther's, Milton's, and Goethe's;" and in 1878 "De Quincey," in the "English Men of Letters" Series. His edition of "Milton," published in 1877, is justly esteemed. Among his most recent works should be mentioned "Edinburgh Sketches and Memoirs," 1892; and his contribution to "In the Footsteps of the Poets," 1893.

MASTERS, Maxwell Tylden, M.D., F.R.S., born in 1833 at Canterbury, was educated at King's College, London, after which he practised medicine for some years. He held the Lectureship on botany at St. George's Hospital from 1865 to 1868, and became principal editor of the Gardener's Chronicle in 1865. Dr. Masters has been Botanical Examiner in the University of London. He is a Chevalier of the Order of Leopold; a Fellow of the Royal, Linnæan, and Royal Horticultural Societies; an Associate of King's College; an honorary or corresponding member of the principal Horticultural Societies of the Continent and America, and of the Royal Society of Sciences of Liège, the Society of Natural Sciences of Cherbourg, the Botanical Society of France, and correspondent of the French Institute (Académie des Sciences), and of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. His works consist of a treatise on "Vegetable Teratology," which has been translated into German (with additions by the author), of "Botany for Beginners" and of "Plant Life" (of both which French, Dutch and Russian translations have been made), and of numerous monographs and papers on subjects relating to botany, vegetable physiology, and horticulture. He is a frequent contributor to scientific periodicals, and has taken part in Oliver's "Flora of Tropical Africa," Hooker's "Flora of British India," Von Martius's "Flora Brasiliensis," De Candolle's "Prodromus," the "Encyclopædia Britannica," the "Pinetum Britannicum," and other works, besides preparing, either alone or in collaboration with Messrs. G. Murray and Arthur Bennett, the second, third, and fourth editions of Henfrey's "Elementary Course of Botany."

MATHERS, Helen Buckingham. See REEVES, Mrs. HENRY.

MATHESON, George, D.D., F.R.S.E., was born at Glasgow, March 27, 1842, and educated at Glasgow Academy, and the University of Glasgow. He lost his sight in youth; but, in spite of this, entered the university in preparation for the ministry, and took a leading place in classics, philosophy, and theology; carried off the first prize in the senior division of logic, and the prize essay for the best specimen of Socratic dialogue in 1860; took the first prize for moral philosophy in 1861; graduated M.A. with honours in philosophy in 1862, and B.D. in 1866. He was licensed to the ministry of the Church of Scotland in 1866; appointed assistant to Dr. Macduff of Sandyford Church, Glasgow, in 1867; chosen by popular election parish minister of Innellan in 1868; received in 1880 a unanimous call to succeed Dr. Cumming, of London, but declined it; and was appointed Baird Lecturer for 1881, and one of the St. Giles' lecturers for 1882. In 1886 he was translated to the parish of St. Bernard's, Edinburgh. In 1879 the University of Edinburgh conferred on him the degree of D.D. In 1890 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. In 1874 he published "Aids to the Study of German Theology;" in 1877, "Growth of the Spirit of Christianity," 2 vols.; in 1881, "Natural Elements of Revealed Theology" (Baird lecture); in 1882, "Confucianism" (in the St. Giles' lecture —"Faiths of the World"); and a devotional volume, "My Aspirations." In 1884, "Moments on the Mount," also a devotional volume, and in the same year a paper on "The Religious Bearings of the Doctrine of Evolution" (delivered at the Pan-Presbyterian Council, Belfast, and published in its Transactions). In 1885, "Can the Old Faith Live with the New," or the problem of evolution and revelation. In 1887, "The Psalmist and the Scientist," or the modern value of the religious sentiment. In 1888, "Landmarks of New Testament Morality;" and another devotional volume, entitled "Voices of the Spirit." In 1890, a volume of hymns, entitled "Sacred Songs." In 1891, "Spiritual Development of St. Paul." In 1892, "Distinctive Messages of the old Religion." Dr. Matheson has contributed to the Contemporary, British Quarterly, Modern Review, Princeton Review, Interpreter, Expositor, Good Words, and Sunday Magazine. He has also contributed to the revised edition of the "Scottish Hymnal."

MATHEW, The Hon. Sir James Charles, LL.D., Judge of the High Court of Justice, is son of Mr. Charles Mathew, of Lehena House, Cork, by Mary, daughter of Mr. James Hackett, of Cork. He was born at Lehena House, July 10, 1830, and received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, where he was senior moderator and gold medallist in 1860. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Hilary Term, 1854, having in the previous November obtained an open studentship. Mr. Mathew was a Member of the South-Eastern Circuit, when in March, 1881, he was appointed by the Crown a Judge in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice. Shortly before that time he had acted as a member of the Committee on the subject of Costs of Legal Proceedings. His appointment to the Bench is one of the few instances of a member of the Junior Bar being elevated. He was knighted on his promotion; and was created LL.D., honoris causâ, by the University of Dublin. He was the third Catholic Judge appointed in England since Catholic Emancipation, the two previous ones being Mr. Justice Shee and Mr. Justice Hayes. In 1892 Sir James Mathew presided, at Dublin, over the Evicted Tenants' Commission, which began its sittings on Nov. 8. Against the proceedings of this Commission Mr. E. Carson, Q.C., as representative of Lord Clanricarde, continuously protested, but was ordered to withdraw by Sir James, who refused to hear counsel or to adopt methods of legal procedure in his examination of witnesses. In this course he was generally supported by the opinion of lawyers. He married, in 1861, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the Rev. Edwin Biron, vicar of Lympne, Kent.

MATHILDE (Princess), Mathilde Lætitia Wilhelmine Bonaparte, daughter of the ex-King Jerome and Princess Catherine of Wurtemberg, and cousin to Napoleon III., was born at Trieste, May 27, 1820, and married at Florence, Oct. 10, 1841, to the Russian Prince Anatole Demidoff. This union was not happy, and in 1845 they separated by mutual consent, her husband being compelled by the Czar to allow the Princess an annuity of 200,000 roubles. From 1849 till the marriage of Napoleon III. she did the honours at the palace of the President, and on the re-establishment of the Empire was comprised amongst the members of the imperial family of France, and received the title of Highness. After the war she again took up her residence in Paris, and continued giving the artistic and literary receptions which have made her salon famous. The Princess, who was a pupil of M. Giraud, is an accomplished artist, and has exhibited some of her pictures upon several occasions at the Salon de Peinture. She obtained honourable mention in 1861.

MATTHEWS, The Right Hon. Henry, Q.C., M.P., ex-Home Secretary, was born in 1826, in Ceylon, where his father was a Puisne Judge. After graduating at the Universities of Paris and London, he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, after having been admitted to the Inn at the early age of eighteen. In 1868 he took silk, and from 1872-76 acted as Examiner in Common Law to the Council of Legal Education. He has been engaged in several of the great cases of his time, notably the Home case, the Tichborne case, and the Crawford case. He contested the borough of Dungarvan three times unsuccessfully, but sat for it from 1868 to 1874. At the general election of 1886 he was returned for East Birmingham, being the first Conservative who ever sat for Birmingham. On the formation of Lord Salisbury's second Ministry, Mr. Matthews was appointed Home Secretary; but his actions as such raised a storm of adverse criticism in the Opposition press. In 1892 he was again returned for East Birmingham.

MAUDSLEY, Professor Henry, M.D., was born near Giggleswick, Settle, Yorkshire, Feb. 5, 1835, and educated at Giggleswick School and University College, London. He studied medicine at University College, and graduated M.D.

at the University of London in 1857. Dr. Maudsley was Physician to the Manchester Royal Lunatic Hospital, 1859-62; was made Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1869; and was appointed Gulstonian Lecturer to the College in 1870. He is a Fellow of University College, London, was lately Professor of Medical Jurisprudence in University College, and is Consulting Physician to the West London Hospital; and an honorary member of various learned societies in Paris, Vienna, Italy, and America. He has been President of the Medico-Psychological Association of Great Britain and Ireland, and was editor of the Journal of Mental Science. Dr. Maudsley is the author of "The Physiology of Mind," "The Pathology of Mind," "Body and Mind," "Body and Will," "Responsibility in Mental Disease," and "Natural Cause and Supernatural Seemings."

MAXIM, Hiram S., was born in the town of Tangersville, State of Maine, U.S.A., on Feb. 5, 1840. His parents were also born in the State of Maine, but his grandparents were born in the State of Mass., and were of English Puritan stock and were among the early settlers of Plymouth County, Mass. He attended the common schools in the State of Maine which only gave him the foundation of an education, since which time he has been engaged in educating himself in the different branches of science with which his work has brought him in contact. He always had a great liking for mechanics, and while still a mere boy, was able to operate almost any kind of tool and to do very good work. Before the age of twenty-one years he had served an apprenticeship and had also been foreman. At the age of twenty-four he was in the large machine works of his uncle Levi Stevens, at Fitchburg, Mass. Later on he became a mechanical draughtsman in Boston, and also acted as foreman in the manufacture of gas machines and philosophical instruments. At twenty-eight he was a draughtsman in a large steamship building establishment in New York City, where shortly after this he invented a new gas locomotive headlight, which went into general use. He also did much to perfect automatic gas machines for lighting private houses out of the reach of coal gas. These machines went largely into use and are still being made in large quantities. In 1877 he took up the question of electricity and was among the first to make dynamo electric machines and electric lamps in the U.S.A. He was the first to make incandescent lamp carbons by the process known as "flashing," that is, a process of building up, solidifying and standardizing the carbons by electrically heating them in an atmosphere of hydro-carbon vapors. It was this process which rendered it possible to make incandescent lamps which would stand. Unfortunately for Mr. Maxim, the process, which is much used, has become common property. In 1881, he exhibited at Paris, the first electrical current regulator ever made for electric lamps. This regulator maintained a constant potential of current quite irrespective of the number of lamps in the circuit, and for this invention he was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour by President Grévy. At this time he took out a great many patents on electrical machinery, including arc lamps, incandescent lamps, search lights, dynamo electric machines, chemical processes relating to electricity, &c., &c. In 1883 he took up the question of automatic guns. He believed that the recoil energy of the gun, which was only a disturbing element in firing, could be turned to useful effect, and that the energy was always sufficient to perform all the necessary functions of loading and firing. Accordingly he made a species of a dynamometer gun with which he was able to measure the force of the recoil, the duration of the recoil, and everything relating to loading and firing a gun. This gave him the necessary data and he made the first automatic gun in Hatton Garden in 1884. This gun was a nine days' wonder in London. People at first would not believe that it was possible for a gun to load and fire itself without anyone touching it, and everybody came to see the gun from the Prince of Wales down. Competitive trials with other guns operated by hand followed, and he exhibited his automatic guns in various countries and received some very large orders. The amalgamation with the Nordenfelt Company followed, and the management of the company passed into the hands of a board of directors. Mr. Maxim writes characteristically of the guns:—"I think it is now admitted that these automatic guns have proved themselves superior to all others. In the late war with the Matabele they operated without a hitch and it was these guns that saved the British column from total annihilation. I have received many letters from the officers in command, and they all attribute their wonderful success to the remarkable killing power of these guns, and they say that no soldier, no matter how brave, could stand up before them. 600 rounds a minute from a single barrel is rather too deadly a fire to stand up against, in fact, the slaughter was so great that the matter was seriously discussed in Parliament as to whether the English were justified in slaughtering the natives in such numbers." The French Navy has adopted the fully automatic Maxim gun, using a barrel of 1½-inch bore with cast-iron explosive projectiles, and the French officers in describing the fire, said it was literally a rain of iron. When the question of smokeless powder came up in Europe, Mr. Maxim was among the first in England to commence experiments, and he found that very excellent results could be obtained by combining gun-cotton of the highest degree of nitration—commonly called tri-nitrocellulose—and nitro-glycerine with a small percentage of a suitable oil. He found that the violence of the nitro-glycerine could be modified to any extent in this way, and with such a compound detonation was absolutely impossible. After a large number of experiments, he produced most excellent results. The powder was found to be a stable compound not affected by heat and moisture, and to give very high muzzle velocities and low pressures without any smoke at all. This was the first compound of the kind ever made. About five years ago he took up the question of aërial navigation, and made a large number of experiments with a view of ascertaining exactly how much power was required to perform artificial flight on the aeroplane system, the aeroplane being propelled by screws. The experimental apparatus was placed on the end of a very long rotating arm so that the apparatus passed around a circle, the circumference of which was 200 feet. After this he commenced experiments on a very much larger machine to run in a straight line on a railway track; but it was first necessary to produce some kind of motive power which should be much lighter and stronger than anything else in existence and this he has succeeded in doing. He has, he avers, been able to get a horse power out of every 10 lbs. of motor, a result which, he thinks, has never been attained before. His large machine is driven by twin screws, and the thrust of these screws is over 2,100 lbs. when the engines are running at full speed. The machine is provided with all sorts of instruments and tachometers, so as to measure the thrust of the screw, the speed and the lifting power of the aeroplane as the machine runs on the railway track. An inverted rail is provided on each side of the machine to prevent it from leaving the track. These are the first experiments that have ever been tried with a machine running in a straight line, and it is the first time that any considerable weight has been lifted by an aërial apparatus not provided with a gas bag. Mr. Maxim is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, Member of the Society of Arts, Member of the English Society of Mechanical Engineers, Member of the London Chamber of Commerce, Member of the Bridgeport Scientific Society, and has lately been decorated by the Sultan of Turkey with the Grand Order of the Medjidieh.

MAX-MÜLLER, Professor Frederick, son of Wilhelm Müller, the German poet, was born at Dessau, Dec. 6, 1823. In 1850 he took one of his christian names as his surname. He was educated at the public schools of Dessau and Leipzig, attended lectures in the Universities of Leipzig and Berlin, and took his degree in 1843. He studied Arabic and Persian under Professor Fleischer; Sanskrit and comparative philology under Professors Brockhaus, Bopp, and Rückert; philosophy under Drobisch, Weisse, and Schelling. He published, in 1844, his first work, a translation of "The Hitopadesa," a collection of Sanskrit fables; and then proceeded to Berlin, to examine the collection of Sanskrit MSS. there. In 1845 he went to Paris to continue his studies under Eugène Burnouf, at whose suggestion he began to collect materials for an edition of the "Rig-Veda," the Sacred Hymns of the Brahmins, and the Commentary of Sâyanâchârya. After copying and collating the MSS. in the Royal Library at Paris, he repaired to England in June, 1846, in order to collate the MSS. at the East-India House and the Bodleian Library. When he was on the point of returning to Germany, he made the acquaintance of the late Baron Bunsen, then Prussian Minister in London, who persuaded him to stay in England, and on his and the late Professor Wilson's recommendation the East-India Company engaged him to publish the first edition of the "Rig-Veda" at their expense. In 1848 he settled at Oxford, where his work was to be printed, and the first volume of 1,000 pages quarto appeared in 1849. He was invited by the University to give some courses of lectures on Comparative Philology, as Deputy Taylorian Professor, in 1850; was made Honorary M.A. and member of Christ Church in 1851; was elected Taylorian Professor, and received the full degree of M.A. by decree of Convocation in 1854; was made a Curator of the Bodlejan Library in 1856; and elected a Fellow of All Souls College in 1858. He was in 1860 an unsuccessful candidate for the professorship of Sanskrit at Oxford, being opposed by a coalition of theological parties. From 1865 to 1867 he was Oriental Librarian at the Bodleian Library. In 1868 the University founded a new Professorship of Comparative Philology, and the statute of foundation named him as the first Professor. In 1872 he was invited to lecture in the reconstituted University of Strasburg as Professor of Sanskrit. He declined the appointment, but gave some courses of lectures there in 1872. As he refused to accept any salary, the University of Strasburg founded a triennial prize for Sanskrit scholarship in memory of his services. On the 3rd of Dec. 1873, at the invitation of Dean Stanley, he delivered in Westminster Abbey a lecture on the "Religions of the World," the only address ever delivered by a layman within the Abbey. In 1875 he resigned his professorship at Oxford, intending to return to Germany, but the University requested him to remain in Oxford, and entrusted him with the edition of a series of translations of the "Sacred Books of the East," appointing at the same time a Deputy-Professor, Mr. Sayce. Forty volumes of this series have been published, of which the first contains Max-Müller's translation of the Upanishads, 1879, and the tenth his translation of the Dhammapada from Pali, 1881. In 1878 he delivered in the Chapter House of Westminster a course of lectures on "The Origin and Growth of Religion, as illustrated by the Religions of India" (last edition, 1891). These lectures were the first of those delivered under a bequest made by the late Mr. Hibbert. On Nov. 13, 1877, Professor Max-Müller was elected a Delegate of the University Press. On Oct. 28, 1881, he was re-elected curator of the Bodleian Library in place of the late Professor Rolleston. In 1882 he was invited by the University of Cambridge to give a course of lectures on India, specially intended for the candidates for the Indian Civil Service. These lectures were published in 1882, under the title of "India: What can it teach us?" In addition to the "Hitopadesa," he published at Königsberg, in 1847, "Meghadûta, an Indian Elegy," translated from the Sanskrit, with notes, in German; in the Reports of the British Association, 1847, "An Essay on Bengali, and its Relation to the Aryan Languages;" in 1853, an "Essay on Indian Logic," in "Thompson's Laws of Thought;" in 1854, "Proposals for a Uniform Missionary Alphabet" and "Suggestions on the Learning of the Languages of the Seat of War in the East, with Linguistic Map;" republished in 1855 under the title of "A Survey of Languages." In 1854 appeared his "Letter to Chevalier Bunsen on the Classification of the Turanian Languages in Bunsen's 'Christianity and Mankind;'" in 1857, at Leipzig, "The Hymns of the Rig-Veda, together with text and translation of the Prâtisâkhya, an ancient work on Sanskrit Grammar and Pronunciation," in German; and "Buddhism and Buddhist Pilgrims;" in 1858, "The German Classics from the Fourth to the Nineteenth Century" (new edition 1886), and "Essay on Comparative Mythology," in the Oxford Essays; in 1859, "History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature" (2nd ed. 1860), and "Lectures on the Science of Language," two series, delivered at the Royal Institution (last edition 1888); a thoroughly revised edition of this work was published in 1891, under the title, "The Science of Language, founded on Lectures delivered at the Royal Institution." He published a "Sanskrit Grammar for beginners" (2nd ed. 1870). In 1868 he delivered the Rede Lecture at Cambridge, "On the Stratification of Languages," and in 1870 a course of lectures "On the Science of Religion," at the Royal Institution, published in 1873 under the title of "Introduction to the Science of Religion," with "Two Essays on False Analogies and the Philosophy of Mythology" (last edition 1882). In 1873 he gave another course of lectures at the Royal Institution on Darwin's Philosophy of Language, published in Fraser's Magazine. Most of his essays have been collected in "Chips from a German Workshop," 4 vols., 1868-75:—vol. i., Essays on the Science of Religion; vol. ii., Essays on Mythology, Tradition, and Customs; vol. iii., Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities; vol. iv., Essays on the Science of Language. A selection of them was published under the title of "Selected Essays," 2 vols., 1882. In 1869 he published, as a specimen, the first volume of his translation of the Rig-Veda "Hymns to the Maruts, or the Storm-Gods." In 1873 appeared his edition of the two texts of the Rig-Veda (2nd ed. 1877), and in 1874 the sixth and concluding volume of his large edition of the Rig-Veda with Sâyana's Commentary. A new edition of this work, published at the expense of the Mahárájah of Vizianagram, appeared in 1891. Since the year 1879 Professor Max-Müller has devoted himself to the teaching of several Buddhist priests who had been sent to him from Japan to learn Sanskrit. This led him to the discovery that the oldest Sanskrit MSS. existed in Japan. With the help of these Japanese MSS. he published the Sanskrit originals of several Buddhist texts, such as the Sukhâvatîvyûha (Journ. R. Asiatic Soc., 1880), the Vajracchedikâ, in the Anecdota Oxoniensia, 1881, while one of his pupils, Mr. Bunyiu Nanjio, compiled a complete Catalogue of the Buddhist Tripitaka, the Sacred Canon of the Buddhists in China and Japan, published by the Clarendon Press, Oxford, in 1883. In 1881, in commemoration of the centenary of its first publication, he brought out a new translation of Kant's Critique of Pure Reason, preceded by an historical introduction by Professor L. Noiré. In 1884 he published a volume of "Biographical Essays;" in 1887, "The Science of Thought;" in 1888, "Biographies of Words and the Home of the Aryas." In 1888 he was appointed Gifford Lecturer in Natural Religion in the University of Glasgow, and his first course of lectures was published in 1889, under the title of "Natural Religion;" the second course, "Physical Religion," in 1891; the third volume of lectures in 1892, "Anthropological Religion;" the fourth in 1893, "Theosophy, or Psychological Religion." He was re-elected Gifford Lecturer in 1891. Professor Max-Müller, who has contributed numerous articles to the Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews, the Times, and various literary journals of England, America, Germany, and France, is one of the eight foreign members of the Institute of France, one of the thirty Knights of the Ordre pour le Mérite, one of the ten foreign members of the Reale Academia dei Lincei of Rome, and has received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws and Philosophy at Cambridge, Dublin, Edinburgh, and Bologna. In 1889 he was elected First President of the Aryan Section at the International Congress of Orientalists held in Stockholm and Christiania, and received the Northern Star (First Class) from the King of Sweden. In 1892 he was chosen President of the International Congress of Orientalists held in London. In 1893 he visited Constantinople, and was decorated by the Sultan with the Ordre pour le Mérite (Liuket) and the Star of the Medjidieh. On the fiftieth anniversary of his Doctorate (Sept. 1893) the University of Leipzig presented him with an honorary Diploma, and on his seventieth birthday (Dec. 6, 1893) he received numerous addresses from Academies and learned societies to which he belongs.

MAXWELL, Sir Herbert Eustace, seventh baronet, of Monreith, only surviving son of Sir William Maxwell by his wife Helenora, daughter of Sir Michael Shaw Stewart, 5th baronet, of Ardgowan, Lord-Lieutenant of Renfrewshire, was born on Jan. 8, 1845, and educated at Eton and at Christ Church, which he left without taking a degree. After leaving college he joined the Militia, and served for 21 years, finally retiring as a Major and Lieut.-Colonel. He succeeded his father in 1877, and was elected (Conservative) member for Wigtonshire at the General Election of 1880, which county he continues to represent. He was a Lord of the Treasury in 1886-92. He has made Friendly Societies and Provident Insurance a special subject of study, and was Chairman of the Select Committee on Provident Insurance in 1885-86-87, and of the Select Committee on Friendly Societies in 1888-89. He has also presided over enquiries into Scottish Salmon Fisheries, Solway Fishings, and the Vole Plague in Scotland. In 1893 he was appointed a member of the Royal Commission on the Aged Poor. He is the author of numerous papers on Archæology and Natural History, besides miscellaneous essays, and has published the following books:— "Studies in the Topography of Galloway," (1887); "Passages in the Life of Sir Lucian Elphin," a novel in 2 vols. (1889); "The Art of Love," a novel, (1890); "The Letter of the Law," a novel, (1891); "Meridiana — Noontide Essays," (1892); "Life and Times of the Right Hon. W. H. Smith," 2 vols. (1893); and Scottish Land Names," (1894). He was appointed Rhind Lecturer in Archæology (Edinburgh, 1893). He married, in 1869, Mary, daughter of Henry Fletcher Campbell, of Boquhan, Stirlingshire, and has issue.

MAXWELL, Mrs. John, née Mary Elizabeth Braddon, daughter of Henry Braddon solicitor, a younger son of a family long established in North Cornwall, was born in Soho Square, London, in 1837, and became at an early age a contributor to periodical literature, writing sentimental verses, political squibs, and parodies for the Poet's Corner of provincial newspapers. Miss Braddon has written a large number of novels, amongst which are "Lady Audley's Secret," "Aurora Floyd," "Eleanor's Victory," "John Marchmont's Legacy," "Henry Dunbar," "The Doctor's Wife," "Only a Clod," "Sir Jasper's Tenant," "The Lady's Mile," "Rupert Godwin," and "Run to Earth." Miss Braddon conducted Belgravia, a London magazine, to which she contributed the following novels:—

"Birds of Prey," "Charlotte's Inheritance," "Dead Sea Fruit," "Fenton's Quest," and a variety of short tales and novelettes. Her more recent works are, "To the Bitter End," 1872; "Lucius Davoring," "Strangers and Pilgrims," "Griselda," a drama in four acts, brought out at the Princess's Theatre, in Nov. 1873; "The Missing Witness; "Lost for Love," and "Taken at the Flood," 1874; "Hostages to Fortune," 1875; "Dead Men's Shoes," and Joshua Haggard's Daughter," 1876; "An Open Verdict," 1878; "The Cloven Foot," and "Vixen," 1879; "Just as I am," and "The Story of Barbara," 1880; "Asphodel," 1881; "Mount Royal," 1882; "Flower and Weed," "Ishmael," "Wyllard's Weird," "Mohawks," 1886; "Like and Unlike," "The Fatal Three," "The Day Will Come," 1889; "One Life, One Love," 1890; "Gerard," 1891; "The Venetians," 1892; "All Along the River," and "The Christmas Hirelings," 1893.

MAY, Phil, who is now credited with being able to earn as much as £100 a day by his drawings, began his artistic career when he was 12 years old, at which time the Grand Theatre, Leeds, opened, and he became acquainted with the son of the local scene painter, and helped to mix the distemper. Here Mr. May used to sketch sections of other people's designs of costumes, and eventually he designed comic masks and dresses. This brought him orders for portraits, and after a year or two the late Frederick Stimpson engaged him to play small parts and do six sketches a week as advertisement window bills. He got an engagement to design the dresses for the Leeds pantomime in 1882, but then determined to come to London as a tragedian, his finances at the time consisting of twenty shillings. An aunt had married an actor there, and he sought her out. By his uncle he was next day despatched again to Leeds, but he left the train and walked back to London. Then ensued a time of great privation, and the first turn of good fortune he had was when he met the owner of a photograph shop who took his drawing of Irving, Bancroft, and Toole, and published it. At last a drawing by him of Mr. Bancroft in Society brought him to the notice of the St. Stephen's Review, where he was set the task of designing a cartoon, illustrations, cover and initials for a Christmas number. A week was given him to do this in. He worked night and day and finished the whole in time. He was employed on the illustrations of the Review till an agent came from Sydney to secure an artist. He went out to the Colonies and in fine air, has grown what he is, but he says the trials of his early days made him an artist.

MAYO, Isabella Fyvie, born in London, 1843; of pure Scottish descent; educated in London. Issued "The Occupations of a Retired Life," by "Edward Garrett" (nom de plume) in 1868. Married, in 1870, to Mr. John Mayo. Widowed in 1877. Principal works: "The Crust and the Cake," "Premiums paid to Experience," "Crooked Places," "By Still Waters," "John Winter, a Story of Harvests," "At any Cost," "Mystery of Allan Graley," 1885; "Ways and Means," 1889; &c. Has contributed numerous articles both in prose and verse to Good Words, Leisure Hour, Sunday Magazine, Sunday at Home, Sun, &c., both under her nom de plume and under her own name.

MAYOR, The Rev. John Eyton Bickersteth, M.A., born at Beddagamme, in Ceylon, Jan. 25, 1825, was educated at Shrewsbury School and St. John's College, Cambridge, and ordained deacon in 1855, priest in 1857. He was elected Fellow of St. John's College in 1849; was Assistant-Master at Marlborough College, 1849-53; College Lecturer in 1853; Librarian of the University of Cambridge, 1863-67, and was appointed Professor of Latin in that university in 1872. Mr. Mayor is the editor of "Thirteen Satires of Juvenal," 1853, 3rd edit. 1881; "Juvenal for Schools," 1879; "Two Lives of Nicholas Ferrar," 1855; "Autobiography of Matt. Robinson," 1856; "Early Statutes of St. John's College, Cambridge," 1859; "Cicero's Second Philippic," with notes, 1861; 6th edit. 1879; "Roger Ascham's Schoolmaster," with notes, 1873, new edit. 1883 (Bohn's Library); "Ricardi de Cirencestria Speculum Historiale de Gestis Regum Angliæ," 2 vols., 1863-69; and "Thomas Baker's History of the College of St. John the Evangelist, Cambridge," 2 vols., 1869; "Bibliographical Clue to Latin Literature," 1875; "The Latin Heptateuch," 1889; and numerous other works. Mr. Mayor was one of the editors of the Journal of Classical and Sacred Philology and of the Journal of Philology.

MEASON, Malcolm Ronald Laing, son of the late Gilbert Laing Meason, Esq., of Lindertis, Forfarshire, was born at Edinburgh, in 1824, and educated in France, and at St. Gregory's College, Downside, near Bath. He entered the army in 1839, as ensign of the 40th Regiment, and served through the second Afghan and the Gwalior campaigns in India, was very severely wounded, and received two medals. He joined the 10th Hussars in 1846, and sold out in 1851. From the latter year to 1854 he was editor of the Bombay Telegraph and Courier. In 1855 he was sent to Paris by the Daily News in conjunction with Mr. Blanchard Jerrold as one of the special correspondents for the Paris Exhibition of that year. From 1855 to 1870 he was a frequent contributor to the Daily News, Household Words, and All the Year Round. From 1866 to 1870 he was editor of The Weekly Register. In 1870 he went abroad as special correspondent of the New York Herald with the French Army. After Sedan he accepted an offer from the Daily Telegraph, and remained in France as special correspondent of that paper until the end of the war, and afterwards, for two years, as correspondent for the same journal at Paris and Versailles. He joined the staff of The Hour in 1873. In 1865 he published "The Bubbles of Finance," and in 1866 "The Profits of Panics," being both descriptions from life of the joint-stock swindles of the day. In 1868 he published a small volume on "Turf Frauds," in 1875; "Three Months after Date and other Tales;" and in 1886, "Sir William's Speculations." He has contributed to the Month, the Dublin Review, Belgravia, Fraser, Macmillan, the Whitehall Review, and other periodicals.

MECKLENBURG-STRELITZ (Grand Duke of), Frederick William Charles George Ernest Adolphus Gustavus, a Lieut.-General in the Prussian army, born Oct. 17, 1819; married, June 28, 1843, the Princess Augusta Caroline Charlotte Elizabeth Maria Sophia Louisa of Cambridge, daughter of the late Duke of Cambridge. He succeeded his father, Sept. 6, 1860, and has one son, George Adolphus Frederick Augustus Victor Ernest Gustavus William Wellington, born July 22, 1848, who married a Princess of Anhalt in 1877, and his son, Adolphus Frederick George, was born in June, 1882.

MEDING, Johann Ferdinand Martin Oskar, a German novelist, who writes under the pseudonym GREGOR SAMAROW, was born April 11, 1829, at Königsberg, being the son of the Governor of East Prussia. He studied law in his native town, at Heidelberg, and at Berlin, from 1848 till 1851, when he became an advocate (Auskultator) at Marienwerder. At a later period he was employed in the magistracy and administration; and in 1859 he quitted the public service of Prussia and joined that of Hanover. He was sent on several confidential missions by the King of Hanover, George V., and was concerned as a Councillor of State in the passing of various religious and political measures. In 1863 he accompanied the King to Frankfort on the occasion of a Congress of the reigning Princes of Germany being held in that city. In 1866 he was sent on a mission to the Elector of Hesse, and subsequently went to Vienna with the deposed King of Hanover. He went to Paris in 1867 as the representative of the interests of the deposed King. In 1870 he gave in his adhesion to the Prussian Government, and, after residing two years in Switzerland, and at Stuttgart, he settled in Berlin, where, keeping wholly aloof from politics, he began to write his personal reminiscences, in the form of novels, under the pseudonym of "Gregor Samarow." His works include "For Sceptres and Crown," a romance in five parts, 1872-76; subsequently "The Roman Expedition of the Epigoni," 1873; "The Dying Salutation of the Legions," 1874; "Heights and Depths," 20 vols., 1879-80; "Queen Elizabeth," 6 vols., 1881; "The Merchant's House," 1882; "A Difficult Choice," 1883; "Die Saxoborussen," 1885; "Gippel und Abgrund," 1888; "Feenschloss," 1890; and "der Weisse Adler," 1891. Under his own name Meding has published "Memoirs of Contemporary History" ("Memorien zur Zeitgeschichte"), Vol. I., 1881; "A Biography of William I., of Germany, with additions and corrections by the Emperor himself."

MEDLICOTT, Henry Benedict, M.A., F.R.S., F.G.S., was born on Aug. 3, 1829, at Loughrea, co. Galway, Ireland; and is the son of the Rev. Samuel Medlicott, Rector of Loughrea. He was educated in France, Guernsey, and Dublin, where he took the degree of B.A. at Trinity College in 1850, with diploma and honours in the School of Civil Engineering; and the M.A. degree in 1870. He became a Fellow of the Geological Society of London, 1856; of the Royal Society in 1877; and received the Wollaston Medal in 1888. He is Honorary and Corresponding Member of several foreign societies; and was awarded the Indian Mutiny Medal for special service as a volunteer. He was appointed to the Geological Survey of Ireland, 1851; transferred to the English Survey, 1853; to the Indian Geological Survey and as Professor of Geology at the Roorkee College of Civil Engineers, 1854; Director of the Geological Survey of India, 1876 to 1887. He has published "A Manual of the Geology of India" (in part), 1879; scientific papers in the Journal of the Geological Society, 1868; five "memoirs" and forty-four "records" of the Geological Survey of India series, 1860-87, and pamphlets entitled "Agnosticism and Faith," 1888, and "Evolution of Mind in Man," 1892.

MEILHAC, Henri, a French dramatic author, born at Paris in 1832, was educated at the Lycée, Louis-le-Grand. From 1852 to 1855 he contributed with pen and pencil to the Journal pour Rire, and in 1855 his first dramatic efforts, "Satania" and "Garde toi, je me garde," were produced at the Palais Royal, but without much success. In 1860, in collaboration with M. Ludovic Halévy, he wrote "L'Etincelle," and "Une heure avant l'ouverture," both played at the Vaudeville, and in 1861, with M. Arthur Delavigne, "La Vertu de Célimène," produced at the Gymnase, which became very popular notwithstanding its improbable plot. In conjunction with the above-mentioned authors, M. Meilhac has produced a large number of plays, the chief amongst them being "La Belle Hélène," "Barbe Bleu," "La Grande Duchesse de Gérolstein;" "Frou frou," 1870; "Tricoche et Cacolet," 1872; "Toto chez Tata," 1873; "La Cygale," 1877; and "Le Mari de la Débutante," 1879; and "La Roussotte," 1881. He has also written, for the Revue de Paris, "Les Païens," a comedy in verse, and several articles in La Vie Parisienne under the pseudonym of Ivan Baškoff. Among his most recent comedies, written without collaboration, may be mentioned "Décoré," a brilliant success, 1888; "Margot," accepted by the Comédie Française in 1890; and "Brevet Supérieur," 1892. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1869, promoted to be an officer in 1884, and elected to the Academy, in succession to Labiche, in 1888.

MELBA, Nellie, operatic singer, was born in one of the Australian Colonies on May 19, 1865. As a little child of six she sang ballads to her own accompaniment at a public concert. Subsequently she was sent to Europe, and studied under Madame Marchesi in Paris. She first appeared on the stage in Oct., 1887, singing in "Rigoletto" at the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels. The year after she appeared before a London audience as Lucia at Covent Garden Opera House. She played Ophelia at the Paris Grand Opera in 1889, and also appeared as Juliet in London. Bemberg specially wrote "Elaine" for her, and she appeared in this opera in London in 1892. In 1893 she achieved great success in "Pagliacci" at Covent Garden. In 1894 she sang at the Handel Festival.

MELDOLA, Professor Raphael, F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in the Finsbury Technical College, City and Guilds of London Institute, was born July 19, 1849, in Annette Crescent, Essex Road, Islington. His father, Samuel Meldola, was a printer, and his grandfather the Rev. Dr. Raphael Meldola, Chief Rabbi of the Congregation of Spanish and Portuguese Jews in London (1805-1828). An obituary notice of the Chief Rabbi, who was widely esteemed for his scholarship by all denominations, appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine, for 1828. The history of the family can be traced back without a break through eleven generations to Rabbi Isaiah Meldola, described in the pedigree as "one of the sages of Castile," who died as head of the college at Mantua in 1340. Many members of the family have been distinguished divines, physicians, scholars, and writers on various subjects, as appears from the records in the pedigree, and from the works by various Meldolas entered in the British Museum Catalogues. Professor Meldola received his early education in private schools, first at Bristol, where his mother's family resided, and afterwards at Kew and Bayswater. He received his scientific training at the Royal College of Chemistry in Oxford Street, having entered as a student under Dr. Edward Frankland in 1866. His first appointment was as Junior Assistant in the laboratory of the late Dr. John Stenhouse, F.R.S., where he imbibed the taste for organic chemistry which he has since cultivated. From the laboratory in Pentonville, Professor Meldola transferred his services to a firm of colour manufacturers at Brentford, where he acquired his first experience as a technologist, and in 1872 he again entered the Royal College of Chemistry, then transferred to the South Kensington establishment, in the capacity of Demonstrator under Dr. Frankland. In 1874 he became associated with Mr. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S., and assisted this well-known investigator in many of his researches in Spectrum Analysis. While in the laboratory of Mr. Lockyer, Professor Meldola was sent out by the Royal Society in charge of the Nicobar Island branch of the expedition commissioned to make observation on the total eclipse of April 5, 1875. Two years after his return to England he again gave his services to chemical technology, having accepted in 1877 the post of scientific chemist in one of the leading coal-tar colour factories in this country. In the laboratory of this firm at Hackney Wick he worked at chemical research for eight years, and made many discoveries of scientific and technical importance which are associated with his name. He was appointed to the professorship which he now holds in 1885. The list of chemical papers embodying the results of original investigations carried out by Professor Meldola alone, or by him in conjunction with his assistants and students, is a very long one, numbering about seventy memoirs and notes contributed to the recognized scientific periodicals in England and Germany. Although his work has been chiefly in the domain of chemistry he is also an enthusiastic naturalist and geologist, and much of his early work was in connection with the application of the Darwinian theory to the problems of animal colouration. His first published scientific papers were on biological subjects, and he has contributed about thirty entomological notes to various natural history journals. He is still warmly interested in the subject, and devotes most of his leisure time to collecting and observing in the field. English biologists owe to Professor Meldola the translation of Weismann's "Studies in the Theory of Descent," (1881-82), a work which first brought into notoriety in this country the eminent German biologist, and which also embodied in the form of notes many of the translator's own observations. In 1886 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and he belongs to most of the scientific societies in London and to many foreign societies. He is one of the original Fellows of the Institute of of Chemistry and of the Physical Society, and an honorary member of the Institute of Brewing. In many of the societies to to which he belongs, Professor Meldola has held office. He has been Secretary, three times Vice-President, and is now President of the Entomological Society; he is also Foreign Secretary of the Chemical Society, a Member of Council of the British Association, and President of the Chemical Section for the Ipswich Meeting in 1895. In connection with the British Association he has done much in helping to promote and consolidate the work of the local scientific societies throughout the country, and is Chairman of the Corresponding Societies Committee of the Association. His tastes as a field naturalist led him to take an active part in 1880 in the formation of the Essex Field Club, of which he was the first president, and has since been a warm supporter. In addition to his official addresses and scientific papers published by the Club, he (in conjunction with Mr. W. White) drew up an exhaustive "Report on the East Anglian Earthquake of 1884," which forms the first volume of the Club's Special Memoirs. His experience as a technologist as well as a scientific teacher has enabled Professor Meldola to take an active part, outside his immediate professional duties, in the Technical Education Movement. In 1886 he read a paper on "The Scientific Development of the Coal Tar Colour Industry" before the Society of Arts for which he was awarded a silver medal. For the last two or three years also he has been a member of the Technical Instructional Committee of the Essex County Council, and in 1892 he was invited to address the Photographic Society of Great Britain on the subject of the foundation of an institute for Technical Photography. As a popular lecturer he has addressed audiences at the Royal Institution, the London Institution, the Sunday Lecture Society, the Victoria Hall, and in Leicester, Leeds, and Sheffield. In 1891 he delivered a course of Cantor Lectures on Photographic Chemistry before the Society of Arts. Professor Meldola's name has long been familiar as a reviewer in the pages of Nature and other journals, although much of his writing in this category is anonymous. For many years he was associated with Land and Water as natural history correspondent in the time of Frank Buckland and John Keast Lord. He has contributed articles on special subjects to the 9th edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," to "Watts's Dictionary of Chemistry" by Morley and Muir, and to "Thorpe's Dictionary of Applied Chemistry." He is the author of a little manual of "Inorganic Chemistry," Murby, 1874; the "Chemistry of Photography," Macmillan, 1889; and "Coal, and what we get from it," published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge in 1891.

MELLON, Mrs. Alfred, formerly known under her maiden name, Miss Sarah Jane Woolgar, was born July 8, 1824, and made her first appearance in London at the Adelphi Theatre, Sept. 1843, in a farce called "Antony and Cleopatra," when her merits were recognised, and she found herself high in favour with the London public. She took part in all the Adelphi triumphs from the date of her first appearance till her retirement; indeed, except for very brief engagements, she has appeared at no other London theatre. She became the wife of the late Mr. Alfred Mellon, the popular composer and conductor, for some time the leader of the orchestra at the Adelphi Theatre, who died in March, 1867.

MELLOR, Right Hon. J. W., is the eldest son of the late Right Hon. Sir J. Mellor, and was born in 1835. He completed his education at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, and in 1857, when he took his B.A. degree, was eighth Senior Optime. In 1860 he was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and went on the Midland Circuit. He took silk in 1875, and became a Bencher in 1877. He was subsequently appointed Recorder of Grantham, which he represented in Parliament from 1880 to 1886, the latter year became Judge-Advocate-General. He was sworn of the Privy Council in the same year. In July, 1892, he was elected Member of Parliament in the Gladstonian Liberal interest for the Sowerby Division of Yorkshire, in 1893 was appointed Chairman of Committees in the House of Commons, and subsequently presided over many of the contentious discussions which arose out of the Home Rule Bill debates. He is a J.P. and D.L. for the County of Somerset.

MENABREA, Louis Frederick, Marquis de Val-Dora, an Italian general and statesman, born at Chambéry (Savoy), Sept. 4, 1809, studied with distinction at the University of Turin, and entered the corps of Engineers as lieutenant. At an early age he became favourably known by his scientific attainments, which led to his appointment as Professor of Mechanics in the Military Academy, in the School of Artillery, and in the University of Turin, and to his election, in 1839, as a member of the Academy of Sciences in that city. He attained the rank of captain in 1848. Sent by King Charles Albert on a mission into the Italian duchies, he exerted himself to procure a vote in favour of union with the subalpine kingdom. He was next elected to the Chamber of Deputies, and attached as chief officer, first to the Ministry of War, and next to that of Foreign Affairs. These functions he resigned on the accession to power of Gioberti, but he resumed them after the defeat at Novara. In the war of Italian Independence Count Menabrea, who had been advanced to the rank of major-general, and placed at the head of the engineering department of the army, executed several important works, including the investment of Peschiera, and was present at the battles of Palestro and Solferino. On the cession of his native province to France, he determined to retain his Italian nationality. Soon afterwards he was nominated a Senator by King Victor Emanuel. He was also made lieutenant-general, and conducted the military operations at Ancona, Capua, and Gaeta. In 1861 he became Minister of Marine in the administration of Baron Ricasoli, and in 1866 he was sent to Germany, where, as plenipotentiary of Italy, he signed the Treaty of Prague. In 1867 he was entrusted by the king, whose first aide-de-camp he had been for some time previously, with the formation of a Cabinet, in which he held the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, besides being President of the Council; and notwithstanding numerous financial difficulties, and the complications of the Roman question, he remained in power till Nov. 1869, when a new Cabinet was formed by Signor Lanza. Gen. Menabrea was sent as ambassador to Vienna in Nov. 1870, but recalled in the following year. He was appointed Ambassador at the Court of St. James's in May, 1876. He was subsequently appointed Ambassador in Paris (Nov. 1882). He retired from the Paris Embassy in 1892. He is a skilful mathematician, and a member of several learned societies. Ennobled in 1843, he was created a Count in 1861, and Marquis de Val-Dora in 1875.

MENDES, Catulle, a French author, was born at Bordeaux, on May 20, 1843. In 1861 he established, in Paris, La Revue Fantaisiste, in which he published "Le Roman d'une Nuit," a drama in verse, but being under age he was condemned to two months' imprisonment and a fine of 500 francs. At that time he belonged to the little group of artistic poets called "Parnassians." His other works include "Philomèla," a volume of lyrics, 1864; "Hesperus," a poem, 1869; "La Colère d'un Franc-tireur, Odelette Guerrière," 1871; "Contes Épiques," "Les Soirs Moroses," "Le Soleil de Minuit," (poésies), 1872, republished in 1876 under the title of "Poésies." Several novels, "Les Folies Amoureuses," 1877; "Les Mères Ennemies," 1880; "La Divine Adventure," 1881, in conjunction with M. Lesclide; "Le Rose et le Noir," 1885; "Le Roi vierge;" "Zo' har;" "La première Maitresse;" "Méphistophela," 1890, and various pieces for the theatre, such as "Le Capitaine Fracasse," 1870, after Gauthier's romance; "Le Châtiment," 1887; and "Fiammette," 1889, &c. In 1866 he married Mlle. Judith Gautier.

MENZEL, Adolf Friedrich Erdmann, German historical painter, was born Dec. 8, 1815, at Breslau, but removed in 1830 with his parents to Berlin, where he studied art at the academy. On his father's death he had to support himself, and first began by selling pen-and-ink drawings. In 1836 he made his first attempt in oil painting, "The Chess-Players," followed by several other pictures; but from 1839-42 he worked at the illustrations to Kugler's "History of Frederick the Great." Since then he has become celebrated as a painter of the most life-like and accurate scenes from the age of Frederick; his first important work of the period was the "Round Table of Frederick the Great," 1850, followed by the "Flute Concert at Sans-souci," 1852; "Frederick's Reception in Breslau," and "Frederick at the Battle of Hochkirch," 1856; "Blücher and Wellington at Waterloo," 1858, and many others. All these paintings are remarkable for strong realism, great power of characterisation, and for the masterly skill with which every detail is represented. Betwen 1861-65 Menzel was working at the "Coronation of William I.;" in 1871 he completed the "King's Departure from Berlin," and from 1872-75 he worked at "Modern Cyclops," representing a scene from the great ironworks, and one of the most extraordinary and remarkable of all his paintings. His later works are the excellent illustrations to Kleist's "Broken Jug," 1877, and a clever society picture, "The Ball Supper," besides a large number of pen-and-ink drawings and water colours. He has been, since 1856, Professor at the Berlin Academy, and is a member of the academies of Vienna and Munich, and hon. member of the English Royal Water Colour Society. In 1885 a successful exhibition of his works was held in Paris. His illustrations to the works of Frederick the Great have been republished in 2 vols., 4to.

MERCIÉ, Marius Jean Antoine, a French sculptor, was born at Toulouse, Oct. 30, 1845. He was a pupil of Falguère and Jouffroy, and studied at the École des Beaux-Arts. In 1868 he obtained the Prix de Rome, and the same year exhibited a medallion at the Salon. In 1872 he sent from Rome a plaster statue of David, and Delilah, a bust; and in 1874 "Gloria Victis," a group in bronze, attracted much attention, and was purchased by the Government. "The Genius of the Arts," intended for the grand entrance of the Louvre, was exhibited in 1877; the plaster model of the bas-relief for the tomb of Michelet in Père la Chaise, in 1879; and a statue of "Arago," in 1880. Besides these he has modelled various portrait busts, including that of Victor Hugo for the Senate in 1890. Among his most recent works are "Le Regret," a statue, for the tomb of Cabanel; a plaster statue of William Tell for the town of Lausanne, and a number of medallions. M. Mercié was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1874, and made an officer in 1879. In 1887 the Institute voted him their biennial prize of 20,000 francs, and the Academy of Fine Arts elected him one of their members in 1891. He is Professor of Drawing and Sculpture at the Beaux-Arts.

MEREDITH, George, novelist and poet, born in Hampshire, about 1828, and educated partly in Germany, was brought up to the law, which he quitted for literature. He has written "Poems," 1851; "The Shaving of Shagpat, an Arabian Entertainment," a burlesque prose poem, 1855; "Farina, a Legend of Cologne," 1857; "The Ordeal of Richard Feverel," a philosophical novel, bearing upon the more serious questions of moral education, 1859; "Evan Harrington," a serial tale of modern life, first printed in Once a Week, and republished in a separate form 1861; "Modern Love: Poems and Ballads," 1862; "Emilia in England," 1864; "Rhoda Fleming," 1865; "Vittoria," 1866; "The Adventures of Harry Richmond," 1871; "The Egoist," a novel, 3 vols., 1879; "The Tragic Comedians," 2 vols., 1881, a novel founded on the life and tragic fate of Ferdinand Lassalle, the German socialist; and "Poems and Lyrics of the Joy of Earth," 1883; "Diana of the Crossways," 1885; "Ballads and Poems of Tragic Life," 1887; and "A Reading of Earth," 1888. His novel, "One of Our Conquerors," was published in the Fortnightly Review in 1890, and "Lord Ormont and his Aminta" appeared in the summer of 1894. In 1892 appeared the "Empty Purse," a volume of poems, and, in the autumn of that year, Mr. Meredith was elected President of the Incorporated Society of Authors in succession to Lord Tennyson. A style of much obscurity and an excess of epigram have long prevented Mr. Meredith's works from becoming popular with the average novel-reading public, but among the cultured and critical few he has latterly been regarded as the first of living novelists.

MERIVALE, Herman Charles, son of the late Herman Merivale, Permanent Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, and afterwards for India, was born in London, Jan. 27, 1839, and educated at Harrow and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1861. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1864, and served on the Western Circuit and Exeter Sessions. He afterwards practised in the Privy Council on Indian Appeals. Under the late Lord Beaconfield's Reform Act, he served on the Boundary Commission for North Wales. From 1870 to 1880 he was editor of the Annual Register, and in 1874, owing to ill-health, was obliged to give up the legal profession. Since then he has occupied himself with literature, and for a time with politics. His chief works are the plays "All for Her," 1874; "Forget me Not," 1879; "The Cynic," 1882; Fédora" (from Sardou), 1883; and "Our Joan," 1885 (written in conjunction with his wife, Mrs. Merivale, as were also the comedies of "The Butler," "The Don," and "The Whip-Hand"); a novel, "Faucit of Balliol," 1882; "Binko's Blues," a fairy tale, 1884; "White Pilgrim, and other Poems," 1883; "Florien and other Poems," 1884; besides some other dramas and various essays, travels, verse, &c., in All the Year Round (under Charles Dickens), and in weekly papers and monthly magazines. "Ravenswood," a blank-verse tragedy, played by Mr. Irving, on the subject of Scott's novel of "The Bride of Lammermoor," was produced in 1891.

MERRIMAN, John Xavier, the son of the Bishop of Grahamstown, was born in 1841, at Street, Somersetshire, and was educated at Radley. He was Commissioner of Crown Lands, Cape of Good Hope, from 1875 to 1878, and from 1881 to 1884. In 1890 he was the Treasurer of the Colony, and retained that office till 1893.

MERRY, The Rev. William Walter, D.D., Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford, son of the late Walter Merry, Esq., and grandson of William Merry, Esq., for many years Deputy-Secretary for War, was born in 1835, and educated at Cheltenham College, whence he proceeded to Oxford, as a scholar of Balliol, in 1853. Dr. Merry was placed in the first class in Classical Moderations in 1854, and in the second class in Lit. Humaniores in 1856. He gained the Chancellor's Prize for the Latin Essay in 1858; and in the next year he was elected Fellow and Tutor of Lincoln College, an appointment which he held till his election in 1884 to the place of Rector of that society, in succession to the late Mark Pattison. In 1861 he was presented to the Vicarage of All Saints, in the City of Oxford, in the patronage of his college. In 1880 Dr. Merry was elected to the Office of Public Orator in the University of Oxford, and was appointed one of the Select Preachers, 1878-79, 1889-90; and in 1883-84 he was nominated by the Bishop of London as one of the preachers in the Chapel Royal Whitehall. Dr. Merry has taken a prominent part in teaching and examining in the University, having frequently filled the post of Classical Moderator. The editions of clasical authors, which he has undertaken for the Clarendon Press, are well known and widely circulated: the principal ones are "Homer, Odyssey," i.-xii., 2nd edit., 1886; the same for Schools, 40th thousand; and a series of the plays of Aristophanes, of which the "Wasps" was published in 1893. In 1891 he published "Selected Fragments of Roman Poetry."

METTERNICH (Prince De), Richard Clement Joseph Lothaire Hermann, Diplomatist, son of the famous statesman, Prince Metternich, born at Vienna, Jan. 7, 1829, was educated as a diplomatist, became attached to the Austrian embassy at Paris in 1852, and was made Secretary of Legation there in Dec., 1854. In the complications which arose in 1859, before the Italian war broke out, Prince Metternich was entrusted by the Austrian Government with a special mission to Paris, and at the close of the war he became Ambassador of Austria at the French court, which position he retained till Dec., 1871, when he retired into private life. In 1880 he published his father's memoirs. He was named Hereditary Councillor of the Austrian Empire, April 18, 1861, and Councillor in Nov., 1864. He married in 1856 the Princess Pauline Sandor, who was celebrated in her day for her influence in political Paris and at the imperial Court.

MEXICO, President of the Republic of. See Diaz, General Porfirio.

MEXICO, ex-Empress of. See Charlotte.

MEYER, Dr. Hans, African traveller, was born March 22, 1858, at Hildburghausen, studied at Leipzig, Berlin, and Strasburg, where he prepared a great work on "The Strasburg Guild of Goldsmiths, from its Origin until 1681." In 1884 he entered his father's publishing business in Leipzig as partner. Previously he had travelled for two years in India, the Sunda Archipelago, Eastern Asia and America, and had especially remained some time on the Philippine Islands, to undertake some ethnological researches on the Igorrotes, the results of which he made known in the illustrated work, "Eine Weltreise," 1884. In Dec., 1886, he went to South Africa, travelled through Cape Colony, Transvaal, and Natal; and, in the summer of 1887, through the territory of the German East African Company. From Mombassa Dr. Meyer travelled through the district of Teita, as far as the Kilima Ndscharo, he being the first to ascend the same, almost to the summit of the ice-covered Kibo, 5,700 metres; then he travelled through the Savannes, to the south of the Kilima Ndscharo, as far as the Pagani River, and along this stream to the coast. Later on he travelled through the Valley of the Kingani and the District of Usaranno. In 1888, Meyer, accompanied by the African traveller, O. Baumann, undertook the new well-organised expedition to the Kilima Ndscharo, which was stopped by the insurrection that had taken place in the meantime in the district of the German East African Company, and could penetrate only a short distance into the country. Meyer himself, as well as Baumann, was taken prisoner by the Arab leader Bushiri, robbed of all his property, and could be released only by the payment of a large ransom; this having been done, he returned to Europe, and published the splendid work, "Zum Schneedom des Kilima Ndsharo," 1888, with forty photographs. This failure did not discourage Meyer, and a new expedition was organised. It was accompanied by the Austrian mountaineer, Purtscheller; and in Sept. 1889, the march was commenced at Mombassa through English East African territory. This time the goal was reached, the Kibo was scaled, the highest peak of which was named the Emperor William's Peak, and was estimated to be about 6,000 metres elevation. At the same time a large crater was discovered on the Kibo, and on its side the first glacier ever discovered in Africa. The ascent of the smaller Marvensi Peak proved to be impracticable.

MEYNELL, Mrs. Alice, is a younger daughter of Mr. T. J. Thompson, one of Mr. Charles Dickens's most intimate friends. Devoted to literature from her girlhood, Miss Alice Thompson's first volume, "Preludes," was illustrated by her sister, Lady Butler, the painter of "The Roll Call." These early poems won the warm praise of Mr. Ruskin and Mr. Dante Rossetti; and, with a few additions of later date, they were republished in 1892, and have run through several editions. At the same date was published a companion volume of prose, "The Rhythm of Life," and other essays, which Mr. Coventry Patmore welcomed in the Fortnightly Review as "classical work," placing her "in the very front rank of living writers in prose." Miss Alice Thompson, who married in 1877 Mr. Wilfrid Meynell, has been a constant contributor to the National Observer (under Mr. Henley's editorship), the Pall Mall Gazette, the Saturday Review, the Tablet, and the art magazines.

MEYNELL, Wilfrid, born in 1852, belongs to a family long settled in Yorkshire, and, on his mother's side, is the great-great-grandson of William Tuke, of York, to whom, as to Pinel in France, England is indebted for the adoption of humane methods in the treatment of the insane. In 1881, Mr. Meynell became, at the request of Cardinal Manning, the editor and proprietor of the Weekly Register, and a little later he founded the Roman Catholic magazine, Merry England. Mr. Meynell (sometimes using the nom de plume "John Oldcastle") is the author of "Journals and Journalism: A Guide for Literary Beginners," and of biographies of Cardinal Manning, Cardinal Newman, and Pope Leo XIII., all of which have passed through several editions; also of many contributions to the Contemporary Review, the Art Journal, the Magazine of Art, the Athenæum, the Saturday Review, the Pall Mall Budget, and the Illustrated London News.

MEYRICK, The Rev. Frederick, M.A., born in 1827, was educated at Trinity College, Oxford, of which he was successively scholar, fellow, and tutor; graduated B.A. in honours in 1847, and afterwards held the University offices of Select Preacher and Public Examiner. He was appointed one of her Majesty's Whitehall Preachers in 1856, Inspector of Schools in 1859, and became Rector of Blickling and Erpingham, in Norfolk, in 1868; in the same year he was appointed examining chaplain to the late Bishop Christopher Wordsworth, and non-residentiary canon of Lincoln in 1869. He was the chief agent in establishing the Anglo-Continental Society, for making known in foreign countries the principles of the English Church, and with that object in view has edited many dogmatic and controversial treatises in Latin, Italian, Spanish, &c. He has written "Practical Working of the Church in Spain," published in 1851; "The Moral Theology of the Church of Rome," in 1857; "The Outcast and Poor of London," in 1858; "The Wisdom of Pity," in 1859; "But isn't Kingsley right after all?" "On Dr. Newman's Rejection of Liguori's Doctrine of Equivocation," in 1864; "Baptism, Conversion, Regeneration" in 1882; "The Doctrine of the Church of England on the Holy Communion re-stated," 1885. He has contributed to Dr. Smith's "Dictionaries of the Bible and of Antiquities;" to the Speaker's Commentary on the Bible edited by Canon Cook (Joel, Obadiah, Ephesians), to the Pulpit Commentary (Leviticus), to Hodder and Stoughton's Theological Library ("Is Dogma a Necessity?" 1883) to the National Churches series ("History of the Church in Spain," 1892), and has been editor for seventeen years of the Foreign Church Chronicle and Review. During the year 1886-87 he was Principal of Codrington College, Barbadoes.

MIALL, L. C., Professor of Biology in the Yorkshire College, was born at Bradford in 1842, and is the son of the Rev. J. G. Miall. He was appointed in 1871 Curator and Secretary to the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society, and in 1876 became Professor of Biology in the Yorkshire College. He has written many memoirs and papers on Anatomy and Palæontology; among others: "Reports on Labyrinthodonts" (Brit. Assoc. 1873-4), "Anatomy of the Elephant," with F. Greenwood (1878); "Anatomy, &c., of the Cockroach," with Prof. Denny (1886). He has also published many papers on Insect Anatomy, and is author of "Object Lessons from Nature," and various educational articles dealing especially with elementary science. He was admitted to the Royal Society in 1892, and is Lecturer for the Gilchrist Trustees, and Examiner for the Science and Art Department and India Civil Service.

MICHAEL (Grand Duke) Nicolaievitch, brother of the late Alexander II., Emperor of Russia, and fourth son of the late Czar Nicholas I., was born Oct. 13 (25), 1832. He is a General and Grand Master of Artillery, General Aide-de-Camp to the Czar, Governor-General of the Caucasus, and head of several regiments of artillery, cavalry, and infantry. In the war between Russia and Turkey the Grand Duke Michael had the chief command of the army of the Caucasus. Alexander III. afterwards appointed him President of the Council of State. He married, in Aug. 1857, Olga-Féodorovna (formerly Cecilia Augusta), daughter of the late Leopold, Grand Duke of Baden. She died in April, 1891. The eldest of his children is the Grand Duke Nicholas, who was born in 1859.

MICHEL, Louise, a French revolutionary leader, was born at Vroncourt in 1830, and first distinguished herself by her poetical and musical talents, which were recognised and encouraged by Victor Hugo. In 1860 she opened a school in the Quartier Montmartre, Paris; and in 1870 took an active part with the revolutionary Commune, and was made prisoner; and though she eloquently defended herself before the judges, she was sentenced to transportation for life. On the amnesty to political prisoners in 1880 she returned to Paris; and, continuing to take part in Communist assemblies, she was re-imprisoned in 1883, and again in 1886. She now lives in London, and, as an Anarchist, frequently addresses Hyde Park meetings. She is author of "Memoirs" and of "The Microbes of Society," a novel.

MIDDLETON, Professor John Henry, M.A., D.C.L., born at York in 1846, was educated at first in Italy, then at Cheltenham College, and at Exeter College, Oxford. He is M.A. of Oxford, and M.A. of Cambridge, D.C.L. of Bologna; and has been Slade Professor of Fine Art in the University of Cambridge since 1886. Dr. Middleton has also been Director of the Fitzwilliam Museum, and is Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and Lecturer at the Royal Academy, London. He is the author of the following works: "Ancient Rome," 1885, 2nd edit., 1888; also 84 articles in the last edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and many articles in Archæologia, Journal of Hellenic Studies, and other artistic and antiquarian periodicals in England and in Italy.

MIDLETON, Viscount, William Brodrick, eldest son of the Rev. William John Brodrick, Dean of Exeter, and afterwards 7th Viscount Midleton, was born at Castle Rising, Norfolk, Jan. 6th, 1830, and educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1851, and M.A., 1857. He was called to the Bar in 1855, and was returned as member for Mid-Surrey in 1868. He was High Steward of Kingston-on-Thames, 1874-93, and is J.P. and D.L. for Surrey, and J.P. for Cork. In 1876 he served on the Royal Commission to inquire into Noxious Gases, and in 1878 on the Commission of the Sale and Exchange of Livings. Lord Midleton has for many years been known as a prominent member of the Conservative party in the House of Lords.

MILAN (OBRENOVITCH) I., ex-King of Servia, grandson of Ephraim Obrenovitch, brother of Milos, and consequently second cousin of Prince Michael, who is noticed in previous editions of this work, was born Aug. 10, 1854, at Jassy, of a Moldavian mother, who had married the only son of Prince Ephraim. He was adopted by Prince Michael, who had no children by his marriage with Julia Hunyadi, and was sent by him, in 1864, to Paris to be educated at the Lycée Louis-le-Grand. The youth's studies were interrupted by the events of 1868, and the assassination of Michael Obrenovitch. Hastening to Servia, he was proclaimed Prince in July of that year, the government of the country being entrusted, during his minority, to a Council of Regency, consisting of Messrs. Blaznavatz, Ristics, and Garrilovics, three able and patriotic men, who continued the liberal and reforming policy begun by Michael III. Their regency terminated with the coronation of Prince Milan IV.; but M. Ristics continued to possess the confidence of the Prince, who was only eighteen years of age when he was crowned in Belgrade cathedral, Aug. 22, 1872. On Jan. 12, 1876, Prince Milan issued a proclamation stating that "the insurrection in the Turkish provinces has found its way to the frontiers of Servia, enclosing the whole Principality by an iron band," which had compelled him "to place his people under arms." Shortly afterwards (June 22) he sent what may be called a threatening letter to the Grand Vizier, and then he formally proclaimed (June 30) that he intended to join his arms to those of Bosnia and Herzegovina in order to secure the liberation of the Slavonic Christians from the yoke of the Porte. On July 2, a joint declaration of war was sent by the Prince of Servia and the Hospodar of Montenegro to the Turkish Government, their troops crossing the frontier at the same time. The Prince departed from Belgrade (July 24) to assume the command of the Servian troops in the field; but he soon returned to his capital (Aug. 12), and appointed the Russian general, Tchernayeff, to the command of the Servian forces. On Sept. 1, an important battle under the walls of Alexinatz resulted in the complete defeat of the Servian army. The Great Powers then interposed, but the negotiations for the suspension of hostilities were delayed by an ill-advised step which Prince Milan, at the instigation of General Tchernayeff, was induced to take. On Sept. 16 he was proclaimed King of Servia at Deligrad, although upon the general expression of disapproval which followed, his Highness appeared disposed to disclaim any active share in the performance. War broke out again, and the Servian army, though largely reinforced by Russian volunteers—men as well as officers—was ignominiously beaten. On Oct. 31, the Turks captured the town of Alexinatz, and on the following day Deligrad was captured, thus leaving the road to Belgrade completely open. A peace was then concluded between Turkey and Servia on favourable terms to the latter. When, however, Russia made war upon Turkey, Prince Milan saw an opportunity of gaining complete independence, and a proclamation of the Servian Government, dated Dec. 14, 1877, made known that the Servian army was immediately to cross the Turkish frontier, which they did on the following day, under the command of Generals Lesjanin and Benitzki. After the close of the war the independence of Servia was recognised, and its boundaries defined by the Treaty of Berlin (July 13, 1878). Prince Milan married, Oct. 17, 1875, Natalie, daughter of the late Russian Colonel Keschko, by his wife Pulcheria, Princess of Stourdza. Servia was proclaimed a kingdom under King Milan I., on March 6, 1882. On Oct. 23, in that year, as the King and Queen were entering the cathedral of Belgrade, Madame Markovitch, widow of Lieutenant-colonel Markovitch, who had been shot for a dynastic conspiracy five years previously, fired at his Majesty, missing him and wounding in the thigh a woman who was looking on. The attempted assassination took place just after the King's return from Rustchuk, whither he had gone to visit Prince Alexander of Bulgaria. Unfortunately this friendly intercourse did not, in 1885, prevent King Milan declaring war upon Prince Alexander, on the ground of the unlawful union of Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia. His army had some success at first, but within a fortnight was driven back, defeated and crushed, within the Servian frontier. Prince Alexander behaved like a hero; but it is not known that King Milan ever exposed himself under fire. King Milan has a son, the Crown Prince Alexander, born Oct. 14, 1876, in whose favour he abdicated on March 6, 1889, in consequence of the troubles arising out of his quarrel with his Queen Natalie. In January, 1893, the news that he had become reconciled to Queen Natalie caused much rejoicing in Servia. The young King of Servia recalled ex-King Milan to Belgrade in Jan., 1894, to aid him govern his subjects, who, during the whole of that year were torn by political dissensions. Milan, despite his promises to the contrary, arrived at Belgrade on Jan., 21. In March, the decree of divorce between the ex-King and Queen was annulled, and in April, Alexander restored his father and mother, by royal ukase, to their constitutional rights as members of the royal house. The Court of Cassation on May 17, declared this ukase null and void, but on May, 21, the Court itself was done away with, and the Constitution of 1888 suspended in favour of that of 1869.

MILES, Major-General Nelson Appleton, American soldier, was born at Westminster, Mass., Aug. 8, 1839. He received an academic education, and was engaged in business when the Civil War broke out. Entering the army as a lieutenant of volunteers he rose to the full rank of Major-General of Volunteers during its progress, and at its close was made a Colonel in the regular army, 1866. In 1867 he was breveted Brigadier-General and Major-General for gallantry shown on battle-fields during the war. Since the close of the war he has been stationed chiefly in the West, where he has been engaged in a number of conflicts with the Indians. He received the full rank of Brigadier-General in 1880, and on the death of General Crook in 1890, was made a Major-General in the regular army, now the highest grade in the American service. He is at present, 1894, in command of the Department of the Missouri, with headquarters at Chicago.

MILLAIS, Sir John Everett, Bart., R.A., son of John William Millais, Esq., by Mary, daughter of Richard Evermy, Esq., and widow of Enoch Hodgkinson, Esq., was born at Southampton in 1829. The family of Millais has held for centuries a place among the lesser landlords in the island of Jersey, where the name doubtless existed long prior to the Norman conquest of England. At the early age of nine he began his art education in Mr. Sass's Academy, and two years later he became a student at the Royal Academy, where he gained the principal prizes for drawing. He gained his first Medal at the Society of Arts when only nine. "Pizarro seizing the Inca of Peru," his first exhibited picture, was at the Academy in 1846, followed by "Dunstan's Emissaries seizing Queen Elgiva," and a colossal cartoon at the Westminster Hall competition, "The Widow's Mite," in 1847, and the picture of "The Tribe of Benjamin seizing the Daughters of Shiloh," at the British Institution in 1848. Keats' "Isabella" was the subject of his pencil in 1849. While a student in the Academy's schools, his tastes had tacitly rebelled against the routine conventions of academic teaching, and, strengthened in that feeling by such specimens of early Italian art as fell in their way, he and his friends, William Holman Hunt and Dante Gabriel Rossetti, resolved to study nature as it appeared to them, not as it appeared in "the antique." These views were afterwards adopted by Charles Collins and other younger painters, who were termed, half in jest and half in earnest, "The Pre-Raphaelite School." For a short time the artists tried to enforce their views by the pen as well as the brush, in a short-lived periodical, The Germ, or Art and Poetry, which appeared in 1850. The principal works executed by Mr. Millais under the influence of his new convictions are a mystical picture of "Our Saviour," and "Ferdinand lured by Ariel," in 1850; "Mariana in the Moated Grange," and "The Woodman's Daughter," in 1851; and "The Huguenot" and "Ophelia," in 1852. Mr. Ruskin came, in 1851, to the support of the new school with enthusiastic approval, freely expressed in letters to the Times, in 1852, as well as in a pamphlet on Pre-Raphaelitism and in his "Lectures on Architecture and Painting," in 1853. Mr. Millais was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1853, and became R.A. in Dec., 1863. He exhibited "The Order of Release" and "The Proscribed Royalist" in 1853; "The Rescue" in 1855; "Peace Concluded," "Autumn Leaves," and "L'Enfant du Régiment," in 1856; "A Dream of the Past—Sir Isumbrus at the Ford," in 1857; "The Heretic," in 1858; "Vale of Rest," and "Spring Flowers," in 1860; "The Black Brunswicker," in 1861; "My First Sermon," in 1863; "My Second Sermon," and "Charley is my Darling," in 1864; "Joan of Arc," and "The Romans leaving Britain," in 1865; and "Sleeping," "Waking," and "Jephthah," in 1867; "Sisters," "Rosalind and Celia," "Stella," "Pilgrims to St. Paul's," and "Souvenir of Velasquez" (his diploma work), in 1868; "The Gambler's Wife," "Vanessa," "The End of the Chapter," and "A Dream at Dawn," in 1869; "A Flood," "The Knight Errant," "The Boyhood of Raleigh," and "A Widow's Mite," in 1870; "Chill October," "Joshua fighting with Amelek," "A Somnambulist," and "Yes or No?" in 1871; "Flowing to the River," and "Flowing to the Sea," in 1872; "Early Days," "New Laid Eggs," and "Lallah Rookh," in 1873; "Scotch Firs," "Winter Fuel," "The Picture of Health," "The North-West Passage," "Still for a Moment," and "A Day Dream," in 1874; "The Fringe of the Moor," "The Crown of Love," and "No!" in 1875; "Forbidden Fruit," "Over the Hills and Far Away," and "Getting Better," in 1876; "A Yeoman of the Guard," "The Sound of Many Waters," and "Yes!" in 1877; "The Princes in the Tower," "A Jersey Lily" (Mrs. Langtry), and "St. Martin's Summer," in 1878. In 1878 Mr. Millais also exhibited "A Good Resolve," in the Grosvenor Gallery; and "The Bride of Lammermoor," in King Street, St. James's. He exhibited at the Royal Academy "The Tower of Strength," and a portrait of Mr. Gladstone, 1879; a portrait of himself (painted by invitation for the Collection of Portraits of Artists painted by themselves in the Uffizi Gallery, Florence), "Cuckoo," and a portrait of Mr. Bright, 1880; portrait of Principal Caird, D.D., "Cinderella," and portraits of the Earl of Beaconsfield and of Dr. Fraser, Bishop of Manchester, 1881; a portrait of Cardinal Newman, 1882; "Une Grande Dame," "The Grey Lady," a portrait of the Marquis of Salisbury, and "Forget-me-not," 1883. A large number of these, as well as some later pictures, were brought together in the exhibition of the artist's works held at the Grosvenor Gallery in the early months of 1886. "Mercy," "Lilac," and a portrait of Lord Rosebery were his chief pictures in 1887. In 1890 he exhibited in the Royal Academy, "The Moon is up and yet it is not Night;" and portraits of "The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone and his Grandson." In 1893 he exhibited a portrait of John Hare, and "The Girlhood of Saint Theresa," but showed nothing in 1894. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1878. In 1881 he was appointed a trustee of the National Portrait Gallery, in the place of the late Dean Stanley; and in 1882, he was elected a Foreign Associate of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, in the place of the Italian sculptor Dupré. In 1885 he was made a baronet on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, the portrait of whom is considered one of Millais's finest efforts. Sir J. E. Millais married Euphemia Chalmers, daughter of George Gray, Esq., of Bowerswell, Perth, N.B.

MILLER, "Joaquin," a Scottish-American poet, whose real name is Cincinnatus Heine Miller, was born in Indiana, Nov. 10, 1842. When he was ten years old his father emigrated to Oregon, whence the boy went three years later to try his fortune in California. After a wandering life of seven years, he returned home and entered a lawyer's office at Eugene, Oregon, having been twice severely wounded in the Indian wars. The next year he was an express messenger in the gold-mining districts of Idaho, which he left to take charge of the Democratic Register, a weekly newspaper at Eugene. In 1863 he opened a law office in Cañon City, Oregon. Hostile Indians invested the new city, and he led an expedition against them into their own country; but after a long and bloody campaign, he was finally beaten back, leaving his dead on the field. From 1866 to 1870 he served as county judge of Grant county, and during this time began to write his poems. He published first a collection in paper covers called "Specimens," and next a volume with the title "Joaquin et al." In 1870 he went to London, where he published in the following year his "Songs of the Sierras," and "Pacific Poems." In 1873 appeared "Songs of the Sun Lands," and a prose volume entitled "Life among the Modocs: Unwritten History." His later works are "The Ship in the Desert," 1875; "First Fam'lies in the Sierras," 1875 (republished in 1881 under the title of "The Danites in the Sierras"); "The One Fair Woman," 1876; "Baroness of N. Y.," 1877; "Songs of Far Away Lands," 1878; "Songs of Italy," 1878; "Shadows of Shasta," 1881; "Memorie and Rime," 1884; and "Forty-Nine." He is the author of several plays, mostly dramatizations of his own works; among which "The Danites," "The Silent Man," "Mexico," "'49," and "Tally Ho!" are more or less popular. He is now (1893) writing the "Life of Christ," in verse, and "Growing Olives in Oakland, California."

MILLER, The Hon. William Henry Harrison, LL.D., American statesman, was born at Augusta, Oneida co., N. Y., Sept. 6, 1840. He graduated at Hamilton College in 1861, and soon after went to Ohio, where he taught in a school for a year at Manmee City. He then studied law for a time in the office of the late Chief Justice Waite at Toledo, and was afterwards, for a brief period during the Civil War, in the Union Army. In 1863 he went to Peru, Ind., and taught in the public schools for two years. He was admitted to the Bar in 1865; practised for a year in Peru; and then settled in Fort Wayne, Ind. In 1874 he formed a law partnership with Mr. (afterwards President) Harrison at Indianapolis, which continued until the election of Mr. Harrison to the Presidency. Mr. Miller was offered the Cabinet appointment of Attorney-General by his partner at the opening of the present administration, March, 1889, which he accepted and retained until the close of Mr. Harrison's administration (March, 1893), when he resumed the practice of his profession at Indianapolis. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Hamilton College in 1889.

MILLS, Sir Charles, K.C.M.G., C.B., was educated at Bonn, and served in the 98th Foot, and on the staff of H.M. army in India, China, Turkey, and the Cape. He afterwards served as Commissioner for the formation of German settlements, and subsequently as High-Sheriff, Auditor, and Secretary to the Government in British Kaffraria. On the annexation of that territory to Cape Colony he represented the division of King Williamstown in the Colonial Parliament. In October, 1867 he was appointed Chief Finance Clerk to the Colonial Office; in 1871, Chief Clerk; and in 1872, Under-Secretary. He served on special commissions for financial and other matters, and in 1880-2 was commissioner in London for the adjustment of expenditure connected with the Kaffir war. In July, 1882, he was appointed Agent-General for the Cape of Good Hope in London, and Royal Commissioner and Executive Commissioner for the Cape Colony at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, 1886. He is member of the Governing Body and Executive Council of the Imperial Institute, and of the Council Royal Colonial Institute.

MILLS, Professor Edmund James, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.C.S., son of Charles Frederick and Mary Anne Mills, and a lineal descendant of the Osmonds of Lowmandale (Uplowman, Devonshire), was born in London on Dec. 8, 1840. When he was a year old his parents removed to Cheltenham, and it was at the ancient Grammar School of that town that he received his early education, which was partly classical and partly scientific in character. It was doubtless at this school that he imbibed his strong predilection for chemistry. In 1858 he was elected to a provincial scholarship at the Royal School of Mines, London, where he studied his favourite science under the late Professor A. W. von Hofmann. In due course (1861) he took the Technical Diploma of the School. In the same year he became assistant to the late Dr. John Stenhouse, F.R.S., for whom he conducted various investigations in connection with organic chemistry. He was appointed in the following year to the newly-established chemical tutorship at Glasgow University, and remained there about three years, teaching and investigating. On his return to London he held an assistantship in the Laboratory of University College, 1866. He next accepted, 1867, the superintendence of the private laboratory of the late Sir Charles Taylor, Bart., where he remained seven years, busy with preparations and original investigations. In 1875 he was appointed to the Chair of Technical Chemistry founded in connection with the then Anderson's University, Glasgow, by the late Mr. James Young, F.R.S., of Kelly; this position he still retains. He took the degree of B.Sc. (first division) Lond. in 1863, and D.Sc. in 1865. At one time he held the post of Assistant Chemical Examiner in the London University. He was elected F.C.S. in 1862; F.R.S. in 1874; and was one of the founders of the Institute of Chemistry and of the Physical Society of London. Dr. Mills is the author of a long series of original memoirs, the first of which was published in 1860. Their general drift has been towards the dynamical, rather than the material, aspect of chemistry; and in putting to one side the atomic theory, he has deliberately adopted a position among the minority of living scientists. Of his leading memoirs may be mentioned a group upon nitro-compounds, and another relating to Statical and Dynamical Ideas in Chemistry; an investigation of Electrostriction and Chemical Repulsion, of the fundamental phenomena of which he has been the discoverer; a theory of boiling-point and melting-point which has led to very simple and accurate mathematical expressions connecting these phenomena with chemical composition; and a theory, equally simple in character, of the formation and numerics of the elementary bodies. As a chemical technologist he has also published a variety of researches clearing up doubtful issues, adducing new points of view, and, in general, demonstrating that chemical technology is a science of measurement. "Destructive Distillation," a little book first published in 1877, is now in its fourth edition; "Fuel and its Applications" (of which Mr. F. J. Rowan is joint-author), a very exhaustive and copious work, appeared in 1889. In 1867 Dr. Mills married Amelia, daughter of the late Mr. William Burnett, of London, by whom he had sole issue in 1869, Edith Mary, who died in 1884.

MILNE (Admiral of the Fleet), Sir Alexander Milne, Bart., G.C.B., and G.C.B. (Civil), F.R.S.E., is the second son of the late Admiral Sir David Milne, G.C.B. He was born in 1806, and first entered the Naval Service in 1817, was actively employed as Lieutenant, Commander and Captain on the Brazil, Home and North American and West Indian Stations; promoted to Commander, 1830, and Captain, 1839; was Flag Captain to his father at Devonport, 1842-5, where he commanded the Caledonia, and was employed at Tangier, the coast of Portugal, and as Flag Captain to Admiral Bowles in Ireland; was also Flag Captain to Sir Charles Ogle at Portsmouth, and to Sir Charles Napier in the Channel Squadron. In 1847 he was appointed a Junior Lord of the Admiralty, and served with successive governments until 1858, during which period he was Superintending Lord of the Great Store Victualling and Transport Departments, and (1855) after the Crimean War was created K.C.B. (Civil), and in 1858, a G.C.B. (Civil), and was instrumental in introducing many important measures for the benefit of the service. Sir Alexander was again appointed to the Admiralty as the Senior Naval Lord in 1866-68, and at a subsequent period in 1872-76, when he retired, having served with nine First Lords of the Admiralty, and was then created a Baronet. In 1860 he was appointed to the North American and West Indian command, with the temporary rank of Vice-Admiral, and received H.R.H. the Prince of Wales at Halifax. Before the termination of his command he received the approval of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and his command was extended for a period of one year. Sir Alexander was the only Admiral on the station who had ever officially visited any ports of the United States since the war of 1812. He arrived at New York in Oct., 1863, at the time of the Civil War, and his visit, as expressed by Lord Lyons, H.M.'s Minister at Washington, to the Foreign Office, appears to have proved satisfactory. He said: "Sir Alexander Milne was received with the utmost courtesy and cordiality by the President as well as the members of the government at Washington, and there is good reason to believe that his visit to the United States has produced an excellent impression. The Members of the Government seemed anxious to show that they were not unaware that to nothing more than to the excellent judgment, and to the firm but temperate and conciliatory conduct of the Admiral is owing the maintenance of harmonious relations between the two countries." On his return to England he received the commendations of the Admiralty. In 1869 Sir Alexander was appointed Commander-in-Chief on the Mediterranean station, with his flag in the Lord Warden. He was present at the opening of the Suez Canal by the Empress Eugenie in November. He visited various ports of the station, and, in Aug., 1870, assumed the command of the combined Mediterranean and Channel Squadrons at Gibraltar, for exercise on the coast of Portugal. In September he returned to England and struck his flag, receiving the approval of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty for the able manner in which he had performed his duties in the Mediterranean. He was elected an Elder Brother of the Trinity House in 1870, has been chairman of various professional committees, and President of a committee for the Defence of the Colonies and Coaling Stations. In 1888, as Chairman of the Committee of the Jubilee Offering made by the navy and marines to the Queen, he presented her Majesty with silver models of men-of-war. Sir Alexander is a magistrate for Berwickshire. He married, in 1850, Euphemia, daughter of the late Archibald Cochran of Ashkirk.

MIOLAN-CARVALHO (or CARVALHO-MIOLAN), Madame Marie Caroline, vocalist, born at Marseilles, Dec. 31, 1827, was educated at a school in the neighbourhood, and shortly afterwards entered the Conservatoire of Paris, where she remained two years under Duprez. Having carried off the first prize at the Conservatoire, she made a tour through the principal cities of France, in which she sang in concerts in company with her master, and on her return to Paris made her début at the Grand Opéra with brilliant success, in "Lucia di Lammermoor," and the second act of "La Juive." She was immediately afterwards engaged at the Opéra Comique, where she appeared in Auber's "Ambassadrice," and, later, in "Le Caïd" and "Giralda," the latter having been composed expressly for her by Adolphe Adam. She sang in "Actéon," "Les Mystères d'Udolpho," "La Cour de Célimène," "Les Noces de Jeannette," and "Le Nabab," all written for her. In 1853, Mdlle. Miolan was married to M. Léon Carvaille, called Carvalho, director of the Théâtre Lyrique, of which establishment she at once became the prima donna, singing in "Fanchonette," "Margot," "La Reine Topaze," "La Marguérite," "Les Noces de Figaro," and other new operas. On the death of Madame Bosio, in 1859, Mr. Gye was recommended by M. Meyerbeer to supply her place with Madame Miolan-Carvalho, who appeared, July 26, in the character of Dinorah, and at once became a favourite. During her second season in London, she was completely established as one of the first operatic singers of the day. She was the original Marguérite in Gounod's opera of "Faust," and appeared at the Royal Italian Opera of London in that character with great success in 1863. In 1868 she was engaged at an immense salary at the Paris Opera, where, as well as at the Opéra Comique, she continued to sing till her retirement from the theatre.

MIRANDA, Countess de, née Nilsson, Christina, daughter of a labouring man, born at Wederslöf, near Wexiö, in Sweden, Aug. 3, 1843, at an early age evinced great taste for music. She became quite proficient on the violin, learned the flute, and attended fairs and other places of public resort, at which she sang, accompanying herself on the violin. While performing in this manner at a fair at Ljungby, in June, 1857, her extraordinary powers attracted the attention of Mr. F. G. Tornérhjelm, a gentleman of influence, who rescued her from her vagrant life, and placed her at school first at Halmstad, and afterwards at Stockholm, where she was instructed by M. Franz Berwald. She made her first appearance at Stockholm in 1860, went to Paris, continued her musical education under Masset and Wurtel, and came out at the Théâtre Lyrique, Oct. 27, as Violetta in the "Traviata," with such success that she was engaged for three years. She made her first appearance in London at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1867, proved the great operatic attraction at that establishment during the season, and has since performed here with constantly increasing success. More recently she paid a visit to the United States (1870), where, within less than a year, she is said to have cleared £30,000. After a Transatlantic trip of two years she reappeared at Drury Lane Theatre, May 28, 1872, in "La Traviata." After this date she still occasionally made her appearance for short periods at Brussels and St. Petersburg. She was married at Westminster Abbey, Aug. 27, 1872, to M. Auguste Rouzaud, the son of an eminent French merchant. He died at Paris Feb. 22, 1882; and in 1887 she married, in Paris, Count A. de Miranda.

MIRZA, Mehemed Ali Khan, His Excellency General Alla-us-Saltaneh, the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from the Shah of Persia, has had serious and valuable diplomatic experience. He was for about seven years Persian Consul-General in India, and then afterward in the same capacity for some time at Baghdad, whence he became Governor of Resht; for the last eight years, previous to 1890, he was Persian Consul-General at Tiflis (Caucasus), the Shah having, on this promotion, raised him to the highest rank in the empire—namely, "Alla-us-Saltaneh."

MITCHELL, Donald Grant, LL.D., was born at Norwich, Connecticut, in April, 1822. He graduated at Yale College in 1841, travelled in Europe, and, in 1847, published "Fresh Gleanings, or a New Sheaf from the Old Fields of Continental Europe," under the pseudonym of "Ik Marvel." In 1848 he was again in Europe, and wrote, under his former pseudonym, "The Battle Summer," 1849. Returning, to New York, he published, anonymously "The Lorgnette," a series of satirical sketches of society, 1850. In the same year appeared "The Reveries of a Bachelor," followed in 1851 by "Dream Life." In 1853 he was appointed United States Consul at Venice. Returning to America in 1855, he purchased a farm, known as Edgewood, near New Haven, Connecticut, where he now resides. In 1873 he was United States Commissioner at the Paris Exposition. He has published "My Farm of Edgewood," 1863; "Wet Days at Edgewood," 1864; "Seven Stories with Basement and Attic," 1864; "Dr. Johns," 1866; "Rural Studies," 1867 (subsequently issued under the title of "Out of Town Places"); "About Old Story-Tellers," 1878; "Bound Together," 1885; and in 1889-90 two volumes of "English Lands, Letters and Kings;" has also edited (1883) an elaborate genealogical "Woodbridge Record." He has been one of the Council of the Yale School of Fine Arts since 1865, and has lectured there and elsewhere on literary and art topics. With strong rural tastes (illustrated by many of his books) he has been associated in an advisory way with the laying out of many public parks and grounds in New Haven and other places.

MITCHELL, The Hon. Peter, Canadian statesman, was born Jan. 4, 1824, at Newcastle, New Brunswick, and was educated at the same place. He was admitted to the Bar in 1848, and in 1856 was elected a representative for his native county to serve in the Provincial Parliament. After serving for five years, he was appointed Life Member of the Legislative Council, and was a member of the Executive Government of New Brunswick from 1858 till 1865, when his Government was defeated on the question of the confederation of the British American provinces. He was three times appointed delegate to Canada and England, with the view of obtaining the construction of the Intercolonial Railway from Halifax to Quebec, and the confederation of the provinces. In 1865 he formed, in connection with the Hon. R. D. Wilmot, an administration to test the province on confederation, and was appointed President of the Executive Committee. Having dissolved, they were sustained by a majority of 33 to 8, and confederation was carried. Mr. Mitchell, who was an ardent advocate of union, did much by his writings and speeches in and out of Parliament to promote British connection. On the organisation of the Dominion Government in July, 1867, Mr. Mitchell was called to the Cabinet as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, which post he held until the resignation of the Macdonald Administration in 1873. He took an active part in the settlement of the Fisheries dispute between the Dominion of Canada and the Government of the United States in 1878, and, later, gave important aid in operations connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Since 1882 he has been representative in the Dominion Parliament for Northumberland County, New Brunswick. He bought the Montreal Herald in 1885, and is now President of the Herald Publishing Company. In 1870 he published "A Review of President Grant's Message to the United States Congress relative to the Canadian Fisheries."

MIVART, Professor St. George, Ph.D. (Rome), M.D., F.R.S., was born at 61 (then 39), Brook Street, Grosvenor Square, London, Nov. 30, 1827, and educated at Clapham Grammar School, Harrow School, King's College, London, and finally at St. Mary's College, Oscott, being prevented from going to Oxford (as intended) through having joined the Roman Catholic Church in 1844. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1851; appointed Lecturer of St. Mary's Hospital Medical School in 1862; elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1867; Vice-President of the Zoological Society in 1869 and 1882; Secretary of the Linnæan Society in 1874—1880; and Vice-President, 1880 and 1892; Professor of Biology at University College, Kensington, in 1874; created a Ph.D. (Rome) in 1876, and M.D. (Louvain) in 1884. Mr. St. George Mivart is the author of various papers in the publications of the Royal, the Linnæan, and the Zoological Societies, from 1864: e.g., "On the Zoology, Anatomy, and Classification of Apes and Lemurs, especially on the Osteology of the Limbs compared with the Limbs of Man" ("Phil. Trans."); "The Myology of the Echidna, Agouti, Hyrax, Iguana, and certain Tailed-Batrachians;" "The Osteology of Birds;" "The Sciatic Plexus of Reptiles;" "The Structure of the Fins of Fishes, and the Nature and Genesis of the Limbs and Limb-Girdles of Vertebrate Animals generally;" "A Memoir of the Insectivora," published in the Cambridge Journal of Anatomy and Physiology, and translated in the Annales des Sciences Naturelles; sundry papers in the Popular Science Review, and articles in the Quarterly, Fortnightly, Dublin and Contemporary and Nineteenth Century Reviews, from 1870. He has also published the following books:—"Genesis of Species," 1871 (two editions); "Lessons in Elementary Anatomy," 1872; "Man and Apes," 1873; "Lessons from Nature" and "Contemporary Evolution," 1876; "Address to the Biological Section of the British Association," 1879; "The Cat" (an introduction to the study of back-boned animals), 1881; "Nature and Thought" (an introduction to a natural philosophy), 1883; "On Truth: a Systematic Inquiry," and "The Origin of Human Reason," 1889; "A Monograph of the Canidæ," 1890; "Birds; an Introduction to Ornithology," 1892; "Types of Animal Life," 1893; and "An Introduction to the Elements of Science," from Mathematics to Metaphysics, 1894. Mr. St. George Mivart also wrote the articles "Apes," "Reptilia (Anatomy)," and "Skeleton," in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica;" a "Defence of Freedom and Liberty of Conscience;" and "Examination of Mr. Herbert Spencer's Psychology," in the Dublin Review. He has delivered lectures at the Zoological Gardens, Regent's Park, at the London Institution, at Leeds, Birmingham, Hull, Bradford, Bristol, Halifax, Leicester, Cardiff, Edinburgh, Dundee, and elsewhere. He is known through the "Genesis of Species" as, to a certain extent, Mr. Darwin's opponent—an opponent who, while fully asserting evolution generally, denies that it is applicable to the human intellect, as also that "natural selection" is in any instance its true cause. He represents the formation of new species as mainly due to one mode of action of that plastic innate power manifest on all hands in nature, as evidenced by the many instances referred to by him. The author brings strongly forward the independent origin of several structures, insistence upon which is perhaps his principal contribution to physical philosophy. In his "Origin of Human Reason" he has pointed out the fundamental distinction between men and animals, distinctly defining wherein the human intellect differs from the highest psychical actions of brutes. In his work "On Truth" he has demonstrated what are the ultimate principles upon which all science must repose. To these expositions no reply has as yet been made. Dr. St. George Mivart, at the invitation of the Belgian Episcopate, has accepted the post of Professor of the Philosophy of Natural History in the University of Louvain.

MODJESKA, Helena, née Opido, actress, born at Cracow, Poland, Oct. 12, 1844, early manifested a desire for the stage, and after her marriage, at the age of seventeen, with her guardian (whose name she still bears on the playbills), a beginning was made with a company of strolling players. It was not, however, until after her husband's death in 1865, and her marriage three years later to Count Bozenta Chlapowski, a Polish patriot and journalist, that she became the theatrical star and favourite of Warsaw, a position which she held until about 1876, when she and her husband emigrated to America, and settled on a ranch in California. This did not prove so profitable as was expected, and in 1877, after only a few months' study of English, she made her appearance in an English version of "Adrienne Lecouvreur" at a theatre in San Francisco. She won the American public immediately, and her record since has been one of continued triumph. She has made a number of tours through the country, has acted several seasons in London and the British provinces, and has thrice visited Poland professionally. Madame Bozenta has appeared in about twenty-five parts in America, principally in the Shakespearian rôles of Beatrice, Imogen, Juliet and Rosalind, and also as Mary Stuart and Camille. She has also made adaptations for the Polish stage of "As You Like It" and "Twelfth Night."

MOENS, William John Charles, the son of Jacob Bernelot Moens, Esq. (d. 1856), of Upper Clapton, Middlesex, was born Aug. 12, 1833. He is a County Councillor for Hampshire, Lymington Rural Division, 1889; and Commissioner of Income and Land Taxes. He is the author of "English Travellers and Italian Brigands," 2 vols., 1866; "Through France and Belgium by River and Canal in the Steam-yacht Ytene, R.V.Y.C.," 1876; "Registers of the Dutch Church, Austin Friars, London, with History of the Strangers in England," 1884, privately printed; "The Walloons and their Church at Norwich, their History and Registers, 1565-1832," publication of the Huguenot Society of London, 1887-88; "Hampshire Allegations for Marriage Licences, granted by the Bishop of Winchester," 1689-1837, 2 vols., publication of the Harleian Society, 1893, &c. Mr. Moens is a Fellow and Local Secretary for Hampshire of the Society of Antiquaries of London; Vice-President of the Huguenot Society of London; Member of the Council of the Harleian Society, and of British Record Society; Member of the "Maatschappij der Nederlandsche Letterkunde te Leiden;" Corresponding Honorary Member of the Commission pour l'Histoire des Églises Wallonnes de Hollande, &c.

MOLESWORTH Sir Guildford Lindsey, K.C.I.E., Consulting Engineer to the Government of India for State Railways, Fellow of the University of Calcutta, Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, Member of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, is the son of the Rev. John Edward Nassau Molesworth, D.D., vicar of Rochdale, and was born at Millbrook, Hants, in 1828. He was educated at King's School, Canterbury, and at the College of Civil Engineers, Putney; afterwards he served an apprenticeship to civil engineering under Mr. Dockray on the London and North Western Railway, and also in mechanical engineering under Sir William Fairbairn at Manchester. Subsequently he was employed in various railway and other engineering works in connection with ironworks in South Wales. In 1852 he was chief assistant-engineer on the London, Brighton and South Coast Railway, which he left in order to superintend the construction of buildings and machinery in the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich during the Crimean War. Afterwards he practised as a Consulting Engineer in London for some years. In 1858 the Institution of Civil Engineers awarded to him the "Watt" Medal and the "Manby" premium, for a paper read before the Institution on the subject of "Conversion of Wood by Machinery." In 1859 he went out to the Ceylon Railway as Mechanical and Locomotive Engineer, and he was appointed Chief Engineer of the Ceylon Government Railway in 1862; Director-General of the railway in 1865; Director of Public Works in 1867; and Consulting Engineer to the Government of India in 1871. His "Pocket-book of Engineering Formulæ" passed through six editions in the first year, and is now a standard work in the profession. He originated and was mainly instrumental in introducing the system of Decimal Coinage adopted in Ceylon. His services in the enemy's country with the army in the field in time of war, gained for him the Afghan War Medal, as well as the Burmah War Medal and Clasp, and in 1881 he received the thanks of her Majesty for excellent services rendered during the Afghan War. He is the author of various publications, amongst which may be named: "Proposals for the Establishment of a Decimal Coinage in Ceylon," 1868; and in India, 1871; "Reports on Public Works in Ceylon," 1869; "Light Railways in Ceylon," 1870; "Festiniog Railway," 1871; "State Railways in India," 1872; "Gauge of Railways in India," 1873; "Graphic Diagrams," 1877; "Metrical Tables," 1879; "Masonry Dams," 1883; "Madras Harbour;" and "Iron Manufacture in India," 1884; "Establishment of an Engineer Volunteer Corps in India," and "Imperialism for India," 1885; "Text-book of Bimetallism," "Land as Property," "Bimetallic Currency," "The Silver Question," "The 'Abt' System," and "Instinct and Reason in Ants," 1886; "Silver and Gold" (Prize Essay), 1891; and "Indian Currency," 1894. He was made Companion of the Order of the Indian Empire in 1879; and Knight Commander of the Order in 1888. Sir G. L. Molesworth married, in 1854, Maria Elizabeth, daughter of J. T. Bridges, Esq., of St. Nicholas Court, Thanet, and granddaughter of Sir Robert Affleck, Bart.

MOLESWORTH, Mrs. Mary Louisa, née Stewart, is of Scottish parentage, and was born, and partly educated, abroad. She has lived several years in France and Germany, and began to write very young. Her first works of any importance were four novels published under the names of "Ennis Graham: Lover and Husband," "She was Young and He was Old." "Cicely," and "Not without Thorns." In 1875 she published her first book for children, "Tell me a Story." This has been succeeded by other similar volumes yearly. Mrs. Molesworth has also published "Summer Stories for Boys and Girls," "Four Ghost Stories," and 'French Life in Letters." Mrs. Molesworth has also contributed to many of the best serials, and some of her serial stories have since appeared as volumes, e.g., "Hermy," "Hoodie," "The Boys and I," "The Palace in the Garden," "Neighbours," "Silverthorns," and "The Third Miss St. Quenten." The following novels are by Mrs. Molesworth:—"Marrying and Giving in Marriage," "That Girl in Black," and "Hathercourt Rectory." Mrs. Molesworth has contributed every month since its first appearance to The Child's Pictorial, for very little children, and some of these stories are now published as books:—"Five Minutes' Stories," and "Twelve Tiny Tales;" also "Lettice," "The Abbey by the Sea," "The Little Old Portrait," a story of the Great French Revolution, "A Charge Fulfilled," &c. Mrs. Molesworth's latest publications since 1890 are—"Mother Bunch," "The Story of a Spring Morning," "Family Troubles," "Stories of the Saints for Children," and "An Enchanted Garden" (fairy stories), 1892; "Blanche: a Story for Girls," and "Hollow Tree House, and other Stories," 1894; besides many other works for the young.

MOMMSEN, Professor Theodor, the eminent German jurist and historian, born at Garding, in Schleswig, Nov. 30, 1817, studied at the University of Kiel, and travelled from 1844 till 1847. On his return he wrote numerous articles for the Schleswig-Holstein Journal, which he conducted, and was made Professor of Law at Leipzig. Having been dismissed on account of the part he took in political affairs, he was made Titular Professor of Law at Zurich in 1852, at Breslau in 1854, and at Berlin in 1858. In 1875 he was appointed Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Leipzic. On June 15, 1882, he was tried at Berlin for having in an election speech slandered Prince Bismarck, but was acquitted. The decision was appealed against, and on April 7, 1883, the Imperial High Court of Appeal at Leipzic finally acquitted Professor Mommsen of the charge. He has written numerous learned works, has edited a magnificent work on Latin inscriptions, published by the Prussian Academy of Sciences, and a work on Roman Coins, and is best known in England by his "Earliest Inhabitants of Italy," of which a translation by Robertson appeared in London in 1858, and "History of Rome," translated by W. P. Dickson, and published in London in 1862-3. In 1878 the King of Italy conferred on him the Grand Cross of the Order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus. In 1880 Professor Mommsen's library was destroyed by fire; and a number of his English admirers had the happy idea of presenting him with a selection of classical and historical books, printed in England, to compensate him for some portion of his loss. On the occasion of his seventieth birthday, in Nov. 1887, a congratulatory address, signed by sixty-two Dons, was sent to him by members of the University of Oxford.

MONCKTON, Sir John Braddick, Town Clerk of the City of London, is the son of the late Mr. John Monckton, of Maidstone, and was born in 1832. He received his education at Rugby, and was afterwards admitted a solicitor. He practised the law for a number of years, and in 1873 was elected Town Clerk of the City. He has been annually reappointed ever since. He has been one of her Majesty's Lieutenants for the City of London, and a Grand Warden of Freemasons of England. He has been the recipient of various foreign decorations, such as the Belgian Order of Leopold, the Saviour of Greece, the Lion and Sun of Persia, and the Golden Lion of Nassau. Lady Monckton, his wife, is an actress of repute. Her greatest success has been in "Jim the Penman," in which the title-rôle was played by Mr. Willard.

MONCREIFF (Lord), The Right Hon. James Moncreiff, second son of the late Sir James Wellwood Moncreiff, ninth baronet, of Tulliebole, Kinross-shire (a Lord of Sessions in Scotland, by the title of Lord Moncreiff), by Ann, daughter of Captain George Robertson, R.N., was born at Edinburgh, Nov. 29, 1811. He was educated at the High School and at the University of Edinburgh, and was admitted an advocate at the Scotch Bar in 1833. He was Solicitor-General for Scotland from Feb., 1850, till April, 1851, when, on the elevation of Lord Rutherford to the Bench, he was appointed the Lord Advocate, and continued to hold that office until the change of ministry in March, 1852. Soon after being appointed Lord Advocate, he was returned to Parliament as member of the Leith district, as a Liberal, and in favour of free trade. He retained his seat for the Leith district till April, 1859, when he was elected for Edinburgh, which city he continued to represent till 1868, when he was returned to Parliament as representative for the Universities of Glasgow and Aberdeen. He became Lord Advocate a second time in Dec., 1852, and occupied that position till March, 1858; a third time from June, 1859, till July, 1886; and a fourth time from Dec., 1868, till Nov. 1869, when he was appointed Lord Justice Clerk and President of the Second Division of the Court of Session in Scotland. On this occasion he was sworn of the Privy Council, and took the courtesy title of Lord Moncreiff. He resigned the office of Lord Justice Clerk in Oct., 1888. It may be mentioned that in 1852 he brought in a Bill to abolish religious tests in the Scotch Universities, which was lost on the second reading. In 1853, however, he successfully introduced and carried the Bill; and among other measures of which he was the promoter may be enumerated the "Valuation of Lands (Scotland) Act," passed in 1854, and the "Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act," in 1856. Previous to his elevation to the judicial bench, Lord Moncreiff was a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for the county of Edinburgh, Dean of the Faculty of Scotch Advocates, and Lieut.-Colonel of the Edinburgh Rifle Volunteers. He was elected Lord Rector of the University of Edinburgh in the early part of the year 1869; was created a baronet May 17, 1871; and was raised to the peerage of the United Kingdom as Baron Moncreiff of Tulliebole, Kinrossshire, Jan. 1, 1874. In 1887 the members of the College of Justice showed their appreciation of his great services and high position by placing his lordship's portrait on one of the walls of the Parliament House in Edinburgh. A novel published in 1871, under the title of "A Visit to my Discontented Cousin," is said to have been written by Lord Moncreiff. In Aug., 1878 he was appointed one of the Royal Commissioners under "The Endowed Institutions (Scotland) Act, 1878," a post which he resigned in Oct. 1888. He succeeded in 1883 as 11th baronet, his brother, the Rev. Sir Henry Wellwood Moncreiff.

MONCRIEFF, Colonel Sir Alexander, K.C.B., F.R.S., J.P., born in 1829, is the eldest son of the late Captain Matthew Moncrieff of Culfargie, Perthshire, of the Madras Cavalry. Having been educated at the Universities of Edinburgh and Aberdeen, he entered the office of Messrs. Miller and Grainger, Civil Engineers, in Edinburgh, where he served his time as a Civil Engineer. Colonel Moncrieff did not follow the profession, but obtained a commission in the Forfarshire Artillery Militia, and afterwards in the Edinburgh, or 3rd Brigade Scotch Division Royal Artillery, of which he rose to be Colonel Commandant. He travelled extensively in Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America, and received the thanks of her Majesty's Government for topographical information given to the Colonial Office in London, at the particular request of the Governor-General of Canada. During the Crimean War Sir Alexander Moncrieff, then a lieutenant in the Forfarshire Militia, went to the seat of war, and received the permission of the Commander-in-Chief to visit the siege works, and to be present at the operations as a Militia officer, during the first and second bombardments of Sevastopol. It was then that the idea of the invention with which his name is associated occurred to his mind; but it was some years before it was matured into a practical form. It was first submitted by Captain Moncrieff to General Sir Richard Dacres, Commanding the Royal Artillery in Ireland, at Dublin in 1857, and it was some years more before the authorities were induced to give it a trial, after which Captain Moncrieff was engaged for eight years in the Royal Arsenal attached to the Department of the Director of Artillery. The Moncrieff System of Mounting Artillery, or the protected barbette system, is sometimes called the Disappearing System, because upon firing, the gun recoils into shelter, out of sight of the enemy, and the energy of the recoil is stored up so as to raise the gun into the firing position when loaded. In the first instance this was effected by means of a counterweight; and the interposition of a moving fulcrum (then for the first time employed in practical mechanics) enabled the sudden impetus of the discharge to be utilised without danger to the carriage. Another method by which the same end is accomplished, and which is applicable to sea service, and to many cases in which the direct force of gravity would be unwieldy or unsuitable for application, is Moncrieff's Hydro-pneumatic System. In this case the recoil of the gun drives down a piston, which forces water into a vessel of compressed air, and the further compression of the air stores up the energy of the recoil to raise the gun to the firing position when required. His system is now largely and increasingly used in the British Service, both by land and sea; and it is used also by foreign Governments. Sir A. Moncrieff is the author of a series of papers, extending over twenty years, illustrating and advocating the importance of invisibility, dispersion of heavy guns, and the use of parapets with their superior slope formed en glacis, which are the chief characteristics of his system, and which may be said to be the converse of the old system previously universal, in which the guns were visible, and the works in which they stood were conspicuous. Sir A. Moncrieff is a J.P. for Perthshire; a Member of the Institute of Civil Engineers; a Fellow of the Royal Society; was created a C.B. in 1880, and a K.C.B. in 1890; and is Chairman of the Board of Management of the Oxford Military College, with which institution he has been connected since its inception. He also is a member of the Athenæum and United Service Clubs; and is a Knight of the Imperial Order of the Rose of Brazil; which order was given to him by the Emperor when, in one of his journeys in search of scientific information, he was made acquainted with Sir A. Moncrieff's invention, and recognised its originality and importance.

MOND, Ludwig, was born on March 6, 1839, at Cassel in Germany, his father being a merchant in that town. He was educated at the Polytechnic School there. From thence he went to Marburg, where he studied under Kolbe, and afterwards to Heidelberg, where he became a pupil of the renowned Bunsen. After leaving the University he held several appointments as Technical Manager in Chemical Works in Germany. In 1863 he went to Utrecht, in Holland, for the purpose of erecting a Le Blanc soda works there. His first visit to England was made in the year 1862, with the object of introducing his well-known process for the recovery of sulphur from alkali waste. In 1864 he settled definitely in this country, and at the works of Messrs. Hutchinson, in Widnes, perfected his sulphur recovery process. It was at these works that he became acquainted with his future partner, Mr. John Tomlinson Brunner, Member of Parliament for the Northwich Division of Cheshire, in conjunction with whom in the year 1873 he established the works at Winnington, near Northwich in Cheshire, for the manufacture of alkali by the Solvay process, which are now the largest alkali works in England. The Solvay process had first come under Mr. Mond's notice during a visit which he paid some years previously to Couillet, where he had met Mr. Ernest Solvay, the inventor of the process, with whom Mr. Mond entered into negotiations with a view to its introduction into the United Kingdom. At that time the process, which has revolutionised the Alkali trade, was in its infancy, and the best years of Mr. Mond's life have been spent in unremitting toil to improve and perfect it. In 1873 the firm of Brunner, Mond & Co., started and was in 1881 converted into a limited liability company, of which Mr. Mond is still Managing Director. The amount of thought and energy he has devoted to perfecting the ammonia soda process are evidenced by the very numerous patents taken out by him in connection with it. But the fertility of his inventive faculty has been by no means exhausted by his work in this direction. He has made and patented many improvements of great scientific and commercial importance in allied and other branches of technical science. Notably amongst these may be cited Mr. Mond's process for the manufacture of chlorine by the ammonia soda process, his efforts to solve the problem of the burning of fuel in gas producers with the recovery of the largest possible amount of ammonia. This formed the subject in 1888 of Mr. Mond's Presidential Address to the Society of Chemical Industry, which aroused considerable public interest at the time and since. Mr. Mond has during the last few years devoted a large amount of time and thought to further elucidating this important problem, with the result that he has greatly improved the apparatus designed by him for this purpose, and has achieved striking success. In 1889 Mr. Mond read a paper before the Royal Society, in conjunction with his assistant, Dr. Carl Langer, on "A New Form of Gas Battery," and from experiments incidental to the working out of this battery, arose subsequently a discovery which was received with interest alike in scientific as in commercial circles, and which Mr. Mond made known to the world in 1890 in a paper (in conjunction with his assistants, Drs. Langer and Quincke) on the "Action of Carbon Manxide on Nickel." This was followed up by papers read at the Meeting of the British Association in Cardiff in 1891; "On Nickel Carbon Oxide and its application in Arts and Manufactures;" "On Iron Carbonyls" (in conjunction with Dr. Langer); "Note on a Volatile Compound of Iron with Carbonic Oxide" (in conjunction with Dr. F. Quincke); "Studies on Nickel Tetra-Carbonyl" (in conjunction with Professor R. Nasini, of Rome), and other papers. In June, 1892, Mr. Mond delivered a lecture before the Royal Institution on "Metallic Carbonyls," embodying the most recent results. Since then he has prosecuted the application of this process to the industrial extraction of nickel from ores with noteworthy results. Mr. Mond is a member of many learned and scientific societies. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, a Vice-President of the Royal Institution and of the Chemical Society, Past-President of the Society of Chemical Industry, Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry, Member of the Physical, Zoological, and Botanic Societies, and a Member of the Council of University College. He is also on the Council of the British Institute of Preventive Medicine, a Member of the Committee of the Royal Societies Club, and a Life Member of the British Association. In December, 1892, in connection with the Galileo Commemoration, the University of Padua conferred upon him the degree of Ph.D., honoris causa. Mr. Mond, who is a naturalised British subject, has always evinced the warmest interest in all efforts to promote scientific advancement in this country. His recent munificent gift to the Managers of the Royal Institution will be fresh in the minds of our readers, but this is by no means the first time that he has contributed large sums towards this end. Mr. Mond had previously given very liberally to the Research Funds of the Royal Institution and the Chemical Society, and to several of our Universities and allied Institutions. In addition to this he has given largely to the Royal Society to enable that body to complete and publish a scientific subject-matter catalogue, and to the British Institute of Preventive Medicine. In October, 1866, Mr. Mond married his cousin, Miss Friederika Loewenthal, and has two sons, Robert Ludwig and Alfred Moritz, the latter, who is a Barrister-at-Law, has recently married Miss Violet Gœtze, daughter of the late James Henry Gœtze.

MONIER-WILLIAMS, Professor Sir Monier, K.C.I.E., M.A., D.C.L., LL.D., Ph.D., Sanscrit scholar and Indologist, son of the late Col. Monier-Williams, Surveyor-Gen. of the Bombay Presidency, born at Bombay in 1819, was educated at private schools and at King's College, London, and entered at Balliol College, Oxford, in 1838. He soon after obtained an Indian writership, and proceeded as a student to the E. I. College, Haileybury, where he gained the first prizes in all the Oriental subjects. For domestic reasons he resigned his Indian appointment and returned to Oxford, became a member of University College, was elected to the Boden scholarship in 1843, graduated B.A. in 1844, and was awarded an honorary place in the class list both in classics and mathematics. He was Professor of Sanscrit at Haileybury from 1844 till the abolition of that institution in 1858; when he removed to Cheltenham, and for two years superintended the Oriental studies at the College. In Dec., 1860, after a long contest, he was elected Boden Sanscrit Professor at Oxford. He is also Fellow of Balliol College. The following is a list of his works: "A Practical Grammar of the Sanscrit Language, arranged with reference to the Classical Languages of Europe, for the use of English Students," published in 1846, of which a fourth edition was published by the Delegates of the Oxford University Press in 1877; an edition of the Sanscrit drama "Vikramorvasi," in 1849; "An English and Sanscrit Dictionary," published by the E. I. Company in 1851; an edition of the text of the Sanscrit drama "S'akuntalá," with notes and literal translations, in 1853, of which a second edition was published by the University of Oxford in 1876; a free translation in English prose and verse of the Sanscrit drama "S'akuntalá," in 1855; reprinted in 1856; "Rudiments of Hindústání, with an Explanation of the Persi-Arabic Alphabet, for the use of Cheltenham College," in 1858; "Original Papers Illustrating the History of the Application of the Roman Alphabet to the Languages of India," entrusted to him for publication by Sir Charles E. Trevelyan, Governor of Madras; a Romanised edition of the Hindústání work, "Bágh o Bahár," with notes, &c.; "Hindústáni Primer," and "An Easy Introduction to the Study of Hindústání," in 1859; "Story of Nala, a Sanscrit Poem, with vocabulary, and an improved version of Dean Milman's translation," published by the Oxford University Press; and "Indian Epic Poetry: Substance of Lectures," in 1863; and "A Sanscrit and English Dictionary," published by the University of Oxford in 1872; a work called "Indian Wisdom, or Examples of the Religious, Philosophical, and Ethical Doctrines of the Hindús," third edition, 1876; "Hindúism," one of the non-Christian religious systems, published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge in 1877, which has gone through several editions; "Modern India and the Indians," 1878, which has gone through three editions; and a series of articles on "India" in the Times, Nineteenth Century, Contemporary Review, and other periodicals; these articles have since been reprinted. He has more recently published "Religious Thought and Life in India," 1883; "Brâhmanism and Hindúism, 1887; "Buddhism," 1889; and is engaged in the preparation of the second edition of his Sanscrit-English Dictionary. In 1893 appeared a fourth edition of his work on "Indian Wisdom." In 1875 he made the first of his three journeys to India for securing the co-operation of the educated natives in the establishment of an Indian Institute, and a School of Indian Studies at Oxford, and for the prosecution of his researches into the present condition of the religious sects of India. During his absence the University of Oxford conferred on him an honorary degree of D.C.L., and he also received an honorary LL.D. degree from the University of Calcutta at the same time as the Prince of Wales. In 1876 he visited India a second time, and returned in 1877, after having traversed the whole peninsula, and received cordial promises of support from all the most influential members of the Indian community. In 1880 he was made a Companion of the Order of the Indian Empire, and in 1882 an honorary member of the American Oriental Society, and more recently of the American Philosophical Society and a Ph.D. of the University of Göttingen. He is also a member of most of the Oriental Societies of Europe and of India. The Secretary of State for India appointed Professor Monier-Williams honorary delegate to represent the government of India at the fifth International Congress of Orientalists held in Berlin in Sept., 1881. In 1883 he visited India a third time, and was the guest of Lord Ripon, then Viceroy. He is an hon. member of the Asiatic Society of Bengal and of Bombay. He was knighted by the Queen on March 8, 1886, was created a Knight Commander of the Indian Empire in 1887, and was appointed Duff Lecturer in the University of Edinburgh in 1888.

MONK-BRETTON, Lord, The Right Hon. John George Dodson, only son of the late Right Hon. Sir John Dodson, by Frances Priscilla, daughter of George Pearson, Esq., M.D., was born in 1825. He was educated at Eton, where he gained the Prince Consort's prizes for modern languages in 1841 and 1842, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a first class in classics in 1847. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, in 1853. He unsuccessfully contested East Sussex in the Liberal interest in July, 1852, and March, 1857; was first elected for East Sussex in April, 1857, and sat for that constituency till Feb. 1874. He sat for Chester from the last date till April, 1880, when he was unseated on petition. After the election, which was declared void, he had been re-elected, on his acceptance of the post of President of the Local Government Board, and consequently he remained a Member of Parliament, although he could neither sit nor vote. He sat for Scarborough from July, 1880 until 1885. Mr. Dodson was Chairman of Committees of the whole House from Feb. 1865, till April, 1872; Financial Secretary to the Treasury from Aug. 1873, to Feb. 1874; and President of the Local Government Board in Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet from April, 1880, till Dec. 1882, when he was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. In 1885 he was raised to the peerage under the title of Lord Monk-Bretton. He married, in 1856, Florence, second daughter of Mr. W. J. Campion, of Danny, Sussex.

MONRO, James, C.B., son of the late George Monro, Esq., S.S.C., Edinburgh, was born in Edinburgh, Nov. 25, 1838, and was educated at the Royal High School, Edinburgh University, and Berlin University. He entered her Majesty's Bengal Civil Service in 1857, being third on the list of competitors; and held in Bengal the appointments of Magistrate, District and Sessions Judge, Secretary to Board of Revenue, Commissioner of the Presidency Division, and Inspector-General of Police. On several occasions Mr. Monro received the thanks of the Bengal Government for his services. He retired from the Bengal Civil Service in 1884, and in that year was appointed Assistant Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police in charge of the Criminal Investigation Department. In 1888 he was appointed Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, and retired from the office which he had filled with so much efficiency in 1890. He was created C.B. in 1888.

MONROE, The Right Hon. Mr. Justice, LL.D., P.C., was born in 1839. He is the eldest son of the late John Monroe, Esq., of Hunter's Hall, Moira, by Jane, daughter of the late Rev. James Harvey, of Armagh. He was educated by the Rev. James Mulligan of Moira, and entered Queen's College, Galway, in 1854. He took the degrees of B.A., M.A., and LL.B., in the Queen's University in Ireland, obtaining gold medals with each. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him in 1880. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1863, and went the North-East Circuit. He took silk in 1877. He was Law Adviser to the Irish Government in 1878-1880; became a Bencher of the King's Inns, 1884; Solicitor-General, 1884-5; Judge of the High Court of Justice, Chancery Division, 1885; and was created a Privy Councillor in 1886. He married, in 1867, Lizzie, daughter of J. W. Moule, Esq., of Elmley-Lovel, Worcestershire.

MONTAGU, The Right Hon. Lord Robert, P.C., second son of the sixth Duke of Manchester, born Jan. 24, 1825, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. in 1848, was returned, in April, 1859, one of the members, in the Conservative interest, for Huntingdonshire, which county he represented till Feb. 1874, when he was returned for the county of Westmeath, as a "Conservative, but in favour of Home Rule." The Home Rule he professed was, however, essentially different from that of the Irish Party. He withdrew from the Home Rule organization in June, 1877; and ceased to be a member of Parliament in March, 1880. He was appointed Vice-President of the Committee of Council on Education, sworn a Privy Councillor and nominated First Charity Commissioner in March, 1867, and held these offices till Dec. 1868. He joined the Roman Catholic Church in 1870, and renounced it on June 11, 1882. Lord Robert Montagu has written "Naval Architecture and Treatise on Shipbuilding," 1852; "Mirror in America," 1861; "Words on Garibaldi," 1861; "Four Experiments in Church and State, and the Conflict of Churches," 1864; "Sewage Utilisation," 1866; "What is Education?" 1869; a "Lecture to Working Men," 1870; "Arbitration instead of War, and a Defence of the Commune," 1872; "Register, Register, Register," in 1873; "Some Popular Errors concerning Politics and Religion," 1874, forming vol. i. of "St. Joseph's Theological Library;" "Expostulation in Extremis Remarks on Mr. Gladstone's political Expostulation on the Vatican Decrees in their bearing on Civil Allegiance," 1874; "Foreign Policy: England and the Eastern Question," 1877; "Our Sunday Fireside," 1878; "Reasons for leaving the Roman Church," 1882; "Address on the Time of the Stuarts; or Home Rule in 1588, 1688, 1788 and 1888," 1886; "Home Rule, Rome Rule," 1886; "Recent Events, with a Clue to their Solution," 1st and 2nd eds. 1886; 3rd ed. 1888; "Scylla or Charybdis; Salisbury or Gladstone,—which?" "The Sower and the Virgin," "Whither are we drifting," 1887; "The Pope, the Government, and the Plan of Campaign," 1888; "Tercentenary of the Defeat of the Spanish Armada," 1888; "Defeat of the Armada," 1888; "The Lambeth Judgment, or Masks of Sacerdotalism," 1891.

MONTÉGUT, Emile, a French writer, was born at Limoges, June 24, 1825, of an ancient bourgeois family. His first publication was an article in the Revue des Deux Mondes for August, 1847, on the philosophy of Emerson, which was followed by a series of studies of English and American literature. In 1857 he succeeded Gustave Planche in the reviewing department of the Revue, which position he filled until 1862, when he transferred his services to the Moniteur Universel. He was nominated a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, August 12, 1865. Besides numerous articles contributed to the Revue des Deux Mondes and other literary journals, M. Montégut has written "Des Pays Bas, Impressions de Voyage et d'Art," 1869; "Tableau de la France, Souvenirs de Bourgoyne," 1874; "En Bourbonnais et en Forez," 1875; "L'Angleterre et les Colonies Australes," 1879; "Poètes et Artistes de l'Italie," 1881; "Le Maréchal Davout, son Caractère et son Génie," and "Types Littéraires, et Fantaisies Esthétiques," 1882; "Essais sur la littérature Anglaise," 1883; "Livres et Âmes des pays d'Orient," 1885; "Mélanges Critiques," 1887; "Heures de lecture d'un Critique," 1891. He has also translated Emerson's "Essays;" Lord Macaulay's "History of England," and Shakespeare's Plays, and has published several works on old and modern English authors.

MONTÉPIN, Xavier Aymon de, French writer, was born at Apremont, March 18, 1824, made himself conspicuous as an anti-revolutionary journalist in 1848, and since then has devoted himself to literature. His novels and plays, mostly of a sensational and melodramatic kind, are exceedingly numerous. Amongst the best known novels are "Les Chevaliers du Lansquenet," 1847; "Confessions d'un Bohème," 1849; "Les Viveurs de Paris," 1852-56; "Les Marionnettes du Diable," 1860; "Les Tragédies de Paris," 1874; "Les Drames du Mariage," 1878; "Le Médecin des Folles," 1879. Of his plays may be mentioned "Pauline," 1850; "La Sirène de Paris," 1860; "Le Médecin des Pauvres," 1865; "Les Enfers de Paris," 1865; "La Fille du Meurtrier," 1866; "La Femme de Paillasse," 1874, &c. &c. Among his most recent works are: "La Tireuse de Cartes," and "La Fille du Fou," 1890, and "La Dame aux Emeraudes" and "La Perle du Palais-Royal," 1891.

MONTGOMERY, Florence, authoress, was born in 1847, and is the daughter of Sir Alexander Montgomery, Bart. Her works are as follows:—"A Very Simple Story," 1867; "Misunderstood," 1869; "Thrown Together," 1872; "Thwarted, or Duck's Eggs in a Hen's Nest," 1874; "Wild Mike and his Victim," 1875; "Seaforth," 1878; "Peggy and other Tales," 1880; "The Blue Veil," 1883; and "Transformed," 1886; "The Fisherman's Daughter," 1888.

MONTREAL, Bishop of. See BOND, THE RT. REV. WILLIAM BENNETT.

MOODY, Dwight Lyman, American Evangelist, was born at Northfield, Massachusetts, Feb. 5, 1837. He worked on a farm until the age of seventeen, when he became a clerk in a shoe-store in Boston. In 1856 he went to Chicago, and while engaged there in active business entered zealously into missionary work among the poorer classes. During the Civil War he was in the service of the Christian Commission, and afterwards became a lay missionary of the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago. In 1873, accompanied by Mr. Sankey, an effective singer, he went to England, and the two instituted a series of week-day religious services, which attracted large and enthusiastic audiences. They returned to America in 1875, where they organized similar meetings all over the country. They again visited England in 1883. In addition to the many printed accounts of his meetings and reports of his addresses, Mr. Moody has published "Heaven," 1880; "Secret Power," 1881; and "Way to God and How to Find It," 1884. His home is still at Northfield, Mass.

MOORE, The Rev. Daniel, M.A., a native of Coventry, was educated in the Grammar School of that city, and entered at St. Catherine's College, Cambridge, in 1837 (B.A. 1840); M.A. 1844. He gained the Norrisian Prize in 1837 and 1839, and the Hulsean Prize in 1840. He was perpetual curate of Camden Church, Camberwell, from 1844 to 1866, when he was presented to the vicarage of Holy Trinity, Paddington. In several years he has been a Select Preacher before the University of Cambridge, and in 1864 he filled the office of Hulsean Lecturer. He was appointed Lecturer at St. Margaret's, Lothbury, in 1856; a chaplain in ordinary to the Queen in 1870; Prebendary of Oxgate in St. Paul's Cathedral, in 1880, and Rural Dean of Paddington in 1885. Among his works we may mention "Romanism as set forth in its own acknowledged Formularies;" "Sermons preached before the University of Cambridge;" "Discourses on the Lord's Prayer;" "Thoughts on Preaching;" "The Divine Authority of the Pentateuch;" "The Age and the Gospel," being the Hulsean lectures for 1864; "Aids to Prayer;" "Sermons on Special Occasions;" "Sunday Meditations;" "Christ in all Ages;" and "Thoughts for Church Seasons," 1888.

MOORE, Henry, R.A., was born in York, March 7, 1831, and is the son of the late William Moore, a portrait and landscape painter. He was educated in York, and first exhibited in the Royal Academy in 1853, since which year he has never been absent from the annual list of exhibitors. In 1885 he was elected A.R.A., and in 1893 R.A. He is now a member of the council of the Royal Academy, and has for many years been a member of the Royal Society of Painters in Water-colours. One of his principal paintings, "Clearness after Rain," has been photogravured by the Berlin Company, and gained for him the Grand Prix de Paris in 1889, and the decoration of the Legion d'Honneur. Among his most recent pictures may be mentioned, "After a Breeze;" "Summer at Sea;" "Hove-to for a Pilot;" "Lowestoft Boats Running in;" "Outward Bound;" "Coming Home;" and "Summer Breeze in the Channel" (Diploma Work, 1894).

MOORHOUSE, The Right Rev. James, D.D., Bishop of Manchester, son of Mr. James Moorhouse, a merchant of Sheffield, was born in that town in 1826. He received his education at St. John's College, Cambridge (B.A., 1853; M.A. 1860; D.D., jure dignitatis, 1876). He became Vicar of St. John's, Fitzroy Square, in 1862; Hulsean Lecturer at Cambridge in 1865; Vicar of Paddington and Rural Dean in 1868; Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen in 1874; Prebendary of St. Paul's and Warburtonian Lecturer in 1875. In May, 1876, he was appointed Bishop of Melbourne, in succession to Dr. Perry, resigned. On the death of Dr. Fraser, in 1885, he was appointed by Lord Salisbury to the Bishopric of Manchester. He is the author of "Nature and Revelation," four sermons preached before the University of Cambridge, 1861; "Our Lord Jesus Christ the Subject of Growth in Wisdom," being the Hulsean Lectures for 1865; "Jacob," three sermons before the University of Cambridge; Charge at Primary Visitation, July, 1889; "Christ and his Surroundings," Oct., 1889; various single sermons; "Dangers of the Apostolic Age," 1890; and "The Teaching of Christ," 1891.

MORAN, His Eminence Cardinal Patrick Francis, D.D., Roman Catholic Cardinal Archbishop of Sydney, born at Leghlinbridge, co. Carlow, Ireland, Sept. 16, 1830, was educated at the Irish College of St. Agatha, Rome. He was appointed Vice-President of the College in 1856, and Professor of Hebrew in the College of Propaganda, Rome. Returning to Ireland in 1866, he was Private Secretary to his Eminence Cardinal Cullen, Archbishop of Dublin; was consecrated Coadjutor Bishop of Ossory on March 5, 1872, and succeeded, a few months later, to that See. He was translated to the Archiepiscopal See of Sydney in Australia, on March 21, 1884; and was made Cardinal, July 27, 1885. Besides publishing many pastoral letters, addressed to the clergy and laity of his diocese, he has laboured a great deal to promote the study of Irish history and antiquities. Among other works he has published: "Memoir of the Most Rev. Oliver Plunkett," 1861; "Essays on the Origin, &c., of the Early Irish Church," and "History of the Catholic Archbishops of Dublin," 1864; "Historical Sketch of the Persecutions, &c., under Cromwell and the Puritans," 1865; "Acta S. Brendani," 1872; "Monasticon Hibernicum," 1873; "Spicilegium Ossoriense, being a Collection of Documents to illustrate the History of the Irish Church from the Reformation to the year 1800," 3 vols., 4to, 1874; "Irish Saints in Great Britain," Dublin, 1879; and "Letters on the Anglican Reformation," and "Occasional Papers," 1890.

MORAY and ROSS, Bishop of. See KELLY, THE RIGHT REV. JAMES BUTLER KNILL.

MORGAN, The Right Hon. Sir George Osborne, Bart., P.C., is the eldest son of the late Rev. Morgan Morgan, Vicar of Conway, Carnarvonshire. He was born on May 8, 1826, and was educated at Friars' School, Bangor, at Shrewsbury School, and afterwards at Balliol College, Oxford, where, in addition to other honours, he obtained the Craven University Scholarship, the Eldon Law Scholarship, the Newdigate and Chancellor's prizes, the Stowell Civil Law Fellowship, and a first-class in Classics. He was called to the Bar in 1853, and made a Queen's Counsel and Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, in 1869, and Treasurer of that Inn in 1890. Sir G. O. Morgan represented the County of Denbigh from 1868 to 1885, when he was returned for East Denbighshire by a majority of 393 over Sir Watkin Wynn, whose family had represented the county uninterruptedly for 177 years. In 1866 he was re-elected for the same constituency by a majority of 26, and in 1892 by a majority of 765 over the same opponent. He was appointed Judge Advocate General and Privy Councillor in 1880, and Under Secretary of State for the Colonies in 1886; and was made a Baronet in 1892. He has carried through Parliament (besides other measures) the Burials Act, 1880, the Married Woman's Property Act, 1882, and the Act for abolishing corporal punishment in the army. He also acted as Chairman of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Land Titles and Transfer in 1877-8, and as Chairman of the Standing Committees of the House of Commons on Law and Trade Bills from 1888 to 1893. He is the author of various political pamphlets on "Land Reform in England," "Disestablishment in Wales," &c., as well as of a standard work on Chancery Practice, which has passed through six editions. He married, in 1856, Emily, second daughter of the late Mr. Leopold Reiss, of Bream House, Eccles, Lancashire.

MORLEY, The Right Hon. Albert Edmund Parker, 3rd Earl of, only son of the 2nd Earl, was born at Kent House, Knightsbridge, June 11, 1843, and educated at Eton and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took a first-class in Classics in 1865. He succeeded to the title in 1864, and was Lord-in-Waiting to the Queen from 1868 to 1874. He was Under Secretary of State for War in Mr. Gladstone's Government from 1880-85, Privy Councillor, 1886, and on the formation of the new cabinet in Feb., 1886, became First Commissioner of Works, but resigned in April through disagreement with Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill. He was elected Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords, 1889. In 1876 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Staynor Holford, Esq., of Westonbirt, Gloucestershire, and Dorchester House.

MORLEY, Rt. Hon. Arnold, M.P., fourth son of the late Mr. Samuel Morley, was born in 1849, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1873, and first entered Parliament in 1880, as Member for Nottingham. He represented that borough until 1885, when he was returned for its Eastern Division. He is Vice-President of the "Eighty Club," and was one of the party who accompanied Mr. Gladstone in the Sunbeam to Norway. He has several times represented the Home Office at inquiries relating to accidents in mines. In Mr. Gladstone's administration of 1886 Mr. Arnold Morley held the office of Patronage Secretary to the Treasury, and First Whip, and in 1892, was appointed Postmaster-General as a member of the Cabinet. At the General Post Office he has introduced several important reforms.

MORLEY, The Right Hon. John, LL.D., M.P., is the eldest son of the late Mr. Jonathan Morley, of Blackburn, Lancashire, where he was born in Dec., 1838. He was educated at Cheltenham College and at Lincoln College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1859, and M.A. in 1874; and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1859, of which Society he was made a Bencher in 1893. He was for some years editor of the Literary Gazette, the title of which was subsequently altered to the Parthenon. Mr. Morley was editor of the Fortnightly Review, from 1867 to Oct. 1882. He was also editor of the Pall Mall Gazette from May, 1880, till Aug., 1883, and of Macmillan's Magazine from 1883 to 1885. He unsuccessfully contested the borough of Blackburn in 1869, in the Liberal interest, and the City of Westminster in 1880; but in Feb., 1883, at a by-election, he was returned as an advanced Liberal by the borough of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, defeating his Conservative opponent, Mr. Gainsford Bruce, by a majority of 2,256 (9,443 votes against 7,187). Mr. Morley presided over the great Conference of Liberals held at Leeds in Oct., 1883. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's "Home Rule" Cabinet, Feb., 1886, Mr. Morley was appointed Chief Secretary for Ireland; and throughout the debate on the Bill (for which he was in a great measure responsible), he was the Prime Minister's right-hand man. As almost the only cabinet minister who had been a consistent Home Ruler for many years, Mr. Morley was regarded with respect even by his most thoroughgoing opponents. He is one of the five Liberals who met in Jan., 1887, for the purpose of discovering a modus vivendi for the re-union of the Liberal party. He was returned at the head of the poll for Newcastle, July, 1886, and by a narrow majority, July, 1892, and was appointed Irish Secretary in August, when he again fought the seat, the contest arousing great interest. His antagonist was Mr. Ralli, who was supported by a section of the Labour Party, headed by Messrs. Champion and Keir Hardie, M.P. Mr. Ralli gave a qualified adherence to an Eight Hours Bill, and thus won the suffrages of the working-men, while Mr. Morley entirely refused to support it. Polling took place on August 25, 1892, and Mr. Morley was returned by a majority of 1,739. His works are—

"Edmund Burke, an Historical Study," 1867; "Critical Miscellanies," 1871, 2nd series, 1877; "Voltaire," 1872; "On Compromise," 1874; "Rousseau," 1876; "Diderot and the Encyclopædists," 2 vols., 1878; "Life of Richard Cobden," 1881; "Walpole," 1889, in the "Twelve English Statesmen" Series; "Studies in Literature," 1891; "The Study of Literature," 1894, and several recent speeches which have been reprinted. He is the editor of the "English Men of Letters" series. Mr. Morley is an Honorary LL.D. of the University of Glasgow. He was elected a member of the Reform Club in 1890.

MOROCCO, Sultan of. See ABDUL ASSIZ.

MORRIS, Lewis, M.A., was born in Carmarthen, in Jan., 1833, being the eldest son of the late L. E. Williams Morris, of Carmarthen, formerly of Blannant, Breconshire, by Sophia, daughter of the late John Hughes, of Carmarthen. He was educated at Cowbridge, and Sherborne Schools and Jesus College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1855 as first-class in Classics and Chancellor's Prizeman; M.A., 1858; was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Nov., 1861, when he obtained a Certificate of Honour of the First Class; practised chiefly as a conveyancing counsel until 1880; was elected an Honorary Fellow of Jesus College in 1877. In 1879 he was appointed a Knight of the Order of the Saviour (of Greece). In the same year he accepted the office of Honorary Secretary of the University College of Wales, of which he was afterwards Treasurer. In 1880, he was appointed on the Departmental Committee, charged by the Government to inquire into Intermediate and Higher Education in Wales, and, in the same year, was made a Justice of the Peace for Carmarthenshire, in which county, at Penbryn House, he resides. He was appointed Vice-Chairman of the Political Committee of the Reform Club, in the place of the late Mr. W. P. Adam, M.P.; and was a candidate, in December, 1881, for the Carmarthen burghs, but retired; in 1886, he was Gladstonian candidate for Pembroke and Haverfordwest, but was defeated. In 1891, on the retirement of Sir C. Stepney, he was again a candidate for his native borough, but retired at the request of Mr. Gladstone, in order not to endanger the seat. It is understood that Mr. Morris has now renounced all connection with politics. Mr. Morris, who is also the author of numerous addresses and papers on educational subjects, especially on the now established University of Wales, of which he was one of the earliest advocates, and is a member of the Governing Bodies of the three Welsh colleges, is perhaps best known for his contributions to the poetical literature of the time. In 1871-74-75, appeared the 3 vols. of "Songs of Two Worlds," since collected, 23rd edition. In 1876 appeared Book II., and in 1877, Books I. and III., of "The Epic of Hades," now in a 37th edition. In December, 1878, appeared "Gwen, a Drama, in Monologue," in March, 1880, "The Ode of Life," both which are since in a 17th edition, and in Oct., 1883, "Songs Unsung," since in a 15th edition. In 1886, appeared a tragedy, "Gycia," written for the stage, but not yet represented, now in a 14th edition, and in 1887, "Songs of Britain," now in a 12th edition, embodying several beautiful Welsh legends, and containing also the Odes on the Queen's Jubilee, and on the foundation of the Imperial Institute (the latter written by request, owing to the illness of the Laureate), for which Mr. Morris received the Jubilee Medal from the Queen. The above works are now collected, and were published under the author's name, in a popular edition of one volume in the spring of 1890; which volume has passed into a ninth edition. In October, 1890, Mr. Morris published his poem "A Vision of Saints," which, proceeding after the manner of Dante, attempts for the Christian ideal what "The Epic of Hades" did for that of the Pagan world. This poem is now in a fourth edition. Mr. Morris wrote in 1892 another tragedy from Byzantine history, which has not, however, yet been represented nor published, and is preparing for the press a new volume of collected verses, chiefly lyrical. The Odes on the Death of the Duke of Clarence, on the opening of the Imperial Institute, and on the late Royal Marriage, are from his pen, and the last two were written by desire. Mr. Morris is the great-grandson of the well-known Welsh antiquary and poet, Lewis Morris, of Penbryn, in Cardiganshire.

MORRIS, The Right Hon. Lord Michael, eldest son of Martin Morris, Esq., J.P., of Spiddal, co. Galway, by Julia, daughter of Dr. Charles Blake, of Galway, was born at the latter place in November, 1827. He received his education at Erasmus Smith's College, Galway, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in 1847, First Senior Moderator and Gold Medallist. He was called to the Bar in Ireland in June, 1849, and made a Queen's Counsel in Feb. 1863, and a Bencher of King's Inn in 1866. Mr. Morris, who was High Sheriff in 1849-50, held the office of Recorder of Galway from 1857 till 1865. The representative of one of the old families known as the "Tribes of Galway," he was first elected as one of the members in Parliament of the borough of Galway, on Independent principles, in July, 1865, having polled 90 per cent. of the electors; was subsequently twice re-elected without opposition, on his appointment as Solicitor-General for Ireland (July, 1866), and as Attorney-General (Nov. 1866) in Lord Derby's Government; and retained the seat until he was raised to the Bench, as one of the Judges of the Common Pleas in Ireland, in 1867, when he was succeeded in the representation of Galway by his brother. He served as a member of the Royal Commission to inquire into Primary Education in Ireland in 1868, 1869, and 1870; and became a Commissioner of National Education in 1868, and a member of the senate of the Royal University; was appointed Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in 1876, and in 1887 was appointed Lord Chief Justice of Ireland. He was created a baronet in Aug. 1885. In 1889 he was made a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, and created a Peer for life under the name, style, and title of Baron Morris of Spiddal, co. Galway; and was made a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn. Lord Morris is a member of the Privy Council for Ireland since 1866, and in 1889 he was sworn a member of the Privy Council in England. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Dublin in 1887. Lord Morris married, in 1860, Anna, daughter of the late Hon. H. G. Hughes, Baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland.

MORRIS, Philip Richard, A.R.A., was born at Devonport, Dec. 4, 1838. The son of an engineer and ironfounder, he pursued his early artistic studies in the hours won with some difficulty from the working day. He owed his first encouragement to Mr. Holman Hunt, and by the advice of that eminent artist, studied the Elgin Marbles in the British Museum. He next entered the schools of the Royal Academy, where his first success was made by gaining the Silver Medal for the best drawing from the life. In the following year he achieved double honours by obtaining the Silver Medal for the best painting from the nude figure, and a second similar prize for the best painting from the draped figure. In 1858 he won the Gold Medal for the best historical picture, the subject being "The Good Samaritan," and subsequently competed successfully for the Travelling Studentship, which enabled him to prosecute his studies in France and Italy. While he was yet a student in the schools of the Royal Academy his first publicly-exhibited picture appeared on its walls under the title of "Peaceful Days;" since which time Mr. Morris has constantly exhibited at the Royal Academy, the Grosvenor Gallery, and elsewhere. Among his best-known pictures are "The Shepherd of Jerusalem," "The Mowers," "Sailor's Wedding," "The Fête Dieu at Dieppe," "Sons of the Brave," "Circling Hours," and numerous portraits of children and distinguished men and women. Mr. Morris was elected A.R.A. on June 18, 1877.

MORRIS, William, poet and art-worker, was born at Walthamstow, near London, in 1834. He is the eldest son of a merchant, who died in 1844, leaving his widow and children well off. He was educated at Marlborough, and at Exeter College, Oxford. He studied painting, but did not succeed in that profession. He also turned his attention to the study of architecture. In 1858 he published a small volume entitled "The Defence of Guenevere" (since republished in 1875), and other poems. In 1863, with several partners, amongst whom were D. G. Rossetti, Ford Madox Brown, and E. Burne Jones, he started in London an establishment for the artistic designing and manufacture of various articles, especially wall-paper, stained glass, woven goods, and household decorations. The manufacturing part of the business has since been moved to Merton Abbey, Surrey. At this business Mr. Morris has ever since wrought as a designer, devoting his leisure to the composition of poetry. He published "The Life and Death of Jason," a narrative poem, in 1867, and "The Earthly Paradise" (4 parts), 3 vols., 1868-70. The latter poem is made up of twenty-four legendary and romantic tales in verse, recited by a company of travellers who had sailed westward from Norway to find the earthly paradise. He published also a poem entitled "Love is Enough, or the Freeing of Pharamond; a Morality," 1873. His later publications are, "The Æneids of Virgil, done into English verse," 1876; and "The Story of Sigurd the Volsung, and the Fall of the Niblungs," a poem in 14 books, 1877. In collaboration with Mr. Eirikr Magnusson, he has translated the following works from the Icelandic:—"The Story of Grettir the Strong," 1869; "The Story of the Volsungs and the Niblungs," 1870; and "Three Northern Love Stories," 1875. His "Hopes and Fears for Art: Five Lectures, delivered in Birmingham, London, and Nottingham, 1878-81," appeared in 1882. A translation of the Odyssey was published in 1887; "A Dream of John Bull," in 1888; "Signs of Change" (a collection of socialist lectures), in the same year; "The House of the Wolfings," in 1889; and "The Roots of the Mountains," in 1890. The last two books are romances written in mingled prose and verse. In 1890 he published "The Glittering Plain;" in 1891, "News from Nowhere;" in 1892, "Poems by the Way;" in 1893, in conjunction with Mr. Belfort Bax, "Socialism: its Growth and Outcome;" and in 1894, "The Wood beyond the World." Of late years Mr. Morris has declared himself a Socialist, and has written and spoken much in support of Socialist doctrines. Recently he has busied himself as a printer, issuing from the Kelmscott Press a series of very beautiful and sumptuous reprints of old works. "Chaucer's Poems," the triumph of the series, will appear during the coming year.

MORTON, Hon. Julius Sterling, American statesman, was born in Jefferson Co., N.Y., April 27, 1832; removed with his parents when two years old to Michigan; and graduated from Union College (Schenectady, N.Y.) in 1854. He removed to Nebraska in 1854, and in 1855 began the publication of the Nebraska City News. From 1855 to 1858, was a member of the Territorial Legislature; and from 1858 to 1861, was Secretary of the Territory. He has been the candidate of the Democratic party for a number of offices but without success, as that party has been in a minority in Nebraska. He is a practical agriculturist and horticulturist, and is the originator of "Arbor Day" legislation in the United States. In March, 1893, he entered President Cleveland's Cabinet as Secretary of Agriculture.

MORTON, The Hon. Levi Parsons, LL.D., American banker and statesman, was born at Shoreham, Vermont, May 16, 1824. He entered mercantile life at an early age, and soon showed a remarkable aptitude for business. In 1850 he became a partner in a Boston firm of merchants, and in 1854 removed to New York, where he established the firm of Morton & Grinnell. He founded, in 1863, the banking houses of Morton, Bliss & Co. at New York, and Morton, Rose & Co. in London, the latter serving as fiscal agents of the U.S. Government from 1873 to 1884. Both these houses were active in the syndicates that negotiated U.S. bonds, and in the payments of the Geneva award of $15,500,000 and the Halifax fisheries award of $5,500,000. Mr. Morton was an Honorary Commissioner to the Paris Exposition of 1878, and in the same year was elected a Republican Member of the House of Representatives, and was re-elected in 1880. He declined a nomination for the Vice-Presidency in 1880, but accepted the mission to France when it was tendered him by President Garfield. During his occupancy of that post, 1881-85, he secured the removal of the restrictions upon the importation of American pork, and obtained a legal status for American corporations in France. In 1888 he accepted the nomination for the Vice-Presidency again offered him by the Republican party, and was duly elected in November of that year for the term expiring March 4, 1893. In Sept., 1894, he was made the Republican candidate for Governor of the State of New York. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Dartmouth College in 1881.

MOUKHTAR-PACHA, Ghazi Ahmed, springs direct from a family of silk merchants of Broussa in Asia Minor. His father, Hadji Halil Agha, died young, and Ahmed Moukhtar, who was born Oct. 31, 1839, was brought up by his grandfather, who sent him, in 1851, to the preparatory military school of his native city. He manifested a remarkable aptitude for military studies, and at the expiration of five years he passed from the school first of his class. Entering the Military Academy at Constantinople, he remained four years as pupil, when, in consequence of his progress, he was, while still pursuing his studies, promoted to the grade of lieutenant. When he left, as a further reward of merit, he was made captain on the staff, and in that capacity he, in 1860, joined the head-quarters of the Serdar Ekrem Omar Pacha, in Montenegro, where, with a mere handful of troops, he dashed at an almost impregnable pass, and rendered such service that he was decorated on the spot with the Medjidieh of the 5th Class. After a time Ahmed Moukhtar returned to the Military Academy, where he was appointed to the post of Professor of Astronomy, Military Tactics, and Fortification. In this somewhat mixed capacity he remained until 1863, when he was sent as binbashi, or major and chief of the staff of the division of Islaheye—a division of organisation—at Alexandretta, under the command of Dervish Pacha, now mushir at Batoum. At the end of 1864 the young soldier was appointed caimakam, or lieutenant-colonel, and tutor to Prince Youssouf Issedin, the eldest son of Sultan Abdul Aziz. In this capacity he travelled over the greater part of Europe, and received the Legion of Honour, the Red Eagle, and the Crown of Iron among other decorations, and in 1867 returned to Constantinople. At that time Prince Youssouf became colonel of the Imperial Guard, and Ahmed Moukhtar was appointed one of the commissioners for regulating the frontier of Montenegro, in which capacity he served until 1869, by his policy saving to Turkey the strategical point of Veli Malou Berdu, between Spitz and Podgoritza, while as the ex-Professor of Fortifications he made the tête du pont of Vezir Keupri. For these services he was promoted to the Third Class of the Medjidieh, and returning to Stamboul was made a member of the Council of War. Three months later he was nominated general of brigade, under Redif Pacha, then commanding the Yemen expedition against the Arabs, 20,000 of whom were in insurrection. Soon after Moukhtar's arrival Redif fell ill, and the command fell into the hands of the young liwa, or major-general. He took the city of Yedy, and was promoted for that achievement to the grade of ferik, or general of division, and chief of all the corps in Yemen, Redif becoming governor, until he was superseded, on the ground of illness, by Essad Pacha. When Ali Pacha, the Minister of War, died, Essad Pacha became seraskier, and Moukhtar was promoted to mushir (or full general) and the governship of Yemen, in 1871, at the age of 33. He also received the Osmanli of the First Class in brilliants. After the taking of Sana he was further decorated with the First Class of the Medjidieh. In 1873 he returned to Stamboul, where he was appointed Minister of Public Works, but he did not take up the post, as a few days afterwards he was named Governor of Crete. He was not destined, however, to occupy the post, for the command of the Shumla army corps fell vacant, and it was conferred on the young mushir. He remained at Shumla for 13½ months, during which time he constructed the existing fortifications. Next, appointed Governor and Military Commandant at Erzeroum, he served in the Armenian capital for another 13½ months, when, for yet a third period of 13½ months, he took the command of Bosnia and Herzogovina and Montenegro, where his friends claimed for him that he had gained twenty battles and lost only one. Now named Governor of Candia, he was at the end of ten days about to leave Constantinople when the Government detained him to have his advice on the questions affecting Montenegro, giving him the nominal command of the 4th or Erzeroum army corps. On March 25, 1877, while in his bureau at Stamboul, he learnt that for the first time the prospects of peace were judged hopeless by Turkish statesmen, and making an immediate application for a ship he left in a man-of-war on the 26th for Trebizonde, where he arrived on the 30th, proceeding, after three days' hard work in the organisation of land transport, &c., to Erzeroum and Kars. He had only three weeks to provide for the defence of Armenia when the war broke out, and in less than a week from his arrival in Kars that fortress was invested, and Moukhtar retired on the Soghanly Dagh. His gallant conduct has become a matter of history. On the evening of Oct. 1, 1877, he received the news that the Sultan had conferred on him the title of Ghazi, one of the greatest honours that can be given to an Ottoman. The word originally means fanatic, but in its modern acceptation it is both Defender of the Faith and Conqueror. Besides this title, the First Class of the Medjidieh in diamonds, two fine Arab horses, and a sword in brilliants, marked his Ottoman Majesty's sense of Ahmed Moukhtar's services. In April, 1878, he was appointed Grand Master of Artillery, and in November of the same year, Commandant of Janina. In Sept., 1883, he was chosen to proceed to Berlin to attend the German autumn military manœuvres. He also had several interviews with Prince Bismarck with reference to the entrance of Turkey into the Austro-German alliance. In 1885 he was sent to Egypt as High Commissioner from the Turkish Government. Here he had long conferences with Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, who represented Great Britain. Moukhtar Pacha's influence on Turkish policy is described as still considerable, and, during these negotiations, he used it against England and contributed greatly to the failure of our plans in Egypt. He still resides in that country. His Excellency is the author of an astronomical work called "Fenni Bassite, ou la Science du Quadrant Solaire pour le Temps Turque;" the hours in Turkey depending upon the moment of sunset, and consequently varying from day to day. Moukhtar-Pacha has retained his early interest in mathematics and astronomy, and has written an important work on the forms of calculation adopted before the invention of logarithms, on the astrolabe, and on a reform in the calendar, whereby the annual error is reduced to two seconds; so that, for 30,000 years, the equinox would always fall on the true day.

MOULTON, John Fletcher, M.A., M.P., F.R.S., &c., the third son of the late Rev. James Egan Moulton, was born at Madeley, in Shropshire, on Nov. 18, 1844. He received the elements of his education at the New Kingswood School, near Bath; and subsequently proceeded to St. John's College, Cambridge, where he became a pupil of the celebrated Dr. Routh. Throughout his school and college days young Moulton displayed an extraordinary faculty for mastering any subject which he attacked; so much so as hardly ever to fail of securing the first place in any examination for which he sat. His favourite subject was mathematics. During his undergraduate course at Cambridge, he was a competitor for mathematical honours at the London University, and he succeeded in carrying off in succession a mathematical scholarship at the matriculation examination, and again another mathematical scholarship at the first B.A. examination. In the next year he became University Scholar; and, in 1868, he graduated M.A. and obtained the Gold Medal for mathematics. Meanwhile he was equally carrying everything before him at Cambridge, where he won the first mathematical scholarship at St. John's College; and, subsequently, in the same year in which he took the Gold Medal at the London University, became Senior Wrangler and first Smith's Prizeman. On this occasion his score of marks was so extraordinary that his excess of marks over what would have sufficed to secure the Senior Wranglership would alone have entitled him to a high place among the wranglers. As was natural in the circumstances, Mr. Moulton, when the choice of a profession presented itself to his mind, at first inclined to adopt an academic career, and he became a Fellow, afterwards a Lecturer, of Christ's College, and subsequently a Lecturer at Jesus College. The attractions of a larger sphere, however, in the end prevailed, and in 1873 he resigned his Fellowship and came to London, receiving in the next year a call to the Bar at the Middle Temple. He took silk in 1885, and is still in leading practice at the Bar. In politics Mr. Moulton has always been an advanced thinker. He was a Radical member of the Union Debating Society at Cambridge over which he for a time presided, and sat for a short while in the last Parliament as the Liberal representative of Clapham He was, however, among the many Liberals dislodged at the general election of 1886, and has not yet found an opportunity of re-entering the House of Commons. He became the designated Liberal candidate for the representation of Nottingham, but was defeated by a majority of 83 in the election of 1892. In March, 1894, however, he was returned to Parliament, after a close contest, as member for South Hackney, from the representation of which Lord (then Sir C.) Russell had just retired. He was elected an Alderman by the London County Council in 1893. Notwithstanding professional and political preoccupations, Mr. Moulton has from time to time made contributions to current scientific discussion, and in particular during the year 1879 he wrote, in collaboration with the late Dr. William Spottiswoode, at that time President of the Royal Society, two elaborate papers upon the discharge of Electricity through rarefied gases, or, to speak more popularly, in vacuum tubes. The merit of these contributions was at once recognised in scientific circles, and Mr. Moulton was, in June, 1880, elected to the Fellowship of the Royal Society. Again, in 1881, he assisted at the Congress of Electricians, which met during that year in Paris, and on that occasion was decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honour. He married, in 1875, Clara, the widow of the late R. W. Thompson of Edinburgh; she died in 1889.

MOULTON, The Rev. William Fiddian, D.D., the son of the Rev. James Egan Moulton, was born at Leek, in 1835, and was educated at Woodhouse Grove School. In 1856 he graduated M.A. at the London University, gaining the Gold Medal in Mathematics. In the Scriptural Examinations and Biblical Criticism he was Prizeman. Mr. Moulton then entered the Wesleyan Ministry; and, in 1858, was appointed Classical Tutor in the Wesleyan Theological College, Richmond. After having laboured there for sixteen years, he was appointed Head Master of the New Wesleyan School, "The Leys," at Cambridge in 1874. Previously, in 1872, he had been elected a member of the Legal Hundred at the earliest election at which the laws of the Wesleyan Connexion admitted into that select body. While at Richmond, in 1870, he published a translation of Winer's "Treatise on the Grammar of New Testament Greek;" and in the same year he was invited to join the New Testament Revision Committee, which invitation he accepted, and continued as an active member till the completion of the Revised Version in 1880. It is understood that Dr. Moulton is engaged upon the marginal references for the Revised New Testament; a new Reference Bible of that Revised Version being in preparation. He is also one of the Cambridge Committee for the revision of the translation of the Apocrypha, his original colleagues being the late Dr. Lightfoot, Dr. Westcott, and the late Dr. Hort. In 1878 he published a "Popular History of the English Bible," and in 1879, Commentaries on the Epistle to the Hebrews, and (in conjunction with the late Dr. Milligan) the Gospel of St. John. He has also published other minor works. The value of his work was recognised by the University of Edinburgh, which conferred on him the degree of D.D. in 1874; and by the University of Cambridge, which made him an honorary M.A. in 1877. The success of the Leys School, Cambridge, is now established, there being about 180 boys in residence, drawn from all the Evangelical Churches. In 1890 Dr. Moulton was elected President of the Wesleyan Conference.

MOUNET, Jean Sully, known to the theatrical world of France as Mounet-Sully, the tragedian, was born at Bergerac (Dordogne), on Feb. 27, 1841. He showed a precocious love of the drama, and the actor's career, and met with opposition from his family. At the age of twenty-one, however, he undertook his own dramatic education, entered the Conservatoire, and was praised by Bressant. In 1868 he won a first prize for tragic acting, and made a modest début at the Odéon in Paris. During the war of 1870 he was in command of volunteers, and for a time, in 1871, thought of giving up the stage, but in July, 1872, he was at length given the part of Oreste at the Théâtre Français. In this rôle he won his laurels, and in eighteen months his services as a tragedian won him his election as sociétaire to the first theatre in the world. He has remained there ever since, and has become famous for the power and nervous intensity of his acting and the beauty of his voice. His most celebrated parts are Achilles in "Iphigénie," Xiphares in "Mithridate," Hyppolytus and Orosmanes in "Zaïre." In 1888 he surpassed himself as Œdipus Rex in the Sophoclean tragedy of that name, which was acted amid the ruins of the Roman theatre at Orange. He is also famous for his impersonation of Hamlet, and of various modern rôles such as the King in "Le Roi s'Amuse." He was elected a Knight of the Legion of Honour in 1889. His brother, Jean Paul Mounet, is also an actor of some eminence. He was born in 1847, and in 1889 entered the Théâtre Français.

MOWAT, The Hon. Oliver, Q.C., LL.D., M.P.P., Canadian statesman, was born at Kingston, July 22, 1820. He was called to the Bar of Upper Canada in Nov., 1841, and was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1856, and a Bencher of the Law Society for the Province in the same year. From 1856 to 1857 he was a Commissioner for consolidating the Public General Statutes of Canada and Upper Canada. He entered political life in 1857, as representative of South Ontario, and was Provincial Secretary in the following year in the Brown-Dorion Government, which, however, lasted but a few days. He was Postmaster-General in 1863-64; and from Nov., 1864, until Oct., 1872, was Vice-Chancellor of Upper Canada. He left the Bench at the latter period to form a new administration in Ontario, and became Premier and Attorney-General for the Province, and representative of North Oxford in the Legislature, positions which he still holds. He is the author of many important legislative measures in the Provincial Parliament, and is a Liberal in politics. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Queen's College, Kingston, in 1872, and by the University of Toronto in 1889.

MOWBRAY, The Right Hon. Sir John Robert, Bart., M.P., D.C.L., P.C., of Warennes Wood, Berkshire, is the only son of the late Mr. Robert S. Cornish, of Exeter, by his marriage with Marianne, daughter of Mr. John Powning, of Hill's Court, near Exeter. He was born at Exeter in 1815; was educated at Westminster and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. and M.A., and received the honorary degree of D.C.L. at Oxford, Nov. 30, 1869; was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple, and went the Western circuit. He was elected, in 1853, one of the members in the Conservative interest for the City of Durham, which he continued to represent until 1868, when he was returned for the University of Oxford, for which he has been one of the members up to the present time. He was appointed Judge-Advocate-General in Lord Derby's second administration in 1858, when he was sworn a Privy Councillor, and again in Lord Derby's third administration in July, 1866. He was Second Church Estates

Commissioner from Aug., 1866, to Dec., 1868; and Church Estates Commissioner, appointed by Archbishop Tait, from 1871 to 1892. He is Chairman of the Standing Orders Committee and Committee of Selection in the House of Commons. He is an honorary Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford; and in 1877 he was elected an honorary Student of Christ Church. He was created a baronet in April, 1880. He married, in 1847, Elizabeth Gray, only child of George Isaac Mowbray, Esq., of Bishopwearmouth, co. Durham, and Mortimer, Berks, on which occasion he assumed the name of Mowbray in lieu of his patronymic. His son, Mr. Robert G. C. Mowbray, Fellow of All Souls, was in 1886, and again in 1892, elected Conservative member for the Prestwich division of Lancashire.

MUDFORD, William H., the life editor of the Standard, was born in 1839, and is the son of the proprietor of the Kentish Observer and the Canterbury Journal. He became manager of the Standard in 1873, and editor in 1876. It is said that the success of that important paper is mainly due to the ability and moderation of its present editor.

MUELLER (Baron), Sir Ferdinand von, K.C.M.G., M.D., Ph.D., F.R.S., son of the late Frederick Mueller, of Rostock, Germany, and Louisa, daughter of George Mertens, of Aschersleben, was born at Rostock, 1825; educated, after the early death of his parents, in Schleswig; studied in Kiel, and examined extensively the vegetation of Schleswig and Holstein from 1840 to 1847, when, on account of hereditary inclination to phthisis, he emigrated to Australia. He travelled through the extensive territory of South Australia, mainly for researches on plants, from 1848 till 1852, at his private expense. In 1852 he accepted the newly-created office of Government Botanist for Victoria; explored there till 1855, examining also the whole alpine vegetation of Australia, previously utterly unknown; ascended and named Mount Hotham, the Barkly Ranges and many other mountains; joined, as Phytographic Naturalist, the expedition, sent out under Augustus Gregory, by the Duke of Newcastle, to explore the River Victoria, and other portions of the north parts of the Australian continent; was one of the four who reached Termination Lake in 1856; went throughout the whole route of the same expedition, conducted overland by Gregory to Moreton Bay; accepted the Directorship of the Botanical Garden of Melbourne in 1857, which office he held till 1873, raising that institution to high fame, and establishing scientific relations with all parts of the globe, in order to introduce useful and rare plants into the colony, and to make known Australian plants abroad. He was one of the Commissioners for the Industrial Exhibitions in Melbourne in 1854, 1862, and 1867; has issued eleven volumes of his "Fragmenta Phytographiæ Australiæ;" two volumes on the "Plants of Victoria," one on Eucalyptus, one on Myoporinæ, one on Acacias, one on Salsolaceæ, all largely illustrated, irrespective of many other publications; co-operated in the elaboration of Bentham's "Flora Australiensis," of which seven volumes have appeared. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London in 1861; was included in the first colonial nominations for the Order of SS. Michael and George; nominated a Grand Cross Dignitary of the Christus Order, a Commander of the Order of St. Iago of Portugal, of Isabella of Spain, and of Philip of Hesse, and created an hereditary Baron by the King of Würtemberg, in 1871. He extensively promoted geographic research in Australian territory also. Mountains, rivers, and lakes are named in Australia in honour of Baron von Mueller, also a glacier and river in New Zealand, a mountain in Spitzbergen, and a cataract in the Brazils. The Baron still continues his researches in Melbourne. In 1879 he was rewarded for his colonial services with the Knight Commandership of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. In 1888 he was the recipient of one of the two Royal Medals of the Royal Society of London. The Baron is corresponding member of over 150 scientific societies, including many academies in various parts of the world.

MUIR, Matthew Moncrieff Pattison, was born at Glasgow on Nov. 1, 1848, and educated at the High School of Glasgow and the University of Glasgow. He studied chemistry under the late Dr. Penny at Anderson's College, Glasgow, and under Professor Fittig at the University of Tübingen. He was Demonstrator in Chemistry in Anderson's College, 1871–74; Assistant Lecturer and Demonstrator in Chemistry in the Owens College, Manchester, 1874-77; and was appointed Prælector in Chemistry at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, 1877. He took the degree of M.A., honoris causâ, given by the University of Cambridge in 1880; and was elected a Fellow of Gonville and Caius College, 1881. He was examiner in Chemistry in the Natural Sciences Tripos (Cambridge) 1884 and 1885, and is the author of "Qualitative Analysis and Laboratory Practice," with T. E. Thorpe, 1874 (several editions published since); "Chemistry for Medical Students," 1878; "Chemists" in "Heroes of Science" series, 1883; "A Treatise on the Principles of Chemistry," 1884; 2nd edit. 1889; "Elements of Thermal Chemistry," 1885; "Elementary Chemistry" (with Chas. Slater), 1887; "Practical Chemistry" (with D. J. Carnegie), 1887; joint editor of a new edition of "Watts' Dictionary of Chemistry," 1888; and author of "The Chemistry of Fire," 1883; and "The Alchemical Essence and the Chemical Element," 1894.

MUIR, Sir William, K.C.S.I., D.C.L., Ph.D., son of Mr. William Muir, of Glasgow, was born in 1819. He was educated at the Universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow; entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1837; has been Secretary to the Government of India in the foreign department; was appointed Provisional Member of the Governor-General's Council in India in Dec. 1867, and Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces in 1868; was invested with the Order of the Star of India in 1867; appointed Financial Member of the Council of the Governor-General of India in 1874; and retired in 1876; Member of the Council of India, 1876 to 1885; Principal of the University of Edinburgh, 1885, in succession to the late Sir Alexander Grant. He was created an honorary D.C.L. of the University of Oxford in 1882; and Ph.D. of Bologna in 1888. His works are: "The Life of Mahomet and History of Islam, to the Era of the Hegira," 4 vols., Lond., 1858-61, third edit., 1 vol., 1894; Annals of the Early Caliphate," 1883; "The Caliphate," 2nd edit., 1893; "The Korân, its Composition and teaching, and the Testimony it bears to the Holy Scriptures," 1878; "Extracts from the Korân, with English rendering," 1880; "The Apology of Al-Kindy," 1881 and 1887; "The Early Caliphate and Rise of Islam," being the Rede Lecture for 1881, delivered before the University of Cambridge; and "Sweet First-Fruits," 1893.

MULHALL, Michael G., born 1836, is third son of the late Thomas Mulhall, lawyer, St. Stephen's Green, Dublin. He was educated at the Irish College, Rome. In 1861 he founded the Buenos Ayres Standard, the first English daily paper printed in S. America, of which he is still half-owner. His handbook of the River Plate has gone through six editions, one in Spanish. During the ten years from 1880 to 1890, he has been a constant contributor to the Contemporary Review and to section F. of the British Association. He was elected to the Committee of the Association in 1884, and attended the Anglo-American Scientific Congress, held that year at Philadelphia. His principal works are, "The Progress of the World," 1880; and the "Dictionary of Statistics," 1886, of which a new edition appeared in 1892. His wife, Mrs. Marion Mulhall, published, in 1883, a book of travels "Between the Amazon and the Andes," and received a complimentary diploma from the Royal Italian Geographical Society.

MULLINGER, James Bass, B.A., was born at Bishop Stortford, Herts, in 1834, being the second son of John Morse Mullinger, and Mary, second daughter of the Rev. James Bass, of Halstead, Essex. He studied at University College, London, in the classes of the late Professors De Morgan and Malden. In 1862 he entered at St. John's College, Cambridge; graduated B.A. in 1866 in double honours, third-class in classics, and second-class in moral sciences, and was Le Bas, Hulsean, and Kaye university prizeman. He was for two years lecturer on history at Bedford College, London, and is at the present time lecturer on history and librarian to St. John's College, and Birkbeck Lecturer on Ecclesiastical History to Trinity College. Mr. Mullinger is the author of "Cambridge Characteristics in the Seventeenth Century," 1867; "The Ancient African Church," 1869; "The New Reformation," a narrative of the Old Catholic movement, published under the nom de guerre of "Theodorus," 1875; "The University of Cambridge: from the Earliest Times to the Accession of Charles I.," 2 vols., 1873-84; "The Schools of Charles the Great," 1877; and joint author, with Professor S. R. Gardiner, of "An Introduction to English History," 1881. He has written also various historical articles in the "Dictionary of Christian Antiquities;" and is the author of those on "The Popedom," "The Reformation," and "Universities" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He has been a frequent contributor to the Academy, the Revue Historique, the Contemporary Review, and the Dictionary of National Biography.

MUNDELLA, The Right Hon. Anthony John, M.P., is of Italian ancestry, and was born in 1825. He received a liberal education, and was subsequently engaged in the staple trade of Nottingham, and became Sheriff for that town in 1852. In 1859 he organised the first courts of arbitration for the settlement of trade disputes. He entered Parliament as an advanced Liberal member for Sheffield in 1868, and represented that constituency till 1885, when he was returned by the Brightside Division of Sheffield. He was Vice-President of the Council on Education, and a Charity Commissioner, from 1880 to 1885; and, in 1886, became President of the Board of Trade, which post, of course, he resigned when Mr. Gladstone's Ministry went out of office. In 1892 he was re-elected for the Brightside Division and re-appointed President of the Board of Trade, but he resigned the latter post in May, 1894.

MUNK, William, M.D., F.S.A., was educated at University College, London, and the University of Leyden, where he graduated Doctor of Medicine, June 23, 1837. He was admitted a member of the Royal College of Physicians in 1844, and a Fellow in 1854; elected Harveian Librarian of the College in 1857; and was Senior Censor in 1882, and Vice-President of the College in 1888-89. He was formerly connected with the Medical School of St. Thomas's Hospital as demonstrator of morbid anatomy, and for many years was physician to the Royal Hospital for Asthma, Consumption, and Diseases of the Chest. He now holds the office of consulting physician to the Royal Hospital for Incurables. In addition to numerous contributions to the medical journals, relating chiefly to diseases of the lungs and heart, he is the author of a "Memoir of the Life and Writings of J. A. Paris, M.D.," 1857; and of a valuable biographical work, entitled "The Roll of the Royal College of Physicians of London, compiled from the Annals and from other Authentic Sources," 2 vols., 1861, the second edition of which appeared in 3 volumes in 1878; and of "Euthanasia, or Medical Treatment in Aid of an Easy Natural Death," 1887. In 1884 he edited "The Gold-Headed Cane." Dr. Munk was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1863.

MUNKACSY, Michael, Hungarian painter, was born near Munkacs in 1846. His parents were poor, and he was apprenticed to a carpenter; but his genius for painting soon manifested itself, and he left the bench for the easel. His picture, "The Last Day of a Condemned Prisoner" was exhibited in the Paris Salon in 1870, and at once established his reputation. This was followed by "The Night Prowlers," "The Studio," "The Two Families," "Milton Dictating Paradise Lost to his Daughters," 1878; "Christ before Pilate" 1882; "Christ on Calvary," 1884; "The Last Moments of Mozart," 1886; "Allegory of the Italian Renaissance," a fresco, 1890; "The Favourite Air," 1891; and three portraits of ladies, 1890-92. He was promoted to be a Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1890, and has obtained medals at successive Exhibitions in Paris, and a grand prize in 1889.

MURRAY, Alexander S., LL.D., F.S.A., Keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities in the British Museum, was born in 1841, and educated at the Royal High School, Edinburgh, the University of Edinburgh, and the University of Berlin. He was appointed Assistant in the British Museum in 1867, and Keeper in 1886, in succession to Sir C. T. Newton, K.C.B., retired. He is best known by a work on the History of Greek Sculpture, 2 vols., 1880 and 1883; and a Handbook of Greek Archæology, 1892. He has also contributed numerous articles to the Nineteenth Century, Contemporary Review, Revue Archéologique, and Journal of Hellenic Studies, &c. He is an active and prominent member of the Hellenic Society.

MURRAY, The Right Hon. Sir Charles Augustus, K.C.B., P.C., second son of the fifth Earl of Dunmore, born Nov. 22, 1806, was educated at Eton and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1827, and was elected to a Fellowship at All Souls College. He was appointed, June 6, 1838, Master of the Royal Household, and Dec. 31, 1844, extra Groom in Waiting on the Queen. In 1844 he was appointed Secretary of Legation at Naples; in 1846 British Agent and Consul-General in Egypt, where he remained some years; in 1853 British Minister in Switzerland; was sent in 1854 as Envoy to Teheran; in 1859 was appointed British Minister in Saxony; in 1866 was sent as Envoy to Denmark; and in 1867 to Portugal. He was in attendance upon the Viceroy of Egypt on his visit to England in June and July, 1862; was made a C.B. April 27, 1848, and a K.C.B. in June, 1866. He has written the popular Indian story, "The Prairie Bird," published in 1844; "Travels in North America," in 1854; and "Hassan; or, The Child of the Pyramids," in 1857. He was sworn of the Privy Council, May 13, 1875.

MURRAY, David Christie, was born at West Bromwich, Staffordshire, April 13, 1847, and educated at a private school there. He began press life as a reporter on the Birmingham Morning News, under the editorship of his friend George Dawson; came to London in 1873, served on the Daily News, and was on the staff of the World. He acted as special correspondent of the Scotsman, and the Times in the Russo-Turkish War. On his return he abandoned journalism for fiction. In 1879 he published his first long work of fiction in Chambers's Journal—"A Life's Atonement." "Joseph's Coat" appeared in 1880; "Val Strange" and "Coals of Fire," "A Collection of Short Stories," in 1881; "Hearts" and "By the Gate of the Lea," in 1882, the latter being the latest serial published in the original series of the Cornhill Magazine. In 1883 Mr. Murray published "The Way of the World," and, in 1886, "Aunt Rachel," which appeared first in the English Illustrated Magazine, "Old Blazer's Hero," 1887; "A Dangerous Catspaw" (written in connection with Mr. Henry Murray); and "Wild Dorrie," 1889. His latest works are "Bob Martin's Little Girl," a novel, 1892; "A Wasted Crime," 1893; and "In Direst Peril," "The Great War of 189–" (in conjunction with P. Colomb), and "The Making of a Novelist," 1894.

MURRAY, Professor G. G. A., was born in Sydney, in 1866, and is the son of Sir T. A. Murray, who was the first Speaker in the Legislative Council of New South Wales, and for ten years its President. G. G. A. Murray was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and at St. John's College, Oxford, where, in his first year, he carried off the Hertford and Ireland Scholarships, and subsequently every open scholarship and prize of the University, and was elected to a Fellowship at New College. In 1889, at the age of only twenty-three, he became Professor of Greek at the University of Glasgow. He published in 1890, "Gobi or Shame: a Story of Three Songs;" and in November, 1889, he married the Hon. Lady Mary Howard, eldest daughter of the Earl of Carlisle.

MUTSU HITO, The Mikado, or Emperor of Japan, was born Nov. 3, 1852, and ascended the throne Feb. 3, 1867. He began his reign by great reforms conceived in a liberal spirit, resulting in abolishing the feudal system which has impeded the general progress of the country. He has given the Japanese a Parliamentary Constitution based on the example of European nations. He has in fact inaugurated the new era in Japan, which during his reign has become unprecedentedly prosperous. During the recent Chino-Japanese war he has shown himself a true leader of his people, making many public appearances, and controlling and rewarding his generals after the fashion of an "enlightened despot" of the eighteenth century in Europe. The Prince Imperial is Yoshi Hito, born Aug. 31, 1879.

MYLNE, The Right Rev. Louis George, D.D., Bishop of Bombay, son of Major Charles David Mylne, H.E.I.C.S., was born in Paris in 1843, and educated at Merchiston Castle School, Edinburgh, at the University of St. Andrew's, and at Corpus Christi College, Oxford (B.A. 1st class in Classics, 1866; M.A. 1870; D.D. 1876). He was curate of North Moreton, Berkshire from 1866 to 1870, and senior tutor of Keble College from 1870 to 1876; was appointed Bishop of Bombay in succession to the late Dr. Douglas, and was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, May 1, 1876. He is author of several works on the Church in India. Dr. Mylne married in 1879, Amy Frederica, daughter of G. W. Moultrie, Esq., and has four children.

N.

NANSEN, Fridjof, Ph.D., was born near Christiania, on Oct. 10, 1861. He went to the University of Christiania in 1880, and decided upon studying zoology; therefore, to study animal life in high latitudes he, in March, 1882, went out in a Norwegian sealing ship to the Jan Mayen and Spitzbergen seas, and afterwards to the sea between Iceland and Greenland. He returned from this expedition in July, 1882, and later in the same year was appointed Curator in the Natural History Museum at Bergen (Norway). In 1888 he took his degree as Doctor of Philosophy, and in May of that year started on his memorable journey to Greenland, which continent he crossed, returning in May, 1889, after which he was appointed, by the Government, Curator of the Museum of Comparative Anatomy at the Christiania University. He has written various papers upon anatomical subjects; and the account of his last expedition "Across Greenland," was published in 1890. The Norwegian Storthing, or National Assembly, some years ago voted a grant of 200,000 kroner for a fresh expedition to the North Pole. The charge of the expedition was entrusted to M. Fridjof Nansen, and there are several features of special interest in connection with the inception of this further effort to reach the North Pole that call for notice, Hitherto, with one possible exception, all attempts to reach the North Pole have been made in defiance of the obstacles of nature. Now an attempt is being made to ascertain whether nature herself has not supplied a means of solving the difficulty, and whether there is not, after all, a possibility of reaching the North Pole by utilising certain natural facilities in these frozen seas of which all early explorers were ignorant. The circumstances upon which these new hopes are based may be thus summarised. The Jeannette expedition of 1879-81 and the loss of that vessel seemed to sound the knell of all expeditions to reach the Pole by Behring Straits, but in June, 1884, exactly three years after the Jeannette sank, there were found near Julianshaab, in Greenland, several articles which had belonged to the Jeannette, and been abandoned at the time of its wreck by the crew, and which had been carried to the coast of Greenland, from the opposite side of the Polar Sea, on a piece of ice. This fact at once aroused curiosity as to how it accomplished that mysterious journey across the Arctic Ocean, and as to what unknown current had borne that significant and informing message from Behring Straits to Greenland; and it is thought highly probable that there is a comparatively short and direct route across the Arctic Ocean by way of the North Pole, and that nature herself has supplied a means of communication, however uncertain, across it. M. Nansen's expedition will endeavour to realise these hopes of a direct route across the apex of the Arctic Ocean. In 1892 Dr. Nansen completed a polar ship, the Fram (Onward), which is rigged as a three-masted schooner, has an engine of 160 horse-power and a displacement of 800 tons. The sides are so constructed as to force all ice meeting the vessel underneath her, so that the hull escapes being nipped or "screwed." Dr. Nansen, with a crew of twelve men, left Norway on July 24, 1893, and on Aug. 23 he sent a despatch from Vardö, which had been written in the Yugorski Strait on the 2nd, reporting that he was about to sail into the Kara Sea, and that the Fram had hitherto forced her way through the ice in an admirable manner. Nothing was heard of Dr. Nansen during 1894, and this was held to indicate either that he had passed Cape Chelyuskin, or had been forced by the trend of the ice-pack to sail further to the northward. He married, in Sept., 1889, Mdlle. Eva Sars, an eminent singer, the youngest daughter of the late M. Sars, Professor of Zoology in Christiania University.

NAOROJI, Dadabhai, Member of Parliament for Central Finsbury, is the first native of India who has represented a British constituency in Parliament. He is the son of a Parsee priest, and was born in Bombay on Sept. 4, 1825. When only four years old he lost his father, his early education thus devolving on his mother, who brought him up with great diligence and care. In India the opportunities of receiving an English education could hardly be said to have existed in the thirties, and young Naoroji was put into the only Government school that Bombay could boast of at the time, being a seminary, which ultimately developed into the Elphinstone Institution. Here his career was one of uniform success. From the first he showed an unusual predilection for mathematics, and carried away almost all the prizes and exhibitions for proficiency in his favourite study, as well as others. His highest academical reward came when he was elected to the Chair of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in his own college, the first Professorship ever held by an Indian in any prominent college in his country. Among those who laboured diligently for the cause of education in Bombay was the late Sir Erskine Perry, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and President of the Board of Education. He was impressed from the very first with the talents and attainments of young Naoroji, and, so early as 1845, proposed to send the young student to England to study for the Bar, undertaking himself to defray a moiety of the expenses should the Parsee community be responsible for the other half. The project fell through, and it was not till ten years after that Mr. Naoroji visited England. In the meantime his activities as a reformer knew no bounds. Whatever could conduce to the regeneration of his countrymen, politically, socially, and morally, whether it was the abolition of child marriage and re-marriage of widows, whether the educating and cultivating of public opinion in the community, the institution of schools, libraries, and gymnasiums, Mr. Naoroji was in the centre of each movement. Such institutions as the Student's Literary and Scientific Society, the Dryan Prasarak Society, the Rahnumaya Mazdyasna Sabha, the Iranee Fund, the Bombay Gymnasium, the Framjee Cowasjee Institute, the Native General Library, the Victoria Museum, the Rast Goftai newspaper, an independent organ of native opinion, all owe their existence to his initiative or cooperation. He first left Bombay for England in 1855 as a partner in the firm of Messrs, Cama and Co., the first Indian house established in London and Liverpool, and has resided here, off and on, since then. After his arrival he lost no time in rousing a deep sympathy for his country and a high regard for his integrity and ability in such noted friends of India as the late John Bright and Henry Fawcett, and succeeded in furnishing most of them with effective briefs for fighting the battles of India in England. The question of holding examinations simultaneously in India and England for admission to the Indian Civil Service was then present in his mind, and he succeeded, through the kindness of the late Sir Erskine Perry, in unearthing a minute of a Committee of the Council of the Secretary of State for India which, so long ago as 1860, had recommended a step which only the other day found a confirmation in a resolution of the present House of Commons, viz., to hold examinations simultaneously in England and India for all the Civil Services. Returning to India in 1864, he offered to pay 50,000 rupees (a very large slice out of his hard-earned money) to found a scholarship in Bombay in honour of Lord Canning, if others should adequately supplement it; but on account of the financial crisis of that period, in which Mr. Naoroji and others suffered, the proposition fell through. Back again in London in 1867, he, with other friends, established the East India Association, and induced the princes and chiefs of India to endow it handsomely. From 1868 he carried on a correspondence with Lord Iddesleigh (then Sir Stafford Northcote) and Mr. Grant Duff, which, with the help of a memorial proposed by him in the East India Association, resulted in the addition of a clause in the Government of India Act of 1870 opening the Civil Service to a limited number of native Indians. In 1869 the residents of Bombay held a public meeting, and decided to present Mr. Naoroji with his portrait and a purse, which was afterwards spent by its recipient in public purposes. By his efforts Mr. Naoroji contributed largely to the appointment of the Select Committee to inquire into the finances of India (1873). His appointment, in 1874, as Prime Minister of the Prince of Baroda called forth his highest faculties as a statesman; and Sir Lewis Pelly, the British Resident at the Court, stated in recognition of his services, "that until purged by Mr. Dadabhai, the criminal and civil administration of justice was notoriously venal and corrupt." He was a member of the Corporation and Municipal Council of Bombay; as such he discovered the inaccuracy that had crept into the mode of calculating the instalment of principal and interest payable on account of the Vehar Waterworks, which had caused a loss to the Municipal Treasury to the extent of over £600,000 sterling. About this time came out his treatise, called the "Poverty of India," which marked him at once as the greatest authority on Indian Economics. His figures as to the poverty of India were hotly contested for a time by a section of the Anglo-Indian officials, till seven years later Major Baring (now Lord Cromer) arrived at the same deplorable conclusions as Mr. Naoroji. Other works of Mr. Naoroji's are:—"England's Duties to India" and "Mysore," 1867; "The Expenses of the Abyssinian War," "Reply to Lord William Hay on the Mysore Succession," and the "Duties of the Local Indian Associations," 1868; "On the Indian Civil Service Clause in the Governor-General of India's Bill," "On the Admission of Educated Natives into the Indian Civil Service," and on "The Bombay Act of 1869," 1869; "The Wants and Means of India," 1870; "The Commerce of India," "Cotton Frauds," and "Financial Administration of India," 1871; "Correspondence with the Secretary of State on the Condition of India," 1882; a "Note on General Education," a "Minute on Technical Education," and several other pamphlets. In 1885 Mr. Naoroji was appointed a member of the Legislative Council of Bombay. In 1886 he unsuccessfully contested the Holborn Parliamentary Division in London. In 1892 he was returned as a Liberal member by Central Finsbury, his majority being phenomenally small. When he visited India in December, 1893, Indians of all classes and creeds joined in enthusiastic and vast demonstrations of welcome. Mr. Naoroji presided in 1886 over the Second Session at Calcutta of the Indian National Congress, and over the Ninth Session at Lahore, in the Punjab, in Dec., 1893. He sits as a Gladstonian in Parliament, and on other than Indian topics is an advanced Liberal. He is President of the London Indian Society.

NAPIER AND ETTRICK, (Lord) The Right Hon. Francis Napier, K.T., tenth Baron, born Sept. 15, 1819, succeeded his father Oct. 11, 1834. He was made Attaché to the Embassy in Vienna in 1840, and held diplomatic posts in Teheran and Constantinople, to which place he returned as Secretary of Embassy in 1854, after having been Secretary of Legation at Naples and in St. Petersburg. In 1857 he was appointed British Minister in Washington, whence he was removed, Dec. 13, 1858, to the Hague; going Dec. 11, 1860, to St. Petersburg; and Sept. 15, 1864, to Berlin. He was Governor of Madras from Jan. 31, 1866, till Jan., 1872, and was then acting Viceroy of India, pro tempore, after the assassination of Lord Mayo. Having returned to England he acted as President of the Social Science Association at the meeting held at Plymouth in the autumn of 1872. He also presided over the education section of the same Association at the meeting held at Glasgow in Oct., 1874. After his return to this country Lord Napier and Ettrick took an active part towards bringing about a reform in the municipal government of the metropolis, and he became an energetic worker in the London School Board, of which he was a member. He was chairman of the Crotter Commission, and is believed to have written the celebrated Report, which caused so much indignation in the minds of the Duke of Argyll and other Highland landlords.

NAPOLEON, Victor Jerome Frederick, son of Prince Napoleon and the Princess Clotilde, was born July 18, 1862. On the death of the Prince Imperial in 1879, when his father held the position of head of the House of Bonaparte, the claim was disputed by M. Paul de Cassagnac and several other Imperialists, who put forward the young Prince Victor as his father's rival. But this move was not encouraged by the son, though the latter, it is understood, was nominated in the Prince Imperial's will as his successor. During the last years of his father's lifetime he was put forward by ardent followers as head of the "Victoriens," who at one time were fiercely opposed to the "Jerômistes," but Prince Victor is said to have denied that he was in any way opposed to his father's policy, and even accompanied him on a visit to the ex-Empress in England in 1883. In 1884, however, he put himself at the head of a new Bonapartist faction, and left his father's house. At the same time a revenue of 40,000 francs a year was left him, which further accentuated his independence. When the Expulsion Bill of 1886 became law the Prince and his father were exiled from France, but while the latter took up his abode in Switzerland, the son went to Brussels. Nor did he again see his father till the latter lay dying in Rome, in March, 1891. In 1889 he issued a manifesto previous to the general election of that year. He is now head of the French Bonapartist party.

NAQUET, Joseph Alfred, M.D., was born at Carpentras (Vaucluse), on Oct., 6, 1834, and educated first at Carpentras, then at Montpellier, and finally in Paris, where he took the degree of M.D. in 1859. He then went into the chemical laboratory of the School of Medicine in Paris under M. Wurtz, and wrote many papers on pure chemistry. In 1863 he became Professor of Physics at Palermo, and while there wrote his work "Principes de Chimie fondée sur les Théories modernes," which has passed through five editions in France, and been translated into English, German, and Polish. In 1867, M. Naquet entered political life, a charge against him of conspiracy against the Empire having resulted in fifteen months' imprisonment, and a subsequent flight into Spain, from which he returned in 1869; and having taken a prominent part in the events of Sept. 4, 1870, he was subsequently, at Tours, nominated by Gambetta as Secretary to the Defence Committee. He was, in 1879, elected deputy for Vaucluse, and at first supported Gambetta, but eventually broke with him. He then threw all his strength into the effort for legalising divorce, in which he succeeded in 1886. As he is a strong revisionist, and thought that that end might be attained through the success of General Boulanger, he became one of his warmest supporters; that movement having failed, he now remains a member of the isolated Boulangist group, who are still in opposition to Government. He is author of some political and scientific works. His book on "Le Divorce," 1877, and a translation of Brodie's "Calculus of Chemical Operations" may be cited.

NARES, Vice-Admiral Sir George Strong, K.C.B., F.R.S., is a son of the late Captain William Henry Nares, R.N., of Danestown, Aberdeen, by his marriage with a daughter of Mr. E. G. Dodd, and a great grandson of Sir George Nares, formerly one of the Justices of the Court of Common Pleas. He was born in 1831, and was educated at the Royal Naval College, New Cross, where he gained the naval cadetship which is given annually to the most promising pupil by the Lords of the Admiralty. He saw some service in H.M.S. Canopus forming part of the Channel Squadron, and afterwards in H.M.S. Havannah, on the Australian station. He was a mate on board the Resolute in the Arctic Expedition of 1852-54, when he took an active share in the winter amusements, and did his part manfully as a sledge-traveller. He acted in the theatricals, and gave a series of lectures to the men on winds and on the laws of mechanics. In the spring of 1853 he was auxiliary to Lieut. Mecham, and travelled over 665 miles in 69 days. In 1854 he started in the intense cold of March, and went over 586 miles in 56 days. On the return of this Arctic Expedition he served in H.M.S. Glatton during the last year of the Crimean war; afterwards in H.M.S. Conqueror on the Mediterranean station. On the inauguration of the present system of training for naval cadets, he served as Lieutenant in charge of Cadets under the late Captain Robert Harris, in H.M. ships Illustrious and Britannia. In 1854 he was promoted to the rank of Commander, being attached also to the training-ship Boscawen. In 1866-67 we find him employed at the Antipodes in command of the Salamander in surveying the eastern and north-eastern coasts of Australia and Torres Straits. In 1869 he was sent in H.M.S. Shearwater to survey and report upon the Gulf of Suez. From 1872 down to the end of 1874 Captain Nares was in command of H.M.S. Challenger, employed in making extensive soundings on the coast of China, in the Eastern and South Pacific Oceans, and in other parts of the world. He was then ordered home, and appointed to the command of the Arctic Expedition. The two ships composing the expedition, H.M.S. Alert and H.M.S. Discovery, commanded respectively by Captains Nares and Stephenson, left England in May, 1875, with the hope of reaching the North Pole. The expedition reached the mouth of Lady Franklin Bay on Aug. 27. Here Captain Nares left the Discovery to take up her quarters for the winter, while the Alert continued her course along the western shore of Robeson Channel. This course she held until, on Sept. 1, the Alert herself attained the highest latitude, and was made fast to some grounded bergs of ice, within 100 yards of a tolerably level beach in lat. 82° 27′ and long. 61° 22′. Lieut. Rawson, of the Discovery, with his sledge-crew of eight men, had accompanied the advance ship with the object of returning to the Discovery during the autumn with news of the Alert's progress. This journey, however, he was never able to accomplish, the snow being too deep, and the ice too treacherous and too frequently in motion, to render sledge-travelling possible for a distance of 70 to 80 miles at so late a period of the year. The Discovery therefore knew nothing of her consort's position until the ensuing spring. On Oct. 12 the sun finally disappeared, leaving the Alert in total or partial darkness for 142 days, and the Discovery for almost the same period. After the return of daylight, sledge expeditions were arranged. A party, numbering in the aggregate 53 persons, led by Commander Markham and Lieut. Parr, made a very gallant attempt to reach the Pole. They were absent 72 days from the ship, and on May 12 succeeded in planting the British flag in lat. 83° 10′ 26″ N. From this position there was no appearance of land to the northward, but curiously enough, the depth of water was found to be only 72 fathoms. The men suffered intensely from the extreme cold, many were attacked by scurvy, and it was with great difficulty that the sledging party made their way back to the ship. Captain Nares now resolved to return home, as, with the whole resources of the expedition he could not hope to advance more than about 50 miles beyond the positions already attained. The expedition arrived at Valentia, Oct. 27, 1876. In reward for his services Captain Nares was appointed a K.C.B. (Dec. 1). He was afterwards again placed in command of the Alert, which sailed from Portsmouth Sept. 24, 1878, for a two years' survey of the South Pacific. He retired from the navy in 1886, and was made a Vice-Admiral in March 1892. He is the author of "The Naval Cadet's Guide, or Seaman's Companion; containing complete Illustrations of all the Standing Riggings, the Knots in Use, &c.," 1860, afterwards published under the title of "Seamanship," 2nd edit., 1862; 3rd edit., 1865; 4th edit., 1868; "Reports on Ocean Soundings and Temperature" [in the Challenger], printed by direction of the Lords of the Admiralty, 6 parts, 1874-5; "The Official Report of the Arctic Expedition," 1876; and "Narrative of a Voyage to the Polar Sea during 1875-6 in H.M. ships Alert and Discovery," 2 vols., 1878. He married, in 1858, Mary, daughter of the late Mr. W. G. Grant, of Portsmouth.

NASR-ED-DEEN, Shah an Shar (King of Kings), K.G., Shah of Persia, son of the late Mohammed Shah, by Queen Velliat, of the Kadjar tribe, and grandson of Abbaz Mirza, born April 4, 1829, was called to the throne Sept. 10, 1848. The Shah is well versed in Persian and Turkish, is acquainted with history, and has travelled extensively. At the beginning of the war between Russia and Turkey in 1853, he declared his neutrality, but shortly before its close, entered into a treaty with Russia. In the following year, in consequence of the occupation of Herat by Persian troops, the Government of India declared war against him (Nov. 1, 1856). After a few months of hostilities, during which General Outram captured Kurrach, Bushire, and other places, a treaty of peace was signed in Paris by Lord Cowley and the Persian ambassador, in which ample satisfaction was given to England. Subsequently the Shah had wars with several neighbouring states, and was successful in an expedition against the Turcomans. Of late years he has acted in a most friendly manner towards England, and in 1866 a treaty for establishing telegraphic communication between Europe and India through Persia was signed at Teheran. The Shah's visit to Europe in 1873 is a strong argument as to the moderation and popularity of his rule, for although he was absent from his kingdom from May 12 till Sept. 6, not one breath of sedition disturbed the political calm that reigned there. In four months the Shah crossed the Caspian to Astrakhan, ascended the Volga, visited Moscow and St. Petersburg, crossed by rail to Berlin and Cologne, ascended by rail to Wiesbaden and Frankfort, Heidelberg, Carlsruhe, and Baden, turned northwards to Biberich, descended the Rhine to Bonn, took the rail to Spa, went on to Brussels, crossed from Ostend to Dover, visited London, Portsmouth, Liverpool, Trentham, Manchester, Windsor, Woolwich, and Richmond; crossed to Cherbourg, visited Paris, Geneva, Turin, Milan, and Verona; crossed the Brenner to Salzburg and Vienna, returned to Italy, crossed from Brindisi to Constantinople, and from Constantinople to Poti, took rail to Tiflis and carriage to Bákú, and thence returned by steamer to Enzeli, the Persian port at which his Majesty had first embarked in May. During this journey the Shah kept a diary, which, on his return, was published in the original Persian. A verbatim English translation, by Mr. J. W. Redhouse, appeared in London in 1874. The Shah has since paid a visit to Russia, entering the capital of that country in state, May 23, 1878. The "Diary kept by His Majesty the Shah of Persia during his Journey to Europe in 1878, translated from the Persian by Albert Schindler and Baron Louis de Norman," was published in London in 1879. The Shah made a second tour of Europe in 1889. He has lately shown himself anxious to cultivate a closer relationship with England, and in 1891 granted certain commercial concessions to this country in a convention obtained through Sir H. Drummond Wolff's influence. He has five sons and fifteen daughters. Not the eldest, but the second son, who was born March 5, 1853, and is named Muzaffer ed Deen Mirza, is heir presumptive.

NAST, Thomas, American illustrator, was born at Landau in Bavaria, on Sept. 27, 1840. He went to America with his parents in 1846, his father, a musician in the Bavarian Army, being advised to leave Germany, as his opinions were too radical for the times. Young Thomas soon exhibited a preference for an artistic career, and at an early age, with very little instruction, began to furnish sketches for Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, and other periodicals. He was sent to England in 1860, to make illustrations of the prize fight between Heenan and Sayers for the New York Illustrated News. That finished, he joined General Medici in the campaign in which Garibaldi freed Sicily and Naples, and created the united kingdom of Italy. While in Italy he furnished sketches for various English, French and American papers. Returning to America in Feb. 1861, just before the breaking-out of the Civil War, he found the material which made his reputation as the patriotic artist of the war, and he produced from week to week those powerful pictures which roused the citizen and cheered the soldier. During the period of corruption which followed the war, he made his best remembered hits against the Tammany Ring in New York City. He possesses in a remarkable degree the faculty of throwing individuality into articles of apparel and personal effects. In many of his pictures he would merely indicate the personality in that way; and it would be immediately recognised. Horace Greeley's hat and coat, the tag attached to the tail of Greeley's coat for Gratz Brown, the dollar mark for Tweed's face; and many other symbols, as well as the Republican Elephant and Democratic Tiger (of which he was the inventor), were made to express volumes. In his record, as a poignant castigator of wrong-doers, he has no equal; insensible to threats and bribes alike, he never flinches and shows no mercy. Most sincere in purpose, he has always been a champion of right, an exposer of humbug, and an exponent of the sentiment of the people. He is now regarded as the father of American caricature, and it is generally conceded that to him is largely due the development of this branch of art there. He has also found time to illustrate a number of books and make designs for panoramas, as well as to paint one completely. In 1866 he painted over sixty caricatures, in distemper, of the notables of the day, to be used as decorations for the opera ball given in the Academy of Music, New York, which was a very novel affair at that time. In 1873 he made his first appearance as a lecturer, illustrating in the presence of the audience. He began with crayon sketches and advanced by degrees to oil paintings, possessing wonderful dexterity of execution. He has since lectured in 1885 and 1888. He has also executed a number of oil paintings, the largest of which is now in the possession of the Seventh Regiment of New York, and hangs in the Colonel's room, in their armoury. It represents the departure of the regiment for the war, April 19, 1861. He is a veteran member of the New York Seventh Regiment, and served with his company during the riot of July 12, 1871. His home is at Morristown, N. J.

NATALIE, Queen of Servia, is the daughter of Pierre Ivanovitch Kechko, and was born May 2, 1859, and married at Belgrade to Milan I., ex-King of Servia, Oct. 17, 1875; and was divorced from him in Oct. 1888. Her son, Alexander I., who was born at Belgrade Aug. 14, 1876, is now king. The validity of the divorce of the Queen, as conducted by the aged Metropolitan Theodosius alone, at the request of the king, was disputed by her Majesty; and in reply to a letter addressed by her to the Metropolitan Michael, she received a letter signed, not only by him, but also by two members of the Synod, stating that the decree of the Metropolitan Theodosius is null and void, having been granted without consultation with the Synod, and without the Queen having been heard in her own defence. Therefore there can be no doubt that the Queen's divorce was illegal. It was granted by an aged prelate who was almost in his dotage, as it has since transpired, and who has now retired into a monastery. It was contrary to the ecclesiastical law of the land, which alone has jurisdiction in Servia over divorce cases, and it was declared invalid by the Holy Synod. In April 1891, King Milan engaged to absent himself from Servia till his son's coming of age, on condition that the Queen should not be allowed to reside in the country. Accordingly, on May 18, 1891, Queen Natalie was expelled from the private house in Belgrade where she had resided since her divorce, but in Jan. 1893, she was reconciled to the ex-king.

NAVARRO, Madame Antonio, née Mary Antoinette Anderson, an American actress, was born at Sacramento, California, July 28, 1859. Her parents moved to Kentucky when she was only six months old, and her home was at Louisville in that State until she went on the stage in her seventeenth year. Her first representation was as Juliet, Nov. 27, 1875, which met with a marked success. After travelling for a few years in the South and West, she made her appearance before Eastern audiences in the large seaboard cities in 1880, where she was as warmly received as she had previously been in smaller places. Her career from the first was one of unchecked prosperity, and few actresses have met with more popular favour than has Miss Anderson. Her first visit to England (1879) was for pleasure only, but on her return (1884-85) she played at the Lyceum Theatre, during Mr. Irving's absence in America. It was during this second visit that the Memorial Theatre at Stratford-on-Avon was opened by Miss Anderson as Rosalind in "As You Like It," and her portrait in that character forms one of the panels in the theatre. Her principal parts have been Juliet, Bianca (in "Fazio"), Julia (in "The Hunchback"), Evadne, Meg Merrilies, Pauline (in "The Lady of Lyons"), Galatea, Clarice (in "Comedy and Tragedy"), Parthenia, and Rosamond. From 1885 to 1889 she had many engagements both in Great Britain and in America, but a prolonged illness during 1889 compelled a temporary retirement from the stage, and early in 1890 she announced her withdrawal from the dramatic profession; shortly afterwards she was married in London to M. Antonio Navarro de Viana, a citizen of New York.

NEMOURS, Louis Charles Philippe Raphael d'Orléans, Duc de, one of the Orleans princes, is the second son of King Louis Philippe, and was born in Paris, Oct. 25, 1814. He received his education in the Collège Henri IV., and was still a child when Charles X., in accordance with ancient custom, appointed him colonel of the first regiment of Chasseurs de Cheval, at the head of which he made his entry into Paris, Aug. 3, 1830. In Feb. 1831, he was elected King of the Belgians, but his royal father declined, on his behalf, this offer of the National Congress, as he did also at a later period a similar offer of the throne of Greece. Subsequently the Duc de Nemours served with distinction in the two Belgian campaigns, and in Algeria, being in 1837 promoted to the rank of Lieut.-General. The premature decease of his elder brother, the Duc d'Orléans (July 13, 1842), placed the Duc de Nemours in a position of great importance. Contrary to the traditions of the old monarchy, which were in favour of the mother of the heir presumptive being declared Regent, a bill was introduced, conferring the regency on the Duc de Nemours, and carried in the Chamber of Deputies by a majority of 216 votes, and afterwards in the Peers by 163 to 14 votes. Public opinion, however, did not appear to ratify this law, which the general apprehension of danger caused to be abandoned in 1848. After the Revolution of February the Duc de Nemours quitted France, and joined the other members of the exiled family at Claremont; and he did not return to his native country until after the downfall of the empire in 1870. He has since played a very insignificant part in royalist affairs. In 1886 he was struck off the French Army List when his family was expelled from France. He married, April 27, 1840, Victoire-Auguste-Antoinette, Duchess of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha (born Feb. 14, 1822; died Nov. 10, 1857), by whom he had issue two sons, Prince Louis Philippe Marie Ferdinand Gaston d'Orléans, Compte d'Eu, and Prince Ferdinand Philippe Marie d'Orléans, Duc de Alençon, born July 12, 1844; and two daughters, the eldest of whom, the Princess Marguerite Adelaide Marie d'Orléans, born Feb. 16, 1846, was married at Chantilly to Prince Ladislas Czartoryski, Jan. 15, 1872, and died in Paris in October, 1893.

NEVILLE, Henry, born at Manchester, became an actor at an early age, and played in the provinces before coming to London, where he appeared as Percy Ardent in Boucicault's "Irish Heiress," at the Lyceum Theatre in Oct. 1860. He played for a short season at the Operetta House in Edinburgh before appearing at the Olympic as the hero in "Jack of all Trades," and as Brierly in "The Ticket of Leave Man," which was produced in May, 1863, and played for 418 nights without intermission. After his engagement at the Olympic, having performed in the "Yellow Passport," written by himself, Mr. Neville went to the Adelphi, where he played in "Lost in London," "Dora," and "Put yourself in his Place." He also shared honours with Mr. Fechter in "No Thoroughfare." He then joined the Vaudeville company under the management of Messrs. James and Thorne, and remained there during the memorable runs of "London Assurance" (360 nights), "School for Scandal" (400 nights, and a later revival of 350 nights), "Rivals" (over 300 nights), and "Money," over 260 nights. Subsequently he went back to the Olympic Theatre, not only as actor, but also as lessee and manager. Of late years he has frequently made his appearance at Drury Lane and other theatres in romantic or melodramatic parts. Mr. Neville has also published a work entitled "The Stage, its Past and Present, in relation to Fine Art," and contributed several stories to London serials.

NEWBOLT, Dr. William Charles Edmund, Canon of St. Paul's in succession to the late Dr. Liddon, was educated at Pembroke College, Oxford, of which college he was a scholar. He took his degree with honours in classics in the year 1867, and was ordained the next year. After holding for two years a curacy at Wantage, he was vicar of Dymock, Gloucestershire, from 1870 to 1887, when he was transferred to Malvern Link. In 1887 he was appointed Principal of Ely Theological College, and at the same time Honorary Canon of the diocese. He retired from Ely College in 1890, when he was appointed Canon of St. Paul's. In 1892 he became Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Ely. He is the author of "Counsels of Faith and Practice," 1883; "The Man of God," 1887; "Penitence and Peace," 1892.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE, Bishop of. See WILBERFORCE, ERNEST ROLAND.

NEWCOMB, Simon, LL.D., was born at Wallace, Nova Scotia, March 12, 1835. While a youth he went to the United States, and was for several years engaged as a teacher. In 1857 he was employed on the computations for the "American Nautical Almanac." In 1858 he began original investigations in astronomy, and in 1861 was appointed Professor of Mathematics in the United States Navy, and stationed at the Naval Observatory. He negotiated the contract for the great 26-inch telescope and supervised its construction. He was made Secretary of the Commission created by Congress in 1871 to observe the transit of Venus (Dec. 9, 1874). In 1872 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Astronomical Society, and in 1874 received its Gold Medal for his tables of Neptune and Uranus. In the same year he was chosen a Corresponding Member of the Institute of France; and in 1875 he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Mathematics and Physics from the University of Leyden. In 1878 the Haarlem Society of Sciences awarded the Huyghens medal to Dr. Newcomb, and in 1890 he received the Copley Medal of the Royal Society. He went to the Cape of Good Hope to observe the transit of Venus on Dec. 6, 1882. Since 1877 he has been Superintendent of the "Nautical Almanac," and in that capacity has instituted a series of researches on the motions of the planets which are published from time to time as "Astronomical Papers of the American Ephemeris." These researches are to form the basis of new tables of the eight major planets. Among his other published works are: "On the Secular Variations, &c., of the Asteroids," 1860; "Investigation of the Distance of the Sun," 1867; "On the Action of the Planets on the Moon," 1871; "Tables of the Planet Neptune," 1865; "Tables of Uranus, 1873; "Integrals of Planetary Motion," 1874; "Researches on the Motion of the Moon," 1878; "Popular Astronomy," 1878; "A Course of Mathematics for Schools and Colleges," 1881-87; and "Principles of Political Economy," 1886.

NEWDIGATE - NEWDEGATE, Lieut.-General Edward, K.C.B., was born June 15, 1825, at Astley Castle, Warwickshire, and is the son of Francis Newdigate, Esq., and Lady Barbara, daughter of the third Earl of Dartmouth, and was educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. He held a commission as 2nd Lieutenant in the Rifle Brigade, May 29, 1842; Lieutenant, April 14, 1846; Captain, April 30, 1852; Brevet-Major, Nov. 2, 1855; Major R. B., Sept. 1, 1857; Lieut.-Colonel, April 30, 1861; Colonel, Oct. 23, 1867; Major-General, Oct. 1, 1877; Lieut.-General, April 15, 1887. His principal appointments having been: Brigade Major, Aldershot, Aug. 11, 1856, to July 31, 1857; Particular Service, Canada, Dec. 13, 1861, to June 29, 1862; A. A. G., Aldershot, Sept. 1, 1865, to Sept. 30, 1870; Brigade-General, Chatham, Jan. 21, 1878, to Feb. 17, 1879; Major-General, South Africa, April 8, 1879, to Sept. 1879; Major-General, S. E. District, April 1, 1880, to March 31, 1885; Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Bermudas, Oct. 29, 1888. He has been in the following war services: Crimean Campaign, 1854-5, including battles of Alma and Inkerman (wounded), and Siege of Sebastopol (Medal with three clasps, Brevet of Major, and Knight of the Legion of Honour, fifth class of the Medjidieh, and Turkish Medal); Zulu War, 1879; Battle of Ulundi (Medal with clasp, and C.B.). He was placed on the Retired List in June, 1892, and was made a K.C.B. in May, 1894. He married, in 1858, Anne Emily, second daughter of the Very Rev. Thomas Garnier, Dean of Lincoln, and Lady Caroline, daughter of fourth Earl of Albemarle, and succeeded to the Arbury and Astley Estates in Warwickshire, and Harefield in Middlesex, on the death of his cousin, the Right Hon. Charles Newdigate-Newdegate in April, 1887. In accordance with the will of the above he took the additional surname of Newdegate by royal licence in 1888. Lieut.-General Newdigate-Newdegate is a J.P. for Warwickshire.

NEWMAN, Professor Francis William, son of John Newman, a member of the banking firm of Ramsbottom, Newman, & Co., and younger brother of Cardinal Newman, born in London in 1805, was educated at a private school at Ealing, and at Worcester College, Oxford, where he obtained a double first-class in classics and mathematics in 1826. In the same year he was elected Fellow of Balliol. He gave up the idea of taking orders, and resigned his fellowship in 1830 from conscientious scruples on the subject of infant baptism. He then went to Bagdad with the object of assisting the late Mr. Antony Norris Greves in a Christian mission, but his further studies convinced him that he could not conscientiously undertake the work, and in 1833 he returned to England, and became classical tutor in Bristol College. In 1840 he accepted the post of Classical Professor at Manchester, and in 1846 became Latin Professor at University College, London, which post he resigned in 1863. He has published a number of works on religious subjects, of which the best known are "The Soul; its Sorrows and its Aspirations," 1849; "Phases of Faith;" "Theism, Doctrinal and Practical," 1858. Professor Newman has long since ceased to call himself a Christian, but defines his own aim as "that of saving all that is spiritual, pure and merciful in Christianity amid the wreck which Erudition has made of its Mythology." Professor Newman has also published works on political economy and history, classics, and Oriental languages. Professor Newman has never forgotten his old academical studies, Greek, Latin, and mathematical. To these topics he has superadded Modern Arabic, which led him further into the modern Zouave, and back into the ancient Numidian, Mauritian, and Gaetulian languages. He is also an ample writer on Hebrew and Christian Theism, and on ethical politics. He has published also many fugitive pieces, in four solid octavos, under the general title of "Miscellanies." Vol. i. is chiefly Addresses, Academical and Historical; vol. ii. is Moral and Religious; vol. iii. is on Political Reforms; vol. iv. is on Political Economy. A fifth volume is to come if his life be spared. Besides these, he has put forth two small volumes of mathematical tracts, well charged with numerical tables, and an ample Treatise on Elliptic Integrals, of which a significant part appeared in the Dublin and Cambridge Magazine forty years earlier, on the Third Elliptic Integral. The following is a list of Professor Newman's principal works:—"On the Relations of Free Knowledge to Moral Sentiment," 1847; "A Reply to the 'Eclipse of Faith,'" 1853; "The Odes of Horace," 1853, 2nd edit. 1876; "Theism, Doctrinal and Practical," 1858; "Relations of Professional to Liberal Knowledge," 1859; "The Moral Influence of Law," 1860; "Homeric Translation in Theory and Practice," 1861; "Hiawatha: rendered into Latin," 1862; "The Soul: its Sorrows and its Aspirations," 1863; "A Discourse against Hero-making in Religion," 1864; "A History of the Hebrew Monarchy," 1865; "Phases of Faith," 1865; "A Handbook of Modern Arabic," 1866; "Forms of Government," 1867; "Translations of English Poetry into Latin Verse," and "The Text of the Iguvine Inscriptions," 1868; "Miscellanies," 1869, vol. ii., 1887; "Orthoëpy," 1869; "The Iliad of Homer," "A Dictionary of Modern Arabic," and "Europe of the Near Future," 1871; "Hebrew Theism," 1874; "Religion not History," 1877; "Morning Prayers in the Household of a Believer in God," 1878; "Reorganization of English Institutions," 1880; "What is Christianity without Christ?" 1881; "Libyan Vocabulary," 1882; "A Christian Commonwealth," and "Essays on Diet," 1883; "Christianity in its Cradle," "Comments on the Text of Æschylus," and "Rebilius Cruso," 1884: "Life after Death," 1886; notes to the "Politics of Aristotle," 1887; "Reminiscences of Two Exiles and Two Wars," 1888. Professor Newman's most recent work is a memoir of the early years of his brother, the late Cardinal Newman. He has always taken a keen interest in politics, but adheres to no party. He is an ardent advocate of the triple abstinence from alcohol, tobacco, and flesh meats.

NEWTON, Alfred, M.A., F.R.S., born at Geneva, June 11, 1829, is the fifth son of William Newton, of Elveden (formerly M.P. for Ipswich, and Lieut.-Colonel of West Suffolk Militia), by Eliza, a daughter of Richard Slater Milnes, of Fryston (formerly M.P. for York). He entered Magdalene College, Cambridge, and graduated B.A. in 1852, being afterwards chosen Travelling Fellow of that College, in which capacity he visited Lapland, Iceland, the West Indies, North America, and other countries. In 1864 he accompanied Sir Edward Birkbeck to Spitzbergen, and was elected by the University of Cambridge to the Professorship of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy on its establishment in 1866. In 1877 he was re-elected Fellow of Magdalene College. Prof. Newton has published "The Zoology of Ancient Europe," 1862; "Ootheca Wolleyana," 1864; and edited "The Ibis," second series; "Zoological Record," 1871-73; and the 4th edit. of "Yarrell's British Birds." He is the author of "Zoology," published by the S.P.C.K., of "A Dictionary of Birds;" of numerous papers in publications of the Zoological, Linnæan, Royal, and other learned societies, as also of many contributions to scientific journals, and to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," 9th edit. He was President in 1888, and has been many times Vice-President of Section D. of the British Association, of the Royal and Zoological Societies, and of the Marine Biological Association, and is Honorary or Corresponding Member of various foreign and colonial societies. He has taken an active part in all questions relating to the legislative protection of birds.

NEWTON, General John, American soldier, and engineer, was born at Norfolk, Aug. 24, 1823, and graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in 1842. Until the outbreak of the Civil War he was principally occupied in the construction of fortifications on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts. In Aug. 1861, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and given command of a brigade in the defences of Washington. He led his brigade to many engagements until 1862, when a division was given him. He was promoted to a Major-Generalship of Volunteers in 1863. At Gettysburg he succeeded to the command of a corps, which he retained until the reorganisation of the army in March, 1864, when he was transferred to the West, and led a division in the campaign which ended in the capture of Atlanta (Sept. 1864). From 1864, until mustered out of the volunteer service in 1866, he was in charge of various districts in Florida. He then returned to his engineering corps as a Lieut.-Colonel (Brevet Major-General) in the regular army, and was subsequently engaged in various important engineering duties in the neighbourhood of New York, principally in removing obstructions in the channel at Hell Gate and Flood Rock. In 1876 he became a member of the national Academy of Sciences, and in 1884 an honorary member of the American Society of Civil Engineers. In 1879 he was made a Colonel, and in 1884 a Brigadier-General and Chief of Engineers. Having reached the retiring age in 1886, he left the army, and in the following year was made Commissioner of Public Works in New York City. This position he resigned in 1888 to accept the Presidency of the Panama Railroad Co.

NICHOLAS I., the Hospodar of Montenegro, was born Oct. 7, 1841; was educated at Trieste and in Paris; and succeeded his uncle, who had been assassinated, Aug. 25, 1869. He is Colonel of a Russian infantry regiment. In 1860 he married Miléna, daughter of Voywode Peter Vucotitch, and has nine children. His heir, Prince Danilo-Alexander, was born at Cettingé on June 29, 1871.

NICHOLAS II., Tsar of all the Russias, was born at St. Petersburg on May 18, 1868, his father being the late Tsar Alexander III., and his mother, the Princess Dagmar, a daughter of the King of Denmark and a sister of the Princess of Wales. His education was conducted on modern lines, at the express wish of the late Tsar, and he was instructed in modern languages and history, in constitutional history, economics, and the law and administration of Russia. He is a fluent linguist, and can speak French, German, Italian and English, and is familiar with our literature and manners. He has travelled in the East and visited India. While in Japan a savage attack was made on his life by a fanatical policeman, and on that occasion he displayed personal courage of a high order. During the Russian famine of 1891 he asked to be made President of the Committee of Succour, and as such displayed great energy. He succeeded his father Alexander III. on Nov. 1, 1894, and on the 26th of the same month was married, in accordance with the late Tsar's dying wish, to Princess Alix of Hesse-Darmstadt, daughter of the late Princess Alice. Previously to the Tsar's death this Princess had been summoned to the sick man's bedside at Livadia, and for some time it was supposed that the marriage would be solemnized during his lifetime. In a manifesto, issued on the occasion of his marriage, Nicholas II. said, "Solicitous for the destinies of our new reign, we have deemed it well not to delay the fulfilment of our heart's wish, the legacy, so sacred to us, of our father, now resting in God; nor to defer the realisation of the joyful expectation of our whole people that our marriage, hallowed by the benediction of our parents, should be blessed by the Sacrament of our Holy Church." The Imperial Manifesto proper announced the granting of certain pecuniary alleviations to the classes connected with agriculture, and contained the following notable passage: —"We, in this sad but solemn hour, when ascending the ancestral throne of the Russian Empire and of the Tsardom of Poland and the Grand Duchy of Finland, indissolubly connected with it, remember the legacy left to us by our departed father, and inspired by it, we, in the presence of the Most High, record the solemn vow always to make our sole aim the peaceful development of the power and glory of our beloved Russia and the happiness of all our faithful subjects." The new Emperor has also recently proved himself favourable to the principle of religious toleration, and of the freedom, to a limited extent, of the press, so far as it concerns the censorship of foreign newspapers imported into Russia. Before he came to the throne, Tsar Nicholas II. held several military commands, and was Colonel of the Préobrajensky Regiment. In 1893 the Order of the Garter was conferred upon him. His heir is at present his brother, the Grand Duke George, who was born in 1871. He is wintering in the Caucasus, and is dangerously ill. His title, until the birth of an heir in the direct line, will be Tzarewitch and Crown Prince.

NICHOLLS, Henry Alfred Alford, M.D., F.L.S., was born in London on Sept. 27, 1851; studied medicine at St. Bartholomew's Hospital and at the University of Aberdeen, where he graduated with honours as Master in Surgery, and Bachelor of Medicine in 1873. In the same year he gained the membership of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, since which time he has resided in Dominica, W. I., as Government Medical Officer. Here Dr. Nicholls has for a number of years carried on investigations into the nature of the disease known as Yaws. His articles on this malady in the Medical Times and Gazette, and his Official Reports as the Medical Superintendent of the Dominica Yaws Hospitals, have made him the chief authority on the subject. He has established a reputation as a naturalist, and has published some treatises on tropical agriculture. In 1888 he gained the premium of £100 offered by the Government of Jamaica for the best text-book on tropical agriculture, for the use of the schools and colleges of that colony. In 1891 he was appointed Special Commissioner, by the Home Government, to inquire into the various matters relating to the spread of Yaws in the colonies of Tobago, Grenada, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, and the Leeward Islands. His report on the mission, addressed to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, has been published as a blue book. He is a Fellow of the Linnæan Society, a Corresponding Member of the Zoological Society of London, of the New York Academy of Sciences, of the Jamaica Institute, and of the Chamber of Agriculture of the French Colony of Guadeloupe, and he is also an Honorary Member of the Royal Agricultural Society of British Guiana.

NICHOLSON, Sir Charles, Bart., D.C.L., LL.D., born 1808, was educated in Edinburgh, where he graduated as M.D. in 1833. He became a resident in New South Wales in 1834, and was one of the original representative members for Port Phillip (now the Colony of Victoria) in the first Legislative Council established in New South Wales in 1843, of which body he became Chairman of Committees, and subsequently Speaker from 1846 to 1856. He filled the post of Vice-Provost and subsequently that of Chancellor of the University of Sydney, and received the honour of knighthood in 1852, and that of Baronet in 1859. He received also the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford, and that of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge. He is the author of various official papers and reports connected with Colonial, Economic, and Educational affairs, and has also written articles in the "Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature" (of which he is Vice-President), containing an account of exploration in Upper Egypt, and at Memphis, with descriptions of remains of "Disk Worshippers," now deposited in the Museum of the University of Sydney.

NICHOLSON, Professor Henry Alleyne, M.D., D.Sc., Ph.D., F.G.S., was born at Penrith, Cumberland, Sept. 11, 1844, and educated at the Universities of Göttingen and Edinburgh. He was Baxter Scholar in Natural Science (1866), Ettles Scholar in Medicine, and Gold Medallist of the University of Edinburgh (1867). He was appointed Lecturer on Natural History in the Medical School of Edinburgh in 1869; Professor of Natural History and Botany in the University of Toronto in 1871; Professor of Biology and Physiology in the University of Durham (College of Physical Science, Newcastle) in 1874; Professor of Natural History in the University of St. Andrews in 1875; and Swiney Lecturer on Geology to the British Museum in 1877. In 1882 he was appointed Regius Professor of Natural History in the University of Aberdeen, which appointment he now holds. In 1889 he was re-appointed Swiney Lecturer on Geology to the British Museum. He is the author of original scientific works, principally geological and palæontological, comprising "Essay on the Geology of Cumberland and Westmoreland," 1866; "Monograph of the British Graptolitidæ," 1872; "Reports on the Palæontology of the Province of Ontario," 1874-75; "Report on the Fossil Corals of the State of Ohio," 1875; "The Structure and Affinities of the Tabulate Corals of the Palæozoic Period," 1879; "The Structure and Affinities of the Genus Monticulipora," 1881; "Monograph of the British Stromatoporoids" (Palæontographical Society); and numerous memoirs in various scientific publications. He is also the author of various educational works, such as "Manual of Zoology" (7th ed.); "Text-Book of Zoology" (5th ed.), 1894; "Manual of Palæontology" (3rd ed.); "Introduction to the Study of Biology;" and "Ancient Life-History of the Earth."

NICOL, Erskine, A.R.A., was born at Leith, Scotland, in 1825, and received his art-education in the Trustees Academy, Edinburgh, under Sir William Allan and Mr. Thomas Duncan. In 1846 he went to reside in Ireland, where he remained three or four years. It was this residence in the sister isle which decided the painter's choice of his peculiar field of representation, for most of his subsequent pictures have been Irish in subject. From Ireland he returned to Edinburgh, and after exhibiting for some time, he was ultimately elected a member of the Royal Scottish Academy. In 1862 he settled in London, and after that date contributed regularly to the exhibitions of the Royal Academy, of which body he was elected an Associate in June, 1866. His principal pictures are "Notice to Quit," 1862; "Renewal of the Lease Refused," 1863; "Among the Old Masters," and "Waiting for the Train," 1864; "A Deputation," 1865; "Both Puzzled," "Paying the Rent," and "Missed It," 1866; "A Country Booking-Office," and "Kiss an' make it up," 1867; "A China Merchant," and "Waiting at the Cross-roads," 1868; "A Disputed Boundary," 1869; "How it was she was delayed," "On The Look-Out," "The Fisher's Knot," and "The Children's Fairing," 1871; "His Bá-bees," "The Play Hour," and "Bothered," 1872; "Pro Bono Publico," "Steady, Johnnie," and "Past Work," 1873; "A Dander after the Rain," and "When there's nothing else to do," 1874; "The New Vintage," "Always Tell the Truth," and "The Sabbath Day," 1875; "A Storm at Sea," and "Looking out for a Safe Investment," 1876; "His Legal Adviser," and "Unwillingly to School," 1877; "A Colorado Beetle," "The Lonely Tenant of the Glen," "Under a Cloud," and "The Missing Boat," 1878; and "Interviewing their Member," 1879. Mr. Nicol entered on the Retired List of the Royal Academy in 1885, on account of ill-health.

NICOLINI, Signora, née Adelina Maria Clorinda Patti, a popular operatic singer, daughter of Salvatori Patti, is of Italian extraction, and was born in Madrid, April 9, 1843. After a course of professional training under her brother-in-law, Maurice Strakosch, she appeared at New York, Nov. 24, 1859, and reports of her fame reached these shores, where a much more brilliant success awaited her. She made her first appearance in London at the Italian Opera House, Covent Garden, in the part of Amina, in "La Sonnambula," May 14, 1861, and so favourable was the impression created, that she became at once the prime favourite of the day. To Amina succeeded her equally successful performance of Lucia, in Donizetti's opera, but she gave still greater reason for approbation by her representation of Violetta in the rather questionable opera of "La Traviata," to which she imparted a purity with which it has never before been invested. Her Zerlina was also much admired, while in Martha, she displayed so original a vein of arch comedy as to give an unwonted interest to the performance. Mdlle. Patti, with laudable ambition, attempted, in the summer of 1863, the difficult part of Ninetta, in "La Gazza Ladra," and her spirited rendering of the character fully sustained her high reputation, both as Norina, in "Don Pasquale," and as Adina, in "L'Elisire d'Amore." Undaunted by the success of rival celebrities who had preceded her, she, in 1864, took the part of Margherita, in Gounod's "Faust," and her performance was pronounced by some critics to be superior to that of every other representative of the character. She achieved a fresh success in the part of Juliet, in Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet," which proved the great attraction of the operatic season of 1867. Mdlle. Patti has been equally successful on the Continent of Europe. In the early part of 1870 she visited Russia, where she met with an enthusiastic welcome, receiving from the Emperor Alexander the Order of Merit, and the appointment of First Singer at the Imperial Court. Early in 1888 Madame Patti accepted an engagement to sing in the Argentine Republic. Her tour through that State was the most successful she had ever made. The total receipts for her 24 entertainments were £70,000; of which she received more than half. In May, 1868, she was married, at the Roman Catholic Church, Clapham, to M. Louis Sébastien Henri de Roger de Cahuzac, Marquis de Caux, from whom she was afterwards divorced. In 1886 she was married, in Wales, to Signor Nicolini, the tenor singer. She now resides chiefly at Craig-y-nos, her Welsh country house, where, in 1891, she opened a private theatre. Madame Patti still, on rare occasions, sings at Albert Hall Concerts in London, which are known as "Patti Concerts." In October, 1893, she started for her farewell tour in the United States.

NICOLL, W. Robertson, LL.D., was born at the Free Church Manse, Auchindoir, Aberdeenshire, on October 10, 1851. He was educated at the University of Aberdeen, where he graduated as M.A. in 1870, and at the Free Church College, Aberdeen, where he stayed till 1874. In the latter year he was ordained minister of the Free Church at Dufftown, and in 1877 was transferred to the Free Church at Kelso. In 1884 he succeeded Dr. Samuel Cox as editor of the Expositor, and in 1886 he came to London and started the British Weekly. In October 1891, he started The Bookman, a monthly literary journal, which has always assumed a kindly attitude towards young writers of merit. Dr. Nicoll is the author of many theological works, as well as of a "Life of James Macdonald of the Times," 1889, and a "Memoir of Professor Elmslie." He has been for long engaged on "The Victorian Era of English Literature: a Biographical and Critical History," and has originated and edited the "Expositor's Bible," "The Clerical Library," "The Theological Educator," and "The Household Library of Exposition." In 1890, Aberdeen University conferred upon him the degree of LL.D.

NIGHTINGALE, Florence, a lady whose name has been rendered illustrious by her philanthropic efforts to alleviate the sufferings of our wounded soldiers in the Crimean War, is younger daughter of Mr. William E. Nightingale, of Embley Park, Hampshire, and Lea Hurst, Derbyshire, and was born at Florence in May, 1820. She enjoyed all the advantages which fall to the lot of the children of the affluent and refined; and her command of different languages and other branches of a truly "liberal education" stood her in good stead in her after-career. It was not long before her philanthropic instincts, exercised among the poorer neighbours of her English home, led her to the systematic study of the ameliorative treatment of physical and moral distress. Not satisfied with studying the working of English schools, hospitals, and reformatory institutions, she examined similar institutions abroad in the same spirit, and in 1851 spent some months in an institution of Protestant Sisters of Mercy at Kaiserswerth, on the Rhine. Before long an opportunity presented itself for applying the practical lessons she there learned, for having heard that the Governesses' Sanitarium, in Harley Street, languished for the want of supervision and support, she generously devoted both her personal energies and private means to its restoration and thorough organisation. This work had scarcely been accomplished, when, before Miss Nightingale had time to recover her over-taxed strength, new demands were made upon her spirit of self-sacrifice. The inefficiency and mismanagement of our military hospitals in the Crimea led to an outburst of public feeling. Various plans of help were suggested, the most popular of which was the sending forth a select band of ladies. At the request of the late Lord Herbert, then Secretary of War (whose letter crossed one from Miss Nightingale, offering to go), she undertook the organisation and conduct of this body. No eulogy can do justice to the talent, energy, and devotion she constantly displayed in her self-imposed task. By instituting order where confusion had before reigned, and by affording care and consolation, she alleviated the sufferings of all, saved the lives of many, and earned the blessings of the sick and wounded, as well as the gratitude of her country. A testimonial fund amounting to fifty thousand pounds, subscribed by the public in recognition of her noble services, was at her special request devoted to the formation of an institution for the training of nurses, now carried out at St. Thomas's Hospital, in the "Nightingale Home." Her writings are intended to disseminate practical knowledge on the subject in which she is so well versed. "Notes on Hospitals," a valuable work which had a very large circulation, appeared in 1859; "Notes on Nursing," of which nearly a hundred thousand copies have been sold, was published in 1860; and "Observations on the Sanitary State of the Army in India," in 1863. It is understood that, at the request of the War Office, she drew up a very voluminous confidential report on the working of the army medical department in the Crimea, and she has a further claim on the gratitude of her countrymen for the active interest she has displayed in the Volunteer movement. Although confined to her house by constant ill-health, she has been ceaselessly at work for the welfare of our fellow-subjects in India in all matters affecting the improvement of their health, education, and social benefit. The regulations of hospitals and supply of nurses in different parts of the world, sanitary measures, and nursing arrangements for the army at home and abroad, occupy her thoughts and time. During the Civil War in America, she was frequently consulted in questions affecting the health of the army, and assistance for the wounded in the field. During the Franco-German War she was similarly appealed to by the German authorities. Her name is as well known in America as in England.

NIGRA (Count), Constantino, an Italian diplomatist, born at Castellemonte, June 12, 1827, studied law at the University of Turin, and took part, as a volunteer, in the war against Austria in 1848. Being severely wounded at the battle of Rivoli, he abandoned the military career, entered the diplomatic service, and acted as secretary to Count Cavour at the Congress of Paris in 1856. He took part in the negotiations between Piedmont and France which preceded the war of 1859, at which he was present with the general staff of Napoleon III. He was secretary to the Italian plenipotentiaries at the Zurich Congress, after which he was nominated, on Cavour's recommendation, Minister Plenipotentiary, first of Sardinia, and afterwards of the kingdom of Italy, in Paris. On the war of 1870 breaking out, he was among those who made real efforts to prevent it, and then showed himself to the end, at least personally, devoted to the Emperor and Empress. He was one of the few persons who, on Sept. 4, were by the side of the menaced and fugitive sovereigns. After having represented Italy in Paris for fifteen years as Minister Plenipotentiary, he was in May, 1876, appointed to fill the same post at St. Petersburg. He was nominated Italian Ambassador in London in Nov., 1882, on which occasion King Humbert conferred upon him the title of Count, in attestation of his Majesty's recognition of the eminent services he had rendered to his country. Count Nigra has published several works on the dialects and popular poetry of Italy. In 1885 he resigned the embassy in London, and was succeeded by Count Corti. He was afterwards sent as Italian Ambassador to Vienna.

NILSSON, Christina. See MIRANDA, COUNTESS DE.

NOBLE, The Hon. John Willock, LL.D., American statesman, was born at Lancaster, Ohio, Oct. 26, 1831. He graduated at Yale College in 1851, and adopted the profession of law. In 1855 he removed to St. Louis, and in the following year to Keokuk, Iowa, of which, in 1859-60 he was City Attorney. Entering as a private the Union army at the outbreak of the Civil War, he had gained the rank of Colonel and brevet Brigadier-General before its close, having served for a time during its progress as Judge-Advocate-General of the Army of the South-west and (afterwards) of the Department of the Missouri. When mustered out in 1865 he returned to Keokuk, but the same year moved again to St. Louis, where he has since resided. From 1867 to 1870 he was U.S. District Attorney at that city, and for his efficiency in that office he was thanked by President Grant in the presence of the Cabinet, 1869. On resigning the place of District Attorney, he again took up his professional practice, and was shortly after offered the place of Solicitor-General, which he declined to pursue his profession at the bar. This he was still successfully engaged in when summoned by President Harrison in March, 1889, to enter the Cabinet at Washington, as Secretary of the Interior. At the close of Mr. Harrison's administration (March, 1893) he returned to St. Louis. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Miami University in 1889, and by Yale University in 1891.

NOBLE, Captain William, F.R.A.S., F.R.M.S., was born in 1828, and is the eldest son of the late William Noble, Esq., of Berwick. He was Captain in the Rifle Brigade, and has long devoted great attention to astronomy, and much good work has emanated from the private observatory which he erected in the grounds of his residence. Captain Noble has sat for many years on the Council of the Royal Astronomical Society; was the first President, and is now Vice-President, of the British Astronomical Association, and is a County Magistrate. He is the author of many contributions to scientific periodicals. Captain Noble married, in 1851, Emily Charlotte, only child of Edward Irving, Esq., of H.M. 61st Regiment, and of Hadriana Cornelia Baroness van Lijnden.

NORDENSKIÖLD (Baron), Adolf Erik, a Swedish naturalist and explorer, was born in Helsingfors, the capital of Finland, Nov. 18, 1832. Descended from a Swedish family long eminent in scientific pursuits, he had his inherent tastes developed alike by his surroundings at his home at Frugärd, which contained an extensive mineral and natural history collection, and by his journeys with his father, Nils Gustaf, who was chief of the Finland Mining Department. Thus the lad cared more for practical than for theoretical learning when he first went to the Gymnasium at Borgo, and on entering the University of Helsingfors in 1849 devoted himself almost entirely to scientific studies, spending his vacations in excursions to the rich mineral localities of Finland. He soon became eminent in this particular branch of science, and was nominated to several appointments, but he unluckily incurred the suspicion of the Russian authorities by participation in various students' meetings, and time after time lost his appointments, and was obliged to leave the country. Indeed, at last, for some years he was unable to obtain a passport to return to Finland. He therefore settled in Sweden, and in 1858 first entered on his Arctic travels by accompanying Torell to Spitzbergen. On his return to Stockholm, Nordenskiöld was nominated Director of the Mineralogical Department of the various geographical and scientific researches, and for making a preliminary reconnoitring for the measurement of an arc of the meridian. The work was not then finished, and accordingly, three years later, Nordenskiöld headed an expedition which successfully completed the reconnoitring, and mapped the southern part of Spitzbergen. The explorers, however, met with some shipwrecked walrus hunters, and were obliged to return, their provisions being inadequate to maintain so large an addition to the party. Thus disappointed, Nordenskiöld now endeavoured to organise a fresh expedition, and he eventually started in 1868 in the Government steamer Sofia, which managed to attain the high latitude of 81° 42′—a latitude exceeded only by Hall's American and Parry's and Nares's British Arctic Expeditions, and never exceeded by a sailing vessel in the old hemisphere. This success convinced Nordenskiöld that he could reach a much higher latitude by wintering in Spitzbergen and utilising sledges. Accordingly, after an interval—during which he sat in the Swedish Diet, and travelled in Greenland to ascertain the respective values of dogs and reindeer as beasts of burden for sledge journeys—Nordenskiöld sailed in 1872 to Spitzbergen in the Polhem, accompanied by two tenders. He made during this voyage the first serious attempt to penetrate on the inland ice in the interior, and discovered at Ovifak the largest known blocks of native iron, and brought home collections of fossil plants of great importance to the history of climatology during former geological epochs. The winter was unusually early, and the ice shut in the tenders, which were to have returned home, thereby straitening the provisions through extra mouths; the reindeer were lost, and the men suffered greatly from scurvy. Nevertheless Nordenskiöld and Lieutenant Palender successfully surveyed part of North-East Land, and in the following July the vessels were extricated from their winter quarters, Mussel Bay, on the north coast of Spitzbergen, and returned home richly laden with important scientific collections. Nordenskiöld now turned his attention to Siberian exploration, and in 1875 sailed through the Kara Sea to the Yenissei, and ascended the river in a small boat, returning home overland. It was the first time that any ship had succeeded in penetrating from the Atlantic to the great Siberian rivers. He introduced in the following year, after a flying visit to the Philadelphia Exhibition, the first merchandises by sea to Siberia, returning in the autumn with his steamer viâ Kara Sea and Matotschkim Sound. These experiences gave Nordenskiöld a reasonable hope of accomplishing the North-East Passage. The King of Sweden, Mr. Oscar Dickson, and Mr. Sibiriakoff at once lent their aid to the project, and in July, 1878, Professor Nordenskiöld started in the Vega. She was the first vessel to double the most northern point of the Old World, Cape Tchelyuskin; she wintered near Behring's Straits; and once more free in July, 1879, reached Japan on Sept. 2. On his arrival in Europe Nordenskiöld was enthusiastically welcomed, and laden with honours. He was created a Baron (April, 1880) and appointed a Commander of the "Nordstjerne Order" (order of North Star). In 1883 Nordenskiöld made his second voyage to the interior of Greenland, and succeeded in penetrating with a ship through the dangerous ice-barrier along the east coast of that country south of the polar circle, a feat in vain attempted during 300 years by different arctic expeditions. He has also busied himself with a project for an expedition to the South Pole. He is the author of works relating to his expeditions and voyages. His letters, written during some of his earlier explorations, have been translated into French (1880).

NORDICA, Madame. See GOWER, MRS.

NORFOLK (Duke of), His Grace, Henry Fitzalan Howard, Earl of Arundel, Surrey, and Norfolk, and Baron Fitzalan, Clun, Oswaldestre, and Maltravers, Premier Duke and Earl, Hereditary Earl-Marshal, and Chief Butler of England, is the eldest son of the fourteenth Duke, by his wife Augusta Mary Minna Catharine, second daughter of Edmund, first Lord Lyons. He was born in Carlton Terrace, London, Dec. 27, 1847, and succeeded to the peerage on the death of his father, Nov. 26, 1860. His Grace, who is a zealous Roman Catholic, takes great interest in all matters relating to his Church, and frequently presides over public meetings of his co-religionists. He is President of the Catholic Union of Great Britain. It was to the Duke of Norfolk that Dr. Newman addressed, in 1875, his reply to Mr. Gladstone's "Political Expostulation." The Duke of Norfolk took a prominent part, about the time of the general election of 1886, in the Unionist opposition to Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule measure, thus bringing himself into collision with the Irish hierarchy. In 1887 the Duke was Her Majesty's Special Envoy with presents and congratulations to the Pope on his jubilee, and in 1893 he headed a special band of English pilgrims, who were present at the state celebration at St. Peter's. He married, at the Oratory, Brompton, on Nov. 21, 1877, Lady Flora Hastings, eldest daughter of Charles Frederick Abney Hastings, Esq., of Donington Park, Leicestershire, and the late Countess of Loudon. Her Grace died on April 11, 1887. Their son, Philip, the Earl of Arundel and Surrey, was born in 1879.

NORMAN, The Rev. Canon Alfred Merle, M.A. Oxon., D.C.L. (Hon., Durham), F.R.S., F.L.S., is the youngest son of John Norman, D.L. of the county of Somerset, of Iwood, Congresbury, and Clayerham House, Yatton, in that county. He was born at Exeter, where his father was at that time residing, Aug. 29, 1831. As soon as he could walk he was interested in botany by his eldest brother, the Hon. John Paxton Norman, who was afterwards Officiating Chief Justice of Bengal, and was assassinated by a fanatic when entering, in his robes, the High Court of Justice at Calcutta, in Sept. 1871. When about ten years old he was sent to the Grammar School at Ilminster, and during the four years he was there made a collection of the fossils of the lias of that neighbourhood. In 1844 he entered Winchester College, and while a scholar there took up the study of entomology. In 1848 he matriculated at Christ Church, Oxford, taking the B.A. degree in 1852, and that of M.A. in 1859. While at the University he studied and published on the inland mollusca of Oxfordshire, and also collected the fossils of the Stonesfield strata. In 1854-55 he was private tutor in the family of the Dowager Countess of Glasgow, at Cwmbrae, on the Firth of Clyde. Here, with every facility as regards coast and boats, he commenced the investigation of the marine fauna of the Firth of Clyde, and to this branch of science he has from that period chiefly devoted his spare time. In 1855-6 he was at Wells Theological College, reading for Holy Orders. In the latter year he was ordained Deacon by the Bishop of Peterborough, and Priest in 1857, being at this time Curate of Kibworth, Leicestershire. In 1858 he accepted the curacy of Sedgefield, in the county of Durham, and in 1864 that of Houghton-le-Spring. In 1866 he was presented by the Crown to the living of the newly-formed parish of Burnmoor, near Fence Houses, co. Durham, which living he still retains. From 1867 to 1879 he was honorary Chaplain to the late Earl of Durham. In 1885 he was made Honorary Canon of Durham Cathedral. Since 1877 he has been Honorary Secretary of the Durham Training College for Schoolmasters, and since 1885 Honorary Secretary of the Durham Diocesan Conference. In 1883 the University of Durham conferred upon him the honorary degree of D.C.L., on account of his scientific attainments. He was elected F.L.S. in 1880, and F.R.S. in 1890. Dr. Norman has received the medal of the Institute of France, conferred upon him in recognition of the part he took in 1880, when, by special invitation of the French Government, he was associated with the Commission of French Savants in the exploration of the great depths of the Bay of Biscay, in the surveying steamer Le Travailleur. In 1883 he was Chairman of the Jury on Natural History at the International Fisheries Exhibition, London. He is Vice-President of the Marine Biological Society of Great Britain, of the Tyneside Naturalists' Field Club (President in 1865 and 1880), and of the Conchological Society of Great Britain (President, 1892); and honorary member of many of the leading Natural History Societies of the kingdom. His collection of the invertebrate fauna of the North Atlantic and Arctic Oceans is probably the most extensive in the world, embracing not only the products of his own dredgings, carried on during his summer holiday of almost every year since 1854, on all parts of the British coast, as well as during five summers in Norway and Finmark and one in the Mediterranean, but also all such specimens as could be purchased, and the contributions both of private friends and from the spolia of almost all the Government deep sea dredging expeditions which have been sent out from the countries of Europe, as well as by the United States. A catalogue of the collection is in course of publication, under the title "Museum Normanianum." As a boy and young man Dr. Norman used to contribute to the Zoologist. He is the author of numerous memoirs and papers, chiefly on Marine Zoology, in Proc. Roy. Soc.; Proc. Roy. Soc., Edin.; Trans. Roy. Soc., Dublin; Trans. Linn. Soc.; and other learned periodicals. He was editor and part author of "Bowerbank's Monograph on British Spongiadæ," Vol. IV. (Roy. Soc.).

NORMAN, General Sir Henry Wylie, G.C.B. (Military Division), G.C.M.G., C.I.E., is the son of James Norman, Esq., and was born in London on Dec. 2, 1826. He entered the Bengal Army in March, 1844; has been Adjutant, Brigade-Major, Assistant Adjutant-General, Deputy Adjutant-General, Acting Adjutant-General in India, Assistant Military Secretary at the Horse Guards, Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, Military Secretary to the Government of India, and for seven years a Member of the Council of the Viceroy of India, twice acting for several weeks as President of the Council during the absence of the Viceroy. He has been a Member of the Council of India in London; was for five years Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief of Jamaica, and is now Governor of Queensland, to which post he was appointed in 1888. He served throughout the Punjab Campaign, including the action of Sodoolapore, battles of Chilianwallah and Goojerat, and pursuit of the Sikhs and Afghans. He was present in numerous affairs during six years' service on the Peshawur frontier; served throughout the Mutiny campaigns, including the siege of Delhi, the relief and capture of Lucknow, and many minor actions and services; also in Southal campaign. He has received three war Medals and six Clasps. In 1893 he was appointed Viceroy of India by the Gladstone Government, in succession to Lord Lansdowne, but, shortly after accepting, he declined the appointment.

NORMAN-NERUDA. See HALLÉ, LADY.

NORRIS, William Edward, the novelist, son of the late Sir W. Norris, late Chief Justice of Ceylon, was born on Nov. 18, 1847. He was educated at Eton. As a novelist he is noted for the delicacy of his dialogue and for his well-bred descriptions of aristocratic society. His first novel, "Heaps of Money," appeared in 1877, and has been followed by "Mademoiselle Mersac," "Matrimony," "No New Thing," "His Grace," "A Deplorable Affair," "The Countess Radna" (1893), &c. Mr. Norris married Francis Isobel, daughter of the late J. Ballenden, Esq., in 1871. She died in 1881.

NORTH, The Hon. Sir Ford, Judge of the High Court of Justice, is son of Mr. John North, of Liverpool, and was born there Jan. 10, 1830. He was educated at Winchester School, and at University College, Oxford, where he graduated as B.A. in 1852, taking a second-class in classics. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1856, and obtained a large practice in the Equity Courts, and at the Lancaster Chancery Palatine Court. He was appointed a Queen's Counsel in 1877, and a Judge of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in 1881, on the removal of Mr. Justice Lindley to the Court of Appeal; and was transferred to the Chancery Division of the same Court in 1883.

NORTH, Colonel J. T., the "Nitrate King," is a native of Leeds, and owes his sobriquet to the fact of his having accumulated immense wealth by his speculations in nitrate mines in South America. In Jan., 1889, he presented Kirkstall Abbey and grounds to his native town, and also made handsome contributions to the funds of the Leeds Infirmary and the Yorkshire College of Science. He received the honorary freedom of the borough, Jan. 25, 1889.

NORTHBROOK (Earl of), The Right Hon. Thomas George Baring, eldest son of the first baron, who was long known as Sir Francis Baring, was born in 1826, and received his education at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated (second-class in Classics) in 1846. He was successively private secretary to Mr. Labouchere at the Board of Trade, to Sir George Grey at the Home Office, to Sir Charles Wood at the India Board, and at the Admiralty till 1857, when he was returned to the House of Commons for Penryn and Falmouth, which constituency he continued to represent in the Liberal interest till he became a peer on the death of his father in 1866. He was a Lord of the Admiralty from May, 1857, to Feb. 1858; Under-Secretary of State for India from June, 1859, to Jan. 1864; and Under-Home Secretary from 1864 to 1866. On the accession of Mr. Gladstone to power in Dec. 1868, Lord Northbrook was appointed Under-Secretary for War; and after the assassination of the Earl of Mayo he was appointed to succeed that nobleman as Viceroy and Governor-General of India, in Feb. 1872. He resigned in Feb. 1876, and was succeeded by Lord Lytton. From 1880 to 1885 he was First Lord of the Admiralty. In 1884 he was sent to Egypt as Lord High Commissioner to inquire into its finances and condition, the result being a loan of nine millions. In recognition of his distinguished services he was created Viscount Baring, of Lee, in the county of Kent, and Earl of Northbrook, in the county of Southampton, in 1876. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's cabinet in May, 1880, his lordship was appointed First Lord of the Admiralty; but in 1886 he was one of those who opposed the Home Rule policy of the Premier. In 1890 he was appointed Lord-Lieutenant in the county of Southampton.

NORTHUMBERLAND (Duke of), The Most Noble Algernon George Percy, is the eldest surviving son of George, late Duke, by his marriage with Louisa Harcourt, third daughter of the late Hon. James Stuart-Wortley-Mackenzie, and sister of the first Lord Wharncliffe. He was born in 1810, and was educated at Eton and Cambridge, of which University he was created a Doctor of Laws in 1842. He served for some years in the Grenadier Guards, from which he retired with the rank of Captain. He first entered Parliament as M.P. for the borough of Beeralston (disfranchised under the first Reform Act), and represented the northern division of Northumberland in the Conservative interest from 1852 down to 1865. He held office in 1858-9, first as a Lord of the Admiralty, and afterwards as Vice-President of the Board of Trade. He was appointed Lord Privy Seal, on the Earl of Beaconsfield resigning that office, in Feb., 1878. In Aug. of that year he was appointed to preside over the Royal Commission, which had been charged with conducting an inquiry into the Parochial Charities of the City of London. He went out of office with his party in April, 1880. His Grace is President of the Royal Institution, and of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, and Hon. Colonel of the Northumberland Militia, and of the 1st and 2nd Northumberland Artillery Volunteers; and he was created an honorary D.C.L. of Oxford in 1870. He married, in 1845, Louisa, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Henry Drummond, M.P., of Albany-park, Surrey. She died Dec. 18, 1890, leaving two sons—Earl Percy, married to Lady Edith Campbell, eldest daughter of the Duke of Argyll; and Lord Algernon Percy, married to Lady Victoria Edgcumbe, eldest daughter of the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe.

NORTON (Lord), The Right Hon. Sir Charles Bowyer Adderley, K.C.M.G., eldest son of the late Charles Clement Adderley, Esq., of Hams Hall, Warwickshire, and Norton, Staffordshire, by Anna Maria, daughter of the late Sir Edmund Cradock-Hartopp, was born in Aug., 1814, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford, of which he was a gentleman commoner, and where he graduated B.A. in 1835. He was elected in the Conservative interest in 1841, to represent the northern division of Staffordshire, which seat he retained for 37 years. Mr. Adderley was President of the Board of Health and Vice-President of the Committee of the Privy Council on Education under Lord Derby's second administration of 1858-9, and Under-Secretary for the Colonies under Lord Derby's third administration (July 1866 to Dec. 1868). He is a Trustee and Governor of Rugby School; and was the Chairman of the Royal Sanitary Commission. In 1869 he was made a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. On the return of the Conservatives to power in Feb., 1874, he was appointed President of the Board of Trade. Sir Charles Adderley took an active part in the establishment of colonial self-government and in the introduction of reformatory institutions, and is the author of pamphlets on education and penal discipline, and of works on other subjects connected with colonial interests. He resigned the office of President of the Board of Trade in April, 1878, when he was raised to the peerage of the United Kingdom by the title of Baron Norton, of Norton-on-the-Moors, in the county of Stafford. He was then sent to represent Her Majesty at the funeral of Queen Mercedes at Madrid. His lordship presided at the meeting of the Social Science Association held at Cheltenham in Oct. 1878. He was one of the Royal Commission on Reformatory Schools, and of another on Education 1883-4. He married, in 1842, Julia Anne Eliza Leigh, eldest daughter of Chandos, Lord Leigh.

NOVELLO, Clara. See GIGLIUCCI, COUNTESS OF.

NOVELLO, Joseph Alfred, son of Vincent Novello, organist and composer, was born in 1810. He followed his father's footsteps in devoting himself to the propagation of good music in England, and at the early age of nineteen established himself in London as a musical publisher. Some years after he devised a system of printing cheap music, and succeeded in introducing this beneficial novelty, notwithstanding the general opposition of fellow music-sellers. To his efforts is due the abolition of a vexatious printers' guild law, which had hampered the trade since 1811. A friend and admirer of Felix Mendelssohn, Mr. Alfred Novello eagerly introduced to English auditors the works of that great master, and aided him in translating "St. Paul," "Lobgesang," and other compositions. In 1841 he associated himself with the energetic men who relieved England from "Taxation on knowledge," and for years was the active treasurer of their society, the object of which was the repeal of the advertisement duty (accomplished in 1853), the repeal of the newspaper stamp (accomplished in 1855), duties on paper and foreign books, and the repeal of the security system. Ever ardent in promoting the progress of art, science, and social advancement, he materially assisted the inventive genius of his friend, Mr. (now Sir. H.) Bessemer, in his scientific discoveries in glass, &c., and especially that of producing the metal now known as Bessemer steel. In 1856 he retired from business and established himself in Italy, the birthplace of his paternal ancestors. At his new home he became one of four commissioners elected to preserve the interests of the English shareholders in the "Italian Irrigation Company" (Canal Cavour), involving five millions of British pounds sterling, which ultimated in a settlement which met with general satisfaction after ten years of attention and labour. His leisure hours were spent in a particular study of the natural powers of Water, to which end he was fortunate in having the friendly assistance of the late Mr. William Froude of Chelston, Torquay, who encouraged him to study the better construction of ships, for which improvement he took out several patents. The new views and proposals are detailed in an "Epistle to Naval Architects," printed by Novello and Co.

NUBAR PACHA, an Egyptian statesman, born in Smyrna in 1825, and educated in Switzerland and France. He was Secretary to Mehemet Ali, and to Ibrahim Pacha; and under Ismail was Minister of Public Works in 1864, and Minister of Foreign Affairs in 1867. He was created Pacha by the Sultan, and in 1867 obtained for Ismail from the Porte the title of Khedive. He held various offices under Ismail and his successor Tewfik, but was suddenly dismissed in 1888, and replaced by Riaz Pacha.

NUNEZ DE ARCE, Don Gaspar, was born at Valladolid, August 4, 1834. He studied at Toledo, where he took the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. He has written among other works "Como se empeñe un Marido," a comedy in one act, and in verse, 1860; "Ni tanto ni tan poco," a comedy in three acts, 1865; "Discursos leidos ante la Real Academia Española," 1876; "El Laz de Leña," a drama in five acts, 1882; "Las Mujeres del Evangelio," 1884. His lyric poems have gained him the name of "The Tennyson of Spain." He has been a member of the Cortes since 1865, and was Colonial Minister in the Sagasta Cabinet, 1883-84, and in 1888 became President of the Section of Commerce, Agriculture, and the Interior in the Council of State.

O.

OAKELEY, Emeritus Professor Sir Herbert Stanley, Mus.D., D.C.L., LL.D., second son of the late Sir Herbert Oakeley, Bart., was born at Ealing, Middlesex, in July, 1830. His mother, Atholl Murray, the third Lady Oakeley, was daughter of Lord Charles Murray, youngest son of John, third Duke of Atholl. He was educated at Rugby School, and at Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1853, M.A. 1855). After having graduated he went abroad to complete his studies in music, for which art, from earliest childhood, he had shown a marked predilection. At Leipzig he studied pianoforte-playing under Professors Moschelles and Plaidy, and at Bonn, organ-playing under Dr. Breidenstein, Professor of Music in that University, and later under the great organist, Dr. Johann Schneider of Dresden. He acted for ten years as musical critic and correspondent to a well-known London periodical, to which or to other journals he still contributes occasional notices of musical festivals at home and abroad. In 1864 he was enrolled, in Rome, as member of a Society of "Quirites." In 1865, on the death of Professor Donaldson, he was elected Professor of Music in the University of Edinburgh; and in 1871, he received from the Primate his earliest degree of Doctor of Music. In recognition of musical services for Scotland, the honour of knighthood was conferred on him at Holyrood in Aug., 1876. In 1879 his own University, Oxford, gave him the degree of Mus. Doc., honoris causâ; and in 1881 that of LL.D. was presented to him by the University of Aberdeen. In the same year he was appointed Composer to Her Majesty in Scotland. In 1866 he received from Trinity College, Toronto, the degree of D.C.L.; and in the following year Mus. Doc. from the University of Dublin, and Mus. Doc. from the University of St. Andrews. On retirement from the Edinburgh Chair of Music in 1892, he received the degree of LL.D. from that University, as "Emeritus" Professor. He has composed some dozen anthems, a full "service," and, for orchestra, organ, and pianoforte, a "Jubilee Lyric," and an Album of 26 Songs, dedicated to H.M. the Queen, &c. To Sir Herbert Oakeley's influence may be in great measure attributed the increase in appreciation of the organ and of the orchestra which has taken place in Scotland since his appointment at Edinburgh; and also the foundation of a Students' Choral Association at each of the four Scottish Universities. He is Hon. President of the University Musical Society of St. Andrews, and Vice-President of that of Edinburgh and Aberdeen, and of Dover Choral Union; Hon. Visitor Lichfield Diocesan Choral Association, Hon. President of Cheltenham Festival Society, Member of London Philharmonic Society, Hon. Licentiate and Examiner in Music at Trinity College, London, and Member of the "Accademia Filarmonica," Bologna, "Socio distinto" of the "St. Cecilia Accademia," Rome, and (1894) Hon. Member of the "Reale Filarmonica Società Romana."

O'BRIEN, Sir J. Terence N., K.C.M.G., eldest son of the late Major-General

Terence O'Brien, Commander of the Forces, and for some time Acting Governor of Ceylon. He was born April 23, 1830, at Manchester; educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, from which he obtained his commission without purchase in the 67th Regiment in Sept., 1847; was transferred to the 70th Regiment, 1848; Lieutenant 70th Regiment, 1850; Captain 5th Fusiliers, 1858; transferred to 20th Regiment, 1858; Brevet-Major, 1859; Major, unattached, 1868; and Brevet-Lieut.-Colonel, 1870. He served uninterruptedly in India and Ceylon from 1849 to 1867; passed in the native languages, and as Surveyor and Civil Engineer; was Staff Officer of the Darjeeling Depôt, Regimental Interpreter, Assistant in the Revenue Survey, Assistant and subsequently Executive Engineer in the Public Works Department; Deputy-Assistant Quarter-Master-General to a column in the field during the Mutiny; Military Secretary in Ceylon, and Brigade-Major, Gwalior District, Bengal Army; served on the North-west Frontier (medal and clasp), and throughout the Mutiny (mentioned in despatches, Brevet-Major, and medal); was in 1867 appointed Inspector-General of Police, Mauritius; Poor Law Commissioner and Governor of Orphan Asylum, 1870; and was Equerry to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh during his visit to the Colony in 1870. He was nominated Governor of Heligoland, 1881; and of Newfoundland, 1888. He married, in 1853, the youngest daughter of the late Captain Eastgate, H.E.I.C.S.; she died in 1867; and he married, secondly, in 1880, the widow of Colonel J. W. Fane, late M.P., Oxon. He is a Past Officer of the Grand Lodge and of the Supreme Grand Chapter of England.

O'BRIEN, Lucius Richard, first President of the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts, was born at the family residence on Lake Simcoe, Ontario, Canada, in 1832, and educated at Upper Canada College, Toronto. At an early age he developed a taste for art. In 1872 he took an active part in founding the Art School of the Ontario Society of Artists, and for six years he held the Vice-Presidency of that Institution. In 1880, the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts was founded, and Mr. O'Brien was elected its President, a position which he held for ten years, retiring in 1890; he has been a constant contributor to its exhibitions. He superintended the illustration of "Picturesque Canada," 2 vols., Toronto, 1884, for which he supplied a large number of the drawings. He is represented in the Royal Collections at Windsor and Osborne, and has frequently contributed to the English Water-Colour Exhibitions. Seven of his pictures were exhibited in the Art Gallery of the World's Fair in Chicago, 1893.

O'BRIEN, Rt. Hon. Sir Peter, P.C., Q.C., son of the late John O'Brien, Esq., M.P., of Elm Vale and Ballimalackin, co. Clare, was born in 1842. He was called to the Bar at the King's Inn, Dublin, in 1865, took silk in 1880, and became a Bencher in 1884. He was appointed Senior Crown Prosecutor for Dublin in 1883, and 3rd Serjeant-at-Law in 1884. He was Solicitor-General for Ireland from 1887-88, and Attorney-General from 1888-89 when he was appointed Lord Chief Justice of Ireland. He was created a Baronet in 1891. In 1867 he married Annie, daughter of Robert Clarke, Esq., J.P., of Bansha, co. Tipperary.

O'BRIEN, William, M.P., son of the late Mr. James O'Brien, of Mallow, was born in 1852, and was educated at the Cloyne Diocesan College, and the Queen's College, Cork. He represented Mallow from Jan. 1883, until its extinction as a borough under the Redistribution Act, 1885, and in the Parliament of 1885 was member for South Tyrone, defeating Captain the Hon. Somerset Maxwell, Conservative, by a majority of 55. At the general election of 1886 he was defeated by Mr. T. W. Russell, Unionist Liberal, who gained the seat by a majority of 99, but he was returned for North-East Cork unopposed. In 1892 he was returned for Cork City, and was also elected for North-east Cork. Mr. O'Brien is one of the foremost members of the Parnellite party, and is the editor of United Ireland; he was a "suspect" under Mr. Forster's Coercion Act, and has been a leader in the councils of the National League. He was a delegate of this body to the Chicago Convention in Aug., 1886. In Parliament he is a bitter and incisive speaker, and has once been "suspended" for a breach of the rules of the House. He has been four times imprisoned under the Coercion Act, for what he regards as protests against the curtailment of public liberty, and claims to have effected the abandonment of the prison rules in so far as they sought to confound political offenders with criminal prisoners. He is the author of "When we were Boys," written in prison. Mr. O'Brien, in company with Mr. Dillon, M.P., having been liberated on bail, pending a political trial, in Nov. 1890, forfeited the bail, and escaped to the United States, to fulfil a lecturing engagement there. On his return, he was arrested in Ireland and again sent to prison. He and Mr. Dillon met Mr. Parnell, M.P., in Paris in Jan. 1891, to consult about his retirement from the leadership of the Irish Parliamentary Party. Mr. O'Brien subsequently stood for Parliament as a declared Anti-Parnellite, and was elected for Cork City and for the North-east Division of Cork.

O'CONNOR, Thomas Power, M.P., born at Athlone, co. Roscommon, in 1848, was educated first at the College of the Immaculate Conception, Athlone, and afterwards at the Queen's College, where he graduated in the degrees of B.A. and M.A. He adopted journalism as a profession, and after three years' connection with the Dublin press, came to London in 1870. He first obtained an engagement on the Daily Telegraph, and was afterwards employed on several other London journals. He published, in 1876, the first volume of a biography of the late Lord Beaconsfield, under the title of "Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of Beaconsfield," but afterwards, changing the method, brought out a complete Life of the then Premier, in a single volume, entitled "Lord Beaconsfield, a Biography." The work received general praise for its literary merits and research, but, as it took a very unfavourable view of the Conservative leader, its conclusions met with a widely different reception from Liberal and Conservative critics. Mr. O'Connor was elected member for the town of Galway at the General Election of 1880, and soon became one of the most active and prominent members of the party led by Mr. Parnell. He was one of the Executive of the Land League, both in England and Ireland. In Oct., 1881, he set out for the United States, and lectured on the Irish cause to large gatherings in nearly all the great cities, during a tour which extended over seven months, and raised a large sum of money. In 1883 he was elected President of the "Irish National League of Great Britain;" and has been re-elected to the position every year for several years in succession. In 1885 he stood for the Scotland division of Liverpool and defeated Mr. Woodward, the Liberal candidate, by a majority of 1,350. He was returned at the same time for Galway, but elected to take the seat at Liverpool. In 1886 he defeated Mr. Earle, a Unionist Liberal, by 1,480. He has edited a "Cabinet of Irish Literature," and has written a large number of tales, essays, and magazine articles. In 1885 he published what is, till now, his principal work, "The Parnell Movement." In 1887 he started the Star newspaper; but resigned his interest in it in July, 1890. He has since founded the Sun and the Sunday Sun, of both of which journals he is editor.

ODGERS, William Blake, M.A., LL.D., Q.C., was born at Plymouth on May 15, 1849, and is the third son of the Rev. William James Odgers. He received his education at King Edward's School, Bath, at University College, London, and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, of which latter society he was successively Exhibitioner, Scholar, and Law Student. He graduated at Cambridge in 1871, having obtained a place among the Wranglers, and the same year won the Member's Prize. He became a B.A. of London in 1871. In 1873 he was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple, and joined the Western Circuit. He became a LL.D., of Cambridge in 1879, and between the years 1881 and 1883 was Examiner for the Law Tripos at that University. In 1892 he was elected Examiner in Common Law at the University of London, a post he still holds. He was appointed a Queen's Counsel, July 14, 1893. He is author of two standard works, "A Digest of the Law of Libel and Slander," and "The Principles of Pleading," both of which are in their second editions. In 1885, Dr. Blake Odgers unsuccessfully contested Brixton at the General Election. He married in 1877, Frances, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Charles Hudson, formerly Coroner of Stockport, and has five children.

ODLING, Professor William, M.B., F.R.S., born Sept. 5, 1829, in Southwark; was educated at private schools; and for the medical profession at Guy's Hospital. He graduated M.B. of the University of London in 1851; was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1859; and President of the Chemical Society in 1873. He was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry at Guy's Hospital in 1850; Lecturer on Chemistry at St. Bartholomew's Hospital in 1863; Fullerian Professor of Chemistry at the Royal Institution in 1868; Waynflete Professor of Chemistry in the University of Oxford, June 17, 1872; and elected a Fellow of Worcester College on the following day. Dr. Odling, who is highly distinguished as a scientific chemist, is the author of a "Manual of Chemistry," 1861; "Lectures on Animal Chemistry," 1866; "Course of Practical Chemistry," 1876;

"Chemistry," a Science Primer, 1882; and of various scientific memoirs, especially on chemical theory. The University of Leyden conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Mathematics and Physics in Feb., 1875. He was British Judge of Awards for Chemical Manufactures of the Philadelphia International Exhibition of 1876, and is one of the analysts employed to test the water supplied to London.

O'DONOVAN, Denis, C.M.G., F.R.S.L., &c., was born at Kinsale, Ireland, Aug. 23, 1836, and was educated in Ireland and France. He arrived in Queensland in 1874, and was appointed Parliamentary Librarian. Mr. O'Donovan had previously filled the positions of Professor of Modern Languages in the Collège des Hautes Études, afterwards the Catholic University of Paris, and of Lecturer in one of the colleges of the University of France. At this time he acquired considerable distinction as a Hellenist. He was one of the editors of the Ami de la Religion, and is the author of "Memories of Rome," and some minor works. He is well known in Melbourne as a writer on literary and artistic subjects. Some of his lectures on art and architecture, delivered at the Public Library in that city, were published by the Technological Commission of Victoria. He was a warm advocate of the establishment of schools of design in that colony, giving them considerable support in the press and on the platform. His latest work is his Analytical Catalogue of the Queensland Parliamentary Library. It is the fruit of many years' labour in the colony, and of a deep study of bibliography, to which he devoted himself during his long residence in the principal countries of Europe, where he became intimately acquainted with the management of all the great libraries of the Old World. He has received from the Parliament of Queensland special and substantial grants in recognition of the thought and labour bestowed on the compilation of the Catalogue of the Parliamentary Library. Mr. O'Donovan was elected a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, of the Royal Society of Literature, of the Incorporated Society of Authors, a Member of the Society of Arts, and of the Library Association of the United Kingdom, Corresponding Member honoris causâ of the Société de Géographie Commerciale of Paris and Havre, and honorary member of the Société d'Anthropologie of Paris. He has also been created a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George (1893).

"OGILVY, Gavan." See BARRIE, J. M.

OGLE, Dr. William, M.A. and M.D. Oxon., F.R.C.P. London, was born in 1827 at Oxford, his father being the Regius Professor of Medicine in that University. He was educated at Rugby, and at Corpus Christi College, of which latter he afterwards became a Fellow. He graduated in classical honours, and took the degree of M.A. and M.D. at Oxford. His medical education was received at St. George's Hospital, where he became Lecturer on Physiology and Assistant Physician. After practising for a few years in London, he accepted the office of Medical Officer of Health for East Hertfordshire; and held this post until on the retirement of Dr. Farr he was appointed Superintendent of Statistics in the General Register Office, from which post he has now retired. Among other offices which he has held are those of Examiner in Physical Science and in Public Health in the University of Oxford. He is the author of numerous papers on physiological and medical subjects in the Transactions of the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Society; and on Statistical Subjects in the Journal of the Statistical Society, and in the official reports issued by the General Register Office. He is also the author of a translation, with notes and essays, of the treatise of Aristotle on the Parts of Animals, and of Kerner's "Flowers and their Unbidden Guests," and has published various articles on the "Fertilization of Flowers."

OHNET, Georges, French novelist and dramatist, was born in Paris on April 3, 1848. His father, an architect, intended him to become a barrister, but after the war of 1870, Georges Ohnet took to political journalism, and was successively on the staff of the Pays and the Constitutionnel, where the vivacity of his style gained him a measure of celebrity. In 1875 his first play, written in conjunction with M. Denayrouze, was produced at the Théâtre Historique under the title of "Regina Sarpi." It had a brilliant success, and was followed in 1877 by "Marthe" at the Gymnase. At about this time M. Ohnet began publishing, under the general title of "Battles of Life," that highly idealistic series of romances with which his name is connected. In 1881 appeared "Serge Panine," a work crowned by the French Academy; in 1882 the famous "Le Maître de Forges," dramatised by the author and acted at the Gymnase in Dec., 1883; in 1883 "La Comtesse Sarah;" in 1884, "Lise Fleuron;" in 1885, "La Grande Manière," which suggests strongly the manner of Georges Sand, M. Ohnet's model; in 1886, "Les Dames de Croix-Mort;" in 1888, "Volonté," an attack on Pessimism; in 1889, "Le Docteur Rameau" and "Dernier Amour;" and in 1891, "Dette de Haine," etc. M. Ohnet has dramatised with great success some half-dozen of his principal novels. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in July, 1885.

O'KELLY, James, Ex-M.P., son of Mr. John O'Kelly, of Roscommon, was born in Dublin in 1845. He was educated at Dublin University and at the Sorbonne, Paris, and served for some time as an officer in the French army during the Franco-German war. He left France after the fall of Paris and went to New York, where he worked for some time as a journalist for the New York Herald. As a correspondent for the same paper he went to Cuba at the time of the insurrection, but joined the rebels, was taken prisoner, and confined for some time in a dungeon, whence at last he contrived to escape. After various adventures in America, Algiers, and elsewhere, he went to the Soudan for the purpose of joining the Mahdi's troops; he was lost for some months in the desert, and at last appeared on the Nile, not far from Khartoum. After writing a series of lively letters to the Daily News he returned to England, and once more represented the constituency of Roscommon in the House of Commons. At the General Election of 1885 he and Mr. Mullany were returned by an immense Parnellite majority for the new division of North Roscommon, and in 1886 he was returned unopposed. In 1892 he stood as a Parnellite for the old constituency, but was beaten by a small majority by Mr. Bodkin, an Anti-Parnellite. Mr. O'Kelly was a "suspect," and was imprisoned at Kilmainham in 1881-2. In the House of Commons he has been frequently "suspended."

OLCOTT, Colonel Henry Steel, well known as a theosophist, and President of the Theosophical Society, had made his mark as an American reformer and man of affairs before the outbreak of the War of North and South. By 1856 he had founded the first scientific agricultural school on the Swiss model in the United States, and had written three works on agriculture, one of which went into seven editions. He had by invitation addressed three State Legislatures on the subject of a new sugar plant, which is now generally cultivated, and had been offered by his own Government a botanical mission to Caffraria, and later the Chief Commissionership of Agriculture, and, by the Greek Government, the Professorship of Agriculture at the University of Athens. He was at one time agricultural editor of Horace Greeley's paper the New York Tribune, and also American correspondent for the Mark Lane Express, and his services to the cause of American agricultural reform were such that the National Agricultural Society voted him two medals of honour, while the American Institute presented him with a silver goblet. When the Civil War broke out he threw up the profession of the law, in which he had been chiefly engaged hitherto, and joined the Northerners. He saw service in four battles, and was present at the capture of Fort Macon, but was subsequently invalided on account of dysentery contracted in the field. On his recovery the authorities determined to keep so useful a man from returning to the front, and therefore appointed him to the highly responsible position of Special Commissioner of the War Department. As such his chief duty was to punish dishonest government contractors. For two years he is said to have been in constant danger of assassination owing to his unsparing severity towards the rings of wealthy swindlers who made their fortunes at the expense of the Executive. A sum amounting to $200,000 is reported to have been collected by the fraudulent contractors, who hoped therewith to bribe him into silence, but none of them ventured to approach him with the money. At the end of two years, at the request of the Secretary of the Navy, he was also ordered on special naval duty, instituted drastic reforms in the dockyards, and introduced a new system of accounts at Boston and Philadelphia. The war being over, Colonel Olcott retired into private life, and during the last decade has been prominent as a student and teacher of Theosophy and neo-Buddhism.

OLDENBURG (Grand Duke of), Nicholas Frederick Peter, son of the Grand Duke Paul Frederick Augustus and the Princess Ida of Anhalt-Bernburg, born July 8, 1827, succeeded his father Feb. 27, 1853. The population of the Duchy over which he reigns is about 300,000. He promulgated a liberal constitution in Feb., 1849, modified it in 1852, and during the war between Russia, Turkey, and the Allied Powers, he adhered to the policy of Prussia. After the conquest of Schleswig-Holstein by Prussia and Austria, the Grand Duke claimed a portion of these duchies, which claim he endeavoured to support by some "Memoirs" addressed to the diplomatists of Europe. He married, Feb. 10, 1852, Elizabeth, daughter of Prince Joseph of Sax-Altenburg, by whom he has two sons.

OLIPHANT, Mrs. Margaret, whose maiden name was Wilson, novelist and biographer, and one of the most prolific writers of the day, was born at Wallyford, near Musselburgh in Midlothian, in 1828. The first of her numerous works of fiction, which abound in skilful delineations of Scotch life and character, appeared in 1849, before the author had attained her majority, under the title of "Passages in the Life of Mrs. Margaret Maitland of Sunnyside." Its success was such as to incite its author to fresh efforts, and she produced a long series of works of fiction which secured for her a widespread reputation both in England and America. Amongst her novels are: "Caleb Field," 1850; "Markland," 1851; "Katie Stewart," 1852; "The Quiet Heart," 1854; "Zaidée," 1856; "The Laird of Norlaw," 1858; "Lucy Crofton," 1860; "The Chronicles of Carlingford," 1862-66; "Madonna Mary," 1867; "Squire Arden," 1871; "At His Gates," 1872; "A Rose in June," 1876; "Young Musgrave," 1877; "Within the Precincts," 1879; "The Ladies Lindores," 1883; "The Wizard's Son," 1883; "Hester," 1884; "Sir Tom," 1884; "Madam," 1885; "Oliver's Bride," 1886; "The Second Son," 1888; "Neighbours on the Green," "Lady Car: the Sequel of a Life," "A Poor Gentleman," 1889; "Mrs. Blencarrow's Troubles," "Sons and Daughters," 1890; "The Heir Presumptive and the Heir Apparent," and "The Marriage of Elinor," 1892; "Lady William," and "The Sorceress," 1893; and "Prodigals and their Inheritance," 1894. Mrs. Oliphant has also written works of history and biography, amongst which "S. Francis of Assisi," 1870; "The Makers of Florence," 1876; and "Literary History of England," 1882; and a biography of Laurence Oliphant, 1889, are the best known. She also edited Messrs. Blackwood's "Foreign Classics for English Readers," and herself contributed volumes on Dante and Cervantes. She has also recently (1893) published "Thomas Chalmers," a study.

OLLIVIER, Émile, a French statesman, born at Marseilles, July 2, 1825; became a member of the Paris bar in 1847; and in 1848 was Commissary-General of the Republic at Marseilles; was Préfet at Chaumont, and returned to the bar in 1849. Elected as Opposition candidate for the third circonscription of the Seine in 1857, he took part in several important discussions; amongst which may be mentioned those relating to the laws respecting public safety, the expedition to Italy, and the regulation of the Press. During the session of 1860 he was one of the most distinguished members of a small group of Opposition Deputies, known by the name of "The Five." In the meantime he undertook the defence of M. Vacherot, indicted for his work entitled "La Démocratie," and in consequence of the style he adopted in pleading, was suspended for three months, an appeal against this judgment failing. In 1863 he was re-elected for Paris. During the session of 1865 he was elected a member of the Council-General of the Var. In July of the same year he received the appointment of Judicial Counsel and Commissary-General of the Viceroy of Egypt in Paris, and retired from the Paris Bar. M. Émile Ollivier was chosen by the Emperor as arbitrator of the difficulties which arose relative to the Isthmus of Suez, and it was upon his report that the final decision was founded. The session of 1866-67 witnessed the complete separation of M. Ollivier from his former political associates of the Left. At the general elections of 1869 he was returned by an enormous majority for the first circonscription of the Var. On Dec. 27, M. Ollivier, who had been for some time the centre of the movements for uniting the fractions of the late majority with the new Liberal Tiers Parti, received from the Emperor a letter inviting him to form a ministry which should enjoy the confidence of the Legislative body, and which could carry out the Senatus-Consultum in letter and spirit. This onerous task he undertook, and the names of the new ministers were published in the Journal Officiel on Jan. 3, 1870. M. Ollivier himself took the portfolio of Justice. Among the first-fruits of the new administration was the granting of an amnesty in favour of M. Ledru-Rollin, the convocation of the High Court of Justice at Tours to try Prince Pierre Bonaparte, the maintenance of order without shedding of blood during the popular excitement caused by the assassination of Victor Noir, the prosecution of Henry Rochefort, and the dismissal of M. Haussmann. Several administrative reforms also were introduced, and it was thought by many that an era of constitutional liberty had begun for France. These hopes were soon rudely dispelled. The declaration of war against Germany, and its disastrous results, led to the overthrow of the Ollivier Government on Aug. 9, 1870. M. Ollivier, who, it should be mentioned, had been elected a member of the French Academy in April, 1870, deemed it prudent after the fall of the empire to retire to Biella, in Piedmont, where he resided for a considerable time with his wife and child, devoting his time to literary pursuits. He returned to his house at Passy at the close of the year 1872, and his reception at the French Academy took place Feb. 25, 1874. In 1876 he twice stood for the Chamber of Deputies, but was unsuccessful. In 1880 M. Ollivier again became a figure in politics on the occasion of Prince Napoleon's letter touching the decrees about religious congregations. In the columns of the Estafette he called upon enlightened priests to conform to the decrees, but his appeal led to a violent and prolonged press quarrel with M. Paul de Cassagnac. Since 1880 he has scarcely mixed in contemporary politics except as a correspondent to newspapers. He accepts the Republic, but, in 1885, when again standing unsuccessfully for the Chamber, declared that it should be resolutely anti-radical. M. Emile Ollivier has published numerous juridical works, which have appeared in the Revue de Droit Pratique, which he founded in 1856, in conjunction with MM. Mourlon, Demangeat, and Ballot. He is the author, with M. Mourlon, of "Commentaire sur les Saisies Immobilières et Ordres," 1859; and of "Commissaire de la Loi du 25 Mars, 1864, sur les Coalitions." 1864; "Une Visite à la Chapelle des Médicis: Dialogue entre Michel Ange et Raphaël," 1872; "L'Eglise et l'État au Concile du Vatican," 2 vols., 1879; "M. Thiers à l'Académie et dans l'Histoire," 1880; "Le Concordat, est-il respecté?" 1883; and other works, of which the latest is "1789 et 1889," 1890. M. Ollivier's first wife, who died at Saint Tropez, in 1862, was a daughter of Liszt, the famous pianist and composer; he married, secondly, in Sept., 1869, Mdlle. Gravier, the daughter of a merchant of Marseilles.

OLMSTED, Frederick Law, landscape gardener, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, April 25, 1822. He studied at Yale College, devoting special attention to engineering and the sciences connected with agriculture. In 1848 he purchased a farm on Staten Island, and while managing it, studied landscape gardening. In 1850 he made a pedestrian tour through England and portions of the Continent, an account of which was given in his "Walks and Talks of an American Farmer in England," 1852. In 1852-53, as correspondent of the New York Times, he travelled through the South for the purpose of studying the economical effects of slavery. The results of this and of a subsequent journey were afterwards published in separate works: "A Journey in the Seaboard Slave States," 1856; "A Journey through Texas," 1857; "A Journey in the Black Country," 1860; and "The Cotton Kingdom," 1861. In the meanwhile, in 1855, he made a tour through France, Italy, and Germany, for the purpose of observing parks and rural grounds. In 1857, in connection with Calvert Vaux, he secured the prize for the best plan of laying out the New York Central Park, and was appointed architect-in-chief of the work. He continued in charge of the Park until the outbreak of the Civil War (1861), when he was appointed Secretary and Executive Officer of the Sanitary Commission. From 1863 to 1865 he spent in California, when he was made one of the Commissioners of the Yosemite Reservation. He returned to New York in 1865, and had charge of the laying out of the Brooklyn Prospect Park. He has since designed parks and other public works at Washington, Chicago, Rochester, Louisville, Milwaukee, Buffalo, Montreal and other cities. He resides at Brookline, Massachusetts.

OLNEY, Hon. Richard, Attorney-General of the United States, was born at Oxford, Mass., Sept. 15, 1835, and was graduated from Brown University (Providence, R.I.) in 1856. He attended the Harvard Law School from 1856 to 1859, when he was admitted to the bar and began the practice of his profession at Boston, where he has since resided. He served as a Member of the Massachusetts House of Representatives in 1874, but held no other public office until his appointment by President Cleveland in March, 1893, to his present Cabinet position of Attorney-General of the United States.

O'MALLEY, Edward Loughlin, son of the late Peter Frederick O'Malley, Q.C., was born in 1842, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; B.A. 1864, M.A. 1868. He was called to the Bar, Middle Temple, in 1866, and went on the Norfolk and South Eastern Circuits. He was made Attorney-General for Jamaica in 1876; Attorney-General for Hongkong in 1879; and Chief Justice of the Straits Settlements in 1889.

OMMANNEY, Admiral, Sir Erasmus, C.B., F.R.S., Cross of Grand Commander of the Royal Order of the Saviour (Greece), LL.D. (McGill University), is the seventh son of the late Sir Francis Molyneux Ommanney, the well-known Navy agent, and sometime M.P. for Barnstaple, and nephew of the late Admiral Sir John A. Ommanney, K.C.B. He was born in London in 1814, and entered the Navy in 1826. As midshipman, he assisted at the landing of the British Army at Lisbon in 1827; was at the battle of Navarino on board the Albion, and in H.M. ships Revenge and Undaunted, saw much service in the Mediterranean, East Indies and Coast of Africa. He was promoted to Lieutenant in 1835, and immediately volunteered to serve with Capt. James Ross in an expedition to relieve the whaling vessels, beset in the ice of Baffin's Bay: this expedition was carried out in mid-winter under extreme hardships and difficulties, and for his services Lieut. Ommanney received the commendation of the Admiralty. In Oct., 1840, he was promoted to Commander, and studied the principles and construction of marine engines in order to fit himself to command steam-vessels which were then being introduced into the navy. With the Vesuvius, he was actively employed on all parts of the Mediterranean for three years, being present at the bombardment of Tangier by the French. He then returned to England, and, unable to get active employment, studied at the Portsmouth Naval College. After being promoted Captain in 1846, he was employed by the Government to help in carrying out the relief measures during the Irish Famine, and in Feb., 1850, was selected to be second in command of the Arctic Expedition, under Captain Austin, to search after the Franklin Expedition, and was the first to discover traces of the missing ships. After travelling over 500 miles on the ice in sledges, Capt. Ommanney returned to the ship, and though no further traces of Franklin were found, a great deal of new land was discovered. On his return to England he was appointed Deputy Controller-General of the Coastguard, which he left on the outbreak of the war against Russia in 1854, when he was appointed to command the White Sea Expedition, which harassed the towns of Russian Lapland, and endured a service of considerable severity. In 1855 he was appointed to command a special service in the Baltic, assisted in the operations of the fleet in the Gulf of Finland, and was Senior Officer in the Gulf of Riga. In 1857 he proceeded to the West Indies, and took command of the Brunswick, and was afterwards attached to the Channel Fleet and the Mediterranean Fleet. Captain Ommanney was lastly employed as Senior Officer in charge of the Naval establishments at the Rock of Gibraltar for nearly three years, a post he was obliged to leave on being promoted to the rank of Rear Admiral in November, 1864. He was afterwards knighted in recognition of Arctic services, and was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society for his scientific observations and for his geographical discoveries made in the Arctic regions. Since being retired by compulsion, he has served on the Thames Conservancy, nominated by the Admiralty, and devoted himself to the interests of learned societies. He has been a frequent attendant at the meetings of the British Association, and served on the Council. He accompanied the Society to the Meeting in Canada in 1884 in the capacity of its treasurer, on which occasion the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the University of Montreal. He read a paper at the Aberdeen Meeting in 1885 on the desirability of renewing the exploration and research into the unknown Antarctic regions. In company with a well-known Berlin Professor, and a Russian Astronomer, he proceeded to Luxor, in Upper Egypt, and assisted in observing the transit of Venus. He also accompanied the Expedition which went to Oran, in Algeria, for observing the total eclipse of the Sun, but the observers, unfortunately, were unsuccessful owing to the obscurity of the weather. He is one of the oldest Fellows of the Royal Geographical Society, and has taken a constant interest in their proceedings, having served on the Council and been their delegate to Congresses on the continent at Antwerp, Bern, and Nantes. He is a Vice-President of the Royal United Service Institution, and attended the Council for twenty-seven years. During a residence of ten years in the Isle of Wight he discharged all the duties of a Justice of the Peace, and undertook the work of an independent Visitor under the Home Office of the Convict Prison, for which the thanks of the Home Secretary were accorded him.

ONSLOW, (The Earl of), William Hillier, K.C.M.G., late Governor of New Zealand, was born in 1853; educated at Eton, and Exeter College, Oxford; and succeeded to the peerage in 1870. He was Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies 1887-8; and Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade from Feb. to Nov., 1888, when he became Governor of New Zealand in succession to Sir W. D. Jervois.

The Earl was Lord-in-Waiting to Her Majesty in 1880 and in 1886.

OPPERT, Julius, a French orientalist was born in Hamburgh, of Jewish parents, July 9, 1825. He studied law at Heidelberg, and Sanskrit and Arabic at Bonn. He next studied the Zend and the Ancient Persian, and published a treatise at Berlin on the vocal system of the latter language. As his religion prevented him from holding a professorship in a German University, he went to France in 1847, obtained the professorship of German at the Lyceums of Laval and Rheims, and was appointed on the scientific expedition sent by the government to Mesopotamia. After his return in 1854, he submitted to the Institute a new system of interpreting inscriptions. For nearly thirty years he has devoted himself chiefly to the decyphering of cuneiform inscriptions. In 1857 he was appointed Professor of Sanskrit in the School of Languages attached to the Imperial Library. Among his works are "Les Inscriptions des Archémenides," 1852; "Études Assyriennes; L'Expédition scientifique de France en Mésopotamie," 1854-64; "Grammaire Sanscrite," 1859; "Grande inscription du Palais de Khorsabad," 1864; "Histoire des empires de Chaldée et d'Assyrie, d'après les monuments," 1866; "L'Immortalité de l'âme chez les Chaldéens, suivie d'une traduction de la descente aux enfers de la déesse Istar Astarté," 1875; "L'ambre jaune chez les Assyriens," 1880; "Fragments Mythologiques relatifs à la Mythologie Assyrienne," 1882; "Deux textes très anciens de la Chaldée," 1883; "Chronologie de la Génèse," 1877; "Documents juridiques de la Chaldée et de l'Assyrie," 1878; "Le peuple et la langue des Medes," 1879. He has written many papers on the Laws of Assyria and Babylon, such as "État des esclaves à Babylone," etc.

ORCHARDSON, William Quiller, R.A., D.C.L. Oxford, born in Edinburgh in 1835, entered at the age of fifteen the Trustees' Academy of his native city. The first pictures he submitted to public inspection were shown in the exhibitions of the Royal Scottish Academy. Encouraged by their reception, Mr. Orchardson came to London in 1863, and the same year exhibited at the Royal Academy for the first time. His contributions were entitled "An Old English Song," and "Portraits," the latter a life-size full-length portrait composition of three young ladies. In the following year he exhibited at the British Institution a figure of "Peggy" from Allan Ramsay's "Gentle Shepherd," and at the Royal Academy another Scottish subject, entitled "Flowers o' the Forest." The following year, there appeared at the Royal Academy "Hamlet and Ophelia," and in the winter exhibition at the French gallery, Pall Mall, "The Challenge," which won a prize of £100 given by Mr. Wallace. In 1866 came "The Story of a Life" at the Academy—an aged nun relating her life experience to a group of novices; and "Christopher Sly," in Mr. Wallis's winter exhibition at the Suffolk-street galleries. In 1867 the Academy pictures were "Talbot and the Countess of Auvergne," and "Miss Pettie;" and another was shown at the French gallery winter exhibition, entitled "Choosing a Weapon." In Jan., 1868, he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, only four years after he had come to London. He exhibited that year at the Academy, besides a portrait of Mrs. Birket Foster, a subject from Shakespeare—"Prince Henry, Poins, and Falstaff." In 1870 three pictures by him were exhibited at the Royal Academy, viz., "Day Dreams," "The Market-Girl from the Lido," and "Toilers of the Sea." Mr. Orchardson achieved a great success at the Paris Universal Exhibition, where his "Challenge" and "Christopher Sly" were greatly admired by French critics, and won for the painter one of the very few Medals awarded to English artists. His more recent pictures are, "A Hundred Years Ago," "On the Grand Canal, Venice," and "In St. Mark's, Venice," exhibited at the Academy, 1871; "Casus Belli" and "The Forest Pet," 1872; "The Protector," "Oscar and Brin," and "Cinderella," 1873; "Hamlet and the King," "Ophelia," "A Venetian Fruit-seller," and "Escaped," 1874; "Too Good to be True," and "Moonlight on the Lagoons," 1875; "Flotsam and Jetsam," "The Bill of Sale," and "The Old Soldier," 1876; "The Queen of the Swords," and "Jessica" (Merchant of Venice), 1877; "Conditional Neutrality," "A Social Eddy left by the Tide," and "Autumn," 1878; "Hard Hit," a scene at the gaming table, 1879; "Napoleon I., on board H.M.S. Bellerophon," 1880, purchased by the Council of the Royal Academy under the terms of the Chantrey bequest; "Housekeeping in the Honeymoon," 1882. These were followed by "Voltaire," 1883; "Un Marriage de Convenance," 1884; "The Salon of Mme. Recamier," 1885; "Un Marriage de Convenance—After," 1886; "The Rift within the Lute," 1887; and "The Young Duke," 1889. Recently Mr. Orchardson has exhibited portraits of Lord Rookwood, Prof. Dewar, and a lady, Mr. Orchardson was elected a Royal Academician Dec. 13, 1877; and a D.C.L. of Oxford in 1890.

ORLEANS, Duc d', Prince Louis Philippe Robert, eldest son of the late Comte de Paris, was born Feb. 6, 1869. On attaining his majority, Feb. 6, 1890, he entered Paris, and proceeding to the Mairie, expressed his desire, as a Frenchman, to perform his military service; whereupon he was arrested in conformity with the Expulsion Bill of 1886, which forbids the soil of France to the direct heirs of the families which have reigned there. He was liberated by President Carnot after a few months' nominal imprisonment, and conducted to the Swiss frontier. This escapade won him the title of the "Premier Conscrit." During the last illness of his father in Aug. and Sept. 1894, he was constantly at the bedside of the illustrious patient, with whom he is reported to have had many private conversations on his duties as the future representative of the family tradition. After the Comte de Paris's funeral, he received his adherents, and is now in Brussels, which will in future be his head quarters, Stowe House being, in his opinion, too distant from Orleanist circles in France, especially from those older members of the party who cannot undertake a sea voyage.

ORMEROD, Miss Eleanor A., of Torrington House, St. Alban's, was born at Sedbury Park, near Chepstow, and is the youngest daughter of Geo. Ormerod, D.C.L., F.R.S., of Sedbury Park, Gloucestershire, and of Tyldesley, Lancashire, who was well known as the "Historian of Cheshire." From her earliest childhood Miss Ormerod was excessively fond of observing plant and animal life. Her education was conducted at home under the supervision of her mother, whose chief care was that all studies undertaken should be carefully learned and thoroughly mastered, and to this judicious early training Miss Ormerod attributes the success which has attended her studies as a specialist. In early life successive illnesses occasioned periods of enforced leisure, which Miss Ormerod occupied in natural history studies out of doors, together with the correlated subjects of Botany, Horticulture, and Agricultural Chemistry. Miss Ormerod has acquired a knowledge of Latin, French, Italian, and several other of the less commonly studied continental languages, which greatly helped her in later work, and she began early to sketch from nature in pencil and water colours. About the year 1853 Miss Ormerod took up the study of entomology for the love of it, as distinguished from a mere collector's pastime. The real work of her life began in 1868, when the formation of the collection of Economic Entomology was set on foot by the Royal Horticultural Society and the South Kensington Department. At this time, Mr. Andrew Murray, the curator of the museum, was in constant communication with Miss Ormerod, suggesting special investigations and reports; and, in response, she contributed specimens, drawings, and models, illustrative of insect depredations, for which the "Silver Floral Medal" of the Royal Horticultural Society was awarded to her in recognition of these many services. In the year 1872 Miss Ormerod was chosen to represent British natural history modelling from life at the International Polytechnic Exhibition held in Moscow, and sent over a large collection of plaster of-Paris models, taken by her in exact facsimile by a process of her own invention and coloured by herself. These specimens represented a large number of garden plants and hot-house fruits, from grapes and peaches down to potatoes and lettuces. She also sent groups of electrotypes from nature, representing leaves and reptiles. For these she received the Silver Medal, the Great Silver Medal, and also the Gold Medal of Honour from the University of Moscow. In 1878 Miss Ormerod was elected a Fellow of the Meteorological Society, being the first lady ever admitted to Fellowship. She arranged and edited for the Society a large mass of observations relating to coincident conditions of weather and plant life. This was published in a royal 8vo vol. under the name of the "Cobham Journals." In 1881 she published her "Manual of Injurious Insects, with Methods of Prevention and Remedy for these Attacks on Food-Crops, &c.," and in 1884 her "Guide to Insect Life," being a series of ten lectures on the same class of subjects delivered by her in the Lecture Theatre at South Kensington Museum. Both works have been republished in much enlarged form. These were followed by the publication of "Lectures on Agricultural Entomology," and in 1889, of a small vol. on some of the injurious insects of South Africa. But Miss Ormerod's chief publication has been her "Annual Reports of Observations on Injurious Farm Insects," which were begun in 1877, and continued yearly up to the present date, thus forming a continuous record of the presence and habits of agriculturally injurious insects and the means found really serviceable for checking their ravages, over a period of seventeen years. In 1881, Miss Ormerod accepted the post of Special Lecturer on Economic Entomology at the Royal Agricultural College, but after a few years she resigned this office. Miss Ormerod was unanimously elected Consulting Entomologist to the Royal Agricultural Society of England by the Council, on May 2, 1882. To the duties of this post she devoted her best attention for about ten years. But in the course of 1892, partly from bad health in consequence of long suffering from an accident to her knee, and partly from being desirous to give her time more completely to thoroughly attending to agricultural communications than was consistent with official ties, she retired from the office. Miss Ormerod is a member of many scientific societies. She is Hon. Member of the Farmers' Club, a Fellow of the Royal Meteorological Society, and of the English Entomological Society, also a Member of the Entomological Society of Washington, and a corresponding Member of the International Association of Official Entomologists of Washington. Her membership with Societies in Canada, Australia, and South Africa, affords the opportunities of giving and receiving communications aiding in her special work, which continues to increase in scope and importance. Besides the heavy home correspondence which she conducts, especially in reply to enquiries from British agriculturists, Miss Ormerod receives numerous applications from foreign countries and the colonies, and is likewise a frequent contributor to the agricultural journals, regarding prevention of farm and fruit insect attacks.

O'RELL, Max. See BLOUËT, PAUL.

OSCAR II., King of Sweden and Norway, is the great grandson of Napoleon's famous general Bernadot, and was born Jan. 21, 1829. Before he ascended the throne he held the rank of Lieutenant-General in the army. On the death of the King's brother, Charles XV., Sept. 18, 1872, he succeeded to the throne. In 1878 the Frankfort Academy of Sciences elected the King of Sweden a corresponding member in recognition of his poetical translation of Goethe's "Faust" into Swedish. His Majesty is also the author of "A Memoir of Charles XII." (translated into English in 1879); and of "Poems and Leaflets from my Journal," 1880, under the nom de plume of "Oscar Frederik." He married, in June, 1857, the Princess Sophia of Nassau, daughter of the late Duke Wilhelm of Nassau, who was born in July, 1836. From this union there are four sons—namely, Gustaf, Duke of Wermland, born in June, 1858, now heir-apparent to the throne; Oscar, Duke of Götland, born in Nov. 1859, and who married Miss Ebba Munck, daughter of Col. Munck; Carl, Duke of Westergötland, born in Feb. 1861; and Eugene, Duke of Nerike, born in Aug. 1865. The coronation of King Oscar and Queen Sophia took place July 18, 1873, at the Cathedral of Drontheim in Norway. In 1892 and 1893 King Oscar opposed himself resolutely to the desire of the Norwegian parliament for a foreign and consular service which should be independent of Sweden.

O'SHEA, William Henry, born in 1840, is the only son of the late Henry O'Shea, Esq., of Dublin. He was educated at Oscott and at Trinity College, Dublin, and in 1858 joined the 18th Hussars, but has now retired. He is a Count of the Holy Roman Empire, and a J.P. for co. Clare. He entered Parliament in 1880 as Liberal Home Rule member for Clare, and retained his seat until 1885. When it was in contemplation to release Mr. Parnell and others from Kilmainham in April, 1882, Captain O'Shea acted as the intermediary between the Government and the suspects. At the general election of 1885 he stood as a Liberal, for the Exchange Division of Liverpool, but was defeated by a narrow majority. In Feb. 1886, he stood for Galway on the same principles. He declined to vote for Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule Bill in June, 1886, and resigned his seat. Towards the end of 1889 he instituted divorce proceedings against his wife, a daughter of the late Sir John Page Wood, and niece of the late Lord Chancellor Hatherley, on the ground of her adultery with Mr. C. S. Parnell, M.P. A decree nisi was granted the petitioner on Nov. 17, 1890; and the suit led to the downfall of Mr. Parnell and the disorganisation of the party he once led.

OSMAN ALI (called Osman Digna, or "the bearded one," from dikn, the beard), was born at Suakim about 1836. He is not of pure Arab descent; his grandfather was a Turkish slave dealer who married a woman of the Hadendowa tribe; and Osman, like his father and grandfather before him, was a dealer in slaves, and had connections in Khartoum and Berber; and during latter years, before he appeared as the ambassador of the Mahdi, he stayed more frequently at Berber than at Suakim. There he entered into communication with the Mahdi, Mohammed Ahmed, and matured his plans for inducing the tribes round Suakim to rebel against the oppression of their Egyptian rulers. Osman Digna was not, however, the first and original leader of the rebellion. Sheik Tahher, of Suakim, who enjoyed the repute of especial holiness amongst the superstitious nomads of those parts, was the real messenger of the Mahdi, and the channel of communication in the negotiations with the rebellious tribes, while Osman Digna was more the military commander, and had to base his operations upon the spiritual authority of Sheik Tahher, a relation which existed till within recent years. It is well known with what skill Osman Digna filled his position, extended his influence over the rebellious tribes, and rose in the estimation of the authorities at Khartoum. The rebellion of the False Prophet on the White Nile broke out in Dec. 1881; and, on Aug. 3, 1883, Osman Digna appeared before Suakim, on which day the first encounter took place at Sinkat with Tewfik Bey, Osman being beaten and wounded, and losing three members of his family. In Sept. 1885, an Abyssinian expedition under Ras Alula, which had been sent to the relief of Kassala by King Johannes, encountered Osman Digna at Kafeil, and utterly defeated him. He again threatened Suakim in 1888, whence he was repulsed by General Grenfell on Dec. 21 of that year. Quite recently he has again been reported to be collecting men for military purposes.

OSSORY & FERNS, Bishop of. See WALSH, THE RIGHT REV. W. PAKENHAM.

OTTO, King of Bavaria, was born April 27, 1848; succeeded to the throne, June 13, 1866; but the government passed into the hands of the Regent, Prince Luitpold, on June 10, 1886.

OULESS, Walter William, R.A., was born at St. Heliers, Jersey, Sept 21, 1848, and educated at Victoria College in that island. He came to London in 1864, and was admitted a student of the Royal Academy in the following year. While there, he took a silver Medal in the Antique School, and was an unsuccessful competitor for the Historical Gold Medal. Mr. Ouless has been a constant exhibitor at Burlington House since 1869, and his first works were subject pictures, the principal being "Home Again," and "An Incident in the French Revolution." In 1872, acting on the advice of Mr. Millais, he took to portrait-painting, and has since devoted himself almost exclusively to that branch of the profession. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy Jan. 24, 1877, and a Royal Academician May 5, 1881. He obtained the Medal of the second class at the Paris International Exhibition of 1878. Among the portraits painted and exhibited by Mr. Ouless may be mentioned those of Lord Selborne, Mr. Charles Darwin, F.R.S.; the late Bishop of London; Admiral Sir Alexander Milne, G.C.B.; Miss Ruth Bouverie, 1877; the late Mr. Russell Gurney, M.P., Recorder of London, 1877; Lieut.-Col. Loyd Lindsay, 1878; Mr John Bright, M.P.; Sir Thomas Gladstone; the Rev. Dr. Ridding, head-master of Winchester College; and Mr. Edmund Yates, 1879; His Eminence Cardinal Newman; Mr. Justice Manisty, 1880; Mrs Butterworth, 1881; Gen. Sir F. Roberts, 1882; the late Bishop of Llandaff, and the Bishop of Norwich, 1883; and Mr. G. Scharf, 1886; His Eminence Cardinal Manning, 1888; Sir William Bowman, F.R.S.; Lady Manisty; T. Sidney Cooper, R.A., 1889; the Bishop of St. Albans and the Bishop of Chichester, 1890; Sir Charles Tennant, Bart., 1893; Maj.-Gen. Sir F. Grenfell; Sir William Savory, Bart.; and Sir John Gladstone, Bart., 1894. Mr Ouless was one of the two English recipients of the grand Gold Medal for Art at the Berlin International Exhibition, 1886; and was made a Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur after the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1889.

OWEN, The Very Rev. John, M.A., late Dean of St. Asaph, was born at Llanengan, Carnarvonshire, in 1854, and is the son of Mr. Griffith Owen, Ysgerber, Den. He was educated at Boltwnog Grammar School and Jesus College, Oxford, where he gained a scholarship at entrance in 1872. He obtained a Second Class Honour in Classical Moderations, 1873; and a Second Class in Mathematical Moderations, 1874; and graduated with Second Class Honour in Mathematical Finals, 1876; proceeding to the M.A. degree in 1879. He was ordained Deacon in 1879, and Priest in 1880, by the Bishop of St. David's. He was elected Professor and Lecturer in Classics and Theology at St. David's College, Lampeter, 1879-85; Head Master and Warden of Llandovery College, 1885-89; and was appointed Dean of St. Asaph in 1889. He retired from the Deanery in 1892. In the same year he was appointed a Canon of St. Asaph.

OXFORD, Bishop of. See STUBBS, THE RIGHT REV. WILLIAM.

an army, which was mobilised at Hiroshima, in Japan, on Sept. 26, 1894, and ordered to support the victorious troops in Korea. This second army consisted of 40,000 men, but its destination was kept secret. On Oct. 24 it landed at a point on Chinese territory about forty miles north of Port Arthur. A body of some 1,500 infantry were sent forward across the Yalu river, and dislodged the Chinese from some newly-constructed earthworks on the 24th. During the night the main body crossed the river, and on the 26th attacked the Chinese position at Kiulien-tcheng only to find that the 16,000 men in defence of it had run away. The Japanese, flushed with success, at once went in pursuit, entering Feng-huang-Tchen on Oct. 31. The Chinese retreated to Mukden, leaving the road thither open. The second army corps then captured the forts at Kinchou and Talienwan, and began operations against Port Arthur. The latter strong position was captured on Nov. 21, the Japanese land forces carrying the place by assault and their torpedo-boats co-operating from the direction of the sea. Since the capture of Port Arthur, Marshal Oyama is not reported to have had any fighting (Jan. 29, 1895), but his army has effected a junction with the first army near Haitcheng, on the road to Mukden. He is reported (Jan. 29, 1895) to have assumed command of the third Japanese army, while the second army has been placed under General Nodzu's orders.

P.

PADEREWSKI, J. Ignace, was born in 1860, in Podolia, Poland. In spite of unsympathetic surroundings his natural genius for music showed itself when he was still quite young. Before he was twenty he had decided to devote himself to composition, and on reaching that age he proceeded to Berlin in order to study harmony, &c. A few years later he resolved to become a pianist, and accordingly studied during three years under the tuition of Leschetitsky, husband of the well-known performer, Madame Essipoff. He advanced rapidly in his art, and his début was a complete success. He is now one of the first of living pianists, as well as a brilliant composer. He owes much of his success to intense and incessant practise, which has given him his marvellous ease of execution. Early in 1893 M. Paderewski made an American tour and gained thereby some 32,000*l*. A new fantasia by him was produced at the Norwich Festival in 1893.

PAGE, Thomas Nelson, D.L., American writer, was born at Oakland, Hanover Co., Virginia, April 23, 1853. He was educated at Washington and Lee University, and received the degree of LL.B. from the University of Virginia in 1874. He has since practised his profession at Richmond. The degree of D.L. was conferred upon him by Washington and Lee University in 1887. Mr. Page's first publication was a rhyme entitled "Uncle Gabe's White Folks," which appeared in Scribner's Monthly (now The Century) in 1877. In 1884 was issued, in The Century, "Marse Chan," a negro dialect story of the Civil War, and this made the writer's reputation. Others in the same vein followed, and in 1887 they were collected and published together in a book under the title of "In Ole Virginia." This was followed by "Befo' de War: Echoes in Negro Dialect," 1888; "Two Little Confederates," 1888; "Elsket and Other Stories," 1890; "On Newfound River," 1891; "Among the Camps," 1891; and "The Old South Essays," 1892.

PAGET, The Right Hon. Sir Augustus Berkeley, G.C.B., P.C., fourth son of the late Right Hon. Sir Arthur Paget, G.C.B., was born in 1823, and served a few months in the Secretary's Department of the General Post office, and in the Audit Office. He was appointed a Clerk in the Foreign Office, Aug. 21, 1841; was temporarily attached to the Mission at Madrid, Dec. 2, 1843; and was some time Chargé des Archives. He was appointed Précis Writer to the late Earl of Aberdeen, when Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Feb. 6, 1846; 2nd Paid Attaché in Paris, June 26, 1846; 1st Paid Attaché Dec., 1851; Secretary of Legation at Athens, Feb. 12, 1852. He was Acting Consul-General in Egypt from Dec. 8, 1852, till Feb. 19, 1853; and remained in Egypt till May 27, 1853. He was transferred to the Hague, Jan. 14, 1854; was Chargé d'Affaires from May 7 till Oct. 21, 1855; and from July 30 till Aug. 24, 1856. He was transferred to Lisbon, Feb. 18, 1857; was Chargé d'Affaires from July 9, 1857, till Jan. 14, 1858. He was transferred to Berlin, April 1, 1858; was Chargé d'Affaires, from June 17 till Nov. 20, 1858. He was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of Saxony, Dec. 13, 1858; to the King of Sweden and Norway, June 6, 1859 (which appointment was subsequently cancelled); and to the King of Denmark, July 6, 1859. He was made a C.B., Feb. 10, 1863; a K.C.B., March 16, 1863; was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of Portugal, June 9, 1866; and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of Italy, July 6, 1867. He was Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the King of Italy, from March 24, 1876, to Sept. 12, 1883; was sworn a Privy Councillor, July 21, 1876; was made a G.C.B., Aug. 21, 1883; and was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Austria, Jan. 1, 1884. He retired on a pension on July 1, 1893. He married the Countess Hohenthal, Maid of Honour to the Princess Royal of Prussia, Oct. 20, 1860.

PAGET, The Right Hon. Lord Clarence Edward, K.C.B., son of the first Marquis of Anglesey, K.G., by his second marriage, born June 17, 1811, entered the Navy at an early age, and saw some active service in the Baltic during the Crimean War. He was for some time secretary to his father when Master-General of the Ordnance, was appointed Secretary to the Admiralty in Lord Palmerston's second Administration in 1859, and retired in May, 1866, in order to take the command of the Mediterranean squadron. He attained flag rank in 1858, and was made Vice-Admiral, April 24, 1865. He was returned as one of the members in the Liberal interest for Sandwich, in Aug., 1847, did not present himself for re-election in July, 1852, was re-elected for that borough in March, 1857, and resigned his seat on taking the command of the Mediterranean squadron in May, 1866. He retired from the command of the Mediterranean fleet in May, 1869.

PAGET, Sir James, Bart., F.R.S., LL.D. Cantab., D.C.L. Oxon., ex-President of the Royal College of Surgeons, son of Samuel Paget, Esq., Merchant, was born at Great Yarmouth, Jan. 11, 1814, became a Member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1836, and an honorary Fellow in 1843. He is Sergeant-Surgeon to the Queen, Surgeon to the Prince of Wales, and Consulting-Surgeon to St. Bartholomew's Hospital. Sir James Paget, who is Vice-Chancellor of the University of London, and a Corresponding Member of the Institute of France (Academy of Sciences), is the author of the "Pathological Catalogue of the Museum of the College of Surgeons;" "Report on the Results of the Use of the Microscope," published in 1842; and "Lectures on Surgical Pathology," in 1853, 1863, and 1868; and has been an extensive contributor to the "Transactions" of the Royal and other learned societies. He was created a baronet in Aug., 1871. He was a Member of the Royal Commission appointed in 1881 to inquire into the condition of the London hospitals for small-pox and fever cases, and into the means of preventing the spread of infection. Sir James Paget was one of the scientific celebrities who received an honorary degree at the Jubilee (1882) in commemoration of the 300th anniversary of the founding of the University of Würzburg. He married, in 1844, Lydia, daughter of the late Rev. Henry North, Domestic Chaplain to H.R.H. the late Duke of Kent.

PAGET, Violet, who, under the name of Vernon Lee, contributes philosophical and æsthetic criticism to the principal English reviews, was born in 1856, and has lived in Italy for many years. In 1880 she published "Studies of the Eighteenth Century in Italy." In 1882 appeared "Belcaro," being essays on sundry æsthetical questions; "The Prince of a Hundred Soups" (a fairy tale), 1883; "Ottilie, an Eighteenth Century Idyl;" "Euphorion," a collection of Essays; "The Countess of Albany," a biography; "Miss Brown," a novel, 1884; "Hauntings," 1890, and "Vanitas," 1893, collections of stories; and "Baldwin," 1886, and "Althea," 1894, collections of essays and dialogues on ethical questions.

PAILLERON, Edouard, a French dramatist, was born in Paris on Sept. 17, 1834. He began life as a clerk in a notary's office, and published in 1860 a volume of satirical poetry, "Les Parasites," 1861, and a play. Among his most successful subsequent productions are: "Le Mur Mitoyen," 1862; "Le Dernier Quartier," 1863; "Le Second Mouvement," 1865; "Le Monde où l'on s'amuse," 1868; "Les faux Ménages," 1869; "Hélène," "L'Autre Motif," 1872; "Petite Pluie," 1875; "L'âge ingrat," 1878; "L'Etincelle," 1879; "L'Pendant le bal," 1881; "Le Monde où l'on s'ennuie," was produced at the Comédie Française in 1882, and had altogether an unprecedented run. To this piece of contemporary satire—for it is rather that than a play—M. Pailleron owes his election (1884) to the Académie Française. He has written also "La Souris" which appeared in 1887; "Amours et Haines;" "Théâtre chez Madame;" "Discours Académiques;" "Le Départ;" "Prière pour la France;" "La Poupée," 2nd edit., 1889; "Études sur Emile Augier," &c.

PALGRAVE, Francis Turner, LL.D., eldest son of the late Sir Francis Palgrave, born Sept. 28, 1824, was educated at the Charterhouse and at Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar, and where he took his degree of M.A., and was elected to a Fellowship at Exeter College. He was for five years Vice-Principal of the Training College for Schoolmasters at Kneller Hall, was afterwards appointed to a post in the educational department of the Privy Council, and was for some years private secretary to Earl Granville. He has published "Idylls and Songs," 1854; "The Golden Treasury of English Songs," 1861; "Essays on Art," 1866; and a Life of Sir Walter Scott, prefixed to the Globe edition of his poems, 1867; "Hymns," 1867; 3rd edit., enlarged, 1870; "The Five Days' Entertainment at Wentworth Grange," 1868; the text illustrative of "Gems of English Art in this Country: Twenty-four Pictures from National Collections, printed in colours by Leighton Brothers," 1869; "Lyrical Poems," 1871; "The Children's Treasury," 1864; "The Visions of England," 1881 and 1889: a Series of Lyrical Poems on English History; "The Treasury of Sacred Song," 1889. He also has edited "Selection from Wordsworth;" "Shakespeare's Lyrics;" "Chrysomela: a selection from the Lyrical Poems of Robert Herrick;" "The Poetical Works of J. Keats;" "Lyrical Poems by Lord Tennyson;" "Glen Desseray and other Poems by J. C. Shairp;" "Amenophis and other Poems," 1892. Mr. Palgrave was created an honorary LL.D. of Edinburgh in 1878. On the death of Principal Shairp in 1886 Mr. Palgrave was elected Professor of Poetry at Oxford.

PALGRAVE, Reginald F. D., fourth son of the late Sir Francis Palgrave, by his wife Elizabeth, daughter of Dawson Turner, of Great Yarmouth, Banker, was born in London, June 28, 1829. He was placed, through the intervention of Sir R. H. Inglis, by Sir D. Le Marchant, Clerk of the House of Commons, in the Committee Office, 1853; upon the recommendation of Sir T. Erskine May, he was appointed by the Speaker, Mr. Evelyn Denison, Examiner of Petitions for Private Bills to both Houses of Parliament, 1866, and Second Clerk Assistant and Clerk Assistant to the House of Commons, 1868 and 1870. In 1886, on the death of Sir Thomas Erskine May, he was appointed Clerk to the House of Commons. He published (1869) "The House of Commons; Illustrations of its History and Practice," 1877; "The Chairman's Handbook," 1890; "Oliver Cromwell, the Protector, an appreciation;" editing also Vols. I. and II. of Sir T. E. May's Treatise on the Law, &c., of Parliament," 1893. He has contributed to the Quarterly Review articles on "Pym and Shaftesbury, Two Popish Plots" (vol. 147), "The Fall of the Monarchy of Charles I." (vol. 154), and "Cromwell," April, 1886. He married, in 1857, Grace, daughter of Richard Battley, of Reigate, Esq., and was created C.B., 1887; K.C.B., 1892.

PALGRAVE, Robert Harry Inglis, F.R.S., F.S.S., third son of the late Sir Francis Palgrave, was born in London in 1827; was educated at the Charterhouse, and entered at an early age in the banking-house of Gurneys & Co., of Yarmouth, of which his grandfather, Mr. Dawson Turner, F.R.S., and Mr. Brightwen, were partners. He married, 1859, S. Maria Brightwen, the niece of the last-named. Mr. Palgrave has occupied himself largely and with much success in the study of economical, statistical, and banking questions. In 1870 he wrote a Prize Essay, printed in the Journal of the Royal Statistical Society, upon the "Local Taxation of Great Britain and Ireland." Since that date he has contributed many papers on banking and currency questions to the Transactions of the above society, and to those of the Bankers' Institute. He has also contributed to the Reports of the British Association, to the Bankers' Magazine, the Bankers' Almanac, &c., and for six years, dating from 1877, he edited, in part at first, afterwards solely, the Economist newspaper. He is the editor of the "Dictionary of Political Economy," of which the first part was published in 1891. In 1882 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1885 he was appointed one of the Royal Commissioners on the depression of Trade and Industry. Mr. Palgrave has also taken a leading part, as president, or otherwise, in the meetings of the section of Economic Science and Statistics of the British Association, and in the very important inquiries into the gold and paper currency questions, which have been undertaken, based partly on his investigations, and with the advantage of his combined practical and scientific knowledge, by the Bankers' Institute, and the Committee of the Association of English Country Bankers. In common with his brothers, Mr. R. H. Inglis Palgrave owes much to the training he received from his parents, his mother, Elizabeth, the daughter of Mr. D. Turner, mentioned above, being a lady of great accomplishments and much ability. Mr. Palgrave's only daughter, Elizabeth, is married to the Rev. Rowland V. Barker.

PALISA, Dr. J., was born on Dec. 6, 1848

at Troppau, in Silesia, and was educated first in his native town, and afterwards at Vienna University, where he devoted his attention to Mathematics and Physics, and was, in 1870, appointed Assistant Observer at the Vienna Observatory; thence in 1871 he went to the observatory at Geneva, and in 1872 he was appointed Director of the Observatory at Pola, where he had a six-inch meridian circle by Troughton & Simms, and a six-inch refractor with which he discovered no fewer than twenty-eight minor planets. In 1880 he left the Pola Observatory, and was appointed First Assistant at the Imperial Observatory at Vienna, where, up to August, 1890, he had discovered forty-five more minor planets, making the very large total of seventy-three. Dr. Palisa, in 1873, married Fräulein Florentine Wlaka, of Troppau.

PALLES, The Right Hon. Christopher, LL.D., a member of an old Roman Catholic family, which has been settled in Ireland since the fifteenth century, is the second son of Mr. Andrew Christopher Palles, of Mount Palles, co. Cavan, by Eleanor, eldest daughter of Mr. Matthew James Plunkett, of St. Margaret's, co. Dublin, and was born in 1831. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his Bachelor's degree in 1852, and was called to the Irish Bar in the following year. He took the degree of LL.D. at Dublin in 1865, and was appointed Solicitor-General for Ireland under Mr. Gladstone's Administration on the promotion of Mr. Dowse to the Attorney-Generalship for Ireland. On Mr. Dowse being elevated to the judicial bench in Nov. 1872, Dr. Palles succeeded to the latter office, which he held until the defeat of the Liberal party at the general election of 1874. Just before Mr. Gladstone's resignation, Dr. Palles was appointed Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, Feb. 16, 1874. He was a Joint Commissioner of the Great Seal from Sept. to Dec., 1883, and was sworn of the English Privy Council in 1892, having been made an Irish Privy Councillor in 1872. He is a J.P. for County Meath, Senator of the Royal University of Ireland, Vice-Chairman of the Board of Intermediate Education, Ireland, and a Commissioner of National Education, Ireland.

PALMER, Sir A. H., K.C.M.G., President of the Legislative Council of Queensland, was born at Armagh, Ireland, in 1819; emigrated to New South Wales in 1838, and subsequently became a farmer in Queensland. He was elected to the Legislative Assembly in 1866, and became Colonial Secretary in 1867; was Premier and Colonial Secretary from 1870 to 1875; and has been President from 1881 till the present time.

PALMER, The Rev. Charles Ferrers (Raymund), second son of Shirley Palmer, M.D. (well known as a medical writer), was born at Tamworth, Staffordshire, in 1819, and educated at the Free Grammar School of that town, and at the Queen's College of Medicine, Birmingham. He practised as a surgeon in his native town for some years, and in 1853, joining the Dominican order, took orders in 1859 in the Roman Catholic Church, which he had entered in 1842. Father Raymund Palmer is employed in antiquarian researches, chiefly relating to the history of his order in England, now being published in antiquarian journals. He has published "The History of the Town and Castle of Tamworth, in the Counties of Stafford and Warwick," in 1845; "Life of Beato Angelico da Fiesole, of the Order of Friar Preachers," a translation from the French of E. Cartier, with notes, in 1865; "The Dominican Tertiary's Guide," to which Fr. R. Rodolph Suffield also attached his name, 1866 (2nd edit. 1868); "The Life of Philip Thomas Howard, O.P., Cardinal of Norfolk, Grand Almoner to Catherine of Braganza, Queen-Consort of King Charles II., &c., with a Sketch of the Rise, Mission, and Influence of the Dominican Order, and of its Early History in England," in 1867; "The History and Antiquities of the Collegiate Church of Tamworth, in the County of Stafford," in 1871; "The History of the Baronial Family of Marmion," in 1875; "Obituary Notices of Dominicans from 1650," 1884; "The Catholic Registers of Woburn Lodge and Weybridge, and of Upton Court," privately printed in 1888 and 1889; and contributions to various periodicals, chiefly on antiquarian and historical subjects, several of which have been separately reprinted. His manuscript collection of documents concerning Tamworth, in 4 vols., is now in the British Museum; where also are reported the results of his researches in the archives of the Master-General of the Dominican Order, in 1881-82, at Rome, as far as England is concerned.

PALMER, Sir Charles Mark, Bart., M.P., Coal-owner and Shipbuilder, was born at South Shields in the year 1822, the son of Mr. George Palmer, a shipowner and merchant of Newcastle, and was educated in the school of Dr. Bruce, the historian of the "Roman Wall."

After preparing for a commercial career in France, he became a partner, first with his father, and shortly afterwards, in 1845, with Mr. John Bowes, M.P., Mr. (afterwards Sir William) Hutt, M.P., and Mr. Nicholas Wood (all since deceased) in coal mining and coke making, and extended their colliery operations from a small beginning up to a production of 1¾ million tons per annum. In the year 1851 Mr. Palmer conceived the idea of cheapening the transit of coal to London and other ports by the employment of steam collier vessels, which have since completely superseded the old sailing brigs of the north of England. He established the shipbuilding yard at Jarrow on the Tyne, where the first screw collier, the John Bowes, was launched in 1852. He has since developed the Jarrow works into the gigantic concern, now Palmer's Shipbuilding and Iron Company, Limited, which constructs an ocean steamer from the iron ore of its own Yorkshire mines, through all its processes into a complete ship. From these works the populous modern town of Jarrow originated. It obtained a charter of incorporation in 1875, Mr. Palmer being its first mayor. The Jarrow works have produced armour-plated and other vessels for H.M. Navy, and Mr. Palmer was the first to introduce rolled plates for men of war. Sir C. Palmer is a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant of the North Riding of Yorkshire, and of the county of Durham, is an Alderman and Magistrate of the borough of Jarrow, Lieut.-Colonel of the 1st Newcastle and Durham Engineer Volunteers, and is President of the Newcastle Chamber of Commerce. At the general election of 1874 he was returned M.P. in the Liberal interest for the Northern division of the county of Durham, which he continued to represent till the Reform Act of 1885, when on the redistribution of seats he was elected for the Jarrow division of the same county. After the dissolution of 1886 he was re-elected without opposition, and was again returned in 1892. He was created a baronet in 1886.

PALMER, The Ven. Edwin, D.D., is the fourth and youngest son of the late Rev. William Jocelyn Palmer, vicar of Mixbury, Oxfordshire, where he was born, July 18, 1824; and brother of Lord Selborne. From the Charterhouse he proceeded to the University of Oxford, was elected to a scholarship at Balliol College in 1841, and obtained the Hertford and Ireland University Scholarships and the Chancellor's Prize for Latin verse. He held a Fellowship at Balliol College from Nov. 29, 1845, till Sept. 19, 1867, acted as classical lecturer in the College for ten years, and as tutor for four. He was appointed Corpus Professor of the Latin Language and Literature in the University of Oxford, Feb. 26, 1870, in the room of the late Professor Conington. In Jan., 1878, he was appointed to the Archdeaconry of Oxford, rendered vacant by the death of the Ven. Charles Clerke; and in the same year (May 7) he was created D.D., and retired from the Corpus Professorship of Latin. He has published various Charges to the Clergy of his Archdiaconate.

PALMER, Edwin Mitford, C.M.G., born March 3, 1852, was educated at Lancing College, Sussex, and appointed to the Indian Financial Department in 1871. He proceeded to Egypt from India to take up the appointment of Director-General of Accounts in 1885; and was appointed Financial Adviser to H.H. the Khedive in 1889. He was created C.M.G. and Grand Officer of the Medjidieh in 1887.

PALMIERI, Luigi, was born at Faicchio (Benevento), on April 22, 1807, and began his studies in the seminary of Cajarro. He afterwards went to Naples, where he studied philosophy and natural science. Subsequently he devoted himself to the instruction of young men, and had a private school of philosophy and physics, where he had more than four hundred students. He has been Professor of Physics in the Marine College at Naples, and afterwards in the University. In the year 1860 he had the direction of the Vesuvian Observatory. He has devoted much attention to electricity and magnetism, and for use in the Vesuvian Observatory has designed several new instruments, especially two, one for the study of the variations in the amount and kind of atmospheric electricity; another was an electrical seismograph, of which two duplicates have been purchased for use in Japan. Full details of the observations upon the volcanic phenomena of Vesuvius are given in the various reports upon the observatory, published by Professor Palmieri.

PARIS, Gaston, a very distinguished French philologist, the son of Paulin Paris, was born at Avenay, Marne, Aug. 9, 1839. He was educated at Rollin College, and at the Universities of Bonn and Göttingen, and studied the Romance languages with Professor Diez. On his return to France he entered the École des Chartes, pursuing at the same time the study of law, and took the degree of Doctor-ès-lettres in 1865. On May 12, 1876, he was elected a member of the Academy of Inscriptions in the place of Guigniaut. Among other interesting and curious works he has published "Étude sur le rôle de l'accent latin dans la langue française," 1862; "De pseudo-Turpino," 1865; "Histoire poétique de Charlemagne," 1866; "Le Petit Poucet et la Grande Ourse," 1879; "La Poésie du moyen âge, leçons et lectures," 1888, 2nd edit. 1889; "La Littérature française du moyen âge," XI-XIV., 1888, 2nd edit. 1890. He has given editions of several old French works: "La Vie de Saint Alexis," 1872 and 1889; "Les Miracles de notre Dame par personnages," 1877; "Deux rédactions du Roman des sept Sages de Rome," 1879; "La Vie de Saint Gilles," 1881; "Merlin," 1886; "Trois rédactions de l'Evangile de Nicodème," 1889. He has founded, together with Paul Meyer, the Revue Critique, 1866, the Romania, 1872, and the Revue Historique. He was elected a member of the academies of Munich, Rome, Vienna, Turin, Berlin, &c. He was promoted officer of the Legion of Honour in 1886.

PARK, Edwards Amasa, D.D., LL.D., was born at Providence, Rhode Island, Dec. 29, 1808. He graduated at Brown University in 1826, and at Andover Theological Seminary in 1831, and was pastor of a Congregational church at Braintree, Massachusetts, 1831-34, when he became Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy and of Hebrew Literature at Amherst College. In 1836 he became Professor of Sacred Rhetoric at the Andover Theological Seminary. In 1847 he exchanged this chair for that of Christian Theology, and in 1881 was retired as Emeritus Professor. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Harvard in 1844, and by Brown University in 1846. Dr. Park has for many years been regarded as a representative of what is styled "New England Theology." He has been one of the editors of the Bibliotheca Sacra from its establishment in 1844. Besides numerous review articles, pamphlets, memoirs, and contributions to biblical and theological lexicons and cyclopædias, he has published "Selections from German Literature," 1839; "Writings of Rev. William B. Homer," 1842; "The Theology of the Intellect and of the Feelings," 1850; "The Rise of the Edwardean Theory of the Atonement," 1859; "Life of Leonard Woods," 1880; and "Discourses on Some Theological Doctrines as related to the Religious Character," 1885; and in connection with others "The Sabbath Hymn-Book," 1858; "Hymns and Choirs," 1861. His most elaborate contribution to the press has been his explanation of the Andover Theological Creed. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Harvard University in 1886.

PARKER, Joseph, D.D., a popular Congregational preacher, born April 9, 1830, at Hexham-on-Tyne, was educated at private seminaries and University College, London. He was pastor at Banbury, 1853-58; at Manchester, 1858-69; and settled in London in 1869. He built the City Temple at a cost of £70,000. He has been Chairman of the Lancashire Congregational Union; Chairman of the Manchester Congregational Board; Chairman of the London Congregational Board; and Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. Dr. Parker is the author of "The People's Bible" (25 vols.); "The Paraclete;" "Ecce Deus;" "Ad Clerum;" "Weaver Stephen;" "Springdale Abbey;" and many other works. In Nov., 1894, he wrote to the Times, to point out that the custom of reporting and publishing sermons is a form of literary piracy against which preachers should protect themselves. The Honorary Degree of D.D. was conferred on him by the University of Chicago.

PARKES, The Hon. Sir Henry, G.C.M.G., is the son of Thomas Parkes, a Warwickshire farmer, and was born at Stoneleigh, in that county, in 1815. He spent some years of his early life in South Wales, and was afterwards apprenticed to a mechanical trade in Birmingham, where he married in 1836. In 1839 he emigrated to Sydney, in Australia, and appears to have engaged in the ordinary pursuits of labour in that colony. We find him in 1848 taking an active part in the election of Mr. Robert Lowe (now Viscount Sherbrooke), as member of the local Legislature for the city of Sydney, and soon afterwards he established the Empire, a daily newspaper, which he conducted for seven years. In 1854 Mr. Parkes was elected to the Legislative Council for Sydney; and after the city was divided into separate electorates, he continued to represent the eastern division of the metropolis in parliament for several years. He accepted from the Government in 1861 the appointment of Commissioner for Emigration in England, and was in this country till the end of 1862. Soon after his return to the colony, he was re-elected to the Legislative Assembly; and in Jan., 1866, he took office as Colonial Secretary, and was the minister who passed the Public Schools Act of that year. Mr. Parkes was President of the Council of Education created by that Act, from Jan., 1867 until Oct., 1870. In May, 1872, he was entrusted by the Governor with the formation of a ministry, and he held office as Premier from that date until Feb., 1875. Mr. Parkes received, in 1874, the Gold Medal of the Cobden Club for his services in Australia to the cause of free trade. In March, 1877, he was commissioned by the Governor of New South Wales to form an administration, and became Premier for the second time. Being defeated in the Legislative Assembly in August, he advised his Excellency, Sir Hercules Robinson, to dissolve Parliament. In Dec., 1878, Sir Henry Parkes took office as Premier for the third time. During his third tenure of office he passed a new education law, the "Public Instruction Act of 1880;" and also a new Electoral Act, an act to regulate the liquor traffic and establish the principle of "local option," and other measures dealing with large questions. In Dec., 1881, Sir Henry Parkes left New South Wales, under medical advice, on a short visit to America and Europe. On this occasion he was entertained at a banquet by the two Houses of Parliament, and also at a second banquet by the citizens of Sydney. In America he was publicly entertained in San Francisco, Boston, New York, and Washington; and in England Sir Henry Parkes received a marked welcome from all classes, and a banquet was given in his honour with the Duke of Edinburgh in the chair. Sir Henry Parkes, on his return from this visit, was everywhere welcomed with the greatest enthusiasm, no fewer than 10,000 persons meeting him at the railway station in Sydney. In Jan., 1883, the Parkes ministry was defeated and retired, having been in office a little over four years, the longest term of power of any Australian ministry. In Jan., 1887, Sir Henry Parkes formed his fourth ministry, which continued in office until Jan., 1889. During this period he passed the Railway Act, and appointed the present Board of Railway Commissioners, and also the present Public Works Act, which contains some stringent provisions against wasteful expenditure and political patronage in the construction of public works. On the resignation of Sir Henry Parkes in 1889, Mr. Dibbs (now Sir Robert) formed a ministry to carry out a protectionist policy, which movement only lasted fifty days, when Sir Henry Parkes (March 8, 1889) was called upon to form his fifth ministry, which continued in office until Oct. 22, 1891. During his fifth ministry Sir Henry Parkes did much work in the cause of Australian federation. In 1890 a conference of all the colonies was held in Melbourne, which agreed to the Convention of the following year to frame a Federal Constitution, and he was elected President of the Convention. During the last two years he has done much work in the Federal cause. In June, 1877, her Majesty conferred upon him the rank of K.C.M.G.; and in Jan., 1888, he received from her Majesty the Grand Cross of the same order. In 1882, King Humbert conferred upon him the dignity of Commander of the Crown of Italy, in recognition of his services to a large number of the Italian emigrants who went out to New Ireland, and who arrived ultimately in Sydney in a state of great distress. A volume of "Speeches on various Occasions connected with the Public affairs of New South Wales, 1848-74, by Henry Parkes, with an Introduction by David Blair," was published at Melbourne in 1876; and a volume of his speeches on "The Federal Government of Australia" has been issued, and in 1892 the Messrs. Longmans published, in 2 vols., 8vo, "Fifty Years in the Making of Australian History," by Sir Henry Parkes.

PARKES, Mrs. W. B., née Amy Sedgwick, a popular actress, was born at Bristol, Oct. 27, 1835. After having passed through a training for the stage at an amateur theatre near London, she made her first public appearance in the summer of 1853, as Julia, in "The Hunchback," at the Richmond Theatre. Her performance, though not unsuccessful, did not give promise of the celebrity she afterwards attained. She returned to Bristol to accept a temporary engagement, and thence went to Cardiff, and caused so great a sensation by her Pauline in the "Lady of Lyons," that Mr. Moseley, the leader of a circuit which included the towns of Huddersfield, Halifax, and Bradford, offered her an engagement as his leading actress, which she accepted, and resigned at the end of a year. In 1855 Mr. John Knowles, the manager of the Manchester Theatre, secured her services for three seasons, and she drew crowded houses. In the summer of 1857 Mr. Buckstone engaged her for the Haymarket Theatre, where she made her appearance as Pauline, in "The Lady of Lyons," and afterwards appeared in an original part in "The Unequal Match." Miss Sedgwick has acted Lady Macbeth, Juliet, Rosalind, Ophelia, Peg Woffington, Lady Teazle, and many other characters. In 1858 she was married to W. B. Parkes, Esq., M.D., but was left a widow in 1863.

PARKINSON, Joseph Charles, born in London in 1833, obtained an appointment in Somerset House (Inland Revenue Department), in 1855, after the Civil Service Commission had been established by order in Council. He published in 1859, "Under Government," the first complete guide to the various departments of the Civil Service. This work, which ran through many editions, was followed in 1860 by a handbook of "Government Examinations." In 1864 Mr. Parkinson's abilities as a journalist were recognized by the Daily News, and for the next ten years he was one of the steadiest and most esteemed contributors to that journal, mainly on the abolition of public executions, poor-law reform, and the preservation of commons. In conjunction with the Duke of Westminster, the late Archbishop of York, the late Dr. Anstie and others, Mr. Parkinson worked by pen and speech to promote that reform in workhouse infirmaries which culminated in Mr. Gathorne Hardy's measure. In 1869 he visited Egypt as the guest of the Viceroy, and described for the Daily News the opening of the Suez Canal. He next visited India on a special mission for the telegraphic authorities, and published an account of his visit, "The Ocean Telegraph to India." Mr. Parkinson has of late years retired from journalism, and occupies himself in the direction of several well-known industrial and scientific enterprises.

PARR, Mrs. Louisa, was born in London, but spent the years of her early life in Cornwall. Her first venture into print was made in 1868, when a short story appeared under her name in Good Words, entitled, "How it all Happened." It was a slight story, but most gracefully told, and it at once attracted so much attention, that versions of it were published in several foreign languages, and it was reproduced in the Journal des Débats, notwithstanding the editor's general rule against the acceptance of translations. Upon her marriage, which took place in 1869, Mrs. Parr came to live in London, and the scene of her principal literary labours has been the charming house in Kensington, where she has ever since resided. "Dorothy Fox," Mrs. Parr's first three-volume novel, was published in 1870. This book gave a pleasing glimpse of Quaker life, and at once delighted the public with its well-drawn characters and bright, natural humour. In the United States it was as well received as in England, in proof of which it may be mentioned that an American publisher paid £300 for the advance sheets of her next story, "The Prescotts." A first collection of short stories was published in 1871, bearing the title of her first sketch "How it all Happened;" this was followed in 1874 by another series in two volumes called "The Gosau Smithy," which attracted some appreciative comments from the Spectator. "Adam and Eve," which came out at first as a serial, and was published in book form in 1880, marked an important advance on all previous efforts. A comparison between this work and "Dorothy Fox," its predecessor by ten years, shows at once how greatly Mrs. Parr's skill had ripened and matured in the interval. In "Adam and Eve," all trace of amateurishness had disappeared, and Mrs. Parr had become thoroughly mistress of her art. Every inch of the country round Polperro where her story was laid, was evidently known to her. With a few touches and a very little insistance she brings before us the wild, exciting life of the Cornish smuggler at the beginning of this century. "Robin" appeared in 1882; and "Loyalty George," her masterpiece, in 1888. In 1892 she published "The Squire," and in 1893 "Can this be Love?"

PARRY, Charles Hubert Hastings, M.A., Mus. Doc. Oxford, Honorary Mus. Doc. Cambridge, Professor of Musical History and Composition at the Royal College of Music (1883), Choragus of Oxford University (1884), is the son of T. Gambier Parry, of Highnam Court, in Gloucestershire, and was born at Bournmouth, Feb. 27, 1848. He went to Eton in 1861, working at harmony, &c., with Sir George Elvey, organist at Windsor, and made sufficient progress to pass the examination for the musical bachelor's degree at Oxford before leaving the school. He proceeded to Oxford in 1866, and in 1870 took a second class in Law and History. At intervals he worked at music, with Sir William Sterndale Bennett first, then with Sir G. A. Macfarren, and began to contribute to Sir George Grove's "Dictionary of Music." In 1873 he gave up business and devoted himself entirely to music. Amongst Mr. Parry's later compositions are "Studies of Great Composers" (Routledge); "Duo," in E minor, for two pianofortes; Fantasia-Sonata for pianoforte and violin; Sonata in A for pianoforte and violoncello; Trios for pianoforte and strings; Quartet; String Quartet in G, and String Quintet in E flat; Fantasia and Fugue for organ; Pianoforte Concerto; Variations on an original theme for pianoforte; Overture, "Guillem de Cabestanh;" Four Symphonies, and a Symphonic Suite; "Scenes from Shelley's Prometheus Unbound" (Gloucester Festival, 1880); "Music to the Birds of Aristophanes" (Cambridge, 1884); Ode for chorus and orchestra, "The glories of our blood and state;" an opera, "Lancelot and Guinevere;" Ode for eight-part chorus and orchestra, "Blest Pair of Sirens;" Oratorio, "Judith" (Birmingham Festival, 1888); "Ode for St. Cecilia's Day" (Leeds Festival, 1889); "L' Allegro ed Il Penseroso," a cantata (Norwich Festival, 1890); a fine setting of "De Profundis" (Hereford Festival, 1891). Since then he has produced his greatest oratorio, "Job." At the Birmingham Festival, in 1894, he produced "King Saul," another oratorio. In 1872 he married Lady Maude Herbert, with whose family he had been intimate since boyhood.

PARSONS, Alfred William, R.I., landscape painter, son of Joshua Parsons, M.R.C.S., was born at Beckington, in Somersetshire, Dec. 2, 1847, and educated at private schools. In 1865 he became a clerk in the Savings Bank Department of the General Post Office, drawing in the evening at Heatherley's and the South Kensington Art Schools. In 1867 he left the civil service and returned to Somersetshire and studied painting, working from nature, without masters. He was elected a member of the committee of the General Exhibition of Water-colour Drawings in 1879. On the dissolution of that Society, he, with the other members of the committee, joined the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours. His first picture exhibited in the Royal Academy was in 1871; his principal exhibited works since then have been "Fallen," Royal Academy, 1878; "The Ending of Summer," Royal Academy, 1879; "The Gathering Swallows," Grosvenor Gallery, 1880; "The Road to the Farm," Royal Academy, 1881; "The First Frost," Royal Academy, 1883; which afterwards obtained a "mention honorable" in the Paris Salon. "The Gladness of the May," Grosvenor Gallery, 1883; "After Work," Royal Academy, 1884; "Meadows by the Avon," Grosvenor Gallery, 1884; "In a Cider Country," Grosvenor Gallery, 1886 (engraved in mezzotint by F. Short), and a series of water-colour drawings illustrating the scenery of the Warwickshire Avon, which were exhibited by the Fine Art Society in the spring of 1885; "When Nature painted all Things Gay," exhibited in the Royal Academy, 1887, and purchased by the Council under the terms of the Chantrey bequest. Mr. Parsons received a Gold Medal for Water-colour, and Silver Medal for Oil painting, awarded to pictures exhibited at the Universal Exhibition, Paris, 1889, two medals for Oil and Water-colour painting at the International Exhibition at Chicago, 1893, and a Gold Medal (second class) at the International Exhibition of pictures at Munich in the same year. In 1892 he went to Japan, and the results of his stay of nine months in that country were exhibited at the galleries of the American Art Association in New York, at the St. Botolph Club in Boston, U.S.A., and at the Fine Art Society in London. Mr. Parsons has also worked in black and white. His principal illustrations have been done for "Old Songs" and "The Quiet Life" (in conjunction with Mr. E. A. Abbey), and for "The Warwickshire Avon," "Wordsworth's Sonnets," and "The Danube, from the Black Forest to the Black Sea," a journey made with Mr. F. D. Millet in 1891.

PASTEUR, Louis, chemist, born at Dôle, Jura, Dec. 27, 1822, entered the University in 1840, became a supernumerary Master of Studies at the College of Besançon, was received as a pupil in the École Normale in 1843, took the degree of Doctor in 1847, and was appointed Professor of Physic at the Faculty of Sciences, Strasburg, in 1848. At the end of 1854 he was intrusted, as Dean, with the organization of the newly created Faculty of Sciences at Lille, and in 1857 returned to Paris, and undertook the "scientific direction" of the École Normale. In Dec., 1863, he was appointed Professor of Geology, Physics, and Chemistry at the École des Beaux-Arts, and was elected a member of the Institute. The Royal Society of London, in 1856, awarded M. Pasteur the Rumford Medal for his researches relative to the polarization of light, &c. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour Aug. 12, 1853, was promoted to be an officer of that Order in 1863, and a commander in 1868. In 1869 he was elected one of the fifty foreign members of the Royal Society of London. M. Pasteur has written numerous works relating to chemistry, which have been favourably received, and for which, in 1861, he obtained the Jecker prize. His contributions have appeared in the "Recueil des Savants étrangers," and the "Annales de Chimie et de Physique," and he published in 1863, in a separate form, a work entitled "Nouvel Exemple de Fermentation déterminé par des Animalcules infusoires pouvant vivre sans Oxygène libre." In 1874 the National Assembly accorded to M. Pasteur, as a reward, chiefly for his investigations on fermentation, a life annuity of 12,000 francs. He was raised to the rank of Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour, Oct. 24, 1878. His reception into the French Academy took place April 27, 1882, when he delivered a panegyric on M. Littré, to whose chair he had succeeded. In the same year the council of the Society of Arts awarded the Albert Medal of the society to M. Pasteur for his researches in connection with fermentation, the preservation of wines, and the propagation of zymotic diseases in silkworms and domestic animals. Of late years, M. Pasteur has devoted himself to the study of inoculation for diseases other than small-pox, and has achieved some very remarkable results in the prevention of hydrophobia; patients from all parts of Europe, and even from America, travel to Paris to put themselves under his care. Large subscriptions have been raised in France to form an "Institut Pasteur," where the methods of the great discoverer may be practised and taught. On July 1, 1889, a meeting was convened at the Mansion House for the purpose of hearing statements by Sir James Paget and others, in favour of establishing a Pasteur Institute in England. The Prince of Wales contributed 100 guineas towards that object. The Cholera epidemic of 1892 led M. Pasteur to institute experiments in anti-choleraic vaccination, which proved successful in the case of animals. On Dec. 27, 1892, M. Pasteur's seventieth birthday was enthusiastically celebrated before a representative official assembly at the Sorbonne.

PATMORE, Coventry Kearsey Deighton, born at Woodford, Essex, July 23, 1823, is the son of the late P. G. Patmore, author of "Literary Reminiscences." In 1846, he was appointed one of the Assistant Librarians of the British Museum, but he ceased to be connected with that institution about 1868. Mr. Patmore, who made his first appearance as an author with a volume of Poems in 1844, has written "Tamerton Church Tower, and other Poems," published in 1853; an elaborate domestic poem, "The Angel in the House," in four parts—the Betrothal, the Espousal, Faithful for Ever, and the Victories of Love, in 1854-62; and a selection entitled "The Children's Garland," in 1862; "The Unknown Eros," 1877; a memoir of Barry Cornwall; and "Amelia, &c.," 1878. He has contributed to the Edinburgh and North British Reviews, and to the Pall Mall Gazette, while it was under Mr. Greenwood's editorship.

PATON, Sir Joseph Noel, R.S.A., LL.D., born at Dunfermline, Fifeshire, in 1821, was admitted a student of the Royal Academy of London in 1843, and first became known to the public by his outline etchings illustrative of Shakespeare and Shelley. His fresco of the "Spirit of Religion" gained one of the three premiums awarded at the Westminster Hall competition of 1845, and his oil-pictures of "Christ Bearing the Cross," and "Reconciliation of Oberon and Titania"—the former of colossal size, the latter small—jointly gained a prize, in the second class, of £300, in 1847. The latter picture, prior to its exhibition in London, was bought by the Royal Scottish Academy for the Scottish National Gallery, and "The Quarrel of Oberon and Titania," painted in 1849, and purchased for £700, also for the Scottish National Gallery, by the Association for the Promotion of the Fine Arts in Scotland, was exhibited in the Paris Exhibition of 1855, where it received honourable mention. Amongst his numerous pictures and sketches from the works of the poets, may be mentioned "Dante meditating the Episode of Francesca," 1852; and "The Dead Lady," 1854. His large allegory, since engraved, "The Pursuit of Pleasure," 1855; "Home," which has been engraved, and of which a replica was executed by command of Her Majesty, was at the Royal Academy Exhibition in 1856; "In Memoriam," which has been engraved, and of which a photograph was executed for the Queen, 1858; and "Dawn: Luther at Erfurt," considered by many his finest work, 1861. Mr. Noel Paton executed, in the spring of 1860, a series of six pictures illustrative of the old border ballad, "The Dowie Dens of Yarrow," painted for the Association for the promotion of the Fine Arts in Scotland. It was engraved by that body for their subscribers. In 1863 he executed illustrations of "The Ancient Mariner," for the Art Union of London; and in 1866 painted "Mors Janua Vitæ" (engraved). He was appointed the Queen's Limner for Scotland in 1865, and received the honour of knighthood April 12, 1867. In the latter year appeared "A Fairy Raid," and in 1868 "Caliban listening to the Music." Of his subsequent pictures the more important are, "Faith and Reason," 1871 (engraved); "Christ and Mary at the Sepulchre," and "Oskold and the Elle-Maids," 1873; "Satan watching the Sleep of Christ," 1874; "The Man of Sorrows," 1875; "The Spirit of Twilight," and "Christ the Great Shepherd," 1876; and "The Man with the Muck-rake," 1877. He is the author of two volumes of poems, and in 1876 received from the University of Edinburgh the honorary degree of LL.D.

PATTERSON, The Right Rev. James Laird, Bishop of Emmaus, born in London, Nov. 6, 1822, was educated in Germany, and at Trinity College, Oxford. From 1845 to 1849 he was curate of St. Thomas's, Oxford, but in 1850 he entered the Romish Church, and for eleven years was attached to St. Mary's, Moorfields. In 1865 he was appointed Honorary Chamberlain to the Pope, and Domestic Prelate in 1872. In 1880 he was consecrated Titular Bishop of Emmaus, as an auxiliary for Westminster, and was given the rectorship of St. Mary's, Chelsea, in 1881. Mgr. Patterson is the editor of a new edition of Mr. J. F. Maguire's "Pius the Ninth," 1878.

PATTI, Adelina Maria Clorinda. See NICOLINI, MADAME.

PATTON, Francis Landey, D.D., LL.D., was born at Warwick, Bermuda, Jan. 22, 1843. His family removed to Canada while he was a boy, and he was educated at University College, Toronto; studying theology later at Knox College, Toronto, and at the Princeton (New York) Theological Seminary, from the latter of which he graduated in 1865. From 1865-67 he was pastor of the Eighty-fourth Street Church in New York; 1867-71, of the Presbyterian Church in Nyack, New York; 1871-72, of the South Presbyterian Church in Brooklyn, New York; and 1874-81, of the Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church in Chicago. He edited the Interior, a denominational Chicago paper, from 1873 to 1876, and was Professor of Didactic and Polemic Theology in the Presbyterian Theological Seminary of the Northwest, Chicago, 1871-81. While at Chicago his successful prosecution of Professor David Swing for heterodoxy brought him into general prominence as a theological writer and speaker, and procured him the appointment, in 1881, to the Stuart Professorship of the Relation of Philosophy and Science to the Christian Religion, a chair especially founded for him at the Princeton Seminary. In addition to filling the duties of that department, he also lectured on ethics before the College of New Jersey (to which the Seminary is attached), and in 1885 was made a Professor of the College on that subject. On the resignation of the Presidency of the College by Dr. McCosh, Dr. Patton was chosen to succeed him, and he assumed the office in June, 1888. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Hanover College, Indiana, in 1872, and that of LL.D. by Wooster University, Ohio, in 1878, and by Harvard University in 1889. Besides his work on the Interior, he was for a number of years associate editor of both the Presbyterian Review and the New Princeton Review, and he has been a voluminous contributor to magazines and papers. His published works include "The Inspiration of the Scriptures," 1865; "A Summary of Christian Doctrine," 1874; and "The Doctrine of a Future Retribution."

PAUNCEFOTE, Sir Julian, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., third son of the late Robert Pauncefote, Esq., of Preston Court, Gloucestershire, was born at Munich, Sept. 13, 1828, and educated in Paris, Geneva, and at Marlborough College. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1852, and joined the Oxford circuit. He was appointed Attorney-General of Hong-Kong in May, 1865, and acted as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court in 1869, and again in 1872. He received the thanks of the Executive and Legislative Councils of Hong-Kong for his services to the Colony, and, in 1874, was knighted by patent. He was appointed Chief Justice of the Leeward Islands in 1873, and in 1874 Legal Assistant Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies. In 1876 he was appointed Assistant (Legal) Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. He was created a C.B. and a K.C.M.G. in 1880, and in 1882 he succeeded the late Lord Tenterden as Permanent Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. In 1885 he received the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. In 1888 Sir Julian succeeded Lord Sackville as British Minister at Washington. In 1892 he received the Grand Cross of the Bath for his diplomatic services, and in 1893 he was raised to the rank of Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the United States. On Nov. 21, 1894, during a visit home, Sir Julian Pauncefote was sworn of the Privy Council.

PAYN, James, was born at Cheltenham in 1830. He was educated at Eton, Woolwich Academy, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1854. At that date he had already published a volume of verse, called "Stories from Boccaccio," and the next year he published another book of "Poems." In 1854 he began to write for the Westminster Review, and constantly contributed to Household Words, until, in 1858, he succeeded Mr. Leitch Ritchie as editor of Chambers's Journal, for which magazine he wrote exclusively for many years. In Chambers's came out his first novel, "A Family Scapegrace," and, a few years afterwards, "Lost Sir Massingberd," a story which is said to have raised the circulation of the Journal by nearly 20,000. Mr. Payn's novels became afterwards very numerous, and his popularity a growing one, till he wrote "By Proxy," in which he may be said to have taken a new departure. This novel of incident in China achieved another extraordinary success. With "High Spirits," a collection of stories of a different kind, he was hardly less fortunate. In addition to his works of fiction, Mr. James Payn frequently contributes essays of a humorous type to the Nineteenth Century and the Times A collection of such essays, from these two periodicals, was published in London under the title of "Some Private Views." His works, according to the British Museum Catalogue, extend to upwards of a hundred volumes. In 1882 Mr. Payn succeeded Mr. Leslie Stephen as editor of the Cornhill Magazine. In 1888 he began to write a series of weekly notes, under the heading "My Notebook," for the Illustrated London News. Subjoined is a list of some of Mr. Payn's books: "Lost Sir Massingberd," "A Perfect Treasure," "Bentinck's Tutor," "A County Family," "At Her Mercy," "A Woman's Vengeance," "Cecil's Tryst," "The Clyffards of Clyffe," "The Family Scapegrace," "The Foster Brothers," "Found Dead," "The Best of Husbands," "Walter's Word," "Halves," "Carlyon's Year," "One of the Family," "Fallen Fortunes," "What He Cost Her," "Gwendoline's Harvest," "Humorous Stories," "Like Father, Like Son," "A Marine Residence," "Married Beneath Him," "Mirk Abbey," "Not Wooed, but Won," "Two Hundred Pounds Reward," "Less Black than We're Painted," "Murphy's Master," "By Proxy," "Under One Roof," "High Spirits," "A Grape from a Thorn," "For Cash Only," "Kit: a Memory," "Thicker than Water," "The Talk of the Town," "The Luck of the Darrells," "The Heir of the Ages," "A Prince of the Blood," "The Mystery of Mirbridge," "The Burnt Million," "The Word and the Will," and, in 1886, an amusing volume entitled "Some Literary Recollections." Recently (1894) he has published "Gleams of Memory," which is autobiographical.

PEACOCK, Edward, F.S.A., of Bottesford Manor, near Brigg, and of Dunstan House, Kirton-in-Lindsey, Lincolnshire, born at Hemsworth in Yorkshire, Dec. 22, 1831, was educated by private tutors. He was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries in 1857, and appointed a Justice of Peace for the Parts of Lindsey, in the county of Lincoln, in 1869. Mr. Peacock is the author of "Ralph Skirlaugh," 3 vols., 1870; "Mabel Heron," 3 vols., 1872; "John Markenfield," 3 vols., 1874; "Narcissa Brendon," 2 vols., 1891; editor of "Army List of Roundheads and Cavaliers," 1863, second edition, enlarged, 1874; "English Church Furniture at the Period of the Reformation: a list of goods destroyed in Lincolnshire Churches," 1866; "Instructions for Parish Priests, by John Myrc" (Early Eng. Text Soc.), 1868; "A List of the Roman Catholics in the County of York, in 1604," 1872; "France, the Empire and Civilization," 1873—published without the author's name; "A Glossary of Words used in the Wapentakes of Manley and Corringham, Lincolnshire" (English Dialect Soc.), 1877; second edit., much enlarged, 2 vols., 1889; "Index to English Speaking Students who have Graduated at Leyden University" (Index Soc.), 1883; "The Monckton Papers" (Philobiblion Society), 1885; and many papers in The Archæologia, The Journal of the Royal Archæological Institute, and The Dublin Review.

PEARD, Frances Mary, daughter of Commander George Shuldham Peard, R.N., born at Exminster, Devon, writer of novels and stories, of which the following is a brief list: "One Year," 1868; "Unawares," 1870; "The Rose Garden;" "Cartouche;" "Mother Molly;" "Contradictions;" "Near Neighbours;" "The Baroness;" "Paul's Sister;" "The Swing of the Pendulum;" "The Country Cousin;" "Madame's Granddaughter," &c.

PEARS, Edwin, was born in 1835, at York. He graduated in the University of London, being first in honours, Roman Law, and Jurisprudence, and was called to the bar at the Middle Temple in 1870. He was General Secretary of the Social Science Association from 1868 to 1873, and Secretary to the International Prison Congress of 1872. In the Transactions of the former Society he published "Prisons and Reformatories at Home and Abroad." Mr. Pears is now the most prominent practitioner at the English Bar in Constantinople, whence, as Correspondent of the Daily News, he sent the letters which first called the attention of Europe to the Moslem atrocities committed in Bulgaria in May, 1876. The first two of these letters, having attracted attention in Parliament, and their statements being disputed by Mr. Disraeli, were published in the first important blue-book on the Eastern Question. Mr. Pears is the first newspaper correspondent who took up the ground that the interest of England in the Ottoman Empire will be best forwarded by helping the Christian races as representing the progressive element of the empire, rather than the Turks, whom he regards as doomed, from natural causes, to disappear as a ruling race, and as being able to contribute nothing of value towards European civilization.

PEARSE, The Rev. Mark Guy, a celebrated Wesleyan minister and author, was born at Camborne in 1842, and his early life was spent in Cornwall. In 1861 he became a student at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, but subsequently entered the Wesleyan ministry, and was stationed at Leeds, Brixton, Ipswich, Bedford, Highbury, Westminster, and is now, jointly with the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, conducting the London Wesleyan Mission at St. James's Hall. As a preacher and lecturer he has few equals; and for quiet humour, deep insight into character, and loving homely sympathy with the religious poor, his little book, "Dan'l Quorm and his Religious Notions," has never been surpassed. It was published in 1874, and has passed through many editions.

PEARSON, Right Hon. Sir Charles John, Dean of Faculty, is the second son of Charles Pearson, .C.A., .of Edinburgh, by Margaret, daughter of John Dalziel, of Earlston, N.B., and was born in 1843. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy, St. Andrews University, and Corpus College, Oxon., and took his M.A. degree in 1868. He is a Member of the Faculty of Advocates in Edinburgh; was called to the Bar (Inner Temple) in 1870; was Sheriff of Chancery in Scotland in 1885-88; Procurator for the Church of Scotland, 1886-90; Sheriff of Renfrew and Bute, 1888; Sheriff of Perthshire in 1889; Solicitor-General for Scotland; M.P. for the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews, 1890; Lord Advocate of Scotland and Privy Councillor, 1891; Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, 1892. He received the honour of knighthood in 1887; and married, in 1873, Elizabeth, daughter of M. G. Hewat, Esq., of Norwood.

PEARSON, John Loughborough, R.A., architect, is descended from old Durham families, possessors of property in that county. His grandfather was a leading solicitor in the city of Durham; and his father a painter. At the age of fourteen he was placed in the office of Mr. Ignatius Bonomi, architect at Durham, with whom he continued for some years as a pupil and as an assistant; afterwards he came to London. In 1850 he was engaged in building, for the late Archdeacon Bentinck, Holy Trinity Church in Westminster, at the foot of Vauxhall Bridge, a work which attracted the admiration of the late Sir Charles Barry, of Augustus Welby Pugin, Sir Gilbert Scott, Mr. Salvin, and other leading men. In 1860 he built the schools of St. Peter's, Vauxhall, for Canon Gregory, of which the Prince of Wales laid the foundation stone, it being the first occasion the Prince performed this ceremony. In the following year the church was begun, a building remarkable in many ways, but principally by being groined throughout with stone and brick, the first modern instance of this treatment. Mr. Pearson is the architect of Lincoln Cathedral, an appointment he has now held for eighteen years; of the new Truro Cathedral, the Choir and Transept of which are completed; of Peterborough Cathedral, and of Westminster Abbey, since Sir Gilbert Scott's death. He has also restored the buildings on the west side of Westminster Hall. Mr. Pearson has been for many years a Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and one of the Consulting Architects of the Incorporated Church Building Society, and since 1853 he has been a Fellow of the Royal Antiquarian Society. In 1874 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and in 1880 was elected a full member. He obtained the Gold Medal at the Paris Exhibition, and was also made a Knight of the Legion of Honour. He has also received the Queen's Gold Medal of the Royal Institute of British Architects. He is the Architect for St. George's Chapel, Windsor; Bristol Cathedral; Exeter Cathedral; and for Rochester Cathedral. He has also made a design for the Cathedral at Brisbane. The new building lately added to the University Library at Cambridge is also his; and he has added considerably to Sidney Sussex College.

PEASE, Sir Joseph Whitwell, Bart., son of the late Joseph Pease, a well-known coal and ironstone mine owner of Darlington, by Emma, daughter of the late Joseph Gurney of Norwich, was born in 1828, and privately educated. In 1865 he was elected in the Liberal interest for South Durham, which constituency he represented until 1885, when he was elected for the Barnard Castle Division of the county. In 1886 he was re-elected without a contest, and in 1892 he was again returned at the head of the poll. He is a D.L. and J.P. for the County of Durham, and D.L. and J.P. for the North Riding of Yorkshire; Deputy-Chairman of the North-Eastern Railway, and the owner of coal and ironstone mines in Durham and Yorkshire. He was created a baronet in 1882. Sir Joseph is a member of the Society of Friends, and President of the Peace and Anti-Opium Societies. In Parliament he has rendered valuable services in all questions connected with trade and commerce, and especially with the coal and iron industries of the North of England. Though a follower of Mr. Gladstone, he spoke against the Berber-Suakin Railway scheme; and in a very short time facts gave a melancholy justification of his common-sense prophecies. In 1854 he married Mary, daughter of the late Alfred Fox, Esq., of Falmouth, who died in 1892. His eldest son, Mr. Alfred E. Pease, was Liberal member for the City of York from 1885 to 1892.

PEEL, The Right Hon. Arthur Wellesley, D.C.L., M.P., Speaker of the House of Commons, is the youngest son of the late Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, and was born in 1829. He was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, and in 1865 first entered Parliament for Warwick, which he has continued to represent till 1885, when he was elected for Warwick and Leamington, which he still represents. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Poor Law Board from Dec. 1868, to Jan. 1871; Secretary to the Board of Trade from 1871 to 1873; Patronage Secretary to the Treasury, 1873-74; and Under-Secretary to the Home Department for nine months in 1880. On the retirement of Sir Henry Brand in 1884, Mr. Peel was elected Speaker, and has continued to hold the post amid general expressions of goodwill from all parties. After the dissolution of 1886, he was proposed as Speaker by Lord R. Churchill, and seconded by Mr. Gladstone, and in 1892 was again elected to that post. He was made D.C.L. Oxford on June 22, 1887. As we go to press (March, 1895), Mr. Peel's final retirement from the Speaker's chair is announced.

PEEL, The Right Hon. Sir Frederick, P.C., K.C.M.G., second son of the late Sir Robert Peel, born in London, Oct. 26, 1823, and educated at Harrow and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was first class in classics; was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1849, and returned as one of the members in the Liberal interest for Leominster in Feb. 1849; was elected for Bury in July, 1852, and having been defeated at the general election in March, 1857, was again returned by this constituency at the general election in April, 1859, but was defeated at the general election in July, 1865. He was Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies from Nov. 1851, till March, 1852, in Lord Russell's first Administration; held the same post in the coalition Administration under Lord Aberdeen; was Under-Secretary for War in Lord Palmerston's first Administration in 1855, and resigned in 1857; and was Secretary to the Treasury from 1860 till 1865. He is a Deputy-Lieutenant for Warwickshire; was sworn a Privy Councillor in 1857; and nominated a Knight-Commander of the Order of SS. Michael and George in 1869. He was appointed President of the Railway Commission in 1873.

PEEL, The Right Hon. Sir Robert, Bart., G.C.B., P.C., eldest son of the late Sir Robert Peel, second bart., born May 4, 1822, was educated at Harrow and at Christ Church, Oxford, and entered the diplomatic service. He was Attaché to the British Embassy at Madrid from June, 1844, till May, 1846, when he was appointed Secretary to the British Legation in Switzerland; became Chargé d'Affaires in Nov. 1846, and retired in Dec. 1850. He was a Lord of the Admiralty from Feb. 1855, till May, 1857, and was Chief Secretary for Ireland from July, 1861, till Dec. 1865. He acted as Secretary to the Special Mission to Russia, at the coronation of Alexander II., in 1865. Sir R. Peel was returned one of the members, in the Liberal interest, for Tamworth, soon after the death of his father, whom he succeeded in the baronetcy, July 2, 1850, and retained the seat till March, 1880. He was sworn a Privy Councillor July, 1861, and made a G.C.B. Jan. 5, 1866. He took a prominent part in the debates of the House of Commons, especially on Irish questions, and subjects affecting the foreign policy of the country. He sat as a Conservative for Huntingdon in 1884-5, and for Blackburn from 1885-6. At the general election of 1886 he stood as a Home Ruler for Inverness Burghs, but was defeated by Mr. R. B. Finlay, Unionist. Sir R. Peel married a daughter of the Marquis of Tweeddale, and sister of the Dowager Duchess of Wellington.

PEILE, John, Litt.D., was born April 24, 1838, at Whitehaven, in Cumberland, the son of Williamson Peile, F.G.S. He was educated at Repton and at St. Bees' Grammar School. He entered Christ's College, Cambridge, in Oct., 1856, and was elected a Scholar in 1857. He obtained the Craven University Scholarship in 1859; was bracketed Senior Classic in 1860, and also Chancellor's Medallist. In the same year he was elected to a Fellowship and to a College Lectureship; in the following year he became Assistant Tutor. He was appointed Teacher in Sanskrit in the University in 1865; this office was abolished in 1867 on the establishment of a Professorship, for which Mr. Peile was not a candidate. In 1866 he vacated his Fellowship by marriage, but was re-elected in 1867 under a special statute for the election of viri insignes, although disqualified by marriage to hold an ordinary Fellowship. In 1870 he was appointed Tutor, which office he held till 1884, when he was appointed Reader in Comparative Philology. In 1887 he succeeded Dr. Swainson in the Mastership of Christ College. He was B.A. in 1860; M.A., 1863; Litt.D., 1864, and received the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters from Trinity College, Dublin, in 1892. In 1869 he published an "Introduction to Greek and Latin Etymology," which went through three editions, and had a large sale in England and America; it has long been out of print. In 1875 he brought out a "Primer of Philology," which has also been much used; and in 1881, "Notes to the Story of Nala" (Sanskrit). He has also contributed largely to different periodicals. He has taken a considerable share in University business. He was elected to the Council of the Senate in 1874, and, except during two years (1878-80), he has served on it ever since; in this capacity he took part in the alteration of the University Statutes of 1882. He was appointed Vice-Chancellor in 1891, and was re-appointed in 1892. In this capacity he endeavoured to bring about a better relation between the University and the Town of Cambridge, by seeking some modification of exceptional powers possessed by the University. He has been a member of numerous syndicates; among these may be mentioned that which remodelled the Classical Tripos in 1872; and also that which again reconstructed it in 1881; also two which dealt with the course for the ordinary B.A. degree. He has also served on the General Board of Studies, on the Financial Board, and on many others. He is President of the syndicate which conducts the Cambridge Local Examinations and the Local Lectures of the University Extension. He was one of the earliest promoters of Women's Education at Cambridge, and is President of the Council of Newnham College. He is a Governor of Repton School.

PELHAM, Henry Francis, born at Bergh Apton, Norfolk, in 1846, is the eldest son of the Hon. and Right Rev. John Thomas Pelham, Bishop of Norwich. He was educated at Harrow, and at Trinity College, Oxford; and obtained a first class in the Final Classical Schools, and a Fellowship at Exeter College, in the year 1869, and the Chancellor's Prize for an English Essay in 1870. He was elected Proctor in 1879, Reader in Ancient History in 1887, and Camden Professor of Ancient History in 1889. He is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, a Member of the Council of the Hellenic Society, and one of the Governors of Harrow School. He is the author of numerous articles in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," Smith's "Dictionary of Antiquities," the "Journal of Philology," and the Classical Review. In 1890 he published "The Imperial Domains and the Colonate," and in 1893, "Outlines of Roman History."

PEMBROKE, Earl of, George Robert Charles Herbert, eldest son of the Lord Herbert of Lea (Sidney Herbert), was born July 6, 1850, and educated at Eton. From 1867 to 1870 he travelled in New Zealand and Australia, and the South Seas, and wrote, conjointly with Dr. George Kingsley, "South Sea Bubbles," 1871, and "Roots," in 1872, besides various articles. From 1874–5, in Mr. Disraeli's Government, he was Under-Secretary of State for War, but was obliged to resign on account of ill-health. Since that time he has not taken a prominent part in politics.

PENDER, Sir John, G.C.M.G., F.R.S. (Edinb. and Lond.), F.S.A. (Scotland), J.P., D.L., second son of the late James Pender, of Vale of Leven, Dumbartonshire, was born in 1816. Sir John had the advantage of early education, and of good Scottish parents, who passed him on expeditiously from the school of his native place in the Vale of Leven to the High

School of Glasgow, where he may be said to have had a free choice of any profession or trade to which chance might lead him and to which learning was a necessary passport. While at the High School, he was observed to occupy much time in drawing, and on an occasion of free competition, submitted a design for which he was awarded a Gold Medal. On leaving school he went into the accounting branch of a factory, and in two or three years (about the time he had attained majority) he was general manager of the business. The life of Sir John divides itself from this point into two parts—(1) as a merchant in Glasgow and Manchester, and (2) as introducer, executant, and extender of submarine and sub-oceanic telegraphy. In Manchester Sir John rose to the front rank in the export trade of that vast emporium of manufacture, and there laid the foundation of his still more conspicuous course in telegraphy, not only as regards ample personal means for a work that was to task the richest men, but also a thorough commercial knowledge of India, China, America, and the colonies, combined with a lofty faith in the possibilities of British enterprise. When the immense Atlantic project was undertaken he was one of the 345 who contributed £1,000 each to let the experiment be tried. His name appears from that time in the list of directors of the Atlantic Company over seven or eight years, during which cable after cable had failed. The final crisis of Atlantic prospects came when the ship "Great Eastern" steamed out, with capacity far greater than any other ship before or since, and a cable more nearly perfect than had before been made; yet the great ship parted with this precious cargo in mid-ocean, and the Atlantic Company was financially ruined. Its appeals to the public for subscription of capital had hitherto fallen flat; they were now utterly useless. But not so thought Sir John Pender, and others like him, as to the attainable undertaking, and the Anglo-American Company (of £600,000) was then formed to lay a new cable and to recover the former if possible. Negotiations with Glass, Elliot and Company and the Gutta Percha Company, therefore had been under arrangement. But difficulties arose between the two manufacturing companies. The Gutta Percha Company found that it was surrendering its accustomed business in favour of a supreme object, and in the failure of that one purpose might lose all. It was here that the genius of Sir John Pender rose to heroism. Delay would have been fatal to an Atlantic cable, and to all the capital, approaching two millions, that had been expended. The Gutta Percha Company were asked by Sir John what amount of guarantee they required. "A quarter of a million sterling" was the answer. "Will you take my personal guarantee for that amount?" "Yes." "Well, you have it." And in a few weeks more, Glass, Elliot and Company and the Gutta Percha Company were formed into the Cable Construction and Maintenance Company, with Sir John as Chairman. The cable was not only successful—luckily for Sir John and the world—but the same expedition that laid it, recovered the one that had been lost; and the two companies, Atlantic and Anglo-American, were brought back successfully to life and land. This result would have been enough to crown the adventures of any one man, but Sir John had no sooner seen the Atlantic cables established than he proceeded to work indefatigably in the organisation and development of the Mediterranean, Eastern (Indian and China), Australian, South African, and direct African cables—in short, a world system, of which the American is now but a segment. Sir John is now at the head of the Eastern, the Eastern Extension, the Cape, and other systems outside the Atlantic—in fact, he is virtually the dominant spirit of all submarine telegraphy. He is chairman of the Direct Company, having a cable across the Atlantic also; and his influence is present in all directions where submarine telegraphy is active, and in these days it is difficult to say where it is not active. Sir John Pender was a merchant in London, Glasgow, and Manchester; he is a D.L. for Lancashire and Middlesex; a J.P. for Middlesex, Manchester, Lancashire, Denbighshire, and Argyllshire. He published, in 1869, "Statistics of the Trade of the United Kingdom with Foreign Countries from 1840;" was member for Totnes 1862-66, and was first returned for Wick Burghs in 1872, which he represented in three Parliaments till 1885. In 1892 he was again returned for Wick Burghs. Sir John has shown great interest in technical education, and gives a Medal annually to be competed for by the students at the College of Science, Glasgow. On the occasion of a visit to Constantinople, Sir John Pender was sent for by the Sultan, and, in recognition of the great part he had played in connection with submarine telegraphy, his Imperial Majesty presented Sir John with the Grand Cordon of the Medjidieh. This is the highest honour the Sultan can grant to an alien. Sir John, many years ago, was the recipient of the Knight-Commandership of the St. Saviour of Greece, and has also the order of the Rose of Portugal. He is also a Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. He married, first, 1840, Marion, daughter of Jas. Cearns, Esq.; second, Emma, daughter of the late Henry Denison, Esq., of Daybrook, Notts.

PENNELL, Henry Cholmondeley, eldest son of Sir Charles Henry Pennell, was born in 1838. He entered the public service about 1853, and after serving in various departments of the Admiralty, Whitehall, was appointed one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Fisheries in 1866. In Jan., 1875, he was selected by the English Government, at the request of the Khedive of Egypt, to initiate and assist in carrying out various important commercial reforms, and was afterwards nominated Director-General of Commerce for the Interior. Mr. Pennell made his first mark in literature in "Puck on Pegasus," 1861—a book which attracted considerable notice, and has since gone through many editions. His other poetical works are "Crescent," 1866; "Modern Babylon," 1873; "The Muses of Mayfair," 1874; "Pegasus Re-saddled," 1877 (the two last-named subsequently formed two of the volumes of "The Mayfair Library"); and "From Grave to Gay," 1885. During 1864-65 he edited the Fisherman's Magazine and Review, and afterwards the Angling Department of the Sporting Gazette, whilst contributing to the literature of angling and ichthyology a number of very successful works, of which the most important are: "The Angler-Naturalist," 1864 (2 editions); "The Book of the Pike," 1866 (4 editions); the "Modern Practical Angler," 1873 (5 editions); "The Badminton Library of Sport," 1885; "Salmon and Trout" (6 editions); "Pike and other Coarse Fish" (5 editions); "The Sporting Fish of Great Britain," 1886; "Modern Improvements in Fishing Tackle and Fish-hooks," 1887. Of this author's less known contributions to angling and ichthyology, may be instanced: "How to Spin for Pike," 1862; "Fishing Gossip," 1867; "Oyster Legislation," 1868; "The Oyster and Mussel Fisheries of France," 1868; "Oyster Fisheries and Legislation, a reprint of Letters to the Times," 1875; also, in 1875, a series of angling manuals in a popular form, viz.: "Fly-fishing and Worm-fishing for Salmon, Trout, and Grayling;" "Float Fishing;" "Trolling for Pike, Salmon, and Trout;" these have since passed through numerous editions. Mr. Pennell has contributed to Punch, the Athenæum, the Field, Fishing Gazette, &c., and more recently to Temple Bar, Longman's Magazine, and other periodicals.

PENROSE, F. C., was born at Bracebridge Vicarage, near Lincoln, in Oct., 1817. His father was the Rev. John Penrose, formerly of Corpus College, Oxford, and his mother was a daughter of the Rev. Edmund Cartwright, D.D., F.R.S. After four years at Bedford Grammar School, he entered the foundation at Winchester College. On leaving Winchester, he became a pupil of Edward Blore, architect; and afterwards entered Magdalene College, Cambridge, and graduated there in 1842. For three years he held the appointment of Travelling Bachelor to the University of Cambridge. In 1851 he brought out, for the Society of Dilettanti, a work entitled "The Principles of Athenian Architecture," of which a second edition has been published. In the following year he was appointed Surveyor of the Fabrick to St. Paul's Cathedral. Mr. Penrose published, in 1869, a work named "A Method of Predicting Occultations of Stars and Solar Eclipses by Graphical Construction." The Royal Gold Medal of the Institute of British Architects was presented to him in 1883. In 1885 he was elected an Honorary Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge, and, in 1886, was appointed Director of the British Archæological School at Athens. During 1893 he contributed to the "Transactions of the Royal Society" a paper on certain astronomical facts connected with the orientation of Greek temples.

PENZANCE (Lord), The Right Hon. James Plaisted Wilde, P.C., 1st Baron, born in London, July 12, 1816, is the fourth son of the late Edward Archer Wilde, Esq., and nephew of the late Lord Truro. He received his education at Winchester College, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1838, and M.A. in 1842. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1839, and devoted his attention to mercantile and marine law, and went the Northern Circuit. He was appointed Junior Counsel to the Excise and Customs in 1840, Queen's Counsel in 1855, Counsel to the Duchy of Lancaster in 1859, and a Baron of the Exchequer in April, 1860, when he received the honour of knighthood. In 1863 he succeeded Sir Cresswell Cresswell as Judge of the Court of Probate, and Judge Ordinary of the Divorce Court, appointments which he retained until 1872, when he resigned owing to ill-health. He was sworn a Privy Councillor in July, 1864, and created a peer of the United Kingdom April 6, 1869, since which time he has sat as a member of the Final Court of Appeal in the House of Lords. In June, 1875, he was appointed Judge under the Public Worship Regulation Act (Dean of Arches), and Judge of the Provincial Courts of Canterbury and York. He unsuccessfully contested Leicester in the Liberal interest in 1852, and Peterborough in 1857. He was a Member of the Commission appointed to consider the feasibility of forming a digest of the Common Law, which he had shortly before advocated in an address delivered at the meeting of the Social Science Congress at York. He was a Member of the Commission of the Marriage Laws; a Member of the Judicature Commission, and took a leading part in opposing the changes which aimed at a fusion of Law and Equity, and which were afterwards carried out in the destruction of the old Common Law Courts. He was also a Member of the Ecclesiastical Courts Commission. Upon the abolition of Purchase in the Army, he was a Member of the Commission appointed to consider the claims of certain of the Purchase Officers, and shortly afterwards he was appointed Chairman of the Commission on Retirement and Promotion in the Army, and prepared the Report which was afterwards in part carried out by Royal Warrant. He was Chairman of the Commission appointed to report on the condition of Wellington College. He was also Chairman and drew the Report of the Commission which sat to inquire into the practices of the Stock Exchange. When Mr. Peel was elected Speaker of the House of Commons he took his place as Chairman of a Departmental Committee appointed by the War Office to consider the position of Engineer Officers in India. He took a leading part, in conjunction with the late Lord Redesdale, in opposing the abolition of the judicial functions of the House of Lords, an opposition which resulted in Lord Cairns withdrawing the Bill brought into the House of Lords for that purpose.

PEPPER, John Henry, born at Westminster, June 17, 1821, was one of the eleven children of Charles Bailey Pepper and Anne his wife. He was educated at Loughborough House, Brixton, and King's College School, Strand. In 1840 he was Assistant Chemical Lecturer at the Granger School of Medicine. From May 24 to June 25, 1847, he gave his first lectures at the Royal Polytechnic Institution; and in 1848 he was finally appointed Analytical Chemist and Lecturer on Chemistry at the Royal Polytechnic. He is the author of the "Playbook of Science;" "Playbook of Metals;" "Cyclopædic Science Simplified;" "The True History of the Ghost," besides numerous articles in boys' books. He gave scientific evidence at many trials, but declined to act for Palmer when tried for poisoning his friend with strychnine. He improved Dircks's rough model, and rendered the exhibit of the Ghost a practical thing, which could be shown in any hall or theatre. The exhibit, during the first six months, realised £12,000 at the old Royal Polytechnic. He revived the Ghost illusion at the Polytechnic in Christmas, 1889, after his return from Australia, where (principally in Queensland) Professor Pepper stayed ten years, and previously five years in America. He was appointed Public Analyst to the Mayor and Corporation of Brisbane, Queensland, holding the appointment in spite of annual competition for many successive years. He gave numerous courses of lectures, and was requested by the late Governor, Sir Anthony Musgrave, to deliver a private course of lectures to himself, Lady Musgrave and family, at the School of Arts, Brisbane, where every week Professor Pepper gave a practical demonstration of Chemistry to a numerous class of pupils.

PERCIVAL, The Right Rev. John, Hon. LL.D., Bishop of Hereford, born in 1836, was educated at Oxford, where he was scholar of Queen's College from 1854 to 1858, and Fellow of the same college from 1858-62. From 1860-62 he was a Master at Rugby School, and was then appointed first Head-Master of Clifton College, a post which he most successfully filled until 1878, when he was elected President of Trinity College, Oxford. A few years later he was made a Canon of Bristol. He has published "Some Helps for School Life," sermons preached in Clifton College Chapel, and "The Connection of the Universities with the Great Towns." He was one of the originators of the University College, Bristol; and is known throughout the country, and especially in the west, for his exertions for the spread of university education among the middle classes. In 1887 Dr. Percival was appointed Head-Master of Rugby School, in succession to Dr. Jex-Blake, and resigned the Presidency of Trinity College Oxford, and also the Canonry at Bristol. He was nominated Bishop of Hereford in Feb., 1895.

PEREZ GALDÓS, Benito, a Spanish novelist, was born in 1845 at Las Palmas in the Canary Isles. As a writer of fiction he first distinguished himself by the publication of two historical romances relating to the state of Spain in 1820 and 1824, and entitled respectively "La Fontana de Oro" (Madrid, 1871), and "El Audaoz." Next, in imitation of MM. Erckmann-Chatrian, he published two series of "Episodios Nacionales," the first dealing with subjects taken from the War of Independence against Napoleon, and the second describing the struggle of Spanish Liberalism against the tyranny of Ferdinand VII. These novels achieved a great success in Spain, and were also widely read in Spanish America. Among them we may mention "Baillén," 1873-75; "Napoleon en Chamartin," 1874; "Cadiz," 1874; "Juan Martin el Empecinado," 1874; "La Batalla de los Arapiles," 1875; and "El Terror de 1824," Madrid, 1877. Encouraged by the continually increasing success of these productions, he composed other romances, entitled "Doña Perfecta" (translated into English in 1880); "Gloria" (translated into English by Nathan Wetherell, 2 vols., Lond., 1879); "Marianela," and "La Familia de Leone Roche," which augmented his fame, and brought him into the foremost rank of Spanish novelists. He composed a long series of contemporary romances, entitled "La Desheredada," 1880; "El Amigo Mando," 1881; "Tormento," 1883; "Lo Prohibido," 1884; "Fortunata y Jacinta," 1886; "Mian," 1888; "La Incognita," 1890; "Prealidad," 1890; and "Angel Guerra," 1891. For some years past Señor Perez Galdós has been living at Madrid, working hard at literature as a profession, and figuring for a time as the head of the principal Spanish review, the Revista de España. In politics he belongs to the Liberal party.

PERKIN, William Henry, LL.D., Ph.D., F.R.S., was born in London on March 12, 1838. As a clever chemist and inventor he has long been noted in scientific circles; but to the world at large his title to enduring fame is based on his greatest and earliest achievement, the discovery of the first aniline colour. He was educated at the City of London School, the only school in England at that date where scientific subjects were taught. He read chemistry systematically under Dr. A. W. Hofmann, at the Royal College of Chemistry. This was in 1853, when he was only 15 years of age. Two years afterwards he acted as assistant to Dr. Hofmann in his research laboratory, and in the following March he read an account of his first research before the Chemical Society. During the Easter vacation of that year (1856), whilst conducting an investigation at home, which had for its object the artificial formation of quinine, he obtained results which led him to the discovery of the "aniline purple," or "mauve," a discovery which laid the foundation of the industry of the coal tar colours, which has now assumed such remarkable dimensions. After experimenting with this colouring matter in Messrs. Pullar's dyeworks at Perth, and being encouraged by them to follow up its manufacture, Perkin left the College of Chemistry in order to devote himself to the development of his new discovery, which was patented in 1856, he being then not more than 18 years of age. The manufacture of mauve being an entirely new industry, naturally presented many difficulties, as most of the substances required for its production were at that date known in only a few scientific laboratories, and none of the plant in ordinary use in chemical works was suitable for their production. But owing to Perkin's scientific knowledge and practical turn of mind these difficulties were overcome. In this undertaking he was associated with his father and brother, and the firm was known as Perkin and Sons. The works were erected on the Grand Junction Canal at Greenford Green, Middlesex. The new dye was successfully made in the course of the year 1857, and supplied first to the silk dyers in London, and then at Macclesfield, and some time afterwards to calico printers in Scotland and elsewhere. In 1859 the Société Industrielle of Mulhouse awarded Perkin a Silver Medal, and some time afterwards a Gold Medal for his discovery of the mauve. Besides the mauve, he discovered also several other coal-tar colouring matters; and after Graebe and Liebermann had made their celebrated discovery of the formation of alizarine from anthracene in 1868, he found two new processes by which this was rendered of practical value; and alizarine was first manufactured commercially at Greenford Green in 1869. Perkin also discovered that with artificial alizarine another colouring matter was associated, viz., anthrapurpurine, which has proved to be of great value, as it produces colours of a more scarlet shade than pure alizarine, and when mixed with the latter renders its shades more brilliant. At the end of the year 1873, Perkin retired from technical work. During the entire period in which he was occupied in carrying on the manufacture of coal-tar colours he was actively engaged in scientific research, not only in reference to this industry, but also in pure chemistry. Out of his very numerous papers the following, relating to pure chemistry, may be referred to, viz., those on the halogen derivatives of acetic and succinic acids, which resulted, among other things, in the artificial formation of glycocine, a derivative of gelatine (1859), and tartaric acid (1861). These were carried out in conjunction with the late Mr. B. F. Duppa, and were of special interest at that date, when but few bodies of animal or vegetable origin had been produced artificially. In 1867 he published his first papers on salicylic aldehyde, showing that this substance is not only an aldehyde but also a phenol. This was the commencement of a series of researches, which resulted in the artificial formation of coumarin (the odorous principle of the Tonka bean, sweet-scented vernal grass, &c.), and the discovery of several new bodies of this class, showing the existence of a whole series of these odoriferous substances. The further prosecution of this line of research led to the discovery of a new reaction, by which cinnamic acid could be easily obtained from benzaldehyde, by heating it with acetic anhydride, and a salt of a fatty acid; and moreover, by substituting other aromatic aldehydes, and also varying the anhydride, a large number of new acids of this class were obtained. By modifying this reaction, which is now known as "Perkin's Reaction," Dr. Caro succeeded in producing cinnamic acid technically (at the Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik), for the artificial production of indigo by the method discovered by Bayer. Perkin's later work has been on the remarkable property of substances to rotate the plane of polarization when placed in the field of a magnet (discovered by Faraday), and he has shown that this rotation varies with bodies of the homologous series in a definite manner for each addition of CH_2, and moreover, it exhibits distinct differences between normal and isomeric compounds, and is therefore likely to be of value in determining the constitution of bodies. By this property it appears also to be possible to distinguish between bodies which, when hydrated, form definite chemical products and those which only form molecular compounds. Dr. Perkin was elected a Fellow of the Chemical Society in 1856, and a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1866, at the age of 28. In 1869 he became one of the honorary secretaries of the Chemical Society, a post which he held until elected President of that Society in 1883; he was also President of the Society of Chemical Industry in 1884-85. In 1882 he received the honorary degree of Ph.D. of the University of Würzburg, and in 1884 he was made an honorary member of the German Chemical Society. In 1879 the Royal Medal, and in 1889 the Davy Medal were awarded to him by the Royal Society; and in 1888 he received the Longstaff Medal of the Chemical Society, the two latter being given in recognition of his researches on the magnetic rotation of bodies; and in 1890 the Albert Medal from the Society of Arts was awarded him for his discoveries in colouring matters. In 1891 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of St. Andrews, and in 1892 was awarded the Birmingham Medal of the Gas Institute, on account of the influence of his discoveries on the Coal Gas Industry.

PEROWNE, The Right Rev. John James Stewart, D.D., Bishop of Worcester, was born March 13, 1824, at Burdwan, Bengal, of a family of French (Huguenot) extraction, that came over to this country at the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He was educated at Norwich Grammar School, and at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; was appointed Bell's University Scholar in 1842, Crosse (Theological) Scholar in 1845, Tyrrwhitt's (Hebrew) Scholar in 1848, and Member's Prizeman (Latin Essay) in 1844, 1846, and 1847. Dr. Perowne took his B.A. degree in 1845, and that of M.A. in 1848, and was elected a Fellow of his College in 1849. He was Examiner for the Classical Tripos in 1850 and 1851. He was Select Preacher at the University Church in 1853, 1861, and 1873, and frequently since; Hulsean Lecturer in 1868, and Lady Margaret's Preacher in 1874. For several years he held a Lectureship and Professorship in King's College, London, and was Assistant-Preacher at Lincoln's Inn, and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Norwich. From 1862 to 1872 he was Vice-Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter, and whilst there succeeded in obtaining for the College a Charter empowering it to confer the degree of B.A. He was in 1872 appointed Prælector in Theology, and in 1873 elected a Fellow of Trinity College; from 1874 to 1876 he was Cambridge Preacher at the Chapel Royal, Whitehall. He was Canon Residentiary of Llandaff from 1869 to 1878, and Hulsean Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, having been elected to this office June 17, 1875; he was also Examiner in the Text of Scripture, &c., in the University of London. He was appointed an honorary chaplain to the Queen, May 13, 1875. In Aug., 1878, he was nominated by the Crown, on the recommendation of Lord Beaconsfield, to the Deanery of Peterborough, vacated by the death of Dr. Saunders; and in 1890 was nominated Bishop of Worcester, in succession to Dr. Philpott, who resigned. Dr. Perowne was succeeded in the Deanery of Peterborough by Canon Marsham Argles. Dr. Perowne was made an Hon. D.D. of the University of Edinburgh at the Tercentenary of the University in 1884, and was Select Preacher at Oxford in 1888-89. In 1888 he was made a Justice of the Peace for the Borough and Liberty of Peterborough, and in the same year was elected the First Hon. Fellow of his old College, Corpus Christi, Cambridge. Dr. Perowne is the author of "The Book of Psalms, a new Translation, with Notes, Critical and Exegetical," 2 vols., 7th edit.; Hulsean Lectures on "Immortality;" a volume of sermons; occasional sermons; "The Athanasian Creed;" "Confession in the Church of England;" "The Church, the Ministry, the Sacraments;" "Disestablishment and Disendowment;" "The Interest of the People of England in the Maintenance of the National Church;" articles in Dr. Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," Contemporary Review, Expositor, Sunday Magazine, Good Words, and an Essay on Welsh Cathedrals. He is also the editor of Al Adjrumiieh, an Arabic Grammar, and of "Rogers on the Thirty-Nine Articles," of Bishop Thirlwall's Charges and Literary Remains, and of "The Cambridge Bible for Schools," and "The Cambridge Greek Testament for Schools." Dr. Perowne was a member of the company engaged on the revision of the Old Testament, and also of the Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Courts. He married, in 1862, Anna Maria, third daughter of the late Humphry William Woolrych, Esq., Serjeant-at-Law, of Croxley, Hertfordshire.

PERRIN, The Rt. Rev. William Willcox, D.D., second son of the late Thomas Perrin, Esq., of Westbury-on-Trym, Gloucestershire, was born Aug. 11, 1848. He was educated at King's College, London, of which he is an Associate, and Trinity College, Oxford. Graduated B.A., 1870; M.A., 1873; D.D., 1893. Ordained, 1871 (Deacon); 1872 (Priest); Curate of St. Mary's, Southampton, 1871-81; Vicar of St. Luke's, Southampton, 1881-93; Surrogate for Diocese of Winchester. Consecrated Bishop of British Columbia, in Westminster Abbey, March 25, 1893.

PERRY, Professor John, M.E., D.Sc., F.R.S., Assoc. M.I.C.E., Vice-President of the Physical Society, and Member of Council of the Society of Telegraph Engineers, was born at Garvagh, a town in Ulster, in 1850. Dr. Perry attended the Model School, Belfast, and won a silver medal in natural science. He graduated in 1870 as Bachelor of Engineering, in the Queen's University of Ireland, with first honours, Gold Medal, and Peel Prize; and gained a Whitworth Scholarship in that year. The honorary degree of Master in Engineering was conferred on him by the University Senate in 1882. He was Lecturer in Physics at Clifton College, 1870-74; and there started the earliest School Physical Laboratory and Workshop, still thriving institutions. He published "Elementary Treatise on Steam," in 1873; was a secretary of the A section, British Association, 1874; and in that year became Thomson Scholar, and hon. assistant to Sir William Thomson in Glasgow. He wrote the mathematical and physical articles in Blackie's "Cyclopedia." His first scientific paper was read before the Royal Society of London, early in 1875, on "The Electric Conductivity of Glass as Dependent on Temperature." In partnership with Sir William Thomson, he read a paper on "Capillary Surfaces of Revolution," before the Royal Society of Edinburgh. Of the papers published by him with Professor Ayrton, since 1876, the following are some of the most important: "The Specific Inductive Capacity of Gases," "On Electrolytic Polarisation," "Resistance of Galvanometer Coils," "Ice as an Electrolyte," "Heat Conduction in Stone," "Contact Theory of Voltaic Action," "Ratio of Electric Units," "On Electrometers, and their Government," "On Electrical Measuring Instruments," "On the Gas Engine," and "Magnifying Spring." In 1875 he went to Japan as joint Professor (with the Principal) of engineering in the Imperial College of Engineering, and returned to England in 1879. He gained the Silver Medal of the Society of Arts, in 1881, for his lecture on "The Future Development of Electrical Appliances," since translated into German by Professor Weinhold, and published as a separate book. He delivered a course of Cantor lectures on hydraulic machinery in 1882; and became Professor of Mechanical Engineering and applied Mathematics at the Finsbury Technical College. He is Secretary of the Physical Society. Professors Ayrton and Perry were appointed joint engineers to the Faure Accumulator Company, and remained in that capacity until the English patents were disposed of. Their more important inventions are: A dynamo machine; permanent magnet and spring ammeters and voltmeters, with and without commutators; solenoid and shielded ammeters and voltmeters; spring balances; resistances for use with strong currents varied by foot and hand; ergmeters; power-meter; ohmmeter; non-sparking key; electromotors; switches for use with accumulators, and arrangements for lighting railway trains; photometers; secohmeters; dynamometer couplings and transmission and absorption dynamometers; an electric arc lamp; the governing of motors and dynamos; an electric tricycle; an electric railway system with friction gearing, contact boxes and locomotives, forming part of the general system belonging to the Telpherage Company (Limited). Of their inventions which are not commercially valuable may be mentioned their arrangement for "Seeing by Electricity;" their multireflex arrangement exhibited in Paris; their ballistic galvanometer, and their many forms of apparatus employed in the teaching of electricity, &c. On the death of Professor Fleeming Jenkin, Professor Perry became engineer to the Telpherage Company, and from July to October, 1885, superintended the erection and settling to work of the Telpher line at Glynde in Sussex. In June, 1885, Professor Perry was elected to a Fellowship of the Royal Society. The Royal University of Ireland has bestowed on him its highest scientific degree, that of Doctor of Science. He delivered the "operatives" lecture of the British Association meeting of 1890 on "Spinning Tops." He is now utilising part of the immense water power of Galway (in partnership with his brother, who is County Surveyor there) in Electric Lighting and Transmission of Power. The Ayrton and Perry partnership was dissolved in 1889. Since that time Professor Perry has published many scientific papers and developed several instruments, of which his Electric Supply Meter for the use of consumers of electric energy is the one most valuable commercially.

PERSIA, Shah of. See NASR-ED-DEEN, SHAH AN SHAR.

PETERBOROUGH (Bishop of), The Right Rev. Mandell Creighton, D.D. Oxford and Cambridge; hon. LL.D. Glasgow, hon. D.C.L. Durham, LL.D. of Harvard University, Litt.D, Dublin, Fellow of the Società Romana di Stonà Patnà, and Canon of Worcester, was born at Carlisle, in 1843, educated at Durham Grammar School, and elected postmaster at Merton College, Oxford, in 1862. At Oxford he was placed in the first class in Classical Moderations, and in the first class in Literæ Humaniores, and in the second class in Law and Modern History in 1866. In the same year he was elected Fellow of Merton College, and remained at Oxford as tutor of Merton. He was ordained deacon in 1870, and priest in 1873, and in 1875 accepted the living of Embleton, in Northumberland. He was appointed by Bishop Lightfoot rural dean of Alnwick in 1879, and on the formation of the diocese of Newcastle, in 1882, was made honorary canon of Newcastle and examining chaplain to the Bishop. In 1883 the University of Glasgow conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. In 1884 he was elected to the newly founded professorship of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Cambridge. In 1885 he received the honorary degree of D.C.L. from the University of Durham, and was appointed by the Crown canon residentiary of Worcester Cathedral. He has frequently acted as public examiner and select preacher in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. He has also been examining chaplain to the Bishop of Worcester. He is the author of several historical works:—"Primer of Roman History," 1875; "The Age of Elizabeth," 1876; "The Life of Simon de Montfort," 1877; "Primer of English History," 1877; "Cardinal Wolsey," in the series of English Statesmen, 1888; "Carlisle," in Historic Towns, 1889. His principal work is a "History of the Papacy during the Period of the Reformation," of which the first two volumes were published in 1882, two others in 1887, and a fifth in 1894. He was founder and first editor of the English Historical Review, the first number of which appeared in January, 1886. Professor Creighton represented Emmanuel College at the 250th anniversary celebration of Harvard College, Massachusetts, in November, 1886, when he received the degree of LL.D., and was elected a corresponding member of the Historical Society of Massachusetts. In 1889 he was elected Honorary Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. In 1890 he was appointed by the Crown Canon of Windsor, but before entering on that office was appointed Bishop of Peterborough, and was consecrated on April 25, 1891. In the same year he was elected Honorary Fellow of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and in 1892 received the honorary degree of Litt.D. at the tercentenary of the University of Dublin. In 1893 he was elected Hulsean Lecturer in the University of Cambridge.

PETHERICK, Edward Augustus, eldest son of Peter John Petherick, and grandson of Edward Jarman Petherick, R.N., of Bridgwater, was born March 6, 1847, at Burnham, Somerset, where his father was bookseller and librarian. His parents emigrating to Australia in 1852, he received early official training in the municipal offices, Collingwood, Victoria. From 1862 to 1888 he was connected with the bookselling and publishing house of Robertson, of Melbourne, representing that firm in London from 1871 to 1888. In the latter year he established the Colonial Booksellers' Agency in Paternoster Row, and has since been appointed agent for several public and parliamentary libraries in the Australian and other Colonies. From 1887 to 1892 he edited the Torch and Colonial Book Circular, a guide to new books, English and American, including all publications relating to or issued in the British Colonies. He also published a collection (similar to the Tauchnitz edition) of "Favourite and Approved Authors," for circulation in the Colonies only. Mr. Petherick has done much bibliographical work, among which may be mentioned a "Bibliography of Australasia," now in course of publication, and a "Catalogue of the York Gate Library" (S. W. Silver), 1882, extended and re-issued in 1886 as "An Index to the Literature of Geography and Travel in all Ages and Countries." He contributed to the Melbourne Review a series of papers treating of Discovery in the Southern Hemisphere, and is preparing a work in elucidation of Spanish and Portuguese voyages in the 16th century. Mr. Petherick has travelled round the world three times, and has visited the United States, and most of the British Colonies. He is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, of the Royal Colonial Institute, and of the Linnean Society; honorary member of the Royal Geographical Society of Australasia (Victorian Branch), Member of the Library Association of the United Kingdom, and of kindred societies. He married, in 1892, Mary Agatha, daughter of Rev. Samuel Annear, Wesleyan Missionary, and widow of Charles Skeats, Esq., Bournemouth.

PETIT, The Hon. Sir Dinshaw Manockjee, a philanthropic Parsee, was born in 1823, and is the chief representative of one of the oldest Parsee families which obtained its surname from the French sobriquet of Petit, owing to their short stature. Sir Dinshaw acquired his English education at a school kept by a pensioned sergeant named Sykes. At seventeen he entered an English firm as clerk, at the same time trading on his own account with the rest of India and with China. Some time after he had inherited about twelve lakhs on the death of his father in 1859, he took full advantage of the American civil war to invest all his capital in the extension of the cotton industry, and such were his energy and prudence that he not only increased his fortune, but succeeded in preserving it intact during the worst crisis of the share mania. He deserves all the credit for having acted as the pioneer of that milling industry which has turned Bombay into an Asiatic Lancashire. He is now the chief owner of seven of the largest mills in his Presidency, and is considered to be one of the wealthiest men in India. In 1887 he received the honour of knighthood on the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee, and in the following year he was appointed member of the Viceroy's Judicial Council —a post which he afterwards resigned owing to the pressure of his other engagements. During the last thirty years Sir Dinshaw has dispensed large sums in public and private charity, principally the latter, and the amount of these benefactions is stated on trustworthy authority to exceed £200,000. One of the most notable of his latest gifts was to present the freehold of the land on which the Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute has been erected. He has given a lakh (100,000) of rupees towards the founding of a leper hospital in Bombay. These and other benefactions have made the Parsee community of Western India famous throughout the world.

PETRE, Sir George Glynn, C.B., K.C.M.G., entered the diplomatic service in 1846, and was attached to the Legation at Frankfort. He was transferred to the Embassy in Paris, March, 1853, and in 1856 he went to Naples, and acted as Chargé d'Affaires from July to October, when, in conjunction with the French Minister, he broke off diplomatic relations with the King of the Two Sicilies, and was subsequently re-appointed to the Embassy in Paris. He was appointed Secretary of Legation at Hanover, June 6, 1859, Chargé d'Affaires at Copenhagen Dec. 1864, and assisted at the Investiture of his Majesty Christian IX. with the Order of the Garter, as a bearer of a portion of the Insignia. He was transferred to Brussels in 1866, and promoted to be Secretary of Embassy in Berlin, June 26, 1868. Mr. Petre was accredited Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, April 1, 1881; Minister Plenipotentiary to the Republic of Paraguay, March 2, 1882; and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of Portugal, Jan. 16, 1884. In 1886 he was made a Companion of the Bath, and in 1890 a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. In Jan. 1893, he retired on a pension.

PETRIE, W. M. Flinders, Egyptologist, was born in June, 1853, and is the grandson of Captain Flinders, discoverer and explorer in Australia. He was privately educated. From 1875 to 1880 he was occupied in surveying British earthworks, &c.; his plans are in the British Museum. In 1877 he wrote "Inductive Metrology, or the Recovery of Ancient Measures from the Monuments;" 1880, "Stonehenge: Plans, Description, and Theories." In 1881-82 he surveyed at the pyramids, and the results appeared in "Pyramids and Temples of Gizeh," assisted by a grant from the Royal Society. In 1884-86 he excavated for the Egypt Exploration Fund at Tanis (Zoan), Nankratis, Am, and Daphnæ, the last three being new discoveries. The results appeared in "Tanis I.," "Nankratis," "Tanis II.," and "Two Hieroglyphic Papyri." He also wrote the articles "Pyramid" and "Weights and Measures," in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," 9th edit. In 1887 his work was on rock inscriptions and casts of sculpture, appearing in "A Season in Egypt" and "Racial Portraits." In 1888 and onwards he has excavated with the assistance of private friends, working from 1888 to 1890 in the Fayum, and discovering the colossi of Biahmu, Roman portraits at Hawara, early towns at Kahun and Gurob, and the interior of the pyramids of Hawara and Illahun. The results appeared in "Hawara," "Kahun," and "Illahun." A work on "Historical Scarabs" was published in 1888. In 1890 he discovered and excavated on the site of Lachish for the Palestine Exploration Fund, the account appearing as "Tell el Hesy." In 1891 he excavated at Medum, finding the earliest known temple, and published it in "Medum." A popular summary of his Egyptian work was then issued, in "Ten Years' Diggings in Egypt." In 1892 he excavated the palace of Akhenaten, published in "Tell el Amarna." He received the honorary degree of D.C.L. at Oxford in 1893, and was appointed to the newly-founded Edwards Professorship of Egyptology at University College, London, where he organised a library and collection. In 1894 he discovered prehistoric sculptures in the Temple of Koptos. The purpose of these researches has been the scientific study of Egyptian civilisation, recorded by full publication of drawings and descriptions.

PETTIGREW, Professor James Bell, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.P., was born at Roxhill, Lanarkshire, Scotland. He was the second son of the late Robert Pettigrew, Esq., and his wife Mary Bell, a near relative of Henry Bell, builder of the Comet steamship. He was educated at the Free West Academy of Airdrie, and at the Universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow. In 1861 he graduated in medicine at Edinburgh University with first-class honours. In 1858-59 he was awarded Professor John Goodsir's Senior Anatomy Gold Medal for the best treatise "On the arrangement of the Muscular Fibres in the Ventricles of the Vertebrate Heart." This treatise procured for him the appointment of Croonian Lecturer to the Royal Society of London for 1860. His next successful effort was in the Class of Medical Jurisprudence, where he gained the annual Gold Medal (1860) for an essay "On the Presumption of Survivorship." In 1860 he was elected President of the Royal Medical Society, an honour greatly prized by all Edinburgh alumni. On graduating in medicine in 1861, he selected as the subject of his inaugural dissertation, "The Ganglia and Nerves of the Heart, and their connection with the Cerebro-spinal and Sympathetic Systems in Mammalia," a very involved and intricate investigation. For this he received a graduation Gold Medal—the highest honour the University of Edinburgh confers. (Proc. Roy. Soc. Edin. 1865). In 1861 he became house surgeon to Professor Syme at the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh. In 1862 he obtained the post of Assistant-Curator of the Hunterian Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of London. Here he remained for five years. During the period mentioned (1862-67) he added about 600 finished dissections, injections, and casts, to this celebrated museum. In addition to museum work he wrote several important memoirs, each memoir being profusely illustrated by dissections and drawings. The following may be mentioned: "The Valves of the Vascular systems in Vertebrata" (Phil. Trans., 1864); "The Muscular Arrangements of the Bladder and Prostate" (Phil. Trans., 1867); "The Mechanical Appliances by which Flight is Attained in the Animal Kingdom" (Trans. Linn. Soc., 1867). In 1867 he retired from the Hunterian

Museum, and spent two years in the South of Ireland, where he occupied himself in extending his knowledge of the flight of insects, bats, and birds. He also experimented largely at this period on the subject of artificial flight. In 1869 he was made a Fellow of the Royal Society of London, and, in the autumn of that year, he returned to Edinburgh, having been appointed Curator of the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, and Pathologist to the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh. There he continued his anatomical and physiological researches, particularly those of flight, and in 1870 he produced a memoir, "On the Physiology of Wings, being an analysis of the movements by which Flight is produced in the Insect, Bird, and Bat" (Trans. Roy. Soc. Edin., vol. xxvi. pp. 321-446). At that period he added numerous specimens to the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh; these, with the other specimens deposited in the Hunterian Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and the Anatomical Museum of the University of Edinburgh, amounted to considerably over 1,000. He also gave daily demonstrations in morbid anatomy at the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh to large classes of students. In 1872 he delivered a course of lectures to the President and Fellows of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, "On the Physiology of the Circulation in Plants, in the Lower Animals, and in Man." In that year (1872) he was made a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and a member of the Harveian, Botanical, Medico-Chirurgical, and other learned societies. In 1873 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh, and appointed Examiner in Physiology to the College. He also (1873) became Lecturer in Physiology to the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. On assuming the duties of teacher of Physiology, he chose as the subject of his opening address, "The Relation of Plants and Animals to Inorganic Matter, and the Interaction of the Vital and Physical Forces." In that year (1873) he published his work on "Animal Locomotion; or Walking, Swimming, and Flying," the most popular and best known of all his writings. The volume was translated, shortly after its appearance, into French, German, and other languages. In 1874 he was awarded the Godard prize of the French Academy of Sciences for his Anatomico-physiological Researches, and made a Laureate of the Institute of France. In 1875 he was appointed Chandos Professor of Medicine and Anatomy and Dean of the Medical Faculty in the University of St. Andrews, positions which he still holds. On being inducted to his Chair, he gave as his introductory lecture "Man in his Anatomical, Physical, and Physiological Aspects." In 1875-76-77 he delivered special courses of physiological lectures in Dundee, and did much to foster the higher learning in that important commercial centre. To his efforts, and those of his colleagues, the now prosperous University College of Dundee largely owes its origin. In 1877 he was elected by the Universities of Glasgow and St. Andrews as their representative at the General Council of the Medical Education and Registration of the United Kingdom (the so-called Medical Parliament), and these Universities he represented for nine years, viz., till 1886, when a new Medical Bill was passed which enabled each of the Scottish Universities to return its own member. Since that date (1886) he has represented his own University—St. Andrews. In 1883 he was appointed Examiner in Anatomy to the University of Glasgow, and in 1886 he had the honorary degree of LL.D. of that University conferred upon him. In 1889 he was made President of the Harveian Society of Edinburgh, and gave as his Harveian Oration, "The Pioneers in Medicine prior to and including Harvey" (Edin. Med. Journ., 1889). In addition to the works already mentioned, Prof. Pettigrew has contributed a large number of articles on medical, anatomical, and physiological subjects to various periodicals. In 1890 he married Elsie, the second daughter of Sir William Gray, of Greatham, Durham.

PEYTON, Colonel John Lewis, LL.B., F.R.G.S., etc., of Steephill-by-Staunton, Virginia, lawyer, litterateur, author, etc., was born Sept. 15, 1824, at Montgomery Hall, Augusta co., Virginia, and is the son of the eminent lawyer and State Senator, John Howe Peyton. He graduated at the law department of the University of Virginia, 1845, after receiving a military, scientific, and classical education at the Virginia Military Academy. In 1848 he made an extensive tour through Canada, the North-West Provinces, and United States territories, living sometimes among the Indians, and thence through the Maritime provinces. In 1851 he was sent by the United States Government on special service to England, France, and Austria. In 1853 he returned and resided two years in Chicago, and was Major in the 1st Regiment and Lieutenant-Colonel commanding the 18th Battalion of the National Guard. Owing to his high standing at the Chicago Bar, he was tendered in 1855, by President Pierce, the office of United States district Attorney for Utah, which he declined from ill-health. In 1856 he returned to Virginia, was elected J.P., bank director, to the Board of Visitors of the State College in Augusta and to other high and responsible positions. He served as chief of staff to General Lane, of Virginia, and in 1861, while raising a force for the Confederate army, was appointed Foreign Agent of North Carolina to England and France; broke the Charleston, South Carolina, blockade in the Confederate man of war Nashville; visited Bermuda, en route for England, and arrived in Southampton, Nov. 1861. Discussed with Napoleon III., Cardinal Antonelli, and the leading Statesmen of Europe, the political events growing out of the civil war; sojourned abroad till 1876, when he returned to Virginia and resumed his residence at Steephill, where he has since been engaged in literary, scientific, agricultural, and mining pursuits. He is a corresponding member of the Virginia Historical Society, of the Wisconsin State Historical Society, of the Society of Americanist, of Luxembourg, Prussia, and of many other learned bodies. He has written "A Statistical view of the State of Illinois," 1854; "Railway communications with the Pacific and the trade of China," 1854; "The American Crisis," 1866; "The Adventures of my Grandfather," 1867; "Over the Alleghanies and across the Prairies," 1869; "Memoir of William Madison Peyton, of Roanoke," 1870; "A Biographical sketch of Anne Montgomery Peyton," 1876; "A History of Augusta co., Virginia," 1882; "Memorials of Nature and Art;" "Rambling Reminiscences of a residence abroad," 1889; and "Tom Swindel; or the Adventures of a Boomer," 1893. He has also edited, with an introduction, "The Glasse of Time;" reprinted in New York, in 1886, from the London edition of 1620. He has been a voluminous writer for the papers and periodicals, and has contributed to Hunt's Merchants' Magazine of New York, The Magazine of American History, De Bow's Review and Appleton's New American Cyclopædia.

PHEAR, Samuel George, D.D., Master of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, third son of the late Rev. John and Catherine Phear, was born March 30, 1829, at Earl Stonham Rectory, Suffolk; entered Emmanuel College, Cambridge, in 1848, and graduated B.A. as Fourth Wrangler, Jan., 1852. He became Fellow and afterwards Tutor of his College, and was elected Master Oct. 2, 1871. He filled the office of Vice-Chancellor of the University for the successive years 1875-6. Dr. Phear for many years took an active part in every endeavour to extend the teaching and influence of the University; but for the last two or three years he has been invalided, and living apart from University affairs.

PHELPS, Elizabeth Stuart. See WARD, MRS. HERBERT D.

PHILIPS, Francis Charles, novelist and dramatist, comes of a military family, and is the fourth son of the Rev. G. W. Philips, of Ruxley Park, Surrey, and Wendy Vicarage, Cambridgeshire, who lived to a great age and was godson of George Washington. He was born in 1849; was educated at Brighton College, where he gained a prize for poetry, and the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, whence he entered the 2nd Queen's Royal Regiment. Leaving the army, he was called to the Bar in Jan., 1884, took to literature, and leased the Globe Theatre from 1874 to 1880. His principal novels have been "As in a Looking-Glass," 1885; "A Lucky Young Woman," 1886; "Social Vicissitudes," a collection of short stories, 1880; "Jack and Three Jills," 1887; "The Dean and His Daughter," 1887; "The Strange Adventures of Lucy Smith," 1888; "Little Mrs. Murray," 1889; "Young Mr. Annesley's Courtship," 1890; "One Never Knows," 1892; and "Mrs. Bouverie," 1894. Besides these there are "The Fatal Phryne," "The Scudamores," "A Maiden Fair to See," and "Sybil Ross's Marriage," written in collaboration with Mr. C. J. Wills; and "A Daughter's Sacrifice" and "Margaret Byng" written in collaboration with Mr. Percy Fendall. Among the plays that he has produced in London are "The Dean's Daughter," founded on his novel, "The Dean and his Daughter," written in collaboration with Mr. Sydney Grundy, and produced at the St. James's Theatre; "Husband and Wife," a farcical comedy, written with Mr. Percy Fendall, and produced at the Comedy Theatre; "Godpapa," a farcical comedy, written in collaboration with Mr. Charles Brookfield, and produced with great success at the Comedy Theatre; and "The Burglar and the Judge," written with Charles Brookfield, and produced at the Haymarket, Prince of Wales's, and Court Theatres. The novel "As in a Looking-Glass" has been published in every capital in Europe, ran as a serial in Madame Adam's Nouvelle Revue, and was afterwards published by her under the title of "Comme dans un Miroir." After Mrs. Bernard Beere's success at the Opera Comique in the play it was produced at the Variétés Theatre under the name of "Lena." Mme. Sarah Bernhardt created the part, playing it in Paris and London. Mr. Philips served for a considerable time in the army, and as a member of the South Wales Circuit and a practising London barrister has been engaged in some important cases, having appeared in Mrs. Weldon v. Gounod, and Publisher of Life v. Bird.

PHILLIPS, Lawrence Barnett, F.S.A., F.R.A.S., A.R.P.E., eldest son of the late Barnett Phillips, Esq., of Bloomsbury Square, was born Jan. 29, 1842, and educated at Dr. Pinches' school, which he left at the age of fourteen, to study mechanics and watch-making, his general education being continued by private tutors at his father's residence. In 1861 he commenced business as a wholesale chronometer and watch manufacturer, having already invented the rocking-bar mechanism for winding watches, which did much towards their general introduction, and which form of keyless work has now been universally adopted by the English manufacturers. He has designed and constructed some of the most complicated and highly finished specimens of horological art, and by the invention of various forms of mechanism succeeded in the simplification of chronographs and the improvement of calculating machines. He published in 1866 his "Autographic Album," which was followed in 1871 by "Horological Rating Tables," and, in 1873, by his "Dictionary of Biographical Reference," an original work, giving the names of one hundred thousand celebrities of all countries and references in each instance to sources of further information. In Nov., 1865, he was elected a fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, and, in March, 1885, a fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. Since 1882, when he retired from business, he has occupied himself as a painter and etcher, and has been a constant exhibitor at the Royal Academy and most of the leading London and provincial exhibitions. He is an Associate of the Royal Society of Painter-Etchers. In 1890 he constructed and patented an improved sketching-box and palette, which is now much used by artists for out-door work.

PIATTI, Alfredo, one of the most celebrated violoncellists, was born at Bergamo in 1822, and studied at the Milan Conservatoire. He made his first appearance in London in 1844, when he played before the Philharmonic Society. He is likewise a composer, and has written a violoncello obbligato to several songs, besides a concertino and two or three concertos.

PICKARD-CAMBRIDGE, The Rev. Octavius, M.A., F.R.S., was born at Bloxworth Rectory, Dorsetshire, on Nov. 3, 1828, and is the fifth son of the late Rev. George Pickard, Rector of Warmwell, and of Bloxworth (who, with his children, assumed, in 1847, the additional surname of Cambridge under the will of his first cousin, Charles Owen Cambridge, Esq., of Whitmister, co. Gloucester), and Frances Amelia his wife, daughter of the late Martin Whish, Esq., Commissioner of Excise. Married, April 19, 1866, Rose, youngest daughter of the late Rev. James Lloyd Wallace of Sevenoaks, Kent. He was educated as private pupil of the late Rev. William Barnes, B.D. (the Dorset Poet), Dorchester, 1844-45; was Student in the Middle Temple, London, 1849-52; was at University College, Durham, 1855-58; Licentiate in Theology, 1857; B.A. 1858; M.A. 1859; ordained Deacon, 1858, and Priest, 1859. He was Curate of Scarisbrick, Lancashire, 1858-60; Curate of Bloxworth and Winterbourne Tomson, Dorsetshire, 1860-68; Rector of Bloxworth and Winterbourne Tomson, 1868; Diocesan Inspector of Schools, in Religious Knowledge, for the second portion of the Rural Deanery of Whitchurch, 1879-82; elected Clerical Member of the Diocesan Synod of Salisbury, 1870-89; Chaplain to the High Sheriff of Dorset, 1889; Fellow of the Royal Society, 1887; Corresponding Member of the Zoological Society of London; formerly Member of the Entomological Society of London; Honorary Member of the New Zealand Institute; Honorary Member of the Trinity Historical Society, Dallas, Texas; Vice-President and Treasurer of the Dorset Natural History and Antiquarian Field Club; Honorary Member of the Hampshire Field Club; and Honorary Member of the Arts Society. He is the author of numerous papers on Natural History in the Proceedings of various learned societies, and of the following works:—"Spiders of Dorset," 2 vols., 1879-81; "Araneidea," in "Scientific Results of the Second Yarkand Mission," published by order of the Government of India, 1885; "Arachnida of Kerguelen Island," published in Report of the Transit of Venus Expedition—Zoology, 1877; article "Arachnida" in "Encyclopædia Britannica," ed. 9, 1875, p. 271; and "Arachnida, Araneidea" in "Biologia Centrali-Americana," edited by F. D.

Podman and Osbert Salvin (still in course of publication).

PICKERING, Professor Edward Charles, American astronomer, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, July 19, 1846. He graduated in Civil Engineering at the Lawrence Scientific School (Harvard) in 1865, and in 1866 was appointed Assistant Instructor of Physics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, of which he held the full Professorship from 1868 to 1877. During that period he made many researches in physics, particularly investigating the polarization of light and the laws of its reflection and dispersion. He also described a new form of spectrum telescope, and invented (1870) a telephone receiver. In 1870 he had charge of the polariscope in the United States Coast Survey Expedition sent to Spain to observe the total eclipse of the sun, he having previously been a member of the party sent to Iowa by the United States Nautical Almanac Office to witness that of 1869. Since 1876 he has been Professor of Astronomy and Geodesy, and Director of the Observatory at Harvard University, which, under his management, has become one of the foremost observatories in America. He has been principally engaged there in determining the relative brightness of stars by means of a Meridian Photometer, and he has prepared catalogues giving the relative brightness of 4,000, 20,000, 8,000 and 6,000 stars respectively. He has also made photometric measurements of Jupiter's Satellites while they were undergoing eclipse, and of the Satellites of Mars, and of other very faint objects. Later his work has related largely to the photography of the stars and of their spectra, the northern stars being photographed at Cambridge, and the southern stars at an auxiliary station in Peru. Professor Pickering is an Associate of the Royal Astronomical Society of London, and was awarded its Gold Medal in 1886 for photometric researches. In 1873 he became a Member of the National Academy of Sciences, and in 1887 received its Henry Draper Medal for his work on Astronomical Physics. He was elected, in 1876, a Vice-President of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and in addition belongs to a number of other scientific societies in Europe and the United States. More than twenty volumes of the Annals of the Observatory have been issued under his direction. Besides his many papers, which number above a hundred, and his annual reports, he has edited, with notes, The Theory of Colour in its relations to Art and Art Industry," by Dr. Wm. Von Bezold, 1876; and is the author of "Elements of Physical Manipulation," 2 parts, 1873-76.

PICKERING, Percival Spencer Umfreville, F.R.S., born March 6, 1858, at 6, Upper Grosvenor Street, London, W., is the son of Percival Andrée Pickering, Q.C. (Bencher of the Inner Temple, Judge of the Passage Court at Liverpool, and at one time Attorney-General for the County Palatine), and of (formerly) Miss Spencer Stanhope, granddaughter of Coke of Norfolk, first Earl of Leicester. He was educated at Eton, from which he obtained, in 1875, an Exhibition in Science at Balliol College, Oxford, converted, in 1876, into a Brackenbury Scholarship, the first Science Scholarship ever obtained from Eton. In 1880 he took First-Class Honours in Natural Science at Oxford. From Jan., 1881, to July, 1883, he was Modern Master at Highgate School, and from Oct., 1881, to April, 1889, Lecturer in Chemistry at Bedford College. His principal works have been published in the Journal of the Chemical Society, the Philosophical Magazine, the Chemical News, and the Zeit. für Physikal. Chemie. The following are the titles of some of his works:—"Action of Sulphuric Acid on Copper," 1878; "Action of Hydrochloric Acid on Manganese Dioxide," 1879; "The Constitution of Molecular Compounds," 1883; "The Molecular Weights of Solids and Liquids," 1885; "Modifications of Double Sulphates," "On Delicate Calorimetric Thermometers," "Water of Crystallisation," "The Nature of Solution," 1886; "The Influence of Temperature on the heat of Dissolution of Salts," "Delicate Thermometers," "The Thermal Phenomena of Neutralization, and their Bearing on the Nature of Solution, and on the Theory of Residual Affinity," 1887; "Thermochemical Constants," "The Heat of Dissolution of Substances in Different Liquids, and its Bearing on the Explanation of the Heat of Neutralisation and on the Theory of Residual Affinity," "The Principles of Thermochemistry," 1888; "The Neutralisation of Sulphuric Acid," 1889; "A New Form of Mixing Calorimeter," "The Nature of Solutions as Elucidated by a Study of the Densities, Electric Conductivities, Heat of Dissolution and Expansion by Heat of Sulphuric Acid Solutions," "The Nature of Solutions as Elucidated by the Freezing Points of Sulphuric Acid Solutions," "Law of the Freezing Points of Solutions," "The supposed Hydrates of Ethyl Alcohol," "The Expansion of Water and other Liquids," "Determinations of the Heat Capacity and Heat of Fusion of some Substances," 1890; "The Cryoscopic Behaviour of Cane Sugar Solutions," "The Theory of Residual Chemical Affinity as an Explanation of the Physical Nature of Solutions," 1891; "The Recognition of Changes of Curvature by means of a Flexible Lath," "The Cryoscopic Behaviour of Weak Solutions," "The Heat of Dissolution of Gases in Liquids," 1892; "Some Experiments of the Diffusion of Substances in Solution," "Some Compounds of the Alkylamines and Ammonia with Water," "The Hydrates of Hydrochloric Acid," "Isolation of Beer predicted Hydrates of Nitric Acid," "The Hydrates of Sodium, Potassium, and Lithium Hydrocides," "The Hydrates of Hydrobromic Acid," "Study of some Properties of Strong Solutions," "Note on the Stereochemistry of Nitrogen Compounds," "The Hydrates of Hydriodic Acid," 1893; "The Densities of Solutions of Soda and Potash," "Examination of the Properties of Calcium Chloride Solutions," 1894. Mr. Pickering was elected to the Chemical Society in 1878, the Physical Society in 1886, the Institute of Chemistry in 1888, and the Royal Society in 1890.

PICKERSGILL, Frederick Richard, Hon. R.A., nephew of the late Henry William Pickersgill, R.A., born in London, in 1820, studied at the Royal Academy. His first production, "The Combat between Hercules and Achelous," an oil painting, exhibited in 1840, was followed by a prize cartoon of "The Death of King Lear," exhibited in Westminster Hall in 1843; and "The Burial of Harold," a picture for which he received a first-class prize, in 1847, and which was immediately purchased for the new Houses of Parliament. Mr. Pickersgill was for many years a regular exhibitor. In 1847 he was elected A.R.A., and in 1857 was promoted to the rank of Academician. He was Keeper of the Royal Academy from 1873 to 1887, and retired a few years ago.

PIEROLA, Gen. Nicolas de, ex-President of Peru, was born at Camana, Peru, Jan. 5, 1839. He was educated at the College of Santo Torobio, in Lima, was admitted to the Bar in 1860, and founded a review, El Progreso Católico. In 1864 he became Editor of El Tiempo. Subsequently he travelled in Europe, but in 1869 was appointed Minister of Finance. At the end of his administration he was impeached, and although acquitted went into exile in the United States. In 1874 and 1877 he organised expeditions against the Peruvian Government, but was unsuccessful. The second time he surrendered and was banished. At the outbreak of the Chilian war he proffered his services to Gen. Prado, then President of Peru, but they were not accepted. In 1879, however, he was allowed to return to Lima. After Gen. Prado went away, Gen. Pierola assumed the charge of affairs, and continued the fighting. In Jan., 1881, he abandoned Lima, and in the following November resigned the Provisional Presidency (to which he had been elected in July of that year), as Chili refused to treat with him. In 1882 he visited Europe and the United States, and has since resided in Peru. He was a candidate for President in 1890, but failed to secure the election. For attempting to excite a riot in Lima in connection with that election he was, in April last, 1890, imprisoned by the Peruvian Government.

PIGOU, The Very Rev. Francis, D.D., Dean of Bristol, was born at Baden-Baden, in Germany, in the year 1831. His father was an officer in the Queen's Bays, and his mother was the daughter of the Rev. G. Smith, for many years rector of Marston, in Yorkshire. His earliest education was received at Neuwied, on the Rhine; afterwards he was at the Grammar School at Ripon, and at Cheltenham College. On leaving Cheltenham he was placed at the Edinburgh Academy, where he was under the late Archdeacon Williams, and the Rev. Dr. Hannah. From Edinburgh his next step was to Trinity College, Dublin, where he passed through the Divinity course, and took his degree in 1853. In the year 1855 he was ordained Deacon by the late Bishop Wilberforce at Cuddesdon, and became Curate of Stoke Talmage, in Oxfordshire. Shortly after he had taken Priest's Orders in 1856, he was offered and accepted the Chaplaincy of the Marbœuf Chapel in Paris, and he ministered there for three years. He subsequently accepted the Curacy of Vere Street Chapel, London. Very shortly afterwards he accepted a Curacy at Kensington Parish Church, under Archdeacon Sinclair. Two years later, on the death of Canon Repton, in 1860, he was presented by Mr. Kempe, the present Rector of St. James's, Piccadilly, to the Incumbency of St. Philip's, Regent Street. There he continued for the period of eleven years; and then, upon Dr. Vaughan accepting the Mastership of the Temple, in 1869, he was presented to the important Vicarage of Doncaster, by the late Archbishop of York, who, when in town, had been one of his congregation. The character of his labours, as Vicar and Rural Dean of Doncaster, was so apparent, that, when the still more important Vicarage of Halifax became vacant, by the death of Archdeacon Musgrave in 1875, he was selected by the Crown to fill the post. The income of the Vicarage of Halifax is £2,000 a year, and there are no fewer than thirty-two livings in the gift of the Vicar, whose position is thus semi-episcopal. He is also the Rural Dean of Halifax. During the last four years of his ministry there, the Vicar's rate question was settled, £13,000 having been raised by the churchmen of the parish to redeem it, thus securing to the Church what was at one time seriously threatened. When this was accomplished, Dr. Pigou next set to work to get the parish church restored. He found it in a dilapidated condition, and, seconded by Sir Henry Edwards, Bart., he raised £20,000; so that now the Halifax parish church is one of the finest in the kingdom. In 1888 Dr. Pigou was appointed to the Deanery of Chichester, where he remained till 1891, when he became Dean of Bristol. In the year 1871, Dr. Pigou was appointed Honorary Chaplain to the Queen; and in 1874, Chaplain-in-Ordinary. In 1878, his University conferred on him the two degrees of B.D. and D.D., a rare distinction. He has published a small volume of "Addresses at Holy Communion;" "A Manual of Confirmation;" "Faith and Practice" (a volume of sermons), "Two Sermons Preached before the Queen, on Unostentatious Piety and Private Prayer;" and various addresses.

PINERO, Arthur Wing, born in London in 1855, is the son of a solicitor, and was educated with the view of following his father's profession. Having no particular liking for the law, however, he ultimately prepared for the stage, and made his début in Edinburgh in June, 1874. The following year he joined the Lyceum company, and played Claudius to Mr. Irving during his first "Hamlet" tour at all the principal theatres in the United Kingdom. Subsequently Mr. Pinero played Lord Stanley in the Lyceum revival of "Richard III.," the Marquis of Huntly in "Charles I.," and Alderman Jorgens in "Vanderdecken." He is the author of several very successful plays, among which are "£200 a Year," 1877; "The Money Spinner," 1880; and "The Squire," 1881; "Lords and Commons" and "The Rocket," 1883; "Low Water," 1884; "The Magistrate," 1885; "The Schoolmistress," "The Hobby Horse," 1886; "Sweet Lavender," 1888; "The Profligate," 1889; "In Chancery," "Lady Bountiful," "The Times," and "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." The last play, which in the opinion of many is his best, was produced at the St. James's in May, 1893. Mr. Pinero's latest play, "The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith," was produced at the Garrick on March 13, 1895.

PINTO, Alexandre Alberto da Rocha Serpa, was born April 20, 1846, at the Tendaes in the Province of Douro, Portugal, and educated at the Royal Military College, Lisbon. He entered the 7th Infantry Regiment, Aug. 13, 1863; became ensign July 14, 1864; lieutenant in the 12th Rifles, Nov. 20, 1868; captain, Oct. 10, 1874; major, April 17, 1877; and aide-de-camp of the King of Portugal, March 10, 1880. In 1869 he was in the Zambesi War, and in the battle of Nov. 23 at Massangano he succeeded in saving the regiment of India. He was then in command of the African Native Troop. During 1877-79 he crossed Africa from Benguella to Durban, and he has admirably described the journey in a work entitled "How I Crossed Africa," Lond. 1881. These geographical tasks obtained for him the Gold Medals (first class) of the Geographical Societies of London, Paris, Antwerp, Rome, and Marseilles. He was also elected a Fellow of all the most important geographical societies in the world, and of many scientific associations. Major Serpa Pinto is a Knight Commander of the Order of St. James of Portugal, a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and of Leopold of Belgium, and has received many other foreign Orders.

PITMAN, Mrs. E. R., an authoress of works of fiction, biography, and missionary information, was born, in 1841, at Milborne Port, a small manufacturing town on the southern border of Somersetshire. While in her teens she gained several prizes for essays on various subjects, and became a contributor to the Sunday at Home, Old Jonathan, and other periodicals. When about seventeen years of age, she planned and wrote her first book, entitled "The Power of Little Things." For several years after this she was known as a contributor to religious, temperance, and Sunday-school journals; but during recent years her works have been mainly issued in volumes. Of these, her principal productions are "Vestina's Martyrdom; a Story of the Catacombs," 1869; "Earnest Christianity," 1872; "Margaret Mervyn's Cross," 1878; "Profit and Loss," 1879; "Heroines of the Mission Field," 1880 Mission Life in Greece and Palestine," 1881; "Garnered Sheaves," "Florence Godfrey's Faith," "Life's Daily Ministry," and "My Governess Life," 1882; "Central Africa, Japan, and Fiji," 1883; "Elizabeth Fry" (Eminent Women Series), 1884; "George Müller and Andrew Reed" (World's Workers Series), 1885; "Lady Missionaries in Foreign Lands," 1889; "Lady Hymn Writers," 1891; and "Oliver Chauncey's Trust," 1892. In 1866 she was married to Mr. Edwin Pitman; and of the four children born of the marriage, three are in H. M.'s Civil Service.

PITMAN, Sir Isaac, was born at Trowbridge, Wilts, Jan. 4, 1813, and educated at the Grammar School in that town. At the age of twelve years he left school, and entered the counting-house of a cloth manufacturer, where his father was manager. The change was necessary for the preservation of his health. Above a hundred boys were taught in a small room, and he frequently fainted through breathing the vitiated air. After six years' service as a clothier's clerk, chiefly in his father's factory, he was sent to be trained in the Normal College of the British and Foreign School Society, Borough Road, London, and after five months' training, at the close of 1831, was appointed Master of the British School, Barton-on-Humber. He established the British School at Wotton-under-Edge in 1836, and removed to Bath in 1839. His first treatise on shorthand, entitled "Stenographic Soundhand," appeared in 1837, and he thus became the originator of the Spelling Reform, to which, and the propagation of his system of phonetic shorthand, he has devoted his entire attention since 1843, when the Phonetic Society was established. The annual list of the Society (1893) contains above 5,000 members who joined the Society during the year. His system of shorthand was renamed in 1840, and entitled "Phonography, or Writing by Sound;" and his "Phonographic Reporter's Companion" appeared in 1846. The "Phonetic Institute," at Bath, is really a phonetic printing office, and a publishing house for the despatch of phonetic books to all parts of the world. Mr. Pitman edits and prints the Phonetic Journal, which has a large weekly and monthly circulation. It records the progress of the "Writing and Spelling Reform," in the ordinary orthography, and contains articles in the "First Stage" of the Spelling Reform, and in phonetic printing with an enlarged alphabet furnished with thirteen new letters: it also gives several pages of shorthand printed from moveable type, with a key. Besides printing his own instruction-books for teaching phonetic shorthand, Mr. Pitman has issued a little library of about eighty volumes, printed entirely in shorthand, ranging from the Bible to "Rasselas." In the autumn of 1887 an International Shorthand Congress and Jubilee of Phonography was held in London, and Mr. Pitman's family were presented with his bust: a replica is placed in the Royal Literary and Scientific Institution, Bath. A Gold Medal from the phonographers of the United States, and one from those of Great Britain and the Colonies, were presented to Mr. Pitman in recognition of the invention of his system of shorthand, and of his labours for the reformation of English orthography. The useful art of shorthand is now included in the new Educational Code as a "specific subject" to be taught in the Board Schools. Mr. Pitman received the honour of knighthood in 1894.

PLANQUETTE, Robert, a musician, was born in Paris in 1850, and educated at the Conservatoire there. He is the composer of the popular operetta "Les Cloches de Corneville," which was published in 1877, and had immense success in France and in England. In 1882 he produced "Rip Van Winkle;" in 1887 "The Old Guard;" and in 1889 "Paul Jones." One of his last productions in France was "Le Talisman," which was produced at the Gaité in January, 1893. He has also published a volume of military songs under the title of "Refrains du Régiment."

PLAYFAIR, The Right Hon. Baron Playfair of St. Andrews, K.C.B., P.C., LL.D., Ph.D., F.R.S., son of Mr. George Playfair, Chief Inspector-General of Hospitals of Bengal, was born at Meerut, Bengal, May 21, 1819, educated at St. Andrews, N.B., and at a very early age took especial interest in chemistry. In 1834 he studied chemistry under Professor Thomas Graham, at the Andersonian University, Glasgow; but his health failing in 1837, he revisited India, and upon his recovery returned to England, and rejoined his friend Graham, then Professor to the London University. In 1838 he went to Giessen, to study organic chemistry under Liebig, translated some of his works into English, and on his return to Scotland undertook the management of the large calico-print works of Messrs. Thompson, of Clitheroe, whence he removed, in 1843, to Manchester, and was appointed Professor of Chemistry in the Royal Institution. In 1844, at the recommendation of the late Sir Robert Peel, he was appointed on the Commission constituted to examine into the sanitary condition of our large towns and populous districts. At the close of the Commission Professor Playfair was by the late Sir R. Peel appointed Chemist to the Museum of Practical Geology. In the Great Exhibition of 1851 he was appointed Special Commissioner in charge of the Department of Juries; and at the close of the Exhibition, in recognition of his scientific services, he was made a Companion of the Bath, and received an appointment in the late Prince Consort's household. At the Great Exhibition of 1862 he again had charge of the Department of Juries, and was intrusted with the appointment of the Jurors, who numbered upwards of 600 persons, consisting of the most eminent men of rank, science, and industry, of all countries of Europe. In the French Exhibition of 1878, the Prince of Wales, who was the President of the English Commission, appointed Professor Playfair as Chairman of the Finance Committee, which was charged with the executive work. On the establishment of the Department of Science and Art, in 1853, he was appointed Joint Secretary with Mr. Henry Cole; but in 1856, when Mr. Cole assumed the office of Secretary, he became Inspector-General of Government Museums and Schools of Science. In 1857 Professor Playfair was elected President of the Chemical Society of London. From 1858 to 1868 he was Professor of Chemistry in the University of Edinburgh, where he had the honour to number among his pupils the Prince of Wales and Prince Alfred. In conjunction with Sir Henry De La Bèche, he examined, at the desire of the Admiralty, into the suitableness of the coals of the United Kingdom for the purposes of the Navy; and into the causes of accidents in mines. He was one of the Royal Commissioners appointed on the appearance of the cattle plague in this country, and was Chairman of the Royal Commission on the Fisheries of the Scottish coasts. This Commission laid the basis for the withdrawal of legislative restrictions on sea fisheries. He was President of the Civil Service Inquiry Commission of 1874, which produced an elaborate scheme for the reorganisation of the Civil Service. Dr. Lyon Playfair was elected as member of Parliament for the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews in the general election of 1868, and held that seat for 17 years; he is a Liberal in politics. He held office in the Ministry of 1873–74, as Postmaster-General. After the general election of 1880 he was appointed Chairman of Ways and Means, and Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons. These offices he resigned in the Session of 1883, being on his retirement created a K.C.B. In the general election of 1885 he was returned for the South Division of Leeds, and was appointed Vice-President of the Council in Mr. Gladstone's Government of 1886. After the dissolution he was again returned for South Leeds, and continued to hold that seat until he was made a peer in 1892. He is a Lord in Waiting and a Privy Councillor of the Queen, and also of the Prince of Wales in the Duchy of Cornwall. Lord Playfair has acted as chairman or as member of many Royal Commissions, the two last being for a new University for London and on the Condition of the Aged Poor. He is a member of many learned societies, is Commander of the Legion of Honour; Commander of the Austrian Order of Francis Joseph; Knight of the Portuguese Order of the Conception; Knight of the Swedish Order of the Northern Star; and Knight of Würtemberg. He is Ph.D. of Giessen; LL.D. of Edinburgh, St. Andrews, McGill University, Montreal, and Harvard University, United States. Dr. Playfair edited, conjointly with W. Gregory, Baron Liebig's "Chemistry in its Applications to Agriculture and Physiology." He is the author of numerous scientific memoirs, and on general subjects he has published many addresses and reviews, chiefly for the purpose of promoting higher education, more especially technical education for the people, of which he was among the earliest and most constant promoters. The promotion of public health has also largely engaged his attention. In recent years he has devoted himself to Political Economy, and written many papers on Free Trade, Labour and Wages, and also on the Currency. Several of his addresses on Political Economy were published in a volume entitled "Subjects of Social Welfare," 1889.

PLIMSOLL, Samuel, fourth son of Thomas and Priscilla Plimsoll, was born at Bristol in 1824. He was educated at Penrith (to which place his parents moved when he was a child), by the curate of the parish, and later at Sheffield, at a private school. He was first a clerk in a solicitor's office, and afterwards went into a brewery as clerk, and became manager there, where he remained till 1853, when he came up to London and started in business for himself. He successfully contested Derby in the Liberal interest in 1868, and sat for that town till 1880, when he gave up his seat to Sir W. V. Harcourt. Mr. Plimsoll went into Parliament for the express purpose of helping the sailors, and gave up his seat for the same reason, thinking that a Cabinet Minister might be able to render better service to the sailors' cause than a private member could. Whilst in Parliament Mr. Plimsoll was instrumental in passing Acts for the Amendment of the Shipping Laws, in 1871, 1873, 1875, and 1876. Mr. Plimsoll published, in 1872, "Our Seamen;" and has since written a sequel to it. In 1890 he published a work on "Cattle Ships." He accepted the post of President of the National Amalgamated Sailors' and Firemen's Union of Great Britain and Ireland soon after that organisation was established, in 1890, but afterwards retired.

PLUMMER, William E., Hon. M.A. Oxford, was born at Deptford, in Kent, in 1849, and was privately educated in that town. Having early developed a taste for astronomy he entered the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, and there acquired a certain aptitude for the practical details of that science. In 1870 he became attached to Mr. Bishop's Observatory at Twickenham, then under the direction of Mr. Hind, the late superintendent of the "Nautical Almanac" office. That observatory was then engaged in the formation of charts of the stars situated near the Ecliptic, to facilitate the discovery of minor planets. In preparation of the charts for hours eight and twenty-three Mr. Plummer took a part, as well as in the observation of comets, and the subsequent determination of their orbits. The establishment of the Oxford University Observatory, in 1874, led to Mr. Plummer's appointment as senior assistant to that institution, in which capacity he has taken a considerable share in the photometric and extra-meridional observations carried on in that observatory. Later, when the Oxford Observatory took part in the formation of the astro-photographic chart of the heavens, Mr. Plummer gave much attention to the preliminary arrangements, but took little part in the actual observations, owing to his withdrawal from Oxford. In 1892 he was appointed Astronomer to the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board and Director of the Liverpool Observatory. Mr. Plummer, in 1879, entered the Royal Astronomical Society; in 1888 was elected to a seat on the Council; and, in the following year, received the honorary degree of M.A. from the University of Oxford. He is a frequent contributor to the periodical scientific literature, and has written on "The Motion of the Solar System in Space;" "The Sidereal System;" and on "Cometary Astronomy" generally.

PLUNKET, The Right Hon. David Robert, P.C., Q.C., M.P., LL.D., is the fourth son of the third Lord Plunket, and consequently a grandson of the first Lord Plunket, the great orator and lawyer, who held the Great Seal in Ireland from 1830 to 1834, and again from 1835 to 1841. He was born Dec. 3, 1838, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his Bachelor's degree in 1859. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1862, and in 1868 was appointed "Law Adviser to the Castle at Dublin." He was nominated a Q.C. in 1868; and was elected M.P. for the University of Dublin in the Conservative interest in 1870, when he succeeded to the vacancy caused by the retirement of Mr. Anthony Lefroy. Mr. Plunket was Solicitor-General for Ireland from Dec., 1874, to March, 1877. He was Paymaster-General for a few weeks in 1880, when he was added to the Privy Council; and First Commissioner of Works in Lord Salisbury's administration, June, 1885, to Feb., 1886, a post which he again filled in the Government of 1886 to 1892. Mr. Plunket was very active in the Unionist cause during the election campaign of 1886, and his eloquent speeches on public platforms had no little influence upon the electorate. In 1892 he was again returned for Dublin University. He is a director of the London and North-Western Railway.

PLUNKET (Lord), The Hon. and Most Rev. William Conyngham Plunket, Protestant Archbishop of Dublin, eldest son of the third Lord Plunket, by Charlotte, daughter of the late Right Hon. Charles Kendal Bushe, was born in 1828, and succeeded to the title on the death of his father in 1871. He was chaplain to his uncle, the late Bishop of Tuam, 1857–64; Treasurer, and subsequently Precentor, of St. Patrick's Cathedral, 1864-76; and Bishop of Meath, 1876-84. On the resignation of Archbishop Trench, Lord Plunket was elected Archbishop of Dublin (1884). He is one of the Senate of the Royal University of Ireland. In Sept., 1894, Archbishop Plunket visited Madrid and consecrated a Protestant Church which had been opened by the sect known as the Reformed Spanish Church. He at the same time consecrated Señor Cabrera their Bishop. Against this action the Papal Nuncio and the Spanish Bishops protested, and for a time it caused much angry excitement among Spanish Catholics. His Grace married, 1863, Annie Lee, only daughter of the late Sir Benjamin Lee Guinness, Bart., and sister of Lord Ardilaun. She died Nov. 8, 1889.

POCHIN, Henry Davis, born at Wigston, Leicestershire, 1824, is the eldest son of William Pochin, Esq. He was educated at the Proprietary School, Leicester, and studied chemistry at the Pharmaceutical Society, London. Subsequently he started in business in Manchester as a manufacturing chemist, and soon afterwards discovered the means of completely decomposing China clay (silicate of alumina) by sulphuric acid, which produced a rich salt of sulphate of alumina. That process he patented in 1855, and shortly afterwards introduced the material into commerce, by the term "Aluminas Cake." It is now used by almost all paper-makers in the world for sizing paper. Another invention that Mr. Pochin patented in connection with Mr. Edward Hunt was the purification of rosin, by means of distillation; prior to this invention, rosin was always believed to be incapable of distillation without decomposition. Mr. Hunt and Mr. Pochin, however, discovered that if rosin is heated to 400 degrees Fahrenheit, and steam in considerable quantities passed (blown) through, it distils undecomposed, and free from colour; rosin refined by this process is now very largely used in the manufacture of the pale yellow soaps of commerce, being the foundation of almost all fancy soaps. Mr. Pochin has for many years taken an active part in connection with popular education both in Manchester and in Salford, of which latter borough he has been twice mayor (1866 and 1867). He is a J.P. for Lancashire and Salford, and J.P. and D.L. for Denbighshire, and in 1866 published a pamphlet on "Parliamentary Reform."

POLE, William, Mus. Doc., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., civil engineer, was born in 1814. After following his profession in London for some years he was, in 1844, appointed by the East India Company Professor of Civil Engineering in Elphinstone College, Bombay. In 1847 he returned to London, devoting his chief attention to the mechanical branch of engineering. From 1871 to 1883 he was Consulting Engineer for the Imperial Railways of Japan, and on his retirement the Mikado honoured him with the decoration of the Third Degree (Knight Commander) of the Imperial Order of the Rising Sun. He served on the Council of the Institution of Civil Engineers from 1871 to 1885, in which year he was appointed Honorary Secretary. Between 1859 and 1867 he was Professor of Civil Engineering at University College, London, and Lecturer at the Royal Engineer Establishment, Chatham. He has done much scientific work for Government at various times and in various ways. From 1861 to 1864 he served as a member of the Committee on Iron Armour, and from 1863 to 1865 as a member of the Committee on the comparative merits of the Whitworth and Armstrong systems of Artillery. In 1870 he was employed by the Home Office to investigate the question of the introduction into the Metropolis of the Constant Service System of Water Supply, and he took an important part in the subsequent proceedings for carrying it into effect. In 1871 he was commissioned by the War Office to report on the Martini-Henry breech-loading rifles. In 1870 he was appointed by the Board of Trade as one of the Metropolitan Gas Referees, which office he still holds. He has acted as Secretary (in two instances under a special appointment by the Queen) to four Government Commissions of Inquiry; namely, from 1865 to 1867 to the Royal Commission on Railways; from 1867 to 1869 to the Royal Commission on Water Supply; from 1882 to 1884 to the Royal Commission for inquiring into the Pollution of the Thames; and in 1885 to a Committee on the Science Museums at South Kensington. In June, 1861, he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London; he has served six years on the council, and was Vice-President in 1876 and 1889. He was elected into the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1877, and into the Athenæum Club without ballot (as a scientific distinction) in 1864. He has done much literary work; he published in 1844 a quarto Treatise on the Steam Engine; in 1848 a translation of a German work on the same subject; in 1864 and 1870 Scientific Chapters in the Lives of Robert Stephenson and I. K. Brunel; in 1872 a Treatise on Iron; in 1877 "The Life of Sir William Fairbairn, Bart.;" and in 1888 "The Life of Sir William Siemens." He is also the author of a well-known scientific work on the game of Whist; has written a great number of papers for scientific journals and periodicals; and is a contributor to the Quarterly Review. He has likewise studied music he took in 1860 the Oxford degree of Bachelor, and in 1867 that of Doctor of Music, and remains a member of St. John's College in that University. He was the Chief Adviser of the University of London in their establishment of musical degrees in 1877, and afterwards held, for twelve years, the office there of Musical Examiner. He has been an organ-player, and was elected in 1889 an Honorary Fellow of the Royal College of Organists. He is the author of a "Treatise on the Musical Instruments in the Exhibition of 1851;" of "The Story of Mozart's Requiem," 1879; and "The Philosophy of Music," 1879. He is the composer of a well-known eight-part motet on "The Hundredth Psalm."

POLE, William (known under his stage name of William Poel), son of the above; was born in July, 1852, and in 1876 adopted the profession of an actor, and made his first appearance on the stage in the stock company at the Royal, Bristol. During a seven years' apprenticeship on the stage, Mr. William Poel devoted much study to the subject of Shakesperian texts and representations, and came to the conclusion that Shakespeare deserves the same classic and historic reverence on our own stage as Molière enjoys in France. In 1880 the first quarto of "Hamlet" was reproduced in photo-lithography, and the great value of this earliest version, as showing Shakespeare's original drift and intention, caused Mr. Poel, with the assistance of Dr. Furnivall, to reproduce it at St. George's Hall, where, in the spring of 1881, the play was acted in Elizabethan costume and without scenery. In 1887 the London Shakespeare Reading Society requested Mr. Poel to become their instructor, and under his assiduous and careful training they have given recitals of many of Shakespeare's plays. Mr. Poel is of opinion that scenery need not be dispensed with except where a play loses in dramatic force and intensity through its use, as he deems to be the case in most of the dramas of Shakespeare. In the autumn of 1893 Mr. Poel, with the assistance of Mr. Arthur Dillon, who had previously assisted him in the reproduction of Webster's "Duchess of Malfy," carried out his long-cherished scheme of building a stage after the Elizabethan model, and accordingly converted the stage of the Royalty into a close imitation of the proscenium, &c., of the old "Fortune." The play, produced by the Shakespeare Reading Society, was "Measure for Measure," and during the performance the audience on the stage and in balconies behind it appeared clad as Elizabethan gallants or ladies. Besides this Shakespearian work, Mr. Poel has dramatised Mr. Baring-Gould's "Mehalah" and Mr. Howells' "Foregone Conclusion," which forms part, under the title of "Priest and Painter," of Mr. F. R. Benson's repertory.

POLLEN, John Hungerford, M.A., son of Richard Pollen of Rodbourne, Wilts, born 1820, was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, and elected to a Fellowship of Merton, where he painted the College Chapel. He studied painting in Rome, was appointed Professor of Fine Arts by Cardinal Newman, in the Catholic University of Dublin; built and painted the Church in Stephen's Green, was appointed Official Editor of the Museum at South Kensington, and was inter alia Editor of the Universal Catalogue of Books on Art. He acts as Examiner for the Department, and is a member of the Committee of Selection in reference to purchases. He is the author of "Ancient and Modern Furniture and Woodwork," "Ancient and Modern Gold and Silversmith's Work," "The Trajan Column," and other publications; and has contributed to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," "Art Journal," "Magazine of Art," and several periodicals on subjects connected with the fine arts, and was Cantor Lecturer of the Society of Arts in 1885. He was appointed Private Secretary to the Marquis of Ripon in 1876. He has executed several paintings —designs for glass, mosaic, carving, &c. —in the Oratory, London; at Lyndhurst, Hants; Alton Towers (wars of the famous John Talbot); Blickling Hall; Kilkenny Castle; Wilton House; Heythrop House; Ingestre Hall; and many other places, both in this country and in India. Mr. Pollen is Corresponding Member of the Royal Academy of Madrid, the Archæological Society of Belgium, and other learned bodies.

POLLOCK, The Hon. Sir Charles Edward, was born Oct. 21, 1823, and received his education at St. Paul's School. When his father, the late Sir Frederick Pollock, was Attorney-General in 1843-4, Mr. Pollock acted as his secretary, and on the elevation of his father to the position of Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer in 1844, Mr. Pollock became a pupil of the late Mr. Justice Willes, in whose chambers he remained for nearly three years. Mr. Pollock was called to the Bar in 1847, and was created a Queen's Counsel in 1866. He was appointed a Baron of the Exchequer in succession to Mr. Baron Channell, resigned, in Jan. 1873, and soon afterwards received the honour of knighthood. Before his elevation to the Bench he published several legal text-books, including a "Treatise on the Law of Merchant Shipping," and another on the "Law and Practice of the County Courts."

POLLOCK, Professor Sir Frederick, Bart., eldest son of Sir William Frederick Pollock, Bart., and grandson of the late Sir F. Pollock, Chief Baron of the Exchequer, was born Dec. 10, 1845, and educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became Fellow in 1868. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1871, and was examiner in law at Cambridge, 1879-81. In 1882-3 he was Professor of Jurisprudence at University College, London; in 1883 was appointed Corpus Professor of Jurisprudence at Oxford (which office he still holds by re-election), and was Professor of Common Law in the Inns of Court, 1884-1890. He is also editor of the Law Quarterly Review, and has been Hon. Librarian of the Alpine Club since 1881. He has published "Principles of Contract," 1876; "Digest of the Law of Partnership," 1877; "The Law of Torts," 1883; "The Land Laws" (in "English Citizen" series), 1883; (all the foregoing have been revised in later editions); "Spinoza, his Life and Philosophy," 1880; "Essays in Jurisprudence and Ethics," 1882; and several other works, besides articles in various periodicals. In the summer of 1892 he went to Trinidad as a member of the Judicial Inquiry Commission held in that colony, and in the winter of 1893-4 he delivered the Lagore Law Lectures in Calcutta. He became editor of the "Law Reports" in Jan. 1895.

POLLOCK, Walter Herries, younger son of Sir W. F. Pollock, was born in London in 1850, and educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated (Classical Tripos) in 1871, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1874. Mr. Pollock has delivered lectures at the Royal Institution on historical and literary subjects, such as Richelieu, Colbert, Victor Hugo, Sir Francis Drake, Théophile Gautier, the Drama, etc., and is the author of "Lectures on French Poets," "The Picture's Secret," a novel, "Songs and Rhymes, English and French," "Verse of Two Tongues," "The Poet and the Muse," translated with introduction in original verse, from Alfred de Musset's "Nuits," "Old and New," a collection of verse, and "A Nine Men's Morrice," a volume of fantastic stories. In collaboration with Mr. Walter Besant he wrote "The Ballad-Monger," an adaptation of Banville's Gringoire, produced at the Haymarket Theatre by Mr. Tree, and he revised for Mr. Irving "The Dead Heart," by the late Watts Phillips. In 1884 Mr. Pollock became editor of the Saturday Review, of which he had long acted as assistant editor. His editorial connection with this journal was severed in 1894. Mr. Pollock is editor and part author of "Fencing," in the Badminton series.

PONSONBY, Gen. the Right Hon. Sir Henry Frederick, K.C.B., P.C., son of Major-General the Hon. Sir F. Ponsonby, was born at Corfu, in 1825, and after receiving a professional education at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, was appointed Ensign in the 49th Regiment in 1842. After being transferred to the Grenadier Guards, he was appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, and in 1849 was made Private Secretary to the Earl of Clarendon, an office which he held under Lords St. Germans and Carlisle while Viceroys of Ireland. In 1855 he joined the Grenadier Guards in the Crimea, and served at the siege of Sebastopol. On the conclusion of the war he was appointed Equerry to the Prince Consort, and after His Royal Highness's death, proceeded to Canada, where he commanded a battalion of the Grenadier Guards. On April 8, 1870, he was appointed Private Secretary to Her Majesty the Queen, and in Oct. 1878 Keeper of H.M. Privy Purse. He is a Member of the Privy Council, Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, Knight of the Third Class of the Order of the Medjidieh, Receiver-General of the Duchy of Lancaster, and one of the Royal Commissioners in the Exhibition of 1851.

POPE, His Holiness The. See LEO XIII.

PORTUGAL and the ALGARVES, King of. See CARLOS (DOM).

POTT, The Ven. Alfred, B.D., born at Norwood, Surrey, Sept. 30, 1822, was educated at Eton, and at Balliol and Magdalen Colleges, Oxford. He was appointed Vicar of Cuddesdon in 1852; first Principal of the Theological College there in 1853; Rector of East Hendred, Berks, in 1858; Vicar of Abingdon and Honorary Canon of Christ Church in 1868; Archdeacon of Berkshire, and Chaplain to the Bishop of Oxford in 1873; Vicar of Clifton Hampden, Oxfordshire, in 1874; and Vicar of Sonning, Berks, in 1882. Canon Pott is the author of "Confirmation Lectures," 1850; "Village Sermons," 1867; and several "charges," sermons, and tracts.

POTTER, The Right Rev. Henry Codman, D.D., LL.D., son of the late Bishop of Pennsylvania, and nephew of the late Bishop of New York, was born at Schenectady, New York, May 25, 1835. He graduated from Union College, Schenectady, and from the Theological Seminary of Alexandria, Virginia (1857). His first rectorship was in a small village (Greensburgh) in Pennsylvania, from which he went to St. John's Church, Troy, New York, and afterwards to Trinity Church, Boston. In 1868 he became Rector of Grace Church, New York, where he remained until 1883, when he was consecrated Assistant Bishop of New York, with the right of succession. He became Bishop of New York, on the death of his uncle, in Jan., 1887. He has published "Sisterhoods and Deaconesses," 1872; "The Gates of the East," 1876; "Sermons of the City," 1880; and "Waymarks," 1891, besides a number of sermons and discourses. In 1888 the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Cambridge (Eng.); in 1892, the degree of D.D. by the University of Oxford (Eng.); and in 1890 the same degree by Harvard University.

POULTON, Edward Bagnall, M.A., F.R.S., F.L.S., F.G.S., F.Z.S., of Wykeham House, Oxford, Hope Professor of Zoology in the University of Oxford, was born at Reading, Jan. 27, 1856, and is the only son of William Ford Poulton, architect. He was educated at the private school of the late W. Watson, B.A. (London), at Reading, and in 1873 he worked in the Biological Laboratory at the University Museum, Oxford, and obtained an open scholarship in Natural Science at Jesus College. In 1876 he obtained a first class in the Final Honour School of Natural Science. From 1877 to 1879, he was Demonstrator of Biology under the late Professor G. Rolleston. In 1878 he obtained the Burdett-Coutts University Scholarship in Geology; and from 1877 to 1878 he was Librarian of the Oxford Union Society, and in 1879 (Lent Term) its President. From 1880 to 1889 he was Lecturer in Natural Science, and then Tutor of Keble College, Oxford; 1881 to 1889 Lecturer in Natural Science, Jesus College, Oxford; 1886 to 1887 Lecturer in Zoology and Comparative Anatomy at St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington. In 1889 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; and in June, 1893, was elected Hope Professor of Zoology at Oxford in succession to the late Professor Westwood. He has published the following works: "On Mammalian Remains and Tree-Trunks in Quartern Sands at Reading," Quart. Journ. Geol. Soc., May, 1880; "Account of Working of Dowkerbottom Cave, Yorkshire," Geol. and Polytechnic Soc., W. Riding of Yorks., 1881, p. 351; "On the Minute Structure of the Tongues of Marsupialia and Monotremata," Quart. Journ. Micro. Sci., Jan. and July, 1883, Proc. Zool. Soc., Dec., 1883; "Ovary of Marsupialia and Monotremata," Quart. Journ. Micro. Sci., Jan., 1884; "The True Teeth of Ornithorhynchus," Proc. Roy. Soc., 1888, and Quart. Journ. Micro. Sci., July, 1888; "On the Colours and Markings of Lepidopterous Larvæ and Pupæ, &c.", published in the Trans. Ent. Soc., 1884, 5, 6, 7, 8, and in 1893, and in Proc. Zool. Soc., 1878 and 1891; "On the relation between the Colours of Lepidopterous Larvæ and Pupæ and those of their surroundings," Proc. Roy. Soc., 1885, 6, 7, and 1893, and Phil. Trans., 1887, and Trans. Ent. Soc., 1892; "On the External Morphology of the Lepidopterous Pupæ, &c.", Trans. Linn. Soc., 1890 and 1891. He is also one of the editors of the translation of Professor Weismann's "Essays on Heredity and Kindred Biological Problems," Clarendon Press, 1889, vol. ii., 1892; and is the author of "The Colours of Animals, their Meaning and Use, especially considered in the case of Insects," 1890, "International Scientific Series." At the 1890 meeting of the British Association held at Leeds, Professor Poulton delivered one of the Evening Addresses, choosing for his subject "Mimicry in the Animal Kingdom." In January and February, 1894, he delivered one of the courses of Lowell Lectures in Boston (Mass.) upon "The Meaning and Use of the Colours of Animals."

POWDERLY, Terence Vincent, American labour agitator, was born at Carbondale, Pa., Jan. 22, 1849. At the age of twelve he began tending switch on the railway of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Co., and later was apprenticed in its machine shops. In 1869 he went to Scranton, Pa., where he has since lived, and was employed in the shops of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western R. R. Co. He joined the Machinists' and Blacksmiths' Union in 1871, and soon became its President. In 1874 he was initiated into the Order of Knights of Labour (founded in 1869), and shortly afterwards succeeded in persuading the former Union to disband and enter the latter. From his entrance into the Order he became a very active member, and for many years was one of its district leaders. In 1879 he was elected Grand Worthy Foreman (the second highest office in the body), and later, in the same year, was made the head of it, General Master-Workman, a position he has been continuously re-elected to since. Under his management the Society has grown to be the largest and most powerful labour organization in the United States, and probably in the world, and has accomplished much in raising the wages, shortening the hours, and improving the condition of workmen. Mr. Powderly has been elected several times Mayor of Scranton. He helped to establish the Labor Advocate at Scranton in 1877 and frequently contributes to it as well as to the Journal of United Labor, and to other periodicals. When the Irish Land League movement was organized in America he was made one of the Vice-Presidents, and at the Convention in 1883 opened the meeting.

POWELL, David, Governor of the Bank of England, was born in 1840, and is the eldest son of the late David Powell, of Heath Lodge, Hampstead, and of St. Helen's Place. He was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took honours in the Classical Tripos of 1862. After travelling in South America Mr. Powell was admitted, in 1863, a partner in his father's firm, the old-established one of Cotesworth and Powell. In 1864 and 1865 he visited Australia and New Zealand, chiefly for business purposes. Returning to England, he married Elizabeth, the eldest daughter of Mr. Arthur Pryor, of Hylands, Essex, head of the firm of Messrs. Truman, Hanbury, Buxton & Co. He devoted himself to the business of his firm, and in 1870 was elected a director of the Bank of England, contemporaneously with Mr. Lidderdale. He assumed the office of Deputy-Governor of the Bank in 1889, and in 1892 succeeded Mr. Lidderdale as Governor. He is a director of the East and West India Docks, and was for some years chairman of that corporation. He is also a director of the Guardian Fire and Life Office.

POWELL, Major John Wesley, Ph.D., LL.D., American geologist, was born at Mount Morris, New York, March 24, 1834. His early life was passed at various places in Ohio, Illinois, and Wisconsin, and he studied at Illinois College and at Wheaton College, finally taking a special course at Oberlin (Ohio), teaching in the public schools at intervals in the meanwhile. At the outbreak of the Civil War he entered the Union army as a private, and by its close had gained the rank of Lieut.-Colonel, having lost his right arm during its progress. He had, prior to the war, attained prominence as a scientist, and in 1865 was made Professor of Geology and Curator of the Museum in the Illinois Wesleyan University, but he soon resigned this position to accept a similar one in the Illinois Normal University. In 1868 he organized and conducted an expedition to explore the cañon of the Colorado, which was so successful that Congress established, in 1870, a Topographical and Geological Survey of the Colorado River of the West, and placed it in his charge. The results of the thorough exploration made by him of the physical features of this region (covering about 100,000 square miles), and of other surveys instituted by the United States Government in the Rocky Mountain country proved so important, that Congress, in 1879, consolidated them under the permanent and independent organization of the United States Geological Survey, of which Major Powell, in 1881, succeeded Clarence King as the Director. In the meantime Major Powell had devoted considerable attention to ethnology and had issued through the Smithsonian Institution 3 vols. of "Contributions to North American Ethnology." To insure the continuance of this work a special Bureau of Ethnology was established by Congress and he was placed at its head, a position he continued to hold, in addition to the direction of the Survey, until the present year (1894), when he was compelled to resign them both on account of ill health. Major Powell received the degree of Ph.D. from the University of Heidelberg in 1886, and in the same year that of LL.D. from Harvard. In 1880 he became a Member of the National Academy of Sciences, and from 1879 to 1888 was President of the Anthropological Society of Washington. He became a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in 1875, its Vice-President in 1879, and President in 1887. In addition to these he is a Member of a number of other learned and scientific societies. His publications embrace many scientific papers and addresses and numerous government volumes, including reports of various surveys of the Bureau of Ethnology and of the U.S. Geological Survey. The special volumes which bear his own name are: "Explorations of the Colorado River of the West and its Tributaries," 1875; "Report on the Geology of the Eastern Portion of the Uinta Mountains," 1876; "Report on the Lands of the Arid Region of the United States," 1879; and "Introduction to the Study of Indian Languages," 1880. In 1890 he published a series of papers on irrigation in The Century Magazine.

POYNTER, Edward John, R.A., was born in Paris, March 20, 1836, being the son of Mr. Ambrose Poynter, architect. He was educated at Westminster School and at Ipswich Grammar School; afterwards he studied art in English schools from 1854 to 1856, and under Gleyre in Paris from 1856 to 1859. He was made an Associate of the Royal Academy in Jan. 1869; a Member of the Belgian Water-Colour Society in 1871; and was appointed Slade Professor of Art at University College, Gower Street, London, in May, 1871, the appointment being renewed in 1873 for four years. He was elected a Royal Academician, June 29, 1876. Mr. Poynter exhibited at the Royal Academy, "Israel in Egypt," 1867; "The Catapult," 1868; "Perseus and Andromeda," 1872; "More of More Hall and the Dragon," 1873; "Rhodope," 1874; "The Festival," and "The Golden Age," 1875; "Atalanta's Race," 1876; "The Fortune-Teller," his diploma picture, 1877; "Zenobia Captive," 1878; and "Diadumene," 1885. This picture was one of those which offered a text to the memorable discussion upon the morality of the nude in art which enlivened the season of 1885. Mr. Poynter also painted cartoons for the mosaic of St. George in the Westminster Palace, 1869; designed the architectural and tile decorations for the grill-room at South Kensington, 1868-70; painted a fresco at St. Stephen's Church, Dulwich, 1872-3; and has exhibited many other smaller works in the Academy and Dudley Water-Colour Exhibition, and at the Royal Water-Colour Society, of which he is a Member. At the Royal Academy in 1889 he exhibited "On the Terrace," and "A Corner in the Villa;" in 1890, "Pea Blossom," "On the Temple Steps;" in 1891 "The Meeting of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba;" a small finished study for the large picture of the same subject, containing more than sixty figures, exhibited at Mr. McLean's Gallery in 1890, and since sold to the National Gallery at Sidney in New South Wales; in 1892 "When the World was Young," and two portraits; in 1893, "Chloe," and the design for the border of the Queen's letter to the Nation after the death of the Duke of Clarence; in 1894 "Horæ Serenæ," "Idle Fears," and two sets of designs for the new coinage. Other pictures and water-colour drawings have been exhibited from time to time at the Grosvenor and New Galleries. In April, 1894, Mr. Poynter was appointed Director of the National Gallery in succession to Sir F. Burton. For several years he was Director for Art and Principal of the National Art Training School at South Kensington, but he resigned that office in July, 1881, though he consented to continue his connection with the Department as Visitor of the Training School. He is the author of "Ten Lectures on Art," 1879.

POYNTING, Professor J. H., D.Sc., F.R.S., was born in 1852, at Monton, near Manchester, and is the son of the late Rev. T. Elford Poynting, Unitarian Minister of Monton. He was educated first at a private school conducted by the Rev. T. E. Poynting, afterwards at Owens College, Manchester, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, graduating in Mathematical Tripos in 1876; late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; D.Sc., Cambridge; B.Sc., London and Victoria; F.R.S.; Demonstrator in the Physical Laboratory, Owens College, Manchester, under the late Professor Balfour Stewart, 1876-79; and Professor of Physics at Mason College, Birmingham, 1880. He has written the following papers: "On a Method of Employing the Balance with great delicacy and on its Employment to determine the Mean Density of the Earth," Proc. Roy. Soc., 1878; "On the Transfer of Energy in the Electromagnetic Field," Phil. Trans. 1884; "On the Connection between the Electric Current and the Electric and Magnetic Induction in the Surrounding Field," Phil. Trans., 1885; "On the Fluctuations in the Price of Wheat," Proc. of the Stat. Soc., 1884; "On a Determination of the Mean Density of the Earth and the Gravitation Constant by means of the Common Balance," Phil. Trans., 1891; and other physical papers. The Adams Prize in the University of Cambridge was awarded to him in 1893 for an Essay on the Mean Density of the Earth, since published.

PRAED, Mrs. Campbell Mackworth, née Rosa Murray-Prior, was born March 27, 1852, in Queensland, Australia. On her father's side she is of Irish descent. Her grandfather, Colonel Murray-Prior, fought in the 18th Hussars at Waterloo. Her father, a squatter in Australia, took an active part in Australian political life and held office as Postmaster-General in several Queensland Ministries. Mrs. Praed grew up between bush life and the life of the rising capital of the colony, Brisbane. In 1872 she married

Mr. Campbell Mackworth Praed, nephew of the poet Praed. The first years of her married life were passed on an island off the Queensland coast, bought by her husband as a cattle station. In 1876 she came, for the first time, with him to England. "An Australian Heroine," her first novel, was published in 1880; "Policy and Passion," 1881; "Nadine," 1882; "Moloch," 1883; "Zero," 1884; "Affinities," "Sketches of Australian Life," and "The Head Station," 1885; "The Brother of the Shadow," and "Miss Jacobsen's Chance," 1886; "The Bond of Wedlock," 1887, was also dramatized by Mrs. Praed and produced by Mrs. Bernard-Beere under the title of "Ariane" in the same year; "The Romance of a Station" was published in 1890. She has also written, in collaboration with Mr. Justin McCarthy, "The Right Honourable," published in 1886; "The Rival Princess," first published anonymously as "The Rebel Rose," 1888; "The Ladies' Gallery," 1889; "Australian Heroine," 1890; "Soul of Countess Adrian," 1891; "Romance of a Châlet," 1892; "Outlaw and Lawmaker," 1893; and "Christina Chard," 1894.

PREECE, William Henry, C.B., F.R.S., M.I.C.E., &c., was born in Carnarvon, on Feb. 15, 1834. He was educated at King's College, London, passing through the School and College. He first entered the engineering office of Mr. Edwin Clark in 1852, passing the next year into the Electric and International Telegraph Company, and became, three years later, superintendent of their southern district. In 1858 he was appointed engineer to the Channel Islands Telegraph Company, and in 1860 superintendent of telegraphs to the London and South Western Company. On the transfer of the telegraphs to the State, he became a Divisional Engineer, in 1877 was promoted to the post of Chief Electrician, and in 1892 to that of Engineer in Chief, which he still holds. His researches for the advancement of electricity, his practical inventions and his repute as a speaker and lecturer have made his name familiar to many outside the scientific world. He is a prominent member of many of the learned societies, including the Royal Society, the Institution of Civil Engineers, the Electrical Engineers (of which he is a past President), the Physical Society, the Royal Institution, the British Association and the Society of Arts. He was made Officier de la Légion d'Honneur in 1889, and in 1894 was appointed a Companion of the Order of the Bath. Mr. Preece has patented many inventions, though of late years his work is lost in that of his department at the General Post Office. These include a new method of duplex telegraphy, 1855; a new mode of "terminating" wires, 1858; working miniature signals by electricity to assimilate electric signals with outdoor signals on railways, 1862; the application of electricity to domestic telegraph purposes, 1864; the application of electricity for signalling between different parts of a train in motion, 1861; locking signals on railways by means of electricity, 1865; a new telephone, 1878, &c. He introduced both the telephone and the phonograph into England. Mr. Preece has written, in conjunction with Mr. Sivewright, a "Text-book of Telegraphy," which is in general use; with Dr. Julius Maier, "The Telephone;" and with Mr. Stubbs, a "Manual of Telephony." He has edited several works and read, at various scientific meetings, numerous papers on telegraphy, lightning conductors, the telephone, the phonograph, electric lighting, and various aspects of electricity, too numerous to mention.

PRENDERGAST, General Sir Harry North Dalrymple, V.C., K.C.B., born Oct. 15, 1834, served with the Sappers and Miners in Persia in 1857, and was present at the bombardment of Mohumrah, and served with the Malwa Field Force. He gained the Victoria Cross for conspicuous bravery on Sept. 23, 1857, at Mundisore, where he was severely wounded; he served throughout the Central India Campaign under Sir Hugh Rose, and was severely wounded at Jhansi. In the Abyssinian war he commanded the detachment of three companies of Madras Sappers and Miners. He was Field Engineer during the advance, and was present at the action before Magdala. During Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty he was appointed an honorary Aide-de-camp, and has since held many military commands in Madras. When the ultimatum was despatched to King Theebaw, and it was seen that war with Upper Burmah was inevitable, he was appointed to the command of the expeditionary force, and lost no time in dispatching his troops to the frontier. On the King's refusal to the terms proposed, General Prendergast issued a proclamation declaring that as no improvement could be hoped for in the "condition of affairs in Upper Burmah, the Government of India had decided that his Majesty should cease to reign." The expedition proceeded up the River

Irrawady, and the troops were engaged at Nyaungben Maw, Guegyaun Kamyo, Minhla, Nyaungoo, Pakoko and Myingyan. He reached Mandalay on Nov. 28, 1885, and with his troops surrounded the city and palace. The next day the King surrendered. General Prendergast was created a C.B. in May, 1875, and K.C.B. in Dec., 1885. Sir Harry Prendergast afterwards commanded all the forces in Burmah, and has since been employed as Resident at Travancore and at Mysore, and as Governor-General's Agent in Beluchistan and at Baroda.

PRESSENSÉ, Mdme. de, wife of the late eminent French divine, was born and brought up in Switzerland, and belongs to an old family of French refugees. Her father, M. du Plessis, lived in the Canton de Vaud, and was a man of old-fashioned literary tastes. Mdlle. du Plessis had thus the privilege of being brought up in the full enjoyment both of nature and of intellectual culture. Whilst still quite young she began to render her impressions in verse. At the age of eighteen she went to stay at Lausanne, where she came under the influence of Sainte Beuve and Vinet. It was here that Mdlle. du Plessis met her future husband, who was to take her to live in France. M. de Pressensé had come to Lausanne for his theological studies. He thence returned to Paris, where he was to begin his pastoral career. Mdme. de Pressensé was no longer quite young when her first book, "Rosa," appeared. She began to write with much diffidence, and only, as it were, in a tentative way. The success of this volume must have revealed to her her vocation as a writer, and it was followed at rapid intervals by others equally successful. The following are some of Mdme. de Pressensé's juvenile books: — "La joyeuse Nichée," "La Maison Blanche," "Bois-gentil," "Seulette," "Le Pré aux Saules," "Petit Monde d'Enfants," and "Petite Mère," which is perhaps the most touching book that Mdme. de Pressensé has written. But she has not written for children only; she has also addressed herself to another public. "Sabine," and "Gertrude de Chanzanne" are two novelettes forming one volume. "Geneviève" has been very severely judged in some quarters, but there can be no doubt that it appeals to our most generous instincts and that it is, moreover, full of vivid pictures, and observations both subtle and just, respecting the corner of Paris to which it takes us. The poems of Mdme. de Pressensé have obtained the rare success (for poems) of going through a large number of editions. Mdme. de Pressensé ceased to write poetry after 1870-71, but she then started a work in one of the poorest and most populous quarters of Paris, which, albeit small and humble in its beginnings, increased from day to day. Schools, workrooms, and infant schools have been founded by Mdme. de Pressensé.

PRESTWICH, Joseph, D.C.L., F.R.S., the descendant of an old Lancashire family, was born at Pensbury, Clapham, near London, March 12, 1812. He was educated at various preparatory schools, and in Paris, and finally at University College, London. Mr. Prestwich's first works were papers on the Gamrie Ichthyolites, and Shells in the Till of Banffshire, and on the Geology of Coalbrook Dale, published in the Transactions of the Geological Society, 1835; this was followed by a series of papers on Tertiary Geology, published in the Journal of the Geological Society, and by two papers on the Quaternary beds of the valley of the Somme, published in the Philosophical Transactions, in which he was the first to show on sufficient geological evidence the certainty of the fact of the contemporaneity of man with the extinct mammalia. He is also the author of a little work on the geology of the neighbourhood of London, entitled "The Ground beneath us," as well as of a more elaborate work, "The Water-bearing Strata of the Country around London." In 1849 the Geological Society awarded him the Wollaston Medal for his researches on the Coalfield of Coalbrook Dale, and those on the Tertiary districts of London and Hampshire. In 1865 the Royal Society awarded him a Royal Medal for his contributions to geological science, and more especially for his paper in the Philosophical Transactions "On the Occurrence of Flint Implements associated with the remains of animals of extinct species in beds of a late geological period in France and in England;" and that "On the Theoretical Considerations on the Conditions under which the Drift deposits containing the remains of extinct Mammalia and Flint Implements were accumulated, and on their geological age." He served on the Royal Coal Commission of 1866; and on the Royal Commission on Water Supply of 1867. He was President of the Geological Society 1870-72; Vice-President of the Royal Society 1870-71. In 1874 the Institution of Civil Engineers awarded him a Telford Medal and Premium for his paper on the "Geological Conditions affecting the Construction of a Tunnel between England and France."

He was appointed Professor of Geology at Oxford, June 29, 1874, in succession to the late Professor Phillips, and his inaugural lecture was published under the title of "The Past and Future of Geology," 1875. In 1876, in investigating the conditions for a better water-supply, he pointed out that there was under Oxford an abundant source of mineral water, allied to, but stronger than those of Cheltenham and Leamington. In 1876 his elaborate paper on "Submarine Temperatures," which reviewed all that had been done before the Challenger expedition appeared in the Philosophical Transactions. The vexata questio of the "Parallel Roads of Glen Roy" next engaged his attention, and this was followed by several other papers, amongst which may be mentioned those on "Underground Temperatures," and on "Volcanic Action." In 1885 he was elected by the Institute of France a Corresponding Member of the Academy of Sciences. In 1886, the 1st vol. (Chemical and Physical) of his work on "Geology" was published by the Clarendon Press. The 2nd vol. (Stratigraphical and Palæontological) with a Geological Map of Europe, appeared in 1888. In the same year the University of Oxford conferred upon him the honorary degree of D.C.L. He was elected President of the "Congrès Géologique International," which held its 4th Session in London in Sept., 1888. His latest papers, read at the Geological Society of London, relate to the Pre-glacial Drifts of the South of England, with a view to determine a base for the Quaternary series, and to ascertain the period of the genesis of the Thames. He has lately shown cause to believe that Western Europe was submerged at the close of the Quaternary period, and suggests that this might have given rise to the tradition of the Flood. A paper by him on this subject was communicated to the Society of Arts in 1893 (Dec.), by Professor Jones.

PRICE (Professor), The Rev. Bartholomew, M.A., F.R.S., son of the late Rev. William Price, Rector of Colne St. Dennis, Gloucestershire, where he was born in 1818, was educated at Pembroke College, Oxford, and graduated B.A. in 1840, taking first class honours in mathematics. He was elected Fellow of his college, and was afterwards appointed Tutor, and has several times been one of the Public Examiners in Mathematical and Physical Science. He was appointed Sedleian Professor of Natural Philosophy at Oxford in 1853, and is a member of the Hebdomadal Council, a Delegate of the Clarendon Press, a Curator of the Bodleyan Library, an honorary Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, a member of the Governing Body of Winchester College, and a visitor of Greenwich Observatory. He is the author of a work on the Infinitesimal Calculus, including separate treatises on Differential Calculus, Integral Calculus, Statics, and Dynamics, published at the Clarendon Press in 1854-89. Professor Price was for many years Secretary of the Clarendon Press, and on his resignation, in 1885, was succeeded by Mr. P. Lyttelton Gell.

PRIESTLEY, Sir William Overend, K.B., M.D., LL.D., born near Leeds, Yorkshire, June 24, 1829, is the son of Joseph Priestley, Esq., grand-nephew of the celebrated chemist, Joseph Priestley, LL.D. He was educated in London, Paris, and at the University of Edinburgh, and took the degree of M.D. in 1853. The hon. degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him in 1884. Besides other academic distinctions, he was Senate Gold Medallist at his graduation, this being the highest honour of the University, and awarded only for original researches. Settling in London as a physician in 1856, he became one of the lecturers at the Grosvenor Place School of Medicine. Somewhat later he was appointed Lecturer on Midwifery at the Middlesex Hospital, and in 1862 Professor of Obstetric Medicine in King's College, London, and Physician to King's College Hospital. He is now Consulting Physician to King's College Hospital. Sir William Priestley is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England; a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians both in London and in Edinburgh, a Fellow of the Linnean Society, a Fellow of King's College, a Member of the Council of King's College, and member of various learned societies. He has held the office of Examiner for the prescribed term of years in the University of London, the Royal College of Physicians, and the Royal College of Surgeons, the University of Cambridge and the Victoria University. In 1875 and 1876 he was President of the Obstetrical Society of London. Sir William Priestley is the author of works "On the Development of the Gravid Uterus," "On the Pathology of Intra-Uterine Death,' and joint editor of Sir J. Y. Simpson's "Obstetric Works;" and has written various papers on natural history and medicine. He was one of the Physicians-Accoucheurs of H.R.H. the late Princess Louis of Hesse (Alice of Great Britain), having been commissioned by the Queen to attend her daughter at Darmstadt.

He is also one of the Physicians-Accoucheurs of H.R.H. the Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein. He was knighted by the Queen in 1893 in recognition of his professional eminence.

PROCTOR, The Hon. Redfield, American Statesman, was born June 1, 1831, at Proctorsville, Vermont (a town founded by his grandfather). He graduated at Dartmouth College in 1851 and at the Albany Law School in 1859, and began the practice of his profession in Boston. At the outbreak of the Civil War he entered the Union Army as a Lieutenant and had risen to the rank of Colonel when mustered out in 1863. He resumed his law practice in Rutland, Vermont; was sent to the State Legislature (lower branch) in 1867 and 1868; and in 1869 became manager of the Sutherland Falls Marble Co. He was a member of the Vermont Senate in 1874; was elected Lieut.-Governor of the State in 1876; and Governor in 1878; and was a Delegate to the Republican National Conventions in 1884 and 1888. On the organization of President Harrison's Administration in March, 1889, Mr. Proctor was appointed Secretary of War. Upon the retirement of Senator Geo. F. Edmunds in 1891, Mr. Proctor resigned the War portfolio to accept appointment as U.S. Senator from Vermont, and in 1892, was elected by the State Legislature for the full senatorial term ending in 1899.

PULLEINE, The Right Rev. John James, D.D., Bishop of Richmond, son of the Rev. Robert Pulleine, Rector of Kirkby Wiske, Yorks, was born Sept. 10, 1841, at Spennithorne in Wensleydale. He was educated at Marlborough, and afterwards became Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge, and B.A. (2nd class Classical Tripos) 1865. He was Assistant Master to Dr. Bradley at Marlborough, 1865 to 1867; served as Curate of St. Giles in the Fields, 1868; and during his tenure of the Rectory of Kirkby Wiske, 1868 to 1888, was chaplain successively to Bishops Bickersteth and Carpenter. In 1888 he was appointed Suffragan to the Bishop of Ripon, and Rector of Stanhope in Weardale. The title of Bishop of Penrith, which he received at his consecration, was afterwards changed by Royal Warrant to Bishop of Richmond under the Bishops-Suffragan Nomination Act, 1889.

PUREY-CUST, The Very Rev. Arthur Percival, D.D., Dean of York, is the only surviving son of the late Hon. William Cust, by Sophia, daughter of the late Mr. Thomas Newnham, of Southborough, Kent, and grandson of the first Lord Brownlow. He was born in Feb., 1828, and was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he took his bachelor's degree in Easter Term, 1850, and was afterwards Fellow of All Souls', where he graduated M.A. in 1854. He was ordained deacon by the Bishop of Oxford (Dr. Wilberforce) in 1851, and was admitted into priest's orders by the Bishop of Rochester (Dr. Murray) in the following year. He was successively curate of Northchurch, Hertfordshire, and rector of Cheddington, Buckinghamshire, from 1853 to 1862, when he was appointed vicar of St. Mary's, Reading. He was subsequently appointed Rural Dean of Reading, and succeeded the Ven. Edward Bickersteth in the vicarage of Aylesbury, in 1875, but resigned that living in the following year, on being made Archdeacon of Buckingham. He was also appointed an Honorary Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, in 1874. In Feb., 1880, he was nominated by the Crown, on the recommendation of Lord Beaconsfield, to the Deanery of York, vacant by the death of the Hon. Augustus Duncombe. He married in 1854 Lady Emma Bess Bligh, younger daughter of the late, and sister of the present, Earl of Darnley.

PUVIS DE CHAVANNES, Pierre, a French painter, was born at Lyons, Dec. 14, 1824. He became a pupil of Henri Scheffer and Couture, and devoted himself specially to mural and decorative painting. His first considerable work was a series of five compositions intended for the dining-room of his brother. One of these, "Un Retour de Chasse," was exhibited at the Salon of 1859. In 1861 he exhibited "La Paix" and "La Guerre." These two subjects won for him his first public success. They were destined for the Museum at Amiens; and two others of the same series, "Le Travail" and "Le Repos," appeared at the Salon of 1863. These decorations were completed by eight symbolical figures and an allegorical representation of the Department of the Somme, "Ave Picadia Nutrix," 1865. He has also exhibited "L'Automne," 1864; "La Nuit," which attracted great attention; "La Vigilance" and "La Fantaisie," 1866; "Le Jeu," 1868; "Massilia, Colonie Grecque," and "Marseille, Porte de l'Orient," executed for the Museum of Marseilles, 1869. In 1872 "L'Espérance," in 1874 "Charles Martel, vainqueur des Sarrasins," "Radegonde au couvent de Ste. Croix" (staircase of the Poitiers Museum); 1875, "La famille du pécheur." From 1873 to 1878

"Scènes de la vie de St. Geneviève," for the Panthéon. In 1881 he exhibited "Le pauvre Pêcheur;" in the Salon in 1882, "Doux pays," and the great composition "Pro Patria Ludus" (staircase of the Amiens Museum), which won him the médaille d'honneur. In 1884 "Bois sacré" to which must subsequently be added three other compositions, "Vision Antique," "Inspiration Chrétienne," and "Le Rhône et le Saône." These four compositions are placed in the staircase of the Museum of Lyons. From 1886 to 1889 M. Puvis de Chavannes has painted the large hemicycle of the Sorbonne; and in 1890 "Inter Artes et Naturam" for the staircase of the Rouen Museum. In the latter year he was one of the promoters of the society of dissentient artists who started the Champ de Mars Salon in opposition to the time-honoured exhibition in the Champs Elysées. He became President of the Champs de Mars exhibition in succession to Meissonier, and has exhibited on its walls "Inter Artes et Naturam," 1890; "La Poterie" and "La Céramique," for Rouen; "l'Eté" and "l'Hiver," for the Hotel de Ville in Paris (1891 and 1892); and "L'Hommage de Victor Hugo à Paris," for the same (1893). He has won several medals, and in 1889 was promoted to be a Commander of the Legion of Honour.

PYNE, Mrs. Louisa. See BODDA-PYNE.

PYNE, James Kendrick, authority on organs and organ music, is the eldest son of Mr. Pyne, organist of Bath Abbey, and the grandson of a celebrated tenor singer. He showed signs of musical talent at an early age, and when only eleven years old was organist at All Saints' Church, Bath. At the age of twelve he was articled as pupil to Dr. S. S. Wesley, whom he followed to Winchester and Gloucester Cathedrals, where he acted as assistant organist and master of the boys. At Gloucester he was also successively organist of Christ Church, St. Mark's, St. Mary-le-Crypt, and St. James's, Cheltenham. In addition to this he was Chorus Master of the Festival Society, and conductor to the Oratorio Society. After serving his apprenticeship, he was made organist of Aylesbury Parish Church, at the suggestion of Sir F. Gore Ouseley, and organising conductor to the Buckingham Diocesan Choral Association. He was then for a short time at Christ Church, Clifton. In 1874 he was appointed organist of Chichester Cathedral, and in 1875 became organist of St. Mark's, Philadelphia, U.S.A., where he arranged a service on English cathedral lines. In 1876 he returned to England and succeeded Dr. Bridge as organist of Manchester Cathedral. Here he has won celebrity as a trainer of choristers and as an authority on church music and antique instruments. He has strong sympathies with French music, and as organist to the Corporation of Manchester, to which post he was appointed in 1877, performs on a magnificent French instrument by Cavaillé-Coll, which he values for its "absolute refinement" and "character of tone." During the winter he gives organ recitals in Manchester Town Hall. Mr. Pyne is an Hon. Fellow of the College of Organists, Hon. Licentiate of Trinity College, and a Vice-President of the Guild of Organists.

Q.

QUAIN, Sir Richard, Bart., M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Mallow, on the Blackwater, Oct. 30, 1816, and was educated at the Diocesan School of Cloyne. He began his professional life as an articled pupil to a surgeon-apothecary in Limerick. At the age of twenty he came to London, and entered, in Jan., 1837, the medical faculty of University College. Distinguishing himself in the various classes, he was appointed house-surgeon to University College Hospital, and subsequently for a period of five years he held the office of House Physician to that institution. In 1843 he was elected a Fellow of University College. He took the degree of M.B. at the University of London in 1840, gaining the scholarship and gold medal in physiology, as well as honours in surgery and midwifery; and in 1842 he graduated M.D., being the only candidate of the year who obtained honours in medicine, receiving the gold medal and a certificate of special proficiency. In May, 1860, he was nominated by the Queen in Council as a member of the Senate of the University from a list of three Fellows nominated by Convocation, of whom the late Sir George Jessell was one. He is chairman of the committee of the Brown Institution, which is under the control of the Senate. In 1846 he became a member of the Royal College of Physicians of London; in 1851 was elected a Fellow, and has since filled the offices of vice-president, of senior censor and member of Council; Lumleian lecturer (in 1872), "On the Diseases of the Muscular Walls of the Heart;" and Harveian orator in 1885, the subject being "The Healing Art in its Historic and Prophetic Aspects." He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1871; is a Fellow and has been Vice-President of the Royal Medico-Chirurgical and Medical Societies of London. One of the founders of the Pathological Society, he has filled its presidential chair, as well as that of the Harveian Society. He is a Fellow of the Statistical, Zoological, and a member of the Clinical and of other learned societies. He was appointed a Crown representative by the Queen in Council of the General Medical Council in 1863, and has since been reappointed six times, having been a trustee and one of the Treasurers of the Council during the whole period. He was elected to the distinguished position of President in 1891. As chairman of the Pharmacopœia Committee he has had much responsibility in the preparation and publication of the last two editions of "The British Pharmacopœia." Elected an assistant-physician to the Hospital for Diseases of the Chest at Brompton in 1848, he became full Physician in 1855, and continued in that office for twenty years, until his election on the consulting staff. He is also Consulting Physician to the Seamen's Hospital, Greenwich. Sir R. Quain is Physician Extraordinary to the Queen. He was a member of the Royal Commission appointed in 1865, with Earl Spencer as chairman, for investigating the rinderpest or cattle-plague, having as colleagues the present Lord Salisbury and the late Lord Sherbrooke, Lord Playfair, the late Dr. Parkes, and others. He took an active share in framing the scheme and method of investigation which resulted in obtaining a satisfactory knowledge of the nature of the disease, and the means for its prevention. His intimate acquaintance with the subject enabled him in The Times and Saturday Review to form and direct public opinion, which, from want of knowledge, was at first strongly opposed to the "stamping out" recommendations of the Commission. He is the editor of "A Dictionary of Medicine," published in 1882, 1816 pages, 8vo., of which 33,000 copies have been issued in this and other countries. This work has been lately re-issued (1874) in two volumes containing 2,518 pages. He has contributed numerous papers to the "Transactions" of learned societies and medical journals, amongst the former being a communication to the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Society, in which the true nature of fatty degeneration, especially in connection with the walls of the heart, was first described, and which has since largely influenced modern pathological doctrine. As President and member of the General Medical Council, as a member of the Senate of the University of London, and as a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, Sir R. Quain has constantly used his influence in the advancement of medical education and of the interests of his profession.

QUINCKE, Professor Georg, Ph.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., was born at Frankfurt-an-der-Oder, Prussia, on Nov. 19, 1834, and studied in Berlin, Koenigsberg, and Heidelberg; obtained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in Berlin in 1858, and has since been Professor of Physics in Berlin, Würzburg, and Heidelberg. He has published numerous papers on electricity, capillarity, and molecular forces, acoustics, and optics, in Poggendorff's Annalen, Pfluger's Archiv, &c. Professor Quincke is a Fellow of the Royal Society of London and of Edinburgh.

R.

RAGONA, Professor Domenico, Director of the Royal Observatory in Modena, was born in Palermo on Jan. 20, 1820, and studied in that Royal University. He derived very great advantage from the private instruction of his maternal uncle Domenico Scina, a celebrated Sicilian scientist. Whilst still very young, after the death of Scina, he competed for and obtained the post of demonstrator and Assistant Professor of Physics at the University of Palermo. Afterwards he was appointed assistant at the Royal Observatory of Palermo. In 1851, after having carried out long and arduous astronomical and geodesical observations with regard to the triangulation of the province of Palermo, he was sent, at the expense of the government, to Germany for some years, in order to perfect himself in the science of astronomy. He had excellent theoretical and practical instructions in Berlin from Professor Encke, and in Bonn from Argelander. In Berlin he had the honour of enjoying the affection and esteem of the most celebrated Baron Alexander Humboldt, through whose powerful influence Ragona obtained a Merz's refractor of great dimensions, and one of Pistor and Martin's meridian-circles, instruments which now adorn the Observatory of Palermo. On his return after his long travels, and after having visited the principal observatories of Europe, he was appointed director of the Observatory of Palermo and Professor of Astronomy. He held that post up to 1860, and then was transferred to the Observatory of Modena, where he is still. As regards the astronomical works of Professor Ragona, it is sufficient to mention: the observations carried on in Berlin and published in the Transactions of that observatory; the numerous determinations of fixed stars, and principally of 30 fundamental or principal stars; the observations of a great number of planets and comets, published in the Bulletin International of Le Verrier and in the Astro-Meteorological Journal of Palermo; the invention of two new micrometers; the measurements of the diameters of various planets, published in the Memoirs of the Society of Natural Sciences of Cherbourg, &c.; the Ephemerides of Vesta for 1855, published in the Berlin Annals; the calculations of the orbits of planets and comets, printed separately, and in the above mentioned Astro-Meteorological Journal; the treatise on the theory of the equatorial; and the new formulæ for the calculations of the parallax. Among his works with regard to Physics may be mentioned the notes on the phenomena of deflection causing the longitudinal lines or bands of the spectrum, published in Poggendorff's Annalen, and reproduced in the Philosophical Magazine; and the observations on some new subjective coloration discovered by Ragona, which observations were printed in many scientific journals of Europe, and mentioned by Helmholz in his classical work, "Physiological Optics." Professor Ragona has published numerous papers on meteorology. They contain many new and fundamental laws in meteorology, especially his annual and diurnal periods of meteorological elements; on the daily oscillations in the declination of the magnetic needle; on the velocity of the wind; on nebulosity, &c., as also on the relation of meteorology to terrestrial magnetism. Professor Ragona has not only published many dissertations on various subjects relating to meteorology and magnetism, but what is much more, has also enriched these branches with many new instruments. Ragona founded the Italian Meteorological Society, and presided over it for the first three years, when he was succeeded by Father Denza. Professor Ragona also translated from German into Italian the classical treatise on meteorology by Professor Mohn. Professor Ragona founded, in 1870, a network of meteorological field-stations in the province of Modena, the first in Italy provided with that useful arrangement. Professor Günther, in his account of the present state of practical meteorology, and Professor Kuhn, in his report to the Royal Academy of Sciences of Bavaria on some works of Ragona, count him among the most illustrious meteorologists of our time.

RAILTON, Herbert, artist, was born Nov. 21, 1857, at Pleasington, near Blackburn, in Lancashire, and was educated at Mechlin, in Belgium, and then at Ampleforth College, in Yorkshire; he was articled to an architect, but gave up his profession, and went to London in the beginning of 1884 to try art work, since which time he has resided there. He has illustrated several books, viz., the greatest portion of "Windsor Castle," in 1886; the "Jubilee Edition of Pickwick," in 1887; "Coaching Days and Coaching Ways" (along with his friend Hugh Thomson), in 1888; "Westminster Abbey," 1889; and "Dreamland in History," the illustrations to which have been running in a series of articles by the Dean of Gloucester, in Good Words.

RAMSAY, Professor William, Ph.D., F.R.S., was born at Glasgow, Oct. 2, 1852; his father, of the same name, was a civil engineer, and subsequently Secretary to the Scottish Union and National Insurance Office; he was brother to Sir Andrew Ramsay, the geologist; his mother, Catherine Robertson, was the daughter of Archibald Robertson, M.D., who practised in Edinburgh. William Ramsay was educated at the Glasgow Academy up till his fifteenth year, and subsequently at Glasgow University. At the age of 19 he went to Tübingen to study chemistry under Professor Fittig, now at Strasburg, and graduated Ph.D. in 1872. From 1872 to 1874 he acted as Chief Assistant to the "Young" Chair of Technical Chemistry in Anderson's College, Glasgow; and from 1874 to 1880 as "Tutorial" Assistant to the Chemical Professor in Glasgow University. He was appointed Professor of Chemistry in University College, Bristol, in 1880; Principal of that College in 1881; was President of the Bristol Naturalists' Society from 1884 to 1887; was appointed to the Chemical Chair at University College, London, in 1887, which appointment he now holds. He was elected a Fellow of the German Chemical Society in 1872, of the Chemical Society of London in 1874; and is one of the original members of the Institute of Chemistry, and of the Society of Chemical Industry. He was elected a Fellow of the Physical Society in 1886, and of the Royal Society of London in 1888; and has served on the Councils of the Physical and Chemical Societies. He is the author of numerous papers in the Philosophical Transactions, the Chemical Society's Transactions, and in other British and Foreign Journals; also of several Textbooks of Chemistry. Professor Ramsay announced in 1894 his discovery, simultaneously with Lord Rayleigh, of a new element in the atmosphere which has been named "Argon."

RANAVALO, Manjaka III., is Queen of Madagascar; but the power is really in the hands of the Prime Minister, Rainilaiarivony, who, in accordance with Madagascar custom, has married her. He has been previously twice married to women of the blood royal. The Queen is described as a lady some thirty-five years of age, who lives a mean and secluded life in her palace at Antananarivo. Of recent years she has made more than one effort to assert her power as against her ministerial consort, who is now an old man.

RANDALL, Right Rev. James Leslie, Suffragan Bishop of Reading, received his education at New College, Oxford, where he graduated as B.A. in 1852 (M.A. 1855, Hon. D.D. 1889). He was for some time a Fellow of his college, and from 1852-57 was curate of Warfield, Berks. From 1857 to 1878 he was Rector of Newbury, and Rural Dean of the same from 1867 to 1878. From 1878 to 1880, when he became Hon. Canon of Christ Church, he was rector of Sandhurst, and from 1882 to 1885 rector of Mixbury, Oxon. He was appointed Archdeacon of Buckingham in 1880. On Nov. 1, 1889, he was consecrated Bishop Suffragan of Reading in Westminster Abbey.

RANDEGGER, Cavaliere Alberto, composer, conductor, and singing-master, was born at Trieste, April 13, 1832. He began the study of music, at the age of thirteen, under Lafont for the pianoforte and L. Ricci for composition; and soon began to write, and, by the year 1852, was known as the composer of several masses and smaller pieces of church music, and two ballets, "La Fidanzata di Castellamare," and "La Sposa d'Appenzello," both produced at the Teatro Grande of his native town. In the latter year he joined three other of Ricci's pupils in the composition of a buffo opera to a libretto by Gaetano Rossi, entitled "Il Lazzarone," which had much success, first at the Teatro Mauroner at Trieste, and then elsewhere. The next two years were occupied as musical director of theatres at Fiume, Zara, Sinigaglia, Brescia, and Venice. In the winter of 1854 he brought out a tragic opera in four acts, called "Bianca Capello," at the chief theatre at Brescia. At that time Signor Randegger was induced to come to London. He gradually took a high position there, and has become widely known as a teacher of singing, conductor, and composer, and an enthusiastic lover of good music, of whatever school or country. In 1864 he produced at the Theatre Royal, Leeds, "The Rival Beauties," a comic opera in two acts. In 1868 he became Professor of Singing at the Royal Academy of Music, and has since been a Director of that institution, and a Member of the Committee of Management. In the autumn of 1857 he conducted a series of Italian operas at St. James's Theatre; and in 1879-80 the Carl Rosa Company at Her Majesty's Theatre. He has since been appointed conductor of the Norwich Festival, vice Sir Julius Benedict resigned. For the last seven years he has conducted Italian opera at Covent Garden. In 1892 Signor Randegger was made a Knight of the Crown of Italy. Signor Randegger's published works are numerous and important.

RANSOME, Arthur, M.D., M.A. Cantab., F.R.S., the son of Joseph A. Ransome, twenty years surgeon to the Manchester Royal Infirmary, was born at Manchester on Feb. 11, 1834, and was educated at Manchester, Dublin, Cambridge, London and Paris. He took diploma as licentiate in midwifery, Dublin, 1853; M.R.C.S. 1855; L.S.A. 1856; M.B. Cambridge, 1858; M.D. Cambridge, 1869; and was elected F.R.S. in 1885; and Hon. Fellow of Caius College in 1892. When at Cambridge, at Gonville and Caius College, he was Caran Scholar in Anatomy and Physiology, and Mecklenburg Scholar in Chemistry. He obtained honours in Mathematics in the second class (Senior Optimes) in 1856; and first class in the Natural Science Tripos. He was Honorary Secretary and Lecturer in Physiology to the Working Men's College, Manchester, from 1857-60. He joined the Committee of the Manchester and Salford Sanitary Association in 1857; was Honorary Secretary in 1861 and 1862; Deputy-Chairman from 1874-80; and has been Chairman since 1880. During that period he has taken an active part in assisting the Association in the formation of the following institutions:—"The Nurse Training," "The North-Western Association for Medical Officers of Health," "Noxious Vapours Prevention Association," "The Day Nursery Association," and the "Children's Country Holiday Fund." He was instrumental in promoting weekly returns of sickness, which were for twenty years published by the Association. The success of the undertaking and Dr. Ransome's efforts, first as Honorary Secretary, and afterwards as Chairman of the Registration of Disease Committee, have materially forwarded the notification of infectious sickness throughout the country. In connection with this subject he wrote pamphlets on "Numerical Tests of the Health of Towns," "Epidemics Studied by Means of Statistics of Disease," "Disease in St. Marylebone and Manchester," "Ten Years of Disease, between 1861 and 1870, in Manchester and Salford." To the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society he has contributed papers on the "Influence of Atmospheric Changes on Disease," "Atmospheric Pressure and its Relations to Disease, especially Hæmorrhages," "The Germination and Early Growth of Seeds," "On the Organic Matter of the Breath," "On Epidemic Cycles," and "On the Graphical Representation of Chest Movements." In the Proceedings of the Royal Society he has published papers on the "Movements of the Chest," and on the "Discovery of the Tubercle Bacillus in the Aqueous Vapour of the Breath." To the Epidemiological Society he has communicated papers published in their Transactions "On the Form of the Epidemic Wave," and "On Tubercular Infective Areas;" to the Medico-Chirurgical Society "On Respiratory Movements of Man," and "Observations on the Value of Stethometry in the Prognosis of Chest Diseases;" to the British Medical Association, and published in their journal, "On the Need of Combined Medical Observation," "On the Physiological Relations of Colloid Substances;" and numerous other papers. To the Health Journal he has contributed papers "On the Distribution of Death and Disease," and the "Causes of Consumption." He has published two larger works, one on "Stethometry" and the other on "Prognosis in Lung Disease." As President of the Health Section of the British Medical Association and in other capacities, he has deliveral several addresses relating to "State Medicine," and before the Sanitary Institute he has lectured on the "Success of Sanitary Effort," and "On the Prevention of Phthisis." He was instrumental in organizing the Collective Investigation of Disease by the British Medical Association; and in 1875 his suggestions for an examination in Sanitary Science were adopted by the University of Cambridge; the result of which has ultimately been the issue of Diplomas in Public Health by all the universities of the Kingdom. He holds an appointment as Honorary Physician to the Manchester Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Throat; and in connection with this work has published papers "On the Influence of Iodoform upon the Body-weight in Phthisis;" "On the Value of the Bacillus Search," "On the Use of Ozone in Phthisis," "On Intrapulmonary Injections." He was for two years Examiner for the second M.B. to the University of Cambridge, and for seven years for the Diploma in Public Health of the same University. He was until 1890 and is now again Examiner in Hygiene and Public Health to the Victoria University, and lecturer on these subjects to the Owens College. He was again appointed Examiner in Public Health at Cambridge in 1893, and was appointed Milroy Lecturer to the College of Physicians for the year 1890, his subject for four lectures being "The Etiology and Prevention of Phthisis," afterwards published in book form by Smith, Elder, and Co. He has contributed an article on Vital Statistics to a "Treatise on Hygiene and Public Health," published by Messrs. Churchill and Co.

RASSAM, Hormuzd, was born in 1826, at Mossul, in Northern Mesopotamia, on the bank of the Tigris, opposite the site of ancient Nineveh. In 1845 he joined Mr. Layard to assist him in his Assyrian researches, and lived with him as his friend and guest for more than two years. When Mr. Layard returned to England in 1847 Mr. Rassam came with him to complete his studies at Oxford, but at the end of 1849 he was sent out by the Trustees of the British Museum to assist Mr. Layard in his second undertaking. The history of this mission was published by Mr. Layard in his "Nineveh and Babylon." The Trustees having determined to carry on further researches, they commissioned Mr. Rassam to succeed him. During this expedition Mr. Rassam discovered in Nineveh the palace of Assur-Beni-Pal, who is commonly known by the name of Sardanapalus, in which there were found the beautiful sculptures representing the lion hunt, now in the British Museum, and the legends of the Creation and Deluge, with many other remarkable antiquities relating to the history of the Assyrian monarchy. The funds available for the researches having come to an end, Mr. Rassam returned to England in 1851. After this he held a political appointment at Aden. When the quarrel took place in 1861 between the Imam of Muscat and his brother, the Sultan of Zanzibar, Mr. Rassam was chosen by Lord Elphinstone, the Governor of Bombay, to represent the British Government at Muscat while the Governor-General of India was trying to act as a mediator between the brothers. He also received the special thanks of the Supreme Government of India, with a substantial present for the services he rendered to the State during the Indian Mutiny. When the news reached the Foreign Office in 1864 that Consul Cameron and other European gentlemen had been imprisoned and ill-treated by Theodore, King of Abyssinia, Mr. Rassam was chosen by the Home Government to proceed to the court of that monarch with a letter from the Queen asking for the release of the captives. He accordingly went to Massowah, the port of Abyssinia, whence he wrote to Theodore for a safe conduct; and after having waited there more than a year, he was invited by the king to proceed to his court. Mr. Rassam was accompanied by Lieutenant Prideaux and Dr. Blanc, of the Bombay army, and they were received with every mark of distinction and honour. It seemed at one time that Mr. Rassam's mission would be crowned with success, but through Theodore's eccentricity, coupled with intrigue from other quarters, it was doomed to disappointment. Hopeful as Mr. Rassam was at first of procuring the liberation of Consul Cameron and the other captives, he was himself arrested with his suite, and the three were sent as prisoners with the old captives to Magdala, where they were kept in chains for nearly two years. After the old captives, Consul Cameron and his fellow prisoners, had undergone about four years' rigorous confinement, and Mr. Rassam and his companions had shared their fate for nearly two years and a half, they were ultimately set free by Theodore on the Easter Eve of 1868, after his defeat the day before by the British force under the command of Sir Robert Napier, at Arogay, below Magdala. Mr. Rassam published a narrative of the "British Mission to Theodore, King of Abyssinia, with Notices of the Country traversed from Massowah through the Soudan, the Amhara, and back to Amnesty Bay from Magdala," 2 vols., London, 1869. In 1876 he was selected by the Trustees of the British Museum to conduct the Assyrian Explorations under a favourable Firman granted to him by the Ottoman Government, through the influence of Sir Henry Layard, who was then acting as Her Majesty's ambassador at Constantinople. From that time until July, 1882, he conducted the British National Archæological researches in Assyria, Armenia, and Babylonia; during which time he succeeded in securing for the British Museum important relics connected with the history of those three great ancient kingdoms, amongst which he discovered, in a small mound called "Balawat," in the vicinity of Nineveh, a magnificent bronze gate, twenty feet high, forming a memorial of the wars of Shalmenesar III., B.C. 850. The rich embossed bronzes are now in the British Museum. He also discovered, amongst other sites, the great cities of Sippara, or Sepharvaim, and Cuthah, situated in Southern Mesopotamia. During his different expeditions to Assyria and Babylonia he acquired for the National Institution about ten thousand whole, and more than one hundred thousand pieces of terra-cotta and clay inscribed tablets, with a large number of different shaped terra-cotta cylinders and marble tablets recording the religious and general history of those two kingdoms. During the Turko-Russian war of 1877 he was sent by the British Foreign Office on a special mission to Asia Minor, Armenia, and Kurdistan, to inquire into the condition of the different Christian communities, who were said to be maltreated by their Moslem fellow-countrymen.

RAVENSTEIN, Ernest George, geographer and statistician, was born at Frankfort-on-Main, Dec. 30, 1834; and held an appointment in the Topographical and Statistical Department of the War Office, 1855-74. He has published "The Russians on the Amur" (London, 1861); "Geographie und Statistik des britischen Reiches" (Leipzig, 1862); "London," one of Meyer's Handbooks for Travellers (first edition, 1870); "London and the British Isles, an Itinerary Guide" (London, 1877); "The Laws of Migration" (London, 1878); "Englischer Sprachführer" (Leipzig, 1884); and various papers in the Journals of the Royal Geographical and Statistical Societies, &c. He is likewise the compiler of numerous maps, including one of Eastern Equatorial Africa, in 25 sheets, published by the Royal Geographical Society; another of British East Africa, issued by authority of the Imperial British East Africa Company. Mr. Ravenstein was one of the founders of the German Gymnastic Society, 1861, was its President during the first ten years of its existence, and published a "Handbook of Gymnastics and Athletics," London, 1864.

RAWLINSON, Professor The Rev. George, M.A., F.R.G.S., third son of A. T. Rawlinson, Esq., of Chadlington, Oxon., born about 1815, was educated at Swansea Grammar School, and at Ealing School; entered Trinity College, Oxford, in 1835; took a first class in classics in 1838; and was elected a Fellow of Exeter College in 1840. He obtained the Denyer prize for a Theological Essay in 1842, and again in 1843; and having held for some years a Tutorship in his College, was appointed Moderator in 1852; became Public Examiner in 1854, and again in 1856, 1868, and 1874; and preached the Bampton Lecture in 1859. He was elected without a contest to the Camden Professorship of Ancient History in the University in 1861, and took an active part in the agitation which preceded the passing of the Oxford University Act, in favour of the changes then effected. In Sept., 1872, he was appointed a Canon of Canterbury by the Crown; and in 1888 was presented by the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury to the Rectory of All Hallows, Lombard Street, London. He has written (in conjunction with his brother, Sir Henry Rawlinson, and Sir G. Wilkinson) "The History of Herodotus," a new English version, with copious notes, 1858-60; and also, independently, "The Historical Evidences of the Truth of the Scripture Records, in Eight Lectures delivered in the Oxford University Pulpit, at the Bampton Lecture for 1859," published in 1860; "The Contrasts of Christianity with Heathen and Jewish Systems, in Nine Sermons preached before the University of Oxford on various occasions," 1861; "The Five Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World," 4 vols., 1862-67; "A Manual of Ancient History," 1869; "The Sixth Great Oriental Monarchy; or, the Geography, History, and Antiquities of Parthia," 1873; "The Seventh Great Oriental Monarchy; or, the Geography, History, and Antiquities of the Sassanian or New Persian Empire, collected and illustrated from Ancient and Modern Sources," in 1876; a "History of Ancient Egypt," 2 vols., in 1881; a "History of Phœnicia," in 1889; and other smaller works. Professor Rawlinson contributed an essay, the subject being "The Genuineness and Authenticity of the Pentateuch," to "Aids to Faith," edited by Dr. Thomson, in reply to "Essays and Reviews;" and was a large contributor to Dr. Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible." He wrote the article on "Herodotus" in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He supplied the comments on Kings, Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, and the two Books of Maccabees, to "The Speaker's Commentary;" that on Exodus to the Bishop of Gloucester's "Commentary on the Old Testament;" and those on Exodus, II. Kings, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, and Isaiah to the "Homiletic Commentary" of Dean Spence and Mr. Exell. During recent years he has written in "Men of the Bible" on the lives and times of Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Ezra, and Nehemiah. In 1893 he published "Parthia" in "The Story of the Nations." He held the office of Classical Examiner under the Council of Military Education from 1859 to 1870. He has been Proctor in Convocation for the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury since 1873. He was selected a Member of the Athenæum Club, as the representative of Literature, in 1870, and is a Corresponding Member of the Royal Academy of Turin.

RAWLINSON, Sir Robert, K.C.B., civil engineer, born in Bristol, Feb. 28, 1810, is the son of Thomas Rawlinson, of Chorley, Lancashire, and Grace Ellice, of Exeter, Devonshire. Mr. Rawlinson's father being a mason and builder at Chorley, the son learned the practical part of that business there, and in 1831 entered, under Jesse Hartley, C.E., the Liverpool Dock Engineer's office, and in 1836 passed on to the Blisworth Contract (London and Birmingham Railway), under Robert Stephenson, C.E. On the completion of that line of railway Mr. Rawlinson returned to Liverpool, and became assistant surveyor to the corporation, remaining such to the end of 1844. Then, at the recommendation of Mr. Hartley, he became engineer to the Bridgwater Canal. In 1847 he devised a scheme to supply Liverpool with sixty million gallons of pure water per day, to be brought by an aqueduct from Bala Lake and the district in North Wales. This project was, however, considered at the time too grand for the town. During the time that he was assistant-surveyor to the Corporation he was brought into contact with the late Harvey Lonsdale Elmes, the young architect to St. George's Hall, Liverpool, and he designed and constructed the hollow brick ceiling over the great hall, which is the lightest work of the kind in existence. In the autumn of 1848 Mr. Rawlinson was appointed by the government of the day one of the first superintendent inspectors under the Public Heath Act; and as the father of Modern Engineering Sanitary Science, he made at Dover the first inspection (1849) and wrote the first report. He also inspected and reported on Berwick-upon-Tweed, Alnwick, Morpeth, Gateshead, North Shields, Exham, Penrith, Keswick, Carlisle, Lancaster, Ormskirk, and many other cities, towns, and villages. But his most important work was the devising, executing, and establishing a new system of main sewering, which has been accepted and is acted upon in all parts of the civilized world. In the spring of 1855 he was sent as Engineering Sanitary Commissioner to the British Army in the East. The commissioners landed at Constantinople, March 6, 1855, and at the harbour of Balaclava on April 3. Works were begun immediately, both at the great hospitals situate on the Bosphorus and at the camp in the Crimea, such as cleansing, ventilating, and furnishing purer water. The returns from the four great hospitals on the Bosphorus, containing upwards of 4,000 sick British soldiers, showed, March 17, 1855, an average rate of mortality equal to 8·61 per cent. per month of the sick, which mortality was reduced by June 30 of the same year to 1·01 per cent. per month. In the Crimea, during the winter (1854-55) previous to the advent of the Sanitary Commission, the losses in some regiments at the front had ranged for three months as high as seventy per cent., a mortality unexampled even in the worst of any former wars; by the end of this summer (1855) the entire British army in the Crimea was placed in a better state of health, and had a lower rate of mortality than it had ever experienced in barracks at home. Under the supervision of sanitary committees established upon this Crimean pattern, the average mortality in the British army has, since 1858, been reduced about one-half, that is, from 17·5 per 1,000 to below 8·0 per 1,000 per annum. Sir R. Rawlinson has received acknowledgments and thanks for his services and reports on Army sanitation from the Secretary of the Sanitary Commission of North America at the termination of their Civil War, from the Emperor of Germany, Prince Bismarck, and Count Moltke. Waterworks, on the English plan, have been executed, under Mr. Rawlinson's directions, for Hong Kong and Singapore. A great social question was entrusted to Mr. Rawlinson during the Cotton Famine, caused by the American War. In 1863 he was sent to Lancashire by Lord Palmerston's Government, as Engineer Commissioner to organize, under the Right Hon. Pelham Villiers, M.P., President of the Poor Law Board, "Work for Wages" amongst the distressed cotton operatives. Sanitary works were carried out simultaneously in ninety-three towns and places within the distressed cotton districts. Mr. Rawlinson practically proved that Government could profitably lend money at 3½ per cent. for town improvements and sanitary works generally, without loss to the State, and strongly advocated the extension of the practice to all cases; consequently an Act is now in force under the powers of which the Exchequer Loan Commissioners can advance money to any Urban or Rural Sanitary Authority for terms extending to 60 years—30 years at 3½ per cent., 40 years at 3¾ per cent., and 50 years and upwards at 4 per cent. Up to the present date, repayments of loans with interest have been made without loss in any instance. Mr. Rawlinson has served on several royal commissions; as chairman on the royal commission for inquiring into and reporting on the Pollution of Rivers, as chairman of the royal commission for inquiring and reporting on the improvement of the sanitary condition of Dublin, and the purification of the river Liffey, and on special Government inquiries, and is a member of the Army Sanitary Committee, which considers all questions connected with barracks, hospitals, and stations for the army, both at home and abroad. He was decorated with the civil Companionship of the Bath (1865), and has been Chief Engineering Inspector under the Local Government Board, and Commissioner to grant certificates under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act. He received the honour of knighthood, Aug. 23, 1883. He retired at Christmas, 1889, and upon the recommendation of Lord Salisbury, received from the Queen at Windsor the decoration of K.C.B.

RAWSON, Sir Rawson William, K.C.M.G., C.B., eldest son of the celebrated oculist, Sir William Adams, who assumed the name of Rawson (that of his wife) in 1825, was born in London, Sept. 8, 1812; was educated at Sunbury, Rottingdean, and Eton, 1825-28; and was appointed to the Board of Trade in Jan., 1829 at the age of sixteen. In 1830 he became Private Secretary to the Vice-President, Mr. Poulett Thomson; and, in 1834, to the President, Mr. Alex. Baring. Upon the creation of the Statistical Department in the Board of Trade, he was appointed first assistant to its chief, Mr. G. R. Porter, which office he continued to hold until 1842. In 1835 he became a Fellow of the Royal Statistical Society of London, one of its Honorary Secretaries and Editor of its Journal; in 1838 he became a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society; and in 1841 was elected a member of its Council; in 1838 he became a member of the British Association for the advancement of Science; and, in the three following years, acted as one of the Secretaries of Section F (Statistical Science). In 1841, upon the Hon. W. E. Gladstone's appointment to the office of Vice-President of the Board of Trade, he selected Mr. Rawson to be his Private Secretary; but in July, 1842, Mr. Rawson was called away to Canada, having been selected by the late Lord Derby, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, for the office of Chief, or Civil, Secretary in that Colony. Subsequently the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with a view to the abolition of that office, transferred Mr. Rawson to the Treasurership of Mauritius, to which island he proceeded in Jan. 1844. There he took a prominent part in the business of the Council, as President of the Finance Committee. He conducted inquiries concerning, and submitted two important reports upon, the expediency of continuing the Immigration of Indian Coolies into the island, and upon the value of the Silver Rupee. He also conducted the Census of the island in 1851. In 1849 he visited England on leave, and married Marianne Sophia, the daughter of the Hon. and Rev. H. Ward, with whom he returned to Mauritius in 1850. In 1854 he was promoted to the Colonial Secretaryship of the Cape of Good Hope. For his services in the first session, in the double capacity of Colonial Secretary and Financial Minister, having a seat in both Houses, he was created a C.B. Here, too, he directed the Census of the Colony in 1861, and he also published, with Dr. Pappe, a "Synopsis of the Ferns of South Africa." In 1864, during the Civil War in the United States, the Duke of Newcastle, having induced the Legislature of the Bahamas to increase the salary of their Governor for six years, offered the post to Mr. Rawson, which he accepted, together with the dormant commission of Acting Governor of Jamaica. While in the Bahamas, Mr. Rawson, in his first annual Blue Book report, made the first correct and complete description of the physical and economic condition of the Islands; this the Secretary of State for the Colonies considered of sufficient value and usefulness to have reprinted in a convenient form for distribution in the schools throughout the Islands. Mr. Rawson also gave a minute description of the hurricane which caused so great a destruction of shipping and property throughout the Archipelago in 1866. In 1869 Mr. Rawson was promoted to the post of Governor-in-Chief of the Windward Islands, of which Barbados was the seat of Government, and served there till May, 1875, when he returned to England, and retired from the public service. In Barbados he reported on the Census in 1871, and upon the Rainfall in that Island for a long series of years. He paid a visit to the Governor of the neighbouring French Colony of Martinique, and received his return visit—the first interchange of such courtesy that had ever occurred between the two islands. On his retirement Mr. Rawson was created a K.C.M.G., and resumed his connection with the several scientific societies of which he is a Fellow. He was elected a Member of the Councils of the Royal Geographical and Statistical Societies, and in 1884-85 he was chosen President of the latter. He joined the Colonial Institute and Imperial Federation League, and is a Member of the Council and Executive Committee of the latter. In 1885, on the creation of the International Statistical Institute, he was elected its first President, and has been thrice re-elected to that office, which he still holds. In 1892 he was appointed a Governor of the Imperial Institute to represent the Colonies of the Leeward Islands, Windward Islands, and Barbados. His principal publications, since his retirement, have been his two addresses to the Royal Statistical Society on "British and Foreign Colonies," and "International Vital Statistics," 1884-85; a "Synopsis of the Tariffs and Trade of the British Empire," in 2 vols., 1888-89; two contributions to the Proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society on the "Territorial Partition of the Coast of Africa," 1884; and "European Territorial Claims on the Coasts of the Red Sea," in 1885; and a letter to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the relative value of Gold, Silver, and Commodities, 1884-88. He is also the author of "Our Commercial Barometer," in the Journal of the Imperial Federation League. In 1892 he published an Epitome and Harmony of the Gospels, under the title of "The Gospel Narrative, or the Life of Jesus Christ." Sir Rawson is a Member of the American Philosophical Society, of the Statistical Society of Paris, of the Central Statistical Commission of Belgium, and of the Geographical and Geological Societies of Vienna.

RAYLEIGH, Lord John William Strutt, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., Corresponding

Member of the French Institute, Lord Lieutenant of Essex, 3rd Baron, was born Nov. 12, 1812, and succeeded to the title on the death of his father in 1873. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. Senior Wrangler, and 1st Smith's Prizeman, 1865; Fellow of his College, 1866; M.A. 1868; Honorary D.C.L., Oxford, 1883; Honorary LL.D., McGill University, Montreal, 1884, and Dublin University, 1885); is a D.L. and J.P. for Essex, and a Cambridge Commissioner under the Oxford and Cambridge Universities Act (1877); and was Professor of Experimental Physics in the University of Cambridge from 1879 to 1884; Professor of Natural Philosophy in the Royal Institution, 1887. He is the author of two volumes on "The Theory of Sound," 1877-78, 2nd edit., 1894; and of many memoirs in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, and other scientific publications. He has also edited Clerk Maxwell's "Heat" (1891 and 1894). Professor Ramsay divides with Lord Rayleigh the distinction of discovering a new element—"Argon"—in the atmosphere, the existence of which was announced at the meeting of the British Association at Oxford in Aug., 1894. Lord Rayleigh married, in 1871, Evelyn Georgina Mary, daughter of the late James Maitland Balfour, Esq., of Whittinghame, Prestonkirk, and has three sons.

READ, Clare Sewell, a distinguished agriculturist, born at Ketteringham, in 1826, is the eldest son of George Read, Esq., of Barton Bendish Hall, Norfolk. He entered Parliament in 1865 in the Conservative interest as a member for East Norfolk, and was one of the most prominent advocates of the reduction of the Malt Tax. After the dissolution in 1868 he was returned for the southern section of the county, and continued to represent that constituency until 1885. In 1874 he was appointed Parliamentary Secretary of the Local Board, a position he retained until Jan. 1876, when he resigned on account of a difference of opinion upon the question of Inspection and Restrictions in Ireland, for the prevention of the spread of pleuro-pneumonia and foot-and-mouth disease among cattle. He advocated uniformity of treatment in both countries, and as an acknowledgment of his services the farmers of England presented him with a service of plate and a cheque for £5,500. He is a member of the Council of the Central Chambers of Agriculture, of the Smithfield Club, and of the Farmers' Club, and also of all the Local Agricultural Societies in the county of Norfolk.

READING, Bishop of. See RANDALL, THE RIGHT REV. JAMES LESLIE.

REANEY, Mrs. Isabel, philanthropist, is a daughter of the late Mr. Robert Edis, of Huntingdon, and a sister of Colonel Edis. She is well known for her labours in the cause of temperance, and is constantly requested to address meetings on that subject. She has also opened "homes" for various forms of distress, notably a Convalescent and Holiday Home at Blackpool. She is well-known as a writer of religious stories and other works, of which we may mention "Our Brothers and Sons," "Our Daughters," and "Just in Time." Her husband, the Rev. G. Sale Reaney, is a well-known Broad Church clergyman at East Greenwich, who earlier in life made his mark as a preacher among the Congregationalists.

REAY (Lord), Sir Donald James Mackay, LL.D., G.C.S.T., G.C.I.E., was born in Holland in Dec. 1839, and is the son of the late Baron Mackay, of Ophemert, Minister of State, by the daughter of Baron Fagel, Privy Councillor of the Netherlands. Lord Reay was educated at the University of Leyden, where he graduated as D.C.L. in 1861. He joined the diplomatic service, and in 1871 was elected Member of the Second Chamber of the States General, and vacated his seat in 1876 on becoming a British subject. In 1881 he was created a Peer of the United Kingdom; in 1884 elected Rector of St. Andrew's University; and in 1885 appointed Governor of Bombay. He is President of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vice-President of the International Colonial Institute, and of the Council of University College (London), Member of the Institute of International Law, Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire, and LL.D. of the Universities of Edinburgh and St. Andrews.

RECLUS, Jacques Elisée, a French geographical writer, the son of a Protestant minister, was born at Sainte-Foy-la-Grande (Gironde), March 15, 1830, and from 1841 to 1844 educated in Rhenish Prussia. He studied at the Protestant College at Montauban, and then at the University of Berlin, where he was a pupil of K. Ritter's. Holding extreme democratic opinions, he left France after the coup d'état of Dec. 2, 1851, and travelled from 1852 to 1857 in England, Ireland, the United States, Central America, and New Granada, where he stayed several years. On his return to Paris he communicated to the Revue des Deux Mondes, the Tour du Monde, and other periodicals, the results of his voyages and geographical researches. M. Reclus is the author of "Guide à Londres," 1860; "Voyage à la Sierra Nevada de Saint-Marthe," 1861; "Les Villes d'Hiver de la Méditerranée et les Alpes-Maritimes," 1864; and in conjunction with his eldest brother is the author of a very valuable introduction to the "Dictionnaire des Communes de la France," 1864; 2nd edit., 1869; and above all, "La Terre," a magnificent work on physical geography, the English edition of which, entitled "The Earth," has passed through two editions. Unfortunately (or fortunately), M. Reclus did not confine himself to scientific studies, but wrote also in various socialist organs. When the insurrection of March 18, 1871, broke out, M. Reclus. after publishing an eloquent appeal to his countrymen in favour of conciliation, flung in his lot with the Commune, and was taken prisoner by the Versailles troops as early as April 5, while making a reconnaissance near Chatillon. At his trial, evidence was given in his favour by M. E. Charton, a deputy in the National Assembly, and the editor of several works on geography. M. Nadar, the well-known aëronaut, under whom the prisoner had served during the siege of Paris, also spoke as to his high character and great scientific attainments. But M. Reclus was nevertheless sentenced to transportation for life (Nov. 1871). His sentence was, however, commuted into one of banishment in Feb. 1872. He subsequently resided at Lugano, in Switzerland. He was admitted to the benefit of the amnesty in March, 1879. In 1882 he gained fresh notoriety as the practical initiator of the Anti-Marriage Movement; and his two daughters were actually "married" in his own fashion without any religious or civil ceremony. Together with Prince Krapotkin he was condemned at Lyons as a leader and organiser of the Anarchist movement, but he escaped from the clutches of the French law in Switzerland. In Sept. 1892, he was appointed Professor of Comparative Geography at the University of Brussels. The first volume of his "Géographie Universelle" was published in 1875, the seventeenth in 1891.

REED, Sir Edward James, K.C.B,, F.R.S., M.P., born at Sheerness, Sept. 20, 1830, was educated at the School of Mathematics and Naval Construction, Portsmouth, served in a subordinate capacity in Sheerness dockyard, and was afterwards editor of the Mechanics' Magazine. He paid great attention to naval architecture, on which he became an authority, and was induced to accept the Secretaryship of the Institution of Naval Architects. He submitted to the Admiralty proposals to reduce the dimensions, cost, and time required for building our iron-clads, and was soon after appointed Chief Constructor of the Navy. In about three years he designed ironclad ships for the British Navy, amounting to an aggregate of 35,000 tons; a large iron-clad frigate for the Turkish government; a fleet of steam-transports for the service of our Indian government, consisting of five ships of 4,000 tons each, a paddle despatch-steamer of war, and numerous tugs, life-boats, and other smaller vessels. After four years of further service as Chief Constructor, Mr. Reed, whose objections to rigged sea-going turret ships were well known, found these vessels so much in favour, that he resigned his office in July, 1870. His resignation was made remarkable by the capsizing of the turret ship Captain a few weeks afterwards. Mr. Reed was afterwards engaged in private pursuits, visiting occasionally the foreign dockyards of Europe. He was returned to Parliament in the Liberal interest as member for the Pembroke boroughs at the general election of Feb., 1874. He represented that constituency till April, 1880, when he was returned for Cardiff. He was re-elected for Cardiff at the general election in Nov., 1885, and again in Feb., 1886, on his appointment as Lord of the Treasury in Mr. Gladstone's administration. He received the Companionship of the Bath from the Queen of England; the Star of the Imperial Order of St. Stanislas (1st class) from the Emperor of Russia; the Star and Ribbon of the Medjidieh (2nd class) from the Sultan of Turkey, and the Knight Commandership of the Imperial Order of Joseph from the Emperor of Austria. He is the author of works on Practical Shipbuilding, Iron-cased Ships, and Coast Defence. In Oct., 1878, he started on a visit to Japan, at the invitation of the Imperial Government. He returned to this country in May, 1879, and published a work on "Japan: its Histories, Traditions, and Religions," 2 vols., 1880. In Aug., 1880, he was created a K.C.B. In 1883, Sir Edward Reed was appointed by the Government to inquire into the cause of the capsizing of the SS. Daphne during the operation of launching on the Clyde; and in 1884 was also appointed by the Government as President of the Load Line Committee, which was formed for the purpose of thoroughly investigating the question of a proper load-line for the ships of the Mercantile Marine. Re-elected for Cardiff in 1892, Sir Edward Reed did not take office under the new Government, and at one time was thought to be on the point of becoming a Unionist. He is Vice-President of the Institute of Naval Architects, and a member of the Council of the Inst. of Civil Engineers.

REED, Thomas Allen, born at Watchet, Somersetshire, April 6, 1826, was educated chiefly in a private school at Bristol. In early life he was associated with Mr. Isaac Pitman in the promulgation of phonography; and he has for many years been the head of a well-known firm of shorthand-writers in London. He is President of the London Phonetic Shorthand-writers' Association; Past President of the Shorthand Society; and hon. member of many foreign Shorthand Associations. Mr. Reed edited and lithographed for thirty years the Phonographic Reporter, a monthly magazine published in phonographic characters. He is the author of several standard works on Shorthand; among them the "Reporter's Guide," 1869; the "Phonographic Gradus," "Technical Reporting," and "Pitfalls; or, Hints to young Reporters." In "Leaves from the note-book of T. A. Reed" (2 vols.), he has given a series of sketches of the daily work of reporters and shorthand-writers, founded on his long and varied experience. He has adapted Phonography to the French language, and published a little work on that subject in 1882. He was the chief organizer and Chairman of the Committee of the first International Shorthand Congress held in London in 1887 in celebration of the Tercentenary of the art. For some years past he has been shorthand examiner of the Society of Arts, and of the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board.

REED, The Hon. Thomas Brackett, American statesman, was born at Portland, Maine, Oct. 18, 1839. He graduated at Bowdoin College in 1860, and began the study of law, but suspended it to enter the U. S. Navy, where he served as Assistant-Paymaster from April, 1864, to Nov., 1865. He was admitted to the Bar the same year he left the Navy and began practising at Portland. In 1868-69 he was a member of the lower branch of the Maine Legislature, and in 1870 of the State Senate. From 1870 to 1873 he was Attorney-General of Maine, and from 1874 to 1877 was City Solicitor of Portland. In 1876 he was elected a Member of Congress, and has been continuously re-elected since then, his present term expiring in 1895. He is a Republican, and when his party regained control of the House of Representatives in 1889, he was elected its Speaker. This position he retained until the House again became Democratic in 1891.

REEVE, Henry, C.B., D.C.L., born in Norfolk in 1813, was educated at Geneva, and Munich, and appointed to the office of Registrar of the Privy Council in 1837, which he resigned in 1887. He is a J. P. for the county of Hants. He succeeded the late Sir G. C. Lewis as editor of the Edinburgh Review in 1855. He published a translation of De Tocqueville's well-known work on "Democracy in America," and of "France before the Revolution of 1789," and of M. Guizot's "Washington." In 1855 he brought out a new and revised edition of "Whitelocke's Journal of the Swedish Embassy in 1653-54." In 1874 Mr. Reeve published a "Journal of the Reigns of King George IV., and King William IV., by Charles C. F. Greville, Esq.," which had been placed in his hands for that purpose by the author, and the sequel to this work was published by Mr. Reeve in 1885. He has also published a collection of Historical and Biographical Essays, under the title of "Royal and Republican France." He was elected in 1865 a corresponding member of the Institute of France by the Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques, and a Foreign Member of the French Institute in 1888. Mr. Reeve is a Companion of the Order of the Bath, and a Commander of the Royal Military Order of Christ in Portugal. The University of Oxford conferred on him, in 1869, the honorary degree of D.C.L.

REEVES, Mrs. Henry, née Helen Buckingham Mathers, novelist, was born in 1852, at Crewkerne, Somerset, and educated at Chantry, near Frome. Her first novel was "Comin' thro' the Rye," 1875, which immediately became immensely popular, and was soon translated into several languages. "The Token of the Silver Lily," a poem, was published in 1876; "Cherry Ripe," Miss Mathers' second novel, was published in 1877, and followed in 1878 by "The Land o' the Leal," and "As He Comes up the Stair," which are novelettes. Her third novel, "My Lady Green Sleeves," appeared in 1879, and was followed in 1881 by "The Story of a Sin." "Sam's Sweetheart," and "Eyre's Acquittal," were published in 1883 and 1884, and "Found Out," which appeared in shilling form in 1885, was rapidly followed by that series of cheap novels by many authors which has since become so popular. Among her recently published volumes we may mention "The Fate of Fenella," of which she was part authoress, 1892; "A Study of a Woman," 1893; and "A Man of To-day," 1894. In 1876 Miss Mathers was married to Mr. Henry Reeves, F.R.C.S.E., a well-known surgeon to several large metropolitan hospitals, and author of "Human Morphology."

REEVES, John Sims, tenor singer, born at Shooter's Hill, Kent, Oct. 21, 1822, was first instructed by his father. At an early age he held the appointment of organist and director of the choir at the church of North Cray, and after taking lessons on the pianoforte from J. B. Cramer, he was placed under the care of T. Cooke, Hobbs, and other distinguished Professors of singing. In Dec., 1839, he made his first appearance on the stage at Newcastle, at which time he was singing baritone parts; he next visited the principal provincial towns, and went to Paris to study his profession. Not long afterwards he made his first appearance in Italian opera at La Scala, Milan, in the tenor part of Edgardo, in "Lucia di Lammermoor," and came out in the same character at Drury Lane Theatre, Dec. 6, 1847, then under the management of the late M. Jullien. His first original character was in Balfe's opera of the "Maid of Honour," and he appeared at Her Majesty's Theatre, as Carlo, in "Linda di Chamouni," in 1848, and was engaged at the Royal Italian Opera, at Covent Garden, in 1849. Since that time Mr. Reeves has appeared at all the great performances of oratorios, at Exeter Hall, the provincial festival and at the Crystal Palace. One of his best original parts was in Mr. Macfarren's opera of "Robin Hood," produced at the performances of English opera at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1860. Mr. Sims Reeves has made strenuous efforts to reduce the present high pitch to that of the Normal Diapason. He completed his Jubilee some years ago, and published a book setting forth some interesting events in his long and successful career. He took his farewell of the public at the Albert Hall on May 11, 1891, when Madame Christine Nilsson came over expressly to assist on this memorable occasion, but he has not up to the present (1895) finally abandoned the concert platform. Mr. Sims Reeves married Miss Emma Lucombe, a soprano singer. His son, Herbert, is a tenor who evidently has been well taught by his father.

REHAN, Ada, American actress, was born at Limerick, Ireland, April 22, 1859. At an early age she went to America and was educated in Brooklyn, N.Y. She first appeared upon the stage when but fifteen years old, but did not adopt acting as her profession till a year or two later. For two seasons she was in Mrs. Drew's theatre at Philadelphia, shortly after which she joined Mr. Augustin Daly's company, with which she has been since connected, both in London and New York. Her special rôle is light comedy, and perhaps her most successful impersonation has been Lady Teazle in "The School for Scandal," though her Katherine in "Taming of the Shrew" met with nearly equal favour. Among the other parts in which she has appeared are Valentine Osprey, in "The Railroad of Love;" Jo, in "The Lottery of Love;" Xantippe, in "The Wife of Socrates;" Tilburnia, in "Rehearsing a Tragedy;" Phronie, in "Dollars and Sense;" Oriana, in "The Inconstant;" Kate Verity, in "The Squire;" Doris, in "An International Match;" Audrey Ollyphant, in "Samson and Delilah;" Niobe, in "A Night Off;" Flos, in "Seven-Twenty-Eight;" Tryphena Magillicuddy, in "The Golden Widow;" Etna, in "The Great Unknown;" Rosalind, in "As You Like it;" Donna Hypolita, in "She Would and She Wouldn't;" Peggy, in "The Country Girl;" Dina Faudelle, in "A Priceless Paragon;" Mlle. Rose, in "The Prayer;" Helena, in "A Midsummer Night's Dream;" Miss Hoyden, in "Miss Hoyden's Husband;" Nancy Brasher, in "Nancy & Co.;" Elvira Honiton, in "New Lamps for Old;" Baroness Vera von Bouraneff, in "The Last Word;" Lady Teazle, in "The School for Scandal;" Pierrot, in "The Prodigal Son;" the Princess of France, in "Love's Labour's Lost;" Aprilla Dymond, in "Love in Tandem;" Maid Marian, in "The Foresters;" Rena Primrose, in "Little Miss Million;" Juno Jessamine, in "A Test Case;" Julia, in "The Hunchback;" Mockwood, in "The Knave;" Letitia Hardy, in "The Belle's Stratagem," and Viola, in "Twelfth Night."

REID, Sir John Watt, K.C.B., born May 10, 1823, in Edinburgh, is the younger son of the late Dr. John Watt Reid, R.N., and was educated at Edinburgh Academy, and Edinburgh University and Extra-Mural (Medical) School; M.D., Aberdeen, LL.D., Edinburgh. He entered the Royal Navy, Feb. 6, 1845, as Assistant-Surgeon; was promoted to Surgeon, Sept., 1854; to Staff-Surgeon, 1856; to Deputy-Inspector-General, 1874; to Inspector-General, and Medical Director-General, 1880; served in the "Inflexible" and "London" in the Black Sea until the fall of Sebastopol (Medal and Clasp); in "Belleisle," hospital ship, in China War, 1857-9 (Medal and Clasp); in "Nebraska," hospital ship, off Cape Coast Castle, at the end of the Ashanti Campaign, 1874 (mentioned in despatches, and promoted to Deputy-Inspector-General). He received approval of the Board of Admiralty for services in the R.N. Hospital, Plymouth, during the Cholera Epidemic in 1849, and for conduct at Halifax Sick Quarters, during the Epidemic of Yellow Fever in the West India Squadron in 1861, and the thanks of the Commander-in-Chief in the Black Sea for Services to the Sick of the flagship "Britannia," when stricken with Cholera in 1854. He was made Honorary Physician to the Queen, 1881; and K.C.B., 1882. On leaving office, in 1888, the Board of Admiralty were pleased to record that "the able and zealous manner in which he had conducted the duties of the office had been most marked, and their Lordships and the Naval Medical Service viewed his retirement with equal regret."

REID, Robert Threshie, Q.C., M.P., the second son of the late Sir J. J. Reid, of Mouswald Place, Dumfriesshire, was educated at Cheltenham College, and Balliol College, Oxford, 1st class moderations, 1st class Literæ Humaniores; Magdalen College Demy; Scholar of Balliol; Ireland University Scholar; was called to the Bar in 1871; appointed Q.C. in 1882, Bencher in 1890; M.P. for Hereford in 1880; M.P. for Dumfries since 1886. In October, 1894, Sir Robert Reid became Attorney-General in succession to the present Lord Justice Sir John Rigby. He married, Emily Douglas, daughter of Captain Fleming.

REID, Thomas Wemyss, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1842, being the son of the Rev. Alexander Reid. He was educated by Dr. Collingwood Bruce at Newcastle; became a journalist in 1861; in 1864 was appointed editor of the Preston Guardian, and in 1870 to 1887 editor of the Leeds Mercury. Mr. Reid has contributed largely to the leading reviews and magazines. He is the author of "Charlotte Brontë: a Monograph;' a biographical work, intended to supplement Mrs. Gaskell's well-known "Life of the author of 'Jane Eyre.'" This work, which was published in 1877, has gone through several editions both in England and in the United States. In 1883, Mr. Reid published "Gladys Fane, a Story of Two Lives." It passed through four editions within a few months of its publication. Two years later, at Christmas, 1885, appeared "Mauleverer's Millions," a sensational story, the scene of which was laid in Yorkshire; it has had a large sale. In 1888 Mr. Reid published the "Life of the Right Hon. W. E. Forster," a work tracing the personal history of the author of the Education Act, and throwing considerable light on recent political events. Six editions of the Life appeared within twelve months from its publication. The other works written by Mr. Reid are "Cabinet Portraits," sketches of leading Statesmen of both parties, 1872; "Politicians of To-Day," 1879; and "The Land of the Bey," 1882, a narrative of a visit to Tunis during the military operations of France; the "Life of Lord Houghton," 1890. Mr. Reid has also contributed to the Leeds Mercury an extensive series of literary and social essays, under the title of "The Rambling Philosopher," as well as letters descriptive of travel in various parts of the world. In 1887 Mr. Reid resigned the editorship of the Leeds Mercury, and accepted the post of manager to Messrs. Cassell and Company. Since the beginning of 1890 he has been editor of The Speaker, a weekly political and literary review. In 1893 he received the hon. degree of LL.D. from the University of St. Andrews.

REID, The Hon. Whitelaw, was born near Xenia, Ohio, Oct. 27, 1837. He graduated from Miami Univ. (Oxford, Ohio) in 1856, and immediately took up journalism, soon becoming editor of the Xenia News. At the outbreak of the Civil War he was sent into the field as correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, and served for a while as volunteer aide-de-camp to General Thos. A. Morris, and afterwards to General Rosecrans. From 1863 to 1866 he was librarian of the House of Representatives, while continuing to act as Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette. He was then engaged for a short time in cotton planting in Louisiana, the result of his observations while there on the condition of the South "After the War" appearing in 1866. Returning to Ohio he devoted himself for two years to writing a complete history of "Ohio in the War," which was published in two volumes in 1868. In the same year he joined the staff of the

New York Tribune, of which, on the death of Mr. Greeley in 1872, he became the editor-in-chief and principal owner. He was chosen a regent (for life) of the University of the State of New York in 1878 to succeed General John A. Dix, and was for many years President of the Lotos Club (N.Y. City). The mission to Germany was tendered him by both President Hayes and President Garfield, but he declined both offers. On the accession to the Presidency of Mr. Harrison in 1889, however, he accepted an appointment as American minister to France. He negotiated a new Extradition with France and a limited treaty of Reciprocity. He also began the negotiations which resulted in the withdrawal by half the nations of Europe of the prohibition, which they had maintained for from eight to twelve years, against the importation of American pork, and conducted these negotiations in France to a successful close. On the conclusion of these different tasks he tendered his resignation (1892). A few weeks later the Republican National Convention after renominating President Harrison, unanimously nominated Mr. Reid as its candidate for the Vice-Presidency of the United States. During the canvass he made numerous speeches in Boston, New York, Buffalo, Indianapolis, and elsewhere. After the defeat of his party in November he visited the Pacific Coast, and in a few months resumed his editorship of the New York Tribune. He was actively connected with the work of sending poor children from New York to homes in the West, and he originated and long conducted the Tribune Fresh Air Fund, which was the pioneer of a multitude of similar charities now existing in both America and England. In addition to the works already mentioned, he is the author of "Schools of Journalism," 1871; "The Scholar in Politics," 1873; "Some Newspaper Tendencies," 1879; "Town-Hall Suggestions," 1881, and a great number of speeches and addresses on political, literary, and social topics.

REINKENS, Joseph Hubert, D.D., one of the leaders of the "Old Catholic" movement in Germany, was born at Burtschied, Aix-la-Chapelle, March 1, 1821, studied theology in the University of Bonn, entered the Seminary at Cologne in 1847, and was ordained priest in the following year by the late Cardinal von Geissel. Afterwards he returned to Bonn to continue his studies; graduated as D.D. at Munich in 1849; settled as private tutor at Breslau in 1850; was appointed in 1852 preacher on festivals penitentiary at the cathedral, and incumbent of the Electoral Chapel; in 1853 Extraordinary Professor of Church History; in 1857 ordinary; and was rector of Breslau University, 1865-66. He was one of the fourteen professors who, at Nuremburg, protested against the Vatican decrees in Aug., 1870. For this he was suspended from his clerical functions; and in 1872 he was excommunicated by Bishop Förster of Breslau. Dr. Reinkens became a prominent leader of the so-called "Old Catholics," and was elected Bishop of the Old Catholics (the new sect is the Vatican Church), June 4, 1873, at Cologne, in an assembly consisting of twenty-one priests and fifty-six laymen. The consecration ceremony was performed (Aug. 11) by the Dutch Old Roman Catholic Bishop Heycamp of Deventer. Dr. Reinkens has published numerous works in German on the theological controversies of the day; his advocacy being for "Unity, not Uniformity," in the Christian Churches, and for religious life rather than religious ceremonies.

REINOLD, Arnold William, F.R.S., Professor of Physics in the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, was born in Hull, June 19, 1843. His father, a native of Elberfeld, settled in England in 1836, and carried on the business of a ship-broker. Professor Reinold was educated at St. Peter's School, York; whence, having obtained an open Mathematical Scholarship at Brasenose College, he proceeded to Oxford in 1863. At Oxford he gained a first-class in Mathematical Moderations, and in the final Schools of Mathematics and Natural Science, also the Junior and Senior University Mathematical Scholarships. He took his degree of B.A. in 1866, and M.A. in 1870; and was elected to a Fellowship at Merton College in Dec., 1866, which he resigned, on marrying, in 1869. He was elected Senior Student and Lee's Reader in Physics, at Christ Church, in 1870. On the establishment of the Royal Naval College at Greenwich, in 1873, he was appointed Professor of Physics; and Examiner in Physics in the University of Oxford in 1871, and in the University of London in 1875 and 1882. He is joint author (with Professor A. W. Rücker) of papers dealing with the phenomena of "Thin Films," published in the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society, and the Philosophical Magazine, and was elected F.R.S. in 1883. He acted as Hon. Sec. of the Physical Society from its foundation in 1874 up to 1888, when he succeeded the late Dr. Balfour Stewart as President.

RENALS, Sir Joseph, Lord Mayor of London for 1894-95, was born at Nottingham, in 1843. His business career has been chiefly in London. He became a member of the Civic Corporation in 1885, as the representative of the Aldersgate Ward in the Court of Common Council. He attained Alderman's rank in 1888, and in 1893 was appointed senior Sheriff, and received the honour of knighthood at the same time on the occasion of the Duke of York's marriage. During the autumn of 1894 he was elected by the Livery for the office of Lord Mayor, and was finally chosen in opposition to Alderman Faudel Phillips, who was put forward by a determined body of supporters. A poll was demanded and taken, and resulted in a close contest, 1,462 votes being given to the successful candidate, and 1,360 to Ald. Phillips. Lord Mayor Sir Joseph Renals is a member of the Spectacle-makers' and Fruiterers' Companies. In politics he is a Liberal, and has often been asked to contest Nottingham in that interest, but has preferred to take his chance of the Mayoralty.

RENDEL, Sir Alexander Meadows, K.C.I.E., civil engineer, born in 1829, is the eldest son of James Meadows Rendel, civil engineer, and was educated at King's School, Canterbury, and Trinity College, Cambridge (Scholar and Wrangler); studied as engineer under his father, on whose death in 1856 he became engineer to the then London Dock Company, the Leith Harbour and Dock Commissioners, the East Indian Railway, and other companies. He visited India in 1857-8, and at various other times; subsequently he built the Shadwell New Basin, the Royal Albert Dock, and other works on the Thames, the Albert and Edinburgh Docks at Leith, the Workington Dock and Harbour, and other kindred work; was a member of the Commission appointed in 1870 by the Secretary of State for India, to determine what should be the narrow gauge for India, and is at present engineer in England (commonly called consulting engineer) to the Secretary of State for India, the East Indian, the Bombay and Baroda, the South Mahratta, the Nizam's, and other Indian Railway Companies engaged in the construction and working of about 9000 miles of railway. He is a member of the Institution of Civil Engineers. He married, in 1853, Eliza, eldest daughter of the late Captain Hobson, R.N., late Governor of New Zealand, and was created K.C.I.E. on the formation of the order in 1887.

RENDEL, George Whitwick, second surviving son of the late J. M. Rendel, F.R.S., the eminent civil engineer, was educated at Harrow, and as a civil engineer in his father's office, where he subsequently took an important part in reference to some of the later engineering works carried out by Mr. Rendel—notably the superstructures of the great bridges on the East Indian Railway crossing the Ganges and the Jumna at Allahabad. He joined Sir William Armstrong's firm at Elswick in 1858 as managing partner of the new Elswick Ordnance Works, which he continued to direct during 24 years (in conjunction with Captain Noble from 1860). During that time he took a large part in the development of guns, ironclads, and ships of war. He devised and carried out the system of hydraulic machinery for mounting and working heavy guns, first tried in H.M.S. Thunderer, and subsequently adopted in the Dreadnought, Inflexible, Colossus, and all the later ironclads of the British Fleet, as well as in the Duilio, Dandolo, Italia, and Lepanto, of the Italian Fleet. He designed and directed the building of the Esmeralda for the Chilian Government, the swiftest and most powerful unarmoured cruiser of her time, which has become a type of unarmoured cruisers. Also the gunboat Staunch for the British Government, and the numerous gunboats, developments of the Staunch, known as the "alphabetical gunboats," and built on the Tyne for the Chinese Government. Mr. George Rendel was a member of the Committee on Designs of Ships of War, appointed by the English Government in 1871, to settle the types of English ironclads to be built; also of the Committee appointed by the Government in 1877 to decide upon the questions raised by Sir E. J. Reed in reference to the design of the Inflexible. In March 1882 he accepted the invitation previously made to him by Mr. Smith under the Conservative Administration, and repeated by Lord Northbrook, First Lord of the Admiralty in Mr. Gladstone's Administration, and became professional Civil Lord of the Admiralty, abandoning for the purpose all connection with the Elswick firm. In June, 1885, on the fall of Mr. Gladstone's Government he, for family reasons, resigned his position at the Admiralty and retired to Italy.

RENDEL, Lord, of Hatchlands (Stuart Rendel, M.P.), third surviving son of James Meadows Rendel, F.R.S., the engineer of the Harbours of Refuge of Holyhead and Portland, and of many docks and railways in Great Britain and abroad, and brother of the two preceding, was born in 1834; educated at Eton and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he graduated an honorary 4th in 1856. He was called to the Bar in 1861, but has never practised; was appointed (on behalf of Sir William Armstrong) member of the Armstrong and Whitworth Committee, which sat from 1861 to 1863, and carried out the most exhaustive known series of artillery experiments; became a member of Sir Wm. Armstrong's firm in Feb. 1870, and its managing partner in London; has been closely associated with the growth of the great works at Elswick, Newcastle-on-Tyne, which now employ 14,000 men, and form a second arsenal for the empire. He is an Officer of the Order of the Crown of Italy, and a Knight of the Order of Charles XII. of Spain. In 1880 Mr. Stuart Rendel retired from the Armstrong firm, and contested and won the representation in Parliament of the county of Montgomery as a Liberal. This seat had been held by the Wynns, of Wynnstay, ever since 1800. In recognition of this remarkable victory for the Liberal cause, Mr. Rendel was invited by Mr. Gladstone to move the Address to the Crown in the Session of 1881. The scheme for higher education in Wales having resulted in the creation of new colleges at Cardiff and Bangor, each endowed by government with £4,000 a year, Mr. Rendel in 1884 successfully moved a resolution in the House of Commons in favour of the old University College of Wales at Aberystwyth, and obtained a grant for it of £2,500 a year; and later, in 1885, procured the increase of this grant to £4,000. Mr. Rendel became more and more identified with the advocacy of Welsh National causes, as well in relation to religious freedom as to educational progress. In the General Election of July, 1885, he again defeated Mr. Charles Wynn, by an increased majority, and in that of Nov. 1885, he won the county seat in a third contest. In Dec. 1886, Mr. Stuart Rendel was elected First President of the North Wales Liberal Federation. In 1887 he was elected First President in the Welsh National Council, and to these two offices he has been since annually re-elected. In 1888 he was elected by the Liberal M.P.'s of Wales and Monmouthshire as Chairman of their Party in Parliament. In 1889 he introduced and carried the Intermediate Education Act for Wales, and in 1890 he recovered £20,000, part of the Meyricke Endowment (which had lapsed to Jesus College), for the support of such education in Wales. He was re-elected for Montgomeryshire in 1892. On Mr. Gladstone's retirement from office in the spring of 1894 he was created Baron Rendel of Hatchlands, in Surrey. He married, in 1857, Ellen, second daughter of William Egerton Hubbard, of Leonardslee, Horsham, brother of the 1st Lord Addington. Mr. Rendel's 2nd daughter is the wife of Mr. Gladstone's 3rd son.

RESZKE, Edouard de, operatic singer, was born at Warsaw, in 1856, followed the operatic career with his brother Jean, and with him was engaged in 1876 at the Théâtre Italien, in Paris. He was gifted with a profoundly deep bass voice, but learnt, during his musical training, to govern it artistically. He has sung in France, England, Italy, and America in 1891, and has very frequently appeared with his brother. His first appearance in England was at Covent Garden in 1880, when as Judra, in Massenet's "Roi de Lahore," he created a very favourable impression. In 1887 Sir A. Harris engaged him at Drury Lane, and in subsequent years he appeared at Covent Garden. His best-known rôles are Fernando, Ruy Gomez, Remondo, Don Basil, Leporello, Mephistopheles, and Friar Lawrence.

RESZKE, Jean de, operatic singer, brother of the preceding, was born at Warsaw, in 1853, and is of good family. He received a careful musical training under the guidance of his mother, who was herself a fine musician, and at an early age began preparing for an operatic career. He studied Italian opera, and made his first important public appearance in London in 1874 or 1875. The following year he engaged himself, with his brother Edouard, at the Théâtre Italien, in Paris, and sang as Severo and Figaro. At this time he made no great name for himself, but after a long European tour reappeared in Paris in 1883 in M. Maurel's troupe, and won his laurels in "I Puritani" and Massenet's "Hérodiade." At this period his voice changed from a baritone into a tenor, and acquired that suppleness and tone which have made it famous. A year later he entered into an engagement at the Grand Opera in Paris, and achieved great success in the "Prophète," "Faust," and "Romeo and Juliet." His Romeo, when Patti sang Juliet, was not eclipsed by the great cantatrice. In 1887 Sir A. Harris engaged him for Drury Lane, and he immediately scored a triumph as Radames in "Aïda." In 1889 he created the part of Ascanio in "Benvenuto Cellini," at the Opera in Paris. Since 1887 he has appeared in most of the popular operas in London. In 1891-92 he joined in a long American tour, and in 1893 reappeared in Paris in the revival of Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet," and gave a series of representations with his brother Edouard. Josephine de Reszke, sister of the foregoing brothers, was also a well-known singer. She died in 1891, as Baroness de Kroneberg.

RENOUF, Peter Le Page, Oriental scholar, was born in the Isle of Guernsey in 1822, received his early education in Elizabeth College there, and afterwards became a Scholar of Pembroke College, Oxford. At Easter, 1842, he became a member of the Roman Catholic Church. On the opening of the Catholic University of Ireland, in 1855, he was appointed by Dr. Newman Professor in that institution, where he filled the chairs of Ancient History and Eastern Languages. In 1864 he became one of her Majesty's Inspectors of Schools, and continued to hold that appointment till 1886. Whilst at the Catholic University he was one of the editors of the Atlantis and of the Home and Foreign Review; and he has since contributed to various other periodicals, particularly to the Chronicle, the North British Review, and the Academy in this country; and to the Zeitschrift für Ægyptische Sprache und Alterthumskunde, conducted by Dr. Lepsius at Berlin. Many papers by Mr. Renouf are published in the "Proceedings and Transactions of the Society of Biblical Archæology." A list of his writings, as far as they are separately published, is subjoined:—"The Doctrine of the Catholic Church in England on the Holy Eucharist," 1841; "The Greek and Anglican Communions," 1847; "Traduction d'un Chapitre du Rituel funéraire des Anciens Egyptiens; Lettre addressée à M. le Professeur Merkel, Bibliothécaire Royal à Aschaffenbourg," 1860; "Note on some Negative Particles of the Egyptian Language," 1862; "A Prayer from the Egyptian Ritual, translated from the Hieroglyphic Text," 1862; "Sir G. C. Lewis on the Decipherment and Interpretation of Dead Languages," 1863, being a reply to the late Sir G. C. Lewis's attacks on Champollion and other decipherers of ancient inscriptions; "A few words on the supposed Latin Origin of the Arabic Version of the Gospels," 1863; "University Education for English Catholics. A Letter to the Very Rev. Dr. Newman, by a Catholic Layman," 1864; "Miscellaneous Notes on Egyptian Philology," 1866; "The Condemnation of Pope Honorius," 1868, a work furiously attacked by the ultramontane press and placed on the Index; "The Case of Pope Honorius reconsidered, with reference to recent Apologies," 1869; "Note on Egyptian Prepositions," 1874; "An Elementary Manual of the Egyptian Language," 1875; and "Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion as illustrated by the Religion of Ancient Egypt," 1880, being the Hibbert Lectures delivered in the previous year. After the death of Dr. Samuel Birch, in 1885, Mr. Renouf was appointed to succeed him as Keeper of Egyptian and Assyrian Antiquities at the British Museum. In Jan. 1887 Mr. Renouf was elected President of the Society of Biblical Archæology. In 1886 he edited for the Trustees of the British Museum the "Ancient Egyptian Texts from the Coffin of Amamu," a posthumous work of the late Dr. Birch, and in 1890 the "Facsimile of the Papyrus of Ani," with an introduction to the contents of the Egyptian "Book of the Dead." In consequence of a recent Order in Council, fixing the limits of age for all permanent officials in the public service, which was put in force at the end of 1891, he retired from the British Museum. He has been occupied since then with his translation of the "Book of the Dead," a considerable proportion of which has already been published. He is Corresponding Member of the Imperial German Archæological Institute at Rome. Through his marriage, in 1857, with Ludowika, the eldest daughter of Christian Brentano, Mr. Renouf became closely allied to many persons whose names are illustrious in the literature of Germany.

REUTER, Baron Paul Julius, was born at Cassel, in 1818. He was connected with the Electric Telegraph system from its earliest establishment. The practical working of the telegraph, in 1849, between Aix-la-Chapelle and Berlin—the first section open to the public—convinced him that a new era in correspondence had arisen, and in the former town he established the first centre of an organisation for collecting and transmitting telegraphic news. As the various telegraph lines were opened in succession, they were made subservient to his system; and when the cable between Calais and Dover was laid in 1851, Mr. Reuter, who had become a naturalised British subject, transferred his chief office to London. Previous to the opening of his office, the leading London papers had furnished the public with scanty and incomplete intelligence, which was reproduced by the rest of the Press, and Mr. Reuter, to remedy this defect, established agencies in all parts of the world, to supply him with news, since which time the British Press has contained a daily record of the latest important events connected with politics, commerce, and science. The system which he adopted of supplying all the papers indiscriminately with the same intelligence has greatly contributed to the development of the penny Press. A similar organisation has been inaugurated by Mr. Reuter in America, India, China, Australia, and all the Continental States. It was only by the united contributions of the several branches that the staff of correspondents and the great expenses incidental to the work could be supported, the Press of any single country being insufficient to render such an undertaking possible. During the Franco-Austrian war, and during the Civil War in America, Mr. Reuter was fortunate in being the first to publish the most important news, thereby gaining the confidence of the nation and the Press—a confidence which he has maintained by his constant activity. In 1865, Mr. Reuter transferred his business to a Limited Liability Company, of which he is the manager, and in the same year he obtained from the Hanoverian Government a concession for the construction of a submarine telegraph line between England and Germany which enabled a through telegraphic communication to be made direct between London and the principal towns of Germany. Mr. Reuter also obtained a concession from the French Government for the construction and laying of a cable between France and the United States, which was laid in 1869, and which is worked in conjunction with the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. In 1871, the Duke of Coburg-Gotha, in recognition of his public services, conferred on him the title of Baron. Since 1878, the Baron has relinquished his office of Managing Director of Reuter's Telegram Company, but still retains a seat on the Board of Directors. Baron Reuter has attracted the attention of the political world, owing to a concession granted to him, in 1872, by the Shah of Persia, in virtue of which he has the exclusive privilege of constructing railways, working mines and forests, and making use of all the other natural resources of that country, besides farming the customs. This immense monopoly, which Baron Reuter endeavoured to render subservient to British interests —without, however, excluding other nations—met with difficulties owing to certain intrigues, which difficulties he expected to remove, as her Majesty's Government had interposed in his favour; but the concession was annulled in Jan., 1889, and he received instead the concession of the Imperial Bank of Persia.

RÉVILLE, Albert, pastor and French Protestant writer, was born at Dieppe, Nov. 4, 1826. He contributed to the most important French Protestant organs, and by his writings took a prominent position among his co-religionists. For some months he was suffragan at Nîmes, then pastor at Luneray, near Dieppe, and in 1851 he was called to Rotterdam as pastor of the Walloon Church. In 1862 the University of Leyden conferred upon him the degree of Doctor; in 1880 he was appointed Titular Professor of Religious History in the College of France, and in 1886 he accepted the Presidency of the Section des Sciences Réligiéuses at the Sorbonne. Among his works are: "Authenticité du Nouveau Testament," 1851; "De la Rédemption," 1859; "Essais de la Critique Religieuse," 1860; "Manuel d'Histoire Comparée de la Philosophie et de la Religion," 1861; "Études critiques sur l'Evangile selon St. Matthieu," 1862; "Théodore Parker, sa vie et ses œuvres," 1865; L'Enseignement de Jésus Christ," 1870; "Histoire du dogme de la Divinité d'Jésus Christ," 1876; "Prolégomènes de l'Histoire des Religions," 1881; "Histoire des Religions," tomes i.-iv., 1883-1888. M. Réville is one of the chief leaders of the Liberal movement among the French Protestants.

REYER, Ernest, whose real name is Rey, was born at Marseilles, Dec. 1, 1823. He studied solfeggio at the Free School of Music in his native city, and became a good reader. At the age of sixteen he went to Algiers as a Government official, continuing his pianoforte practice, and began to compose without having properly learned harmony and counterpoint. His compositions became popular, and in 1848, when the Revolution deprived him of his situation, he returned to Paris and completed his musical education under his aunt, Madame Louise Farrene. He composed the music of "Le Selam," an Oriental symphony, which was produced with success April 5, 1850; and "Maître Wolfram," a one-act opera, which also was successful at the Théâtre Lyrique, May 20, 1854; "La Statue," produced at the same theatre, April 11, 1861, showed much facility and power. His other works include "Erostate," performed at Baden in 1862; and "Victoire," a cantata. His two latest operas, "Sigurd," and "Salammbô" are composed on purely Wagnerian principles and gave rise to much discussion in France. "Sigurd" was produced in Brussels in 1884, and in Covent Garden in the season of 1885. "Salammbô" was played first in Brussels, and then (1892) in Paris. M. Reyer has written for the Presse, the Revue de Paris and Courrier de Paris, and, after the death of Berlioz, he became musical critic to the Journal des Débats. In all these papers he has defended his Wagnerian attitude. He is librarian to the Opéra, and succeeded David at the Institute of France in 1876. He was made Commander of the Legion of Honour, Dec., 1891.

REYNOLDS, The Rev. Henry Robert, D.D., son of the Rev. John Reynolds, of Romsey, and grandson of Dr. Henry Revell Reynolds, physician in ordinary to George III., was born at Romsey, Hampshire, Feb. 26, 1825, and educated at Coward College and at University College, London. He graduated B.A., in 1844, obtained the University Scholarship in Mathematics; was elected a Fellow of University College in 1848, and received the degree of D.D. from the University of Edinburgh in 1869. He was appointed Minister of the Congregational Church at Halstead, in Essex, in 1846; removed to Leeds and became Minister of the East Parade Congregational Church in that town in 1849; was appointed President of the Countess of Huntingdon's College at Cheshunt in 1860, and also Professor of Theology and Exegesis. Dr. Reynolds was one of the editors of the British Quarterly Review from 1866 to 1874, and editor of the Evangelical Magazine from 1876 to 1881. He was the editor of and contributor to two series of essays on Church problems, entitled "Ecclesia," in 1869 and 1870; is author of "Beginnings of the Divine Life," and "Notes of the Christian Life;" joint author of "Yes and No; or, Glimpses of the Great Conflict;" and joint editor of "Psalms and Hymns for Christian Worship." In 1874 he published as the second of the new series of "Congregational Union Lectures," a work entitled "John the Baptist: a contribution to Christian Evidences," 3rd edit., 1888. He is the author of numerous articles in the "Dictionary of Christian Biography," vol. II. and vol. IV., in the first series of the "Expositor;" "A Commentary with Introduction upon the Pastoral Epistles," published in 1881—a work entitled "The Philosophy of Prayer, and other Essays." He is joint author of a Commentary on the Prophecies of Hosea and Amos, in Bishop Ellicott's Popular Commentary on the Old Testament; author of the Introduction to and Exegetical Commentary upon "The Gospel of St. John," in the "Pulpit Commentary," (3rd edit., 1891). He published in 1888, Present Day Tract, No. 46,—"Comparison and Contrast of Buddhism and Christianity;" in 1889 "Athanasius, his Life and Life-work;" and in 1892, a volume called "Light and Peace," Sermons and Addresses—being the sixth of the series entitled "Preachers of the Age."

REYNOLDS, Professor James Emerson, M.D., F.R.S., was born Jan. 8, 1844, at Bootentown, co. Dublin, where his father, Dr. James Reynolds, was for many years a medical practitioner. He is M.D. of the University of Dublin; Member of the College of Physicians, Dublin and Edinburgh. In 1880 he was elected Fellow of the Royal Society, London; he is a Vice-President of the Chemical Society of London; has been Examiner in Chemistry at the University of London from 1883; and is Commissioner of Irish Lighthouses. He was appointed, in 1867, Keeper of the Mineral Department in the National Museum, Dublin; in 1870, Professor of Analytical Chemistry in the Royal Dublin Society; in 1873 Professor of Chemistry in the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland; and in 1875 to the Professorship of Chemistry and Chemical Philosophy in the University of Dublin. He has published "Six Lectures on Experimental Chemistry," 1874; "General Experimental Chemistry," 4 vols., 1880; which has gone through many editions and been translated into German; and, with others, "The Manual of Public Health for Ireland," 1876. He is the discoverer of a large number of compounds of theoretical importance, including Thiocarbamide and numerous derivatives, a new class of colloid bodies, and several groups of silicon compounds of new types; these and others are described in the course of about seventy papers published by various learned societies. He married, in 1875, Janet Elizabeth, the only child of Canon Finlayson, of Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, and has issue, a son and a daughter.

REYNOLDS, Professor Sir J. Russell, M.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.P., F.Z.S., born at Romsey, Hampshire, in 1828, is the son of the Rev. John Reynolds of Westminster School (King's Scholar), and of Oriel College Oxford; and the grandson of Henry Revell Reynolds, M.D., Cantab., F.R.S., F.R.C.P., who was Physician to Middlesex Hospital, and to St. Thomas's Hospital, Gulstonian Lecturer, Censor, Registrar, Harveian Orator, and Elect of the Royal College of Physicians; and Physician in ordinary to his Majesty George III. Dr. Reynolds was educated at University College, London, where he obtained three Gold Medals in Medicine, in Clinical Medicine ("Fellowes"), and in Obstetric Medicine; Silver Medal in Chemistry (prize essay). He graduated in the University of London, M.B., 1851, with honours in two branches, namely, "University Medical Scholar," and Gold Medallist in Physiology and Comparative Anatomy; and Medical Scholar and Gold Medallist in Medicine. He proceeded M.D., in 1852, and commenced practice in Grosvenor Street in that year. He was elected Fellow of University College in 1856; Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1859; Fellow of the Imperial Leopold Carolina Academy of Germany in 1864; Fellow of the Royal Society in 1869; Fellow of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, 1885; and Vice-President, 1883-4. He was Examiner in Medicine in the University of London, 1868 to 1873; Member of the New York Society of Neurology; and a Member of the American Neurological Association; Corresponding Member of the "Société de Psychologie Physiologique" of Paris. Dr. Reynolds was Lumleian Lecturer, Censor, and Harveian Orator at the Royal College of Physicians. He was appointed Assistant Physician to the Hospital for Sick Children in 1855; and to the Westminster Hospital in 1857; and Lecturer on Forensic Medicine in 1858; Assistant Physician to University College Hospital in 1859; and Holme Professor of Clinical Medicine, and Physician, in 1862; Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine in University College in 1865; Member of the Council, 1888; and Physician to the Guardian Assurance Office in 1862. He is now Emeritus Professor of Medicine in University College, and Consulting Physician to University College Hospital, and has been Physician in Ordinary to her Majesty's Household since 1878. Professor Reynolds is the author of "Essay on Vertigo," 1854 (Physiological); "Diagnosis of Diseases of the Brain, Spinal Cord and Nerves;" "Tables for Diagnosis of Diseases of the Brain," translated into Dutch and French, 1855; "Facts and Laws of Life," introductory lecture at the Westminster Hospital School, 1859; "Epilepsy, its Symptoms and Relations to other Convulsive Diseases," 1861; translated into German; "Lectures on the Clinical Uses of Electricity," 1871; translated into French, Italian, and German; "Address in Medicine," at the British Medical Association in 1874; "Harveian Oration," Royal College of Physicians in 1884; "The Scientific Value of the Legal Tests of Insanity," 1872. He is also the editor of, and contributor to, a "System of Medicine," by various authors, 5 vols. 8vo., 1866 to 1879; Address on "Preventive Medicine" at the Sanitary Congress at Bolton, 1887; and contributor to numerous Reviews and Articles in Scientific and Medical Journals. In 1893 he published "Walter Hayle Walshe, M.D.," a biography. He was made a Baronet in 1895.

RHODES, Cecil, The Right Hon., P.C., the Premier of the Cape, was born in England; and, after his education at College, went out to Africa and became director of various diamond mines at Kimberley, and amassed so large a fortune that he obtained the designation of "The Diamond King." He entered the Cape Parliament as member for West Barkley, took office under the ministry of Sir T. Scanlon, and on July 17, 1890, became Prime Minister on the fall of the Spriggs' ministry. He has held office ever since. He gave £10,000 to the cause of Home Rule for Ireland, during a visit to England in 1891. He has been the chief mover in obtaining mining rights over Matabeleland, and is Chairman of the British South Africa Company. When, in Sept., 1893, the troubles with Lobengula began, he proceeded to Fort Salisbury to direct operations against him. His policy was warmly approved at the Cape, and the citizens of Cape Town gave him a banquet in Jan., 1894. In returning thanks Mr. Rhodes defended his policy, and spoke prophetically of a "United South Africa," on federal principles, which should cover the whole country from the Zambesi to the Cape. He and Dr. Jameson came to England on a visit in Nov., 1894, and his speeches and utterances on Cape politics have been frequent. He has expressed himself to the Aborigines' Protection Society as being very solicitous for the interests of the Uganda natives, whom he has hitherto saved from the dangers of the liquor traffic. Mr. Rhodes was created a member of the Privy Council in Feb., 1895.

RHYS, John, M.A., born June 21, 1840, at Abercaero, near Ponterwyd, Cardiganshire, served a pupil-teacher's apprenticeship at Penllwyn British School, near Aberystwyth from August, 1855, to the end of 1859; was trained at Bangor Normal College to be a public elementary schoolmaster in 1860; and had charge of a school in Anglesey till the end of 1865.

He matriculated as a commoner of Jesus College, Oxford, at Michaelmas, 1865; and at the end of 1869, was elected a Fellow of Merton College, Oxford. He also attended lectures at intervals from 1868 to 1870 at the Sorbonne, the Collège de France, and the University of Heidelberg. In 1870 he matriculated at Leipzig, and in 1871 at Göttingen, but soon afterwards returned, having been appointed her Majesty's Inspector of Schools for the counties of Flint and Denbigh in May, 1871. He was appointed Professor of Celtic in the University of Oxford in Feb., 1877. In that year he published his "Lectures on Welsh Philology." He had previously been known as a Celtic Scholar by his articles in Kuhn's Beiträge zur vergleichenden Sprachforschung, the Revue Celtique, and the Archæologia Cambrensis. Mr. Rhys was elected a perpetual member of the Société Linguistique de Paris in 1873; made a corresponding member of the Dorpat Gelehrte Ethnische Gesellschaft in 1877; and elected an Honorary Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford, Oct. 30, 1877. He served on Lord Aberdare's Commission appointed in August, 1880, to inquire into the condition of Intermediate and Higher education in Wales. In Oct., 1881, he was elected to a Fellowship at Jesus College, and in 1882 a work of his on Celtic Britain was published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. He was the Hibbert Lecturer for the year 1886, and chose for his subject "Celtic Heathendom," as illustrating the origin and growth of religion. In Dec., 1889, he delivered, in Edinburgh, Rhind Lectures on Archæology in connection with the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. They were subsequently published in the Scottish Review. He issued an edition of "Pennant" in 1883, and in 1887 began to edit, in conjunction with J. G. Evans, a "Series of Welsh Texts." In 1891 he published "Studies in the Arthurian Legend," and in 1892, "Inscriptions and Languages of the Northern Picts."

RIBOT, Alexandre Felix Joseph, French Premier, was born at Saint Omer on Feb. 7, 1842. In 1863 he took his degree in law in Paris, and in 1864 was given the diplomas of a Doctor of Laws and of a Licentiate of Letters. He joined the Bar in Paris, became First Secretary of the Bar Society, and, in 1870, was appointed Secretary of the Society of Comparative Legislation. In March, 1875, he was summoned by M. Dufaure to the Ministry of Justice, and was appointed Director of Criminal Affairs and Pardons, but afterwards became General Secretary at the Ministry. In 1876 he re-joined the Paris Bar on M. Dufaure's retirement. In April, 1878, after having been a member of the "Committee of Legal Resistance," he was elected to represent the Second Circumscription of Boulogne-sur-Mer in the Chamber of Deputies. He became one of the most prominent members of the Moderate Left, and was re-elected for his old constituency in 1881. He now became one of the principal orators of the Conservative Republican Party. He spoke as a jurist on the framing of various laws, notably that of divorce, and in 1883 opposed the proposals put forward for reorganising the magistracy. In 1885 he was violently opposed to the Tonkin policy of the Ferry Cabinet. In 1886 he failed, owing to his moderate opinions, to obtain re-election in two constituencies, and retired from political life till March 20, 1887, when he was returned in the Pas-de-Calais. He was a staunch opponent of Boulangism, and was one of the promoters of the uninominal system of voting which dealt the deathblow to the General's cause. In Sept., 1889, he was returned for the First Circumscription of St. Omer. In the New Chamber he pronounced in favour of a conciliatory policy, urged the Republican majority to close up its ranks, and proposed that important and progressive measures should take precedence of others. In the cabinet formed by M. de Freycinet in March, 1890, M. Ribot received the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, and retained it when the Cabinet underwent change in Feb., 1892. To him is greatly owing the distinction of having brought about the Franco-Russian understanding. On the retirement of M. Loubet owing to the Panama scandals, M. Ribot became President of the Cabinet in Jan., 1893, and exchanged the portfolio of Foreign Affairs for that of the Interior. He still pursued the policy of Republican concentration, but on Feb. 8 his government was violently attacked by M. Cavaignac, who declared that like its predecessors it was the slave of the Radicals. On Feb. 16, the Chamber passed a vote of confidence in the Government, which was thus able to last a few weeks longer, and to pass a law making the correctional tribunals cognisant of libels in the press against foreign governments or their representatives. On March 30, the Ribot government fell, owing to a disagreement about the budget between the Chamber and the Senate. In Jan., 1895, on the election of M. Faure to the Presidency of the Republic, several attempts were made to form ministries without success, till M. Ribot was appealed to and at once chose a Cabinet.

RICHARDS, Admiral Sir George Henry, K.C.B., F.R.S., F.R.G.S., son of the late Capt. George Spencer Richards, R.N., was born Jan. 13, 1820, at Anthony, Cornwall. After receiving an education at a private school, he was appointed to the naval service in 1833, made a Lieutenant in 1842, a Commander in 1845, a Captain in 1854, Rear-Admiral in 1870, Vice-Admiral in 1877, and Admiral in 1884. While a Captain he served as naval Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, was present during the Chinese war of 1841-2, at the action and storming of the forts at Obligado in the Parana River, 1845, was Commander of H.M.S. Acheron in New Zealand 1847-51, and of H.M.S. Assistance, in search of Franklin in the Arctic Regions during 1852-3-4. He received the Companionship of the Bath in 1871; is a Fellow of the Royal Society, of the Royal Geographical Societies of London, Berlin, and Turin, and a Member of the Academy of Sciences of Paris. Admiral Richards has been engaged in, and has conducted many nautical surveys of, foreign countries—China, the Falkland Isles, Rio de la Plata, New Zealand, Australia, Vancouver Island, British Columbia, &c.; was a Queen's Commissioner for settling the Oregon boundary from 1856 to 1862; and Hydrographer of the Admiralty from 1863 to 1874. He retired from the Navy in 1874. He was knighted in 1877, created K.C.B. in 1886, and is at present the acting Conservator of the Mersey.

RICHARDSON, Sir Benjamin Ward, M.D., F.R.S., LL.D., F.S.A., born Oct. 31, 1828, at Somerby, in the county of Leicester, was educated at the school of the Rev. W. Y. Nutt, at Burrow-on-the-Hill, Leicestershire, and at Anderson's University, Glasgow. He graduated in Medicine at the University of St. Andrews in 1854, and received the honorary degree of M.A. from the same University in 1859. He gained the Fothergilian Gold Medal in 1854, for an essay on the diseases of the child before birth; and the Astley Cooper prize of £300 in 1856, for an essay on the coagulation of the blood. Dr. Richardson became a member of the Royal College of Physicians by examination in 1856, and was elected a Fellow of the College in 1861; he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1867, and Croonian Lecturer in 1873; F.S.A., 1877; honorary member of the Philosophical Society of America in 1863; of the Imperial Leopold Carolina Academy of Sciences in 1867; and of the Physiological and Statistical Academy of Milan in 1870. He is also an honorary member of the Royal Society of Hygiene of Italy and of the Society of Hygiene of France. In 1865 he conducted an experimental research on the nature of the poisons of the spreading contagious diseases, which ended in the detection of a special poisonous product, common in these poisons, to which he gave the name of septine. In 1866 he discovered the application of ether spray for the local abolition of pain in surgical operations. He introduced methylene bichloride as a general anæsthetic, and discovered the controlling influence of nitrite of amyl over tetanus and other spasmodic affections. He originated, and for some years edited, the Journal of Public Health, and afterwards the Social Science Review. Dr. Richardson's principal contributions to medical and scientific literature have been directed to the advancement of medical practice by the experimental method. The study of disease by synthesis; the restoration of life after various forms of apparent death; the maintenance of life in factitious atmospheres; the investigation of the theory of a nervous atmosphere or ether; the effects of electricity on animal life; methods of killing animals without the infliction of pain, which led to his invention of the "lethal chamber," now so largely used for subjecting domestic animals to painless death; numerous original papers on new medicines and new modes of treatment of diseases; and a series of researches on alcohol in relation to its action on man, the results of which were delivered before the Society of Arts in the Cantor Course of Lectures for 1874-5. Dr. Richardson has been President of the Medical Society of London, and thirty-two times President of the St. Andrews Medical Graduates' Association. In 1869 he succeeded Lord Jerviswoode as assessor for the General Council in the University Court of St. Andrews, an office which he held for nearly sixteen years. He is Honorary Physician to the Royal Literary Fund, the Newspaper Press Fund, and the National Society of Schoolmasters. In 1868, "in recognition of his various contributions to science and medicine," he was presented by six hundred of his medical brethren and fellows in science with a testimonial consisting of a microscope by Ross, and one thousand guineas. At the Social Science Congress held at Brighton in Oct., 1875, he read a paper which gave rise to much subsequent discussion. In it he gave a sketch of an imaginary "model City of Health" to be called Hygeia. The University of St. Andrews conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D., Feb. 15, 1877. Dr. Richardson's most recent researches have been directed to the study of the diseases incident to modern civilisation, and for some years (1884-92) he has published quarterly the Asclepiad, a book of original research and observation on the science, art, and literature of medicine, preventive and curative, all the work being from his own pen. He has likewise contributed to general literature a work entitled "The Son of a Star: a Romance of the Second Century." In addition to his professional and literary labours he has taken an active share in the development of cycling, as President of the Society of Cyclists. His most recent works are "National Health," 1890, and "Thomas Sopwith," a biography, 1891. He was knighted in 1893.

RICHMOND, Bishop of. See PULLEINE, THE RIGHT REV. JOHN JAMES.

RICHMOND AND GORDON (Duke of), His Grace Charles Henry Gordon-Lennox, K.G., P.C., eldest son of the fifth Duke of Richmond, was born at Richmond House, Whitehall, Feb. 27, 1818, and educated at Westminster School and Christ Church, Oxford; became a captain in the army in 1844; was aide-de-camp to the Duke of Wellington from 1842 till 1852, and to Viscount Hardinge from 1852 till 1854. In 1860 he succeeded his father as Duke of Richmond, to which dukedom was added, in 1876, that of Gordon. His Grace was appointed President of the Poor Law Board and sworn a Privy Councillor, in March, 1859, and resigned in June, on the retirement of Lord Derby and his party; was made a Knight of the Garter, Feb. 6, and was President of the Board of Trade from March 8, 1867, till Dec., 1868. He represented West Sussex in the Conservative interest from July, 1841, till he succeeded his father as sixth Duke of Richmond, Oct. 21, 1860. His Grace was the acknowledged leader of the Conservative party in the House of Peers from Feb. 26, 1870, till Mr. Disraeli's elevation to the peerage as Viscount Beaconsfield. When that party returned to office in Feb., 1874, he was made Lord President of the Council, and he retained that office until the defeat of the Conservatives in April, 1880. He introduced the Bill by which Church Patronage was abolished in Scotland (1874), and also the Agricultural Holdings Bill of 1875. In Lord Salisbury's first Ministry the Duke of Richmond held the post of President of the Board of Trade from Jan. to Aug., 1885, and was then appointed to fill the new post of Secretary for Scotland; but he held no office in Lord Salisbury's second Ministry.

RICHMOND, George, Hon. R.A., D.C.L., LL.D., is the son of an artist, and was born in 1809. He early began to study art, and in 1824 became a student at the Royal Academy, about which time he was introduced to William Blake, "sweet visionary Blake," as Hayley calls him, to whom he looked for direction and guidance in art till, in 1827, he followed him to the grave. In 1837 he left England for Italy, and spent two years in the study of the great works in Venice, Florence, and Rome. In 1840 he returned to the practice of water-colour portraits, which he had suspended for two years, adding largely to it life-size studies in chalk, as a preparation for future practice in oil. In 1854 he exhibited a whole-length portrait of Sir Robert Harry Inglis, painted for the Bodleian Gallery, at Oxford; and a half-length of the Bishop of New Zealand (Dr. Selwyn), for St. John's College, Cambridge; and from that time he has been almost exclusively employed in oil-painting. In 1860 he was employed to execute, for St. Paul's Cathedral, a monument of the late Bishop Blomfield, which he finished and erected in 1865. In 1847 he was appointed by Mr. Gladstone a member of the council of the Government Schools of Design; and in 1856, by Sir G. Cornewall Lewis, one of the Royal Commissioners for determining the National Gallery site, &c. In 1867 the University of Oxford conferred upon him the honorary degree of D.C.L., and in 1890 the University of Cambridge gave him the honorary degree of LL.D. The portraits executed by him number between 2,000 and 3,000, hundreds of which have been engraved.

RICHMOND, William Blake, son of George Richmond, A.R.A., D.C.L., was born in London, Nov. 29, 1843. As a student at the Royal Academy he obtained two Silver Medals in 1857; in 1860 he exhibited a portrait of his two brothers. In 1859 and 1860 he travelled in Italy, working at several pictures, which were not exhibited. In 1865 he again went to Italy, and studied in Rome, working at sculpture, architecture, fresco, and tempera painting. Between 1865 and 1868 he painted "The Procession of Bacchus." In 1870 he settled in England, and painted numerous portraits and other pictures. In 1873 he executed for J. S. Hodgson, Esq., of Lythe Hill, Hasle-mere, a series of frescoes, illustrating "The Life of Woman." In the same year he painted a colossal "Prometheus Bound," exhibited at the Academy the following spring, with several portraits. Since that time Mr. Richmond has exhibited at the Grosvenor and the Academy "Ariadne Abandoned by Theseus," "Sarpedon Carried by Night and Death," "Electra at the Tomb of Agamemnon," "Hercules Releasing Prometheus," "The Ten Virgins," "An Audience at Athens," and "Hermes;" besides portraits of Holman Hunt, Darwin, the Bishop of Salisbury, Lord Cranborne, Princess Louise, and many others. Mr. Richmond was elected Slade Professor at Oxford in the place of Mr. Ruskin in 1878, but resigned the post in 1883, when Mr. Ruskin again filled it. He received an honorary M.A. degree, and was elected Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. He has made many studies all over Italy, Greece, and Egypt during several successive autumn journeys. He has developed some interest in local affairs from a desire to combat the smoke and fog nuisance, which makes London so hard a place to paint in, and has seriously impeded his own work.

RICHTER, Hans, Mus.Doc. Oxon, a celebrated conductor of orchestral concerts, was born April 4, 1843, at Raab, in Hungary, where his father was Capell-Meister of the Cathedral. In 1853 he entered the Löwenburg School in Vienna. For three or four years he was a member of the Court Chapel Choir, and in 1859 entered the Conservatorium, studied the horn under Kleinecke, and theory under Sechter. For some time he was horn-player in the orchestra of the Kärnthnerthor Opera. Esser brought him under the notice of Wagner, who took him to Lucerne, and there he made the first fair copy of the score of the "Meistersinger." In 1868 he became conductor at the Hof und National Theatre, Munich. Early in 1871 he went to Pesth as chief conductor of the National Theatre. He first attracted general attention in Jan., 1875, when he conducted a grand orchestral concert in Vienna, and was invited to assume direction of the Court Opera Theatre on the retirement of Herbeck in April of the same year. Previous to this he had been conducting the rehearsals of the "Niebelungen Ring" at Bayreuth, and in 1876 he directed the whole of the rehearsals and performances of the Festival there, and received, at the close of the third set of performances, the Order of Maximilian from the King of Bavaria, and that of the Falcon from the Grand Duke of Weimar. In 1877 he produced the "Walkyrie" in Vienna, and followed it in 1878 by other portions of the tetralogy. The same year he was made Capell-Meister, and received the Order of Franz Joseph. In 1879 he began the series of Orchestral Concerts in London, which, under his direction, have been annually continued, and have excited much attention. He has also conducted many performances of German operas in London, notably those of Wagner. Dr. Richter has a perfect knowledge of the scores of Beethoven's symphonies and other large works, and conducts them from memory. In 1885 he was chosen Director of the Birmingham Festival, and in 1893 he received a handsome offer from Chicago, but was prevented from going to the Exposition by the Viennese authorities.

RIDDELL, Mrs. Charlotte Eliza Lawson, is the youngest child of James Cowan, of Carrickfergus, co. Antrim. She is married to J. H. Riddell, Esq., a civil engineer, by whose initials she is generally known. Mrs. Riddell is the author of many popular novels, including "Too Much Alone," "City and Suburb," "George Geith," "A Life's Assize," "Mortomley's Estate," 1874; "Above Suspicion," 1875; "Her Mother's Darling," 1877; "The Mystery in Palace Gardens," 1880; "The Senior Partner," and "Daisies and Buttercups," 1882; "A Struggle for Fame," 1883; "Susan Drummond," and "Berna Boyle," 1884; "Mitre Court," 1885; "Miss Gascoigne," and "The Nun's Curse," 1887; "Princess Sunshine," 1889; "My First Love," and "A Mad Tour," 1891; "The Head of the Firm," 1892; "The Rusty Sword," 1893; and "The Banshee's Warning, and other Tales," 2nd edit., 1894.

RIDDING, The Right Rev. George, D.D., Lord Bishop of Southwell, son of the late Rev. Charles Ridding, Vicar of Andover, by Charlotte, daughter of the late Ven. Timothy Stonhouse-Vigor, 3rd son of Sir James Stonhouse, 7th Bart., was born March 16, 1828; educated at St. Mary's College, Winchester, and at Balliol College, Oxford (Craven Scholar, B.A., 1st Class in Literis Humanioribus, 2nd Class in Mathematics, and Fellow of Exeter College, 1851, Latin Essay and M.A. 1853, D.D. 1869); ordained Deacon 1854, and Priest 1856; was a Tutor of Exeter College 1852-63, Junior Proctor of Oxford University 1861-62, Select Preacher 1862-64, and 1890-91, Second Master of Winchester College 1863-66, and Head Master of Winchester College 1867-84; consecrated 1st Bishop of Southwell, May 1, 1884; married, first, 1858, Mary Louisa, who died 1859, daughter of the Right Rev. George Moberly, D.C.L., 92nd Bishop of Salisbury; secondly, 1876, Lady Laura Elizabeth Palmer, daughter of the 1st Earl of Selborne.

RIGBY, Lord Justice Sir John, K.B., is the son of the late Thomas Rigby, Esq., of Halton, Cheshire, by Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Kendal, Esq., and was born in 1834. He received his education at Liverpool College, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was the second Wrangler, and Smith's Prizeman of his year; M.A., 1859. He was a Fellow of Trinity from 1856 to 1866, and in 1860 was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn. In 1881 he became a Q.C., and a Bencher in 1884. He was Junior Counsel to the Treasury from 1875 to 1881, and in Dec., 1885, entered Parliament as Liberal Member for the North, or Wisbeach Division of Cambridgeshire. He sat for this constituency till June, 1886. On July 11, 1892, he re-entered Parliament as Gladstonian Liberal member for Forfarshire, and was appointed Solicitor-General in August, at the same time receiving the honour of knighthood.

RIGG, The Rev. James Harrison, D.D., was born in 1821, at Newcastle-on-Tyne; being the son of the Rev. John Rigg, a Wesleyan minister, who was famous in his day. He received his education at Old Kingswood school, where he was afterwards a teacher, and in 1845 he entered the Wesleyan ministry. He was one of the leading writers for the Biblical Review (1846-49). For many years the Wesleyan Conference was more indebted for the defence and exposition of its proceedings and principles to this young minister than to any other person. In 1865 he was elected by the Conference to be Chairman of the Kent District, and in 1866 a member of the "Hundred," or the "Legal Conference." In 1868 he was elected Principal of the Wesleyan Training College—a position which he still holds. In 1878 Dr. Rigg was chosen President of the Wesleyan Conference. His name is associated with the admission of laymen in the Conference that year, and with the Thanksgiving Fund, which has realized over £300,000 for Methodist work. In 1892 he received the rare honour of a second election to the Presidency of the Conference. For many years Dr. Rigg has been Chairman of the "Second London District Synod" of the Wesleyan Methodist Church. He was one of the original members of the London School Board, on which he represented Westminster for six years. In 1886, 1887, and 1888, he was a Member of the Royal Commission on Elementary Education. He has written "The Principles of Wesleyan Methodism," 1850; "Connexionalism and Congregational Independency," 1851; and "The Connexional Economy of Wesleyan Methodism," 1879; "Modern Anglican Theology," 1857, 3rd edit., enlarged, 1879; "Essays for the Times on Ecclesiastical and Social Subjects," 1866; "The Churchmanship of John Wesley," now in its 3rd edit.; "The Living Wesley as he was in his Youth and in his Prime," now published in an enlarged form as "The Centenary Life of Wesley," (1891); "National Education in its social conditions and aspects, and Public Elementary Schools, British and Foreign," 1873; "Discourses and Addresses on Leading Truths of Religion and Philosophy," 1880; "The Sabbath and the Sabbath Law before and after Christ," 1881; "Was Wesley a High Churchman?" and "Is Modern Methodism Wesleyan Methodism? or Wesleyan Methodism and the Church of England;" and "Church Organization: Primitive and Protestant," 1887; second edition, much enlarged, 1891. Dr. Rigg was formerly English correspondent of the New Orleans Christian Advocate (1851), and of the New York Christian Advocate (1858-76). He has written for the Wesleyan Magazine, the Quarterly, Contemporary, and International Reviews, and has contributed articles on Methodism to the new edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He has for many years been the editor of the London Quarterly Review, which is the quarterly literary organ of the Wesleyan Methodists.

RIPON, Bishop of. See CARPENTER, THE RIGHT REV. WILLIAM BOYD.

RIPON, (Marquis of), The Right Hon. George Frederick Samuel Robinson, K.G., P.C., D.C.L., long known as Earl de Grey and Ripon, is the only son of Frederick John, first Earl of Ripon (better known by his original title of Viscount Goderich, which he bore when he held the post of Premier for a few months in 1827), by Lady Sarah Albina Louisa Hobart, only child of Robert, fourth Earl of Buckinghamshire. He was born in London, Oct. 24, 1827, and succeeded to his father's titles, Jan. 28, 1859, and to those of his uncle, as third Earl de Grey, Nov. 14, in the same year. He began his political life as attaché to a special mission to Brussels in 1849. At the general election in 1852

he was returned to the House of Commons by his courtesy title of Viscount Goderich as member for Hull, and continued to sit for that borough until 1853, when he vacated his seat to oppose Mr. Starkey, at Huddersfield, where he succeeded in winning the seat for the Liberals by a majority of eighty. At the general election in 1857 he was returned for the West Riding of Yorkshire without opposition. In June, 1859, the year in which he succeeded to the Upper House, Lord Herbert selected him for the post of Under-Secretary for War, and in Feb. 1861, upon the accession of Sir George C. Lewis, he was made Under-Secretary for India. Upon the death of Sir G. C. Lewis, in April, 1863, his lordship, who had shown great efficiency in his subordinate office, took the place of his chief as Secretary for War, together with a seat in the Cabinet. He remained at the War Office nearly three years, and in Feb. 1866, when Sir Charles Wood, afterwards Viscount Halifax, withdrew from the Ministry, was appointed Secretary of State for India. On Mr. Gladstone's accession to office in Dec. 1868, he was appointed Lord President of the Council, but he resigned that office in Aug. 1873. He was created a Knight of the Garter in 1869. In 1871 he acted as Chairman of the High Joint Commission which arranged the Treaty of Washington; and in recognition of the services he rendered in that capacity he was, soon after his return from the United States, created Marquis of Ripon. His lordship, who is a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for the North and West Ridings of Yorkshire, and for the county of Lincoln, was created an honorary D.C.L. of Oxford in 1870, and on April 23 in that year was installed as Grand Master of the Freemasons of England, in succession to Lord Zetland. In the autumn of 1874 the Grand Lodge received a communication to the effect that the Marquis of Ripon had resigned the post of Grand Master, and their surprise was heightened to dismay by the circumstance that he did so without assigning any reason for the step. A few days afterwards, however, it transpired that his lordship had joined the Roman Catholic Church, which, as is well known, has condemned Freemasonry and all other oath-bound societies. The reception of the Marquis into the Roman Catholic Church took place at the Oratory, Brompton, Sept. 4, 1874, and his conversion gave rise to much comment in the public journals, both here and on the continent. On the return of Mr. Gladstone to power, the Marquis of Ripon was appointed Viceroy of India. He arrived at Bombay, May 29, 1880, and was installed in Simla, June 8. On June 18 a large meeting was held in Exeter Hall to protest against the appointment of a Roman Catholic to the Viceroyalty of India. As Viceroy Lord Ripon excited much diversity of opinion by his policy, which was directed towards extending the rights of natives of India, and, in certain directions, towards limiting the privileges of Europeans. The excitement caused by the famous "Ilbert Bill" was the chief instance of this; and in a word it may be said that there never was a Viceroy so unpopular among Anglo-Indians or so popular among natives. Lord Ripon's departure was the occasion of the most extraordinary manifestations in his favour on the part of the Hindoo population of Bengal and Bombay. In Mr. Gladstone's short "Home Rule" Administration Lord Ripon was First Lord of the Admiralty. On the return of his party to power in 1892 he was appointed Colonial Secretary. The Marquis was elected in 1882 President of the Yorkshire College, Leeds. He married, in April, 1851, Henrietta Anne Theodosia, eldest daughter of the late Mr. Henry Vyner; she has been a Lady of the Bedchamber to the Princess of Wales. He has surviving issue, Frederick Oliver, born Jan. 29, 1852, now Earl de Grey, heir to the marquisate.

RISTICH, John, a Servian statesman, born at Kragujevatz in 1831, began his studies in Germany and continued them in Paris. Under the government of Prince Karageorgevitch he was appointed Secretary and afterwards head of a department in the office of the Minister of the Interior. Milosch Obrenovitch III., on his return in 1858, appointed M. Ristich secretary to a deputation which he sent to Constantinople; and at a later period the same Prince accredited him as the representative of Servia at the Sublime Porte. Scarcely had he been installed in his post, however, when the crisis commenced which culminated in the bombardment of Belgrade (1862). M. Ristich extricated himself with such ability from the difficulties which ensued, that five years later (1867) he succeeded in obtaining the evacuation of all the Servian fortresses occupied up to that time by the Turkish troops. This service gained for him the portfolio of Foreign Affairs, but he soon resigned it in consequence of his inability to agree with the Prince Michael on certain questions of detail. He was present as the representative of Prince Michael at the baptism of Prince Nicholas of Montenegro. While on his way back from Cettinje he learned the news that Prince Michael had been assassinated (July 10, 1868), and had been succeeded by his grand-nephew, Prince Milan. The young Prince was then pursuing his studies in Paris, and the provisional government which had been established sent M. Ristich to that capital to escort him to Servia. On the Prince's arrival at Belgrade the Grand National Skuptschina was convoked, and nominated a Council of Regency, composed of three members, to govern the country during the Prince's minority. M. Blasnavatz, M. Ristich, and M. Gavrilovitch, formed this Council, which discharged its functions till 1872, when the Prince attained his majority. This Council then became a Ministry, in which M. Ristich held the portfolio for Foreign Affairs, and on the decease of his colleague, Col. Blasnavatz, he became President of the Council. He afterwards withdrew from public life for two years, until the insurrection occurred in Herzegovina, when he became Minister for Foreign Affairs. In May, 1876, he and his friends returned to office, which they had been obliged to resign eight months previous, in consequence of the diplomatic pressure of the Cabinets of Vienna, Berlin, and St. Petersburg. He held the office of Foreign Minister during the disastrous war with Turkey (1877), in which the Servians were thoroughly defeated. In 1878 he was sent to the Congress of Berlin, where he successfully pleaded the cause of Servia's independence. Since that date he has often been prominent in Servian affairs, but his strong pro-Russian leanings long prevented his holding office since Servia began to incline definitely towards Austria for support. However, in 1889, on the abdication of King Milan, he became head of the Regency during the minority of King Alexander When in 1893, however, the young king suddenly took the reins of power into his own hands, he was dismissed, and ordered to leave Servia.

RISTORI, Adelaide. See GRILLO, MARQUISE DEL.

RITCHIE, The Right Hon. Charles Thomson, late M.P., son of the late Mr. William Ritchie, of Rock Hill, Forfarshire, was born at Dundee in 1838, and is engaged in business in the east of London. In 1874 he was elected as Conservative member for the Tower Hamlets, and continued to hold the seat until 1885, when after the Redistribution Bill he was returned for the St. George's Division of the old borough. In Lord Salisbury's first administration, having gained a considerable reputation for practical ability and conversance with affairs, he was made Secretary to the Admiralty. He has taken a prominent part in the agitation against foreign bounties on sugar. In Lord Salisbury's second administration Mr. Ritchie was appointed President of the Local Government Board. During the session of 1888 he gained considerable reputation by his Local Government Bill, which he successfully carried through Parliament. The Local Government Act of 1888 inaugurated the scheme of local administration which was completed by the passing of the Act of 1894 in the March of that year. In Oct., 1888, he paid a visit to his native town, Dundee, and was presented with the freedom of the borough. Mr. Ritchie failed to secure re-election in 1892.

RITCHIE, Mrs. Richmond, daughter of the great novelist, William Makepeace Thackeray, was born in Albion Street, London. Some years of her childhood were spent in Paris, but she has passed the greater part of her life in Kensington. Her first published work was "The Story of Elizabeth," 1863, which was at once successful; this was followed in 1865, by "The Village on the Cliff;" "To Esther, and other Sketches;" "Old Kensington," the work by which she is best known; "Blue Beard's Keys," "Toilers and Spinsters," "Miss Angel," 1875; "Anne Evans," 1880; "Madame de Sévigné," 1881; "A Book of Sybils," 1883; and "Mrs. Dymond," 1885. In recent years she has written introductions to editions of "Cranford," "Our Village," and "The Fairy Tales of Madame d'Aulnoy." Various articles by her, on Tennyson, Ruskin, &c., have appeared from time to time in the American Magazines, and in 1892 she published "Records" of Tennyson, Ruskin, and the Brownings.

RIVES, Amélie. See CHANLER, Mrs. AMÉLIE.

RIVIÈRE, Briton, R.A., a distinguished animal-painter, was born in London, Aug. 14, 1840, being the son of Mr. W. Rivière, who was head of the drawing school at Cheltenham College, and afterwards a teacher of drawing at Oxford. He found in his father an experienced and able master, under whom he studied during the nine years he was at Cheltenham and subsequently at Oxford. While studying art in the latter place the influences, other than artistic, by which he was always surrounded, prevailed to turn his attention to classical and other scholarly matters; he entered the University, took his B.A. degree in 1867, and that of M.A. in 1873. The first pictures he exhibited were home rural scenes, as "Rest from Labour," and "Sheep on the Cotswolds," in the Academy Gallery, in 1858; and, in the next year, "On the Road to Gloucester Fair." From that date till 1864 he was absent from the Academy as an exhibitor, but in the last-mentioned year he sent "Iron Bars" and "Romeo and Juliet." Among his subsequent works are "The Poacher's Nurse," "Strayed from the Flock," a dead lamb lying in the snow, and "The Long Sleep," 1866; "Fox and Geese" (exhibited in the exhibition of water-colour painters at the Dudley Gallery in 1868, and now in the collection at South Kensington); "Prisoners," 1869; "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "Charity," 1870; "Come Back!" and "Circe and the Companions of Ulysses," 1871; "Daniel," 1872; "Argus" and "All that was left of the Homeward Bound," 1873; "Apollo" and "Genius Loci," 1874; "War Time" and "The Last of the Garrison," 1875; "A Stern Chase is always a Long Chase," and "Pallas Athene and "The Swineherd's Dogs," 1876; "A Legend of St. Patrick," and "Lazarus," 1877; "An Anxious Moment," a flock of geese frightened at the sight of a hat on the ground; "Sympathy," "Victims," and "The Ruins of Persepolis," 1878; "In manus tuas Domine," "The Poacher's Widow," now in the public library, Birmingham, and "A Winter's Tale," 1879; "The Night Watch," "The Last Spoonful," and "Endymion," 1880; "A Roman Holiday," "Envy, Hatred, and Malice," "Hope Deferred," and "Let Sleeping Dogs Lie," 1881; "The Magician's Doorway," "Una," and "Portrait of Miss Potter," 1882; "The Unclean Spirits Entering into the Swine," "Old Playfellows," "The Last of the Crew," and "Giants at Play," 1883; "Actæon," "St. Bartholomew's Eve," "The King and his Satellites," "The Enchanted Castle," 1884; "The Sheepstealer," "Væ Victis," "After Naseby," "Stolen Kisses," 1885. Exhibited in the Academy in 1886: "Rizpah," "Union is Strength," "The Exile, 1746," and "The Welcome." In 1887: "An Old Wanderer" and "Jilted." In 1888: "Requiescat" and "A Cavatina." In 1891, a triptich called "A Mighty Hunter before the Lord;" in 1892, "Dead Hector," "A Master of Kings," "The Haunted Temple," and "A Day of Mortification;" and in 1893, "The "King's Libation." At the Grosvenor: "Adonis's Farewell." In 1889: "Pale Cynthia" and "Of a Fool and his Folly there is no End." "At the Grosvenor: "Prometheus." In 1890: "Rus in Urbe." Exhibited by Messrs. Thomas Agnew and Sons: "Daniel's Answer to the King." Many of the above have been engraved on steel by F. Stacpoole, A.R.A., S. Cousins, R.A., and C. J. Lewis; and other works have been etched by various hands. Mr. Rivière was elected A.R.A. Jan. 16, 1878, and R.A. May 5, 1881, and made hon. D.C.L. of Oxford in 1891.

ROBERT I. (Robert-Charles-Louis Marie de Bourbon), ex-Duke of Parma, Infant of Spain, born July 9, 1848, succeeded his father, Duke Ferdinand Charles III., March 27, 1854, as Robert I., under the regency of his mother, the Dowager-Duchess Louise-Marie-Thérèse de Bourbon, daughter of the Duke de Berry. Her rule came to an end in 1859, in consequence of the revolution, and she, with her son, sought refuge in the Helvetic States. The ex-Duke Robert married, in Rome, April 5, 1869, the Duchess Marie Pia des Grâces, daughter of the late Ferdinand II., King of Naples. She died Sept. 29, 1882. He married, secondly, on Oct. 15, 1884, Marie Antonia, Princess of Bragance. He has nine children by his first wife, and six by his second.

ROBERTS, General Lord Frederick Sleigh, Bart., G.C.B., G.C.I.E., V.C., Commander-in-Chief in India, son of the late Sir Abraham Roberts, G.C.B., was born in 1832, and educated at Eton, Sandhurst, and Addiscombe. He received his first commission as second lieutenant in the Bengal Artillery in 1851, and, after passing through the various other grades, was promoted to lieutenant-general in 1883. He served with distinction throughout the Indian Mutiny campaign, and received the Victoria Cross for personal bravery in the field in 1858. "Lieutenant Roberts's gallantry has on every occasion been most marked. On following up the retreating enemy on Jan. 2, 1858, at Khodagunge, he saw in the distance two sepoys going away with a standard. Lieutenant Roberts put spurs to his horse, and overtook them just as they were about to enter a village. They immediately turned round and presented their muskets at him, and one of the men pulled the trigger, but fortunately the cap snapped, and the standard-bearer was cut down by the gallant young officer, and the standard taken possession of by him. He also, on the same day, cut down another sepoy who was standing at bay, with musket and bayonet, keeping off a sowar. Lieutenant Roberts rode to the assistance of the horseman, and rushing at the sepoy, with one blow of his sword cut him across the face, killing him on the spot." Throughout the Abyssinian campaign of 1868 he held the office of Assistant-Quartermaster-General; he superintended the re-embarkation of the whole army, and was selected by Sir Robert Napier as the bearer of his final despatches. He also acted as Assistant-Quartermaster-General with the Cachar column in the Looshai Expeditionary Force (1871-72). At the beginning of the Afghan campaign he was appointed Commander of the Kuram Field Force, and subsequently he had the chief command of the Army in Afghanistan, where he achieved the most brilliant triumphs. After the massacre of our embassy, Sir Frederick Roberts re-occupied Cabul at the close of 1879. Towards the end of July, 1880, a terrible defeat was inflicted by the troops of Ayoob Khan, at Maiwand, on General Burrows, the remnant of whose force with difficulty joined General Primrose's garrison at Candahar. An attack on that city seemed imminent, but Ayoob hesitated, and lost his opportunity. Meanwhile, a bold resolution was taken at Cabul. Sir Frederick Roberts, gathering a force of over 9,000 picked men, marched to the relief of Candahar, allowing Abdurrahman Khan to occupy Cabul, and leaving to General Stewart the duty of leading back the rest of the British troops by the Khyber to the Punjab. Sir Frederick Roberts, cut off from direct communication with his countrymen, disappeared, as it were, from human ken for three weeks, during which time the national anxiety was extreme. At last he emerged victorious from the trackless region between Cabul and Candahar. Immediately he grappled with Ayoob Khan, and inflicted on that pretender a crushing defeat. On the return of Sir Frederick Roberts to England he was loaded with honours; he was presented with the freedom of the City of London, received the thanks of Parliament, and was created a baronet. In February, 1881, he was appointed to succeed Sir George Colley in the command of the troops in Natal and the Transvaal, but peace was concluded with the Boers before his arrival in the colony. He was afterwards appointed a member of the Council of Madras, and commanded the troops in that Presidency from 1881-5, and since then has been Commander-in-Chief in India, in succession to Sir Donald Stewart.

On the death of Sir H. Macpherson (October, 1886), Sir F. Roberts assumed the command of the Burmese expedition. He had been twenty-three times mentioned in despatches before the Afghan war, during which campaign he was eight times thanked by the Viceroy and Commander-in-Chief in India. To the Nineteenth Century for November, 1882, he contributed an article on the "Present State of the Army," thus supplying the sequel to an interesting speech which he had delivered at the Mansion House about two years before. He was created a peer in January, 1892, under the title of Lord Roberts of Kandahar and Waterford. In April, 1893, on resigning his command, he left India for England, and was given a brilliant farewell, and received an equally brilliant reception at home. In June, 1893, the University of Cambridge conferred upon him its hon. LL.D. degree. He was made a K.G.C.S.I. in the preceding May.

ROBERTS, Isaac, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., F.G.S., was born in Denbighshire, North Wales, in the year 1829. A large part of his life has been devoted to practical investigations in Geology, Microscopy, Spectrum Analysis, Astronomy, and other kindred branches of science. He is the author of several papers on geological and astronomical subjects, amongst which are investigations of the physical conditions affecting the circulation of the underground water and the filtering and hygroscopic properties of triassic sandstone. He has for several years (by the aid of self-recording mechanical contrivances designed by himself for tracing continuous diagrammatic curves) studied the movements in the underground water which are caused by capillarity, by rainfall, by variations in atmospheric pressure, and by solar and lunar attraction. He has made exhaustive experiments by means of specially designed weighing machines, to determine the vertical and lateral pressures of grain when stored in cells up to eighty feet in height. Some of the results of these investigations are published in the "Proceedings of the Royal Society." For several years he has been pursuing stellar photography with powerful instruments specially constructed for the purpose, and has succeeded in adding considerably to the knowledge of the stars, clusters and nebulæ. In 1885 he commenced to chart by photography the stars in the northern hemisphere of the sky, but ere he had been a year engaged upon this work, the French astronomers arranged that the charting of the stars should be done internationally on a uniform scale by instruments of similar construction. Mr. Roberts thereupon turned his attention to special researches on star clusters and nebulæ, with long exposures of the photographic plates. These photographs have been regarded with the highest interest and admiration wherever they have been exhibited. He has devised a method and a machine by which the stars that have been photographed can with accuracy be engraved directly from the negatives on copper plates for the purpose of printing; the machine is also adapted for measuring the positions and magnitudes of the stars. In 1870 he was elected a Fellow of the Geological Society, and of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1882. In 1890 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1892 the degree of Doctor of Sciences was conferred upon him by the University of Dublin.

ROBERTS, Samuel, F.R.S., mathematician, the son of the Rev. Griffith Roberts, for many years minister of the English Presbyterian Chapel at Kirkstead, near Horncastle, Lincolnshire, was born at Hackney in 1827. He received his school education at Queen Elizabeth's Grammar School, Horncastle, and subsequently went to Manchester New College, then located in Manchester. In 1849 he took the Master of Arts degree of London University in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy, and received the Gold Medal. He entered the legal profession, and was admitted as Solicitor in 1853. After an interval of some years, Mr. Roberts resumed his mathematical studies; and, having removed to London, became, in 1865, a member of the London Mathematical Society, established in the same year. He was for several years Treasurer, and has also filled the offices of Vice-President and President, 1880-2, of that Society. In 1878 he was elected Fellow of the Royal Society. Except a few early articles of an ephemeral kind, his writings have related to mathematical subjects. They are contained in the "Proceedings of the London Mathematical Society," the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, and various other English and foreign mathematical journals.

ROBERTS, Sir William, M.D., F.R.S., was born in Anglesea in 1830, and is the son of David Roberts, Surgeon. He was educated at University College, London; took the degree of M.D., London, 1854; was appointed Physician to the Manchester Royal Infirmary, where he settled in practice as a physician in 1855. He was elected Fellow of the College of Physicians, London, in 1865; Fellow of the Royal Society in 1877, and was appointed Professor of Clinical Medicine to the Victoria University, on the founding of that University, but afterwards retired. His published works are: "A practical Treatise on Urinary and Renal Disorders," of which the 4th edition was published in 1885; "The Digestive Ferments and Preparation, and the use of Artificially Digested Food," 1880; "Lectures on Dietetics and Dyspepsia," 1885; and numerous papers in the Philosophical Transactions and the Proceedings of the Royal Society and the medical journals, of which one of the most recent deals with "Chemistry of Uric Acid, Gravel and Gout," 1892. He was knighted in 1885.

ROBERTS-AUSTEN, Professor W. Chandler, F.R.S., the Queen's Assay Master, was born in 1843, and is the son of George and Maria Louisa Roberts. His father's ancestry were Welsh, and his mother belonged to the old Kentish family of Chandler, which intermarried with the Hulses and Austens, and included among their more distinguished members the learned scholar, Isaac Casaubon, Canon of Canterbury. In 1885, at the request of his uncle, the late Major Austen, J.P., of Haffenden and Camborne in Kent, Mr. Roberts obtained Royal licence to take the name of Austen. Mr. Roberts-Austen entered the Royal School of Mines in 1861, with a view to becoming a Mining Engineer; but, on obtaining the Associateship of the School, the late Professor Graham, then Master of the Mint, secured his services. With him he conducted a remarkable series of researches, and on Professor Graham's death in 1869, he succeeded to one of the appointments which Professor Graham had held—that of Assayer to the Mint—being subsequently, in 1882, entrusted with all the duties of the "Queen's Assay Master." In 1880, on the retirement of the late Dr. Percy, F.R.S., at the request of the then Lord President of the Council, Mr. Roberts-Austen was appointed to the Chair of Metallurgy at the Royal School of Mines, a post which he still holds in addition to his office at the Mint. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1875, and is the author of several papers, mostly relating to metals, published in the Philosophical Transactions and elsewhere. He was one of the founders of the Physical Society of London, of which he was for some time Secretary, and afterwards a Vice-President. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales appointed him a Member of the Executive Council of the Inventions Exhibition, 1885; and he served on the British Executive Council of the 1889 Paris Exhibition. He was chosen Vice-President of the International Mining and Metallurgical Congress in Paris; and received from the President of the French Republic the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honour.

ROBERTSON, The Right Hon. James Patrick Bannerman, ex-M.P., Q.C., LL.D., late Lord Advocate for Scotland, Lord Justice General of Scotland, was born at Forteviot, Perthshire, in 1845, and is the son of the late Rev. R. Robertson, of Forteviot, by Helen, daughter of the Rev. J. Bannerman, of Cargill, Perthshire. He was educated at the Royal High School, Edinburgh, of which he was Dux, and at the University of Edinburgh. He took the degree of M.A, in 1864; and had the honorary degree of LL.D. (Edin. University) conferred on him April 10, 1890. He was called to the Scottish Bar in 1867; made Q.C. in 1885, and Solicitor-General for Scotland in the same year; re-appointed to the latter post in Aug., 1886, and appointed Lord Advocate for Scotland, Oct., 1888, on the elevation of Lord Advocate Macdonald to the post of Lord Justice Clerk, and sworn in as a Privy Councillor the same year. He was elected M.P. for Buteshire in 1885. He is a distinguished counsel and statesman, and was successful, as the responsible Minister of the Crown, in passing the Local Government Act for Scotland, and the Universities (Scotland) Act, in the session of 1889. On the death of Lord Glencorse he was appointed Lord Justice General of Scotland, and President of the Court of Session (Sept., 1891).

ROBERTSON, "Madge." See GRIMSTON, MRS. WILLIAM HUNTER.

ROBINS, Edward Cookworthy, F.S.A., was born in London in Sept., 1830, and was educated at Esher, Derby, and London Schools. He early applied himself to geometrical drawing, to which his taste led him, and was eventually placed with the late Emile de Buck, a Belgian civil engineer, who was also an artist. In 1853 he was elected an Associate, and in 1860 a Fellow, of the Royal Institute of British Architects. He now occupies a seat on the Council of that body. In 1878 Mr. Robins was elected a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. In 1880 he was elected on the Council of the London and Middlesex Archæological Society. He is one of the original members of the Institution of Surveyors, and in 1882 was elected to the Council of the Sanitary Institute, whose transactions he has edited for several years past. In 1887 he was chosen on the Council of the Society of Arts. Mr. Robins has been the architect of many churches, as St. John's, Wandsworth, St. Jude's, Brixton, St. Saviour's, Brixton, Emmanuel Church, Dulwich, St. Saviour's, Battersea Park, Wesley Church, Essex; besides many Congregational churches, as at Wandsworth, Clapham, Streatham Hill, Holloway, East London, &c. He gained the first premium for Mr. Spurgeon's tabernacle in 1859, and only lost the competition for the London Orphan Asylum, at Watford, by the casting vote of the chairman. He has long been architect to the London Missionary Society, and enlarged their premises in Bloomfield Street. He designed the four memorial churches for Madagascar, the Theological College at Antananarivo, and at Kruman in South Africa.

ROBINSON, The Right Hon. Sir Hercules George Robert, Bart., G.C.M.G., P.C., second son of Admiral Hercules Robinson, born in 1824, and educated at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, held for some years a commission in the 87th R. I. Fusiliers, but retired from the service in 1846, and was employed in various capacities in the Civil Service in Ireland until 1852. He was appointed President of Montserrat in 1854, Lieutenant-Governor of St. Christophers in 1855, succeeded Sir John Bowring as Governor of Hong Kong in 1859, when he received the honour of knighthood. In 1863 he was President of the Commission appointed to inquire into the condition of the Straits Settlements, and was promoted to the governorship of Ceylon in Jan., 1865, and to the governorship of New South Wales in March, 1872. In Aug., 1874, he proceeded to the Fiji Islands for the purpose of settling matters between the British Government and the native power. On Oct. 15 he accepted the unconditional cession of the islands, annexed them to the British Empire, and hoisted the British Flag. For some time he retained in his own hands the general supervision of the Provisional Government which he established. In Jan., 1875, he was created a Grand Cross of the Order of SS. Michael and George, in recognition of his services in connection with the cession of the Fiji Islands. He was, in Dec., 1878 appointed Governor of New Zealand, in succession to the Marquis of Normanby. He was appointed Governor of the Cape of Good Hope and H.M. High Commissioner for South Africa, in the place of Sir Bartle Frere, in Aug., 1880. He was President of the Royal Commission for the Settlement of the Affairs of the Transvaal, 1881. On May 22, 1883, he was sworn of the Privy Council, and in 1885 was appointed Governor of British Bechuanaland in conjunction with the Governorship of Cape Colony. In 1886 he was appointed Royal Commissioner to examine into the state of Mauritius, where the quarrel between the Governor (Sir John Pope Hennessey) and the Colonial Secretary (the late Mr. Clifford Lloyd) had caused a grave scandal. The result of this inquiry was the temporary suspension of the Governor in Dec., 1886, who, on his return to England, gave his account of the quarrel to the Secretary of State, and was restored to office. In 1889 Sir Hercules retired after 36 years of uninterrupted service as a Colonial Governor; and in the following year was created a Baronet. His reappointment as Chief Commissioner of the Cape of Good Hope in succession to Sir Henry Loch was announced in March, 1895.

ROBINSON, Sir John Charles, born 1824, formerly Art Superintendent of the South Kensington Museum, at present holds office in her Majesty's household as Crown Surveyor of Pictures, is an F.S.A., Hon. Member of the Academy of St. Luke in Rome, Florence, Bologna, Madrid, Lisbon, &c., and a Knight Commander of the Order of Isabella la Catolica and of Santiago of Spain and Portugal. After several years' study as an architect, Mr. Robinson proceeded to Paris and became a pupil of the eminent historical painter, Drolling. On his return, he received an appointment in the Government school of design as Master of the School of Art at Hanley, Staffordshire Potteries (1847). In 1852 he was called to London to assist in the development of the newly-created Science and Art Department, founded under the auspices of the Prince Consort, and in 1853 the organisation of the Art Museum at Marlborough House, afterwards transferred to South Kensington, was entrusted to him. In this post he remained till 1869, and the country owes to him the acquisition of an immense mass of varied art treasures gleaned from every part of Europe, where, especially in Italy and in the Spanish peninsula, a great portion of every successive year was spent in long expeditions during which the remotest corners of these countries were minutely explored. The system of circulating objects of art from the central museum to provincial institutions was, moreover, first suggested and carried into effect by Mr. Robinson in the early years of his tenure of office. In 1862 he suggested and carried out the special loan exhibition of art treasures, in connection with the General Industrial Exhibition of that year: an example which has since been repeatedly followed, but perhaps never surpassed in interest or importance, in France, Germany, and other continental countries. In association with the Marquis d'Azeglio, Italian Minister in London, and the late Baron Marochetti, he founded, and for many years directed as Hon. Secretary, the well-known "Fine Arts Club," now the Burlington Fine Arts Club. In 1869 he resigned his appointment at South Kensington on a retiring pension, but he has not ceased to render from year to year disinterested services to that institution, in the promotion of notable acquisitions and the formation of special loan collections, &c. In 1881, on the resignation of Mr. Redgrave, R.A., the Queen confided the post of Crown Surveyor of Pictures to Mr. Robinson, the office being that of art adviser in the Lord Chamberlain's Department, and comprising the supervision and control not only of the pictures, but of nearly all the art treasures of the Crown, in the various royal palaces, including the Hampton Court Gallery. Amongst the great number of his published works in diverse branches of art may be specified the catalogue of the Soulages Collection, that of the Art Treasures exhibition in 1862, and of the Italian Sculpture collections of the South Kensington Museum, all prefixed by original introductory essays. In 1870, at the request of the Oxford University authorities, he wrote "A Critical Account of the Drawings of Michel Angelo and Raffaelle in the University Galleries," an elaborate work, which has obtained general recognition, more especially on the Continent. An essay on the Early Portuguese School of Painting, undertaken on the head of extensive original researches in the country by desire of his Majesty the King Regent Don Fernando, was translated into Portuguese, and re-issued by the Lisbon Academy, and it remains one of the most important contributions made to the history of art in Portugal. Very numerous contributions in the shape of letters and essays on various branches of art have also for a long series of years been contributed by Sir Charles Robinson to the columns of the Times, the Nineteenth Century, the publications of the Society of Antiquaries, and other journals. He was knighted on the occasion of her Majesty's Jubilee in 1887.

ROBINSON, Miss A. Mary F. See DARMESTETER, MADAME.

ROBINSON, Sir John Richard, journalist, born at Witham, Essex, Nov. 2, 1828, is the son of the Rev. R. Robinson, and became connected at an early age with provincial journalism. On coming to London in 1846 he joined the paper which has been known as Douglas Jerrold's Newspaper, and soon afterwards undertook the editorship of the Evening Express. This was the property of the Daily News, and Mr. Robinson soon took an active part in the conduct of the morning paper. On the change of proprietorship in 1868, when the Daily News joined the ranks of the penny papers, he was appointed sole manager. On the outbreak of the Franco-German War in 1870 he developed an effective system of special correspondence, and in his selection of writers, as well as in his method of organisation, was very successful. His management during the campaign of Ashanti, the Zulu War, and the Russo-Turkish War, was distinguished by equal initiative faculty and fertility of resource. During the Franco-German War Mr. Robinson suggested that a fund should be raised for the relief of the French peasants in the occupied districts of the north-west, and upwards of £20,000 was subscribed under his auspices, the whole of which was distributed without one shilling being taken from the fund for expenses. For many years Mr. Robinson was a copious contributor to the columns of the American press, including the Boston Advertiser and the Chicago Tribune. He has also edited a work on shorthand. In June, 1887, Mr. Robinson became editor of the Daily News, continuing to fill at the same time the post of manager of the paper. In 1893, Mr. Robinson received the honour of knighthood from the Queen.

ROBINSON, Philip Stewart (known as PHIL ROBINSON), son of Rev. Julian Robinson, was born at Chunar in India, Oct. 13, 1849; educated at Marlborough College, joined the Pioneer as sub-editor to his father in 1869, contributing to that journal (1870-71) the papers afterwards republished as "In my Indian Garden." He was appointed (1872) editor of the Revenue archives of the Benares Province by the Government of the N. W. P., which published his compilations (1876) in 2 vols. "Records of the Benares Collectorate." Meanwhile he was gazetted Professor of Literature (1873), and exchanged (1875) to the chair of Logic and Metaphysics, and held simultaneously the appointment to the Supreme Government of Censor of the Vernacular Press. He retired from the service 1877; joined the Daily Telegraph in the same year, and served as one of the war-correspondents of that journal in Afghanistan (1878-9), Zululand (1879), Egypt (1882), Soudan (1885). He travelled over the United States as Special Commissioner of the New York World (1881-2), and published his experiences, "Sinners and Saints" (1883). His other works are "Under the Punkah" (1881); "Noah's Ark, or Mornings in the Zoo, an Essay in Un-Natural History" (1882), and "The Poets and Nature," 3 vols. (1884-86). The first "authorized" edition of his works in America appeared in 1882 as "Under the Sun." He is a regular contributor to the Contemporary Review, Gentleman's Magazine, and Harper's Monthly.

ROBINSON, W., Editor of the Garden and of other journals devoted to rural life, and author of the "English Flower Garden," was by his own wish trained to horticulture at an early age. When in the gardens of the Royal Botanic Society in the Regent's Park he visited, on behalf of the Society, all the botanical gardens in the United Kingdom, and commenced as a writer by giving a description of this tour in the Gardeners' Chronicle. He went to Paris at the time of the Exhibition of 1867, and studied the horticulture of the neighbourhood of Paris in public, private, and commercial gardens, writing in the Times an account of the more important things observed. He travelled in Europe and America always in the interest of the same subject, and collected plants in California and the Rocky Mountains. He has founded the Garden (Vol. 44, 1893); Gardening Illustrated (Vol. 15, 1894); Farm and Home (Vol. 12, 1894); Woods and Forests (Vol. 2, 1885); Cottage Gardening (Vol. 2, 1894). He is author of the "English Flower Garden" (3rd ed., 1893); the "Wild Garden" (4th ed., 1894); "Parks and Gardens of Paris" (2nd ed., 1883); "Hardy Flowers" (4th ed., 1892); the "Sub-Tropical Garden" (2nd ed.); "Garden Design and Architects' Gardens," 1892; "God's Acre Beautiful." In most of the above the aim has been to develop more artistic work both in the design and adornment of gardens, and to advocate the greatly increased culture of many plants from countries more like our own in climate, instead of the tender ones which it has been the custom to set out yearly in formal designs. Mr. Robinson is a Fellow of the Linnean Society, and garden editor of the Field.

ROBY, Henry John, M.P., J.P., LL.D., Edin. and Camb., is a native of Tamworth, where his father was a solicitor, and where he was born Aug. 12, 1830. When he was 12 years of age his family removed to Bridgenorth, and for seven years he was a day-scholar at the Grammar School there. In 1849, he went up to St. John's College, Cambridge, and was elected scholar and exhibitioner of the College, graduating B.A. in 1853, being first in the first class of the Classical Tripos. As senior classic, he was elected the following year to a Fellowship at St. John's, and subsequently was appointed tutor and classical lecturer. He remained at Cambridge until 1861, filling, among other offices, that of Secretary to the Committee of the Cambridge Local University examinations, and that of one of the examiners for the Law Tripos, the Classical Tripos, and the Moral Science Tripos. Mr. Roby took an active part in promoting reform in his college, and in the university under the Cambridge University Act, and published a pamphlet on the subject, "Remarks on College Reform," 1858. Upon leaving Cambridge, he became an under-master at Dulwich College, and while there (1861-1865) he published his Elementary Latin Grammar. From 1864 to 1868, under the appointment of the Crown, he was successively Secretary to the Schools Inquiry Commission, and in 1869 Secretary to the Endowed Schools Commissions, and, subsequently, 1872, Commissioner. This Commission expired Dec. 31, 1874. During this period he was for two years Professor of Jurisprudence at University College, London, where he lectured on Roman Law. Mr. Roby assisted the Schools Inquiry Commissioners in preparing their Report (issued March, 1868) and in compiling and editing the twenty volumes appended thereto. In 1877 he was appointed a life governor and a member of the Council of Owens College, and the same year a governor of Manchester Grammar School, and subsequently one of the governors of Hulme's Charity. Between 1871 and 1874 he had published the two volumes of his larger Latin Grammar, "Grammar of the Latin Language, from Plautus to Suetonius;" in 1880 a school edition of the work; and in 1884 his "Introduction to Justinian's Digest and Commentary," in recognition of the importance of which work the University of Edinburgh conferred upon him in 1887 the honorary degree of LL.D. He has filled the office of Chairman of the Manchester Liberal Executive, Chairman of the Executive for the North-West Manchester Liberal Association, Chairman of the Manchester Liberal Union, and President of the Eccles Liberal Association. He is M.P. for Eccles, a seat which he wrested from the Conservatives at the bye-election in Oct., 1890. He was re-elected for the same constituency in 1892. He is one of the Deputy-Chairmen of Committees of the House of Commons. In 1892 he received from Cambridge University their Hon. LL.D. degree. In 1861 Mr. Roby married Matilda, elder daughter of Peter A. Ermen, Esq. of Dawlish.

ROCHEFORT-LUCAY, Victor Henri, Count de, commonly known as Henri Rochefort, a French journalist, was born in Paris in 1831. In early life he was one of the writers of the Charivari, and his articles in this journal led to his appointment as sub-inspector of Fine Arts in Paris, a post he resigned in 1861, to devote himself wholly to journalism. After contributing to various papers, he joined the staff of the Figaro at an annual salary of 30,000 francs, but in 1865 he retired to save the journal from prosecution and established the Lanterne, whose first nine weekly issues reached a circulation of over 1,150,000. The paper was, however, soon suppressed on account of its violent attacks upon the Imperial family, and its author was condemned to a year's imprisonment, and to pay a fine of 10,000 francs. M. Rochefort fled to Brussels and continued to publish the Lanterne till Aug., 1869, when on his election to the Legislative Body he was permitted to return to Paris. In the same year he founded the Marseillaise, in which Victor Noir was a collaborator. The attacks in this journal on Prince Pierre Bonaparte led to the assassination of Victor Noir by the Prince; the paper was seized, and M. Rochefort committed to the prison of Sainte Pélagie. On the proclamation of the Republic in Sept. 1870, he was released by the mob, and was for a short time connected with the Government of National Defence. He was President of the Commission of Barricades during the siege of Paris, and in Feb. 8, 1871, he was elected one of the representatives of Paris in the National Assembly. During that time he was the editor of the Mot d'Ordre, in the columns of which he justified the Commune, and vehemently assailed the government of Versailles, and M. Thiers personally. On May 19, 1871, while endeavouring to escape from Paris, he was taken, tried by court-martial, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. In Sept., 1872, he was temporarily released to enable him to legitimatize his children by marrying their mother, who was dying. Subsequently M. Rochefort was transported to New Caledonia, but effected his escape in 1874. He returned to Europe and attempted to revive the Lanterne in London and Geneva, but without success. The general amnesty of July 11, 1880, permitted M. Rochefort to return to Paris, where he at once assumed the direction of a new Radical paper L'Intrisigeant, and renewed his attacks upon all the governments in turn. He has since been elected for Paris, but Parliament was irksome to him, and he resigned. In 1886 he proposed to take part in the workmen's riots in Belgium, but the Belgian authorities would not permit him to cross the frontier. He was a staunch partisan of General Boulanger, and came to England with him in 1889, having escaped through Belgium from France. Until the beginning of 1895 he resided in London, when he returned to Paris under an amnesty.

ROCHESTER, Bishop of. See DAVIDSON, THE RIGHT REV. RANDALL THOMAS.

ROCHESTER, Dean of. See HOLE, THE VERY REV. SAMUEL REYNOLDS, D.D.

ROGERS, The Rev. J. Guinness, B.A., Congregational Minister and writer, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in 1843, and afterwards prepared for his ministerial duties by study at Lancashire Independent College. He has been successively Congregational Minister at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Ashton-under-Lyne, and Clapham, where he now officiates. He was elected Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in 1875; and has contributed to the Congregationalist, Contemporary, British Quarterly, and the Congregational Review, of which he is editor.

ROHLFS, Mrs. Charles, née Anna Katharine Green, novelist, daughter of James Wilson Green, a lawyer, who has held public positions in New York and elsewhere, was born at Brooklyn, New York, and educated at Ripley College, Poultney, Vermont. She has published "The Leavenworth Case," 1878; "A Strange Disappearance," 1879; "The Sword of Damocles," 1881; "The Defence of the Bride, and other Poems," 1882; "X Y Z," and "Hand and Ring," 1883; "The Mill Mystery," and "7 to 12," 1886; "Risifi's Daughter," a Drama, 1887; "Behind Closed Doors," 1888; "The Forsaken Inn," 1890; "A Matter of Millions," 1890; "The Old Stone House," 1891; "Cynthia Wakeham's Money," 1892; and "Marked Personal," 1893. The author has dramatized her first novel "The Leavenworth Case," and it was presented to the public during the season of '91, '92, '93. Her novels are published in the native languages of Germany, Italy, and France, and have been widely circulated in England and the British possessions. On Nov. 24, 1884, Miss A. K. Green was married to Mr. Charles Rohlfs, and now resides at Buffalo, New York.

ROME, Pope of. See LEO XIII.

ROMER, The Hon. Sir Robert, born in London Dec. 23, 1840, is the second son of the late Francis Romer, and was educated at Trinity Hall, Cambridge; Senior Wrangler and Smith's Prizeman, 1863; Fellow of Trinity Hall, 1867. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1867; was Examiner in Civil Law at Cambridge 1869-70; was made Queen's Counsel in 1881; Bencher of Lincoln's Inn in 1884, and was appointed one of the Justices of the High Court (Chancery Division) Nov. 17, 1890, in the place of Sir Edward Ebenezer Kay, created a Lord Justice of Appeal. He married Betty, the daughter of the late Mark Lemon, editor of Punch.

RONNER, Mdme., whose charming pictures of cats were in 1890, on view at the Fine Art Gallery in New Bond Street, was born in Amsterdam in 1821, and was educated with great strictness for the profession of an artist. Her first tutor was her father, Herr Knip, who kept her at work for many hours daily, adopting the unusual plan of shutting her up in darkness for two hours in the midday, in order to rest her eyes, a proceeding much more likely to be injurious than beneficial. Forty years ago she married, since which time she has lived in Brussels, and devoted her attention almost solely to animal portraiture. On the Continent she is regarded as an animal painter of the highest merit, and receives from the Brussels National Gallery, the Luxembourg, and very many town and corporation museums, commissions to paint portraits of favourite dogs and cats. The great characteristic of her work is her absolute truthfulness.

ROOKWOOD, Lord, The Right Hon. Sir

Henry John Selwin-Ibbetson, Bart., M.P., only son of the late Sir John Thomas Ibbetson-Selwin, the sixth baronet, by Isabella, daughter of the late General John Leveson-Gower, was born Sept. 26, 1826, and received his academical education at St. John's College, Cambridge. He twice contested Ipswich in the Conservative interest, before being returned for South Essex in July, 1865; and after the county was further divided by the second Reform Act, he was elected in 1868 for the western division of it, which under the new name Epping Division, he represented in the House of Commons till 1892, when he was made a peer under the title of Lord Rookwood. He brought in, and passed, the Bills dealing with the Licences for the Sale of Beer and Wine in 1869 and 1870. Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department on Mr. Disraeli taking office in the spring of 1874. He was chairman of the departmental commission appointed in 1877 to inquire into the detective branch of the metropolitan police. In April 1878, he was appointed Secretary to the Treasury, and he held that office until the resignation of the Conservative Government in April, 1880. He assumed the name of Ibbetson (which his father had formerly borne) in addition to that of Selwin in 1867.

ROOSEVELT, Hon. Theodore, American statesman and writer, was born in New York City, Oct. 27, 1858, and graduated from Harvard University in 1880. He was a Member of the New York State Legislature, 1882-4, and an unsuccessful candidate for Mayor of New York City in 1886. In 1889 he was appointed on the Civil Service Commission by President Harrison, a position which he still (1893) retains. He has published "The Naval War of 1812," 1882; "Hunting Trips of a Ranchman," 1885; "Life of Thomas H. Benton," 1887; "Life of Gouveneur Morris," 1888; "Essays on Practical Politics," 1888; "Ranch Life and the Hunting Trail," 1888; "The Winning of the West," 1889; "History of New York City," 1891; and "The Wilderness Hunter," 1892.

ROSEBERY (Earl of), The Right Hon. Archibald Philip Primrose, K.G., LL.D., son of the late Archibald Lord Dalmeny by Lady Catherine Lucy Wilhelmina, only daughter of the fourth Earl Stanhope, was born in London in 1847, and received his education at Eton, and at Christ Church, Oxford. He succeeded to the title on the death of his grandfather, the fourth Earl of Rosebery, in 1868. The first time he ever spoke in public was in 1871, when, at the opening of Parliament, he was selected by the Prime Minister, Mr. Gladstone, to second the address in reply to the speech from the throne. He soon took a decided position on the question of national education, and when the Government Education Bill for Scotland was before the House of Peers, he moved an amendment to it by which he aimed at the exclusion of catechisms from public schools. He also spoke in the same session on Lord Russell's motion regarding the Alabama Treaty; and he was appointed Commissioner to inquire into Endowments in Scotland. In the session of 1873 Lord Rosebery was much engaged in an endeavour to obtain a Committee of Inquiry on the supply of horses in this country. He moved for, and obtained the Committee, and was made the chairman of the same. It may be said that to the labours of that Committee the remission of the taxes on horses is fairly due. During the session of 1874 Lord Rosebery moved for, and was made the chairman of, a Committee on the Scotch and Irish representative peerages. He was President of the Social Science Congress which met at Glasgow Oct. 1, 1874. On Nov. 16, 1878, he was elected Lord Rector of the University of Aberdeen in succession to Mr. W. E. Forster. In Nov., 1880, he was elected Lord Rector of the University of Edinburgh, but he did not deliver his inaugural address until Nov. 4, 1882. He was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in August, 1881, in succession to Mr. Leonard Courtney, who was transferred to the Colonial Office. His lordship resigned the Under-Secretaryship in June, 1883, and in Nov. 1884, became First Commissioner of Works in succession to Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, who succeeded Mr. Fawcett as Postmaster-General. In Mr. Gladstone's next Government (1886) Lord Rosebery was appointed Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; and won general approval, at home and abroad, for the firmness with which he conducted the difficult questions arising out of the Servo-Bulgarian War and the Greek desire for a territorial indemnity. When Mr. Gladstone brought forward his first Home Rule for Ireland Bill, he entirely approved of it, and became one of its staunchest supporters in the Upper House. In 1888 Lord Rosebery received the degree of LL.D. from the University of Cambridge. On Jan. 17, he was elected, in company with Sir John Lubbock, member for the City Division of the London County Council; and on Feb. 12, was appointed chairman, but resigned in June, 1890, owing to the pressure of his many public duties, and was succeeded by Sir John Lubbock. He married, March 20, 1878, Hannah, only child of Baron Meyer de Rothschild. She died Nov. 19, 1890. Owing to her death, Lord Rosebery abstained from most of his political and social labours during 1891. In Jan., 1892, he was again elected chairman of the London County Council, and held the position for some months. On Mr. Gladstone's accession to power, Lord Rosebery was appointed Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and in October was made a Knight of the Garter. As a Foreign Minister he has always inclined to maintaining firmly the interests of Great Britain abroad, and as such has carried on Conservative traditions. He is a strong advocate of Imperial Federation, and it is therefore not surprising that when Mr. Gladstone retired in March, 1894, and the Premiership was offered to Lord Rosebery by the Queen, a group of "Little-Englanders" and others, headed by Mr. Labouchere, should for a time have violently resented his accession to power, especially whilst such a tried Liberal leader, as Sir William Harcourt was apparently passed by. Lord Rosebery, on his acceptance of the Premiership, made some necessary changes in the Cabinet. His Premiership has hitherto been marked by no startling political events, but he has had to carry on the work of Government, with a majority too small and heterogeneous to allow of a very dashing policy on the part of those in power. Since March, 1894, he has made several great speeches, and has given vent to some notable remarks on the relations of the House of Commons and House of Lords, and on the question of Welsh Disestablishment. In the summer of 1894, Lord Rosebery's horse "Ladas," won the Derby, and prolonged attacks on his owner's encouragement of so-called "gambling" have been the result. Lord Rosebery, indeed, has the character of being a man of many sympathies. Besides being one of the first of English Foreign Ministers, he has for many years taken a deep interest in the welfare of the masses. He has presented a fine swimming-bath to the People's Palace, and his chairmanship of the London County Council will be remembered, for the keen sympathy he displayed during his tenure of it in all movements tending to the bettering of the condition of the London working classes. In Nov., 1891, he published a monograph on the younger Pitt.

ROSCOE, Professor Sir Henry Enfield, M.P., V.P.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., born Jan. 7, 1833, in London, is a grandson of William Roscoe, Esq., of Liverpool, and son of Henry Roscoe, Esq., barrister-at-law. He was educated at Liverpool High School, University College, London, and Heidelberg (B.A., London, 1852); was appointed Professor of Chemistry at Owens College, Victoria University, Manchester, from 1858 to 1885; elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1863; and received the Royal Medal of that Society in 1873, "for his chemical researches, more especially for his investigations of the chemical action of light, and of the combinations of Vanadium." Professor Roscoe has published several series of investigations on the Measurement of the Chemical Action of Light in conjunction with Professor Bunsen, of Heidelberg, and is author of many papers in the "Philosophical Transactions" and scientific journals on other subjects; also of "Lessons in Elementary Chemistry," since translated into German, Russian, Hungarian, Italian, Urdoo, and Japanese, and republished in America; "Lectures on Spectrum Analysis," 1869, 4th edit. 1885; and, conjointly with Professor Schorlemmer, F.R.S., of a "Treatise on Chemistry," 8 vols., 1877-90, in which the facts and principles of the science are more fully expounded than in the smaller work. The University of Dublin conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1878, that of Cambridge in 1883, and that of Montreal in 1884, and he received the D.C.L. of Oxford in 1887. He is honorary member of the German Chemical Society, and of many foreign academies. He was joint editor with Professors Huxley and the late Balfour Stewart of Macmillan's Science Primer Series, and author of the "Chemistry Primer." He acted for many years as Examiner in Chemistry to the University of London and to the Science and Art Department. In 1880 he was President of the Chemical Society of London; in 1881 President of the Society of Chemical Industry, of which he is one of the founders; and in 1882, President of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester, and a member of the Royal Commission on Technical Instruction 1882-84; in the latter year he received the honour of Knighthood for his services on that Commission. He has also acted on the Royal Commission on Scottish Universities. In 1887 he was elected President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science for the Manchester Meeting; in 1888 he was appointed Consulting Chemist to the Metropolitan Board of Works; in 1889

he received the decoration of Officer of the Legion of Honour from the French Government in recognition of his services as a sectional Vice-President at the Paris Exposition of that year; in the same year he was appointed President of the Midland Institute, Birmingham, and delivered an address on Pasteur's discoveries. He has served on the Commission appointed to inquire into the Pasteur method for the treatment of hydrophobia. He was appointed to the vacancy in the Senate of London University in Jan., 1894. At the general election, Nov., 1885, he won the seat for South Manchester for the Liberal party, of which he is a staunch supporter. In 1886 and 1892 he was elected again.

ROSS, Alexander Milton, M.D., F.R.S.L., was born at Belleville, Ontario, Canada, Dec. 13, 1832. While yet a boy he went to New York, and after many reverses became a compositor on the Evening Post, then edited and owned by Wm. Cullen Bryant. In 1851 he began the study of medicine, taking his degree in 1855. From 1855 to the outbreak of the Civil War he took an active part in the anti-slavery agitation. During that war he was employed by President Lincoln as confidential correspondent in Canada. He was one of the founders of the Society for the Diffusion of Physiological Knowledge in 1881. During the small-pox epidemic in Montreal in 1885 Dr. Ross was a prominent opponent of vaccination, declaring that it was not only useless as a preventative of small-pox, but that it propagated the disease when practised during the existence of an epidemic. In place of vaccination, he strongly advocates the strict enforcement of sanitation and isolation. He has been a member of the British Association of Science for twenty years, and of the American and French Associations for seventeen years, and is a Fellow of many scientific societies both in Europe and in America. He has been knighted by the Emperor of Russia, King of Italy, King of Greece, King of Portugal, King of Saxony, and has received the Medal of Merit from the Shah of Persia, the decoration of honour from the Khedive of Egypt, and the decoration of the Académie Française from the government of France. He was offered (and declined) the title of baron by the King of Bavaria, in recognition of his labours as a naturalist, and was appointed consul to Canada by the King of Belgium and the King of Denmark. He has received many other honours and distinctions from Academies of Science in Europe and Asia. For many years he has been eminent as a naturalist, devoting special attention to the ornithology, ichthyology, botany and entomology of Canada. He has collected and classified five hundred and seventy species of birds that regularly or occasionally visit the Dominion of Canada; two hundred and forty species of eggs of birds that breed in Canada; two hundred and forty-seven species of mammals, reptiles, and fresh-water fish; three thousand four hundred species of insects; and two thousand species of Canadian flora. He has published "Recollections of an Abolitionist," 1867; "Birds of Canada," 1872; "Butterflies and Moths of Canada," and "Flora of Canada," 1873; "Forest Trees of Canada," 1874; "Ferns and Wild Flowers of Canada," 1877; "Mammals, Reptiles, and Fresh-water Fishes of Canada," 1878; "Friendly Words to Boys and Young Men," 1884; "Vaccination a Medical Delusion," 1885; "Natural Diet of Man," 1886; and "Memoirs of a Reformer," 1893. Dr. Ross is one of the founders of the St. Louis Hygienic College of Physicians and Surgeons, in which he is professor of hygiene, sanitation and physiology. He is a graduate of the allopathic, hydropathic, eclectic, and botanic systems of medicine, and a member of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of the Provinces of Quebec, Ontario, and Manitoba.

ROSSE, Earl of, Laurence Parsons, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., a Representative Peer for Ireland, was born at Birr Castle, Parsonstown, King's County, Nov. 17, 1840; succeeded to the title on the death of his father in 1867; was educated at Trinity College, Dublin (LL.D., 1879; and Hon. D.C.L., Oxford, 1870); is Chancellor of Dublin University; a D.L. and J.P. for King's County; High Sheriff 1867; a J.P. for County Tipperary, and one of the Senate of the Royal University of Ireland. He is the author of various scientific papers in the Philosophical Transactions, and in the Proceedings of the Royal Society, London; the Royal Dublin Society, of which he was elected President in March, 1887; the Reports of the British Association (Montreal meeting); and in the Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society. Lord Rosse married, in 1870, Frances Cassandra, daughter of the fourth Baron Hawke, and has two sons and one daughter.

ROSSETTI, William Michael, brother of Dante Gabriel and Christina Georgina Rossetti, was born in London, Sept. 25, 1829, and educated at King's College School, London. He was appointed in Feb., 1845, to an extra Clerkship in the Excise Office, London (now the Inland Revenue Office), and became in July, 1869, Assistant-Secretary in the same office. Mr. Rossetti has been a critic of fine art and literature since 1850. He has acted in that capacity (principally as regards Fine Art) for the Critic, Spectator, Reader, Saturday Review, London Review, Chronicle (weekly), Fraser's Magazine, Academy, Athenæum, and "Encyclopædia Britannica." He was much concerned (along with his brother, Millais, Holman Hunt, Woolner, and two others) in the "Pre-Raphaelite" movement in fine art, from its commencement in 1848; and he edited and wrote in The Germ, the magazine got up by the Pre-Raphaelites in 1850. He has published "Dante's Comedy, the Hell," translated into blank verse, 1865; "Fine Art, chiefly Contemporary," 1867; a volume of republished criticisms; an edition of Shelley, 1870, with a memoir, and a large body of notes; this was in 2 vols., and was re-issued in 3 vols., revised, in 1878; "Lives of Famous Poets," 1878, being brief biographies of 23 British poets, from Chaucer to Longfellow, some of them reproduced from the series named "Moxon's Popular Poets," with others added; an edition, with preface and notes, 1887, of the "Collected Works of Dante Gabriel Rossetti;" a "Life of Keats," 1887, in the series named "Great Writers; and a volume, 1889, entitled "Dante Gabriel Rossetti as Designer and Writer." The series above named, "Moxon's Popular Poets," was edited by Mr. Rossetti from 1870 to 1875, including 2 vols. of American poems and humorous poems, selected. He also edited, with a full memoir, Wm. Blake's Poems, in the Aldine series; and the annotated edition of Shelley's Adonais for the Clarendon Press; and issued a selection, in 1868, of the Poems of Walt Whitman; likewise works of different kinds, published by the Early English Text Society, and the Chaucer Society. He is now chairman of the Committee of the Shelley Society, and has read to this body papers on Shelley's "Prometheus Unbound," and on several other matters. Among his other works are a poem of modern life, in blank verse, entitled, "Mrs. Holmes Grey," published in The Broadway, about 1869; and a "Criticism of Swinburne's Poems and Ballads," 1866. Mr. Rossetti delivered in 1875, &c., at Birmingham, Oxford University, and elsewhere, lectures on Shelley's Life and Poems, on "The Wives of Poets," and on Leopardi. In March, 1874, he married Lucy, elder daughter of the late Ford Madox Brown, the painter. She was an artist and authoress, and has exhibited at the Royal Academy. She died on April 12, 1894. Mr. Rossetti has since retired from the Civil Service.

ROSSI, Ernesto, an Italian actor, born at Leghorn, in 1829, received his early education in his native town, and afterwards studied law in the University of Pisa. Having a great liking for the stage, he used often to take a part in amateur theatricals, and also in the performances of a regular dramatic company, that of Marchi. Subsequently he entered the dramatic school which has just been founded by Gustavo Modena. After having appeared at Milan, Turin, and other Italian cities, he went in 1853 with Mdlle. Ristori to Paris, where, by his masterly acting, he enabled the French public to appreciate the works of several Italian dramatists, and notably those of Goldoni. Signor Rossi achieved a like success in Vienna, and he then returned to his native country, where he established a dramatic company, of which he himself took the management. In 1866 he paid a second visit to Paris, and on the occasion of the anniversary of Corneille, appeared at the Théâtre Française, in an Italian translation of "The Cid." After having visited Portugal and Spain, he returned to Paris in 1875, and gave at the Salle Ventadour, with remarkable success, a series of Shaksperian representations, in which he himself played the leading parts. He next visited London, where he met with an encouraging reception. M. Rossi, who has been styled the "Italian Talma," is the author of some dramatic pieces of no great merit. He retired from the stage in 1889. He has been decorated with the cross of SS. Maurice and Lazarus, and with several foreign orders, and has published several plays, and in 1881 "Forty Years of the Artistic Life."

ROST, Reinhold, LL.D., Ph.D., C.I.E., was born Feb. 2, 1822, at Eisenberg, in Saxe-Altenburg, where his father was archdeacon. He was educated at the Gymnasium at Altenburg and the University of Jena, where he took his degree of Ph.D. in 1847. Dr. Rost came to London in the same year; was appointed Oriental Lecturer in St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, in 1850; Secretary to the Royal Asiatic Society in 1863; and Librarian to the India Office in 1869. He retired from that post in Sept., 1893. He has written a treatise on the sources of the ancient Burmese laws (Weber's indische Studien, vol. i.), and a descriptive catalogue of the palm-leaf manuscripts belonging to the Imperial Public Library of St. Petersburg, 1852; he edited Prof. H. H. Wilson's "Essays on the Religion of the Hindus, and on Sanskrit Literature," 5 vols., London, 1861-65; H. B. Hodgson's Essays (2 vols., 1880), and Miscellaneous Papers on Indo-China (4 vols., 1886-8). He has contributed to the "Encyclopædia Britannica" and to the Athenæum articles on Oriental philology and literature, and edited the last three volumes of Trübner's "Oriental Record." He is Honorary M.A. of Oxford, and LL.D., of Edinburgh, Honorary Member of the Royal Asiatic Society, the American Oriental Society, and of the Asiatic Societies of Singapore, the Hague and Batavia; Corresponding Member of the Royal Society of Munich and the German Oriental Society, and Honorary Fellow of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury. He was created a Companion of the Order of St. Ann in 1851, C.I.E. in 1888, Chevalier of the Order of Wasa in 1889, and Companion of the Prussian Order of the Crown in 1893. In Feb. 1894, the Order of the North Star was conferred upon him by the King of Sweden, in recognition of his services to oriental literature while at the India Office.

ROTHSCHILD, Alfred de, second son of the late Baron Lionel de Rothschild, was born July 20, 1842, and educated at Cambridge. He is a member of the firm of N. M. Rothschild and Sons, a director of the Bank of England, and Consul-General for the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Like almost all the members of his family, he is a passionate collector of works of art; especially of Dutch, French, and old English pictures, Sèvres china, Louis XVI. furniture and bronzes, and Renaissance enamels and metal work. A sumptuous catalogue of this collection was privately printed in two folio volumes, 1885. Among Mr. de Rothschild's most famous pictures may be named Greuze's "Le Baiser envoyé;" Teniers, "The Marriage of Teniers;" Gainsborough's "Mr. and Mrs. Villebois;" and Romney's "Mrs. Tickell."

ROTHSCHILD, Baron Ferdinand James de, M.P., son of Baron Aurelius de Rothschild, of Vienna, was born in Paris, Dec. 17, 1839, and educated in Vienna. He has been long resident in England, and at a bye-election in 1885, was returned member for Aylesbury, being re-elected at the general election of 1885, and again as a Liberal Unionist in 1886. He was re-elected for the same constituency in 1892. He was also made High Sheriff of Buckinghamshire in 1883, and is a Deputy-Lieutenant and J.P. for the county, as well as a member of its County Council. Like many of his family Baron de Rothschild is an enthusiastic collector of works of art, and in his houses in Piccadilly and at Waddesdon, has a large number of rare treasures, of which Romney's "Mrs. Jordan" is one. He founded the Evelina Hospital in Southwark Bridge Road in memory of his wife.

ROTHSCHILD, (Lord) Nathaniel Mayer de, first Lord Rothschild, eldest son of Baron Lionel Nathan de Rothschild, was born in London, Nov. 8, 1840, and educated at King's College School, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was elected as Liberal member for Aylesbury, 1865, and retained the seat until 1885, when he was created a Peer. He is the head of the London banking firm of N. M. Rothschild and Sons. At Tring Park, and in his fine house in Piccadilly, Lord Rothschild has assembled a multitude of treasures of art; among which it is enough to mention three masterpieces of Gainsborough, "Mrs. Sheridan," "Squire Hilyard and his Wife," and "Mrs. Hibbert," and two of Sir Joshua Reynolds, "Garrick between Tragedy and Comedy," and "Mrs. Lloyd."

ROUMANIA, King of. See CHARLES, KING OF ROUMANIA.

ROUMANIA, Queen of. See ELIZABETH, QUEEN OF ROUMANIA.

ROUTH, Edward John, M.A., D.Sc., LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Quebec, Canada, in 1831, being a son of Sir Randolph Routh, K.C.B., Commissary-General to the Forces. He is also a nephew of Cardinal Taschereau, Archbishop of Quebec. At the age of 11 he was brought to England, and subsequently was sent to University College School, where he stayed only a year before entering University College. Here, under Professor de Morgan, he made rapid progress in mathematical studies. He passed through the higher classes, gaining the mathematical prizes at the yearly examinations. This encouraged him to attend the matriculation examination in the University of London in 1847, and afterwards the B.A. examination in 1849, gaining the Mathematical Scholarship at each. He received also the Gold Medal at his M.A. examination in 1853. In Oct. 1851, he entered Peterhouse, Cambridge. He studied for a year under Mr. Todhunter, of St. John's College, and for the remaining two years and a quarter under Mr. Hopkins, of Peterhouse. In 1854 he graduated as Senior Wrangler, and at the Smith's Prize examination he was bracketed equal with Mr. Clerk Maxwell, afterwards Professor of Experimental Philosophy at Cambridge. He was then elected a Fellow of Peterhouse, and adopted the profession of teaching as his career in life. From 1861 to 1885 (with the single exception of 1883), the Senior Wrangler has every year been his pupil, besides twice before that date, and once since; in all twenty-seven times. He has also had amongst his pupils forty-one Smith's Prizemen. This success is without precedent. In 1855 Mr. Routh wrote a book in conjunction with Lord Brougham. In 1859 he was appointed Examiner in Mathematics, in the University of London, and after the necessary interval of a year, he held the office for a second quinquennial period (1865-70). Soon after his graduation he was elected a member of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, of the Geological Society, and of the Royal Geographical Society; subsequently he became a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, and a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is also an original member of the London Mathematical Society, having been one of those who helped to establish it. In 1860 he was a Moderator, and in 1861, Examiner for the Mathematical Tripos at Cambridge. In 1877 he gained the Adams Prize for his essay on the Stability of Motion. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him in 1879 by the University of Glasgow. In 1883 he was one of the first to take the degree of Doctor of Science, then established in the University of Cambridge for those who have "given proof of distinction by some original contribution to the advancement of science." He was elected Honorary Fellow of Peterhouse in the same year. In 1884 Dr. Routh was appointed by the Crown a Fellow of the University of London, and is therefore now a member of the governing body of that University. In 1886 Dr. Routh ceased taking any new pupils, and during the next two years he merely conducted through the remainder of their mathematical course those who had already begun to read with him. In the thirty-one years from 1857 to 1888 he thus "coached" nearly seven hundred pupils through the Mathematical Tripos, five hundred of them becoming wranglers. In 1888 his old pupils presented Mrs. Routh with a portrait of her husband painted by Herkomer as a memorial of their attachment to him. The presentation took place in Peterhouse, the ceremony being described at some length in the Times of Monday, Nov. 5, 1888. In this year he was elected a member of the Council of the University of Cambridge, and a member of the Council of the Royal Society. At the celebration of the Tercentenary of Trinity College, Dublin, in June, 1892, he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Science in that University. In 1888 he was an examiner for the second part of the Cambridge Tripos, and in 1893 he was again Moderator. He is also on the governing bodies of Cavendish College, Dulwich College, and till lately of the schools at Ipswich. Dr. Routh has written a book on "Rigid Dynamics," in two volumes, five editions of which have been published. He has written for the Syndics of the University Press, a treatise on "Statics," also in two volumes. Besides these he has contributed numerous papers on mathematical subjects to the Mathematical Messenger, the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, the Proceedings of the Royal Society, and the volumes of the London Mathematical Society. In 1864 he married the eldest daughter of Sir G. B. Airy, K.C.B., the late Astronomer-Royal.

ROWBOTHAM, John Frederick, is the only son of the late Rev. Frederick Rowbotham, Incumbent of St. James's, Edinburgh. He was born in 1854, and was educated at the Edinburgh Academy and at Rossall School, of which he was Captain. From Rossall he proceeded to Balliol College, Oxford, where he gained the Balliol Scholarship at the age of eighteen. He was the favourite pupil of Professor Jowett. Among other distinctions at Oxford, he took a first class in classics and the Taylorian University Scholarship for Italian. After leaving college he travelled for some years on the Continent, in order to collect materials for his "History of Music." He studied at the libraries of Madrid, Paris, Rome, Florence, Venice, and Vienna; and even visited monasteries to peruse their manuscripts. The "History of Music," was published in 1885, and was at once acknowledged by the entire press, if not by musicians at large, to be the standard work on the subject. After completing the "History of Music," Mr. Rowbotham devoted himself to epic poetry. His first epic poem, "The Death of Roland," was published in 1886. "The Human Epic" appeared in 1890. In 1892 appeared "Private Life of the Great Composers;" in 1893, a new edition of the "History of Music;" and in 1894 "A History of Rossall School." Among those who have taken a deep interest in Mr. Rowbotham's writings is the Queen of Roumania.

ROWLANDS, W. Bowen, M.P., Q.C., was born in 1839, and is the eldest son of the late Thomas Rowlands, J.P., of Glenover, Pembrokeshire, and Anne, daughter of John Bowen, of Dygoed, in the same county. He completed his education at Jesus College, Oxford, of which University he is a M.A. In 1870 he gained a First Class Certificate of Honour at the General Examination for the Bar, and was called at Gray's Inn in 1871. In 1882 he was appointed a Queen's Counsel, and became a Bencher of Gray's Inn in the same year. In 1889 he was Treasurer of his Inn. He is a member of the Council of Legal Education and of the Board of Studies, of the Bar Library Committee, of the Committee of the Four Inns of Court on the Discipline of the Bar, leader of the South Wales and Chester Circuits, D.L. for Cardiganshire, and J.P. for Pembrokeshire, Cardiganshire and Haverfordwest. In 1886, and again in 1892, Mr. Bowen Rowlands was elected Member of Parliament for Cardiganshire. In June 1893, he was appointed Recorder of Swansea, when he vacated his seat, and was re-elected without opposition. He married, in 1864, Adeline Wogan, only daughter of J. D. Brown, of Kensington House, Haverfordwest.

ROWTON (Lord), Montagu William Lowry-Corry, C.B., second son of the Right Hon. Henry Corry (son of the second Earl of Belmore and of Lady Harriet, daughter of the Sixth Earl of Shaftesbury), was born in London, Oct. 8, 1838. He was educated at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge, taking his degree in 1860. Called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1863, he practised for three years on the Oxford Circuit, and in 1866 was officially appointed Private Secretary to Mr. Disraeli, then Chancellor of the Exchequer. After Mr. Disraeli's defeat in 1868 he declined offers of public appointments which were made to him, and rendered voluntary service to that statesman till his return to power in 1874, subsequently continuing to act as Lord Beaconsfield's private secretary till his death in 1881. He accompanied Lord Beaconsfield to the Congress of Berlin, being then appointed one of the joint-secretaries to the Special Embassy of Great Britain, and, at its close, received the Companionship of the Bath. At the termination of Lord Beaconsfield's Government in 1880, he was raised to the peerage, taking his title from his estate at Rowton Castle in Shropshire. Lord Beaconsfield bequeathed to Lord Rowton the whole of his letters, papers, documents, and manuscripts, leaving it to his absolute discretion to destroy, preserve, or publish any of them, at such time as, in his uncontrolled judgment, might seem fit. It was at first inferred from the terms of the bequest that Lord Beaconsfield had left behind him some sort of diary or memoirs for publication. This has, unfortunately, proved not to be the case, while research has made it clear that the only manuscript contemplated in the testator's will was that of "Endymion," almost completed at the date of the signing of the will, and afterwards published during the lifetime of the writer. Lord Rowton is one of the trustees of the Guinness Fund for the erection of dwellings for the housing of the poor in London and Dublin.

RÜCKER, Professor Arthur William, M.A. (Oxon.), F.R.S., M.I.E.E., eldest son of the late D. H. Rücker, Esq., of Errington, Clapham Park, was born in 1848. He was educated at the Clapham Grammar School, and in 1867 obtained an open mathematical scholarship at Brasenose College, Oxford. After a distinguished University career, he was elected Fellow and Lecturer of his College, and Demonstrator in the Clarendon Laboratory of the University. In 1874 he was appointed Professor of Mathematics and Physics in the newly-founded Yorkshire College, Leeds. In the general election of 1885 Professor Rücker contested the Northern Division of Leeds in the Liberal interest; and, in 1886, he stood as a Unionist Liberal for the Pudsey Division of the West Riding. In the latter year he was appointed Professor of Physics in the Royal College of Science, South Kensington. Professor Rücker is the author, or joint author, of many papers on scientific subjects. Together with Professor Reinold, F.R.S., he has published in the Transactions of the Royal Society, 1881, 1883, 1886, and 1893, a series of memoirs on the properties of liquid films; and, in conjunction with Professor Thorpe, F.R.S., he has carried out the magnetic survey of the United Kingdom which formed the subject of the Bakerian Lecture delivered before the Royal Society in 1889. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1884, and was awarded a Royal Medal in 1891; has served as Treasurer and President of the Physical Society of London, is Treasurer of the British Association, an Honorary Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford, and a Fellow of the University of London.

RUDLER, Frederick William, was born in London, July 8, 1840, and appointed an Assistant in the Museum of Practical Geology in Jermyn Street, in 1861. He was Assistant-Secretary of the Ethnological Society in 1870; and for some time edited its Quarterly Journal, and that of the Anthropological Institute. In 1876 he was appointed Professor of Natural Science in the University College of Wales, but resigned that position in 1879, to take the Curatorship of the Museum of Practical Geology. He also held the office of Registrar of the Royal School of Mines until its amalgamation with the Normal School of Science. For many years he was Honorary Secretary of the Anthropological Institute, and in 1880, presided over the Anthropological Department of the British Association. In 1887 and 1888 he was President of the Geologists' Association. In conjunction with the late Mr. Robert Hunt, he edited the seventh edition of Ure's "Dictionary of Arts," and, jointly with others, was author of the volume on Europe in Stanford's "Compendium of Geography." Mr. Rudler was a contributor to the ninth edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, and to Longman's two Dictionaries of Chemistry. He is a copious writer of articles and reviews, mostly anonymous, in various scientific journals, and is a lecturer in connection with the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching.

RUMBOLD, Sir Horace, Bart., K.C.M.G., fifth son of Sir William Rumbold, third baronet, was born in 1829, and entered the diplomatic service as attaché at Turin, Sept. 1849. He was paid attaché successively at Stuttgart and Vienna, and appointed Secretary of Legation in China in 1858. He held the same position in Athens, 1862, was transferred to Berne in 1864, but was in charge of the Mission in Athens during May and June, 1864, and attended the King of the Hellenes on his Majesty's first journey to the Ionian Islands after their annexation to Greece. In 1868 he proceeded to St. Petersburg as Secretary of Embassy; was transferred thence to Constantinople in 1871; and was promoted to be Minister Resident and Consul-General in Chili, Oct. 24, 1872, and Minister Resident at Berne, Jan. 17, 1878. He was accredited Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, Aug. 15, 1879; to the King of Sweden and Norway in 1881; and to the King of the Hellenes, Dec. 17, 1884. At Athens Sir H. Rumbold has had the difficult and unwelcome task of persuading the Greeks that they must not make war; the persuasion, in 1886, having to be accompanied by a forcible blockade of the Greek ports. He was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of the Netherlands Feb. 1, 1888. He was made a G.C.M.G. on May 25, 1892.

RUNYON, Hon. Theodore, LL.D., American statesman, was born at Somerville, New Jersey, Oct. 25, 1822. He graduated from Yale College in 1842, and in 1846 was admitted to the bar. In 1853 he was made City Attorney, and in 1856 City Counsellor of Newark, N.J., a position retained until (in 1864) he became Mayor of the City. He was appointed in 1856 a commissioner to revise and codify the Militia laws of New Jersey, and in 1857 was made Brigadier-General and subsequently Major-General of the New Jersey National Guard (Militia). At the outbreak of the Civil War he was placed in command of the N.J. Brigade of Volunteers. In 1865 he was Democratic Candidate for Governor of his State, but was not elected. From 1873 to 1887 he was Chancellor of New Jersey. In March, 1893, he was appointed by President Cleveland the American Minister to Germany, and shortly afterwards was made Ambassador. The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Yale, Rutgers, and Wesleyan Colleges.

RUSDEN, George William, was in 1849 appointed agent for the establishment of national schools in the Port Philip District, now Victoria, and afterwards Agent and Inspector of Schools in New South Wales. When Victoria was separated from New South Wales in 1851, he was made under-secretary, or chief clerk in the Colonial Secretary's office; clerk of the executive council in 1852; and in 1856 was attached to the establishment of a new constitution with the Houses of Legislature, as Clerk of the Legislative Council, and Clerk of the Parliaments. From 1853 till his retirement from the Civil Service in 1882 he served as a magistrate, and was for some time a member of the National Educational Board in Victoria. He was a member of the Council of the University of Melbourne from its foundation, until absence in Europe caused him to resign, and through his advocacy a Shakespere scholarship was founded in the University. He is the author of "Moyarra: An Australian Legend;" "National Education;" "Discovery, Survey, and Settlement of Port Philip;" "Curiosities of Colonization;" "History of New Zealand," a "History of Australia," published in London in 1883; and of "Aureretanga: The Great Refusal" (by Vindex, 1890). Mr. Rusden is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, the Royal Historical Society, the Royal Asiatic Society, and a member of the Corporation of the Royal Literary Fund in England.

RUSKIN, John, M.A., LL.D., son of a London merchant, was born in Hunter Street, Brunswick Square, London, in Feb., 1819, and was educated privately, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he gained the Newdigate Prize in 1839. He then devoted himself to painting, and worked under Copley Fielding and J. D. Harding. A pamphlet in defence of Turner and the modern English school of landscape-painting was his first effort in the cause of modern art, and it was enlarged into a standard work, entitled "Modern Painters," the first volume of which appeared in 1843. The author's success as a writer on art was decided by the warm reception accorded to this volume, of which several editions have since been published. Mr. Ruskin's views, however, were combated with bitter asperity by some of the art critics of the day, who resented with an affectation of contempt his free expression of dissent from the trammels of their school. In his second volume of "Modern Painters," written after a residence in Italy, and published in 1846, he took a much wider survey of the subject originally entered upon, including the works of the great Italian painters, and discussed at length the merits of their respective schools. This, his chief work, has been completed by the publication of three additional volumes, the last of which, published in 1860, contains illustrations by himself. Mr. Ruskin temporarily diverted his attention from the study of painting to that of architecture, and wrote "The Seven Lamps of Architecture," published in 1849, as a first result, followed by the first volume of "The Stones of Venice," in 1851, the second and third volumes of which appeared in 1853. The illustrations in the last-named productions, which excited some of the same professional hostility that his first publication evoked, displayed to much advantage his artistic powers. Mr. Ruskin has expounded his views both in lectures and in newspapers and reviews, having, as early as 1847, contributed articles to the Quarterly on Lord Lindsay's "Christian Art." In 1851 he advocated Pre-Raphaelitism in letters to the Times; and in 1853 he lectured in Edinburgh on Gothic Architecture. In addition to the above-mentioned works, Mr. Ruskin has written "Notes on the Construction of Sheepfolds," the "King of the Golden River," a story for children, illustrated by Doyle, in 1851; "The Two Paths: Lectures on Architecture and Painting," in 1854; "Notes to Pictures in the Royal Academy, Nos. 1 to 5," in 1854-9; "Giotto and his works in Padua," written in 1855 for the Arundel Society, of which he is a member; "Notes on the Turner Collection," in 1857; "Cambridge School of Art," and "Lectures on Art: Political Economy of Art," in 1858; "Elements of Perspective," and "Lectures on Art: Decoration and Manufacture," in 1859; "Unto this Last: Four Essays," republished from the Cornhill Magazine, in 1862; "Ethics of the Dust: Ten Lectures," "Sesame and Lilies: Two Lectures;" and "Study of Architecture in our Schools," in 1865; "Crown of Wild Olive: Three Lectures," in 1866; and "The Queen of the Air; being a Study of the Greek Myths of Cloud and Storm." To the Art Journal he contributed "The Cestus of Aglaia," and he has written for various periodicals. Mr. Ruskin was appointed Rede Lecturer, at Cambridge, in April, 1867, and the Senate conferred the degree of LL.D. upon him, May 15. He was also elected Slade Professor of Fine Art at Oxford, and in 1872 published "Aratra Pentelici; Six Lectures on the Elements of Sculpture, given before the University of Oxford in Michaelmas Term, 1870." In 1871 he proposed to devote £5,000 for the purpose of an endowment to pay a master of drawing in the Taylor Galleries, Oxford, and this handsome offer was, with some modifications, accepted by the University in Jan., 1872. He was re-elected to the Slade Professorship of Fine Art, March 1, 1876. A Collection of his Letters, with a preface by himself, was published in 1880, under the title of "Arrows of the Chase." In 1883 he was again elected Slade Professor, and at his inaugural lecture was received with unprecedented enthusiasm. So great was the crowd that thronged to hear his lectures that it was impossible to accommodate the audience, and Prof. Ruskin undertook to deliver each lecture twice. He was obliged to resign the post in 1884 on account of failing health. Of late he has been issuing, in parts, his autobiography, under the title of "Præterita." Three volumes are now published, but further chapters of this work are postponed for the present. In 1887 he published "Hortus Inclusus:

Letters from Mr. Ruskin to the Ladies of the Thwaite." In Oct., 1891, appeared a collection of his "Poems," written between the ages of seven and six-and-twenty. It was edited by Mr. Collingwood, who has for some years been Mr. Ruskin's private secretary, and in 1893 published "The Life and Work of John Ruskin." In 1892 Mr. Ruskin's early work on the "Poetry of Architecture" was reprinted, and in July, 1893, "Three Letters and an Essay," the latter written when he was sixteen, was published. In 1894 appeared "Letters to a College Friend," written in the forties of this century. Of late years Mr. Ruskin, while writing no very important work himself, has been busy as an editor. He has edited a series of selections from general literature under the title of "The Shepherd's Library," and, amongst other books, has published for Miss Francesca Alexander, an American lady, her "Roadside Songs of Tuscany," "The Story of Ida," and "Christ's Folk in the Apennine," the etched illustrations to which he eulogised and exhibited during his last series of Slade lectures. For several years Mr. Ruskin has lived in tranquil retirement at Brantwood, Coniston.

RUSSELL, Lord, of Killowen, Lord Chief Justice of England, G.C.M.G., LL.D., and D.L. for Surrey (lately Sir Charles Russell, Q.C., M.P.), was born at Newry in 1833, and is the son of Mr. Arthur Russell, of Newry, and Seafield House, Rostrevor. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and began his professional career by practising as a solicitor in Belfast; but, coming to England, he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1859, and became Q.C., and was elected Bencher of Lincoln's Inn in 1872. He entered Parliament in the Liberal interest as Member for Dundalk, which he represented from 1880 till 1885; and South Hackney, 1885-86, when he became Attorney-General in the Gladstone Administration, and was knighted. His powerful and eloquent speech before the Parnell Commission was one of the most masterly orations of modern times. He was again appointed Attorney-General in 1892. On taking office he gave up the old and well-used privilege of retaining his private practice, which had been a very large one, and had latterly brought him in an income of upwards of twenty-five thousand a year. In 1893 he was given the G.C.M.G. for his distinguished services as English counsel in connection with the United States Fisheries Arbitration in Paris. Both during this arbitration and on the Third Reading of the Home Rule Bill in the House of Commons he delivered very eloquent and powerful speeches; but he was not, on the whole, so successful as a Parliamentary speaker as at the Bar, though he was in constant request as an electioneering orator. On the death of Lord Bowen in 1894 he was appointed a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, and a life-peerage was conferred on him. In July, 1894, he was appointed Lord Chief Justice of England in succession to the late Lord Coleridge. As a barrister Lord Russell was long without a rival in the English Law Courts. He was a sound lawyer, a masterly and often terrible cross-examiner, and a persuasive and weighty pleader before juries, especially in uphill or apparently hopeless cases. The list of celebrated causes in which he has been engaged is a very long one. He represented Mr. Clement Scott in his action against the late Mr. Sampson of the Referee. In the Chamberlain v. Barnwell Case he secured enormous damages for the plaintiff. He appeared for the plaintiff also in Wilberforce v. Philips, in the famous Belt Case, and in the once famous Convent Case, Saurin v. Starr. In the Chetwynd and Durham Arbitration Case he was one of the leading counsel, and he defended Mrs. Maybrick in the Maybrick Murder Case of August, 1889. In 1889 he made his greatest forensic triumph during the Parnell Commission. Lord Russell is well known on the turf, and is himself an accomplished horseman. He retired from the Jockey Club recently. He married, in 1858, Ellen, daughter of Mr. Joseph Mulholland, M.P., of Belfast.

RUSSELL, Clark, was born at the Carlton House Hotel, Broadway, in the city of New York, on Feb. 24, 1844. His father was Mr. Henry Russell, the composer of "Cheer, Boys, Cheer," "There's a Good Time Coming, Boys," and many other compositions of a like kind. Mr. Clark Russell's mother was, prior to her marriage, Miss Lloyd, a connection of the poet Wordsworth, and the associate in her youth of Coleridge, Southey, Lamb, and others of that group. She died in 1887. Mr. Clark Russell was educated at Winchester and in France, and went to sea as a midshipman in the Merchant Service at the age of thirteen and a half. He made several voyages to India, Australia, and China, but abandoned the sea after seven or eight years. He wrote a few novels under a nom-de-plume, and contributed to a few London periodicals. His first nautical novel, "John Holdsworth, Chief Mate," was published in 1874. The success of this book was great and immediate. It was followed by "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," which appears to have proved the most popular of his stories. In the "Grosvenor" he anticipated the efforts which have been made by Mr. Samuel Plimsoll to improve the dietary of the British merchant seaman. "The Little Loo" followed the "Grosvenor," and then came in rapid succession "A Sailor's Sweetheart," "An Ocean Free Lance," "A Sea Queen," and "The Lady Maud." At this time Mr. Clark Russell was associated with the Newcastle Daily Chronicle, the property of Mr. Joseph Cowen, then the senior member for that city; but being asked by the proprietors of the London Daily Telegraph to join the staff of that journal, he bade his friend Mr. Joseph Cowen farewell and settled in London. There he wrote "Jack's Courtship" and "A Strange Voyage," at the same time contributing stories and leading articles to the Daily Telegraph. His health failed him, and he was obliged to take up his residence by the sea-side. While at Ramsgate, in Kent, he continued to write for the Daily Telegraph, but with growing dislike of the work, as the exactions upon his time and imagination grew heavier and heavier in proportion as his publishers asked for fresh novels. At Ramsgate he wrote "The Golden Hope," "The Death Ship," "A Frozen Pirate," and "Marooned." In 1887 his connection with the Daily Telegraph ceased, but the greater bulk of his contributions to that paper have been published in volumes such as "Round the Galley Fire," "My Watch Below," "In the Middle Watch," "On the Fok'sle Head," &c. These works cover a very extensive range of seafaring interests. Since 1890 he has lived at Bath, where he has written "An Ocean Tragedy," "My Shipmate Louise," "Betwixt the Forelands," a "Life of Nelson," "The Romance of Jenny Harlowe," and other works. His most recent novels are "The Convict Ship," "The Emigrant Ship," and "List, ye Landsmen."

RUSSELL, George William Erskine, son of Lord Charles James Fox Russell, and grandson of John, sixth Duke of Bedford, was born Feb. 3, 1853, at 16, Mansfield Street, Portland Place, and educated at Harrow and University College, Oxford, where he was Scholar and Prizeman. He graduated in honours, B.A. 1876, M.A. 1880. He entered the Inner Temple, 1875, and was elected Liberal member of Parliament for Aylesbury, 1880, and for North Beds, 1892. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Local Government Board, 1883-5. He was elected an Alderman of the County of London for six years in 1889; and was appointed Under Secretary of State for India in 1892. He is the author of a Life of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, in the series of "The Queen's Prime Ministers," and many essays and lectures.

RUSSELL, Henry Chamberlaine, B.A., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., F.R. Met. Soc., C.M.G., Government Astronomer of New South Wales, Vice-President of the Board of Technical Education, New South Wales, Fellow of the Senate of the University of Sydney. He has done much for the promotion and study of science in New South Wales. He has been in charge of the Government Observatory since 1862, and Government Astronomer since 1863. He organized and led the N.S.W. Expedition to Cape Sidmouth in 1871; organized and sent out four parties to observe the Transit of Venus in 1874, and six parties in 1882, also three parties for the Transit of Mercury in 1881; and he originated and presided over the first Australasian Meteorological Conference, 1879. In 1890 he was made a C.M.G. He is the author of seventy-five Reports and Original Papers upon Astronomical, Meteorological, and Physical matters, published by the New South Wales Government, in the Memoirs and Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society, London; and in the Journal of the Royal Society of New South Wales. He is the designer of several improved forms of self-recording Barographs, Thermographs, Pluviometers, Anemometers, Tidegauges, Actinometers, &c., for use in his observatory. Amongst the above seventy-five papers are "Measures of Double Stars, and a list of 351 New Double Stars;" "Nebula surrounding Eta Argus;" "Measures of Coloured Clusters about Kappa Crucis;" "Measures of Alpha Centauri;" "The Great Southern Cross," 1880; "Meteorology and Climate of New South Wales;" "Tropical Rains;" "Rain Maps;" "Atmospheric Lines between D lines at Sydney," &c. In 1891 he published "Notes on the Rate of Growth of some Australian Trees."

RUSSELL, William Howard, LL.D., was born March 28, 1821, at Lilyvale, co. Dublin, and educated principally at the Rev. Dr. Geoghegan's school in Hume Street, Dublin, and entered Trinity College in 1838. During the Repeal agitation he was engaged to describe the monster meetings for the Times, and shortly afterwards accepted an engagement on the staff of that paper. In 1846

he married Mary, the eldest daughter of Peter Burrowes, of Warren House, co. Dublin, and in the same year he entered the Middle Temple, and was called to the Bar as a member of the Inn in 1850. In Feb., 1854, he was despatched as Special Correspondent of the Times with the advance guard of the British Expedition to the East, on the declaration of war with Russia, and from Malta he proceeded with the Light Division to Gallipoli, thence to Scutari, and so on to Bulgaria, drifting finally to the Crimea, where he remained from the landing at Old Fort on Nov. 14, 1854, till the final armistice and the evacuation of the Chersonese by the Allied Armies in 1856. He was present at the battles of the Alma, Balaclava, and Inkerman; witnessed the assaults on the Redan; accompanied the expeditions to Kertch and to Kinbourn; and saw the final attack on the city and the fall of Sebastopol. The privations and sufferings of the army during the terrible winter, to which the troops were exposed in open trenches, were made known to the public at home by his letters to the Times, and excited such indignation against the Ministry that they were turned out of office, and were succeeded by a Government pledged to enquiry and reform in our military organisation. In 1856 he went to Moscow to attend the coronation of the Czar, and revisited the Crimea, and, in the year following, on the outbreak of the mutiny in India, he set out for Sir Colin Campbell's headquarters at Cawnpore; was present at the taking of Lucknow, and in the campaigns in Oudh, Rohilkund, &c., for which he received the Indian War Medal with the Lucknow Clasp. In 1858 he returned to England and established the Army and Navy Gazette, of which he is now editor and chief proprietor, having previously remained for a short time with the French army in Italy. When civil war appeared imminent in the United States in 1861 he proceeded to Washington, made a tour in the South, and joined McDowell's army on the day of the first battle of Bull Run, which ended in the rout of the Federals, and entailed on him the obligation, as correspondent of the Times, of describing the retreat, and consequently exposing him to much obloquy. In 1862 he returned to England, and, after an unsuccessful attempt to reach the lines at Döppel in 1864, remained at home till the outbreak of the war between Prussia and Austria in 1866, when he repaired to the headquarters of Von Benedek, and witnessed the disastrous battle of Königgratz. A few years of peaceful travel on the Continent and in the East followed, but in 1870 Mr. Russell was once more with an army in the field, and was attached to the headquarters of the Crown Prince, which he joined at Wörth. He was present at the battle of Sedan, and accompanied the German Army on their march through France, remaining with the headquarters during the siege of Paris till the capitulation, when he entered the city with the Crown Prince's staff. In 1875 he was named Honorary Private Secretary to the Prince of Wales on his expedition to India, but he had previously accompanied his Royal Highness during his visits to Egypt, Turkey, the Crimea, &c. When the Zulu troubles were at their height, and Lord Wolseley was sent out to save the situation, Mr. Russell accompanied him, and was at the taking of Sekukuni's stronghold; and he subsequently was in Egypt during the operations under the same general, which led to the overthrow of Arabi, and to the re-establishment of the Khedive in Cairo. Mr. Russell has published "Letters from the Crimea," 1855-6; "Diary in India," "My Diary North and South," "Canada; its Defences," "Rifle Clubs and Volunteer Corps," "The Adventures of Dr. Brady," "My Diary in the East," "Hesperothen: or Notes from the West," 1882, &c. Mr. Russell unsuccessfully contested Chelsea in the Conservative interest in 1869. He is a Knight of the Iron Cross, a Commander of the Legion of Honour, has the Turkish War Medal of 1854-6, the Indian War Medal, 1857-8, the South African War Medal, 1879, and the Medjidieh (3rd and 4th class), the Osmanieh (3rd and 4th class), the St. Sauveur of Greece, Chevalier of Franz Josef, the Redeemer of Greece, Portugal, &c.

RUTHERFORD, The Rev. William Gunion, LL.D., born 1853, is the son of the Rev. Robert Rutherford, Newlands, Peeblesshire, and was educated at St. Andrews University, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated M.A. in 1876. He also received the degree of LL.D. from St. Andrews in 1884. He was ordained deacon by the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1883, and priest by the Bishop of London in 1885. He held a classical mastership at St. Paul's School from 1876 to 1883, when he was appointed, without examination, Fellow and Prælector of University College, Oxford. In the same year he became Head-Master of Westminster School. In 1881 he published "The New Phrynichus, a revised Text of the Ecloga or the Grammarian Phrynichus, with Introductions, and a Commentary;" in 1883 an edition of "The Fables of Babrius, with Introductory Dissertations, Critical Notes, Commentary, and Lexicon," and in 1889 "The Fourth Book of Thucydides, a revision of the Text illustrating the Principal causes of Corruption in the manuscripts of this author." The introductory chapters of "The New Phrynichus" have been translated into German by Dr. A. Funck, at the instance of the late Professor Georg Curtius of Leipzig, under the title of "Zwei Abhandlungen zur Geschichte des Atticismus" (Leipzig, 1883), and into French by Professor Kehlhoff with the title "Contribution à l'étude du dialecte attique." Besides these larger works, Mr. Rutherford has published several smaller books, of which the most important are "A First Greek Grammar," which has gone through many editions; "Lex Rex; or, a Short Digest on the principal Relations between Latin, Greek, and Anglo-Saxon Sounds," and "Herondas, a first Recension," published in 1892. In 1893 he was elected a Member of the Athenæum by the Committee.

RUTLAND (Duke of), John James Robert Manners, LL.D., D.C.L., K.G., G.C.B., second son of the late John Henry, fifth Duke of Rutland, by the Lady Elizabeth Howard, fifth daughter of Frederick, fifth Earl of Carlisle, born at Belvoir Castle, Leicestershire, Dec. 13, 1818, was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated M.A. in 1839. In June, 1841, he was, with Mr. Gladstone, returned member in the Conservative interest for the borough of Newark, but he did not present himself again to that constituency at the general election in Aug., 1847. He was defeated in a contest for Liverpool in the latter year, and in another contest for the City of London with Baron Rothschild, in June, 1849, but he was returned for Colchester in Feb., 1850, and continued to represent that borough till March, 1857, when he was elected for North Leicestershire. He made his maiden speech in Feb., 1842, when he opposed the repeal of the Corn Laws, advocating, subsequently, the cultivation of diplomatic relations with the See of Rome, and of a better understanding with the Irish priesthood, a relaxation of the law of mortmain, and the passing of the Ten Hours Factories Act, and in many other matters showing that he held too broad opinions to act always with his party, though he opposed Sir R. Peel's free-import measures in 1845-46, and from that time identified himself completely with Conservatives. He was appointed First Commissioner of the Office of Works with a seat in the Cabinet, and sworn a Privy Councillor in Lord Derby's first administration in 1852, held the same post in Lord Derby's second administration in 1858-59, and was re-appointed in Lord Derby's third administration, 1866-67. On the return of the Conservatives to office in Feb., 1874, he was appointed Postmaster-General, and he held that post until the Conservatives went out of office in April, 1880, when he was created a G.C.B. In 1885 he was returned for the new Melton Division of Leicestershire, and was Postmaster-General in Lord Salisbury's Government. The honorary degree of D.C.L. was conferred upon him by the University of Oxford in 1876. Previously, in 1862, the degree of LL.D. of Cambridge University was conferred on him. His Grace is a staunch defender of the rights of the Church, a supporter of the agricultural interest, and acted for many years as Chairman of the Tithe Redemption Trust. His first literary performance was "England's Trust; and other Poems," 1841. Appended to this volume are some minor pieces, headed "Memorials of other Lands," commemorative of His Grace's excursion, in company with his elder brother, then Marquis of Granby (the late Duke of Rutland), through France, Spain, Switzerland, and Italy. His other works are: "A Plea for National Holy-Days," 1843; "Notes of an Irish Tour," 1849; "Notes of a Cruise in Scotch Waters on board the Duke of Rutland's Yacht, Resolution, in 1848," Lond., 1850, a handsome folio volume embellished with sketches by John Christian Schetky, Esq.; "English Ballads and other Poems," 1850; "The Factories Bill, a Speech," 1850; "The Church of England in the Colonies," a lecture, 1851; "The Importance of Literature to Men of Business," one of a series of lectures so entitled, 1852; "Speech on the Abolition of Church Rates," 1856. In 1886 he was appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in Lord Salisbury's second administration. He succeeded to the dukedom on the death of his brother, March 2, 1888. His Grace married first, in 1851, Catharine Louisa Georgiana, daughter of the late Colonel Marlay, C.B. (she died April 7, 1854); and secondly, in 1862, Janetta, eldest daughter of Thomas Hughan, Esq.

RYDBERG, Professor Abraham Victor, a Swedish author, born at Jonkoeping, Dec. 18, 1828, was educated at Vexio, and in 1851 entered the University of Lund for a short time. In 1855 he joined the staff of the Gothenburg Shipping and Mercantile Gazette. He was a member of the Swedish Parliament from 1870 to 1872, and in 1876 he was instructed by the local government of Gothenburg to inaugurate the philosophical and historical conferences, which continue to be held annually. In 1877 he was elected to the Swedish Academy, and in the same year the University of Upsal conferred upon him the degree of doctor. In 1882 he was named Professor of the History of Civilisation by the New Academy of Stockholm. He has written "Signoalla," a gipsy romance, 1857; "The Last Athenian," a novel, 1859; "What the Bible teaches concerning Christ," 1862; "Magic in the Middle Ages," 1864; "Roman Days," studies of the busts of the Roman Emperors, 1875-77; "Poems," 1882; a translation of Goethe's "Faust" into Swedish, 1878; "Teutonic Mythology," 1886-89; and several volumes of poems which were collected in 1882. His works have been translated into many languages, and he is regarded by his compatriots as one of their foremost authors.

RYLE, Rev. Professor Herbert Edward, was born in Onslow Square, London, May 25, 1856, and is the second son of the Right Rev. John Charles Ryle, Lord Bishop of Liverpool. He was educated under the Rev. R. Wace (Wadhurst, Sussex), 1866-68, and at Eton (1868-75), being elected on to the Foundation of Eton College in 1869, and obtaining the Newcastle Scholarship in 1875, his tutor being E. C. Austen Leigh, Esq. In the same year he was elected to a Classical Scholarship at King's College, Cambridge; B.A. in 1879 (obliged to take an ægrotat degree in consequence of an accident at football); First Class in the Theological Tripos, 1881. University distinctions: Carus Prizeman (Under-graduates), 1875; (Bachelor), 1879; Winchester Reading Prize, 1878; Crosse Scholar, 1880; Hebrew Evans and Scholefield Prizes, 1881. He was elected Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, in 1881; took his M.A. degree in 1882, and the B.D. in 1892. He was ordained Deacon in 1882; Priest in 1883. He was Divinity Lecturer at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, 1881-1884, and at King's College, 1882-1886. In 1886 he was made Principal of St. David's College, Lampeter (South Wales), where he remained till 1888, having been elected to the Hulsean Professorship of Divinity in the University of Cambridge, in Nov., 1887, which he holds at the present time. He was elected a Professorial Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, in 1888. He was Examining Chaplain to the late Bishop of St. Asaph 1887-1889, and is now to the Lord Bishop of Ripon. He was Examiner for the Cambridge Theological Tripos in 1884, 1886, 1887, 1889, 1892, and was Select Preacher before the University of Cambridge in 1889 and 1892. He has published the following works: "The Psalms of Solomon" (edited in conjunction with M. R. James), Cambridge University Press, 1891; "The Canon of the Old Testament," an essay on the gradual growth and formation of the Hebrew Canon of Scripture, 1892; "The Early Narratives of Genesis," 1892; and a "Commentary on Ezra and Nehemiah" (Cambridge Bible for School Series), 1893. He is also contributor to Smith's Dictionary of the Bible (2nd ed.), and to the "Cambridge Companion to the Bible," 1893. Professor Ryle was married in 1883 to Nea Hewish, only daughter of Major-Gen. G. Hewish-Adams (late Royal Irish Rifles), and has issue living Edward Hewish and Roger John.

RYLE, The Right Rev. John Charles, D.D., Bishop of Liverpool, eldest son of the late John Ryle, Esq., M.P., born near Macclesfield, in 1816, educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1836, was Craven University Scholar, and took a first-class in classical honours. Having been admitted into orders in 1841, he was curate at Exbury, in the New Forest; was appointed Rector of St. Thomas's, Winchester, in 1843; Rector of Helmingham, Suffolk, in 1844; Vicar of Stradbroke, Suffolk, in 1861; Rural Dean of Hoxne in 1869; and an honorary Canon of Norwich in 1871. He was nominated to the Deanery of Salisbury by Lord Beaconsfield in March, 1880, and soon afterwards the same statesman appointed him Bishop of Liverpool. He was consecrated in York Minster (June 11, 1880). He is the author of "Expository Thoughts on the Gospels," in 7 vols., published in 1856-59; of "Plain Speaking, First and Second Series," of "Hymns for the Church on Earth," and "Spiritual Songs, First and Second Series," in 1861; of "Christian Leaders a Hundred Years Ago," "Coming Events and Present Duties," "Bishops and Clergy of Other Days," in 1869; of "Church Reform Papers," in 1870; "Principles for Churchmen," etc., and of above 200 tracts on religious subjects, many of which have been reprinted in French, German, Dutch, Portuguese, Italian,

SACHER-MASOCH (Knight), Leopold Ritter von, novelist, born at Lemberg, the capital of Austrian Poland, Jan. 27, 1836, is the son of an Aulic Councillor and police-director of Galicia, and is a Roman Catholic, not a Jew, as is generally believed from his great knowledge of Jewism and his "Jewish Stories." Having received a preliminary training at home he passed through the Normal School and the Gymnasium of his native city, studied Philosophy at Gratz and Prague, obtained his Doctor's degree at the age of 19, and two years later became a private teacher of history in the University of Gratz. In 1857 he published his historical account of "The Insurrection in Ghent under Charles V." (Der Aufstand in Gent unter Karl V.); and in 1866 his first novel, "Eine galizische Geschichte." His literary success led him to abandon in 1868 the profession of a teacher. His series of novels, entitled "Cain's Inheritance" (of which the first parts were published in 1870), was translated into most European languages, and obtained for the author a European reputation. His principal works, in addition to those named above, are, "Die geschiedene Frau," a novel, 1870; "Die Republik der Weiberfeinde," a novel, 1872; "Maria Theresa und die Freimaurer," an historical romance, 1872; "Falscher's Hermelin," 1873; "Geschichten aus der Bühnenwelt," 1873; "Russische Hofgeschichten," 1873; "Der neue Hiob," a novel, 1874; "Wiener Hofgeschichten," 1876; "Das schwarze Cabinet," 1880; "Der Flau," 1880; "Der alte Castellan," 1882; "Basil Hymen," 1882; "Paradise on the Dniester," 1882; besides several dramas and comedies. Sacher-Masoch is an especial favourite with the French; and since 1871 a large number of his novels have appeared in the Revue des Deux Mondes. In 1883 the French Republic conferred upon him the order of the Légion d'Honneur. By his book, "Die Ideale unserer Zeit," in which, being very Liberal, he criticised sharply the German affairs after 1871, he got, though wrongly, the reputation of being anti-German. Being Liberal, Sacher-Masoch has a great liking for England, which he defended warmly against an attack of the German historian Johannes Scherr. His books are chiefly on Galician life, and especially on the rising of 1846. In 1881 he founded a monthly international review, On the Heights (Auf der Höhe), published at Leipzig, and French in sympathy. To this review he contributed a novel, "The Jews' Raphael" (Der Juden Raphael), a continuation of his series of novels; "Cain's Inheritance," mentioned above, being from the fourth part of that work, "Death." He also published in the Review the memoirs left by his father, which treat of and describe persons and matters during the period from 1809 to 1874. His more recent works are the two romances, "Die Seelenfängerin," "The Serpent in Paradise," the superbly illustrated work "Contes Juifs," written in the French language, and published at Paris in 1888; "Die Einsamen," a novel, and "Im Reich der Töne," 1891; "Bühnenzauber," a theatrical romance, 1893, and "Terka," 1894. Within the last few years translations of his "Serap" and "The New Job" have appeared in England. In 1873 he married Aurora Rümelin (who published several romances under the pseudonym of Wanda von Dunajew). After his divorce, in 1887, he married the authoress, Hulda Meister, with whom he has resided latterly at Lindheim, in Oberhessen.

SACHS, Dr. Julius von, Privy Councillor, and Austrian Professor in Ordinary of Botany, was born at Breslau (Silesia) on Oct. 2, 1832, where he attended the Elisabethanum Gymnasium. In 1851 he went to Prague (Bohemia) as private assistant to the Physiologist Purkynî; in 1857 he was private lecturer on the Physiology of Plants at Prague; in 1859 at the Agricultural Academy at Tharandt, near Dresden; from 1861-67 he was Professor of Botany at the Academy of Poppelsdorf, near Bonn, on the Rhine; 1867-68, Professor of Botany at Freiburg (Baden); 1868-90, Professor of Botany at Winzburg, Bavaria. He is Knight of the Royal Order of Merit of the Bavarian Crown and of St. Michael; as well as of the Royal Bavarian Order of Maximilian for Science and Art; Member of the Royal Academies of Sciences in Munich, Turin, and Amsterdam; of the Royal Society of London; and of the Royal Irish Academy at Dublin; of the Silesian Society for Home-culture; of the Senkenberg Society; Honorary Member of the Philosophical Society of Cambridge; of the Botanical Society of Edinburgh; of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester; of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain; of the Society of Natural Philosophy of Odessa; Foreign Member of the Linnean Society of London; of the Royal Botanical Society of Brussels; holder of the Sommering Medal; Honorary Doctor of the Medical Faculty of Bonn, and of the Faculty of Physical Science at Bologna. He is the author of the following scientific works:—"Experimental Physiology of Plants" (translated into Russian and French) in 1865; "Compendium of Botany," 4 editions (translated into Russian, French, and English) in 1868-74; "History of Botany," 1875 (translated into English in 1890, by H. E. F. Garnsey); "Lectures on the Physiology of Plants," 1882 and 1887 (translated into English); "Gesammelte Abhandlungen über Pflanzen-Physiologie," with illustrations, still in progress.

SACKVILLE (Baron Sackville, of Knole, in the county of Kent), Lionel Sackville West, Knight Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, J.P., and Deputy-Lieut. for Kent, was born July 19, 1827, at Bourn Hall, Cambridgeshire, and is the fourth son of George John, 5th Earl De La Warr, by his marriage with Elizabeth Sackville, daughter of John Frederick, 3rd Duke of Dorset. He was educated at home, was assistant précis writer to the Earl of Aberdeen, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in 1845; entered the diplomatic service in 1847; served as Attaché to her Majesty's Legations in Lisbon, Naples, Stuttgart, and Berlin, till 1858; as Secretary of Legation in Turin, Madrid, and Berlin; and Secretary of Embassy in Paris till 1872; was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, 1873; transferred to Madrid, 1878; and to the United States, 1881. He negotiated, in conjunction with Sir James Hudson, the commercial treaty with Sardinia, 1863; represented H. M.'s Government and that of Denmark at the Conferences of Madrid on the affairs of Morocco, 1880; was Minister Plenipotentiary at the Conference in Washington on the affairs of Samoa, 1887; and negotiated, in conjunction with Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and Sir Charles Tupper, the Fisheries Treaty of Washington, 1888. He received his passports from the United States Government in 1889, and returned to England. He now resides at Knole House, which he has again opened to the public on certain days.

SAGASTA, Praxedes Mateo, a Spanish statesman, was born at Torrecilla de Cameros, July 21, 1827. He studied in the school of Engineers in Madrid, practised his profession at Valladolid and Zamora, and was elected by the latter town to the Constituent Cortes of 1854. He took part in the insurrection of 1856, and was obliged to seek refuge in France. On the amnesty being proclaimed he returned to Spain, and became a Professor in the School of Engineers in Madrid. He was also the editor of La Iberia, the principal organ of the Progressist party. After the unsuccessful insurrection of June, 1866, he was again under the necessity of seeking an asylum in France, and he did not return to Spain until after the fall of Queen Isabella II. Appointed Minister of the Interior in the first Cabinet formed by General Prim, he gradually adopted more and more the views of that statesman and of the Conservative party, and completely broke off his relations with his old friend Zorilla. He was consequently exposed to bitter attacks from the Republican minority in the Cortes. Appointed Minister of State in Jan., 1870, he ordered several towns, including Barcelona, to be placed in a state of siege, declared himself in favour of the monarchy, and proposed, on Dec. 17, 1870, the dissolution of the Chamber, after the king had taken the oath. He continued to be Minister of State and Minister of the Interior in the first Cabinet of King Amadeus, and during that monarch's brief reign he took part in several ministerial combinations, either as a member or as President of the Council. Under the Presidency of Marshal Serrano, in 1874, he was Minister for Foreign Affairs (Jan. 4), Minister of the Interior (May 13), and President of the Council (Aug. 4). After the coup d'état re-establishing the monarchy, he withdrew for a time from public life. In June, 1875, he gave in his adherence to the cause of Alfonzo XII., and endeavoured to form a Liberal Constitutional party. Subsequently he joined the Opposition, and attacked the administrations formed by Martinez Campos and Cánovas, 1877-79. When a new Liberal party was formed in 1880 Señor Sagasta gave in his adhesion to it. The Conservative Cabinet of Señor Cánovas del Castillo was overthrown early in the year 1881, and a coalition between Señor Sagasta and General Martinez Campos came into power. Sagasta's Ministry remained in office till Oct. 1883, when it was superseded by a Cabinet formed from the Dynastic Left. This, however, was shortlived, and was followed by a return of the Conservatives to power. On the death of Alfonzo XII., Nov. 23, 1885, Señor Sagasta, at the request of the Queen Regent, again became the head of the government; but, in consequence of a crisis, he reformed the Cabinet in 1888, and gave to his policy a more markedly democratic character. Among the acts of his ministry may be mentioned the passing of the Anglo-Spanish commercial treaty. After fresh ministerial crises, Señor Sagasta was again commissioned to form a new ministry in Jan., 1890, but in the July following, after violent scenes in the Chamber, he was obliged to retire, and was replaced by Cánovas del Castillo, whose Cabinet remained in power till the elections of March, 1893, when Sagasta returned to office as President of the Council and Foreign Minister. He relinquished the latter post, however, on the assembling of the Cortes, in order to devote himself entirely to a general supervision of affairs (5th April, 1893). A Cabinet crisis occurred on March 8, 1894, the ministry resigned, and Señor Sagasta was again requested to form a Cabinet, which came into power, met with constant opposition, and resigned office on October 31. A new ministry was formed a few days afterwards, and Señor Sagasta again became Premier, five of his former ministers resuming office under him.

ST. GAUDENS, Augustus, American sculptor, was born in Dublin, March 1, 1848. At the age of six months he was taken to New York City, which has since been his home. He began to draw at Cooper Union in 1861, and in 1865-66 was a student at the National Academy of Design. From 1867 to 1870 he attended the Ecole des Beaux-Arts at Paris. Thence he went to Rome, where in 1871 he produced his first figure, "Hiawatha." He returned to New York in 1872, and opened a studio. His most important works are: "The Puritan;" "Adoration of the Cross by Angels," a bas-relief in St. Thomas's Church, New York; statues of Admiral Farragut (1880) in New York, Robert R. Randall (1884) at Sailors' Snug Harbor (Staten Island, New York), and of Abraham Lincoln (1887) in Chicago; and portrait busts of W. M. Evarts (1872-73), T. D. Woolsey (1876), and the late Gen. Sherman (1888).

ST. JOHN, Sir Spenser, K.C.M.G., third son of the late Mr. James Augustus St. John, was born in London, Dec. 22, 1825. After receiving a careful education, he began to turn his attention towards the East, and having applied himself diligently to the study of the Malay language, was, in 1848, appointed secretary to Sir James Brooke. He resided in Borneo several years as H.M. Consul-General, and received in 1861 the appointment of Chargé d'Affaires to the Republic of Hayti. On returning to this country in 1862, he published an account of his Eastern residence and travels, entitled "Life in the Forests of the Far East." Early in 1863 he left England for the West Indies, and some years later was promoted to the post of Minister Resident and Consul-General in Hayti. About the same time he was accredited also as Chargé d'Affaires to the Dominican Republic. In 1874 he was appointed Minister Resident and Consul-General at Lima, Peru, and in 1875 he proceeded on a special mission to Bolivia. He was created a K.C.M.G. in 1881 for services rendered during the war between Peru and Chili. In May, 1883, he was sent on a special mission to Mexico, to negotiate for the resumption of diplomatic relations with that country; and was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Mexico, Nov. 28, 1884, and was transferred to Stockholm, July 1, 1893. Sir Spenser St. John, who is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, published, in 1879, "The Life of Sir James Brooke, Rajah of Saráwak," and in 1885, "The Black Republic," an account of Hayti.

ST. JOHN-BRENON, Edward, F.S.A., F.R.G.S., journalist, the eldest son of the Rev. William Brenon, M.A., was born in Dublin, Feb. 21, 1847, and educated at the High School, and Trinity College in that city. In 1866 he published his first volume of poems, entitled "Bianca, the Flower-girl of Bologna." In 1869 followed "Ambrosia Amoris," and a few years afterwards, in rapid succession, "Two Gallian Laments," "The Witch of Nemi," and "The Tribune Reflects." Mr. St. John-Brenon has on several occasions essayed unsuccessfully to enter Parliament.

ST. LÉON, Mdme., née Cerito, Francesca, called Fanny, a celebrated dancer, born in Naples, March 11, 1821, is the daughter of an old soldier of the Empire. While quite a child, she was distinguished for great natural grace and vivacity. She made her first appearance in 1835, at the San Carlo Theatre, in a ballet called "The Horoscope," and created great enthusiasm, and afterwards danced at the principal theatres of Italy. She was in Vienna for two years, and was a favourite every season from 1840 to 1845, in London, where she danced the famous pas de quatre with Taglioni, Carlotta Grisi, and Lucille Grahn. About this time she was married to a distinguished dancer and violinist, M. A. St. Léon, from whom she was separated in 1850. Mdme. Cerito, who was called the "Fourth Grace," composed, jointly with M. Théophile Gautier, the "Gipsy," "Gemma," and other ballets. She is now residing in Paris.

SAINT-SAËNS, Charles Camille, musical composer, was born in Paris, Oct. 9, 1835. Having lost his father, he was brought up by his mother and a great-aunt, who taught him the elements of music. At seven, he began to study the piano with Stamaty, and afterwards had lessons in harmony from Maleden. In 1847 he entered Benoist's class at the Conservatoire, obtained the second organ prize in 1849, and the first in 1851. At the age of seventeen he composed his first symphony, which was performed with success by the Société de Sainte Cécile. In 1853 he became organist of the church of St. Merri. In 1858 he was appointed organist at the Madeleine, and distinguished himself as much by his talent for improvization as by his execution. Shortly afterwards he occupied the post of Pianoforte Professor at Niedermeyer's École de Musique Religieuse. For his cantata "Les Noces de Prométhée," he gained the prize awarded by the International Exhibition of 1867. "La Princesse Jaune," was produced at the Opéra Comique, June 12, 1872, and "Le Timbale d'Argent," at the Théâtre Lyrique, Feb. 23, 1877. Neither of these operas met with much success, and M. Saint-Saëns produced his next work, "Samson et Delilah," a sacred drama, at Weimar, in December, 1877, and "Etienne Marcel," an opera, at Lyons, Feb. 8, 1879. The printed catalogue of his works includes 64 numbered, besides many unnumbered, pieces. He visited England in 1871, and played at the Musical Union. In 1874 and 1879 he took part in the Philharmonic Concerts, and on Dec. 6, 1879, he conducted his "Rouet d'Omphale," at the Crystal Palace. He produced at the great Opéra of Paris "Henry VIII." in 1883, and "Ascanio," in 1890. "Samson et Delilah" was produced at the great Opéra of Paris, Nov. 23, 1892, and "Phryné" at the Opéra Comique, May, 1893. M. Saint-Saëns was elected an LL.D. of Cambridge University, June, 1893. "Chœurs d'Antigone" was produced at the Comédie Française, Nov. 1893. In 1886 he conducted his last great symphony in C minor in the Philharmonic Concerts (1st performance). In addition to his other claims to distinction, M. Saint-Saëns is an able musical critic, and has contributed articles to "La Renaissance," "L'Estafette," "Le Voltaire," "La France," "La Nouvelle Revue," and "L'Artiste." He was elected a member of the Institute, Feb. 19, 1881.

SAINTSBURY, George Edward Bateman, was born at Southampton, on Oct. 23, 1845, and educated at King's College School, London. In 1863 he was elected to a Post-Mastership at Merton College, Oxford, where he took the degree of B.A. in 1868 and that of M.A. in 1873. After holding for a few months a Mastership in the Manchester Grammar School, he became Senior Classical Master in Elizabeth College, Guernsey, and held that post from 1868 to 1874. In the latter year he was appointed to the Head Mastership of the Elgin Educational Institute, which he resigned in 1876. For the last ten years Mr. Saintsbury has been a frequent contributor to the London periodical press on literary and political subjects. He has also published "A Primer of French Literature," 1880; "Dryden," in the series of "English Men of Letters," 1881; "French Lyrics," and "A Short History of French Literature," 1882; "Specimens of French Literature," 1833; "Specimens of English Prose Style," and "Marlborough," in the series of "English Worthies," 1885; besides contributing to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," superintending a revised edition of Scott's "Dryden," editing several volumes of "Selections from French Authors" for the Clarendon Press, and furnishing prefaces to some reprints of English Classics. He has recently edited Herrick for the Aldine Poets (1893), and Fielding. He is at present editing and translating the works of Balzac, and has published a version of that writer's "Chouans." Other recent works of his are: "Essays on English Literature, 1780-1860," 1890; "Essays on French Novelists," "Political Verse," and "Seventeenth Century Lyrics," 1891; an edition of Florio's "Montaign," 1892; a translation of the Heptameron, 1894. He is also editor of the "Pocket Library of English Literature."

SALA, George Augustus Henry, journalist and author, is the son of an Italian gentleman who married a favourite English singer of West Indian extraction. He was born in London in 1828, was brought up with a view to following art as a profession, but quitted it for literature, and became a constant contributor to Household Words. He was an extensive and regular contributor to the Welcome Guest, the founder and first editor of the Temple Bar Magazine, for which he wrote the stories of "The Seven Sons of Mammon," and "Captain Dangerous," afterwards republished as separate works; wrote for several years in the Illustrated London News, the Hogarth papers in the Cornhill Magazine, and a story entitled "Quite Alone," for All the Year Round, which appeared in a separate form in Nov. 1864. He still writes "Echoes of the Week" in a syndicated form. He went as special correspondent for the Daily Telegraph to the United States in 1863, and on his return, at the close of 1864, published the result of his observations under the title of "America in the Midst of War." He wrote, in 1864, a series of graphic letters for the Daily Telegraph from Algeria, during the Emperor's visit to that colony, and revisited Algeria and Morocco in 1875. In 1870 Mr. Sala was at Metz and in Eastern France as war correspondent for the Daily Telegraph. After witnessing the fall of the Empire in Paris on Sept. 4, he went to Rome to record the entry of the Italian army into the Eternal City. In Jan. 1875, he again visited Spain on the occasion of the entry of Alfonso XII.; on his return in April he was despatched to Venice to describe the fêtes consequent on the interview of the Emperor Francis Joseph and King Victor Emmanuel, and he afterwards published his impressions under the title of "Two Kings and a Kaiser." In Dec. 1876 he again visited Russia as special correspondent for the Daily Telegraph; and travelling from St. Petersburg to Moscow, proceeded thence to Warsaw, and subsequently traversed the length of the Empire to observe the mobilisation then in progress of the Russian army; ultimately reaching Odessa and Constantinople by the Black Sea, in time for the opening of the Conference on the Eastern Question. His best-known works, in addition to those already mentioned, are "How I Tamed Mrs. Cruiser," published in 1858; "Twice Round the Clock," and "Journey Due North: a Residence in Russia," in 1859; "The Baddington Peerage," "Looking at Life," and "Make your Game, a Narrative of the Rhine," in 1860; "Dutch Pictures, with some Sketches in the Flemish Manner," in 1861; "Accepted Addresses," "Ship Chandler, and other Tales," and "Two Prima Donnas and the Dumb Poor Porter," in 1862; "Breakfast in Bed," and "Strange Adventures of Captain Dangerous," in 1863; "After Breakfast," or, Pictures done with a Quill," and "Quite Alone," in 1864; "Trip to Barbary by a Roundabout Route," in 1865; "From Waterloo to the Peninsula," in 1866; "Notes and Sketches of the Paris Exhibition" in 1868; "Rome and Venice," and "Wat Tyler, M.P., a burlesque," in 1869; "Under the Sun: Essays mainly written in Hot Countries," in 1872; "Paris Herself Again;" and "America Revisited," in 1882; "A Journey Due South," 1885; a description of a visit to Australia in that year was published in the Daily Telegraph, under the title of "The Land of the Golden Fleece." Mr. Sala started a weekly paper, in May, 1892, under the title of Sala's Journal, to which he and Mrs. Sala were constant contributors. The paper has now ceased to appear. Mr. Sala's autobiography was published early in 1895.

SALAMAN, Charles Kensington, composer and professor of music, born in London, March 3, 1814, was educated by private tuition. He began the study of music at a very early age under Charles Neate and Dr. Crotch; made his first appearance as a composer and pianist in 1828, and entered the musical profession in 1831. Mr. Salaman has acquired considerable reputation as a pianist in England, Germany, and Italy, and was elected an honorary member of the Academy of St. Cecilia in Rome in 1846. His first series of songs, in which is included Shelley's celebrated serenade, "I arise from Dreams of Thee," was composed in 1836, and published in 1838. He has since contributed largely to the repertory of English, Italian, French, and German vocal music, and to chamber pianoforte music. Besides about 100 musical settings of poems by the most eminent lyric poets of this country, Mr. Salaman has been the first composer to wed music to the odes of Horace, Catullus, and Anacreon in the original texts. He has also composed anthems for the English Church service, and nearly 100 numbers of sacred part music, in the Hebrew language, for the service of the Synagogue. His orchestral compositions have been few, the most recent being the "Grand Funeral March in memory of Victor Hugo," first performed at the Albert Hall. Mr. Salaman was one of the founders of the Musical Society of London, and was for nearly ten years its honorary Secretary. He was also one of the founders, in 1874, of the Musical Association for the "investigation and discussion of subjects connected with the art and science of music," and he performed the duties of honorary secretary until the end of 1877, when he retired as a Vice-President of the Association. Mr. Salaman, although he has retired from public life, is yet engaged in his profession as composer, musical critic, and writer on musical subjects; and in 1882 he published an important volume, entitled "Jews as they are," which deals with the modern Jews from a social, political, and religious point of view, and seeks to vindicate the Jewish character from reproach and prejudice.

SALISBURY (Marquis of), The Right Hon. Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoigne Cecil, K.G., eldest surviving son of the second Marquis of Salisbury, by his first wife, the daughter and heir of Bamber Gascoigne, Esq., born at Hatfield in 1830, was educated at Eton and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated, and was elected a Fellow of All Souls' College (1853). In 1853 he was elected M.P. for Stamford, and he represented that borough in the Conservative interest until his succession to the marquisate on the death of his father, April 12, 1868. While in the Lower House he was known as Lord Robert Cecil, until the decease of his elder brother, on June 14, 1865, when he assumed the courtesy title of Viscount Cranborne. His lordship took an active part in all public measures which affected the interests of the Established Church, and in the chief political questions of the day, and he was a frequent contributor to the Quarterly Review and to other periodicals. In Lord Derby's third administration he was, in July, 1866, appointed Secretary of State for India, which post he resigned on account of a difference in opinion respecting the Reform Bill, March 2, 1867, when two other Cabinet ministers, viz., General Peel, War Secretary, and Lord Carnarvon, Colonial Secretary, also gave in their resignations. On Nov. 12, 1869, he was elected Chancellor of the University of Oxford, in succession to the late Earl of Derby. In 1871-72 he and Lord Cairns, as arbitrators, conducted a long investigation into the complicated affairs of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Company. His lordship was again appointed Secretary of State for India when Mr. Disraeli returned to office in Feb. 1874. When, at the close of the war between Turkey and Servia, differences arose between the former Power and Russia, the Marquis of Salisbury was sent as Special Ambassador to the Sublime Porte, and he and Sir Henry Elliot acted as joint Minister Plenipotentiaries of Great Britain at the Conference of Constantinople. His lordship left England Nov. 20, 1876, and, en route, visited Paris, Berlin, Vienna, and Rome. The progress towards agreement made at the preliminary meetings held at the Russian Embassy in Constantinople were so satisfactory that the formal Conference, at which the joint proposals of the Powers were pressed upon the Porte, was opened on Dec. 23. At the same time the new Constitution of the Ottoman Empire was formally promulgated by its author, Midhat Pasha. The Marquis of Salisbury really took the place of leader at the Conference, which held altogether seven plenary meetings. On Sunday, Jan. 14, 1877, he had an audience of the Sultan, at which Sir Arnold Kemball acted as interpreter, and pressed upon his Majesty the two points on which the two Powers intended to insist, informing him that if they were not accepted the Ambassadors would immediately leave Constantinople. These two proposals were, that there should be a mixed Turkish and International Commission of Supervision, and that the first appointment of the Governors should be ratified by the Powers. On Jan. 18 a special meeting of the Ottoman Grand Council was held, and about 140 Mussulmans and about sixty leading Christians were present. The proceedings lasted two hours, and were opened by Midhat Pasha. With one dissentient voice the Council were unanimous in insisting on the rejection of the proposals of the Powers. The Conference held its last sitting on Jan. 20, and immediately afterwards Lord Salisbury left for England. On April 2, 1878, he was appointed Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in the room of the Earl of Derby, resigned, and he at once wrote a memorable despatch, in which he clearly enunciated the policy of the Government with regard to the Eastern Question. He and the Earl of Beaconsfield soon afterwards were the representatives of Great Britain at the Congress of Berlin, and on their return to London they met with the most enthusiastic reception at Charing Cross (July 16, 1878). The Queen invested the Marquis of Salisbury with the Order of the Garter, July 30. On Aug. 3 he and the Earl of Beaconsfield received the freedom of the City of London, and were afterwards entertained at a grand banquet at the Mansion House. He went out of office with his party after the defeat they sustained at the general election of April, 1880. At a meeting of Conservative Peers held on May 9, 1881, after the death of Lord Beaconsfield, the Marquis of Salisbury was elected to lead the party in the House of Lords. Since then his career has been identified with that of the Conservative Party. He opposed, but finally accepted, the Irish Land Act of 1881; he vigorously criticised Mr. Gladstone's Egyptian policy; he carried the rejection of the County Franchise Bill in 1884; he represented the Conservatives at the memorable conference between the opposing leaders, which led to the framing of the Redistribution Bill of 1885. On June 9 of that year Mr. Gladstone was beaten on a Budget vote, and resigned, and Lord Salisbury took office as Premier. The principal events of his short tenure of power were the annexation of Burmah, and the reopening of the Eastern Question by the revolution in Eastern Roumelia and the Servo-Bulgarian War; England supporting Prince Alexander by her "friendly" neutrality. After the general election of Nov. 1885, Lord Salisbury was turned out on the address at the end of January. He vigorously opposed Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule policy, and after the second general election, in 1886, he became once more Prime Minister. When the late Lord R. Churchill's resignation led to the reconstruction of the Cabinet, Lord Salisbury took the Foreign Office, in the place of Lord Iddesleigh, resigned. In May, 1888, Lord Salisbury introduced a Bill into the House of Lords for the reform of that assembly, and the creation of life peers. The City of Glasgow presented him with its freedom on May 20, 1891, and in July the German Emperor and the Prince of Naples visited him, and were entertained at Hatfield. The general election of 1892 caused Lord Salisbury to go out of office, though his government did not actually resign till they had suffered defeat in the Commons. In Feb. 1893, Lord Salisbury opened the overhead electrical railway at Liverpool, and in the course of a speech delivered on the occasion, dwelt on the marvellous future of electricity. He is himself an electrician, and has applied it to practical purposes at Hatfield House and on his estates. He is also much interested in chemistry and the whole range of experimental physics, and spends much of his time in his private laboratory. On March 2, 1893, he presided at Oxford, as Chancellor of the University, over a meeting in aid of the building fund of the Radcliffe Infirmary, and spoke on that occasion on the necessity of giving increased attention to the study of medicine. In April illness prevented him from visiting Belfast to attend great Unionist demonstrations, but he received a number of Ulster delegates at Hatfield, and himself travelled in Ulster in May. In Aug. 1894, he presided over the meeting of the British Association at Oxford, and delivered a notable inaugural address, in which he dwelt on the necessary limitations to scientific speculation. The Marquis of Salisbury is a member of the Council of King's College, London, Deputy-Lieutenant of Middlesex, and hon. col. of the Herts Militia. For many years he was Chairman of the Middlesex Sessions. Lord Salisbury's tenure of office during the Jubilee year of the Queen's reign will be memorable in his lordship's family for the honour which her Majesty paid him by going in person to visit him at Hatfield. In 1857 he married Georgiana Caroline, daughter of Sir Edward Hall Alderson, Baron of the Exchequer, and niece of the celebrated Mrs. Opie. His eldest son is Viscount Cranborne (born 1861), M.P. for the Darwen Division of Lancashire from 1885 to 1892, and in 1893 returned for Rochester.

SALISBURY, Bishop of. See WORDSWORTH, THE RIGHT REV. JOHN.

SALMON, The Rev. George, D.D. (Dublin, and Hon. Edin.), D.C.L. (Oxon.), LL.D. (Cantab.), F.R.S., born in Dublin in 1819, was educated at Cork, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated as Senior Moderator in Mathematics in 1839. He was successively Scholar and Fellow of his College, and was elected Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Dublin in 1866, which office he held until his appointment as Provost of the College in 1888. Besides various contributions to theological and mathematical periodicals, he is the author of treatises on "Conic Sections," on "The Higher Plane Curves," on "The Geometry of Three Dimensions," and on "The Modern Higher Algebra," which have been translated into the principal European languages, and which have been honoured by the Royal and Copley Medals of the Royal Society, and the Conyngham Medal of the Royal Irish Academy. He has published four volumes of sermons, besides many single sermons. He has also published two series of lectures delivered in the Divinity School of the University; one forming an Introduction to the New Testament, and the other treating of the Infallibility of the Church. He is a member of the Royal Irish Academy, a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, and a corresponding member of the Institute of France, and of the Royal Academies of Science at Göttingen, Berlin, and Copenhagen. He was President of the Mathematical and Physical Science Section of the British Association at the meeting held in Dublin in Aug. 1878.

SALOMONS, Sir David Lionel, Bart., M.A., A.I.C.E., M.S.T.E., is the son of the late Mr. Philip Salomons, and was born on June 28, 1851, at Brighton. Having lost both his parents when he was very young, the responsibility of his guardianship was undertaken by his uncle, the late Sir David Salomons. He was educated by private tutors and at University College, London, afterwards proceeding to Caius College, Cambridge, graduating in the Natural Science Tripos, his tastes tending rather to physical science than to pure mathematics. The pursuit of scientific attainments has been almost the exclusive occupation of his life. Not content with mere theoretical knowledge, he was in the habit of frequenting workshops, working with the men, and thus gaining an insight into the practical work; his uncle, moreover, provided him with a laboratory where he could devote his attention to the subjects which interested him so deeply. When, however, he succeeded to his uncle's position, he was not neglectful of its duties and responsibilities. He worked assiduously as a county magistrate, being a Justice of the Peace for Kent, Sussex, Middlesex, Westminster and London, and he is also a Deputy-Lieutenant for Kent. In 1874 Sir David Salomons stood in the Liberal interest for Mid-Kent, but he was defeated; and at the general election of 1880, through holding the offices of sheriff and returning officer, he was precluded from seeking election. Since that period he had relinquished things political, until 1885, when he consented to contest the new borough of St. George's-in-the-East. Sir David Salomons is a member of several clubs, including the Savage Club; a County Councillor for Kent, representing one of the Tonbridge Divisions; and belongs to many societies, being an Associate of the Institute of Civil Engineers, a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society; of the Physical Society; of the Chemical Society; of the Geological Society; of the Royal Meteorological Society; and a Fellow of the Royal Microscopical Society. He is a Vice-President of the Institution of Electrical Engineers; and a manager of the Royal Institution of Great Britain. Sir David has also studied drawing and painting, the better to appreciate art and its difficulties. He has served on the Scientific Committees appointed by the Institute of Electrical Engineers for settling Symbols, Fire Risks, &c., and has brought out several new and successful inventions. He is also the author of several scientific papers read before many scientific societies; "Electric Light Installations and Management of Accumulators," 7th edit., in 3 vols., and of "Photographic Notes and Formulæ," &c. Regarding the "Woman's Rights" question, Sir David Salomons has adopted a distinct attitude by his "Address to the Ladies of England," which opened up several new fields for the employment of women. He is Chairman of the City of London Electric Lighting Company. At present he takes no active part in politics. He has recently been engaged on "High Frequency" work, and experiments connected with vacuum tubes. He was "Master of the Coopers' Company," 1893-94. He takes a great interest in all educational matters. He married, in 1882, the daughter of Baron de Stern, of Hyde Park Gate, London, by whom he has had issue four daughters and a son and heir.

SALVINI, Tommaso, an Italian tragedian, was born at Milan, Jan. 1, 1830. His father was an able actor, and his mother a popular actress named Guglielmina Zocchi. When quite a boy he showed so rare a talent for acting, that his father determined to devote him to the stage. For this purpose he placed him under the tuition of the great Gustavo Modena. Before he was thirteen years of age Salvini had already won a kind of renown in juvenile characters. At fifteen he lost both his parents, and the bereavement so preyed upon his spirits that he was obliged to abandon his career for two years, and returned once more under the tuition of Modena. When he again emerged from retirement he joined the Ristori troupe, and shared with that great actress many a triumph. In 1849 Salvini entered the army of Italian independence, and fought valiantly for the defence of his country, receiving in recognition of his services several Medals of Honour. Peace being proclaimed, he again appeared upon the stage in a company directed by Signor Cesare Dondini. He played in the "Edipo" of Nicolini—a tragedy written expressly for him—and achieved a great success. Next he appeared in Alfieri's "Saul," and then all Italy declared that Modena's mantle had fallen on worthy shoulders. Wherever he went he was received with enthusiasm. He visited Paris, where he played Orasmane, Orestes, Saul, and Othello. On his return to Florence he was hospitably entertained by the Marquis of Normanby, then English Ambassador to the Court of Tuscany. In 1865 occurred the sixth centenary of Dante's birthday, and the four greatest Italian actors were invited to perform in Silvio Pellico's tragedy of "Francesca di Rimini," which is founded on an episode in the "Divina Commedia." The cast originally stood on the play-bills thus: Francesca, Signora Ristori; Lancelotto, Signor Rossi; Paulo, Signor Salvini; and Guido, Signor Majeroni. It happened, however, that Rossi, who was unaccustomed to play the part of Lancelotto, felt timid at appearing in a character so little suited to him. Hearing this, Signor Salvini, with exquisite politeness and good-nature, volunteered to take the insignificant part, relinquishing the grand rôle of Paulo to his junior in the profession. He created by the force of his genius an impression in the minor part which is still vivid in the minds of all who witnessed the performance. The government of Florence, grateful for his urbanity, presented him with a statuette of Dante, and King Victor Emmanuel rewarded him with the title of Knight of the Order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus. Later he received from the same monarch a diamond ring, with the rank of officer in the Order of the Crown of Italy. In 1868 Signor Salvini visited Madrid, where his acting of the death of Conrad in "La Morte Civile" produced such an impression that the easily-excited Madrilese rushed upon the stage to ascertain whether the death was actual or fictitious. The Queen, Isabella II., conferred upon the great actor many marks of favour, as did also, shortly afterwards, King Luis of Portugal, who frequently entertained him at the royal palace of Lisbon. Signor Salvini visited America in 1874, and England in 1875, having immense success, especially in the character of Othello. He made his first appearance in Brussels, as Othello, Dec. 25, 1877. He gave a series of performances in the United States in 1881, and revisited England in 1884.

SAMBOURNE, Edward Linley, one of the most original and inventive caricaturists and humorous artists of the day, was born Jan. 4, 1845, and was educated at the City of London School, and the College, Chester. He was intended for the engineering profession, and was placed at John Penn & Son's Works, Greenwich, 1861-67, but in 1867 he was introduced to Mark Lemon, and published his first drawing in Punch, April 27, 1867. Since then he has devoted himself to the art of illustration. His principal works are the illustrations to "New History of Sandford and Merton," by F. C. Burnand, 1872; "Military Men I have Met," by Captain Dyne Finton, 1872; "Our Autumn Holiday on French Rivers," by L. J. Molloy, 1874; "Our Holiday in the Scottish Highlands," by Arthur à Beckett, 1876; "Modern Venice," 1877; "The Water Babies," by Charles Kingsley, 1885; "Hans Andersen's Fairy Tales," 1887. He designed the Diploma for the Great International Fisheries Exhibition, 1883, which was exhibited at the Royal Academy, 1885; and more recently the cover of Sketch. It is, however, by his innumerable drawings for Punch that he is best known.

SAMUEL, Sir Saul, K.C.M.G., C.B., born Nov. 2, 1820, is the son of the late Sampson Samuel, Esq., of London. He sailed for New South Wales in 1832; and, after completing his education at the Sydney College, he became extensively engaged in squatting, commercial, mining and manufacturing pursuits, and is recognised as the pioneer of several industries which have since developed into importance. His public career commenced in 1854, two years before responsible government was inaugurated in New South Wales; he was then elected a member of the Legislative Council. Soon after the promulgation of the new Constitution in 1856 he was elected a member of the Legislative Assembly; and, in 1859, first accepted office in the Forster Administration as Colonial Treasurer. He held the same portfolio in the Cowper Government of 1865, the Robertson Ministry in 1868, and the Cowper Administration of 1869. He has also acted as Postmaster-General in several Governments, and successfully conducted negotiations with the United States Government for a Postal Convention with New South Wales, which resulted in the establishment of the San Francisco Mail Service with Australia. After holding high office under every Governor of the Colony (except Lord Carrington) since the inauguration of responsible government he, in 1880, resigned the Postmaster-Generalship in the Parkes' Administration, and was appointed Agent-General for the Colony in London, a position which he continues to fill. In that capacity he has conducted diplomatic and financial business of the highest importance with uniform success, and to the great satisfaction of successive Governments. He was created C.M.G. in 1874; K.C.M.G. in 1882; and C.B. (Civil) in 1886. He has been twice married (1st), in 1857, to Henrietta Matilda, daughter of Benjamin Goldsmid Levien, Esq., of Geelong, Victoria; and (2ndly) in 1877, to Sara Louise, daughter of E. Isaacs, Esq., of Auckland, New Zealand.

SAMUELSON, James, is the eighth son of the late Samuel H. Samuelson, merchant, of Liverpool and Hull. He was born in the latter place in 1829, was educated in Liverpool by the Rev. John Brunner (father of Mr. Brunner, M.P.), and studied zoology under Dr. Zaddach at Königsberg University. In 1867 he passed the General Examination of the Inns of Court, and was called to the Bar of the Middle Temple in 1870, but never practised. Mr. Samuelson has all his life been connected with manufacturing industries, and he is now the chief proprietor in a limited company at Birkenhead, managed by his two sons, for crushing palm kernels and cocoa nuts. His leisure has been employed in literary and social work, the latter including the foundation of the Liverpool Science and Art Classes, of which he is President. He has frequently acted as an intermediary in the settlement of trade disputes, and notably in conjunction with the Earl of Derby and the late Mr. R. Lowndes, as arbitrator in the great Dock Strike of 1879. Mr. Samuelson's earlier works were chiefly of a popular scientific character. In 1860 he published two works called "Humble Creatures," dealing with the microscopic anatomy of certain insects. In 1862 he founded, and for a short time edited, the Popular Science Review, and in 1864, the Quarterly Journal of Science. This review he edited for eight years, with the assistance of Mr. W. Crookes, F.R.S., Sir W. Fairbairn, Bart., F.R.S., and other leading scientists. Amongst his works on Social Science are "The German Working Man," 1869; and the "History of Drink," 1879. He has travelled over a great part of the civilized world, east and west; and has published monographs of some of the countries visited, as "Roumania, Past and Present," 1882; the only work of the kind in the English language, for which he received from the King the Roumanian Cross, and was made "Officer of the Crown of Roumania;" "Bulgaria, Past and Present," 1887; "India, Past and Present," 1889. He projected, and for some time edited for Messrs. Routledge, a quarterly review called Subjects of the Day, the distinctive feature of which was that each number treated exhaustively of one current topic of interest, and was composed so as to form a text-book of permanent value, to which a bibliography and index were attached. The magazine reckoned among its contributors many leading experts and officials connected with the subjects to be treated. In 1893 he visited Greece, and on his return, published a treatise on the financial and industrial condition of that country. In the same year he founded the Liverpool Board of Conciliation, and was mainly instrumental in establishing a Labour Registry in that city, whilst his publications on these questions stimulated the formation of similar institutions in other towns. In politics Mr. Samuelson is an advanced Liberal, and he has unsuccessfully contested two constituencies. He belongs to the two Reform Clubs in Liverpool, and is an original member of the National Liberal Club.

SANDAY, The Rev. William, D.D., was born at Holme Pierrepont, Nottingham, Aug. 1, 1843, and educated at Repton School, and at Balliol and Corpus Christi Colleges, Oxford, being elected scholar of the latter in 1863. He obtained a first class in 1865, and was ordained deacon in 1867, priest in 1869, taking his M.A. degree in 1868. He held a fellowship at Trinity from 1866-73. Dr. Sanday has been successively Lecturer of St. Nicholas, Abingdon, 1871, Vicar of Great Waltham, 1872, Rector of Barton-on-the-Heath, Warwick, 1873, and Principal of Bishop Hatfield's Hall, Durham, 1876. In 1882 he was appointed Professor of Exegesis at Oxford, in succession to the late Canon Liddon, who resigned the post. He was Whitehall Preacher in 1889-90, and Select Preacher in Cambridge University between 1880 and 1892. Dr. Sanday has published "Authorship and Historical Character of the Fourth Gospel," 1873; "The Gospels in the Second Century," 1876; "Commentaries on Romans and Galatians," 1878; and is joint editor of "Variorum Bible," and "Studia Biblica." In 1893 Dr. Sanday delivered the Bampton Lectures, his subject being "Inspiration." They were published later in the year.

SANDERSON, Professor John Scott Burdon, M.A., M.D., D.Sc., Trin. Coll. Dublin, D.C.L., Durham, LL.D., Edin., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, in Dec., 1828, and educated at the University of Edinburgh. He was Medical Officer of Health for Paddington, 1856-67; has been Physician to the Middlesex Hospital and the Hospital for Consumption, Brompton. He held the office of Jodrell Professor of Physiology in University College from 1874 to 1882. On Nov. 29, 1882, he was elected Waynflete Professor of Physiology at Oxford. He was Professor Superintendent of the Brown Institution from 1871 to 1878. Dr. Sanderson was employed by the Royal Commissioners to make investigations respecting the Cattle Plague, 1865-66; was sent by her Majesty's Government to North Germany in 1865 to inquire into an Epidemic of Cerebro-Spinal Meningitis; and was occupied in an inquiry for a Royal Commission as to the influence of extreme heat on the health of workers in the Cornwall mines, in 1869. In 1883 he sat on the Royal Commission on Hospitals for Infectious Diseases, and has since served on two other Royal Commissions, viz., that on the consumption of tuberculous meat and milk (1891), and that on the University of London (1892). He is the author of numerous Reports on infectious diseases and other subjects connected with Public Health in the Reports of the Medical Officer of the Privy Council in 1860 and for several succeeding years; and of papers on physiological and pathological subjects read before the Royal Society, particularly an elaborate series of researches on the Electrical Properties of the Dionæa Muscipula, as well as on the electrical organs of the skate and other electrical fishes. He was President of the Biological Section of the British Association at the meeting at Newcastle-on-Tyne in 1889, and was elected President of the Association at Nottingham in 1893. He has three times filled the office of Croonian Lecturer, viz., in 1867 and 1877 at the Royal Society, and at the College of Physicians in 1891. For his physiological and pathological researches he received a Royal Medal in 1883, and the Baly Medal of the Royal College of Physicians in 1880.

SANDFORD, The Right Rev. Daniel Fox, LL.D., late Bishop of Tasmania, third son of the late Sir Samuel Keyte Sandford, D.C.L., sometime M.P. for Paisley, and Professor of Greek at Glasgow, was born in 1831. After taking orders he became incumbent of St. John's and Canon of St. Mary's Cathedral, Edinburgh; and, having been elected to the bishopric of Tasmania, he was consecrated by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson), in St. Paul's Cathedral, April 25, 1883. He resigned his bishopric and was appointed Rector of Boldon, and assistant Bishop in the diocese of Durham, 1889.

SANDFORD, The Right Rev. Charles Waldegrave, D.D., Bishop of Gibraltar, son of the late Archdeacon Sandford, born in 1828, received his academical education at Oxford, was for several years Senior Censor of Christ Church, became Commissary of the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1869, and Rector of Bishopsbourne, Kent, in 1870. On the resignation of Bishop Harris he was nominated by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the See of Gibraltar, and was consecrated at Oxford, Feb. 1, 1874.

SANDYS, John Edwin, Litt. D., son of the late Rev. T. Sandys, was born May 19, 1844. He was educated at Repton School, and entered St. John's College, Cambridge, as a minor scholar, in 1863. He was elected first Bell's Scholar in 1864, obtained the Gold Medal, for a Greek Ode on the "Art of Phidias" in 1865, the Porson Prize for Greek Trochaics in 1865, and for Greek Iambics in 1866, and was twice awarded the Members' Prize for Latin Prose Composition. In 1867 he graduated as Senior Classic, and was elected Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College; and, on taking his M.A. degree in 1870, was appointed Tutor of his College, an office which he still holds. He was an Examiner for the Classical Tripos on five occasions between 1871 and 1876, and was principal Classical Lecturer of Jesus College from 1867 to 1877. He resigned his last appointment after his election, Oct. 19, 1876, to the office of Public Orator of the University of Cambridge. In 1868 he edited the Ad Demonicum and Panegyricus of Isocrates; in 1874, the second part of the "Select Private Orations" of Demosthenes (new ed., 1886); in 1880, the Bacchae of Euripides, with illustrations from works of ancient art (2nd ed., 1885, 3rd ed., 1892); in 1885, the Orator of Cicero; in 1890, the "Speech of Demosthenes against the Law of Leptines;" and in 1893 Aristotle's "Constitution of Athens." He has also edited the late Mr. Cope's Commentary on the Rhetoric of Aristotle, 1877; and (in conjunction with the late Prof. Nettleship) has revised and enlarged an English translation of Seyffert's "Dictionary of Classical Mythology, Religion, Literature, Art, and Antiquities," 1891. In 1887 he published "An Easter Vacation in Greece." He is one of the Managing Committee of the British School at Athens, and a member of the Council of the Hellenic Society. He has been President of the Cambridge Philological Society, and Chairman of the Board of Classical Studies. In 1885 he was admitted to the degree of Doctor of Letters by his own University, and in 1892 he received an honorary degree from the University of Dublin.

SANT, James, R.A., was born at Croydon, April 23, 1820, and received his first instructions in art from John Varley, one of the fathers of the British School of painting in water-colours. Later on, Sir Augustus Calcott, R.A., gave him some valuable hints and instruction in oil painting. It was not, however, till 1842 that he devoted himself to painting as a profession by becoming a student of the Royal Academy, where he studied for four years. Shortly after leaving, he began to exhibit those "subject pictures," or "fancy subjects," of single figures generally, and these frequently children, by which pictures he is probably most widely known, many of them having been engraved. Of these we may select as typical examples the "Infant Samuel," the "Infant Timothy," "Little Red Riding-Hood," and "Dick Whittington." Among Mr. Sant's numerous other works of this description are the "Light of the Cross," "Mother's Hope," "Morning" and "Evening," "She Never Told her Love," "Harmony," "Young Minstrel," "Retrospection," "Saxon Women," "The Boy Shakespere," "The Walk to Emmaus," "The Miller's Daughter," and "Young Steele." After some years, however, Mr. Sant began to paint portraits, and his pretty pictures of ladies and children became, and for some time continued to be, the fashion. The largest collection of Mr. Sant's works was at Strawberry Hill. For Countess Waldegrave the artist painted no fewer than 22 members of her distinguished circle, including the Duchess of Sutherland, the Marchioness of Westminster when Lady Constance Grosvenor, the Countess of Shaftesbury, the Duke and Duchess d'Aumale, the Duchess of Wellington when Marchioness of Douro, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, Lord Lyndhurst, the Marchioness of Clanricarde, M. Van de Weyer, the Belgian Minister, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, Countess Morley, Earl Grey, Bishop Wilberforce, and Countess Waldegrave herself. This Strawberry Hill gallery of pictures was exhibited at the French Gallery, Pall Mall, in 1861. He was elected A.R.A. in 1861; R.A. in 1870; and in Jan., 1871, was appointed Principal Painter in Ordinary to the Queen in succession to the late Sir George Hayter, and was commissioned to paint a large picture of her Majesty and her Royal grandchildren, the eldest three children of the Prince of Wales, and a State portrait of the Queen for the Turkish Embassy. He is still a frequent contributor to the Royal Academy Exhibitions. In June, 1877, Mr. Sant was elected a corresponding member of the Royal Accademia Raffaello in Urbino. Mr. Sant married a daughter of R. M. M. Thomson, staff-surgeon, Bengal Presidency.

SANTLEY, Charles, baritone singer, was born at Liverpool in 1834, and after receiving a good musical and general education in his own country, proceeded to Italy to complete his professional training. He made his first appearance as an operatic singer in this country at Covent Garden, during the Pyne-Harrison management, and achieved his first great success in the part of Rhineberg, in Vincent Wallace's opera of "Lurline," in March, 1860. He created so favourable an impression in this character that he took rank as one of the most effective baritones of the day. His career, especially since he attached himself exclusively to the Italian operatic stage, where he has distinguished himself in most of the great capitals of Europe, has been very successful. His voice is as remarkable for its quality as for the extent of its register, in the upper part of which it partakes of a pure tenore robusto, while in the lower portion it displays the qualities of the basso profondo. In Gounod's opera of "Faust," Mr. Santley performed in the same season the parts of Valentin and Mephistopheles. Mr. Santley married, in 1859, Gertrude Kemble, a grand-daughter of Charles Kemble; she had appeared in public as a soprano singer, but gave up her professional career after her marriage.

SARASATE, Pablo Martin Melitor, Spanish violinist, was born at Pampeluna, March 10, 1844. He entered the Paris Conservatoire in Jan., 1856, became the favourite pupil of Alard, and gained the first prizes for solfeggio and violin. He then entered Rebur's harmony class and secured a premier accessit in 1859, but afterwards relinquished the study of composition for the career of a concert player. His performances were highly successful. He has played in nearly all the great towns between Naples and Norway, and Portugal and Moscow, and has visited America, North and South. His first appearance in London was at the Philharmonic Concert on May 18, 1874. He again appeared at the Musical Union of June 9 of the same year. In 1877 he played at the Crystal Palace on Oct. 13; on March 28, 1878, at the Philharmonic; in 1885 he gave several violin recitals in London, with very remarkable success, and in 1886 a series of equally successful concerts. Since then the "Sarasate Concerts" have become an annual feature of the St. James's Hall musical season.

SARCEY, Francisque, French writer, was born at Dourdan, Oct. 8, 1828, and educated at the Normal School. He followed the profession of schoolmaster for some time, but then turned to literature in Paris, first writing for the Figaro and the Revue Européenne. In 1859 he accepted the post of dramatic critic to the newly-founded Opinion Nationale, and in 1867 accepted a similar post on the Temps, which he has since occupied. Here he wields very great influence over the theatres and the public. He also contributes a good deal to the XIXme Siècle. He has published several books, a "History of the Siege of Paris," 1870, a lively and graphic account written from a diary kept throughout the siege; "Le Nouveau Seigneur du Village," 1862; "Le Mot et la Chose," 1862; "St. Etienne Moret," 1872; "Le Piano de Jeanne," 1876; "Comédiens et Comédiennes," 1878; and "Souvenirs de Jeunesse," 1884; and "Souvenirs d'Âge Mûr," 1892.

SARDOU, Victorien, a celebrated French dramatist, is the son of M. Léandre Sardou, a professor in Paris, and the compiler of several publications. He was born in Paris, Sept. 7, 1831. At first he studied medicine, but he was obliged, in consequence of the embarrassments of his family, to give private lessons in history, philosophy, and mathematics. He also made attempts in literature, writing articles for several reviews, for the minor journals, and for the "Dictionnaire de la Conversation." His first comedy, "La Taverne des Étudiants," was brought out at the Odéon, April 1, 1854, and proved a complete failure. In the year 1857 M. Sardou was in a state of abject poverty and extreme distress. He was living in a garret, and was prostrated by an attack of typhoid fever; but a neighbour, Mdlle. de Brécourt, nursed him with tender care during his illness, from which he slowly recovered. He married this friend in the following year, and by her he was introduced to Mdlle. Déjazet, who had just established the theatre which was named after her. M. Sardou, undeterred by his former failure, now turned his attention again to dramatic composition, and quickly built up for himself a brilliant reputation. Nine years later he was in possession of a handsome fortune and a European renown, when a gloom was temporarily cast over his career by the death of his devoted wife (1867). M. Sardou's earlier pieces were performed at the Théâtre Déjazet, viz.:—"Les Premières Armes de Figaro," September 27, 1859; "Monsieur Garat," April 30, 1860; and "Les Prés-Saint-Gervais," April 24, 1862. "Monsieur Garat" was one of the most prolonged successes of the little theatre, and "Les Prés-Saint-Gervais," transformed into an opéra-bouffe, was afterwards brought out at the Théâtre des Variétés, and also, in an English version, at the Criterion Theatre, London. Subjoined is a list of his other works, with the dates of their first representation:—"Les Gens Nerveux" (Palais Royal, Nov. 4, 1859); "Les Pattes de Mouche" (Gymnase, May 15, 1860); "Les Femmes Fortes" (Vaudeville, Dec. 31, 1860); "L'Ecureuil," under the pseudonym of Carle (Vaudeville, Feb. 9, 1861); "Piccolino" (Gymnase, July 18, 1861); "Nos Intimes," one of his most brilliant successes (Vaudeville, Nov. 16, 1861); "La Papillonne" (Théâtre Française, April 11, 1862), a piece which was unfavourably received; "La Perle Noire" (Gymnase, April 12, 1862); "Les Ganaches" (same theatre, Oct. 29, 1862); "Batailles d'Amour," a comic opera in three acts, written in conjunction with M. Daclin (Opéra Comique, April 13, 1863); "Les Diables Noirs" (Vaudeville, 1863), a drama in four acts, which after being interdicted by the censorship, was severely criticised by the press; "Le Degel" (Déjazet, April 12); "Don Quichotte," 1864; a fairy piece in three acts (Gymnase, June 25, 1864); "Les Pommes du Voisin" (Palais Royal, Oct. 25, 1864); "Capitaine Henriot" (Opéra Comique, Dec. 26, 1864); "Les Vieux Garçons" (Gymnase, Jan. 21, 1865); "La Famille Bénoiton" (Vaudeville, Nov. 4, 1855); "Nos bons Villageois" (Gymnase, Oct. 3, 1866); "Maison Neuve" (Vaudeville, Dec. 4, 1866); "Séraphine," originally entitled "La Dévote" (Gymnase, Dec. 21, 1868); "Patrie" (Porte-Saint-Martin, March 18, 1869); "Fernande" (Gymnase, March 8, 1870); "Le Roi Carotte" (Gaîté, Jan. 15, 1872); "Rabagas" (Vaudeville, Jan. 1872), a piece which was supposed to have reference to M. Gambetta; "Les Merveilleuses" (Théâtre des Variétés, 1873); "Andréa" (Gymnase, March 17, 1873); "L'Oncle Sam," a satire on American society (Vaudeville, Nov. 1873); "La Haine," a tragedy which was not successful (Gaîté, Dec., 1874); "Ferréol" (Gymnase, Nov., 1875); "Dora," a comedy in five acts (Vaudeville, Jan. 1877); and "Les Bourgeois de Pontarcy" (Vaudeville, 1878); "Daniel Rochat," a five-act comedy (Théâtre Française, Feb. 16, 1880); "Odette," a play in four acts (Vaudeville, Nov. 1881); "Divorçons," a comedy in three acts, 1881; "Fédora," and "Théodora;" the last two being written for Madame Sarah Bernhardt. Since then his best-known plays have been "La Tosca," also written for Sarah Bernhardt, and brought out by her at the Porte-Saint-Martin Theatre in 1877; a comedy, "Marquise," produced at the Vaudeville; "Thermidor," produced in Jan., 1891, and prohibited by the French government owing to the political demonstrations it excited; and "Gismonda," produced by Madame Bernhardt at the Renaissance Theatre, Paris, on Oct. 31, 1894. M. Sardou has realised a princely fortune by his writings, and has built a splendid château at Marly-le-Roy. He married, secondly, on June 17, 1872, Mdlle. Soulier, daughter of the Conservateur of the Museum of Versailles. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in 1863, and was elected a Member of the French Academy in June, 1877, in succession to M. Joseph Autran. His reception into the French Academy took place May 23, 1878.

SASSOON, Sir Albert Abdullah, Bart., K.C.S.I., was born at Bagdad, in 1818, and settled with his father in Bombay in 1832. He received a European education, and on the death of his father succeeded to the leadership of the great banking and mercantile firm of David Sassoon and Co., founded by his father. During his career in India, he distinguished himself by the munificence with which he promoted charitable undertakings and public works. To his persistence was mainly owing the erection of the new buildings in Bombay for the Elphinstone High School. Towards the cost of the erection Sir Albert contributed a lakh of rupees on the occasion of the recovery of the Prince of Wales from his serious illness. Subsequently he added a gift of half a lakh. Many other benevolent institutions have been founded by him in India, both for the benefit of his own co-religionists and for the people of the country generally. He presented the Town Hall of Bombay with a magnificent organ, and, as a memorial of the Royal visit to India in 1875, adorned its commanding site with a colossal equestrian statue of the Prince of Wales, by the late Mr. J. E. Boehm, R.A. The statue to the memory of the late Prince Consort in the Victoria and Albert Museum at Bombay also is the gift of Sir A. Sassoon. The inscription on the pedestal is in Hebrew. In 1873 the Queen conferred the honour of knighthood on Sir Albert, and in November of the same year the Corporation of London presented him with the freedom of the City. Sir Albert Sassoon is the first Anglo-Indian on whom this distinction has been bestowed. In 1867 he had been appointed Companion of the Star of India, and a year later he became a Member of the Bombay Legislative Council, continuing his membership till 1872. Since his residence in London Sir Albert has been a prominent personage in society, and has taken a deep interest in the affairs of the Anglo-Jewish community. He is a Vice-President of the Anglo-Jewish Association. He distinguished himself by the magnificence of the entertainment he offered the Shah of Persia, on the occasion of his Majesty's visit to this country.

SAUNDERS, Sir Edwin, Kt., F.R.C.S., F.G.S., son of Mr. Saunders, publisher and author, of the firm of Saunders and Ottley, was born in London, March 12, 1814, and has become distinguished as a dental surgeon. From 1837 to 1854 he was Surgeon-Dentist and Lecturer on the Anatomy and Diseases of the Teeth at St. Thomas's Hospital, and has been Surgeon-Dentist to the Queen since 1848. He is a Fellow of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, has been twice President of the Odontological Society, was President of the Met. B. of the British Medical Association, and President of Section XII. of the International Medical Congress of 1881, and is the author of "Advice on the Care of the Teeth," and "Teeth the Test of Age, considered with reference to the Factory Act." Sir Edwin Saunders received the honour of knighthood in 1883. He is a Member of Council of the Royal Botanic Society, Regent's Park, London, and President of the National Chrysanthemum Society.

SAVAGE, George Henry, M.D., was born at Brighton, Nov. 12, 1843, and is the second son of William Dawson Savage, J.P., of Brighton. He was educated at private schools at Brighton, then attended classes at Brighton College, and was pupil at the Sussex County Hospital, under Drs. Ormerod, Moon, Blaker, Lowdell and others. He entered at Guy's after matriculating at the London University, and took his degree at that University, obtaining a Gold Medal for organic chemistry and materia medica; being bracketed with scholar in medicine at the final M.B., obtaining honours in obstetric medicine. He received the treasurer's Gold Medal at Guy's for clinical medicine, and held all the appointments open to students at Guy's Hospital, including the House Surgeonship. He then was appointed medical officer of the London Lead Company's mines in Nent-Head, Cumberland, where for over four years he had charge of a very extensive district. He left the North on his appointment to the assistant medical officership to Bethlehem in 1872, in succession to Dr. Rayner, who was appointed to Hanwell. He succeeded Dr. Rhys Williams as senior physician and superintendent in 1878, which post he held till 1888. He is now Lecturer on Mental Diseases at Guy's Hospital. He has been co-editor of the Journal of Mental Science, the organ of the medico-physiological association, for over ten years, and has written a manual on insanity, besides many papers in the Guy's Hospital Gazette and other medical papers. He has been President of the Medico-Psychological Association, and also President of the Psychological Branch of the British Medical Association. He was secretary of the Psychological section of the international medical congress held in London. He married, first, Margaret, daughter of Jacob Walton, Esq., of Greenends, Alston Moor, who died at the birth of her first child. He married, secondly, the daughter of Dr. Sutton, physician to the London Hospital, by whom he has one son.

SAVILE, The Right Hon. John (Baron Savile, formerly "Lumley"), P.C., G.C.B., son of John, eighth earl of Scarborough, was born in 1818. He entered the Foreign Office as a supernumerary clerk in the Librarian's department in 1841, but was permitted to accompany the late Earl of Westmoreland to Berlin as private secretary and attaché in the autumn of that year. In 1842 he was appointed attaché at Berlin, and was subsequently transferred to St. Petersburg, where he acted as paid attaché. In 1854 he was nominated Secretary of Legation in Washington, and in the following year he was Chargé d'Affaires and also employed on special service at New York. On the departure of Mr. (now Sir John) Crampton in May, 1856, Mr. Lumley was left in charge of the archives, and in Feb., 1858, he was transferred to Madrid, where he acted for a short time as Chargé d'Affaires. He was employed on a special service in the Basque Provinces in 1858, and was transferred to St. Petersburg in the following year. On leaving Madrid he presented the National Gallery with a remarkable picture by Velasquez. In 1860 he was appointed Secretary of Embassy at Constantinople, but the close of the same year saw him back in St. Petersburg, where he was Chargé d'Affaires in 1862, 1864, and again in 1865. In 1866 he was elected an Associate of the Imperial Russian Academy of Fine Arts, and in the same year he was promoted to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the King of Saxony. In August, 1867, he was appointed, in the same capacity, to the Swiss Confederation, but was transferred to Brussels in Oct., 1868. He was appointed by the Queen to represent her Majesty at the funeral of his Royal Highness the Duke of Brabant, in Jan. 1869. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath in 1873, and was offered by the King of the Belgians the Grand Cross of the Order of Leopold, which, in consequence of existing regulations, he was unable to accept. In Oct., 1878, he was nominated a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath. He was appointed Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the King of Italy in Sept., 1883. He was Ambassador to Italy in 1888, and in 1885 was made a G.C.B. Sir John Savile Lumley dropped the name of Lumley in 1887, and, in Sept., 1888, was made a peer, with the title of Baron Saville of Rufford, in recognition of his long diplomatic services.

SAVORY, Sir William Scovell, Bart., F.R.S., was born in 1826, studied at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and the London University, where he took his M.B. degree. He was appointed Professor of Comparative Anatomy and Physiology at the Royal College of Surgeons, where he became a Fellow in 1852, a Member of the Council in 1877, and President of the College in 1885 and 1886. He is now Consulting Surgeon to St. Bartholomew's and other Hospitals, and Surgeon-Extraordinary to the Queen. Sir William is the author of "The Pathology of Cancer," "Life and Death," 1863; an introduction to the "Book of Health," edited by Malcolm Morris, 1883; and various papers in the "Philosophical Transactions" of the Royal Society, and in the "Medico-Chirurgical Transactions."

SAXE-COBURG and GOTHA, H.R.H. Prince Alfred Alexander William Ernest Albert, Duke of, and first Duke of Edinburgh, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., the second son of her most gracious Majesty the Queen and his Royal Highness the late Prince Albert, was born at Windsor Castle, Aug. 6, 1844. His early education was entrusted to the Rev. H. M. Birch; from 1852 to F. W. Gibbs, Esq., C.B.; and in 1856 the Prince was placed under the special care of Major Cowell, R.E., and spent the winter of 1856-7 at Geneva, studying modern languages. Having decided upon joining the naval service, Prince Alfred was placed under the Rev. W. R. Jolly, at Alverbank, near Gosport, where he pursued the preparatory studies for his profession during the summer of 1858. He entered the service, after a strict and searching examination, Aug. 31, 1858, was appointed a Naval Cadet, and joined her Majesty's screw steam-frigate Euryalus, 51 guns, Captain John Walter Tarleton, C.B. After a leave of absence for a few weeks, Prince Alfred joined his ship for active sea-service, Oct. 27, 1858, and served in the St. George on various foreign stations, visited many of the countries on the shores of the Mediterranean, and extended his travels to America and the West Indies. In Dec., 1862, Prince Alfred declined the offer made to him of the throne of Greece. In Feb., 1866, Parliament granted him £15,000 a year, payable from the day on which he attained his majority, with an additional £10,000 on his marriage. He was created Duke of Edinburgh, Earl of Kent, and Earl of Ulster, in the peerage of the United Kingdom, May 24, 1866, and took his seat in the House of Lords, June 8. His Royal Highness was sworn in Master of the Trinity House, March 21, 1866, and received the freedom of the City of London, June 8. Early in 1867 the Duke was appointed to the command of the frigate Galatea, which sailed from Plymouth Sound Feb. 26. Since then he has visited nearly every country in the world, proceeding first to Australia, where he met with an enthusiastic reception on the part of the inhabitants; and great indignation was felt at the dastardly attempt of an Irishman, named O'Farrell, to assassinate the Prince at a picnic held at Clontarf, near Port Jackson, New South Wales, on March 12, 1868. The Prince, however, was only slightly wounded in the back by a pistol-shot. O'Farrell was tried on March 31, found guilty, and executed on April 21. His Royal Highness subsequently visited Japan (where he was received both publicly and privately by the Mikado), China, and India. In 1873 he went to Italy, and on April 20 had an audience with the Pope in Rome. On Jan. 23, 1874, his marriage with the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, only daughter of Alexander II., Emperor of Russia, was celebrated with great pomp at St. Petersburg; and on March 12, the Duke and Duchess, accompanied by her Majesty the Queen, made a public entry into London amid much popular enthusiasm. His Royal Highness is Duke of Saxony and Prince of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. In Nov., 1882, he was promoted to the rank of Vice-Admiral in her Majesty's fleet; and since that time he has held various important commands. In 1888 his Royal Highness, in command of the Mediterranean Squadron, visited some of the chief continental capitals, and on the occasion of his visit to Madrid he was invested with the Order of the Golden Fleece by the Queen-Regent of Spain. He gave up his command in 1889. On the death of H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, on August 22, 1893, the Duke of Edinburgh succeeded him in the Duchy, and took the oath of loyalty to the constitution in the German Emperor's presence, afterwards paying him a state visit at Potsdam. He had previously (June, 1888) been promoted to the rank (honorary) of an Infantry General in the German army. His eldest daughter, the Princess Marie, was married at Sigmaringen on Jan. 10, 1893, to the Crown Prince of Roumania, and his second daughter, Princess Victoria Melita, was married at Coburg to the Grand Duke of Hesse in April, 1894. The Prince of Saxe-Coburg resides a portion of every year in England, and keeps up an establishment at Clarence House. He thus retains the annuity of 10,000*l.* given him in 1873, but has voluntarily relinquished the annuity of 15,000*l.* conferred on him in 1866. As a foreign sovereign he has ceased to be a Privy Councillor, but his position as a Peer of the Realm, is, we understand, undecided.

SAXE-COBURG AND GOTHA, Her Royal Highness Marie Alexandrovna, Princess of, Grand Duchess of Russia, only daughter of the late Emperor of Russia, and sister of the present Emperor, was born at St. Petersburg, Oct. 17, 1853, and was married at St. Petersburg to his Royal Highness Prince Alfred, Duke of Edinburgh. On Oct. 15, 1874, the Duchess gave birth at Buckingham Palace to a son, who, on the 23rd of the following month, was baptized by the names of Alfred Alexander William Ernest Albert, the sponsors being Queen Victoria, the Emperor of Russia, the Emperor of Germany, the Prince of Wales, the Crown Princess of Germany, and the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. The Duchess of Edinburgh's other children are the Princess Marie Alexandra Victoria, born Oct. 29, 1875; the Princess Victoria Melita, born at Malta, Nov. 25, 1876; the Princess Alexandra Louise Olga Victoria, born at Coburg, Sept. 1, 1878; and the Princess Beatrice Leopoldine Victoria, born April 20, 1884.

SAXONY, King of. See ALBERT.

SAY, Jean Baptiste Léon, a French statesman, born in Paris, June 6, 1826, is the son of Horace Emile Say, and grandson of Jean Baptiste Say, the celebrated political economist. Following the traditions of his family, he devoted himself to the study of political economy, and for many years he was contributor to the Journal des Débats, of which he continues to be the principal proprietor. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the Corps Législatif in 1869, but in Feb., 1871, he was returned to the National Assembly as one of the representatives of two departments, Seine and Seine-et-Oise; he took his seat for the Seine. In June the same year he became Prefect of that department. In Oct., 1871, he came to London accompanied by M. Vautrain, the President of the Municipal Council of Paris, and presented to the Court of Aldermen at the Guildhall a bronze medal of the Hôtel de Ville, and the large Gold Medal which was struck in commemoration of the revictualling of Paris by voluntary subscriptions collected in this country. At the same time he, on behalf of M. Thiers, presented the Lord Mayor with the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour. He and M. Vautrain were entertained at a public banquet in the Mansion House (Oct. 18). On Dec. 7, 1872, he was made Minister of Finance by M. Thiers, on whose downfall he naturally left office (May 24, 1873). He again accepted the portfolio of Finance in M. Buffet's administration, in March, 1875. Soon afterwards he was elected a Senator for the department of the Seine-et-Oise; his term of office expiring in 1882, he was re-elected. He retained his portfolio in the Dufaure cabinet of the 10th of May, 1876, and in the Jules Simon cabinet of the 13th of Dec. following, but he retired with the latter, May 17, 1877. When a new ministry was formed under the presidency of M. Dufaure in Dec., 1877, M. Léon Say again became Minister of Finance. He presided over the International Monetary Conference held at the Foreign Office, Paris, in Aug., 1878. He retained the position of Minister of Finance in the first cabinet formed by President Grévy. He retired from the Administration, Dec. 17, 1879, with the head of the cabinet, M. Waddington, and resumed his place among the members of the Left Centre. In April, 1880, he was appointed Ambassador in London, with a view to his conducting the negotiations for a Treaty of Commerce, and he met with a cordial reception, but he returned to Paris in the course of a few weeks, in consequence of his having been elected President of the Senate, May 25, 1880, in place of M. Martel, who had resigned on account of ill-health. In 1889 he resigned his seat as a Senator, and was elected as Député de Pau, Basses Pyrénées. He was re-elected President of the Senate, Jan. 20, 1881, and he became Minister of Finance in the De Freycinet cabinet, formed Jan. 30, 1882. This cabinet, however, went out of office in a few months. In Nov., 1883, M. Say was elected President of the re-union of the Left Centre in the Senate, and as such he has made several political compaigns in favour of Liberalism as opposed to Radicalism, and has endeavoured to build up a Liberal Republican Party in Parliament. He was one of the founders of the Liberal Republican Union, and, in 1889, was an active opponent of Boulangism. He even presented himself for election to the Chamber of Deputies, and was returned for Pau, after which he retired from the Senate in order to re-enter active political life. M. Léon Say, who is a great authority on financial and economical questions, has written "Théorie des Changes Etrangers," translated from the English, and preceded by an introduction; "Les finances de la France, une année de discussion," 1882; "Le Socialisme d'État," 1884; "Les solutions démocratiques de la question des impôts," 1886; "Turgot," 1887. His political speeches have been re-edited, especially "Discours prononces pendant les sessions de 1876—question monetaire." He published as editor, conjointly with MM. Fayal and Lanjalley, "Le Dictionnaire des Finances," 1883-90; and, conjointly with M. J. Chailley, "Le Nouveau Dictionnaire d'Economie politique," 1890-92. He has contributed to the Annuaire de l'Economie Politique, and the Journal des Economistes. In Dec., 1874, the French Academy of Moral and Political Sciences elected M. Léon Say to the seat left vacant by the death of M. Dubois as "membre libre," and in 1880 as "membre titulaire," as successor to M. Michel Chevalier. He was elected a member of the French Academy in 1886, as successor to M. Edmond About.

SAYCE, The Rev. Archibald Henry, born at Shirehampton, near Bristol, Sept. 25, 1846, was educated partly at home, and partly at Grosvenor College, Bath. He became Scholar of Queen's College, Oxford, in 1865, First Class in Moderations in 1866, was First Class in the Final Classical Schools in 1868, was elected a Fellow of his College in 1869, Tutor in 1870. He was ordained Deacon in 1870, and Priest in 1871. He became Deputy-Professor of Comparative Philology in 1876; and is a Foreign Member of the Royal Academy of Madrid, Honorary Centenary Member of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Honorary Member of the American Anthropological Society, the Peking Oriental Society, etc. He received an honorary LL.D, degree in Dublin in 1881, and an honorary D.D. degree in Edinburgh in 1889. He has published:—"Outlines of Accadian Grammar," in the Journal of Philology, 1870; "An Assyrian Grammar for Comparative Purposes," 1872; "The Principles of Comparative Philology," 1874, 2nd edition, 1875; "The Astronomy and Astrology of the Babylonians," 1874; "An Elementary Assyrian Grammar and Reading Book," 1875, 2nd edition, 1877; "Lectures on the Assyrian Syllabary and Grammar," 1877; "Babylonian Literature," 1877; "Critical Examination of Isaiah, xxxvi.-xxxix., the Chaldean Account of the Deluge, and the Date of the Ethnological Table of Genesis," in the Theological Review, 1873-4; "The Jelly-Fish Theory of Language," in the Contemporary Review, April, 1876; "The Karian Inscriptions," in the Transactions of the Society of Biblical Arch., ix. 1; "Accadian Phonology" in Transactions of the Philological Society, 1877; "The Tenses of the Assyrian Verb" in the Transactions of the R.A.S., 1877; "Introduction to the Science of Language," 2 vols., 1880; "The Monuments of the Hittites," 1881; "The Vannic Inscriptions Deciphered and Translated," 1882; "Herodotus i-iii." 1883; "The Ancient Empires of the East," and "Fresh Light from the Ancient Monuments," 1884; "Introduction to Ezra, Nehemiah and Esther," and "Assyria," and Decipherment of "The Inscriptions of Mal-Amir," 1885; "Presidential Address to the Anthropological Section of the British Association," 1887; "Life and Times of Isaiah," and "The Hittites," 1889. Mr. Sayce has edited the late George Smith's "History of Babylonia," 1877, and "Sennacherib," 1878; and "Chaldæan Genesis," 1879, and the 2nd Series of "Records of the Past," 1888-90. In 1891 he wrote largely on Greek papyri. In 1893 appeared his edition of Vaux's "Ancient History from the Monuments," and in 1894 "The Higher Criticism and the Verdict of the Monuments" (C.K.S.). In the same year he contributed chapters to Flinders Petrie's "Tell El Amarna." Professor Sayce left Oxford in Nov., 1890, to spend the winter in Egypt. He has resigned not only the deputy-professorship of comparative philology, but also his other offices in his University, retaining only his fellowship at Queen's College.

SCHARF, Sir George, K.C.B., F.S.A., is a son of a Bavarian artist of the same name who had settled in London in 1816, and died there Nov., 1860. He was born Dec. 16, 1820; and was educated at London University School, and having gained Medals at the Society of Arts, was admitted a student of the Royal Academy in 1838. His first published work was a series of etchings, entitled "Scenic Effects" illustrating the Shakesperian and Classical revivals by Macready, at Covent Garden Theatre in 1838-9. He travelled in Italy in 1840, and accompanied Sir C. Fellows in a journey through Lycia and other parts of Asia Minor, whither he proceeded again in 1843, as draughtsman to a Government expedition. A large collection of his drawings, both of Lycian views and outlines of sculpture, is deposited in the British Museum. His time has been chiefly devoted to illustrating books; among which may be mentioned Fellows's "Lycia," Murray's "Illustrated Prayer-Book," Macaulay's "Lays of Ancient Rome," 1847; Milman's "Horace," 1849; Kugler's "Handbook of Italian and German Painting," 1851, 2nd edit., 1855; "Layard's Works on Nineveh," Dr. Smith's "Classical Dictionaries," Keats's "Poems," Pollock's "Dante," and Bray's "Life of Stothard." He was elected F.S.A. in 1852, and Corresponding Member of the Archæological Institute of Rome in 1858. He delivered a course of lectures on Italian art at the Royal Institution, and was appointed Art Secretary at the Manchester Exhibition of 1857, and in the same year Secretary and Keeper of the National Portrait Gallery. He has written "History of the Characteristics of Greek Art," prefixed to Wordsworth's "Greece;" "Descriptions of the Greek, Roman, and Pompeian Courts at the Crystal Palace;" "Artistic and Descriptive Notes on Remarkable Pictures in the British Institution Exhibition of Ancient Masters," published in 1858; a "Catalogue of Pictures and Works of Art in Blenheim Palace," in 1860; and a "Catalogue Raisonné of the Pictures belonging to the Society of Antiquaries of London," reprinted from the Fine Arts Quarterly Review, in 1865. In 1866 he delivered a course of lectures at the Royal Institution, upon portraits, illustrated by numerous sketches taken by himself from the original pictures; a second series was given in March, 1868. He is also the author of an account of the celebrated portrait of Richard II., preserved in Westminster Abbey, printed in the Fine Arts Quarterly Review, 1867; and of an historical account of the pictures belonging to the Crown, recording their vicissitudes from the reign of Henry VIII., to the present century, and published in the volume of the Archæological Institute, entitled "Old London," 1867; together with essays on various ancient portraits. In 1882, after a service of twenty-five years, as Secretary, he was constituted Director, Keeper, and Secretary of the National Portait Gallery, which will shortly be housed in its new home at the back of the National Gallery. In 1882 his services were rewarded by a Companionship of the Order of the Bath. He took an active part in selecting authentic portraits for the Stuart and Tudor Exhibitions held in London in 1889-92. In Feb., 1895, he was created a K.C.B.

SCHARLIEB, Mrs., physician. She obtained the M.B. and B.Sc. degrees at the London University in 1882; and in Dec., 1889 passed its M.D. examination, being the first lady who had attained that distinction.

SCHILLING, Johann, a German sculptor, was born at Mittweida, in Saxony, June 23, 1828. After studying with Rietschel and Hänel he made his début as a sculptor in 1851 with a beautiful group—"Amor and Psyche." Working then in Berlin with Drake—the artist of the Victory Column—he produced a pair of relief medallions—"Jupiter and Venus," which procured him a travelling scholarship; and the result of the two years' residence in Italy which he was thus enabled to spend, were his "Wounded Achilles" and his "Centaur and Venus." Returning to steady industry in Dresden he turned out in rapid succession a variety of high productions; and on the death of Rietschel undertook the execution of the city of Spiers' figure for the Luther monument at Worms. Equal admiration was bestowed on his "Four Seasons" on the Brühl Terrace in Dresden, his Schiller statue in Vienna, his Maximilian statue in Trieste, and his War Memorial at Hamburg, not to mention other creations, which were all surpassed and crowned by the Grand National Monument, on the edge of the Niederwald, overlooking the Rhine. This was unveiled by the Emperor William, Sept. 28, 1883. On June 18, 1889, his statue of King Johann was unveiled at Dresden.

SCHNADHORST, Francis, was born at Birmingham, 1840, and educated at King Edward VIth's Grammar School of that town. In 1873 he was invited by the leading liberals of Birmingham to reorganize the party in the city. He became secretary of the Liberal Association and speedily made for it a considerable reputation through the country. His services were recognized by the presentation of a purse of a thousand guineas and an address in the Birmingham Town Hall on April 9, 1877, the presentation being made by Mr. J. Chamberlain, M.P. Under Mr. Schnadhorst's organization, liberal associations upon the lines of the Birmingham organization were established in most of the English constituencies; and in 1887 these associations were banded together in the National Liberal Federation, of which body Mr. Schnadhorst became secretary. The inaugural meetings of the new national organization were attended by Mr. Gladstone. In 1884 Mr. Schnadhorst resigned the secretaryship of the Birmingham Association and was made its Chairman of Committee. In the following year he was appointed President, but resigned that post on leaving Birmingham to take up his residence in London, to which place the head-quarters of the National Liberal Federation were removed after the split in the Liberal party upon the Irish question. On March 9, 1887, Mr. Schnadhorst was entertained at a banquet at the Hotel Métropole, and was there presented with a national testimonial of ten thousand guineas and an illuminated address. Lord Burton presided at the banquet, and Sir Wm. Harcourt was the chief speaker. A letter was read from Mr. Gladstone expressing his sense of the services which Mr. Schnadhorst had rendered to the party. On coming to London Mr. Schnadhorst accepted the post of honorary secretary to the Liberal Central Association, which office he still retains. Ill health has compelled Mr. Schnadhorst during recent years to pay lengthened visits to Australia, Egypt, and to South Africa. On his return from Africa in 1890, Mr. Schnadhorst addressed himself again to the organization of the Liberal party, and was rewarded by its triumph at the General Election in 1892. Mr. Schnadhorst has been frequently invited to enter Parliament, but has hitherto declined all requests.

SCHNEIDER, Hortense Catherine, a French actress, born at Bordeaux about 1835, displayed while very young an aptitude for the stage, and at the age of fifteen played with applause in "Michel et Christine" at the Athénée of her native city. An old teacher named Schaffner gave her lessons in singing, and she subsequently spent three years at Agen, playing secondary parts. Going to Paris, she obtained an engagement in the company of the Bouffes-Parisiens, and on Sept. 19, 1853, made her début in "Le Chien de Garde" at the Théâtre des Variétiés. Here she met with considerable success, which was increased by her performances at the Théâtre du Palais Royal, where she made her first appearance Aug. 5, 1858. In Dec. 1864, Mdlle. Schneider returned to the Variétiés, and elicited great applause by her acting in "La Belle Hélène." She achieved a success even more signal in "La Grande Duchesse de Gérolstein" during the Universal Exposition of 1867, and appeared in the same part in London in July, 1868. In the following year she returned to the Bouffes-Parisiens. On her marriage, in 1881, she retired from the stage.

SCHOFIELD, General John McAllister, was born in Chautauqua county, New York, Sept. 29, 1831. He graduated at the Military Academy at West Point in 1853, and served two years in Florida as Lieutenant of the 1st Artillery. From 1855 to 1860 he served at West Point as Assistant Professor of Natural and Experimental Philosophy, and from 1860 to 1861 was Professor of Physics at Washington University, St. Louis. Soon after the outbreak of the Civil War he was appointed Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and in Nov., 1862, Major-General of Volunteers, commanding in Missouri and Kansas, with head-quarters at St. Louis. In Feb., 1864, he took command of the Army of the Ohio, and joining the combined armies under General Sherman bore a prominent part in all their operations to the close of the war. He was appointed Brigadier-General in the regular army in 1864 and Major-General in 1869. In 1867 he was placed in command of the First Military District consisting of the State of Virginia. In 1868 he was appointed Secretary of War, but resigned in 1869, and was given the command of the Department of the Missouri, and in 1870 of the Division of the Pacific. From 1876 to 1881 he was Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point. In 1882 he was again given the command of the Division of the Pacific; from which, in 1883, he was transferred to the command of the Division of the Missouri, with head-quarters at Chicago; and, in 1886, to the Division of the Atlantic, with head-quarters at Governor's Island, New York City. Since the death of General Sheridan, in August, 1888, he has been in the command of the Army with head-quarters at Washington.

SCHREINER, Olive (Mrs. Crinwright), a South-African authoress, is the second daughter of a Lutheran clergyman in Cape Town. At the age of twenty she came to England with the manuscript of her best-known work, "The Story of an African Farm." She was anxious to devote herself to physiological study, but the publication of her book, after it had been submitted to Mr. George Meredith, who saw in it great promise, led her to devote herself to literature. "The Story of an African Farm" achieved immense popularity, and in 1893 had run through many editions. A later work by Olive Schreiner is entitled "Dreams," 5th edit. 1893, a collection of occasional parables. In May, 1893, she again visited England, and in October she published a little African story, "Dream Life and Real Life," in the Pseudonym Library. She is at present (1895) at work on a larger book, which will probably be called "From Man to Man." In Feb., 1894, Miss Schreiner married a young colonist, Mr. Crinwright.

SCHUMANN, Madame Clara (née Wieck), was born Sept. 13, 1819, at Leipzig, and very early displayed remarkable musical gifts. She was taught entirely by her father, Friedrich Wieck, and began to play in public at ten years of age. At twelve she appeared at one of the famous "Gewandhaus" Concerts at Leipzig, and from that time travelled over Europe, creating a great sensation in Vienna, Berlin, and Paris. In 1837 she became engaged to the great composer Robert Schumann, and was married to him in 1840. Under his influence her pianoforte playing became even more effective, and passing on from Beethoven, to whose works she at first almost entirely confined herself, she studied Chopin and composers of the more recent schools. On the death of her husband, in 1856, she removed with her children to Berlin, and has since resided at Wiesbaden and Frankfort-on-Main. Madame Schumann, besides teaching at the Conservatoire of Frankfort, has frequently played in most of the chief cities of Europe, the works of her husband being generally the favourites in her repertoire. On the 50th anniversary of her first appearance at the Leipzig Gewandhaus she played there again, and had a magnificent reception. In 1886 she visited London and played to crowded audiences in St. James's Hall.

SCHUNCK, Edward, Ph.D., F.R.S., was born in Manchester, in 1820. On the completion of his school education, he was sent to Germany to study chemistry, as it was intended that he should take the direction of his father's large print and calico works in Manchester. At Berlin, under Rose and Magnus, he made first-rate progress, and under Liebig, at Giessen, he took the degree of Ph.D. On returning to England, Dr. Schunck engaged for some years in practical work, but finding this repugnant to his tastes and inclination, he gave it up, and devoted himself to pure science. It is in consequence, however, of his early connection with print and dye-work, that his attention was directed more especially to the chemistry of colouring matters, a knowledge of which is most essential to the proper understanding of dyeing processes. The research which Dr. Schunck conducted in Germany was "On the Action of Nitric Acid on Aloes." The chief result of this investigation was the discovery of a new and remarkable nitro acid, with curious optical properties, called "chrysammic acid." The acid crystallises in golden yellow laminæ, sparingly soluble in water, and it reacts like a strong bibasic acid. The product of the action of ammonia on the acid belongs to the class of which oxamic acid is the type, but it was discovered and described before the latter. By the action of reducing agents on "chrysammic acid," a remarkable substance resembling indigo-blue, is produced, "hydrochrysammide," which crystallises in blue needles with a coppery lustre. This body has formed the subject for many subsequent investigations. The next subject which occupied the attention of Dr. Schunck was the class of substances contained in various species of lichens. Several memoirs resulted from this investigation, notably one read to the Chemical Society, in 1842, "On some of the Substances contained in the Lichens employed for the Preparation of Archil and Cudbear." Among all the colouring matters there are none the study of whose properties and reactions is calculated to throw more light on the whole class than those which are prepared by an artificial process from certain kinds of lichens. Dr. Schunck, in common with many other philosophers, was surprised that lichens, a class of plants, themselves colourless, should yield colouring matters by the combined action of ammonia and oxygen. Another paper on this subject appeared in 1846, being a special research "On the Substances contained in the Roccella Tinctoria," which derives its interest from the fact of its being that species of lichen from which the finest kind of archil dye is prepared. From 1846 to 1855, Dr. Schunck was at work on the subject of the colouring matters of madder, then one of the most important dye stuffs used in calico printing, but which has since been replaced by artificial alizarin. Dr. Schunck investigated the properties of "rubian" at great length, and read several memoirs on the subject to the Royal Society. In 1854, Dr. Schunck produced, among other papers, one "On the Action of the Ferment of Madder on Sugar," being one of a series of papers on various ferments. Dr. Schunck discovered a very interesting fact, unique in the history of fermentation, viz., the production of succinic acid. That important subject, the formation of indigo-blue, next occupied Dr. Schunck; and in 1855 he read to the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester a long investigation, "On the Formation of Indigo-blue." An investigation by Dr. Schunck, "On the Occurrence of Indigo-blue in Urine," appeared in the Philosophical Magazine, in 1857, and in the following year one, "On a Yellow Colouring Matter, obtained from the leaves of the Polygonum Fagopyrum, or Common Buckwheat," was read to the Manchester Society. On the discovery of the artificial formation of alizarin, in 1867, a discovery by which the names of Græbe, Liebermann, and Perkin have been immortalised, Dr. Schunck undertook an investigation of the products formed at the same time, and discovered, partly in conjunction with Dr. Rœmer, three new bodies isomeric with alizarin, viz.:—Anthraflavic acid, iso-anthraflavic acid, anthrarufin, which, singular to say, have no dyeing properties whatever. From 1868 to 1873 he was engaged on investigations of anthraflavic acid, a yellow colouring matter accompanying artificial alizarin. In 1874, a paper "On Methyl-Alizarin and Ethyl-Alizarin" appeared. During the last few years he has been engaged in the study of chlorophyll, the green colouring matter of plants, and has arrived at interesting results as regards the chemical nature of that substance, one of the most important of all known compounds, its presence being essential in connection with the growth of most plants. An investigation undertaken by him in conjunction with Mr. George Brebner has led to the conclusion—important from a physiological point of view—that the green cells of leaves and other vegetable organs contain some form of active oxygen. One of his most pleasing and interesting researches was commenced in 1879, and the first communication on the subject was read to the Chemical Society of London, in September of that year, entitled "On the Purple of the Ancients."

This colour, which in ancient times was extracted from various kinds of sea shell-fish and applied to the dyeing of linen and woollen fabrics, has at all times excited the interest of the curious, and has been made the subject of numerous learned treatises. Of the investigations undertaken by Dr. Schunck, one may be mentioned of technical rather than of purely scientific interest—"On some Constituents of Cotton Fibre"—in which it is shown that cotton fibre contains, in addition to cellulose, a number of other substances, some of which may possibly play a part in the process of dyeing cotton fabrics. Dr. Schunck has been a Fellow of the Royal Society since 1850; and has taken much interest in the affairs of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, in which he has held the post of Secretary, Vice-President, and President; and was President of the Chemical Section of the British Association at its meeting in Manchester in 1887.

SCHURZ, Carl, was born at Liblar, near Cologne, Germany, March 2, 1829. He was educated at the Gymnasium of that city, and at the University of Bonn. In 1848 he became associated with Gottfried Kinkel, in editing a revolutionary journal, and subsequently he participated in the insurrectionary movement in South Germany. At the surrender of the fortress of Rastadt, he escaped into Switzerland, whence, in May, 1850, he returned secretly to Germany and rescued Kinkel, who had been sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment in the fortress of Spandau. The two escaped to Leith, Scotland. Schurz then went to Paris as a newspaper correspondent, but a year later returned to London as a teacher. In 1852 he went to the United States, remained in Philadelphia for two years, and then settled in Wisconsin, and became prominent as a political orator in the German, as well as the English language. The following year he was nominated by the Republicans for Lieutenant-Governor of the State, but was defeated. In 1861 he was appointed Minister to Spain, where he remained till December, 1861. Returning to the United States, he resigned his office, and entered the army, and in the May following was appointed Brigadier-General of Volunteers. He took part in the second battle of Bull Run, was promoted to the rank of Major-General, and commanded a division in the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. In the autumn of 1863 he went to Tennessee, and took part in several battles, but resigned after the close of the war in 1865. In the summer of 1865 he was sent by President Johnson on a confidential mission into the Southern States, and his elaborate report on their condition was published by Congress. In 1866 he removed to Detroit, Michigan, where he founded and edited for some time the Detroit Post. In 1868 he removed to St. Louis, and in 1869 was elected U.S. senator from Missouri. He opposed President Grant's San Domingo policy, and in several speeches advocated the return to specie payments. In the Presidential canvass of 1872 he united with that portion of the Republican party known as "Liberals," who nominated Mr. Greely for President, in opposition to General Grant; but on the defeat of Mr. Greely he, with most of the "Liberals," returned to the regular Republican party; and in 1876 took an active part in the canvass for Mr. Hayes, by whom he was, in 1877, appointed Secretary of the Interior. During his occupancy of that position he seconded Mr. Hayes' efforts at a reform of the civil service by instituting competitive examinations for appointments to clerkships in his department. At the expiration of his term, 1881, he removed to New York, and was the editor of the Evening Post until August, 1883. Since then he has been engaged in literary pursuits. In 1884 he took a leading part in the "Independent" movement in the Presidential campaign, opposing the election of James G. Blaine and advocating that of Grover Cleveland. He published a "Life of Henry Clay," in 2 vols., in 1887, and a biographical sketch of Abraham Lincoln in 1891. In 1888 he visited Germany, and was received with distinction by Prince Bismarck, the present Emperor (then Crown Prince), and many of the prominent public men of the Empire. In the same year he wrote a public letter in favour of the re-election of President Cleveland. In 1893 he was elected President of the National Civil Service Reform League, succeeding George William Curtis, deceased.

SCHUSTER, Professor Arthur, Ph.D., F.R.S., was born in Frankfort-on-Main, on Sept. 12, 1851, and educated in the Gymnasium of that city, until he went to Geneva in his eighteenth year, where he attended the lectures given at the academy. His parents having settled in Manchester in 1869, he joined them there in the following year and entered business in his father's firm. In Oct., 1871, however, all intentions of a commercial career were relinquished, and he pursued his studies first at the Owens College, and then at the University of Heidelberg, where Kirchhoff held the Chair of Physics. He took his degree of Ph.D. while at Heidelberg. During the session 1873-74, he held the post of Honorary Demonstrator in the Physical Laboratory of the Owens College. After having spent a few months in Helmholtz's Laboratory in Berlin, he was appointed, early in the year 1875, by the Council of the Royal Society, chief of the Eclipse expedition which was then about to leave England for Siam. In 1881 a professorship of Applied Mathematics was founded at the Owens College, and he was appointed to the chair, which he held till 1888, when he succeeded Balfour Stewart as Professor of Physics. He took part, on four different occasions, in observations of total solar eclipses:—the Siamese eclipse, which has already been mentioned; the eclipse in Colorado, which took place in 1878; the 1882 eclipse in Egypt, in which he photographed for the first time, on plates prepared by Captain Abney, the spectrum of the solar corona; and finally the eclipse of 1886, in the West Indies. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1879. In 1892 he was President of Section A of the British Association, which met at Edinburgh during that year. He was appointed by the Council of the Royal Society to give the Bakerian Lecture in 1884 and 1890, on the discharge of electricity through gases. He is the author of several papers published in the Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, and the Reports of the British Association; amongst others a paper, published by the Royal Society in 1884, in which the experimental proof was first given that the apparent repulsion observed in Crookes' radiometer is due to the residual gas left in the vacuum. The Philosophical Transactions of the year 1889 contain a full discussion of the diurnal variation of terrestrial magnetism, in which it is proved that the cause of the variation is to be found in the earth's atmosphere. A number of his papers "On the present state of Spectrum Analysis," are published in the Reports of the British Association. During the last few years Professor Schuster's time has principally been given up to the investigation of the discharge of electricity through gases. At the annual meeting of the Royal Society in 1893, he received one of the Royal Medals for his spectroscopic researches, and for his investigations concerning the electric discharge in gases and in terrestrial magnetism.

SCLATER, Philip Lutley, M.A., Ph.D., F.R.S., F.L.S., F.G.S., F.R.G.S., second son of the late W. L. Sclater, Esq., of Hoddington House, Hants, and younger brother of the Right Hon. George, Lord Basing, born in 1829, was educated at Winchester School, and at the age of 16 was elected Scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1849, taking a first class in mathematics. He was subsequently Fellow of the same College. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1855, and went the Western circuit for several years; became secretary to the Zoological Society of London in 1859, was elected F.R.S. in 1861, and was made Doctor Philosophiæ by the University of Bonn (honoris causâ) in 1860. He is editor of the Ibis, a journal of ornithology, and is author of a "Monograph of the Tanagrine Genus Calliste," "Monograph of the Jacamars and Puff-birds," "Zoological Sketches," "Catalogue of American Birds," "Guide to the Gardens of the Zoological Society of London," of three volumes of the "Catalogue of Birds in the British Museum," and of upwards of 800 papers and memoirs on ornithology and other branches of natural history in the "Transactions" and "Proceedings" of the Zoological Society, the "Journal of the Linnæan Society," the "Annals of Natural History," and in the Ibis, the Natural History Review, and the Journal of Science. In 1875 Mr. Sclater was appointed Private Secretary to his brother, then the Right Hon. G. Sclater-Booth, President of the Local Government Board (now Lord Basing), but resigned that office in 1877. In the same year he became one of the General Secretaries to the British Association for the Advancement of Science, and continued to act in that capacity until 1882. He is also a Member of the Council of the Royal Geographical Society. Mr. Sclater married in 1862, Jane Anne Eliza, youngest daughter of the late Sir David Hunter-Blair, Bart., of Blairquhan, Ayrshire, and has issue.

SCLATER-BOOTH, Right Hon. George. See BASING, LORD.

SCOTT, Clement William, son of the Rev. William Scott, Vicar of St. Olave, Old Jewry, London, was born Oct. 6, 1841, at Christ Church parsonage, Hoxton, London, and educated at Marlborough College, Wiltshire, under the late Dr. G. E. Cotton, Bishop of Calcutta, and Dr. Bradley, the present Dean of Westminster. He was appointed to a clerkship in the War Office in 1860, and retired on a pension in May, 1879. He then joined the editorial staff of the Daily Telegraph, to which paper he had contributed dramatic criticisms and special articles since 1873. Previous to that time, Mr. Scott was successively dramatic critic to the Sunday Times, the Weekly Dispatch, and the Observer. He is the author of "Lays of a Londoner," 1882, "Poems for Recitation," 1884, and "Lays and Lyrics," all books of lyrical and dramatic poems, principally contributed to Punch after Mr. Burnand became editor. He has also written "Round about the Islands," "Poppy Land Papers," 1886; and "Blossom Land," 2nd edit., 1891, being collections of holiday articles contributed to the Daily Telegraph and other papers, and has been for many years the dramatic critic on the staff of the Illustrated London News. In 1891 he edited the life and reminiscences of E. L. Blanchard, and in 1892 was part author of "The Fate of Fenella." Recently he has been round the world, and the result in print has been "Cheery Ceylon," 1893; and "Pictures of the World," edit. 2, 1894.

SCOTT, Dukinfield Henry, F.R.S., F.L.S., F.G.S., youngest son of Sir George Gilbert Scott, R.A., architect, and great grandson of the Rev. Thomas Scott, author of a "Commentary on the Bible," was born in 1854, and educated privately, and at Christ Church, Oxford. After taking his degree in 1876, he studied Botany under Professor Sachs at Würzburg, where he obtained the degree of Ph.D. in 1881. He was Assistant Professor of Botany at University College, London, from 1882–85, and Assistant Professor, with sole charge of botanical teaching, at the Royal College of Science, South Kensington, from 1885-92. He resigned the latter post in order to carry on botanical investigations at Kew, where he is now Honorary Keeper of the Jodrell Laboratory at the Royal Gardens. He is joint translator, with Professor F. O. Bower, F.R.S., of De Bary's "Comparative Anatomy of the Phanerogams and Ferns" (1884), joint editor with Professor Howes of Huxley and Martin's "Elementary Biology" (1888); author of an "Introduction to Structural Botany" (Flowering Plants) (1894), and of one of the editions of the "Annals of Botany." Numerous papers, principally referring to anatomical botany, have been published by him in the scientific journals, and a contribution from his pen, and that of Dr. W. C. Williamson, F.R.S., on the "Structure of Fossil Plants of the Coal-Period," was printed by the Royal Society in 1894.

SCOTT, Robert Henry, M.A., F.R.S., F.G.S., born in Dublin, Jan. 28, 1833, was educated at Rugby, and Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated as First Senior Moderator in Experimental Physics in 1855. He was appointed Lecturer in Mineralogy to the Royal Dublin Society in 1862, and Director of the Meteorological Office in 1867, a title changed to "Secretary of the Meteorological Council" in 1877. Mr. Scott is author of a "Manual of Volumetric Analysis," 1862; "Weather Charts and Storm Warnings," 1876; "Elementary Meteorology," 1883; and of various papers on geology and meteorology in the Transactions of scientific societies. Mr. Scott is responsible for the daily "Weather Forecasts," which are one of the features of the modern newspapers.

SCUDDER, Horace Elisha, American writer, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, Oct. 16, 1838. He graduated at Williams College in 1858, and soon after went to New York, where he taught for three years. In 1862 his first book "Seven Little People and their Friends," appeared, and for a time his principal attention was given to writing for the young. Returning to Boston he edited the Riverside Magazine from 1867 to 1870, and then became associated with the publishing house which now bears the name of Houghton, Mifflin & Co., first as partner and afterwards as editorial adviser and manager. In 1890, upon the resignation of Mr. Aldrich, he added to his duties the editorship of the Atlantic Monthly. In addition to editorial work and voluminous periodical contributions, Mr. Scudder has published "Dream Children," 1863; "Life and Letters of David Coit Scuddder" (his brother), 1864; "Stories from my Attic," 1869; "The Bodley Books," 8 vols., 1875-87; "The Dwellers in Five Sisters Court," 1876; "Stories and Romances," 1880; "The Children's Book," and "Boston Town," 1881; "Noah Webster," 1882; "History of the United States," 1884; "George Washington," 1886; "The Book of Folk Stories," and "Men and Letters," 1887. He was also joint author, with Mrs. Taylor, of the "Life and Letters of Bayard Taylor," 1884; was one of the writers of Bryant and Gay's "History of the United States," and of Justice Winsor's "Memorial History of Boston," 1880-81; and edited the series of "American Commonwealth," and also "American Poems," 1879; and "American Prose," 1880.

SEDDON, John Pollard, son of Thomas Seddon, cabinet manufacturer, was born

Sept. 19, 1827, at London House, Aldersgate Street, E.C., and educated at Bedford Grammar School. He was articled 1848-51 to Professor Donaldson, architect, and from 1852 to 1862 was in partnership with John Prichard, diocesan architect, at Llandaff. In 1862 he settled in London, where he has since practised. His principal works are the restoration of Llandaff Cathedral in connection with Mr. Prichard, and numerous churches, parsonages, and schools in Llandaff Diocese; Lambeth Palace Chapel; St. Nicholas and St. James', Great Yarmouth; St. Barnabas, near Swindon; St. James', Redruth; St. Peter's Orphanage and Sanitarium, Thanet; University College and Llanbadern Church, Aberystwith; Hoarwithy Church, Herefordshire; mansions at Abermaide, Merionethshire; Rosdohan, County Kerry; Oxted, Surrey; Roughwood, Bucks., &c.; North and South Wales Bank, Birkenhead. He has published "Progress in Art and Architecture," 1852; in 1859 "Memoir and Letters of the late Thomas Seddon, Artist," and in 1868 "Rambles in the Rhine Provinces."

SEELEY, Professor Harry Govier, F.R.S., F.R.G.S., F.L.S., F.Z.S., &c., born in London, Feb. 18, 1839, is the second son of Richard Hovill Seeley, and is of Huguenot descent on his mother's side through the Goviers of the Vale of Taunton. He was educated privately; attended lectures at the Royal School of Mines by Sir A. Ramsay, Edward Forbes, and Sir R. Owen; and afterwards at Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. In 1859 the late Rev. Adam Sedgwick, F.R.S., invited him to arrange the fossils in the Woodwardian Museum, and this work continued till 1871, with teaching of Field Geology and Palæontology and occasional lectures for the Professor. In 1876 he was appointed Professor of Geography and Lecturer on Geology in King's College and Queen's College, London; of Queen's College he became the Dean in 1881. He originated in 1885, and has since conducted, the London Geological Field class. He became a member of the British Association for the Advancement of Science in 1861, and subsequently Fellow of the Geological, Linnean, Zoological and Royal Geographical Societies. He was elected Fellow of the Royal Society in 1879. His original writings, about 120 in number, relate to Palæontology and other departments of geology, and to Comparative Anatomy. He has published a "Catalogue of Fossil Reptiles in the Woodwardian Museum," 1869; the "Ornithosauria," 1870; "Physical Geology and Palæontology," 1885, issued as Vol. I. of Phillips' Geology; "The Freshwater Fishes of Europe," 1886; and "Factors in Life," 1887. He has studied the Fossil Reptilia in the public museums of France, Belgium, Holland, North and South Germany, Austria, Russia, and Cape Colony, from which country he has collected several new types of reptiles. His scientific memoirs are contained in the publications of the Geological, Linnean, and Royal Societies, the Geological Magazine, and Annals of Natural History. Among the results of his researches was the discovery (1865) that the Fossil Reptiles named Pterodactyles, are more nearly related to birds than are living reptiles; this was made out by evidence from the breathing organs and brain. He regarded (1865) the succession of geological deposits of different mineral character as evidence of changed geographical outlines of ancient lands; and explained the changes in fossil life of successive deposits as results of migration of faunas consequent on geographical changes. He enunciated the mechanical law in 1866, that growth is in proportion to work done; and regarded it as explaining the different proportions of organs and of animals. In 1869 he founded the genus Ornithopsis on a vertebra in the British Museum which had previously been regarded as part of the skull of Iguanodon, indicated it as a new ordinal group of reptiles, which have since been found in the Isle of Wight and the United States. He discovered that Ichthyosaurus was viviparous, 1880, and that some Plesiosaurs were vivaparous, 1887. In a Croonian lecture of the Royal Society, 1887, the Fossil Reptilia of South Africa were found to be a link between the existing Amphibia and Mammalia. Professor H. G. Seeley received from the Geological Society the Murchison Fund, 1876, and the Lyell Medal, 1885. He was made a Foreign Correspondent of the Academy of Sciences of Philadelphia in 1878; Corresponding Member Kk. Geologische Reichsanstalt, Vienna, in 1879; and Member of the Imperial Society of Naturalists of Moscow in 1889. One of his latest publications is the "Handbook of the London Geological Field Class," 1891.

SELBORNE (Earl of), The Right Hon. Roundell Palmer, D.C.L., P.C., second son of the late Rev. William Palmer, rector of Mixbury, Oxfordshire, by Dorothea, youngest daughter of the late Rev. William Roundell, of Gledstone, Yorkshire, was born at Mixbury, Nov. 27, 1812. He was educated at Rugby and Winchester Schools, and was elected in 1830 to an open Scholarship at Trinity College, Oxford, where he graduated, as a first-class in classics, in Easter term, 1834, having gained the Chancellor's prize for Latin verse in 1831, the Newdigate prize for English verse in 1832, and the Ireland scholarship in the same year. The subject of the Latin verse composition was "Numantia," and of the English "Staffa." He was elected to a Fellowship at Magdalen College, and obtained the Chancellor's prize for the Latin essay in 1835, and the Eldon Law Scholarship. In 1837 he graduated M.A., and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn on June 9, the same year. He was created a Queen's Counsel in April, 1849, and was immediately elected a Bencher of his Inn. Sir Roundell Palmer was first returned to Parliament as member for Plymouth, at the general election of July, 1847. He represented Plymouth till July, 1852, when he was not re-elected; but regained his seat in June, 1853, and held it till March, 1857, when he did not offer himself as a candidate. In July, 1861, though he had not a seat in Parliament at the time, he was appointed Solicitor-General in Lord Palmerston's Administration. Sir Roundell then received the honour of knighthood, and he was soon after elected M.P. for Richmond. In Oct., 1863, he became Attorney-General, and retired from office with Lord John Russell's second administration in June, 1866. On the return of the Liberal party to power, under the leadership of Mr. Gladstone, in Dec., 1868, he was offered the Chancellorship, but not being able to support the policy of the Government in relation to the Irish Church, declined taking office. Sir Roundell Palmer's views on the Irish Church Question were embodied at the time in a speech addressed by him to his constituents at Richmond. He was prepared to acquiesce in the Disestablishment of the Irish Church, but differed with the Government on the question of disendowment. He continued, however, to be an independent supporter of Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet on most of the public questions of the day, and consented to represent Her Majesty's Government as counsel before the Arbitration Court at Geneva in 1871. He was appointed Lord Chancellor of England, in succession to Lord Hatherley, in Oct., 1872, on which occasion he was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Selborne, of Selborne, in the county of Hants. He was the author of the Judicature Act of 1873; and soon afterwards went out of office, on the defeat of the Liberal party in Feb., 1874. On the appointment of the Commission for reforming Oxford University Lord Selborne was made its chairman. He was re-appointed Lord Chancellor of England on the return of the Liberals to office under Mr. Gladstone in May, 1880. In 1886 he refused to join the new Gladstone Cabinet owing to his disapproval of the Premier's Home Rule policy. Since that year he has ranked among the Liberal Unionists. In Dec., 1882, he was created Viscount Wolmer, of Blackmoor, Hampshire, and Earl of Selborne, in the same county. He edited the "Book of Praise, from the best English Hymn-Writers," published in 1862, and in 1863 was made hon. D.C.L. by the University of Oxford. He was elected Lord Rector of the University of St. Andrews in Nov., 1877. In 1878 his lordship published "Notes on some Passages in the Liturgical History of the Reformed English Church;" and in 1886 he published "A Defence of the Church of England against Disestablishment;" and, in the following year, a volume entitled, "Ancient Facts and Fictions as to Churches and Tithes." At Selborne, he presided in the spring of 1893 over the Selborne Society's Centenary Celebration of White's death.

SELLA, Vittorio, was born at Biella, in N. Italy, in August, 1859, and is distinguished as a mountaineer, geographer, and photographer. Between 1881 and 1890, he received many Medals and Diplomas for photography in London, Turin, Vienna and Florence; and, in the last year, he received the Murchison award in recognition of his recent journey in the Caucasus, and his series of panoramic photographs of the chain. He has written many memoirs, the last being "Nel Câucaso Centrale: Excursioni colla camera oscura," and he is well known as having obtained the largest, and probably the best, views of the Alps; also as having made, in 1882, the first winter ascent of the Matterhorn, and, in 1884, of Monte Rosa.

SELOUS, Frederick Courtenay, explorer, naturalist, and sportsman, was born in London on Dec. 24, 1852. His father was of Huguenot extraction, and on his mother's side he is descended from the Bruces of Clackmannan, and through them can count Robert Bruce as an ancestor. Bruce, the Abyssinian traveller, was also of the same stock. He was educated at Bruce Castle and at Rugby, where he was famous for his high spirits, his love of violent mischief, and his personal courage. His schoolfellows showed their appreciation of his character by converting his name of Selous into "Zealous," which became his nickname. When sixteen or seventeen years of age he left Rugby and spent a couple of years in Switzerland and Germany, where he learnt French and German, the former, as he thinks, with inherited facility. Whilst in the latter country he attracted some notice in the local papers by jumping into the Rhine during winter after a wild duck which he had shot. He had on a great coat and top-boots which filled with water, and though a splendid swimmer he found great difficulty in getting to shore with the game. Whilst still quite a youth he had determined to cast his lot in South Africa. At nineteen he sailed from England, and in 1871 first set foot upon the shores of Algoa Bay. In 1881 he published his first work, "A Hunter's Wanderings in Africa." This won instant recognition, but its author received more credit from the critics and the general public for his wonderful prowess as a hunter than for what he had done as a naturalist and an explorer. From the Royal Geographical Society, however, he received successively honorary mention, the Cuthbert Peake grant, and finally, in 1883, the Founders' Gold Medal, the highest honour which it is in their power to bestow. Such honours are not gained by hunting, and the map of Africa, to which he has so largely contributed, will show how Mr. Selous won them. His services to natural history have also received recognition from the Zoological Society, who have made him one of their Fellows. In 1893 Mr. Selous published his second and now well-known work, "Travel and Adventure in South-East Africa." Amongst other matter of varied and often of thrilling interest, it contains an account of the historic pioneer expedition which its author so successfully led. During the Matabele campaign Mr. Selous fought with great gallantry on the side of the Colonists, and was wounded whilst bravely protecting some waggons which had been surprised by the enemy. On his return to England after the campaign, he characteristically defended his fellows-in-arms from charges of bloodthirstiness and cruelty brought against them by Mr. Labouchere. The controversy ran for some months in the columns of the Times during 1894. Mr. Selous' probable return to Africa in an administrative capacity was announced in February, 1895.

SELWYN, The Rev. Edward Carus, Head Master of Uppingham School, was born Nov. 25, 1853, at Lee, Kent. His father was the Rev. E. J. Selwyn, then Head Master of Blackheath Proprietary School, and latterly (till 1893) the Rector of Pluckley, Kent. The family includes many names of scholars and divines, notably the late Bishop Selwyn of New Zealand and Lichfield, and his brothers, Professor Selwyn of Cambridge, and Sir Charles Jasper Selwyn. Mr. Selwyn was educated at Blackheath Proprietary School and at Eton; whence, after obtaining the Newcastle scholarship, he proceeded, in 1872, to King's College, Cambridge, of which college he was elected a scholar. As an undergraduate, he obtained the Carus Greek Testament Prize in 1872; was Bell's Scholar in 1873; and Browne's Medallist 1874 and 1875. In 1876 he graduated B.A. as 7th Classic; was very shortly afterwards elected to a Fellowship; and from 1876 to 1878 was Assistant Classical Lecturer at King's College. He was ordained in 1879, and held, for some months, a curacy at St. Paul's, Jarrow-on-Tyne, of which the Rev. Canon Edward Liddell was rector. He returned to Cambridge in 1880, as Divinity Lecturer of Emmanuel College, and Dean and Divinity Lecturer of King's College. On the retirement of the late Canon Butler in 1882, Mr. Selwyn was offered and accepted the Principalship of Liverpool College. In 1887 he succeeded Mr. Thring as Head Master of Uppingham School, the position he now holds. He married a daughter of Thomas Arnold, Esq., Professor in the Royal Irish University, second son of Dr. Arnold of Rugby.

SELWYN, The Right Rev. John Richardson, late Bishop of Melanesia, son of the late Dr. George Augustus Selwyn, Bishop of Lichfield, born in 1845, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge (B.A. 1866, M.A. 1870). He was curate of St. Alrewas, Staffordshire, 1869-70; of St. George, Wolverhampton, 1870-71; and Vicar of the last-named parish, 1871-72. He entered on the Melanesian mission in 1872, and in Feb. 1877, become successor to Bishop Patteson, the first Bishop of Melanesia, who was consecrated in 1861, and murdered in 1871. He retired from the see of Melanesia in 1891, and returned home. In 1891 he was appointed an Hon. Chaplain to the Queen, and in 1893 was elected Master of Selwyn College, Cambridge.

SEMBRICH, Marcella, a distinguished vocalist, was born at Lemberg, Austria, Feb. 15, 1858, and for some years studied the piano and violin under the best masters, with the idea of being a professional. While receiving piano lessons from Liszt in Vienna, it was discovered that she had a splendid voice, and she was at once sent to Milan to study singing. She made her début as an opera singer in Athens in "I Puritani," 1877, and then returned to Vienna for further study; she subsequently appeared in Dresden, and remained at the Royal Opera House till 1880. She soon became a great favourite in the characters of "Zerlina," "Susanna," "Constance," "Martha," "Lucia," &c. In 1880 she made her first appearance in London. Mdlle. Sembrich has sung in all the principal cities of Europe, and has been everywhere received with the greatest enthusiasm. In 1883-4 she was a member of Mr. Abbey's Italian Opera Company at New York, where she created a great sensation by the compass of her voice and the brilliance of her execution.

SENDALL, Sir Walter Joseph, K.C.M.G., is the son of the late Rev. S. Sendall, Vicar of Rillington, Yorkshire, and was educated at Bury St. Edmunds and Christ's College, Cambridge (B.A., 1858, 1st Class Classics; Junior Dpt., Mathematics). He was a Member of the Colonial Civil Service, Ceylon, 1860-73 (Inspector of Schools, 1860-70; Director of Public Instruction, 1870-73); Assistant Inspector Local Government Board, 1873-76; General Inspector, 1876-78; Assistant Secretary, 1878-85. He was Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Windward Islands, 1885-89; was appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Barbados in Nov., 1889; and High Commissioner of Cyprus in 1892. He was created C.M.G., 1887; and K.C.M.G., 1889.

SENIOR, William, journalist and author ("Redspinner"), is the angling editor of the Field. In 1873 he published "Notable Shipwrecks," which has passed through several editions. This was followed in 1875 by "Waterside Sketches;" in 1877 by "By Stream and Sea;" in 1878 by "Anderton's Angling," a novelette; in 1880 by "Travel and Trout in the Antipodes;" in 1883 by "Angling in Great Britain," being one of the handbooks issued in connection with the Great International Fisheries Exhibition; in 1888 by "Near and Far," a book of sport in Australasia and at home; and in 1891 by "The Thames from Oxford to the Tower," illustrated by F. S. Walker. Mr. Senior is a regular contributor to periodical literature. In 1875 he accepted a Government appointment as editor of the Queensland "Hansard," and proceeded to that colony to start an official daily report of the Parliamentary debates. This publication, the first of the kind ever issued in the Colonies, having been most successfully established, he returned to England, after five years' residence in Queensland, and rejoined the special correspondent staff of the Daily News.

SERVER PACHA, a Turkish statesman, commenced his official career in the Imperial Divan, and after filling the post of chief of the correspondence department in the Ministry of War, was appointed First Secretary of the Ottoman Embassy in Vienna; then in the same capacity in Paris; and when the Sultan sent Mehemet Kubrisli Pacha to St. Petersburg as Ambassador upon the coronation of the Emperor Alexander, Server Effendi was chosen as principal secretary. After the return of the Ambassador to Constantinople, Server Effendi remained in Russia as Chargé d'Affaires, and by his ability and tact succeeded in establishing the most friendly relations between the Cabinet of St. Petersburg and the Sublime Port. On his return to Constantinople he was appointed Secretary-General of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. In 1859 he was Imperial Ottoman Delegate on the Commission for settling the frontier of Montenegro. After this he was successively appointed Under-Secretary of State of the Ministry of Commerce; then President of the Municipality; Imperial Commissioner in Egypt in reference to the Suez Canal; and Civil Commissioner in Crete during the insurrection of 1867. The improvements carried out by him during his tenure of office as Mayor of Constantinople, 1868-70, caused him to be styled the "Haussmann of Stamboul." On Aug. 31, 1870, he was appointed Musteschar of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, and during the three months' illness of A'ali Pacha was Minister ad interim. On the death of A'ali Pacha, Sept. 6, 1871, Server Effendi was created a Muchir by the Sultan, and definitely appointed Minister for Foreign Affairs. Server Pacha possessed in an eminent degree all the qualifications necessary for this high post—experience in its special duties, a very conciliatory manner, a European education, and great popularity with the diplomatic body. Server Pacha subsequently became, in succession, Minister of Public Works, Commissary-General for carrying out the reforms in Bosnia, Governor-General of Herzegovina, and President of the First Ottoman Senate. He was recalled to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in the place of Aarifi Pacha, July 31, 1877. He resigned in Feb., 1878, in consequence of the publication of statements which had been made by him to the correspondent of the Daily News, and which had been declared by Mr. Layard, our Ambassador at the Porte, to be injurious to Great Britain. On Aug. 4 in the same year Server Pacha succeeded Mahmoud Pacha as Minister of Justice.

SERVICE, The Hon. James, Ex-Premier, of Victoria (1883-86), was born at Kilwinning, Ayrshire, in 1823; and emigrated to Victoria when thirty years of age. He entered the Victorian Parliament in 1857, and became Minister for Lands in 1859. He was the leader of the Free-Trade Party, and has been, from the first, a staunch advocate of Colonial Federation. In 1886 he retired from political life, but was again elected to the Assembly in 1888. He was a Member of the Federation Convention in 1891.

SEWELL, Elizabeth Missing, sister of the Rev. William Sewell, was born in the Isle of Wight in 1815. She became known as a writer of High Church fiction by her "Amy Herbert," 1844; and "Margaret Percival," 1846. This was followed by "Gertrude," "Sketches," and "Laneton Parsonage," 1847; "Child's History of Rome," 1849; "The Earl's Daughter," 1850; "Readings for Lent, from Bishop Taylor," 1851; "Experience of Life," "First History of Greece," and "Journal of a Summer Tour on the Continent," 1852; "Readings for a Month, Preparatory to Confimation," 1853; "Katherine Ashton, a Tale," 1854; "Ivors," 1856; "Thoughts for the Holy Week for Young Persons," 1857; "Ursula, a Tale of Country Life," "Cleve Hall," "Self-Examination before Confirmation," and "History of the Early Church," 1859; "Contes Faciles from Modern French Authors," 1861; "Ancient History," 1862; "A Glimpse of the World," 1863; "Dictation Exercises," "Impressions of Rome, Florence, and Turin," and "After Life," 1868; "Thoughts for the Age," 1870; "Grammar made Easy," 1872; and "Catechism of Grecian History," 1874; "Some Questions of the Day," 1875; "Popular History of France, from the Earliest Period to the Death of Louis XIV.," 1876; "Private Devotions for Young Persons," 1881; "A Glimpse of the World," 1883; "Letters on Daily Life," 1885; "Home and After Life," edit. 2, 1891; and various other works.

SHARP, William, M.D., F.R.S., of Horton House, Rugby, Warwickshire, was born Jan. 21, 1805, at Armley, in the parish of Leeds, where, and at Little Horton and Bradford, his family had resided for several centuries. Dr. Sharp was educated at Wakefield Grammar School, 1813-16, living with his uncle, the Rev. Samuel Sharp, at the Vicarage; then at Westminster School, 1817-20, under Dr. Page and Dr. Goodenough. In 1821 his uncle, William Sharp, the leading surgeon in Bradford, took him as a pupil, and subsequently, in 1825, he was taken as pupil by the second William Hey of Leeds, his uncle's cousin, and remained with him until Oct. 1, when his hospital career commenced in London at Guy's and St. Thomas's Hospitals, where Sir Astley Cooper was chief. In 1826 he obtained from the Society of Apothecaries his licence to practise, at that time the only legal qualification. Remaining at the hospitals another year, he obtained the diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons; this was in 1827. He then went to Paris, attended the University lectures at the Sorbonne, when Guy Lussac, on Physics, had a class of 1,500, and Thenard, on Chemistry, had nearly as many; he also attended the lectures at the School of Medicine, where Orfila had 1,200 students. The great hospitals were daily visited, where Baron Dupuytren was at the Hôtel-Dieu, and Baron Larrey, who had been Surgeon-in-Chief to Napoleon's army, was at the military hospital. In 1828 he returned to Bradford as his uncle's assistant; in 1829 he was elected surgeon to the Infirmary; in 1833, on his uncle's death, he succeeded him and had a large practice. On the deaths of Mr. Blakey and Mr. Lister he became, in 1837, senior Surgeon to the Infirmary. In 1843 he resigned his practice at Bradford; and, after living four years at Hull, his wife's native place, where he gave two winter courses of lectures on Chemistry at the Hull and East Riding School of Medicine, and spending some time in travel, he went to Rugby in 1847, for the education of his sons in the school under Dr. Tait (afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury), and has resided there ever since. He has ventured outside his profession only twice—once in Bradford, by a course of lectures on Science (which was followed by the formation of a Philosophical Society in 1839, of which he was elected first President, and the main design of which was to form a Local Museum, limited to objects of interest belonging to the town and neighbourhood), and in 1839, at the meeting in Birmingham of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, where he read a paper recommending such local museums. This was so favourably received, that few, if any, large towns in England are now without their museums; and for this the Fellowship of the Royal Society was conferred upon him in 1840. The second time was in Rugby, by suggesting to Dr. Tait the introduction of the teaching of physical science into the school. The suggestion was acted upon, and Dr. Sharp was the first "Reader in Natural Philosophy," in 1849 and 1850; all the other public schools in the kingdom have since followed this example. This being set on foot he resigned his post, that he might henceforward give his whole time and thought to the improvement of the medical treatment of the sick. This has been uninterruptedly continued for forty years, has involved an investigation of the various systems of medicine, including Homœopathy, and has resulted in the discovery, as he thinks, of laws of nature—law-facts he calls them—which may form for medicine a scientific basis, a foundation it has never yet had, and lead to a very great improvement in the art of healing. The details of these inquiries have been given in a series of "Essays on Medicine," published at irregular intervals since 1851, and now numbering sixty, and a "Postscript."

SHARPE, Richard Bowdler, was born on Nov. 22, 1847, at 1, Skinner Street, Snow Hill, London, where his father was publisher and editor of Sharpe's London Magazine, a famous literary journal of the time. He was a King's Scholar at Peterborough and Loughborough Grammar Schools, of both of which successively his cousin, the Rev. James Wallace, was head-master. At the age of eighteen he was appointed the first Librarian of the Zoological Society of London, a post which he held from Nov., 1866, to Feb., 1872. In September of the latter year he received the appointment of Senior Assistant in the Zoological Department of the British Museum, in charge of the collection of birds, which post he still holds. In 1875 he received the Honorary Fellowship of the Zoological Society, "for distinguished services to science." He is also an Honorary Member of the New Zealand Institute, a Foreign Member of the Academy of Sciences of Lisbon, of the Zoological Society of Amsterdam, of the Imperial Society of Naturalists of Moscow, and many other foreign societies. He is also LL.D. of the University of Aberdeen, and holds the Gold Medal for Science from H.I.M. the Emperor of Austria, bestowed upon him after the second Ornithological Congress at Budapest in 1891, when he was President of the Section of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy, and delivered an address on the "Classification of Birds." Dr. Bowdler Sharpe's principal works are:—"A Monograph of the Alædinidæ, or Family of Kingfishers," "A Monograph of the Hirundinidæ, or Family of Swallows," a second edition of Layard's "Birds of South Africa," and many popular books on Ornithology. His greatest work, however, is the "Catalogue of Birds" in the British Museum, a monographic record of all the birds of the world. Of the twenty-three volumes of this work as yet published he has written no less than eleven himself. Dr. Sharpe also completed several of the folio works of the late John Gould, after the death of the latter, such as "The Birds of Asia," "The Birds of New Guinea," and others. The donations of the great private collections of birds, notably those of Mr. Allan Hume, C.B., Mr. F. Du Cane Godman, Mr. Osbert Salvin, Major Wardlaw Ramsay, and Mr. Henry Seebohm, during Dr. Sharpe's curatorship of the ornithological collections of the British Museum have increased the series of specimens to an enormous extent, so that at present the series amounts to about 300,000 specimens—more than four times the number possessed by any other museum in the world.

SHAW, Captain Sir Eyre Massey, K.C.B., late Chief of the Metrop. Fire Brigade, is the son of the late Bernard Robert Shaw, Esq., of Monkstown, co. Cork, and was born in 1830, and educated at Dr. Coghlan's School, Queenstown, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he took his B.A. and M.A. degrees. He entered the army, but retired in 1860, and became Superintendent of the Borough Forces of Belfast, including Police and Fire Brigade. On the death of Mr. Braidwood, in 1861, he was appointed Chief Officer of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, which, from being originally supported by the Insurance Companies, was taken in charge by the Metropolitan Board of Works, and under Captain Shaw's able guidance became the most efficient brigade in the world. In 1891 he retired on a pension from the captaincy of the Fire Brigade. He received the honour of knighthood at the same time as a mark of her Majesty's appreciation of his long and valuable services. He has published various books connected with Fires and Fire Protection, besides Annual Reports on the work of the Brigade. He has been twice severely wounded at fires.

SHAW, William Napier, M.A., F.R.S., was born on March 4, 1854, in Birmingham, and is the third son of Charles Thomas Shaw, a manufacturer. He was educated at King Edward's School in that town (1862-72), and in 1870 was first in the first class of the Oxford Senior Local Examination. In 1872 he was elected to an open scholarship in mathematics at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and in 1874 to a Thorp Scholarship. In 1876 he was bracketed 16th wrangler, and placed in Class I. of the Natural Science Tripos (with distinction in Physics). He studied at the University of Berlin during the year 1879. He was elected Fellow of Emmanuel College in 1877, and two years later was appointed Lecturer in Natural Science at that college. From 1880 to 1887 he was Demonstrator in Experimental Physics at the Cavendish Laboratory, and in the latter year was appointed Lecturer in Physics in the University of Cambridge. Since 1890 Mr. Shaw has been Senior Tutor at Emmanuel College. During the years 1887-88 he was member of the Council of the Physical Society of London, and from 1887 to 1890 was Secretary of Section A of the British Association. He was elected F.R.S. in 1891. He is author of a "Text Book of Practical Physics" (jointly with R. T. Glazebrook, M.A., F.R.S.), and of a report to the Meteorological Office upon Hygronometric Methods (1888). The article on "Ventilation and Warming," in Messrs. Stevenson and Murphy's "Treatise on Hygiene" (1892) is from his pen. In 1890 he reported to the British Association on "The Present State of our Knowlege in Electrolysis and Electro-Chemistry," and has written the articles "Electrolysis" and "Pyrometer" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica" (9th ed.), besides various papers on physical subjects in the scientific journals.

SHAW-LEFEVRE, The Right Hon. George John, M.P., son of Sir John George Shaw-Lefevre, K.C.B., by Rachel Emily, daughter of Mr. Ichabod Wright, of Mapperley Hall, Nottingham, was born in 1832, and received his education at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1856. In 1863 he was first elected M.P. for Reading, in the Liberal interest, and h continued to be one of the representatives of that borough down to 1885, when he was defeated by Mr. Murdoch. He was a Lord of the Admiralty from May to July, 1866; Secretary to the Board of Trade from Dec. 1868 to Jan. 1871; Secretary to the Admiralty from the last date to Feb. 1874, and again from April, 1880, to the following November, when he was appointed First Commissioner of Works and Buildings in succession to Mr. Adam, who had resigned that office on being appointed Governor of Madras. As First Commissioner Mr. Shaw-Lefevre introduced great improvements into the streets of London, notably at Westminster and at Hyde Park Corner. On the death of Mr. Fawcett he was appointed Postmaster-General (Nov. 1884), and his tenure of this office was marked by the introduction of sixpenny telegrams. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre was elected a Bencher of the Inner Temple in Nov. 1882. He is the author of an important article on "Public Works in London," in the Nineteenth Century (Nov. 1882). After his defeat at Reading in Nov. 1885, he was without a seat until, at a bye election, April, 1886, he successfully stood for Bradford, vacant by the death of the Right Hon. W. E. Forster. At the General Elections of 1886 and 1892 he was again elected as a Gladstonian Liberal. In August, 1892, he was appointed First Commissioner of Works, in which office he was succeeded by Mr. Herbert Gladstone in March, 1894. He succeeded Mr. H. H. Fowler at the latter date as President of the Local Government Board. He has published several useful works, some of a statistical kind, on the English and Irish Land Question. During 1893 appeared his important work on Agrarian Tenure. One of his sisters, Miss Madeleine Shaw-Lefevre, was formerly Principal of Somerville Hall, Oxford.

SHAW, Richard Norman, R.A., widely popular as a domestic architect, studied art at the Academy Schools and won the Gold Medal for architecture at the biennial competition. With the Gold Medal goes the travelling studentship, which bore fruit in a book of architectural drawings. This aroused considerable interest among architectural students of that time. The work of Mr. Norman Shaw includes, besides the new Police Offices on the Thames Embankment in London, and a number of churches and private houses at Bedford Park and elsewhere: "Flete," Ivybridge, Devon; "Dawpool," near Birkenhead; "Craigside," for Lord Armstrong; "Lowther Lodge," Kensington, and the houses several artists at Hampstead. Mr. Norman Shaw was elected a Royal Academician in 1877.

SHEA, Sir Ambrose, K.C.M.G., was born in Newfoundland in 1820, received his education there, and for over thirty years occupied a foremost place in the public affairs of that Colony. For six years he was Speaker of the Assembly, and subsequently for five years was an unofficial Member of the Council of Government. He was one of the two delegates from the Colony at the celebrated Quebec Conference at which the Constitution of the Canadian Dominion was framed. In 1888 Sir Ambrose was delegated to London to urge the right of the Colony to enforce restrictions on French fishing operations on the Newfoundland coasts, but owing to some Imperial Cabinet difficulties at the moment nothing could be done. . The Legislature of the Island, however, renewed their efforts, and he was again sent, in conjunction with the Premier, Sir Robert Thorburn, to press the question, and this time with success. Soon afterwards Lord Knutsford offered Sir Ambrose the Governorship of the Bahamas, on the acceptance of which he retired from commercial pursuits. This post he assumed at the end of 1887, and it would be difficult to parallel the record he has made in that Colony during the short period of two and a half years. On his arrival the place was in a state of impending bankruptcy. The precarious resources, fruit, and sponge-fishing, were declining, and those having means were unwilling to invest a shilling in any untried adventure. The population were thinning by emigration to the Southern States, and no one thought of the future without misgiving. The prospect for a new Governor was cheerless in the extreme; but Sir Ambrose is of the "nil desperandum" class, and he betook himself at once to an examination of the situation. He had not been a month in his position before he felt that he had lighted on a solution of the difficulties. His attention was attracted to a bold-looking plant of the aloe order, and he found on inspecting it that it held a fibre similar to manila; and his experience enabled him to see that this had a stable commercial value, though he was not encouraged when he explained what he thought of the capabilities of this plant. He was told that attempts had before been made in the direction he proposed, but without any success, and that the plant was now universally regarded as a noxious weed, which defied all efforts to eradicate it. This was the prevailing feeling; but Sir Ambrose had formed a strong opinion, and gradually he gained assent to his views. The growth seems to set all ordinary adverse or disappointing influences at defiance; and the product is all but, if not quite, equal to the celebrated manila hemp. The exports of the Colony have hitherto averaged about £125,000 a year, but no one on the spot, who knows on what grounds the calculations rest, has a doubt that within a very few years the value of the exports will be quadrupled, and an output of a million is within range of the most reasonable contemplation. Land has gone up to four times its former value, and already the revenue responds to the industrial activity that prevails. These results are by common consent due solely to the ability and unflagging energy of the Governor. Sir Ambrose is the first Colonist who ever held the post of Imperial Governor, and his splendid success will be hailed with great satisfaction by Colonists everywhere, for there are few to whom his name as a prominent Colonist has not been long familiar. Sir Ambrose returned to England in Jan., 1895, on the expiration of his term of office.

SHERMAN, The Hon. John, brother of the late Gen. W. T. Sherman, was born at Lancaster, Ohio, May 10, 1823. He received an academic education, studied law, and began its practice in 1844. He was a delegate to the National Whig Conventions of 1848 and 1852; and a Member of Congress from 1855 to 1861. He entered the Republican party soon after its formation, and has since acted with it. In 1861 he was elected to the U.S. Senate and re-elected in 1866 and 1872. On the accession to the presidency of Mr. Hayes, in 1877, Senator Sherman was appointed Secretary of the Treasury, a position retained by him until the close of President Hayes's administration in 1881, when he re-entered the Senate, of which he is still a member (and chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relation), his present term expiring in 1899. It was due to his management while at the head of the Treasury that the resumption of specie payments (in 1879) was effected without disturbance to the financial or commercial interests of the country. Senator Sherman was a prominent candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination in 1880 and 1888, and was the presiding officer of the Senate, 1885-87. He published in 1879 a volume of his "Selected Speeches and Reports on Finance and Taxation," 1859-78.

SHIPLEY, Rev. Orby, M.A., youngest son of Rev. Charles Shipley, of Twyford House, in the county of Hants, and Charlotte, daughter of R. Orby Sloper, Esq., of East Woodhay, Berks, was born July 1, 1832. He was educated at a private school, and took his degree at Jesus College, Cambridge. For 23 years he worked as a clergyman of the Church of England, latterly at All Saints', Margaret Street, Cavendish Square (under Mr. Upton Richards), and at St. Alban's, Holborn, London (under Mr. Mackonochie); and on Oct. 26, 1878, being unable to find any sufficient or recognisable authority for faith or discipline in the Anglican Communion, was received into the Roman Catholic Church by Cardinal Manning. Prior to 1878 he was the author of several works, sermons, liturgical books, and pamphlets in support of Anglicanism; issued from the press many ascetic and devotional books translated from Catholic sources; and edited three volumes of religious poetry from many sources, "Lyra Eucharistica," "Messianica," and "Mystica" (1863-65), as well as several volumes of Essays by various authors, "The Church and the World" (3 series, 1866-7-8); "Tracts for the Day," "Ecclesiastical Reform," and "Studies in Modern Problems." Subsequently to his submission to the Roman Church he has published "Truthfulness and Ritualism" (2 parts), in answer to Dr. Littledale's strictures on the Church; has edited "Annus Sanctus: Hymns of the Church for the Ecclesiastical Year," and old English ascetical books; and for some years has been engaged in compiling an Anthology of Sacred Verse in honour of or in relation to the Blessed Virgin Mary, "Carmina Mariana," of which the second edition has lately been published, and a second series, "Poema Domina," is in preparation. The range of poetical sources for these Anthologies includes English, Irish and American poems from Chaucer to Tennyson, augmented by verse translated from the Greek, Armenian, and Latin, the German, the Italian, the Spanish, and French, together with early English poets, and a few original contributions. He has been and is an occasional contributor to periodical literature, amongst other papers and reviews to the Nineteenth Century, Contemporary, and Fortnightly; the Month, Catholic World (U.S.A.), and Dublin Review; the Saturday Review and Guardian; and the Weekly Register and Tablet. His last Anglican book, which passed through the press at the time of his reception, is called "Principles of the Faith in Relation to Sin." It contains a brief apology for his conversion, and a complete list of his literary work in the Church of England.

SHORE, The Rev. Thomas Teignmouth, M.A., born in Dublin in 1841, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in 1861, having obtained distinguished honours in English composition and in divinity, and he afterwards proceeded to the degree of M.A. (comitatis causâ) at Oxford. He was ordained in 1865 by the Bishop of London (Dr. Tait), and having held successively the curacies of Chelsea and of Kensington, and been for two years incumbent of St. Mildred's, Lee, he was appointed in 1873 to the incumbency of Berkeley Chapel, Mayfair. He has published two volumes, entitled "Some Difficulties of Belief," and "The Life of the World to Come," and "St. George for England," a volume of sermons to children. He was one of the contributors selected by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol for his lordship's New Testament Commentary. He has also edited a series of volumes, entitled "Helps to Belief," and has written the one on "Prayer" in that series. Mr. Teignmouth Shore was appointed one of Her Majesty's chaplains in July, 1878, in succession to Dr. Maclagan, now Archbishop of York. He prepared the daughters of the Prince and Princess of Wales for their Confirmation, and officiated at the marriage of the Princess Louise of Wales with the Duke of Fife in 1889; and was made Chaplain of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem in 1889 and Canon of Worcester in Dec., 1890. Canon Teignmouth Shore has the Jubilee Medal, which was conferred on him by the Queen, and the Order of Princess Alice of Hesse, which was given him by the Grand Duke of Hesse.

SHORTHOUSE, Joseph Henry, was born in 1834, in Great Charles Street, Birmingham, and educated at private schools. He is the author of the celebrated romance "John Inglesant," which was first privately printed and afterwards published in 1881, and excited a great amount of interest; "The Platonism of Wordsworth," 1881; the Preface to George Herbert's "Temple," 1882; a preface to "The Spiritual Guide" of Miguel Molinos, 1883; "The Little Schoolmaster Mark, a Spiritual Romance," 1885; "Sir Percival," 1886; "A Teacher of the Violin, and other Tales," "The Countess Eve," 1888, and "Blanche, Lady Falaise," 1891.

SHREWSBURY, Bishop of. See STAMER, THE RIGHT REV. SIR LOVELACE T.

SIDGWICK, Professor Henry, Litt.D., born at Skipton, Yorkshire, May 31, 1838, was educated at Rugby and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was Fellow of Trinity College from 1859 to 1869; and Lecturer of Trinity College from 1859 to 1875, when he was appointed Prælector of Moral and Political Philosophy. He was elected an honorary Fellow of Trinity College, April 16, 1881; and was appointed Knightbridge Professor of Moral Philosophy in 1883. Prof. Sidgwick is the author of "The Methods of Ethics," "Outlines of the History of Ethics," the "Principles of Political Economy," the "Elements of Politics," and of several articles on philosophical and literary subjects. He took a prominent part in the promotion of the Higher Education of Women at Cambridge, especially in the foundation and management of Newnham College. Prof. Sidgwick is LL.D. of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and St. Andrews, and was made a D.C.L. of Oxford in 1890.

SIEVEKING, Sir Edward Henry, M.D., LL.D., Physician in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, was born in London, within the sound of Bow bells, in 1816. He is descended from an old North German family, still flourishing in Hamburg; and was partly educated in England and partly in Germany. He was in Bonn at the University, and subsequently at University College, London, and the University of Edinburgh, where he took his degree of M.D. in 1841. He travelled abroad, studying in Paris, Vienna, and Berlin. He practised among the English colony at Hamburg for four years; and while there contributed to Oppenheim's Medical Journal; wrote a treatise on Ventilation, a previously unconsidered subject in Germany, and built a Children's Hospital. In 1847 he returned to London; became a Member of the Royal College of Physicians, and four years later Fellow. After serving as Physician to the Northern Dispensary he was appointed, in 1851, to St. Mary's Hospital, with which he remained actively associated for 35 years, and is now Consulting Physician. He has been President of the Harveian, and President of the Royal Medical Chirurgical Society. His first publication in England was in 1849, and was a pamphlet on Nursing; in which the provision of nurses for the poor, as part of a perfect system of state sanitation, was strongly urged. A paper on the same subject by Dr. Sieveking was subsequently read before the Epidemiological Society; and this led to the formation of a committee, which for a series of years sought to carry out the views advocated by him. Lord Shaftesbury on two different occasions introduced the committee to the Poor Law Board, which gave its official support; but nothing came of it. The present appreciation of nursing, as an aid to curative medicine, may, in a great measure, be attributed to the work done by the committee. Dr. Sieveking was a co-translator of Rokitausky's great work on Pathology for the Sydenham Society; and subsequently translated from the German for the same Society Romberg's work on Nervous Diseases. In 1854, with his colleague at St. Mary's, Dr. Handfield Jones, he published a work on Pathological Anatomy, of which a second edition has since been edited by Dr. Payne. From 1855 to 1860 Dr. Sieveking was editor of the British and Foreign Medical and Chirurgical Review, founded, and long carried on, by his friend Sir John Forbes. In 1863, at the recommendation of Sir J. Clark, the position of Physician in Ordinary to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales was offered to, and accepted by, Dr. Sieveking. In 1873 he was made Physician Extraordinary, and in 1888 Physician in Ordinary, to Her Majesty the Queen. He was knighted in 1886; made Honorary LL.D., Edinburgh, at the Tercentenary of Edinburgh University; wrote a work on Epilepsy, two editions; a work on Medical Advice in Life Assurance; and has delivered frequent addresses of various kinds. He was Croonian Lecturer at the Royal College of Physicians; and delivered the Harveian oration there in 1877; in consequence of which the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons materially aided Sir E. H. Sieveking in producing an autotype publication of the MS. of W. Harvey's original Physiological Lectures, delivered in 1616, et seq. Sir E. H. Sieveking has filled many offices at the Royal College of Physicians. He was the Founder of the Edinburgh University Club, and is a member of the Athenæum. He married, in 1849, Miss Jane Ray, youngest daughter of J. Ray, Esq., of Finchley, J.P., and has five sons and three daughters.

SIMMONDS-LUND, Peter, F.L.S., F.R.C.I., author and journalist, was born July 24, 1814, at Aarhus, Denmark, and is the eldest son of the late Lieutenant George Simmonds, R.N. Mr. Simmonds entered the navy as a midshipman at the age of twelve, on board the Cygnet, one of the ten-gun brigs then carrying the mails from Falmouth, commanded by his uncle, Captain Gording. In Oct., 1831, Mr. Simmonds was sent out by his uncle to Jamaica, as a sugar planter, and remained there three years, having thus the opportunity of witnessing the several stages of slavery, apprenticeship and freedom. Being invited to give a lecture before the Literary and Philosophical Society at Portsmouth, he incidentally compared the condition of the negro in the West Indies with that of the poor at home, in favour of the former. Subsequently he wrote a series of articles on Life and Slavery in the West Indies, compiled a "History of the Rise and Progress of the Newspaper Press of all Countries," and published an abstract of his researches in the Journal of the Statistical Society for 1841. In that year he became Secretary to Mr. Shaw, the originator of the Royal Agricultural Society and the Farmers' Insurance Office, editor of the Mark Lane Express, &c. Mr. Simmonds contributed largely on Agricultural subjects to the Farmers' Magazine, and leaders to the Mark Lane Express; and was engaged, as sub-editor, by Mr. C. M. Johnson, F.R.S., in bringing out the "Farmer's Encyclopædia," in 1842. After carrying on the Colonial Magazine for several years Mr. Simmonds, in 1853, brought out his first important work, "The Commercial Products of the Vegetable Kingdom," a volume of 668 pages, which has in subsequent years been issued in two large editions under the title of "Tropical Agriculture," and has become a standard book. In 1857 Messrs. Routledge brought out a condensed work of his on "Arctic Discoveries," which has gone through many editions; and in the following year a "Commercial Dictionary of Trade Products and Technical Terms" (Routledge & Co.), which is a useful work of reference, and containing more than 22,000 definitions of new words, has been a mine of wealth for various subsequent lexicographers. Mr. Simmonds having published more than fifty volumes during his long literary career, it would be impossible to enumerate them all. Among the most important may be mentioned: "The Curiosities of Food," 1859; "Waste Products and Undeveloped Substances," 1862, which has gone through several editions; new and enlarged editions of "Ure's Philosophy of Manufactures," "Ure's Cotton Manufactures," 1861; and "Waterston's Cyclopædia," 1863; "The Technologist," 6 vols., 1861-66; "The Journal of Applied Science," 12 vols., 1870-1881; "The Commercial Products of the Sea," 1879; "Animal Food Resources of Different Nations," 1885; "Science and Commerce," a series of essays, 1872; "Animal Products," 1877; "The Popular Beverages of Various Countries," 1888; "The British Roll of Honour," 1887; and many others. Besides this special literary work, Mr. Simmonds has been an active contributor to periodical literature as leader-writer for many years for the Shipping Gazette, the Mark Lane Express, and City Editor of the Globe; a contributor of articles to the Mining Journal, Cassell's Magazine, Chambers's Journal, the Art Journal, the London Review, the Quarterly Journal of Agriculture, the Nautical Magazine, the Papermakers' Journal, Leather, the Gardeners' Chronicle, and the Journal of the Society of Arts. To the latter journal he has been a constant contributor of lectures and articles for many years. So highly were these contributions appreciated that the Council of the Society, under one of their rules, made him a Life Member without payment, in consideration of being "eminent in the application of Abstract Science to the Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce." He was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour of France, and of the Crown of Italy in 1878. He is Honorary and Corresponding Member of the Geographical Societies of Marseilles and Paris, of the Industrial Society of Mülhouse, the Imperial Austrian Agricultural Society of Vienna, the Society for Promoting Industry of Holland, of the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec, and various other Foreign Societies. He is also Vice-President of the City of London College, and Honorary President for England of the Académie Nationale of Paris.

SIMMONS, Field-Marshal Sir John Lintorn, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., son of Captain Thomas Frederick Simmons, R.A., was born at Langford, Somerset, in 1821, and educated at Elizabeth College, Guernsey, and at the Military Academy, Woolwich. He entered the Royal Engineers in 1837, and after serving for several years in North America, was appointed Inspector of Railways, Dec. 1846, and in 1850 Secretary to the Railway Commissioners. Upon the dissolution of that Commission he was transferred to the Board of Trade as Secretary to the Railway Department. In 1853, being in Turkey, he was specially employed by the late Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe on several important missions, and became Her Majesty's Commissioner with the Turkish Army under the command of Omar Pacha, in which position he served on the Danube. In Dec. 1854, he went to the Crimea to concert with the allied Commanders-in-Chief. He took part in the Battle of Eupatoria, in the Siege of Sebastopol, and was present at the forced passage of the Ingur, where he commanded the division which crossed the river and turned the enemy's position, capturing his works and guns. He was the British Commissioner for the regulation of the Turco-Russian Boundary in Asia, in 1857; Consul-General at Warsaw from 1858 to 1860; Commanding Royal Engineers at Aldershot, 1860 to 1865; Director of the School of Military Engineering at Chatham, 1865 to 1867; appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, March 18, 1869, and Governor the succeeding year, which appointment he held till June, 1875. He then became Inspector-General of Fortifications, which post he held until 1880. He was attached to the special Embassy during the Congress in Berlin, and was appointed to assist Lord Ampthill at the Conference in Berlin on the Greek Frontier Question. He has received the Crimean Medal and Clasp, the Turkish Gold Medal for the Danubian Campaign, a Sword of Honour from the Turkish Government, the Grand Cordon of the Order of the Medjidieh, and the Fourth Class of the Legion of Honour. He was made C.B. in 1855; K.C.B. in 1869; G.C.B. in 1878; G.C.M.G. in 1887. He was Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Malta from June, 1884, to Sept., 1888, and has since been sent as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Pope Leo XIII.

SIMON, Sir John, K.C.B., D.C.L. Oxon.; LL.D. Cantab. and Edin.; M.D. Dublin; F.R.S.; was born in 1816, became an Honorary Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1844; was for many years Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and was the first appointed Officer of Health to the City of London. From 1855 to 1876 he was Medical Officer to the Board of Health, to the Privy Council, and to the Local Government Board. He is the author of several papers on Physiology, Pathology, and Surgery, and of reports and other official papers relating to the sanitary state of the people of England. The University of Munich, at its 400th anniversary in 1872, conferred upon him the honorary diploma of Doctor of Medicine "propter præclarissima de sanitate publicâ tuendâ atque augendâ merita." He was nominated a Companion of the Bath in May, 1876, and K.C.B. in 1887. He is one of the Crown Members of the General Medical Council.

SIMON, Jules, a French statesman, was born at Lorient (Morbihan), Dec. 31, 1814. The name given to him by his parents was Jules François Simon Suisse, but he adopted the name of Simon only, and has never been known by any other. He studied first at the little college in Lorient, and at another similar one at Vannes, after which he entered, as an assistant teacher, the Lycée at Rennes. He remained at the Normal School for some time, was received as Fellow of Philosophy in 1835, and taught that science successively at Caen and Versailles. At the latter place he achieved a brilliant success. Victor Cousin, whose earnest disciple he was, called him to Paris, and secured for him a charge at the Normal School in that city. For a time he was a supplementary lecturer on the History of Philosophy, but a year after his arrival in Paris he became the principal lecturer. In 1839 he succeeded M. Cousin, at the request of the latter, in the philosophy course, and for twelve years had a brilliant career as one of the most promising University men in France. In 1845 he was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour. The next year he presented himself to the electors of Lannion (Côtes-du-Nord) as the candidate of the Constitutional Left, but he was defeated. In Dec. 1847, he founded in Paris, in conjunction with his University colleague, M. Amédée Jacques, a political philosophical review called La Liberté de Penser. M. Simon edited the political department of this publication. After the revolution of Feb. 1848, he was elected to the Constituent Assembly from the department of the Côtes-du-Nord. He classed himself with the Moderate Left in the Assembly, and was appointed a member of the committee on the organisation of labour. In March, 1849, he was elected a member of the Council of State, and he resigned his seat as representative (April); but on the reconstitution, on the 29th of June, by the Legislative Assembly, of the first half of that Council, he was not retained on it, and consequently he found himself removed from public life. After the coup d'état, M. Simon's course of lectures on philosophy at the Sorbonne was suspended, and as he refused to take the oath of allegiance to the Empire, it was assumed that he had resigned his professorship. In 1863 he was sent to the Corps Législatif from the 8th circonscription of the Seine. He was returned by that circonscription and also by the 2nd circonscription of the Gironde in 1869, when he elected to represent the latter constituency. M. Simon soon became the chief of the Republican party. He ranked high as an orator, and in the discussions on treaties of commerce he proved himself to be an able political economist and an earnest advocate of Free Trade. On the formation of the Government of National Defence he took the post of Minister of Public Instruction, Public Worship, and Fine Arts. After the armistice he was sent to Bordeaux to see that the decrees relating to the elections were carried out in their integrity, and not with the modifications introduced by M. Gambetta. At the elections of Feb. 8, 1871, M. Simon's candidature failed in Paris, but he was re-elected a representative of the department of the Marne in the National Assembly. He classed himself among the members of the Left, and was chosen by M. Thiers to take, in the Cabinet of Conciliation formed Feb. 19, 1871, the portfolio of Public Instruction. He held it till May, 1873, when he resumed his seat among the members of the Left, who made him their President. On Dec. 16, 1875, he was elected a Senator for Life. In Dec. 1877, M. Dufaure resigned, and a new Ministry had to be formed, which, according to constitutional principles, must rest upon a Parliamentary majority. The President sent for M. Jules Simon, who became Premier, holding, with the Presidency of the Council, the portfolio of the Interior. The cabinet lasted till May 16, 1877, when Marshal MacMahon sent M. Simon a letter which was, in fact, nothing less than a dismissal from office. M. Simon went immediately to the Marshal and tendered his resignation, which was accepted. M. Simon was elected a member of the French Academy in Nov. 1875, in the place of the Comte de Rémusat, and was formally received into that learned body June 22, 1876. M. Jules Simon vigorously opposed the Bill introduced by M. Ferry in 1879 for the suppression of the non-authorized religious congregations. In April, 1880, the French Academy elected him a member of the new Supreme Educational Council, and on Nov. 11, 1882, he was elected permanent Secretary of the Academy of Moral and Political Science, in the place of M. Mignet. In 1890, at the Labour Conference held in Berlin, the German Emperor sent to M. Jules Simon, as a souvenir, the musical works of Frederick the Great. In Nov., 1891, he once more appeared on the political scene as an advocate of Free Trade, and, at the same time as M. Challemel-Lacour, delivered a great but useless anti-protectionist speech. Among M. Jules Simon's works are:—"Du Commentaire de Proclus sur le Timée de Platon," 1839, one of his two theses for the degree of doctor; "Étude sur la Théodicée de Platon et d'Aristote," 1840; "Histoire de l'École d'Alexandrie," 2 vols., 1844–45, 2nd edit. 1861; "Le Devoir," 1854; "La Religion Naturelle," 1856; "La Liberté de Conscience," and "La Liberté," 2 vols., 1859; "L'Ouvrière," 1863; "L'École," 1864; "Le Travail," 1866; "L'Ouvrier de huit ans," 1867; "La Politique Radicale," 1868; "La Peine de Mort," 1869; "Le Libre-Échange," 1870; "Souvenirs du 4 Septembre," 1874; "Le Gouvernement de M. Thiers, 8 février, 1871-24 mai, 1873," Paris, 1878; "Dieu, Patrie, Liberté," 1883, edit. 11, 1893; and "Une Académie sous le Directoire," 1885; and three volumes since the publication of the last edition of this work; viz., "Thiers, Guizot, Remorgat;" "Mignet, Michelet, Henri Martin;" and "Victor Cousin." In 1891 he published "La Femme de XX^e^ Siècle," edit. 21, 1892, and in 1892, with M. Gustave Simon, "Notices et Portraits." He has also brought out editions, with important introductions, of the philosophical works of Descartes, Bossuet, Malebranche, and Antoine Arnauld, and has contributed to the Revue des Deux Mondes and other periodicals.

SIMPSON, Maxwell, M.D., LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S., born in 1815, in the city of Armagh, Ireland, is the youngest and 9th child of the late Thomas Simpson, Esq., of Beechhill, co. Armagh, and was educated at Newry School, and Trinity College, Dublin, and is A.B. and M.B. of Dublin University. The degree of M.D. (honoris causâ) was conferred on him by the Dublin University in 1864; and that of LL.D. (honoris causâ) in 1878—and the degree of D.Sc. by the Queen's University in 1880. He was appointed Examiner in Materia Medica in the Queen's University in 1869, and Professor of Chemistry in Queen's College, Cork, in 1872. He is the author of papers on several chemical researches, which appeared in the Comptes Rendus, the Annalen der Chimie, and the Proceedings and Transactions of the Royal Society, and were afterwards copied into most of the scientific journals in Europe. The following is a list of some of the most important of the papers:—"On Two New Methods for the Determination of Nitrogen in Organic and Inorganic Compounds;" "Sur une Base nouvelle obtenue par l'action de l'Ammoniaque sur le Tribromure d'Allyle;" "On the Action of Acids on Glycol;" "On the Synthesis of Succinic and Pyrotartaric Acids;" "On the action of Chloride of Iodine on Iodide of Ethylene and Propylene Gas;" "On the Synthesis of Tribasic Acids." Dr. Maxwell Simpson became a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1862; is Honorary Fellow of the King and Queen's College of Physicians; a Fellow of the Chemical Society, and of the Institute of Chemistry. He was a member of the Senate of the Queen's University; and, on its extinction, became a Fellow of the Royal University of Ireland.

SIMPSON, William, was born at Glasgow, Oct. 28, 1823. He began life as an architect, and turned from that to art. He went through the war in the Crimea as an artist, and published sketches in two volumes, entitled "Campaign in the East," 1855-56. Mr. Simpson travelled in India from 1859 to 1862. The result was published in a work entitled "India, Ancient and Modern," 1867. Since 1866 he has travelled in Russia, Palestine, Abyssinia, China, Japan, America, India, Afghanistan, and Central Asia, with the Afghan Boundary Commission, and other places as special artist of the Illustrated London News. In addition to the works already mentioned, he has published, "Meeting the Sun; a Journey all round the World," 1873; "Shikare and Tamasha," 1876; "Photographs from Drawings of the Prince of Wales's Visit to India," "Picturesque People," 1876; and numerous archæological papers at various times. Mr. Simpson is a member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours; an Hon. Associate of the Royal Institute of British Architects; a Member of the Royal Asiatic Society; and a Fellow of the Royal Geographical and other societies.

SIMS, George Robert, was born in London, Sept. 2, 1847, and educated at Hanwell College, and afterwards at Bonn. He first joined the staff of Fun on the death of Tom Hood the younger in 1874; and the Weekly Dispatch the same year. Since 1877 he has been a contributor to the Referee under the pseudonym of "Dagonet." In that newspaper his "Dagonet Ballads" first appeared. To the Dispatch Mr. Sims contributed "Social Kaleidoscope," "Three Brass Balls," and "Theatre of Life." These have been translated into German, French, and Danish. He edited One and All in 1879. He produced his first play, "Crutch and Toothpick," at the Royalty Theatre in April, 1879; "Mother-in-Law," and "Member for Slocum," 1881. These were followed by "The Gay City," and "Half-Way House," "The Lights o' London" (Princess's, Sept. 10, 1881), which ran nearly 250 nights. It was followed by "The Romany Rye," and "The Merry Duchess," a comic opera. "In the Ranks" (of which Mr. Sims was part author) was produced at the Adelphi in 1883, and ran 457 consecutive nights. His other plays are, "The Golden Ring," 1883; and "Jack in the Box" and "The Harbour Lights," written in collaboration, in 1885, ran for 513 consecutive nights. Mr. Sims has since written in collaboration the following plays: "The Golden Ladder," produced at the Globe Theatre in 1887; "The Silver Falls" and "London Day by Day," at the Adelphi; "Master and Man," at the Princess's, and "Faust Up to Date," a burlesque, at the Gaiety. In 1893 he brought out, in conjunction with Mr. Cecil Raleigh, "Little Christopher Columbus," a burlesque opera, which has had a long run. The novels he has published include "Rogues and Vagabonds," "The Ring o' Bells," 'Memoirs of Mary Jane," "Mary Jane Married," "Tales of To-day," "Dramas of Life," and "The Case of George Candlemas;" and his revelations of the condition of the poor in "How the Poor Live," and "Horrible London," a series of letters to the Daily News, helped to focus public attention on the housing of the working classes, and to bring about the Royal Commission. Among Mr. Sims's recent works may be mentioned "Dramas of Life," 1890; "Dagonet Ditties," and "Tinkletop's Crime, and other Tales," 1891; "In the Harbour" (a poem), 1892; "My Two Wives, and other Stories," and "Memoirs of a Landlady," 1894.

SIMS, Richard, born at Oxford, 1816, was educated at New College School in that University, and, at the recommendation of the late Rev. D. Bliss, of Oxford, entered the public service in 1841 as an attendant in the Manuscript Department at the British Museum. In 1859 he became a Transcriber, and subsequently a Junior Assistant. On the accession of Mr. Bond to the Keepership of Manuscripts, in 1868, he was further promoted to the class of Senior Assistants in the same department. In 1849 he published an "Index to the Heralds' Visitations;" in 1854 "A Handbook to the Library of the British Museum;" in 1856 "A Manual for the Genealogist, Topographer, Antiquary, and Legal Professor;" in 1855, in conjunction with Mr. F. Netherclift, jun., the "Autograph Miscellany;" in 1860-61, "The Handbook to Autographs: being a Ready Guide to the Handwriting of Distinguished Men and Women of every Nation;" and in 1864-65, "The Autograph Souvenir." Mr. Sims has been for some time engaged in preparing for the press "A Classical Catalogue of Manuscripts relating to British Heraldry and Topography, deposited in the Public and many of the Private Libraries of the Kingdom," as well as a second edition of the afore-mentioned "Index to the Heralds' Visitations."

SKEAT, Professor The Rev. Walter William, M.A., born in London, Nov. 21, 1835, was educated at King's College School; at Sir R. Cholmeley's School, Highgate; and at Christ's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1858, being 14th Wrangler. He was elected Fellow of his college in July, 1860; became Curate of East Dereham, Norfolk in Dec. 1860; Curate of Godalming, Surrey, in Dec. 1862; and Mathematical Lecturer at Christ's College in Oct. 1864. He was elected to the recently founded Elrington and Bosworth Professorship of Anglo-Saxon at Cambridge, May 15, 1878; and re-elected to a Fellowship at Christ's College in Jan. 1883. Mr. Skeat, who has chiefly devoted his attention to Early English literature and English etymology, has published: "The Songs and Ballads of Uhland, translated from the German," 1864; "A Tale of Ludlow Castle: a Poem," 1866; and "A Mæso-Gothic Glossary," printed by the Philological Society, 1868. For the Early English Text Society he has edited "Lancelot of the Laik: a Scotch Metrical Romance," 1865; "Parallel Extracts from twenty-nine MSS. of Piers the Plowman," 1866; "The Romans of Partenay of Lusignen; otherwise known as the Tale of Melusine," 1866; "The Vision of William concerning Piers the Plowman," five parts, 1867-85; "Piers the Plowman's Crede," 1867; "The Romance of William of Palerne; or, William and the Werwolf," 1868; "The Lay of Havelok the Dane," 1868; "The Bruce; by Master John Barbour," 4 parts, 1870-89; "Joseph of Arimathea; or, the Romance of the Saint Graal, or Holy Grail; with other Lives of Joseph of Arimathea," 1871; "Chaucer's Treatise on the Astrolaba;" "The Wars of Alexander," 1886; "Ælfric's Lives of Saints," 3 parts, 1882-90; &c. In a new edition of Chatterton's Poems, he has finally settled the question of the authenticity of the so-called Rowley Poems, by showing the precise sources whence Chatterton obtained the old words which abound in them. Mr. Skeat was chosen by the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press to continue and complete the work of the well-known Anglo-Saxon scholar, the late J. M. Kemble, who died before his edition of the Anglo-Saxon Gospels was finished. In 1873, with the help of others, Mr. Skeat started the English Dialect Society, for the record and preservation of provincial English words, of which Society he was the Director for four years. In the course of 1873 and 1874 six works were published for this Society, five of which were edited by him. For the Oxford Press he has edited several of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, a portion of "Piers the Plowman," and three volumes of Specimens of English Literature, two of them in conjunction with Dr. Morris; also, for the same Press, the "Gospel of St. Mark in Gothic," an "Etymological English Dictionary" (his chief work), and an abridgment of the same, entitled a "Concise Etymological Dictionary;" besides two vols. on the Principles of English Etymology. He has since completed a two-volume edition of "Piers the Plowman," showing all three texts, with notes, &c.; and, in 1890, undertook a complete edition of Chaucer's Works in six volumes. A Scottish Text Society having been founded in 1883, Mr. Skeat edited the Society's first volume, viz., an edition of the King's Quair, by King James the First of Scotland; and, subsequently, a reprint of his edition of Barbour's Bruce. His various works have greatly contributed to the increased interest which is now taken in the intelligent study of our older literature.

SKELTON, John, LL.D., C.B., born in Edinburgh in 1831, is the son of the late James Skelton, Esq., W.S., of Sandford Newton, and was educated at St. Andrews and Edinburgh Universities. He received from the University of Edinburgh the degree of LL.D. in 1878; and was created C.B. in 1887. He was called to the Scotch Bar in 1854; and was appointed Secretary of the Board of Supervisions (Local Government Board for Scotland) in 1868, of which he became Chairman in January, 1892. Since 1854 he has been a frequent contributor to Blackwood, Fraser, and other magazines under the nom de plume of "Shirley," some of these papers being re-published separately in "Nugæ Criticæ," 1862; a "Campaigner at Home," 1865; "The Impeachment of Mary Stuart," 1876; "Essays in Romance," 1878; "The Crookit Meg," 1880. His latest historical works are "Maitland of Lethington and the Scotland of Mary Stuart," in two volumes, 1887, and "Mary Stuart," 1893. In connection with his official duties he has also published "Pauperism and the Boarding-out of Pauper Children," 1876; "Public Health and the Local Government Act," 1889; and the "Handbook of Public Health," 1890.

SMART, John, R.S.A., R.S.W., R.B.A., painter of Highland landscape subjects, — oil and water-colour — was born in Edinburgh, Oct. 16, 1838, and is the son of Robert Campbell Smart and Emily Margaret Morton. He was educated at the High School, Leith, and began art studies in the Schools of the Board of Trustees in Edinburgh in 1851, as a designer and engraver. He studied painting under Horatio MacCulloch in 1860; was elected Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1871, and Academician in 1877. He was one of the founders of the Royal Scottish Water-Colour Society. He received a second-class Diploma from the Melbourne Exhibition, 1880-81; a Gold Medal Diploma from the Edinburgh Exhibition, 1886, for oil-painting, "Where Silence Reigns." His other works in oil are "Gloom of Glen Ogle," "The Graves of Our Ain Folk," "The Crofters' Moss," "The Land of Macgregor," "A Glen without a Name," "The Cradle of Argyll." Among his water-colours should be mentioned "Among the Silent Hills," "The Green Island, Loch Shiel," "The Pass of Brander," and "The Golf Greens of Scotland."

SMILES, Samuel, LL.D., born at Haddington, Scotland, in 1812, was educated for the medical profession, and practised for some time as a surgeon at Haddington; but abandoning medicine, he succeeded the late Mr. Robert Nicoll as editor of the Leeds Times. He became, in 1845, secretary of the Leeds and Thirsk Railway, and after ten years (on the amalgamation of the railway with the North-Eastern) he transferred his services, at the end of 1854, to the South-Eastern Railway, from which he retired in 1866. The University of Edinburgh conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1878. He has written "Physical Education; or, Nurture and Management of Children," 1838; "History of Ireland," published whilst he was at Leeds; "Railway Property, its Conditions and Prospects," 1849; "Life of George Stephenson," 1857, of which the fifth edition appeared in 1858; "Self-Help; with illustrations of Character and Conduct," 1859; "Workmen's Earnings, Strikes, and Wages," and "Lives of Engineers, with an account of their works," 1861; "Industrial Biography," 1863; "Lives of Boulton and Watt," 1865; "The Huguenots: their Settlements, Churches, and Industries in England and Ireland," 1868, 3rd edit., 1869; "Character," a companion volume to "Self-Help," 1871; "The Huguenots in France after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes: with a Visit to the Country of the Vaudois," 1874; "Life of a Scotch Naturalist," 1876; "George Moore, Merchant and Philanthropist," 1878; "Life of Robert Dick (Baker of Thurso), Geologist and Botanist," 1878; "Duty, with illustrations of Courage, Patience, and Endurance," 1880; "Men of Invention and Industry," 1884; "Life and Labour; or Characteristics of Men of Industry, Culture, and Genius;" "Jasmin: Barber, Poet, Philanthropist," 1891. He also edited the Autobiography of Mr. James Nasmyth, 1883, and has been a constant contributor to the Quarterly Review and other periodicals.

SMITH, Benjamin Leigh, was born March 12, 1828, and educated at Jesus College, Cambridge, where he graduated as a Wrangler in 1852. He was called to the Bar by the Inner Temple in 1856. Mr. Smith has made five voyages to the Arctic regions. He visited them first in 1871, in the Samson, when he sailed to the north-east of Spitzbergen; reached latitude 81° 24", and added greatly to the knowledge of land in that direction; secondly, in 1872, in the Samson, to the north of Spitzbergen; thirdly, in 1873, with the Diana steamer and Samson, again to Spitzbergen, when he relieved the Swedish Expedition, for which he received the Order of the North Star from the King of Sweden. In these three voyages he took deep-sea temperatures, which added much to the knowledge of the Gulf Stream, and established the fact of warm under-currents flowing beneath surface-water of a much lower temperature. In 1880 he built the steamer Eira, and again went north. After attempting to reach the east coast of Greenland, and to pass to the north-east of Spitzbergen, he returned to the south of Spitzbergen; and steaming east, and then north, through much ice, reached Franz Josef Land, on Aug. 14; then, going to the west, he discovered many islands, and over 200 miles of new coast line. In 1881 he again started in the Eira for Franz Josef Land, which he reached on July 24, but unfortunately the Eira was crushed in the ice on Aug. 21, and sank before many stores were saved. The crew built a hut of turf and stones, where they wintered, living mostly on bears and walrus. On June 21, 1882, they left in four boats, and reached Nova Zembla on Aug. 2. The next day they fell in with the Willem Barents and the Hope, which had been sent to their relief, and they arrived at Aberdeen on board the Hope on Aug. 20. Mr. Smith received a Gold Medal of the Paris Geographical Society in 1880; and a Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society in 1881.

SMITH, Sir Cecil Clementi, G.C.M.G., was born in London, Dec. 23, 1840, and is the son of the Rev. John Smith, M.A., and of Cecilia, daughter of the celebrated composer, Muzio Clementi. He was educated at St. Paul's School, and Corpus Christi College, Cambridge; B.A. 1862, M.A. 1868. He entered the Colonial Civil Service on appointment, after competitive examination, as a Student Interpreter, Hong Kong, in 1862; filled the office of Police Magistrate, Registrar-General, Treasurer, and acting Colonial Secretary in that Colony. In 1878 he was appointed Colonial Secretary of the Straits Settlements. From 1884 to 1885 he acted as Governor, and was appointed Lieutenant-Governor and Colonial Secretary, Ceylon, 1885. He was promoted to be Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Straits Settlements in 1887. He was also Governor of Christmas Island, and Governor of the Cocos-Keeling Islands, and was appointed H.M. High Commissioner and Consul-General for Borneo, 1890. He was created C.M.G. 1880, K.C.M.G., 1886, and G.C.M.G. in 1892. He went in 1878 on a special mission to the Government of the Philippine Islands to settle certain British marine claims, and received the thanks of H.M. Government. He also received the thanks of H.M. Government for the settlement of the "Nisero" case, 1884. He retired on a pension in 1893.

SMITH, Frederick John, Clerk in Holy Orders, M.A., M.I.E.E., Mem. Phys. Soc. London, F.R.S., was born at Taunton, on April 2, 1848, and was the only son of the late Revd. Frederick J. Smith, Vicar of St. John's, Taunton, and Prebendary of Wells. He was educated by tutors and at Pembroke College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1872. He was ordained Deacon in 1877, and Priest in 1880. He became Curate of St. John's, Taunton, and Vicar of the same church, 1885. He is patron of two livings. He was appointed Millard Lecturer in Mechanics at Trinity College, Oxford, in 1886, and University Lecturer in Mechanics in 1888. He was Public Examiner in 1887-88 and in 1892-93. He has long been occupied in researches in Practical Mechanics and Physics, and is the inventor of dynamometric and integrating instruments, and of chronographic apparatus used in measuring the flight of projectiles, and in physiological research. He is the author of many papers on physical subjects.

SMITH, George Barnett, was born at Ovenden, near Halifax, Yorkshire, May 17, 1841, and educated at the British Lancastrian School, Halifax. In March, 1864, he came to London for the purpose of pursuing a journalistic and literary career. He was first engaged on the staff of the Globe newspaper, and afterwards for eight years on that of the Echo. He contributed to the Edinburgh Review articles on "The Works of Thackeray," "Recent Editions of Molière," "English Fugitive Poetry," and other subjects. Mr. Smith has contributed a great number of literary, critical, and biographical articles to the Cornhill Magazine, and has likewise contributed to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," the Fortnightly and British Quarterly Reviews, and Fraser's and Macmillan's Magazines. He is also a contributor to the Times and the Academy, and has written many biographical and other articles for the Dictionary of National Biography and the new edition of Chambers's Encyclopædia. His first published work was a volume of poems, 1869; followed by "Poets and Novelists," a series of literary studies, 1875; and "Shelley: a Critical Biography," 1877. In 1879 was published his "Life of Mr. Gladstone." Two years afterwards appeared the companion work, "The Life of Mr. Bright." Mr. Barnett Smith has edited, with introductions and notes, a work entitled "Illustrated British Ballads," in two volumes. He is also the author of "The Prime Ministers of Queen Victoria," and of "The Life of Queen Victoria;" likewise "Victor Hugo; His Life and Work;" this appeared in 1885; and his "William I. and the German Empire," in 1887. Mr. Barnett Smith is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical, Royal Historical, and other societies. In 1892 his most important work was published, in two large octavo volumes, "History of the English Parliament, together with an Account of the Parliaments of Scotland and Ireland." This standard work occupied five years in preparation. The writer's most recent volumes are:—"Eminent Christian Workers," a Biography of Ferdinand de Lesseps, and a volume of Nineteenth Century Studies, entitled "Women of Renown."

SMITH, George Vance, B.A., Philos. and Theol. Doct., was educated for the Nonconformist ministry at Manchester College, York, and was afterwards Professor of Theology in the same College, recently established at Oxford. Subsequently he was minister of St. Saviourgate Chapel, York, and later, for twelve years, terminating in 1888, Principal of the Presbyterian College, Carmarthen. He is the author of various works, including "The Prophecies relating to Nineveh and the Assyrians," from the Hebrew, with notes, &c., 1857; "The Prophets and their Interpreters," 1878; "Texts and Margins of the Revised New Testament affecting Theological Doctrines," 1881; "Eternal Punishment," in reply to Dr. Pusey, 6th edit. 1894; "The Bible, and Its Theology," enlarged, 1892; "The Spirit and the Word of Christ," 2nd edit. 1874; "Chapters on Job for Young Readers," 1887; is also joint author of "The Holy Scriptures of the Old Covenant, in a Revised Translation," 3 vols., 8vo., 1864, and is the writer of various articles in the Nineteenth Century and other periodicals. He was a member of the company for the revision of the New Testament from the formation of the company, in May 1870, till the conclusion of the work, and is now (1894) resident at Bath.

SMITH, Professor Goldwin, D.C.L., LL.D., was born at Reading, Berkshire, Aug. 13, 1823, and educated at Eton and Oxford. He gained, in 1842, the Hertford Scholarship, and in 1845 the scholarship founded by Dean Ireland. In the latter year he graduated B.A. as first-class in Classics, and subsequently he proceeded to the degree of M.A. He gained the Chancellor's prizes for Latin Verse, 1845; for the Latin Essay, 1846; and for the English Essay, 1847. In 1847 he was elected a Fellow of University College; and in the same year he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, but he has never practised law. He is also an honorary Fellow of Oriel College. In 1850 he was appointed by the Government Assistant-Secretary of the Royal Commission on the state of the University of Oxford. He was also Secretary to the second Oxford Commission, and was a member of the Popular Education Commission appointed in 1858. The same year he was appointed to the Regius Professorship of Modern History at Oxford, and he held that chair till 1866. Professor Goldwin Smith was a prominent champion of the North during the Civil War, when he wrote "Does the Bible sanction American Slavery?" 1863; "On the Morality of the Emancipation Proclamation," 1863; and other pamphlets on the same subject. In 1864 he visited the United States on a lecturing tour. He met with an enthusiastic reception, and the Brown University conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. On his return he published "England and America," 1865, and "The Civil War in America," 1866. In Nov., 1868, having resigned his chair at Oxford, he settled in the United States as Professor of English and Constitutional History in the Cornell University at Ithaca, New York. This post he occupied till 1871, when he removed to Canada, where he was for a time a member of the Senate of the University of Toronto. He was editor of the Canadian Monthly, 1872-74, and he subsequently founded The Week and The Bystander; the publication of the latter was discontinued in 1890. In addition to the works mentioned above, he is the author of "Canada and the Canadian Question," 1891; "History of the United States," 1894; and various lectures and letters in the Daily News. The degree of D.C.L. was conferred upon him by Oxford in 1882.

SMITH, Hon. Hoke, American statesman, was born at Newton, N. C., Sept. 2, 1855; studied law and was admitted to the Bar at the early age of seventeen. He practised his profession until he entered President Cleveland's Cabinet as Secretary of the Interior, in March, 1893, having held no previous office.

SMITH, The Hon. Sir Archibald Levin, a Judge of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, was born in 1836, and called to the Bar in 1860. He was Junior Counsel of the Treasury from 1863 to 1868, and from 1879 to 1883, when he was elevated to the Bench. In 1888 he was one of the three Judges appointed on the Parnell Commission.

SMITH, The Rev. Isaac Gregory, M.A., LL.D., was born Nov. 21, 1826, at Manchester, being the fourth son of the Rev. Jeremiah Smith, D.D., High Master of the Free Grammar School, and Rector of St. Anne's, Manchester. He was educated at Rugby, and Trinity College, Oxford; was elected Hertford University Scholar in 1846, Ireland University Scholar in 1847, Fellow of Brasenose College in 1848. He was appointed Rector of Tedstone Delamere, Herefordshire, in 1854; Prebendary of Hereford Cathedral in 1870; Vicar of Great Malvern in 1872; Bampton Lecturer at Oxford in 1872; Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of St.

David's, and Rural Dean of Powyke, 1882. In 1886 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Edinburgh University; and was made Honorary Canon of Worcester Cathedral. He is the author of "Faith and Philosophy," and "Epitome of the Life of Our Saviour," 1867; "The Silver Bells," 1869; "Fra Angelico and other Poems," 1871; "Prayers for Every Hour," 1879; "Thoughts on Education," "Diocesan History of Worcester," "Aristotelianism," and "History of Christian Monasticism."

SMITH, The Hon. John Smalman, M.A., was born at The Chauntry, Shropshire, on Aug. 23, 1847, and is the eldest son of the late S. Pountney Smith, J.P. He was educated at Shrewsbury School, and St. John's College, Cambridge, where he took his M.A. degree. He was called to the Bar, Nov., 1872; went the Oxford Circuit; was appointed Puisne Judge in the Gold Coast Colony, 1883; Sole Judge of the Supreme Court of the Colony of Lagos, 1886; Chief Justice of the Colony of Lagos, 1889. His Honour has published three editions of "How We Are Governed;" "County Courts;" "County Government;" and various works on legal subjects: e.g., "The Law of Support in relation to Land, Mines, and Buildings;" "The Law of Fixtures and Dilapidations," &c.

SMITH, The Very Rev. Robert Payne, D.D., Dean of Canterbury, born in Gloucestershire, in Nov., 1818, was educated at Pembroke College, Oxford, of which he was scholar, and where he graduated, with second-class honours, in 1841, and obtained the Boden (Sanscrit) and the Pusey and Ellerton (Hebrew) University Scholarships. In the discharge of his duty as Under-Librarian of the Bodleian, he published, in a quarto volume, an elaborate Latin Catalogue of the Syriac MSS. belonging to that Library; has edited and translated the Commentary of St. Cyril of Alexandria upon the Gospel of St. Luke—extant only in Syriac—from the MSS. brought to this country by Archdeacon Tattam; and has translated the curious ecclesiastical history of John of Ephesus, in the same collection of MSS. Dr. Smith is engaged in preparing, for the Delegates of the Oxford Press, a Syriac Lexicon, based on that of Castelli, but a much larger work. The first part was published in 1868, and the ninth in 1892. One more part will complete the work. In 1869 he published a course of Bampton Lectures upon "Prophecy as a Preparation for Christ." He has contributed a commentary on Jeremiah to the large work which appeared under the auspices of the late Speaker. He is also the writer of the commentary on Genesis in Bishop Ellicott's Commentary for English readers; of one on Isaiah in the commentary published by the S.P.C.K.; and of one on Samuel in the Pulpit Commentary. He was also a member of the Old Testament Revision Company. Dr. Smith was appointed, in Aug., 1865, to succeed Dr. Jacobson as Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Oxford, on the advancement of the latter to the bishopric of Chester; and in Jan., 1871, was raised to the Deanery of Canterbury, vacant by the death of Dr. H. Alford.

SMITH, Thomas Roger, F.R.I.B.A., Professor of Architecture at University College, London, was born in 1830, and is the son of the Rev. Thomas Smith, of Sheffield, a well-known scholar and eloquent preacher. His mother was of Huguenot family, and was a granddaughter of Roubiliac the sculptor. He was articled to the late Samuel Beazley as an architect; and, on his death, to Mr. P. C. Hardwick, having as fellow-pupils Mr. (now Sir Arthur) Blomfield, Mr. Eastlake, and the late Mr. F. P. Cockerell. He travelled as an architectural student for about a year, and spent some time under Sir James Pennethorne before starting in practice in 1855. Since that time he has practised his profession continuously, and has designed and erected many public and private buildings of importance in London and the provinces. A design by him for the European Hospital, Bombay, was selected by the Government for execution. This led to his visiting India in 1865, and subsequently preparing, in co-operation with the architect to the Bombay Government, the plans from which several public buildings in that Presidency were erected. Among these were the Elphinstone College, the enlargement of the Cathedral, and (with modifications made on the spot) the Post Office, Bombay, the Government House at Gunnish Khind, and the Engineering College, Poonah. Professor Roger Smith is an Examiner in Architecture for the Science and Art Department, an Examiner under the Metropolitan Building Act of Candidates for the Office of District Surveyor, and in 1879 he was appointed Professor of Architecture in University College, London, in succession to Professor T. Hayter Lewis (resigned). He if the author of two or three manuals on subjects connected with his profession, and of many papers or special lectures delivered before the various societies which deal with his subjects in London, and he has been engaged, both as an editor and a writer, on the professional press. Professor Roger Smith is a Fellow of the Institute of Architects, and has been a member of the Council. He is a Past President of the Architectural Association, and belongs to other societies. He holds one or two professional appointments, including that of Architect to the Carpenters' Company of the City of London, in which capacity he has been able to assist the Court of that Company in organising its classes, its technical library and free public lectures, its examination for skilled artisans in carpentry and joinery, and, more recently, its Exhibitions and School of Wood-Carving.

SMITH, Most Rev. William Saumarez, Lord Bishop of Sydney and Primate of Australia, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where his career was brilliant. He was a scholar of his college, was in the first class of the Classical Tripos, and in the first class of the Theological Tripos, and graduated in 1858. He won several University prizes, and in 1859 was elected Crosse Theological Scholar, and in 1860 Tyrwhitt's Hebrew Scholar. He twice won the Seatonian English Verse prize, and proceeded M.A. 1862; B.D. 1871; D.D. 1889. In 1859 he took Holy Orders, and was successively Curate of St. Paul, Cambridge, 1859-61; Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, 1860-70; Chaplain to the Bishop of Madras, 1861-65; Curate of Holy Trinity, Cambridge, 1866; Vicar of Trumpington, 1867-69; Principal of St. Aidan's College and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Norwich, 1869-90. From 1880-90 he was an Hon. Canon of Chester, and on June 24, 1890, was consecrated, in St. Paul's Cathedral, Lord Bishop of Sydney, Metropolitan of New South Wales, and Primate of Australia.

SMITH-WILLIAMS, Mrs., née McKENZIE, Marian, A.R.A.M., an eminent contralto singer, is the elder daughter of Captain Joseph McKenzie, shipowner, of Plymouth, where she was born. She studied singing under Mr. Samuel Weeks of that town; and, coming to London to complete her education, gained the Parepa-Rosa Scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music, also the Westmoreland Scholarship, and the bronze, silver, and gold medals of the Academy, the latter for declamatory singing. She was a pupil of Signor Randegger, and, for elocution, of Mr. Walter Lacy. She has also studied oratorio singing with Miss Anna Williams, and has an extensive repertoire in works of the classical composers from Bach and Handel down to those of the present day. Among the latter we notice repeated successes in Sir Arthur Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Dr. Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon," Dvorák's "Stabat Mater," and Dr. Hubert Parry's "Judith." Besides having a rising reputation as a Festival singer, Miss McKenzie has achieved distinction in classic and ballad concerts. With a voice remarkable for richness and sympathy, she is perhaps unrivalled for sweetness and distinctness in the use of the mother tongue. She is an Associate of the Royal Academy of Music, and of the Philharmonic Society. Miss Marian McKenzie married Mr. Smith-Williams, the brother of Miss Anna Williams, one of our leading English sopranos.

SMYTH, Charles Piazzi, LL.D. (Edin.), F.R.A.S., F.R.S.E., for a time F.R.S., and for 43 years Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, was born in 1819, at Naples, and is the second of three sons of the late Admiral Smyth, but was educated in England. He commenced his astronomical service at the Royal Observatory, Cape of Good Hope, under Sir T. Maclear, in 1835; and subsequently assisted in the re-measurement of La Caille's South African Arc of the Meridian. He was appointed, in 1845, to succeed Thomas Henderson, First Astronomer-Royal for Scotland, in the Royal Observatory, Edinburgh. He applied himself, on arrival, to clearing off five years' arrears of computation and printing; and next to continuing Meridian star observations; besides establishing a daily time-ball, and afterwards an electrically-fired daily time-gun for the service of the City. In 1858 he was appointed to prepare for Government all the meteorological deductions furnished by 55 observing stations. In 1856, soon after his marriage with Jessie Duncan, he spent several months in testing, with her, the qualities of the Peak of Teneriffe for star observation above the level of the clouds. In 1859 he visited and published on the Russian Observatories. In 1864-5 he visited (accompanied again by his wife), investigated, and published on, the Great Pyramid in Egypt, and described the results in various works, one of which has just reached its 5th edit. In 1871 he began to compose a comprehensive star-catalogue and ephemeris of all the Edinburgh and best contemporary observations of the same stars, of which new kind of catalogue the first four hours were published in 1877 in the 14th Volume of the Edinburgh Observatory's publications, and the last twenty hours were published in 1886, as the 15th volume. Then, with failing instruments and insufficient means for rectifying them, he applied for retirement, and obtained it in Aug., 1888, and was awarded a small pension. He and Mrs. Piazzi Smyth have since resided near Ripon, where he has devoted himself to solar photographic spectroscopy, and to watching, and photographically recording, cloud-forms.

SNELUS, George James, F.R.S., F.C.S., Bessemer Medallist, Vice-President of the Iron and Steel Institute, &c., was born June 25, 1837, at Camden Town, London, is the son of James Snelus, a builder, who died when George James Snelus was seven-and-a-half years of age, and the family was left impoverished by a long and heavy law-suit. Thanks, however, to a loving, self-sacrificing, and far-sighted mother, George James Snelus was provided with a good education. He was originally trained as a teacher at St. John's College, Battersea; and for some years he acted in that capacity with great success, particularly in the conduct of Science Classes under the Science and Art Department. During that time he also attended Owens College, Manchester, as a student under Professor Roscoe, and the Physical Classes under Professor Clifton. In the May examinations of 1864 he obtained the first of the Royal Albert Scholarships in competition with the whole of the United Kingdom, securing the Gold Medal for Physical Geography, Bronze Medal for Chemistry, &c., and a free education for three years at the Royal School of Mines. His career there was eminently successful, as he obtained the first scholarship in the first year, second scholarship in the second year, and the first place and the De La Beche medal for Mining in the third year, passing out as an Associate of the School in mining and metallurgy. He was then nominated by Dr. Percy for the appointment of chief chemist to the Dowlais Works, which appointment he filled for four-and-a-half years to the great satisfaction of the late William Menelaus, who, in 1871, recommended him for the post of scientific adviser to the commission then being sent out by the Iron and Steel Institute to the United States to investigate and report on the Danks Rotatory Puddling Process. Mr. Snelus had carefully studied the theory of all the processes of making steel and iron when at Dowlais, and he had at this time formed a very clear idea of the action of phosphorus, &c., upon iron, and the investigation of the Danks process enabled him to point out to Dr. Percy, on his return to England in the spring of 1872, that contrary to the ideas entertained up to that date by all metallurgists, and in opposition to the teachings of the Doctor himself (who held that the phosphorus was eliminated in the puddling process by liquation of a third phosphide of iron from the pasty puddled ball), the phosphorus was most largely eliminated in the early stage of the process, and while the iron was perfectly fluid and contained a large quantity of carbon, and that therefore it should be possible to eliminate the phosphorus during the Bessemer process; and further, that he believed he had discovered the secret of overcoming the difficulty hitherto considered unsurmountable. The Doctor at the time remarked that if this was so he had made a very great discovery. For his discovery the Iron and Steel Institute in 1883 awarded Mr. Snelus the Bessemer Gold Medal for being "The first to make pure steel from impure iron in a Bessemer converter lined with basic materials." Over ten million tons of steel have since been made from phosphoric iron previously useless for steel-making. This invention has to a large extent revolutionized steel making, and no country has benefited by the invention so much as Germany, while owing to the stringency of the Patent Laws of that country in 1872 Mr. Snelus was unable to obtain a patent for his invention, and so has never reaped the slightest reward or recognition from Germany, although his work has brought large fortunes to those who have availed themselves of the process. At the Inventions Exhibition in London Mr. Snelus exhibited some illustrations of these improvements, together with the first piece of dephosphorus steel made by the basic process, and was awarded a Gold Medal for discoveries and inventions. At the Paris Exhibition of 1878 Mr. Snelus exhibited an elaborate set of analyzed samples illustrating the manufacture of iron and steel in various countries, for which he was awarded a Gold Medal. The collection was subsequently purchased as an educational collection for the Polytechnic School at Aix-la-Chapelle. Mr. Snelus is an original member of the Iron and Steel Institute, has been a member of the Council since 1881, and last year was elected one of the Vice-Presidents. The following is a list of the most important contributions to the Iron and Steel Proceedings:—"On the Condition of Carbon and Silicon in Iron and Steel," 1870; "Composition of Gases evolved from the Bessemer Converters during the Blow," 1871; "Sherman Process," 1871; "Scientific Features of the Danks Puddling Furnace," 1872; "Manufacture and Use of Spiegeleisen," 1874; "Fireclay and other Refractory Materials," 1875; "Use of Molten Iron direct from the Blast Furnace for Steel-making," 1876; "Removal of Phosphorus and Sulphur during the Bessemer and Siemens-Martin processes of Steel Manufacture," 1879; "Distribution of Elements in Steel Ingots," 1881; "Chemical Composition and Testing Steel Rails," 1882. He has also contributed to the literature of Iron and Steel on many other occasions; his principal works in this direction are two able articles on "Iron and Steel in Chemistry, as applied to the Arts and Manufactures." For his work generally, and his discovery of the Basic Process in particular, the Royal Society elected him a Fellow of that learned body in 1887. He was married in 1867 to Lavinia Woodward, daughter of a silk manufacturer of Macclesfield, and has now a family of three sons and three daughters.

SODOR AND MAN, Bishop of. See STRATTON, THE RT. REV. NORMAN DUMEUIL JOHN.

SOLLAS, Professor W. J., M.A., D.Sc. Cambridge, LL.D. Dublin, F.R.S., M.R.I.A., F.R.S.E., F.G.S., Officier d'Académie, born May 30, 1849, at Birmingham, was educated in the City of London School, afterwards in the Royal School of Mines, and next at St. John's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1882. He took his B.A. degree in 1873, subsequently D.Sc., and was made an honorary LL.D. (Dublin) in 1886. In 1893 he received the Bigsby Medal of the Geological Society. He was appointed Lecturer on the Cambridge University Extension in 1873, and for it delivered courses of lectures on geology in most of the large towns of England and Wales; in 1880 he was appointed Professor of Geology and Zoology in the University College, Bristol, and in 1883 was elected Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Dublin. He has been continuously writing memoirs on scientific subjects since 1872. Most of these have appeared in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, the Annals and Magazine of Natural History, Geological Magazine, and in the publications of the Royal Irish Academy and the Royal Dublin Society. These have for subjects, amongst others, the relations of fossil to recent sponges, the replacement of silica (opal) by carbonate of lime, the origin of flint, of freshwater faunas, the estuary of the Severn, the characters of plesiosaurus, the structure and history of granite and other igneous rocks, and the anatomy of living sponges. He is the author of the article "Sponges" in the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and of the 24th volume of the Reports of the Challenger Expedition treating of the Tetractinellida, 1888.

SOLOMON, J. Solomon, artist, was born in Southwark, Sept. 1860. His father is a leather manufacturer, and his mother a native of Prague (Bohemia). He was educated at the school of Mr. Thomas Whitford, M.A., and privately by the Rev. Mr. Singer. His artistic training was begun in 1876, at Heatherly's School of Art in Newman Street, and the next year he entered the Schools of the Royal Academy. In 1879, through the kindness of H.I.H. Prince Lucien Bonaparte, he got an introduction to Cabanel, who received him into his studio in the Beaux Arts in Paris. The following year found him in Munich; but he thought little of the German training, and, after a tour round Italy and Holland, he returned to England, and exhibited his first picture at the Royal Academy (a portrait of a gentleman). Mr. Solomon's friend Hacker and he journeyed through Spain, resting a while at the Shrine of Velasquez in Madrid, and passed the winter working in Morocco, where it was difficult at that time to induce the Moors to become their models. He again sought his master, Cabanel, and remained with him for about nine more months, having a studio of his own in Paris, and exhibiting at the Salon a portrait of Dr. Stevens, and, at the Royal Academy, a small highly-finished work, "Waiting." His next exhibit was "Ruth and Naomi," done in his garden in Tangier, on his second visit to Morocco, and since then, every year, he has shown a composition and a portrait at the Academy. The picture which first brought him any reputation was "Cassandra," now in Ballarat; then "Samson," "Niobe" following, and an allegorical work, "Sacred and Profane Love," with a portrait of Sir John Simon. Mr. Solomon was elected a Member of the Institute in 1887. At the Salon of 1889, he received a Medal for "Niobe," and in 1890 at the Academy he exhibited "Hippolyte," and a portrait of "Mrs. George Mosenthal," full length. In 1893 he exhibited, at the Academy, two portraits and "Your Health!" and in 1894 "Mrs. Patrick Campbell as 'Paula Tanqueray,'" and a likeness of Mr. I. Zangwill. Simeon Solomon, a pre-Raphaelite painter and pastellist, who won considerable fame in the days of Dante Rossetti, is not to be confounded with the subject of our memoir.

SORBY, Henry Clifton, LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Woodbourne, near Sheffield, May 10, 1826, and educated at the Sheffield Collegiate School, and by private tutors. He is an honorary LL.D. of Cambridge (1879), and he has been President of the Geological Society. On April 25, 1882, he was elected President of Firth College, Sheffield. He is the author of many separate papers on the microscopical structure of rocks, on the construction and use of the micro-spectroscope in studying animal and vegetable colouring matter, on a new method of studying the optical characters of minerals, on the physical geography of former geological periods, and on various other subjects connected with geology and the use of the microscope. His latest publications have been on the microscopical structure of iron and steel, and on the temperature of the water in estuaries. He has lately been much occupied with certain special archæological studies, and in making preparations of invertebrate animals, as lantern slides, and for museum specimens.

SPENCE, The Very Rev. Henry Donald Maurice, M.A., D.D., Dean of Gloucester, son of George Spence, Esq., Q.C., M.P., born in Pall Mall, London, in 1836, was educated at Westminster School and at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge (B.A., 1864; M.A., 1866; D.D., 1887). While at the University he obtained a first-class in the voluntary theological tripos (1864), the Carus Undergraduate University Prize (1864), and the Carus and Scholefield University Prize (1865, and again 1866). He was Select Preacher at Cambridge in 1883 and 1887, and at Oxford in 1893. He was appointed Professor of Modern Literature in David's College, Lampeter, in 1865; Rector of St. Mary de Crypt, Gloucester, 1870; Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol (Dr. Ellicott), in 1870; Principal of the Theological College of Gloucester, and Honorary Canon of Gloucester in 1875. In 1877 the vicarage of St. Pancras, London, was presented to him by the Queen. Mr. Spence was in the same year appointed Rural Dean of St. Pancras. In 1886 he was appointed by the Crown to the Deanery of Gloucester. He has contributed many papers to the "Bible Educator," Good Words, and other magazines; is joint author with Dean Howson of a commentary on the Acts of the Apostles (Anglo-American Commentary); and is one of the Commentators of the New Testament and also of the Old Testament, edited by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Dean Spence is likewise editor and one of the writers of the "Pulpit Commentary on the Old and New Testaments," of which work 44 volumes have already been published (1894), and of several works on the Talmud. He is the author of a translation of the "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," with excursus and notes (1885). Amongst other works he has written are "Dreamland and History," the story of the Norman duke, and "Cloister Life in the Days of Cœur de Lion." He married Louise, daughter of David Jones, Esq., of Pantglas, M.P., for Carmarthenshire.

SPENCER, Herbert, was born at Derby, in 1820. He was educated by his father, a teacher in Derby, and his uncle, the Rev. Thomas Spencer, a clergyman of the Established Church, who was active in various philanthropic movements. At the age of seventeen he became a civil engineer, but after about eight years abandoned the profession, having during that period contributed various papers to the Civil Engineers' and Architects' Journal. His first productions in general literature were a series of letters on "The Proper Sphere of Government," published in the Nonconformist in 1842, which were reprinted in pamphlet form. From 1848 to 1853 he was engaged as sub-editor of the Economist, and during that time published his first considerable work, "Social Statics: or, the Conditions essential to Human Happiness specified, and the first of them developed," 1851, but this is out of print and has been suppressed. Various articles, chiefly for the Westminster and other quarterly reviews, were written during the next four years. In 1855 appeared his "Principles of Psychology," which interpreted the phenomena of mind on the general principle of evolution (this was four years before the "Origin of Species" appeared). A break-down in health followed, which prevented work for eighteen months. 1857, 1858, and 1859, were occupied in writing various essays for the quarterly reviews, &c. In 1860 Mr. Spencer issued the programme of his "System of Synthetic Philosophy," which proposed to carry out in its application to all orders of phenomena the general law of evolution set forth in two essays published in 1857. To the execution of this project his subsequent life has been mainly devoted. Of the works composing the System, the following have already been published: "First Principles," 1862 (7th edit., 1889); "The Principles of Biology," 2 vols., 1864 (4th edit., 1888); "The Principles of Psychology," 2 vols., 1872 (5th edit., 1890); "The Principles of Sociology," vol. I., 1876 (3rd edit., 1885); "Ceremonial Institutions," 1879 (3rd edit., 1888); "Political Institutions," 1882 (2nd edit., 1885); "Ecclesiastical Institutions," 1885 (2nd edit., 1886); "The Data of Ethics," 1879 (5th edit., 1888). Mr. Spencer's other works are:—"Education: Intellectual, Moral, and Physical," 1861 (23rd edit., 1890); "Essays: Scientific, Political, and Speculative," 2 vols., 1858-63 (4th edit., 3 vols., 1885); "The Classification of the Sciences; to which are added, Reasons for Dissenting from the Philosophy of M. Comte," 1864 (3rd edit., 1871); "The Study of Sociology," 1873 (11th edit., 1885); "The Man versus the State," 1884 (8th thousand, 1886). Beyond his own proper work Mr. Spencer has published eight parts of the "Descriptive Sociology," classified and arranged by himself, and compiled by Professor Duncan, Dr. Scheppig, and Mr. Collier. This work was originally undertaken simply for the purpose of providing himself with materials for the "Principles of Sociology," but was eventually published for the use of others. Part VIII., published in 1881, contained the announcement that having during the preceding 14 years sunk between £3,000 and £4,000 in the undertaking, he could no longer continue it. Mr. Spencer paid a visit to the United States in 1882. On May 12, 1883, he was elected a correspondent of the French Academy of Moral and Political Sciences for the section of Philosophy, in the room of Emerson, but he declined that in common with all Academic honours. Mr. Spencer's works have been extensively translated. All are rendered into French, nearly all into German and Russian, many into Italian and Spanish; and the work on Education has appeared also in Hungarian, Bohemian, Polish, Dutch, Danish, Swedish, Greek, Japanese, and Chinese. Since 1886 Mr. Spencer has been an invalid. From that date up to 1891 he published nothing; but he has since completed the "Principles of Ethics" (1893), besides an abridged and revised edition of "Social Statics" (1892), and a revised and enlarged edition of his "Essays" in three volumes (1891).

SPENCER (Earl) The Right Hon. John Poyntz Spencer, K.G., LL.D., only son of the fourth Earl Spencer, born at Spencer House, Oct. 27, 1835, received his education at Harrow and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1857. He represented the southern division of the county of Northampton in the House of Commons from April to Dec., 1857, when he succeeded to the title on his father's death. He was Groom of the Stole to the late Prince Concert, 1859-61; and Groom of the Stole to the Prince of Wales, 1862-67. In Dec., 1868, he was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and he made his public entry into Dublin Jan. 16, 1869. He retained that office till the resignation of the Gladstone Ministry in Feb., 1874. On the return of the Liberals to office in May, 1880, he was appointed Lord President of the Council. He was nominated Lord Lieu enant of Ireland, on the resignation of Earl Cowper, May 4, 1882, retaining his seat in the Cabinet. He arrived in Dublin Castle on May 6, on the evening of which day Lord Frederick Cavendish, the newly-appointed Chief Secretary, and Mr. Thomas A. Burke, the Under-Secretary, were stabbed to death by assassins in the Phœnix Park, close to the Castle. After this it fell to Lord Spencer to administer the provisions of the Crimes Act. In March, 1883, Earl Spencer resigned the office of Lord President of the Council, but still remained a member of the Cabinet, until the close of Mr. Gladstone's Administration in June, 1885. On the return of Mr. Gladstone to office in Feb. of the following year, Lord Spencer became for the second time Lord President of the Council. By that time he had adopted Home Rule opinions, and his support was of great value to the Government. In August, 1892, he was appointed First Lord of the Admiralty. The University of Dublin conferred on Lord Spencer the honorary degree of LL.D., June 30, 1883. His lordship is Lord-Lieutenant and Chairman of the County Council of Northamptonshire. Since 1890 he has been Master of the Pytchley. In 1892 he became Chancellor of the Victoria University, Manchester.

SPIELHAGEN, Friedrich, a German novelist, was born at Magdeburg, Feb. 20, 1829, being the son of a Government official. At an early age he accompanied his father to Stralsund, and on that journey the sea made a lasting impression on the susceptible mind of the future novelist, who has in most of his works described life and incidents at sea with remarkable force and vividness. In 1847 he entered the University of Berlin, and then removed to Bonn, where he applied himself to the study of the law for about six months, and then turned his attention to philological and literary studies, which he pursued with great zeal in Berlin and at Greifswald. In 1854 he settled at Leipzig, where he taught in the Gymnasium, but the sudden death of his father changed his circumstances and prospects, and led to his adopting literature as a profession. Since the year 1854 he has brought out, with ever-increasing success, a series of novels, which have gained for him a foremost place among German writers of fiction. His larger works are:—"Problematical Natures," 1861, 9th edition 1880, and its sequel, "Through Night to Light," 1862; "Hammer and Anvil," 1869, 8th edition 1881; "Ever Forward!" 1872; "What the Swallow Sang," 1873; and "Storm-Floods," 1878. He has also written, "The Hohensteins," 1864; "Rank and File," 1866; "Low Land," 1879; and "Quisisana," 1880. Among his smaller pieces are "Clara Vere," 1857; "On the Downs," 1858; "At the Twelfth Hour," 1863; "The Rose of the Court," 1864; "Hans and Margaret," a village story, 1868; "The Village Coquette," 1869; "German Pioneers," 1870; "Ultimo," 1873; "The Skeleton in the House," 1879; and "Angela," 1881; two comedies, "Love for Love," 1875, and "Uhlenhanns," 2 vols., 1884, a family romance, with political background, representing the period 1830-40; "Die schönen Americanerinnen," 1885; "Noblesse Oblige," 1888; "A New Pharaoh," 1889. His poems appeared in 1891. He has made translations into German of works by Emerson, Michelet, and others.

SPRENGEL, Hermann Johann Philipp, Dr. Phil. (Heidelberg, 1858), F.R.S. (London, 1878), Royal Titular Prussian Professor, 1893, was born in 1834, at Schillerslage, near Hanover, in Germany, where his father owned a property, and received his education first at the family home, by a private tutor, later at school in the town of Hanover, whence he removed to the Universities of Göttingen and Heidelberg, where he studied natural sciences (chemistry and physics in particular), and took his degree Aug. 2, 1858 ("Examine rigoroso summa cum laude superato"). Coming to England early in 1859 he engaged in research work with the Professor of Chemistry at the University of Oxford till the middle of 1862; after which he settled in London, engaged in research work at the laboratories of the Royal College of Chemistry, Guy's and St. Bartholomew's Hospitals, till the autumn of 1864; and, since then, in work more or less connected with his inventions and discoveries. These, with some omissions, are:—"Ueber einen neuen Löthrohrapparat" (Pogg. Ann., B. cxii., 1861); "On the Detection of Nitric Acid" (Jour. Chem. Soc., 1863); "Researches on the Vacuum" (ibid., 1865); "On Determining the Weight of Heterogeneous Liquids" (ibid., 1866); "Improvements in Explosive Compounds" (Engl. Pat., No. 921 and No. 2642, 1871); "The Water Air-pump" (Phil. Mag., 1873); "An Air-bath of Constant Temperature between 100° and 200° C. (Jour. Chem. Soc., 1873); "A Method of determining the Specific Gravity of Liquids with Ease and great Exactness" (ibid., 1873); "A New Class of Explosives, which are Non-explosive during their Manufacture, Storage, and Transport" (ibid., 1873); "Use of the Atomiser or Spray-Producer in the Manufacture of Sulphuric Acid" (Engl. Pat., No. 3189, 1873, and Chem. News, 1875); "Sprengel's Vacuum Pump, commonly called Bunsen's Pump," 1881; "Notes on so-called Panclastite" (Chem. News, 1886); "The Hell Gate Explosion near New York and so-called 'Rackarock,'" (Chem. News, 1885); "Use of Exhaust Steam in the Production of Sulphuric Acid" (Engl. Pat., No. 10,798, 1886, and Chem. News, 1887). The more important among these refer to the two extremes in the gaseous state of matter—to vacua and detonating agents. As to vacua he discovered a new method of producing them, viz., by the fall of water or mercury in tubes, a method distinguished by its convenience and effectiveness. Thus we see (Chemical News, vol. xxix., p. 125) that in 1870 his mercury air-pump produced vacua so nearly perfect that the trace of air remaining in the exhausted vessel amounted to only $\frac{1}{937920000}$ part of its original volume, leaving for further cultivation that field which lies between $\frac{1}{937920000}$ and 0. The eyes of the scientific world turned towards this instrument in 1866, after the late Professor Graham, Master of the Mint, had bestowed upon it (anent his then newly-discovered occluded gases) the following encomium (Philosophical Transactions, vol. clvi., p. 408): "The pneumatic instrument of Dr. Sprengel is peculiarly applicable to researches of the present kind. Indeed, without the use of his invention some parts of the inquiry would have been practically impossible." Since then this instrument has become a most useful servant both in science and industry, and has been singularly productive of further important results, which to enumerate fully we have no space. Suffice it to point to a few, e.g., to Bunsen's filtering-process, to Crookes's radiometer-work, and to Edison and Swan's incandescent vacuum-lamp industry. Prof. Sprengel's researches on explosives can likewise be only briefly referred to here. He was the first to shake our old belief in water as an infallible means of rendering explosives non-combustible, by virtue of his patents of 1871, which announced the explosibility of certain nitro-compound solutions, when fired by a detonating fuse. These solutions contain water up to 15 per cent. He was the first also who described the method (Jour. Chem. Soc., 1873, pp. 806 and 807) now called "cumulative detonation" (Witt's Prometheus, Berlin, R. Mückenberger, 1892, p. 230), by means of which all semi-sensitive explosives, if explodable by concussion (such as wet gun-cotton, i.e., a nitro-compound with 15 per cent. of water), may readily be exploded, and by means of which every charge of wet gun-cotton has since been exploded up to the present. As wet gun-cotton is now employed on an extensive scale for military and naval purposes, Sprengel's cumulative detonation and first use of a hydrated explosive have attained a high degree of practical importance. He was the first to draw attention to Picric Acid (Melinite, Lyddite) as "a powerful explosive when fired by a detonator (1873). At the present time this material is largely used as a detonating charge for shells, which, by virtue of their prodigious force, have greatly raised the influence of artillery in modern warfare" (Times, Sept. 11, 1890). He was the first who described and patented in England a number of substances called Safety-explosives, consisting either of two liquids or of a liquid and a solid, which are non-explosive by themselves, but become explosive when mixed, and are known as Hellhoffite, Oxonite, Panclastite, Rackarock, &c. The latter one in particular, consisting of 79 parts of potassium chlorate and 21 parts nitrobenzol, has recently become famous in America, for it was chosen by Gen. John Newton, Chief of Engineers, U.S. Army, to rack a rock called Flood Rock, which, covering an area of nine acres, obstructed Hell-Gate, an entry to the harbour of New York. The mine, excavated underneath this rock, was charged with 107 tons of "rackarock," primed by 22 tons of dynamite, and the whole enormous charge (costing £22,190) was successfully fired Oct. 10, 1885. The explosion which ensued produced an earth-tremor of one minute's duration, felt at a distance of 185 miles, and will be remembered as the greatest of its kind as yet recorded.

SPRIGG, Sir John Gordon, K.C.M.G., Commander of the Legion of Honour, was born at Ipswich, Suffolk, in 1830, and is the son of a Baptist Minister. He went to the Cape Colony in 1858, owing to ill-health; and was first returned to the House of Assembly in 1869. He has been twice Prime Minister of the Colony, and has held various Ministerial Offices for nearly ten years. He resigned office in 1890, but was again appointed Treasurer in the Rhodes Ministry of 1893.

SPULLER, Eugène, a French politician, born at Seurre (Côte-d'Or), Dec. 8, 1835, studied at the Lyceum and the Faculty of Laws at Dijon, and became a member of the Paris Bar in 1862. After having been employed in several political cases, he abandoned the legal profession in order to engage in active political life and journalism. At the general election of 1863 he supported at private meetings the candidature of Émile Ollivier against the official candidature of M. Varin, in the third conscription of the Seine. He then became editor of the Europe of Frankfort, and contributed to the Nain Jaune, the Journal de Paris and the Journal de Genève. Having formed a friendship with M. Gambetta, he became, in 1868, one of the founders of the Revue Politique. He was also one of the contributors to the Encyclopédie Générale (1869-70). At the legislative elections of 1869 he opposed M. Emile Ollivier's candidature, which, not long before, he had supported; and he vehemently opposed the plébiscite of May, 1870, publishing a "Petite Histoire du Second Empire, utile à lire avant le vote du Plébiscite." After the revolution of Sept. 4, 1870, he was M. Gambetta's confidential friend and secretary, and in Nov. 1871, he became the principal editor of La République Française. He resigned that post in 1876, when he was elected a Deputy for the 3rd arrondissement of Paris. On Feb. 6, 1880, he was elected President of the Advanced Left Deputies, defeating th more Radical M. Boysset by 51 to 37. In 1881 M. Spuller was again elected for the Third Arrondissement and was called to the Foreign Office as Under-Secretary. In 1882 he retired with the rest of the Gambetta government, and from 1883 onwards, was one of the four Vice-Presidents of the Chamber and a member of the Budget Commission, being especially charged with the Budget of the Foreign Ministry. He was a member of the Rouvier Cabinet as Minister of Public Instruction in 1887, and in 1889-90 a Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Tirard Cabinet. He was elected a Senator in 1892. Besides the works already cited, M. Spuller has written "Michelet, sa Vie et ses Œuvres," 1876; "Ignace de Loyola et la Compagnie de Jésus," 1876; and "La Compagnie de Jésus devant l'Histoire," 1877; and a collection of his "Conferences," 1879.

STAMBULOFF, N., who has been called "the Bismarck" of Bulgaria, was born at Tirnova in 1855, and was educated for the Russian church at the seminary of Odessa. In 1875, when the insurrections in Bosnia and Herzogovina broke out, he joined the party who endeavoured to produce a similar uprising in Bulgaria. The plot failed, and he took refuge at Bucharest, where he continued to intrigue as a Bulgarian revolutionary. During the Russo-Turkish War he served as a volunteer in the Russian army. After the election of Alexander I. as Prince of Bulgaria, he became, with M. Karaveloff, one of the chiefs of the Liberal party, and was elected President of the Sobranje in succession to the latter in 1884. He continued President for two years, but in Aug., 1886, when the conspiracy against Prince Alexander came to a head at Sofia, he, together with Colonel Mutkuroff and M. Karaveloff, formed a counter-government in opposition to the revolutionary government of M. Zankoff which had only a very short duration. Prince Alexander was able to return to Bulgaria, and M. Stambuloff was sent to him at the head of a deputation at Rustchuk. The Prince abdicated in view of the hostile attitude of Russia, and Stambuloff, Karaveloff, and Mutkuroff were nominated regents on Sept. 7. M. Stambuloff escorted the Prince to the frontier, convoked the Sobranje, and informed the national representatives of the establishment of the regency. From that time forth until recently, Stambuloff has played a preponderant part in the direction of Bulgarian affairs and in shaping the destinies of that state. He has from the first been signally opposed to the interference of Russia in the internal affairs of his country, and has constantly endeavoured first to render her more independent of the Porte, and, in the end, to lead to her being recognised as an independent European state. Under his influence the Grand Sobranje, which met at Tirnova on July 4, 1887, elected Prince Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, Prince of Bulgaria (July 7). This Prince, though not recognised by the great powers, assumed the reins of government, and Stambuloff became, and for long remained, his chief adviser and minister, and wielded a power verging on a dictatorship. Various plots were hatched against both prince and minister, and were cruelly repressed. Thus Major Panitza, with the help of foreign agents, was preparing to overthrow the existing state of affairs in Bulgaria when he was discovered, and after a long trial, complicated by diplomatic interferences, was shot on June 20, 1890. The Minister of Finance, Beltcher, was assassinated on March 27, 1891, by a political offender or offenders who had actually intended taking the President of the Council's life. Criminal proceedings were instituted against him or them and against the participants in an alleged conspiracy which was supposed to have been formed against Ferdinand and his government more than two years before. M. Karaveloff, now in opposition to Stambuloff, was actually accused of being a conspirator as well as many other leading men. The trial seemed actuated by motives of personal vengeance, and ended in the condemnation to death of four conspirators and in the imprisonment of M. Karaveloff. On July 26, a week after the trial, the quadruple execution took place in the court of the prison, the European press meanwhile loudly protesting and accusing M. Stambuloff of being a judicial murderer. M. Stambuloff's government has seized every available opportunity of irritating Russia or the friends of Russia, and has braved the anger of the Porte by coining money in Prince Ferdinand's name. Under the protection of England and Austria, M. Stambuloff raised a Bulgarian national loan, and also induced the Sobranje to vote a national pension to the ex-Prince Alexander I. in memory of the victory of Slivnitza. But the crowning stroke of policy which distinguished his tenure of office was the marriage arranged by him between his master and a lady of royal blood, the Princess Marie-Louise of Parma, which was announced by proclamation in Feb. 1893. On the occasion of this announcement M. Stambuloff once more made unsuccessful efforts to induce the powers of Europe to recognise Bulgaria as an independent state. During Prince Ferdinand's absence, M. Stambuloff had the title of regent. He asked the Sobranje so to revise the constitution as to permit the new Princess to retain her faith, and he followed up his request by oppressive treatment of the Metropolitan, Mgr. Clement. Against this conduct Russia seriously protested. In April, M. Stambuloff was received in private audience by the Emperor of Austria, and this was taken by many to mean that that power was willing to protect Bulgaria. The marriage of Prince Ferdinand took place on April 20, and the Sobranje subsequently modified Article 30 of the Constitution in favour of his children's religion and of a decrease in the number of deputies. The Government were signally successful at the July elections, and the reduced Sobranje subsequently assembled. On Nov. 26, M. Stambuloff and other high officials met at Tsaribrod, on the Bulgarian frontier, and received the coffin containing the remains of the late Prince Alexander. On Dec. 1, a plot to murder Prince Ferdinand was thwarted. In the following April, after prolonged negotiations, the Sultan made various concessions to Bulgarian demands, and gave leave for Bulgarian schools to be established in Macedonia. But, despite these favourable appearances, M. Stambuloff and all his colleagues resigned on May 29, 1894. The Premier's rule had become too autocratic, and Prince Ferdinand felt that so long as the minister continued in power Russia would not recognise the king. The new Foreign Minister announced on June 5, that legality would in future take the place of M. Stambuloff's arbitrary rule. On the 12th, the Prince published a rescript in which he expressed cordial gratitude to the ex-Premier, but popular feeling began to turn against the latter, and at the municipal elections of July his supporters were severely beaten. In August, as the Russophiles gained ground in the country, M. Stambuloff is reported to have had several interviews with the King, in which both were guilty of excessively plain speech. On Sept. 6, he was summoned by a magistrate to explain his abusive allusions to the king during an interview with a journalist, published in the Frankfurter Zeitung. Refusing to answer the charge, he was compelled to find bail to the amount of 35,000 frs. M. Stambuloff (Jan., 1895), is now in utter disgrace, and a Parliamentary Commission is inquiring into the acts of his last cabinet. The attack is of a personal nature, and is being joined in by his enemies, who are returning from exile under the constitutional rule of M. Stoiloff.

STAMER, Right Rev. Sir Lovelace Tomlinson, Bart., Bishop Suffragan of Shrewsbury, was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1853, after bring placed in the second class of the Classical Tripos, M.A., in 1856 and D.D. in 1888. He was curate of Clay Cross, Derbyshire, in 1853; of Turvey, Beds., in 1854; and of Long Melford, Suffolk, in 1856-58. From that year to 1892 he was Rector of Stoke-upon-Trent, and from 1858 to 1888 he was Rural Dean, and from 1877 to 1888 Archdeacon of Stoke-upon-Trent. In 1875 he became a Prebendary of Lichfield Cathedral, and was consecrated Bishop Suffragan of Shrewsbury in 1888. In 1892 he was presented to the Vicarage of St. Chad, Shrewsbury.

STAINER, Sir John, was born in 1840, and was a chorister at St. Paul's between 1847 and 1856. At the age of sixteen he became organist to St. Michael's College, Tenbury, then recently founded by the late Sir F. G. Ouseley; and three years afterwards, he was, at the early age of nineteen, made organist of Magdalen College, Oxford. He seized the opportunity of graduating in arts as well as in music, proceeding to Mus. Bac. in 1859, B.A. 1863, Mus. Doc. 1865, M.A. 1866. In 1860 Dr. Stainer had been appointed organist of the University Church by the then Vice-Chancellor, the Rev. Dr. Jeune, late Bishop of Peterborough, and he held this appointment, together with the organistship of Magdalen, until 1872, when he was appointed to succeed Sir John Goss, as organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, which post he resigned early in 1888. He has composed a large number of anthems and Church services, as well as songs of a secular character, a Treatise on Harmony, educational Primers on Harmony, Composition, and the Organ. He has achieved a high reputation as a scientific musician. A cantata by Dr. Stainer, "The Daughter of Jairus," was composed for, and produced at, the Worcester Festival, 1878. In the same year he was nominated by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales one of the jurors of the Exhibition in Paris, and when it was closed he was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. In 1883 his cantata, "St. Mary Magdalen," was produced at the Gloucester Festival. In the same year Dr. Stainer was appointed Inspector of Music to the Education Department in the place of the late Dr.

Hullah, and also had the honour of being nominated a member of the Council of the Royal College of Music by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. In 1885 Dr. Stainer received the degree of Mus. Doc. honoris causâ from the University of Durham. In 1888 he received the honour of Knighthood, and in 1889 was appointed Professor of Music in the University of Oxford, as successor to Sir F. G. Ouseley, deceased. He is an Honorary Fellow of the Royal Academy of Music, an honorary Fellow of the Tonic Solfa College, and one of the Vice-Presidents of the Royal College of Organists, and President of the Musical Association. In 1893 he received the distinction of being elected an honorary Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxon.

STANFORD, Professor Charles Villiers, is the son of the late John Stanford, Esq., Examiner to the Irish Court of Chancery, He was born in Dublin, Sept. 30, 1852, and received his first musical instruction from Mr. A. O'Leary, and Sir R. P. Stewart. In 1870 he matriculated at Queen's College, Cambridge, but shortly afterwards migrated to Trinity, where, on the death of Dr. J. L. Hopkins in 1873, he was elected organist of the College, a post he has retained ever since. In the same year he was appointed conductor of the University Musical Society. In 1874 Dr. Stanford graduated in classical honours, and shortly afterwards studied music at Leipzig, under Reinecke, and in Berlin under Kiel. His principal compositions up to 1876, are a setting of Klopstock's Hymn "Die Auferstehung" (op. 5), incidental music to Tennyson's "Queen Mary" (op. 6), and a setting of the 46th Psalm (op. 8), first performed by the Cambridge University Musical Society in 1876. In 1877 Dr. Stanford took the degree of M.A. In the same year an overture by him was produced at the Gloucester Festival, and a Symphony at the Crystal Palace. The next few years were devoted to the writings of various chamber compositions, two church services, one of which was written for the Festival of the Sons of the Clergy in 1880, and a grand opera, "The Veiled Prophet of Khorassan" (libretto by W. Barclay Squire), which was produced at Hanover, Feb. 6, 1881. In 1882 an Elegiac Symphony was performed at Cambridge, a Choral Hymn (op. 16) to words by Klopstock at St. Paul's Cathedral, and an Orchestral Serenade (op. 17) at the Birmingham Festival. Shortly afterwards he published a collection of old Irish songs. At the opening of the Royal College of Music Dr. Stanford was appointed Professor of Composition and Orchestral playing, and in 1883, the honorary degree of Mus. Doc. was conferred upon him by the University of Oxford. In 1884 he produced two new operas, "Savonarola" at Hamburg, and (within a fortnight) "The Canterbury Pilgrims" at Drury Lane; the librettos of both works were by G. A. A'Beckett. The same year witnessed the production at the Norwich Festival of a setting of Walt. Whitman's Elegiac Ode for Abraham Lincoln (op. 21), three Cavalier songs (words by Robert Browning) (op. 18), and a pianoforte sonata (op. 20), played at the Monday Popular Concerts. In 1885 Dr. Stanford was elected Conductor of the Bach Choir. His oratorio "The Three Holy Children" (op. 22) was produced at the Birmingham Festival, and his music to the "Eumenides (op. 23) of Æschylus at the performance of the play at Cambridge. His choral setting of Tennyson's ballad, "The Revenge" (op. 24), was performed at the Leeds Festival of 1886, and a pianoforte quintett (op. 25), at the Monday Popular Concerts. In 1887 he set to music the "Carmen Sæculare" of Lord Tennyson, which was performed at a State Concert with Madame Albani as solo soprano. The same artist sang the principal part in a setting of the 150th Psalm, written expressly for the opening of the Manchester Exhibition of the same year. Dr. Richter conducted the first performance of his "Irish" Symphony (op. 28), and the following autumn his music to "The Œdipus Rex (op. 29), of Sophocles was given at Cambridge. Shortly afterwards he was elected Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge, in succession to Sir George Macfarren. In January, 1888, Professor Stanford conducted at Berlin his fourth Symphony in F (op. 31), on which occasion also Dr. Joachim played a Violin Suite with orchestral accompaniment (op. 32). His setting of Tennyson's "Voyage of Maeldune" was produced at the Leeds Festival of the same year. An oratorio, "Eden," of which the poem was written by Mr. Robert Bridges, was produced at the Birmingham Festival of 1891. In the same year he was elected a corresponding member of the French Société de Compositeurs de Musique, and received the diploma of honorary membership of the Beethoven-Haus at Bonn. A ballad for chorus and orchestra, "The Battle of the Baltic" (op. 41), was given at the Hereford Festival of the same year. The year 1892 saw the production of two string quartets (op. 44 and 45), and a sonata for violoncello and piano (op. 39), and two sets of part songs

In 1893 he wrote in conjunction with Mr. Swinburne an ode, "East to West," for the Chicago Exhibition, which was first given in the Albert Hall; and a Mass in G major (op. 46). He was requested by Mr. Henry Irving to write the incidental music for the production of Lord Tennyson's tragedy, "Becket," for the Lyceum. He also published a further set of thirty Irish Songs and Ballads. His first opera, "The Veiled Prophet," was given for the first time in England at Covent Garden Theatre in July, 1893. On the occasion of the Jubilee of the Cambridge University Musical Society in June, 1893, when Saint Saëns, Bruch, Tschaikowsky, and Boito conducted their own compositions and received honorary degrees from the University, Professor Stanford resigned the conductorship and took up his residence in London.

STANLEY, Henry Morton, D.C.L., LL.D., African Explorer, was born near Denbigh, in Wales, on Jan. 28, 1841. When three years of age he was placed in the poor-house of St. Asaph, where he remained ten years, and received an education which enabled him to teach in a school. At the age of fifteen he sailed as cabin-boy in a vessel bound for New Orleans. Here he was adopted by a merchant named Stanley, whose name he took, in place of his original one, which was John Rowlands. His patron died without leaving a will, and young Stanley was left to his own resources. He enlisted in the Confederate army, was made a prisoner, and subsequently joined the Federal Navy, serving as acting ensign on the Ticonderoga. After the close of the war he went to Turkey as a newspaper correspondent, and in 1867 was sent by the New York Herald as its correspondent with the British army in Abyssinia, and subsequently travelled in Spain and elsewhere for the same paper. He was finally sent by the conductor of the Herald to find Dr. Livingstone, of whom nothing had been heard for more than two years. Stanley sailed from Bombay in Oct., 1870, and reached Zanzibar, on the east coast of Africa, early in Jan., 1871, and on Nov. 10 found Livingstone at Ujiji, on Lake Tanganyika, where he had just arrived from the south-west. Stanley furnished him with supplies, explored the northern part of Lake Tanganyika with him, and remained until Feb., 1872, when Livingstone started on the journey from which he never returned, and Stanley made his way back to Europe, reaching England in July, 1872. Here he was received with great enthusiasm, was publicly entertained and presented by Her Majesty with a gold snuff-box set with diamonds, and by the Royal Geographical Society (1873) with the patron's Gold Medal. The éclat of his first expedition induced the conductors of the New York Herald and of the London Daily Telegraph to send him, at their own expense, on another African Expedition. He reached Zanzibar in the autumn of 1874, and learning that Livingstone was dead, resolved to go north-westward, and explore the region of Lake Victoria N'yanza. This, after many encounters with the natives and the loss by death or desertion of 104 men out of 300, he reached in Feb., 1875, and found it to be the largest body of fresh water on the globe, having an area of 40,000 square miles. He then pushed westward towards Lake Albert N'yanza, and was able to satisfy himself that it was not, as had been generally supposed, connected with Lake Tanganyika. Forced by the hostility of the natives to return to Ujiji, he determined to descend the great river discovered by Livingstone, and believed by him to be the Nile, but which others thought was the Congo (and Stanley by this journey ascertained it was). It had been named by Livingstone the Lualaba, but by Stanley it was named the Livingstone. The descent, chiefly by canoes, occupied him eight months, cost him the lives of thirty-five men, and was accomplished under the greatest difficulties and privations. On reaching a settlement on the coast, a Portuguese national vessel took him to St. Paul de Loanda, whence an English vessel conveyed the party to the Cape of Good Hope, and thence to Zanzibar. Here his men were left at their home; and Stanley reached England in Feb., 1878. He has published an account of his first expedition, under the title of "How I found Livingstone," 1872. Of his second expedition an account is given in "Through the Dark Continent," 1878 (abridged edition, 1885.) The President of the French Geographical Society presented the Cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honour to Mr. Stanley at the Sorbonne, Paris, June 28, 1878. In 1879-82 he visited Africa again, sent there by the Brussels African International Association with a view to developing the great basin of the River Congo. The King of the Belgians devoted from his private purse £50,000 per annum towards this costly enterprise. Stanley completed the work in 1884, having established trading stations along the Congo River from its mouth to Stanley Pool, 1,400 miles by river. A description of his labours in this field was published by him in 1885 under title "The Congo and the Founding of its Free State." On Jan. 13, 1887, he was presented with the honorary freedom of the City of London, just on the eve of his departure for a fourth time to Africa. This expedition was made for the purpose of relieving Emin Pacha, Governor of Equatorial Africa, whose condition was known in Europe to have become precarious. Stanley fulfilled his mission, succoured Emin and brought him and his followers safely back to Egypt, but only after the most severe hardships endured in any of his explorations, and with a loss of over 400 out of the 650 men he had taken with him. Nearly three years were occupied in the journey. Among the important geographical results of the expedition were the discovery of the Semliki River, of Mount Ruvenzori (thought to be 17,000 feet high), of Lake Albert Edward, and of the South-western extension of Lake Victoria. Lake Albert Edward proved to be the primary source of the White Nile, and it was shown that its waters connect through the Semliki with the Albert N'yanza. Stanley reached Cairo near the close of 1889 and remained there until the following spring, in order to write a record of the journey. This was published simultaneously in England, France, Germany, and the United States in June, 1890, under the title of "In Darkest Africa" (2 vols.). His return to England was an unending ovation. The Universities of Oxford and Durham bestowed upon him the degree of D.C.L.; that of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Cambridge, and every institution and individual sought to do him honour. On July 12, 1890, in Westminster Abbey, he was married to Miss Dorothy Tennant, an artist of considerable talent. A controversy subsequently arose relative to certain incidents mentioned in a "Life of Major Barttelot," which amounted to charges against Mr. Stanley. He defended himself from these charges before undertaking a lecturing tour to America. On his return with Mrs. Stanley in 1891, he lectured in many parts of the United Kingdom, and in 1892 paid a visit to Australia. On his return he settled in London and took out a certificate of naturalisation. At the general election in July, he stood as a Unionist for North Lambeth, but was not returned. During the controversy about Uganda he was strongly in favour of retaining that country. In Nov., 1893, appeared his book on "My Dark Companions and their Strange Stories."

STANMORE, The Hon. Sir Arthur Hamilton Gordon, first Lord, Ex-Governor of Ceylon, is the youngest son of the fourth Earl of Aberdeen, and was born in 1817, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. He sat in Parliament as Liberal Member for Beverley from 1854 to 1857; was Secretary to the special mission to the Ionian Islands, in 1858; appointed Governor of New Brunswick, in 1866; Governor of Trinidad in 1870; the first Governor of the Fiji Islands, in 1874; High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, in 1877; Governor of New Zealand, in 1880; and Governor of Ceylon, in 1883 to 1890.

STANNARD, Mrs. Arthur, "John Strange Winter," the popular author of "Bootles' Baby" and many other well-known novels, was born at York on Jan. 13, 1856. She was the only daughter of the late Rev. H. V. Palmer, Rector of St. Margaret's, York, who, before taking Holy Orders was in the Royal Artillery, and was one of the officers selected to attend the Coronation of Queen Victoria. One of her ancestors was the celebrated actress, Hannah Pritchard. Mrs. Stannard began her public literary career in 1874. Her first publication in volume form was a collection of military sketches entitled, "Cavalry Life," issued in 1881, for which her publishers induced her to adopt the masculine nom de guerre by which she has since become so well known. In 1886 two stories from her pen, entitled "Bootles' Baby," and "Houp-la," appeared in the Graphic, and attracted immediate attention from the author's evident familiarity with army matters and child life. Up to this time it was universally assumed that the author was a cavalry officer, but when the success of "Bootles' Baby" had established her reputation as a writer on army life, she disclosed her identity. In 1891 Mrs. Stannard started Winter's Weekly Magazine, which she still edits. In 1892 she became the first President of the "Writer's Club," which is the first women's Press Club ever established. In 1893 she was unanimously elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature, an honour which had only once before been conferred on a woman. She was married in 1884 to Mr. Arthur Stannard, a civil engineer, and has three children. The following is a list of her works:—"Cavalry Life," "Regimental Legends," "Bootles' Baby," "Houp-la," "Pluck," "In Quarters," "On March," "Army Society," "Garrison Gossip," "Mignon's Secret," "That Imp," "Mignon's Husband," "A Siege Baby," "Confessions of a Publisher," "Bootles' Children," "Beautiful Jim," "My Poor Dick," "Harvest," "A Little Fool," "Buttons," "Mrs. Bob," "Dinna Forget," "Ferrers Court," "He went for a Soldier," "The Other Man's Wife," "Good-Bye," "Lumley the Painter," "Mere Luck," "Only Human," "My Geoff," "A Soldier's Children," "Three Girls," "That Mrs. Smith!" "Aunt Johnnie," "A Man's Man," "The Soul of the Bishop." Mrs. Stannard presented the entire copyright of "A Soldier's Children" to the Victoria Hospital for Children.

STANSFELD, The Right Hon. James, M.P., the eldest son of Mr. James Stansfeld, of Moorlands, Judge of the County Court of Yorkshire, at Halifax (who died Jan. 29, 1872), was born at Halifax in 1820, and educated at University College, London, where he attained the degree of LL.B. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1840; was elected one of the members for Halifax, in the advanced Liberal interest, in April, 1859; was appointed a Lord of the Admiralty in April, 1863, and resigned in April, 1864, owing to the dissatisfaction caused by his intimacy with the conspirator Mazzini. He was appointed Under-Secretary of State under Lord Russell's second Administration, in Feb. 1866, and retired in June of that year. He was made Third Lord of the Treasury on Mr. Gladstone's coming into office in Dec. 1868, and in Oct. 1869, he succeeded Mr. Ayrton as one of the joint Secretaries to the Treasury. The latter office he resigned in March, 1871, when he succeeded Mr. Goschen as President of the Poor Law Board. He was appointed the first President of the new Local Government Board in Aug. 1871, and held that office till the resignation of Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet in Jan. 1874. Mr. Stansfeld supported Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule policy, and in 1886, on the resignation of Mr. Chamberlain, succeeded him as President of the Local Government Board, re-entering the Cabinet for the first time for twelve years. He has continued to sit for Halifax since 1859. He is one of the panel of Chairmen of Standing Committees, but holds no office in the present Government. Mr. Stansfeld is chiefly known throughout the country for his opposition to the Contagious Diseases Acts, and his support of woman's suffrage.

STANTON, Vincent Henry, son of Rev. V. J. Stanton, late Rector of Halesworth, Suffolk, and formerly Colonial Chaplain of Victoria, Hong Kong, is descended, on the mother's side, from Robert Barclay, of Ury, and was born at Victoria, Hong Kong, June 1, 1846. He was educated at Kensington Grammar School, and by private tuition; was Minor Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge, 1866; Major Scholar 1868; B.A. 1870 (20th Wrangler and 2nd class in Classical Tripos); M.A. 1873; B.D. 1890; D.D. 1891; and Fellow of Trinity College, 1872. He was ordained deacon 1872, and priest 1874; appointed one of the first University Extension Lecturers on the commencement of the scheme in 1873; was Junior Dean of Trinity College 1874-76; Senior Dean 1876-84; Tutor 1884-89; Divinity Lecturer at Trinity 1882-89; Ely Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge, and Canon of Ely, 1889; Select Preacher before the University in 1874, 1878, &c.; Hulsean Lecturer 1879; Cambridge Whitehall Preacher 1880-81; Examining Chaplain from 1875 to two successive Bishops of Ely. He has for some years taken an active part in college and university business, and is the author of "The Jewish and the Christian Messiah, a Study in the Earliest History of Christianity;" "The Place of Authority in Matters of Religious Belief;" and of various sermons and pamphlets.

STAPLETON, Augustus Granville, born in 1800, was educated at Rugby, and St. John's, Cambridge. He was appointed private secretary to Mr. Canning in 1822. At that statesman's death he was made a Commissioner of Customs by desire of George IV., as "a tribute to Mr. Canning's memory," and having been entrusted with Canning's papers, he published, in 1830, his "Political Life during his last tenure of office." Mr. Stapleton contributed letters on foreign policy, signed "Sulpicius," to the Times during April and May, 1836. He contested Birmingham (without success) at the election in 1837. In 1843 he published two pamphlets on Ireland. From 1850 to 1855 he contributed letters on foreign policy and international law, signed "Lex Publica," to the Morning Herald. He published in 1850 "Suggestions for a Conservative and Popular Reform of the House of Commons," advising a distinct and separate representation in Parliament of the educated classes. This was followed by a pamphlet on "The Educational Franchise." He was invited in 1851, by the friends of Protestant education in Ireland, to examine the schools under the National Board and the Church Education Society, and he gave evidence (1853) before a Committee of the House of Lords as to the result of his inquiry. In 1857 he published a pamphlet, "Hostilities at Canton," on the Lorcha Arrow case, and in 1859, "George Canning and his Times;" in 1866, "Intervention and Non-Intervention;" in 1868, "The Origin of Fenianism;" in 1871, "The French Case truly stated," showing how the French Government were beguiled into the declaration of war against Prussia; and in 1873, essays in Macmillan's Magazine, commenting, from a contemporary point of view, on Charles Greville's Memoirs.

STEAD, William Thomas, was born at Embleton, Northumberland, on July 5, 1849; and is the son of a Congregational Minister who, a few months later, settled in Howdon-on-Tyne. Mr. Stead was educated at home and at Wakefield. He left school when 14; became office boy in a mercantile office, then Russian Vice-Consulate at Newcastle-on-Tyne; was appointed editor of the Northern Echo, a halfpenny daily paper published at Darlington, July, 1871; assistant editor to Mr. J. Morley on the Pall Mall Gazette, Sept. 1880; succeeded to the control of the paper in the spring of 1883; resigned the editorship Dec. 31, 1889; and is now editing and publishing the Review of Reviews, a sixpenny monthly, founded by him in Jan. 1890. As editor of the Pall Mall Gazette he was said by Mr. Matthew Arnold to have invented the "New Journalism," naturalized the interview in the English press, introduced illustrations into the daily newspaper, and established the Pall Mall Extras. It was his interview with General Gordon at Southampton which led to the mission to Khartoum. His "Truth about the Navy and its Coaling Stations" marked the beginning of the revival of our Naval Supremacy. In July, 1885, Mr. Stead published "The Maiden Tribute of Modern Babylon," an exposure of crimes against women and children, for which the law provided no remedy. The immediate result was the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1885. Mr. Stead visited Ireland in 1886, and published "No Reduction, No Rent, a Plea for the Plan of Campaign." In 1888 he visited Russia, of which country he has been the foremost advocate in the English press, and published on his return "Truth About Russia," in one volume. In 1889 he went to the Vatican to report on the attitude of the Pope to the new era, and published a work on that subject in Jan. 1890. On Jan. 15, 1890, having terminated his editorship of the Pall Mall Gazette, he brought out the first number of the mid-monthly Review of Reviews, and a few months afterwards became its sole proprietor, as well as editor. On July 15, 1893, he brought out the first number of Borderland, a quarterly devoted to the study of psychical phenomena. He has also carried on a vigorous propaganda in many cities and towns with a view to the establishment of what he has styled "The Civic Church," an organisation or federation of religious, philanthropical, industrial, and other bodies in a given town in furtherance of its civic welfare, a voluntary ethical advisary counterpart of the Town Council. In the same year he visited the World's Fair at Chicago, and published a book, "If Christ came to Chicago," on the latter city, which has run through several editions.

STEDMAN, Edmund Clarence, was born at Hartford, Connecticut, Oct. 8, 1833. He is a graduate of Yale College, 1853; A.M. of Yale and of Dartmouth; and L.H.D. of Columbia. After some experience on the Connecticut press, he obtained a position, in 1859, in the New York Tribune office. During the Civil War he was a war correspondent of the New York World. In 1865 he left journalism, and went into business in Wall Street, in order to obtain the means and time for purely literary work. Besides his contributions to the Atlantic, Century, and other periodicals, he has published "Poems," 1860, 1873; "Alice of Monmouth," 1864; "The Blameless Prince," 1869; a volume of essays on "Victorian Poets," 1875; "Octavius Brooks Frothingham and the New Faith," 1876; "Hawthorne and other Poems," 1877; "Lyrics and Idyls" (London), 1879; "Edgar Allen Poe," 1880; and a collection of his "Poetical Works," 1884. In 1885 his "Poets of America" appeared, and in 1887 the thirteenth edition of "Victorian Poets," extended to the fiftieth year of Her Majesty's reign. From 1883 he was engaged, with Ellen M. Hutchinson, in the compilation of "A Library of American Literature," an inclusive work, of which the eleventh and final volume appeared in 1890. He initiated the newly-founded Turnbull Lectureship on Poetry, at Johns Hopkins University, with the opening course of lectures, early in 1891. These lectures were repeated at the University of Columbia, New York, in 1892, and gained him his doctorate from that corporation. In the same year they were published in book form, and entitled "The Nature and Elements of Poetry." Upon the death of Prof. Lowell, 1891, he succeeded to the Presidency of the American Copyright League, a station which he still holds.

of Music since 1867, was educated at Liverpool. As a child she was remarkable for her extraordinary vocal powers, having then a high soprano of great natural flexibility. She studied music and composition under Mr. Toms, of the Royal Academy, and achieved early a great proficiency on the pianoforte under Mr. Walter Macfarren. At sixteen she came up to London, and her rare musical sensibility and great natural facility seemed to point her out as destined to become a pianiste of the first order, but, after a successful début at St. James's Hall, her wrists gave signs of weakness, which made the needful practising impossible. Meanwhile, she had prosecuted her vocal studies with such success, that a brilliant career in the concert room or on the stage seemed open to her. But here, too, she was doomed to disappointment, for no sooner had she appeared once or twice in public, and won golden opinions, than her throat also proved unequal to the excessive strain now put upon professional singing, and she had to abandon this second career also. But so exceptionally gifted a musician could not be allowed to leave the Royal Academy, so her services were retained unofficially by Signor Randegger, and for some years she was chiefly engaged in preparing his pupils. At a late meeting of the Tenterden Street Committee, with the full approval of Principal Mackenzie, and the warm support of Signor Randegger, it was decided to offer Miss Steel the post of Lady Professor of Singing at the Academy, which she accepted, and is at present the only lady Professor at the Royal Academy of Music.

STEERE, The Hon. Sir James George Lee, third son of Lee Steere, Esq., of Jayes, Surrey, was born in 1830, and was educated at the Clapham Grammar School. He emigrated to Western Australia in 1860; became Justice of the Peace, 1861; has been Member of the Legislative Council since 1868; Member of the Executive Council since 1884; Member of the Federal Council of Australasia since 1885; and Speaker of the Legislative Council since 1886. He received the honour of knighthood 1888. Sir J. G. L. Steere married, in 1859, Kate, the only daughter of the late Luke Leake, Esq., of Perth, Western Australia.

STEINITZ, William, was born May 14, 1836, at Prague, Bohemia, where he was also educated, finishing his studies, however, at the Polytechnic Institute, Vienna. He early attained distinction as a chess-player, and by his defeat of the late Professor Anderssen in 1866 won the match championship of the world, a position which he has held against all contestants to the present time. He has gained every single-handed match, or series played since 1862 and either first or second place (or been tied for first or second) in every tournament he has entered since 1867. His average score in tournaments has been the highest, and in any single one, his score has been the best. Among the tournaments in which he has taken part have been those held in Dublin, 1865, Paris, 1867, Dundee, 1867, Baden, 1870, London, 1872-1883, Vienna, 1873 and 1882; and among the well-known players he has been matched against are Anderssen, Blackburne, Bird, Gunsberg, Zukertort, Martinez, Mackenzie, Tschigorin, Golmayo, and Vasquez. In 1883 he settled in the United States, where, since 1885, he has been the editor of the International Chess Magazine. In 1889 he published the first part of a work entitled the "Modern Chess Instructor."

STEPHEN, Sir George, Bart., was born at Dufftown, Scotland, in June, 1829; emigrated to Canada in 1850; became a merchant in Montreal, and amassed an immense fortune. In 1878 he was made President of the Bank of Montreal. In 1887, as a memorial of Her Majesty's Jubilee, he and Sir Donald Smith gave a quarter of a million of pounds sterling to found the Victoria Hospital in Montreal. In the year previous to this munificent gift he was created a baronet for his public services in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

STEPHEN, Leslie, M.A., son of the late Rt. Hon. Sir James Stephen, the author of "Essays on Ecclesiastical Biography," and brother of the Hon. Sir James Fitzjames Stephen, was born at Kensington, Nov. 28, 1832, and educated at Eton College and at King's College, London, whence he proceeded to Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1854 and M.A. in 1857. For several years he was Fellow and Tutor of Trinity Hall. In 1864 Mr. Stephen left Cambridge, and since then he has been actively engaged in literary pursuits in London. He was editor of the Cornhill Magazine from 1871 till 1882, when he resigned that post in order to undertake the responsible task of editing the important "Dictionary of National Biography," which is in course of publication in a series of quarterly volumes. In May, 1883, he was elected to the Lectureship of English Literature at Cambridge, founded in honour of the late W. G. Clark, of Trinity College, but he held the office for only a year. His separate publications are:—"The Playground of Europe," 1871; "Hours in a Library," 1st series, 1874, 2nd series, 1876, 3rd series, 1879; "Essays on Freethinking and Plain Speaking," 1873; "History of English Thought in the 18th Century," 1876; "The Science of Ethics," 1882; and "Johnson," "Pope," and "Swift," in "English Men of Letters." He edited Fielding's works, "with a biographical essay," 10 vols., 1882. His latest book is "The Life of Henry Fawcett," 1885. Mr. Leslie Stephen has also contributed numerous articles to the Saturday Review and the Pall Mall Gazette. Mr. Stephen married Harriet Marion, younger daughter of Mr. William Makepeace Thackeray, the celebrated novelist. (This lady died in 1875.) He married, secondly, in 1878, Julia Prinsep Duckworth.

STEPHENS, Professor George, LL.D., Ph.D., till Jan. 1, 1864, Professor of English language and literature in the University of Copenhagen, son of the Rev. John Stephens, and his wife, Rebecca Eliza Rayner, of Ongar, Essex, who died in 1857. He was a Wesleyan minister and President of the Conference, but always held fast to the Church of England. He died in London in 1841. They had twelve children, of whom George is the last survivor. For the career of his brother Joseph, see the Life by G. J. Holyoake, 1881. George Stephens was born in Liverpool, Dec. 13, 1813, educated in several English public and private schools, and in University College, London. He showed an early bias for language, especially for his own, and wandered over many British and Scandinavian provinces to study the local dialects. Pecuniary accidents having prevented his final career in Oxford, he married, Jan. 16, 1834, Maria Bennett, daughter of Edward and Elizabeth Bennett, of Brentwood, in Essex. He then settled in Stockholm, Sweden, to learn the origins of English in the folk-talks and literature of our Scandinavian homeland. In 1851 he was appointed Lector (afterwards Professor) of Old-English (Anglo-Saxon) and English in the University of Copenhagen (Kjöbenhavn, Cheapinghaven, Denmark), lecturing—always in English—as "Professor of the English Language and Literature." His activity as a writer has been so great, that we cannot here give the titles of even a tithe of his publications. It embraces prose and poetical contributions to literature in general, history, folk-lore, old-lore, linguistics, and runology. A list up to 1865 may be seen in his biography in the Danish work, "Supplement til Almindelight Forfatter-Lexicon," by Erslev, vol. iii., Kjöbenhavn, 1868, pp. 268-278. But in addition to the above-mentioned list, we may point out a few things later than 1865. For instance, "Macbeth," 1876, which shows how a Swedish Runic stone identifies the last battle-field of that Scottish king; "Thunor the Thunderer," 1878, explaining a remarkable Swedish Font (about A.D. 1000), sculptured with antique Christian symbolism; "Some Runic Stones in Northern Sweden," and "On the Dialect of the First Book printed in Swedish," both in "Nova Acta Reg. Soc. Scient. Upsal," 1879; profusely illustrated "Studies on Northern Mythology;" "The Old-Northern Runic Monuments of Scandinavia and England," folio, with hundreds of illustrations, some of them in gold and colours, vol. i., 1866-67, vol. ii., 1867-68, vol. iii., 1884. A 4th volume will follow, should funds and life permit. "Handbook of the Old-Northern Runic Monuments," 4to, 1884; with all the O.N. engravings and translations, but a very short text; "The Oldest yet found Document in Danish," all in the later Runes on a small leaden tablet. (In "Mémoires des Antiquaires du Nord," 1887.) "Cantata, at the Copenhagen University Festival, Nov. 17, 1888," translated in the metre of the original poem by Carl Ploug. Professor Stephens is F.S.A., Lond.; Honorary Dr. of Philosophy of the University, Upsala; Honorary Doctor of Letters, Cambridge; Honorary Member of many learned academies and societies at home and abroad; Knight-Commander of the North Star, Sweden; Knight of the Order of St. Olaf, Norway; Knight of the Danebrog, and also Danebrogsman, Denmark.

STEPHENS, The Very Rev. William Richard Wood, the newly-appointed Dean of Winchester, was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, taking his degree with a first class in the Final Classical Schools in 1862. Two years later he was ordained by the Bishop of London to the Curacy of Staines, and since 1870 his work has lain in the diocese of Chichester. For three years Mr. Stephens was Vicar of Mid-Lavant, and in 1876 was presented to the Rectory of Woolbeding. His association with Chichester dates from 1872, when he became a Lecturer at the Theological College, and three years later was appointed to a non-residentiary stall in the Cathedral. He is the author, amongst other works, of "Memorials of the See and Cathedral of Chichester," "Cathedral Chapters considered at Diocesan Councils," "History of the Diocese of Chichester," and a Biography of Dr. Hook, the Vicar of Leeds, and afterwards Dean of Chichester, who was his father-in-law, and a Life of Lord Hatherley. In 1872 he published "St. John Chrysostom; his Life and Times," and a few years ago translated the "Treatises and Letters of Chrysostom." The Dean, who represented the diocese in the Lower House of Convocation from 1880 to 1886, is a High Churchman.

STEPHENSON, Sir Augustus Keppel, K.C.B., was born in London, Oct. 18, 1827, and is the son of the late Henry Frederick Stephenson, Barrister-at-Law, formerly M.P. for Westbury, and a Commissioner of Inland Revenue, and the Lady Mary Keppel, daughter of William Charles, fourth Earl of Albemarle. He was educated privately, and at Caius College, Cambridge, where he took his M.A. degree in 1849, and was called to the Bar as barrister-at-law of Lincoln's Inn, 1852; for two years he was Marshall and Associate in the Court of Queen's Bench to the Lord Chief Justice Campbell; went the Norfolk Circuit; was a Revising Barrister and Recorder of Bedford; appointed Assistant-Solicitor of the Treasury by Earl Russell in 1865; ad interim Registrar of Friendly Societies by Mr. Lowe, when Chancellor of the Exchequer; appointed Solicitor to the Treasury in 1876; and Her Majesty's Procurator-General, 1877, by Mr. Disraeli, when First Lord of the Treasury; Director of Public Prosecutions by Statute 47 & 48 Vic. cap. 58, 1884. He was created a C.B. on the recommendation of Mr. Gladstone, when First Lord of the Treasury in 1883, and a K.C.B on the same recommendation in 1886. Sir Augustus Stephenson was made Queen's Counsel in 1889, on the recommendation of Lord Chancellor Halsbury, and retired from his official position as Public Prosecutor in 1894. He married, in 1864, Eglantine, second daughter of the late Right Hon. Edward Pleydell Bouverie.

STEPHENSON, Rev. Thomas Bowman, B.A., Lond., D.D., LL.D. (Hon.), minister of the Wesleyan-Methodist Church, was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne in the year 1839. His father, the Rev. John Stephenson, was a minister of the same Church. Dr. Stephenson was educated at Wesley College, Sheffield; and graduated at the University of London in 1860. His first clerical appointment was to Norwich, where he took part in the then novel experiment of theatre preaching. Removing to Manchester in 1862, he threw himself into the various labours rendered necessary by the Cotton Famine; and then, and subsequently at Bolton, his attention was turned to those social and philanthropic problems which have specially engrossed his subsequent years. He held two charges in London; and in the year 1869 commenced the great group of institutions known as the Children's Home, by opening for waif lads a small cottage in Lambeth. He was a member of the second School Board for London; is an ardent "Temperance Reformer," and connected with several of the leading philanthropic societies. He has travelled extensively in many parts of the British Empire; has promoted, for many years, emigration, especially that of children, to Canada. He was elected in July, 1891, to succeed Dr. Moulton as President of the Wesleyan-Methodist Conference.

STEPNIAK, Sergius Michael Dragomanoff, was born in 1841 at Hadjatsch, in the Ukraine Mountains, in the government of Poltawa, and comes of a semi-noble family descended from the Cossacks of Little Russia. He studied at Kieff from 1859 to 1863. In that time he published several works in the Little Russian dialect, which were prohibited by the Government in 1862. In 1865 he became docent in ancient history in the University of Kieff, and in 1870 he became a Professor, but was removed from his chair by the Government three years later. His criticisms on the system pursued by Count Tolstoi, one of the Ministers of Justice, led to his exile in 1876. He went to Geneva then and settled there, producing popular writings in the Little Russian dialect. In 1877 he began a series of reviews in the Ukraine dialect called "Hromada," which means "common things." At the same time he worked hard for the establishment of equal political rights for all people in Russia, and declared against Socialism as well as Absolutism. Some of the principal works which Stepniak has produced are: "The Turks Within and Without," "Tyrannicide in Russia," and "Little Russian Internationalism." He has also contributed to the magazines some papers on "East European Peoples, and the Propaganda of Socialism," and "Historical Poland and the Muscovite Democracy." He is also known for his works on the ethnography, history, and literature of Little Russia, and, with M.

Antonowitch, has edited a collection of Little Russian folk-songs.

STERLING, Antoinette. See MACKINLAY, MRS. JOHN.

STERNBERG, George Miller, Surgeon-General of the U. S. Army, was born in Hartwick Seminary, Otsego Co., N.Y., June 8, 1838. He graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City in 1860, and was appointed Assistant-Surgeon in the U.S. Army in 1861. In 1875 he was made a Surgeon, with the rank of Major; in 1891, Deputy-Surgeon-General, with the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel; and in 1893 Surgeon-General, with the rank of Brigadier-General. The National Board of Health appointed him, in 1879, Secretary of the Havana Yellow Fever Commission; the Secretary of State sent him, in 1885, as a delegate from the United States to the International Sanitary Conference at Rome; and, in 1885-87, he was detailed by the American President to make investigations in Brazil, Mexico, and Cuba relating to the ætiology and prevention of yellow fever. By authority of the War Department he was, at the special request of the New York Chamber of Commerce, made consulting bacteriologist to the Health Officer of the Port of New York in 1892. He is an honorary member of the Academies of Medicine of Rome, Rio Janeiro, and Havana, the American Academy of Medicine, and of the Epidemiological Society of London, an Associate member of the French Society of Hygiene, a Fellow of the Royal Microscopical Society of London and of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, ex-president of the American Public Health Association, and is a member of many other scientific bodies. The Lomb prize of 500 dols. was awarded him in 1885 for his essay on "Disinfectants" by the American Public Health Association, and he has invented automatic heat-regulating apparatus. Besides numerous contributions to scientific journals he has published "Photo-Micrographs," 1883; "Bacteria," 1884; "Malaria and Malarial Diseases," 1884; and "A Manual of Bacteriology," 1892.

STEVENSON, Hon. Adlai E., Vice-President of the United States, was born in Christian County, Kentucky, Oct. 23, 1835, but removed in 1852 to Bloomington, Ill. He was educated at Centre College, Kentucky, and at the Illinois Wesleyan University; studied law and began its practice at Metamora, Illinois, in 1858. From 1861 to 1865 he was Master in Chancery of Woodford County; from 1865 to 1869 States Attorney; from 1875 to 1879 Member of Congress; from 1885 to 1889 First Assistant Postmaster-General; and since 1893 Vice-President.

STEVENSON, David Watson, R.S.A., was born in 1842 at Ratho, a few miles to the west of Edinburgh; and began his artistic life under the late William Brodie, R.S.A., in November 1857, devoting himself from the first with the enthusiasm characteristic of his countrymen, alike to his work in the studio during the day and to his studies in the evening and during every leisure hour. Under Mr. Brodie he remained eight years, receiving every encouragement; and, although not a pupil, he had opportunities of acquiring varied experience in all the departments of Sculpture. During the first half of that period he attended the School of Art under the Board of Manufactures for Scotland, a copy of "The Venus of Melos," made in his last session at the School, was published by the Board, and largely subscribed for by the members. Admission to the life school of the Royal Scottish Academy having been gained in the usual way, he continued his studies there for about four years, at the same time studying anatomy. In the Exhibition of the Royal Scottish Academy for 1859, a juvenile work by Mr. Stevenson had, by a stretch of indulgence, been accepted; it was followed, however, next year by better work, and Mr. Stevenson has continued a regular contributor to the Annual Exhibitions of the Academy, of which body he was elected an Associate in 1877, and an Academician in 1886. In 1886, without friends and with a small sum which he had saved, augmented by £20 lent by his mother, and afterwards amply repaid, he began work on his own account; his first sitters being Mr. J. H. A. Macdonald, afterwards Lord Advocate, now Lord Justice Clerk, and Mrs. Millar, wife of Lord Craighill. The figure of a youth modelled at this time attracted the attention of Mr., afterwards Sir John, Steell, R.S.A., Her Majesty's Sculptor for Scotland, who, on the death of George Maccallum in October 1868, commissioned him to execute the life-size group representing "Labour" at one of the angles of the Prince Consort Memorial, Edinburgh, primarily entrusted to that promising young sculptor, but by him only carried the length of the first sketch, and which was then begun de novo. The execution of this group proving satisfactory to the Committee, it was immediately followed by the commission to carry out the companion group representing "Learning," and on the unveiling of the memorial by the Queen in August, 1876, he had the honour, along with the other artists who had been engaged upon the work, of being presented to Her Majesty. In the spring of 1876, while alterations were being effected in the studio, and preparations made for carrying out this important undertaking, he paid a long-desired visit to Rome, modelling while there a life-size statue of Eve, a design for which he had carried with him. He modelled a statue to Tannahill, the poet, which was erected at Paisley; and a colossal statue of Wallace for the national monument to the hero and patriot on the Abbey Craig, Stirling; where are also, in the interior of the tower, a series of busts in marble, also by Mr. Stevenson, of eminent Scotsmen, beginning with that of King Robert the Bruce, not altogether ideal, being based on the cast taken from the bones of the head found in the grave of the King in Dunfermline Abbey. The series includes busts of Knox, Buchanan, Adam Smith, Burns, Scott, Watt, Tannahill, Thomas Chalmers, and Hugh Miller. A statue of Knox also was executed for Haddington. In the intervals between these larger works, various ideal figures were executed, including a "Nymph at the Stream," a seated figure now in the Art Gallery at Oldham. He executed also a statue in marble of "Lady Godiva," one of "Echo," in movement; and one of "Galatea." A group of a "Pompeian Mother," attracted the attention of the Prince of Wales at the International Exhibition of 1886 at Edinburgh. In 1881 Mr. Stevenson was one of the successful competitors in the first competition for four groups of statuary for Blackfriars Bridge, London; his design "India visits Britain" being awarded the third premium by the assessors, among whom were Sir Frederick Leighton, P.R.A., Mr. W. Calder Marshall, the veteran sculptor, and other members of the Royal Academy. Mr. Stevenson has executed numerous portrait busts of eminent men, among the more recent being Sir John Fowler, Bart., the well-known engineer, exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1889, and Mr., now Sir William, Arrol, the constructor of the Forth Bridge.

STEWART, General Sir Donald Martin, Bart., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., C.I.E., was born in 1824. He received his education at the University of Aberdeen, and entered the Bengal Staff Corps in 1840. He served against the Hill Tribes in the Peshawur district in 1854 and 1855, when he was honourably mentioned in the despatches. In May and June, 1857, at the outbreak of the Sepoy Mutiny, he commanded the volunteers serving in the Allyghur district. When all communication with the Upper Provinces was cut off, Captain Stewart volunteered to carry despatches from the Government of the North-West Provinces to the officer commanding at Delhi. This he performed with success, and on his arrival at the camp before Delhi he was appointed Deputy Assistant-Adjutant-General, in which capacity he served with the field force throughout the siege of Delhi. He was again mentioned in despatches with signal approval, and was promoted to the brevet rank of Major. He afterwards served in the siege of Lucknow as Assistant-Adjutant-General, and throughout the campaign in Rohilcund. His services on this occasion were further recognised, and he obtained a brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, with the medal and two clasps. In the Abyssinian Expedition of 1867-68 Colonel Stewart commanded the Bengal Brigade, and commanded for some time at Zulla and Senafé. He was then rewarded with the title of C.B. He attained the rank of Lieutenant-General in 1877. He was in command of the Candahar column of operations in the Afghan campaign from Nov., 1878, to April, 1880, and for his services received the thanks of Parliament and was made K.C.B. He commanded the field force which marched from Candahar to Cabul in April, 1880, fought and defeated the Afghans at Ahmed Kheyl, and again at Oorzoo. General Stewart subsequently held supreme command of the army in Northern Afghanistan, and after dispatching Sir Frederick Roberts to the relief of Candahar, he carried out the withdrawal of the British Army from Cabul and Northern Afghanistan. For these services he received the thanks of Parliament, and was made G.C.B. and baronet. In Sept., 1880, he was appointed Member of the Council of the Governor-General, and in April, 1881, succeeded Sir F. Haines as Commander-in-Chief in India. Sir D. Stewart is now a member of the Indian Council. He was made a Field-Marshal in Nov., 1894.

STEWART, Thomas Grainger, M.D., born in Edinburgh, Sept. 23, 1837, was educated at the High School and University of Edinburgh, and after graduating, studied in the Universities and Hospitals of Berlin, Prague, and Vienna, especially under Virchow, Rokitansky, and Oppolzer. On his return to Edinburgh he became Resident Physician in the Royal Infirmary, and there made observations upon the diagnosis of certain forms of kidney disease, which attracted considerable attention. As a result of this work he was, in 1862, appointed Pathologist to the Royal Infirmary, and Lecturer on Pathology at Surgeons' Hall. During the succeeding seven years he published numerous papers on pathological and clinical subjects, and in 1869 unsuccessfully contested the chair of General Pathology in the University of Edinburgh. He then resigned the Pathologistship and the Physicianship to the Royal Hospital for Sick Children, and was elected Ordinary Physician to the Royal Infirmary and Lecturer on Clinical Medicine. In 1876, he was appointed Professor of the Practice of Physic in the University of Edinburgh. Dr. Stewart is the author of a book on "Bright's Diseases of the Kidneys," which has passed through two editions in this country, and two in America. The views embodied in this work have been to a large extent accepted on the Continent as well as in this country. He has also published a volume of Lectures on the Nervous System, and three Lectures on Giddiness, and fifteen on Albuminuria, being the first and second of a series of Clinical Studies on Important Symptoms, as well as many papers, particularly on the nervous system, the lungs, and the liver. He is a Deputy-Lieutenant, and a member of many learned societies at home and abroad, an Honorary Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians of Ireland, and M.D. (honoris causâ) of the Royal University, and received the like honour from the University of Dublin, on the occasion of the Tercentenary of Trinity College. He has been President of the Royal College of Physicians, and of the Medico-Chirurgical Society of Edinburgh, and of the Medicine section of the British Medical Association, and was one of the Honorary Presidents of the Berlin International Congress. He has for many years taken a special interest in the Medical Students' Christian Association, and in the Medical Missionary Society. In 1882 he was appointed Physician in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen in Scotland.

STIGAND, William, son of the late William Stigand, Esq., of Devonport, born in 1827, was educated at Shrewsbury and St. John's College, Cambridge. After studying the Equity branch of the profession of the law, he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in June, 1852. He has written "A Vision of Barbarossa, and other Poems," 1860; "Athenais; or, the First Crusade," 1866; and "Life, Work, and Opinions of Heinrich Heine," 2 vols., 1875. Mr. Stigand has contributed largely to the Quarterly and Edinburgh Reviews, the Times, and other periodicals; he entered the British Consular Service as Vice-Consul of Boulogne-sur-Mer in 1873, and has been successively Consul at Ragusa, Königsberg and Palermo.

STIRLING, Mrs., an accomplished and versatile actress, daughter of the late Capt. Hehl, of the Horse Guards, born in Queen Street, Mayfair, in 1817, was educated at a convent in France, and on her return home, finding that her family had fallen into pecuniary difficulties, she determined, although then but sixteen years of age, to try her fortune upon the stage. Adopting the name of Miss Fanny Clifton, she obtained an engagement at the East London Theatre, at which her reception was encouraging, attributable in no small degree to her handsome person and musical voice. This was followed by a better engagement at the Pavilion, where she met Mr. Edward Stirling, the stage manager, to whom she was soon afterwards married. Mrs. Stirling's next professional engagement was with Mr. Davidge, of the Liverpool Theatre, where she remained one season, went to Birmingham, and soon after returned to London, and played at the Adelphi in "Victorine," "The Dream at Sea," and other new pieces. About this time she accepted an engagement for three years under Mr. Macready, at Drury Lane, where she obtained important parts, and won her way to popularity. Her next engagement was at the Princess's, where she took leading Shakspearian characters, both tragic and comic; and amongst these her Cordelia was regarded as the most successful, though in Rosalind, Desdemona, and Portia her talents were displayed to great advantage. Mrs. Stirling's engagements at the Olympic and at the Strand Theatres, under Mr. Farren, and her later performances at the Haymarket, Adelphi, and St. James's Theatres, were attended with great success, especially in the prominent parts of Lady Teazle, in Sheridan's comedy of "The School for Scandal," Lady Gay Spanker, Maritana, the Widow Green, Mrs. Bracegirdle, in the "Tragic Queen," and Peg Woffington. Her later rôles have been the Nurse in "Romeo and Juliet," and Martha in "Faust," both at the Lyceum. Mrs. Stirling finally retired from the stage in 1886.

STIRLING, The Hon. Sir James, a Judge in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, was born in 1836; called to the Bar in 1862; junior Counsel to the Treasury in 1881; Member of the Bar Committee in 1883; and was raised to the Bench in 1886.

STIRLING, James Hutchison, F.R.C.S., and LL.D. Edin., born at Glasgow, June 22, 1820, was educated at Glasgow University for nine consecutive winter sessions in arts and medicine, and spent six years afterwards in France and Germany. He became LL.D. of Edinburgh, 1867; and a Foreign Member of the Philosophical Society of Berlin, 1871. In earlier days he held appointments as surgeon to the Hirwain and other iron and coal works, South Wales, but he relinquished professional practice in 1851, and went to the Continent to pursue there those literary and philosophical studies for which, as a student at college, he had shown a taste, and in which he had gained distinction. Returning to England in 1857, he devoted himself to the study of philosophy and literary pursuits generally. Leaving earlier contributions out of view, he published in 1865 "The Secret of Hegel," from the appearance of which work there dates in Great Britain, academically and generally, a new movement towards the study of philosophy, more particularly German and ancient. The following are the titles of his other works:—"Sir William Hamilton, or the Philosophy of Perception," 1865; "Schwegler's History of Philosophy, translated and annotated," 1867 (eleventh edit., 1891); "Jerrold, Tennyson, and Macaulay, with other Critical Essays," 1868; "Address on Materialism," 1868; "As Regards Protoplasm," 1869 (second edit. 1872); "Lectures on the Philosophy of Law, &c.," 1873; "Burns in Drama, together with Saved Leaves," 1878; "Text-Book to Kant," 1881; "Of Philosophy in the Poets," "The Community of Property," 1885; "Thomas Carlylé's Counsels," 1886. In 1888 he was the first appointed Gifford Lecturer; and, as such, he delivered, in the two subsequent sessions, courses of lectures on Natural Theology to the University of Edinburgh. These lectures, under the title of "Philosophy and Theology," were published in 1890. In 1894 he published his "Darwinianism: Workmen and Work." He has also contributed to periodicals.

STOCKHAUSEN, Julius, was born in Paris, July 22, 1825. His father was a harpist, and his mother a well-known singer. Intended at first for the priestly calling, he received his early education at the school of Gebwiller in Alsace, and subsequently attended the College in Strasbourg. His mother's success at a farewell concert given in Basle, however, changed the course of his life, and in 1845 he went with his father to Paris, and there became the pupil of Hallé and Stamaty for piano, and of the famous Garcia for singing. In 1848 he sang the part of Elijah in Basle, and with such success that from that time he gave himself up entirely to singing. In 1849 he came to England, where he continued his studies with Garcia, and in 1851 sang in the 9th Symphony in London. From 1857-59 he was engaged at the Opéra Comique in Paris, where he specially distinguished himself in the part of the Sénéchal in Boieldieu's "Jean de Paris." There he formed a close friendship with Ary Scheffer, the painter, in whose house, together with Berlioz, Duprez, Pauline Viardot and Saint-Saëns, German music was diligently cultivated. Concert tours followed in 1859-62. At Leipzig and Cologne he sang Schumann's "Faust" for the first time. In 1869 he entered on the second period of his musical activity as leader of the Hamburg Philharmonic Society; and in 1874, as director of the famous Stern Choral Society in Berlin. Great as his success as a leader and teacher has been, Stockhausen's musical importance culminates in his achievements as a singer. His technique was perfect, and he had such mastery over his instrument that the purity of tone and the intellectual expression never had to be sacrificed the one to the other. The astonishing distinction of his pronunciation, as well as its beauty and intellectual significance, was due to a complete understanding of the nature of the elements of speech. Nowhere was the slightest trace to be detected of a mere seeking after effect, or a display of the voice. As Joachim plays the violin, and Clara Schumann the piano, so does Stockhausen sing and interpret the thoughts of the great masters. Seldom, if ever, in singing has the reproductive art been distinguished for such purity, elevation, and dignity. In 1878 began the third period of his artistic career, that of a teacher, first at the newly-founded Hoch Conservatoire in Frankfort-on-Main, which, however, he quitted in the following year. Since then he has been at the head of a singing school of his own, and has repeatedly, up to the most recent date, himself sung in concerts and oratorios. His "Method of Singing," a very important work, was published in 1834 in Leipzig, and translated into English in 1888.

STOCKTON, Francis Richard, an American writer, was born at Philadelphia, April 5, 1834. He graduated from the Philadelphia Central High School in 1852, and began life as an engraver, but abandoned engraving to devote himself to journalism. His earliest writings were a number of fantastic tales for children contributed to the Riverside Magazine and other periodicals. He subsequently became connected with a daily paper in Philadelphia, and afterwards with Hearth and Home, New York. Later he joined the editorial staff of Scribner's Monthly (now The Century), and on the establishment of St. Nicholas became its assistant editor. His "Rudder Grange" papers, which appeared in Scribner's, were the first to attract general public attention, which he had successfully held by the novel character of the short stories for which he is chiefly celebrated. Among the best known of these are "The Lady or the Tiger," "The Transferred Ghost," "The Spectral Mortgage," "The Discourager of Hesitancy," "Negative Gravity," etc. He has also published novels entitled "The Late Mrs. Null," "The Hundredth Man," "Ardis Claverden," and "The House of Martha," besides "The Casting away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine," "The Dusantes," "The Merry Chanter," "The Great War Syndicate," "The Stories of the Three Burglars," and "The Squirrel Inn," which are novelettes.

STODDARD, Richard Henry, was born at Hingham, Mass., July 2, 1825. His family removed, in 1835, to New York, where he learned the trade of an ironmoulder. In 1848 he began to write for periodicals both in prose and verse. In 1853 he received an appointment in the New York Custom House, which he held until 1870, at the same time continuing his literary labours. He has published: "Footprints," 1849; "Poems," 1852; "Adventures in Fairy-Land," 1853; "Songs of Summer," and "Town and Country," 1857; "Life of Alexander von Humboldt," 1859; "Loves and Heroines of the Poets," 1860; "The King's Bell," 1863; "The Story of Little Red Riding-Hood," 1864; "Under Green Leaves," and "Late English Poets," 1865; "Melodies and Madrigals, mostly from the Old English Poets," 1865; "The Children in the Wood," 1866; "Putnam, the Brave," 1869; "The Book of the East, and other Poems," 1871; new and enlarged editions of "Griswold's Poets of America," 1873; "Female Poets of America," 1874; "Poets and Poetry of England in the Nineteenth Century," 1875; "Memoir of Edgar Allan Poe," 1875; "Poems," 1880; "Henry Wadsworth Longfellow," 1882; "The Lion's Cub, and other Verses," 1892; and "Under the Evening Lamp," 1893. He also edited a series of dainty works, entitled "Bric-a-Brac Series" (1874-75); and "Sans Souci Series," and more recently a number of volumes relating to English literary history and memorabilia. In conjunction with others he published in 1877 a volume, entitled "Poets' Homes." He was, for a short time after leaving the Custom House, City Librarian, and is now (1894) the literary editor of the New York Mail and Express. His wife, ELIZABETH D. (BARSTOW) STODDARD, born at Mattapoiset, Massachusetts, in 1823, is also a contributor to periodicals, and has published three novels: "The Morgesons," 1862; "Two Men," 1865; and "Temple House," 1867. These novels have recently been reprinted, "Two Men" and "Temple House" in 1888, and "The Morgesons" in 1889, and have met with great critical success.

STODDART, Andrew Ernest, Cricketer, was born in South Shields on March 11, 1863. He was privately educated, and did not enjoy the cricket training which is to be obtained at public schools and at the universities. Indeed, though he played, he was not remarkable at the game. As a young man, too, he devoted his best energies to football, and gained celebrity as a three-quarter before he was ever heard of as a cricketer. He first came into notice as a batsman at Hampstead, where he made some big scores for the Hampstead Club, and thus earned for himself a place in the Middlesex Eleven in the latter part of 1885. From that time to the present day, when he was playing football in Australia, he has been one of the finest bats in England, a bat second only to Dr. W. G. Grace. His most brilliant English season was in 1893, when both he and William Gunn scored over 2,000 runs each in first-class matches, a feat only previously equalled by Dr. W. G. Grace. In a match against Notts at Lord's that summer he scored 195, not out, and 124. This was his highest score in a first-class match up to that date, though when playing for Hampstead Club against The Stoics, in 1886, he made his record score, amounting to 485 in one innings. This was said to be the nighest individual innings ever played. In 1894 Mr. Stoddart took an English eleven over to Australia, and captained them throughout with brilliant success. In a match against All Australia, played at Melbourne on New Year's Day, 1895, he made 173. In the series of five matches between the English team and All Australia played on this tour, victory rested with the English team.

STOKES, Sir George Gabriel, Bart., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., ex-M.P., born Aug. 13, 1819, at Skreen, co. Sligo, was educated at Dr. Wall's school, in Dublin, at the Bristol College, and at Pembroke College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. in 1841, as Senior Wrangler, and was elected to a Fellowship. In 1849 he was appointed to the Lucasian Professorship of Mathematics, and in 1852 was awarded the Rumford Medal by the Royal Society (of which he had been chosen a member a few months before), in recognition of his services to the cause of science by his discovery of the change in the refrangibility of light. An account of this discovery will be found in the "Philosophical Transactions" for 1852. Mr. Stokes was chosen one of the Secretaries to the Royal Society in 1854, and President in 1885, on the retirement of Prof. Huxley, and was President of the British Association at the meeting at Exeter in 1869. He has contributed to the Transactions of several learned societies, and has delivered professorial lectures at Cambridge, and at the Museum of Practical Geology in London. He is an honorary Fellow of several foreign academies, and has received the Prussian order Pour le Mérite. He has also received the honorary degree of D.C.L. or LL.D. from the Universities of Oxford, Edinburgh, Dublin and Aberdeen. On the death of Mr. Beresford-Hope, in 1887, he was returned as one of the representatives in Parliament of Cambridge University, and sat till 1892. In 1889 he was created a Baronet of the United Kingdom; and in 1890 retired from the Presidency of the Royal Society, and was succeeded by Sir William Thomson. He has also more recently retired from the Committee of Solar Physics. In 1891 he published "Natural Theology," being the Gifford Lectures for the year, and has at various times contributed short articles on religious topics to periodical literature.

STOKES, Lieut.-General Sir John, K.C.B., son of the Rev. John Stokes, vicar of Cobham, Kent, was born there in 1825, and received his education at the Proprietary School, Rochester, and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. He entered the Royal Engineers as Second Lieutenant in 1843, and saw active service in the Caffre War of 1846-47, and received the thanks of the Commander-in-Chief on two occasions, and again in 1850-51. In 1851 he was appointed to act as Deputy Assistant-Quartermaster-General of the Field Force in Caffraria, and assisted in organising 4,000 levies among the Hottentots, and was engaged in all the principal operations, frequently receiving the thanks of General Sir Harry Smith, G.C.B., and his marked approbation in General Orders. He received the Cape Medal for these services. In 1855 he was appointed Chief Engineer to the Turkish Contingent, and raised and organised the Engineer Corps and Train of that force. In the winter of 1855-56 he was employed in fortifying Kertch, for which he obtained a brevet majority, the Turkish Medal, and the order of the Medjidieh, fourth class. At the close of the war he was appointed by the Secretary of State for War (Lord Panmure) his commissioner for regulating all matters connected with the breaking-up of the Turkish Contingent—disposing of the horses, stores, &c. All his decisions were approved. In July, 1856, he was appointed her Majesty's Commissioner for the Danube, under the Treaty of Paris. In 1861 he was nominated Vice-Consul in the Delta of the Danube, and in 1866 he signed the convention for regulating the navigation of the mouths of that river. In 1868, with full powers under the great seal, he signed the Danube Loan Convention with the plenipotentiaries of France, Austria, Hungary, Prussia, Italy, and Turkey. He did not quit the Danube until the great works for deepening the Sulina entrance had been completed, in December, 1871. He was in command of the Royal Engineers in South Wales from May, 1872, to Aug., 1873; British Commissioner on the International Tonnage Commission (Suez Canal Question) from Aug. to Dec., 1873; was employed on Suez Canal Affairs in London and in Egypt in 1874 and 1875; was in command of the Royal Engineers at Chatham from Jan. to Nov., 1875; was attached to Mr. Cave's special mission to Egypt in Dec., 1875, when he received the special thanks of H.M. Government for the convention concluded with M. de Lesseps, under which the many vexatious questions then pending were amicably settled; was Commandant of the School of Military Engineering at Chatham from Nov., 1875, to March, 1881. In 1876 he was appointed, and has since remained, Representative of Great Britain on the Board of the Suez Canal Company. In 1879-80 he was sent on a special international mission to Egypt to solve a difficulty about the Harbour dues at Alexandria. From March, 1881, to July, 1886, he was Deputy Adjutant-General, Royal Engineers. He was promoted to a Lieut.-Colonelcy in 1867, and became a full Colonel in 1873, and Major-General in 1885. In 1871 he was nominated a Companion of the Bath, and in 1877 a Knight Companion of the same order (Civil Division). He retired with the rank of Lieut.-General in 1887. In that year he was appointed one of the Vice-Presidents of the Suez Canal. In December, 1893, he was charged, as Vice-President, with the mission of delivering to his Highness the Khedive Abbas Helmi, on his first visit to the Canal, a friendly greeting from her Majesty the Queen.

STOKES, Whitley, C.S.I., C.I.E., Hon. D.C.L. Oxon, Hon. LL.D. Dublin, Hon. LL.D. Edinburgh, Hon. Fellow Jesus College, Oxford, Hon. Member of the Deutsche Morgenländische Gesellschaft, Associé Étranger de l'Institut de France (Académie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres), of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, was born in Dublin in 1830, and is the eldest son of the late Wm. Stokes, M.D., Regius Professor of Medicine in the Dublin University. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, practised at the Chancery Bar, was reporter to the High Court and acting administrator-general, Madras, 1863-4; served subsequently as Secretary to the Government of India in the legislative department, and law-member of the Council of the Governor-General, May, 1877, to May, 1882, president of the Indian Law Commission, 1879, draughtsman of the present Codes of criminal and civil procedure, and of the Acts dealing respectively with the transfer of property, trusts, easements, specific relief, and limitation. In 1868 he framed the scheme for collecting and cataloguing the Sanskrit MSS. preserved in India. Dr. Stokes is the author or editor of the following legal works: "A Treatise on the liens of Legal Practitioners," London, 1860; "On Powers of Attorney" (Bythewood and Jarman's Conveyancing, 1st edit., vol. VIII., part I.), London, 1861; "Hindú Law Books," Madras, 1865; "The Indian Succession Act, with a Commentary," Calcutta, 1865; "The Indian Companies Act," 1866, with notes; "The Older Statutes in force in India," with notes, 1874; "The Unrepealed General Acts of the Governor-General of India," with Chronological Tables, etc., 3 vols., Calcutta, 1875 and 1876; "The Anglo-Indian Codes," vol. I., 1887, and vol. II., 1888, Clarendon Press," Oxford, with two supplements, 1889, 1891. In 1892 he edited for Mr. Murray a selection of the Indian speeches and minutes of the late Sir Henry Maine. He is also the author of the following philological works: "Irish Glosses," Dublin, 1860; "Three Irish Glossaries," London, 1862; "The Play of the Sacrament," a Middle-English Drama, with a Glossary, Berlin, 1862; "The Passion," a Middle-Cornish Poem, with a translation and notes, Berlin, 1862; "The Creation of the World," a Cornish Mystery, with a translation and notes, Berlin, 1863; "Three Middle-Irish Homilies," Calcutta, 1871; "Goidelica, Irish Glosses, Prose and Verse," London, 1872; "The Life of S. Meriasek," a Cornish Drama, with a translation and notes, London, 1872; "Middle-Breton Hours, Calcutta, 1876; "The Calendar of Oengus," Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, Dublin, 1880; "Togail Troi," Calcutta, 1881; "Saltair na Rann," Oxford, 1883; "The Tripartite Life of Patrick," with other documents relating to that Saint (in the Rolls Series of Chronicles and Memoirs of Great Britain and Ireland), London, 1887; "The Old Irish Glosses at Würzburg and Carlsruhe," London, 1887; "Lives of Saints from the Book of Lismore," Oxford, 1889, and "Urkeltischer Sprachschatz" (the second volume of Prof. Fick's "Comparative Dictionary of the Indo-Germanic Languages"), Göttingen, 1894.

STONE, Edward James, M.A., F.R.S., F.R.A.S., is of Devonshire extraction, but was born in London, Feb. 28, 1831. He did not begin to study classics or mathematics until he was past the age of twenty, but nevertheless graduated as fifth Wrangler at Cambridge in 1859, and was immediately elected a Fellow of Queen's College. He was appointed chief assistant at Greenwich in 1860; her Majesty's Astronomer at the Cape of Good Hope in 1870; and Radcliffe Observer at Oxford in 1879. He has contributed a large number of papers on all branches of astronomy to the Royal Astronomical Society, and to the Royal Society the results of experiments on the heating power of stars, magnetic observations made in Namaqualand, and a determination of the velocity of sound. Whilst at the Cape, besides reducing and publishing the observations made by his predecessor (Cape Catalogues, 1840, 1860), he completed a systematic observation of the Southern heavens from the South Pole to 115. N.P.D. The results were formed into a Catalogue of 12,441 stars, which was completed after his return to England, and published in 1881. He received the Gold Medal of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1868, and the Lalande Prize of the French Academy of Sciences in 1881. Mr. Stone has been a member of the Council of the Royal Society, and President of the Royal Astronomical Society; and was entrusted by the committee appointed by the Government to organise plans for the observation of the transit of Venus in 1882, with the superintendence of the work and the discussion of the results. He is a Doctor of Science of the University of Padua, and a member of the Athenæum Club.

STONE, Marcus, R.A., painter of historical and genre subjects, son of the late Frank Stone, A.R.A., a distinguished artist (who died in 1859), was born in London, July 4, 1840. He received his education at home, and was never a student in any Art School. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy Jan. 24, 1877, and was made full R.A. on Jan. 7, 1887. Mr. Stone received one of the Medals awarded to the English school at the Vienna, Philadelphia, Paris, Berlin, and Chicago International Exhibitions. As a very young man he illustrated the works of Dickens, and later, those of Anthony Trollope, and various numbers of the Cornhill Magazine. Mr. Stone has been much in Paris, and has visited Italy several times. He exhibited first in 1858, and achieved his earliest marked success in 1863 with "From Waterloo to Paris," a picture of Napoleon in a peasant's cottage. His principal pictures since then are: "Stealing the Keys," 1866; "Nell Gwynne," 1867; "The Princess Elizabeth forced to attend Mass," 1869; "Henry VIII. and Anne Boleyn," 1870; "The Royal Nursery," 1871; "Edward II. and Piers Gaveston," 1872; "Le Roi est Mort—Vive le Roi," 1873; "My Lady is a Widow and Childless," 1874; "Sain et Sauf," 1875; "An Appeal for Mercy," 1876; "A Sacrifice," 1877; "The Post Bag," "The Time of Roses," 1878; "In the Shade," 1879; "Amour ou Patrie," 1880; "Married for Love," 1881; "Bad News" and "Il y en a toujours un autre," 1882 (purchased under the terms of the Chantrey bequest by the Royal Academy); "An Offer of Marriage," and "Asleep," 1883; "A Gambler's Wife," 1885; "A Peacemaker," 1886; "In Love," 1888; "The First Love-letter," 1889; "A Passing Cloud," 1891; "Two's Company, Three's None," 1892; "A Honeymoon,' 1893. Several of these have been engraved. Mr. Stone has painted some landscapes, and some water-colour pictures.

STOREY, George Adolphus, A.R.A., born in London, Jan. 7, 1834, was educated in Paris by M. Joseph Morand, Professor in the Athéné Royale, his painting master being M. J. L. Dulong. He returned to London in 1850, and attended Mr. J. M. Leigh's school in Newman Street. He first exhibited in the Royal Academy in 1852. In 1863 he was in Spain, painting portraits at Madrid. In the following year he first attracted the special notice of the public by his picture of "The Meeting of William Seymour with the Lady Arabella Stuart at the Court of James I., 1609." It was followed by a "Royal Challenge," 1865; "After You," 1867; "The Shy Pupil," 1868; "The Old Soldier," 1869; "The Duet," and "Only a Rabbit," 1870; "Rosy Cheeks," and "Lessons," 1871; "Little Butter-Cups," 1872; "Scandal" (considered his best picture), "Love in a Maze," and "Mistress Dorothy," 1873; "Grandmamma's Christmas Visitors," "The Blue Girls of Canterbury," and "Little Swansdown," 1874; "Caught," 1875; "A Dancing Lesson," 1876; "The Old Pump-room, Bath," and "The Judgment of Paris," 1877; "Sweet Margery," 1878; "Lilies, Oleanders, and the Pink," 1879; "Follow my Leader," 1880; "The Ivory Door," 1881; "Coracles on the Dee," 1882; "The Connoisseur," 1883; "The Shy Lover," 1884; "As Good as Gold," 1885; "The Violinist," and "On Guard," 1886; "A Young Prodigal," and "Salome," 1887; "No Wife," and "Pan and Syrinx," 1888; "Godiva," 1889; "The Hungry Messenger," and "Paris and Œnone," 1890; "The Milliner's Bill," and "Mrs. and Miss Storey," 1891; "Miss Meta Reid," and seventy-nine illustrations to "Her Portrait," by C. J. Wills, and contributions to the Illustrated London News, 1892; "Waiting for Her Partner," and "Miss Jenny," 1893, besides numerous portraits. Nearly all the above-named pictures were exhibited at the Royal Academy. Mr. Storey was elected an A.R.A. in April, 1876.

STORRS, Richard Salter, D.D., was born at Braintree, Massachusetts, Aug. 21, 1821. He graduated at Amherst College in 1839. He studied law, and afterwards theology at the Andover Seminary, where he graduated in 1845. He was pastor of a church at Brookline, Massachusetts, for one year, and then took charge of the (Congregational) Church of the Pilgrims at Brooklyn, New York, where he has since remained. Dr. Storrs is noted as an eloquent preacher and as a student of history. For many years he has been President of the Long Island Historical Society, and since 1887 President of the American Board for Foreign Missions. From 1848 to 1861 he was one of the editors of The Independent, a religious weekly. In addition to a number of orations and discourses he has published a "Report on the Revised edition of the English Version of the Bible undertaken by the American Bible Society," "The Graham Lectures on the Wisdom, Power, and Goodness of God, as Manifested in the Constitution of the Human Soul," 1856; "Conditions of Success in Preaching without Notes," 1875; "The Early American Spirit and the Genesis of It," 1875; "The Declaration of Independence and the Effects of It," 1876; "The Divine Origin of Christianity indicated by its Historical Effects," 1884; "The Puritan Spirit," 1890; and a volume of Eight Lectures on "Bernard of Clairvaux," 1892.

STORY, The Rev. Robert Herbert, D.D., born at Rosneath Manse, Scotland, Jan, 28, 1835, being the son of the Rev. Robert Story, minister of that parish. He was educated in Edinburgh, Heidelberg, and St. Andrews; was appointed assistant-minister of St. Andrew's Church, Montreal, in Feb., 1859; ordained there Sept. 20, 1859; presented by the Duke of Argyll in the same year to the parish of Rosneath on the death of his father; and received the degree of D.D. honoris causâ from the University of Edinburgh, April 22, 1874. Besides contributions to current literature of a minor character, including many pamphlets and articles on the ecclesiastical affairs of Scotland, he has published "Life of the Rev. Robert Story, including passages of Scottish Ecclesiastical History during the Second Quarter of the Present Century," 1862; "Christ the Consoler, being a Manual of Scriptures, Hymns, and Prayers," 1864; "Memoir and Remains of Robert Lee, D.D.," 2 vols., 1870; "William Carstares; a Character and Career of the Revolutionary Epoch, 1649—1715," 1874; "Creed and Conduct: Sermons preached in Rosneath Church," 1878; "Health Haunts of the Riviera," 1880; "Nugæ Ecclesiasticæ," 1884. As one of the founders of the Scottish "Church Service Society," and convener of its "editorial committee," he has had charge of its publication of "Euchologion: a Book of Common Order," now in the 6th edition; and has assisted in the promotion of the Liturgical restoration in the Church of Scotland. He became editor of The Scottish Church, a monthly magazine, which was instituted in 1885 in the interest of the Church of Scotland; and which was merged in 1887 in the Scots Magazine, also for some time edited by Dr. Story. He was appointed, in 1886, one of her Majesty's chaplains; was elected by the General Assembly to the office of depute clerk in succession to Dr. Milligan. In the autumn of the same year he was appointed Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Glasgow. Dr. Story is editor of a work in 5 volumes on the "Church of Scotland, past and present," issued in 1890-91. He is a member of the "Moderate" or Broad Church party. He was Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1894.

STORY, William Wetmore, was born at Salem, Massachusetts, Feb. 12, 1819, A.B. (Harvard), 1838; A.M. and LL.B. Harvard, 1891; D.C.L. (Oxon); A.A.S., Massachusetts Historical Society; Commendatore del ordine della Corona d'Italia (K.C.C.I.); Chevalier de l'ordre de François 1st; Officier de La Légion d'Honneur; Prof. Acad. degli Arcadi, di Santa Cecilia, dei Quirite, &c. He studied law in the Law School at Cambridge under his father, Mr. Justice Story, of the Supreme Court of the United States, and published several legal works, among which were a treatise on "Contracts not under seal," 2 vols., now in the 10th edit.; a "Treatise on sales of Personal Property," 6th edit., and three vols. of "Reports of Decisions of the Circuit Court of the United States." He was for several years U.S. Commissioner for Massachusetts, Maine, Pennsylvania and Rhode Island, and also U.S. Commissioner in Bankruptcy; and practised law in Boston until 1850; and also edited and annotated various of his father's works. Since then he has lived principally in Rome (Italy), and devoted himself chiefly to sculpture and literature. Among his works in sculpture are numerous monuments, ideal figures and groups, colossal statues, portraits and busts. Of the portraits, statues and monuments may be mentioned those of Hon. Mr. Justice Story at Cambridge, U.S.A., Hon. Chief Justice Marshall in Washington, Hon. Edward Everett in Boston, Mr. George Peabody in London, and in Baltimore, Professor Joseph Hewry in Washington, Colonel Prescott at Charlestown (Mass.), William Cullen Bryant, and a large monument to Francis Scott Key, surmounted by a colossal figure of "America," at San Francisco; and, besides these, statuettes of Shakespeare, Byron, Beethoven; and a large number of portrait busts. Of large ideal statues, modelled and executed by him in marble, may be mentioned two different statues of Cleopatra, The Lybian Sibyl, Medea, Electra, Helen, Alcestis, Judith, Sappho, Semiramis, Orpheus, Saul, Orestes, Sardanapalus, Miriam, Jerusalem in her desolation, Canidia, the old sorceress, Salome, Polyhymnia, Dalilah, Phryne, Vista, Polyxena, and Christ ("Come unto Me all ye who are heavy laden"). Among the groups in marble are Aphrodite and Eros, Thetis and Achilles, The Silent Land, Bacchus on a Panther, Love and the Sphinx, Little Red Riding-Hood and the Wolf, &c. In general literature among his prose publications are "Life and Letters of Joseph Story," 1851; "Roba di Roma," 1862; "The American Question," 1862; "Neutral Relations in Peace and War," 1862; "Proportions of the Human Figure," 1866; "Castle St. Angelo," and "The Evil Eye," 1877; "He and She, or a Poet's Portfolio," 1883; "Fiammetta," and "Vallombrosa," 1885; "The Origin of the Italian Language and Pronunciation of Latin," "Conversations in a Studio," 2 vols., 1890; "Passion Plays," "Michel Angelo," "Conversation with Marcus Aurelius," "Distortions of the English Stage," "Macbeth," &c. In poetry he has published a volume of "Poems," 1847; "Graffite d'Italia," 1869; "The Roman Lawyer in Jerusalem," 1870; "Tragedy of Nero," 1875; "Poem delivered on the Centennial of the Settlement of Salem," "Stephania," a tragedy, 1879; 2 vols. of "Poems," 1886; and many poems printed but not collected. Mr. Story's two sons are artists of much distinction: Mr. Waldo Story being a sculptor, and Mr. Julian Story a painter; their works are well known in London, Paris, and Rome.

STOUGHTON, The Rev. John, D.D., born at Norwich, Nov. 18, 1807, was educated at Highbury College, Islington, now incorporated with New College, St. John's Wood, and University College, London. He was appointed pastor of the Congregational Church, Windsor, in 1832, and thence removed to Kensington in 1843, where he remained in office until 1875, and on his retirement received a presentation from his congregation of £3,000. He became Professor of Historical Theology and Homiletics in New College, St. John's Wood, the same year; that office he has since relinquished, and is now living in retirement at Ealing. But he still is active in managing the business of New College; of which he was one of the founders, when three previously existing Academies for ministerial culture were incorporated in that one institution. He was Congregational Lecturer in 1855, Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in 1856, and received the degree of D.D. at Edinburgh in 1869. He took an active part in the Conference at New York, 1873, and Basle, 1879, in connection with the Evangelical Alliance, of which he is an honorary secretary. Dr. Stoughton is the author of numerous works, of which the following are the principal: "Windsor in the Olden Time," 1844; "Spiritual Heroes," 1848; "Ages of Christendom," 1856; "Church and State Two Hundred Years Ago," 1862; "Ecclesiastical History of England," 5 vols., 1867-74; "Haunts and Homes of Martin Luther," 1875; "Lights of the World," 1876; "Progress of Divine Revelation," 1878; "Our English Bible: its Translations and Translators," 1878; "Worthies of Science," "Introduction to Historical Theology," "Footprints of Italian Reformers," "William Wilberforce," "William Penn," 1882; and "Howard the Philanthropist," 1884. In addition to the works on "Luther" and the "Italian Reformers," he wrote one on "The Spanish Reformers," 1884. All three contain descriptions of localities, resulting from repeated visits to many of the spots. Since then he has published "Golden Legends of the Olden Time," dedicated to his children and grandchildren, 1885; also "Shades and Echoes of Old London," 1889. Dr. Stoughton visited Egypt and the Holy Land in 1865, and gave an account of his travels in different publications. The large work on Ecclesiastical History, continued to the end of the last century, has been republished in 6 vols., 1881, under the title of "Religion in England from the Opening of the Long Parliament to the end of the Eighteenth Century." To these, two more volumes were added in 1884, under the title of "Religion in England from 1800 to 1850."

STOUT, Sir Robert, K.C.M.G., late Premier of New Zealand, is the eldest son of Thomas Stout of Lerwick, in the Shetland Isles, merchant, was born at Lerwick in 1844, educated at Lerwick Parish School, and was trained for the profession of teacher, serving his pupil-teachership in the same school. Towards the end of 1863 he went to Otago, New Zealand, and shortly after his arrival he obtained an appointment in the Grammar School. He was engaged in the exercise of his profession as teacher until 1867, either in the Government schools or in private grammar schools, when he commenced the study of law. He was admitted to the New Zealand Bar in 1871, and before long became one of its leading members, not only of Dunedin, but of the colony. In 1872 Mr. Stout obtained a seat in the Provincial Council of Otago. In 1875 he was elected to the House of Representatives, as member for Caversham. In 1876 he was elected as one of the members for Dunedin, and retained his seat until his retirement in June, 1879. He was offered, and accepted, the office of Attorney-General and Minister of Lands in Sir George Grey's Ministry in 1878. From 1879 to 1884 Mr. Stout was not engaged in politics, but during that period, as before, he took part in the administration of various local bodies, e.g., the Otago Land Board and others. In 1884 Mr. Stout was elected Member of the House of Representatives for Dunedin East, and on the downfall of the Atkinson Ministry, took office as Premier, Attorney-General, and Minister of Education, with Sir Julius Vogel as Colonial Treasurer. In 1886 Mr. Stout received the Order of K.C.M.G. At the General Election in 1887 Sir R. Stout again stood for Dunedin East, but was defeated chiefly, it was said, as a protest against the unpopular financial policy of the Ministry. He was offered seats in several parts of the Colony, but preferred to retire into private life, and has not since taken any active part in politics. He has been an industrious contributor to numerous journals and magazines, and the writer of a number of pamphlets. He has also delivered, and still delivers, lectures and addresses on political, social and religious subjects. He is a Fellow of the New Zealand University, and also a member of the Council of the Otago University, and has always taken an active interest in education. At the General Election of 1890 he was again requested to enter active political life by several constituencies, but declined. When the late Mr. Balance was on his death-bed, he requested Sir Robert Stout to again enter political life. A vacancy occuring at Inangahua in the Nelson District at this time, Sir Robert Stout became a candidate, and was returned in June, 1893, by a very large majority: about two to one over his opponent. At the General Election in Nov. 1893, he was a candidate for the City of Wellington, which returned three candidates, and he was returned at the top of the poll, polling no less than 6,200 votes.

STOWE, Mrs. Harriet Elizabeth, American writer, daughter of the late Lyman Beecher, and sister of the late Henry Ward Beecher, was born at Litchfield, Connecticut, June 14, 1812. She was associated with her sister Catherine in the labours of a school at Hartford in 1827, afterwards removed (1832) to Walnut Hill, near Cincinnati, and was married in 1836 to the Rev. Calvin E. Stowe, D.D. Mrs. Stowe wrote several tales and sketches, which were afterwards collected under the title of "The May Flower," 1849. In 1851-52 she contributed to the National Era, an anti-slavery paper published in Washington, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" as a serial. This was published in book-form in 1852, and met with great success; nearly 500,000 copies were sold in the United States within five years of its publication, and in Great Britain also its sale was enormous. It has been translated into more than twenty languages, including Welsh, Russian, Armenian, Arabic, Chinese and Japanese; there were fourteen different German and four different French versions; and it was dramatised in various forms. Mrs. Stowe subsequently published, "A Peep into Uncle Tom's Cabin for Children," 1853; "A Key to Uncle Tom's Cabin," giving the original facts and statements on which that work was based, 1853; and "The Christian Slave," a drama, founded upon "Uncle Tom's Cabin," 1855. She visited Europe in 1853, and in the following year published, "Sunny Memories of Foreign Lands." A little work entitled "Geography for My Children" was published in 1855, and the next year appeared her second anti-slavery novel, "Dred: a Tale of the Dismal Swamp," republished in 1859 until the title of "Nina Gordon." In subsequent works Mrs. Stowe has delineated the domestic life of New England of fifty or a hundred years ago. These include: "Our Charley, and what to do with Him," 1858; "The Minister's Wooing," 1859; "The Pearl of Orr's Island," 1862; "Agnes of Sorrento," 1863; "Reply on Behalf of the Women of America to the Christian address of many thousand Women of Great Britain," 1863; "The Ravages of a Carpet," 1864; "House and Home Papers," 1864; "Religious Poems," 1865; "Stories about our Dogs," 1865; "Little Foxes," 1865; "Queer Little People," 1867; "Daisy's First Winter, and other Stories," 1867; "The Chimney Corner," 1868; "Men of Our Times; or, Leading Patriots of the Day," 1868; "Old-town Folks," 1869; "Little Pussy Willow," 1870; "Pink and White Tyranny," 1871; "Sam Lawson's Fireside Stories," 1871; "My Wife and I," 1872; Palmetto Leaves," 1873; "Betty's Bright Idea, and other Tales," 1875; "We and Our Neighbours," 1875; "Footsteps of the Master," 1876; "Bible Heroines," 1878; "Pagania People: their Loves and their Lives," 1878; "A Dog's Mission," 1881; and, with her sister Catherine, "The American Woman's Home," 1869. A selection from her writings, entitled "Golden Fruit in Silver Baskets," was issued in 1859. In Sept., 1869, Mrs. Stowe contributed to the Atlantic Monthly and to Macmillan's Magazine an article entitled "The True Story of Lady Byron's Life." This article evoked a storm of indignant literary criticism, which was by no means allayed by the publication in 1870 of her work entitled "Lady Byron Vindicated." Mrs. Stowe's health for some years has been very precarious. She resides at Hartford, Conn., with her son, the Rev. Charles E. Stowe, who, in 1889, published a "Life of Harriet Beecher Stowe, compiled from her Letters and Journals," by himself.

STRACHEY, Lieut.-General Richard, R.E., C.S.I., F.R.S., LL.D., son of Edward Strachey, B.C.S., was born July 24, 1817, at Sutton Court, Somersetshire. He was educated at a private school and at Addiscombe, and in 1836 entered the corps of Bombay Engineers, from which he was shortly transferred to the Bengal Engineers. He was employed on irrigation works in the N. W. P. from 1840, and appointed executive engineer on the Ganges Canal in 1843. He served in the Sutlej campaign with Sir Harry Smith's division; was in the battles of Aliwal and Sobraon, was mentioned in despatches and received a brevet majority. In 1857 he became Under Secretary to the Government in the Public Works Department; and, in the same year, was appointed Secretary to the Government of the Central Provinces, which, during the mutiny, were placed under Sir John Peter Grant as Lieut.-Governor. He became consulting engineer in the Railway Department in 1858; Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department in 1862; and Inspector-General of Irrigation in 1866. He was appointed additional Member of the Governor-General's Council in 1869. He took an active part in the organization of the Public Works Department, and improvement of the System of Accounts, as well as in the formation of the Forest Department; and originated the scheme for the decentralisation of the finances of India. He also originated the measures taken by the Government for carrying out railway and irrigation works on a large scale by means of borrowed capital. On leaving India, in 1871, he was appointed Inspector-General of railway materials and stores at the India Office. In 1875 he retired from the army on full pay as a Lieut.-General; and in the same year was appointed a Member of the Council of India; which post he vacated in 1877, in order to proceed to India on special duty, viz., to arrange for the purchase by the Government of the East Indian Railway. He became Officiating Financial Member of the Council of the Governor-General in 1878, and Officiating Military Member thereof in 1879; he also presided over the Famine Commission which was then formed. On his return to England, in 1879, he was reappointed to the Council of India, from which post he retired in 1889, and became Chairman of the East Indian Railway Company. He is in receipt of a good-service pension. In 1892 he was sent as a representative of the Indian Government to the Monetary Conference at Brussels, and became a Member of the Committee under Lord Herschel to report on the Currency of India. Lieut.-General Strachey was employed on a scientific survey of the Himalayan province of Kumaon in 1848 and 1849, and made valuable geological and botanical researches and collections. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1854. He is Chairman of the Meteorological Council. He was President of the Royal Geographical Society from 1887 to 1889, and is an Honorary Member of the Geographical Societies of Berlin and Italy. He was appointed one of the Delegates of Great Britain at the International Prime Meridian Conference which was held at Washington in 1884. In 1892 he received the honorary degree of LL.D. at Cambridge. He has contributed papers to various scientific societies, and is the author of "Lectures on Geography," and, jointly with Sir John Strachey, of "The Finances and Public Works of India."

STRAFFORD (Earl of), The Right Hon. George Henry Charles Byng, son of the second Earl, was born in London in 1830. He received his education at Eton and at Oxford. He represented Tavistock in the Liberal interest from 1852 till Sept., 1857, and sat for Middlesex from the latter date till Jan., 1874, when he was summoned to the House of Peers in his father's barony, with the title of Viscount Enfield, under which name he had long been known in political circles. In 1855 he was attached to Earl Russell's special mission to Vienna. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Poor Law Board from 1865 to July, 1866. In Dec., 1870, he was appointed Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and in Sept., 1880, Under-Secretary of State for India. The latter office he resigned in Dec., 1882. He was first Commissioner of the Civil Service, unpaid, from May, 1880, to March, 1888. The appointment of Lord Kimberley as Secretary of State rendered this step necessary in order that one of the political offices connected with the home administration of India might be represented in the House of Commons. Viscount Enfield was succeeded by Mr. J. K. Cross in the office of Under-Secretary. He succeeded to the earldom on the death of his father in 1886. He is Lord Lieutenant of Middlesex. His wife, when Viscountess Enfield, edited the memoirs of Henry Greville.

STRATON, Right Rev. Norman Dumenil John, Bishop of Sodor and Man, was born in 1840, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; B.A. 1862; M.A. 1869; Hon. D.D. 1892. From 1865 to 1866, he was Curate of Market Drayton; from 1866 to 1875, Vicar of Kirkby-Wharfe, Yorkshire; from 1875 to 1892, Vicar of All Saints, Wakefield, and Rural Dean of Wakefield. He has also been Proctor for the Archdeaconry of Craven, Hon. Canon of Ripon, Hon. Canon of Wakefield, and from 1888-92, Archdeacon of Huddersfield. He was consecrated Bishop of Sodor and Man in York Minster on March 25, 1892.

STRAUSS, Johann, known in Vienna as the "Waltz King," was born in the Austrian capital in 1825. He is the son of Johann Strauss, who virtually made the waltz what it is, and was a well known musician in his time. The son early evinced a talent for music, and, despite his father's opposition, managed to obtain suitable teaching. In 1844 he made his début, and at once became popular and famous. He then joined his father's well-known orchestral band, and began to compose on his own account. In 1871 his first operetta, "Indigo," was performed, and this was followed in 1873 by the "Carnival in Rome," and "Das Fledermaus," and a number of other works, of which the opera "Ritter Payman" is the chief. His jubilee was celebrated enthusiastically on Oct. 15, 1894, when his new operetta "Jabuka, or the Frost of Apples," was specially performed in Vienna in honour of the occasion.

STROSSMAYER, The Right Rev. Joseph George, D.D., a distinguished prelate of the Roman Church, born at Essak, in Slavonia, Feb. 4, 1815, received his education in the Universities of Vienna and Padua, and on May 20, 1850, was consecrated Bishop of Bosnia and Sirmio. During the sittings of the Œcumenical Council of the Vatican in 1869-70, he was constantly represented as an opponent of the dogma of the infallibility of the Pope. However, when certain journals reproduced the text of a speech alleged to have been delivered at the Council by Mgr. Strossmayer, the Bishop addressed to the Français a letter in which he absolutely denied having made any such discourse. In Sept., 1888, he congratulated the Slav Committee of Kiev on the conversion of the Russians to Christianity, was remonstrated with by the Emperor, and finally retired from his See in 1891, in order to put an end to the difficulties of the situation. He has published some important Slavonic works, notably "Monumenta Slavorum Meridionaliam historiam illustrantia," Rome, 1863.

STRUTHERS, John, M.D., LL.D., second son of Alexander Struthers, Esq., of Brucefield, near Dunfermline, was born there on Feb. 21, 1823. He was educated privately, and entered the Edinburgh University, in 1841, as a student of medicine. He graduated as M.D. in 1845; and, at the same time, became a Licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons. He was admitted a Fellow of the College by examination in the same year, with a view to teaching Anatomy in the Edinburgh School. He was Demonstrator of Anatomy for two years, and Lecturer on Anatomy from 1847 to 1863; during which time his classes were largely attended. He designed the Medical School, erected at the College of Surgeons in 1849; was President of the Hunterian Medical and Royal Physical Societies; Examiner and Member of the Council of the College of Surgeons; and Surgeon to the Royal Infirmary. In 1863 he was appointed by the Crown to the Chair of Anatomy in Aberdeen University; an office which he held till 1889, when he retired from teaching. The increase of the school rendered new anatomical buildings necessary, which were erected according to his plans; and he formed an extensive museum of Human and Comparative Anatomy for the University. In Aberdeen he was President of the Medico-Chirurgical Society; and one of the Vice-Presidents of the British Association at the meeting there in 1885. On the formation of the Anatomical Society of Great Britain and Ireland in 1887, he was elected the Vice-President for Scotland. In 1874-75 he was Visitor of Examinations for the General Medical Council. He has represented Aberdeen University in the General Medical Council since 1883, and is Chairman of the Education Committee of the Council. He has taken an active part in questions of medical and university reform, as settled by the Medical Act of 1886, and the Scottish Universities Act of 1889. He gave evidence before the Royal Commission on the Scottish Universities in 1876; before the Select Committee of the House of Commons in 1880 on the amendment of the Medical Act of 1858; before the Royal Commission on the Medical Acts in 1881; and before the Committee on General Education in Scotland, in 1887. In 1885 the University of Glasgow conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. When teaching in the Edinburgh School he published various researches in Human and Comparative Anatomy, mainly in the Edinburgh Medical Journal, from 1848 to 1863; among which may be mentioned:—"On the Supra-Condyloid Process," "On the Oblique Muscles of the Eye," "On Diverticula from the Small Intestine," "On the Abnormal Anatomy of the Arm," "Demonstration of Valves in the Veins of the Neck," "On the Round Ligament of the Hip-Joint," "On the Relative Weight of the Viscera on the two sides of the Body," "On Variation in the Number of the Fingers and Toes in Man," and "On the Solid-hoofed Pig." When Professor in Aberdeen, he published in the Journal of Anatomy and Physiology, from 1869 to 1890, further researches, among which are: "On Variations of the Vertebræ and Ribs in Man," "On the Mediastinum Thoracis," "On the Rudimentary Hind-limb of the Greenland Right-Whale," "On Rudimentary Finger-Muscles in a Toothed Whale, and in the Greenland Right-Whale," "On the Cervical Vertebræ and their Articulations in Fin-Whales," "On a Method of Promoting Maceration for Anatomical Museums," and "On Methods of Preparing the Brain, Museum specimens and dissections." He published separately, in 1855, "Memoir on the Clavicle;" in 1859, "Lessons on the Human Body;" in 1867, "Historical Sketch of the Edinburgh Anatomical School;" in 1889, "Memoir on the Anatomy of the Humpback Whale," and "References to Papers in Anatomy, Human and Comparative." His system of teaching was always demonstrative, and embraced Comparative as well as Human Anatomy. He frequently gave evening lectures to general audiences on the "Human Body," and on the "Relation of Man to the Animal Kingdom," in which he accepted the hypothesis of descent from pre-existing forms as the most reasonable explanation of similarity of structure.

STUART, Professor James, M.A., LL.D., and M.P., born at Balgonie works, Markinch, Fifeshire (of which works his father was owner), Jan. 2, 1843, was educated at home, afterwards at St. Andrews University, and then at Trinity College, Cambridge. He became Fellow of Trinity College in 1867, Assistant-Tutor of that College in 1868, first Professor of Mechanism and Applied Mechanics in the University of Cambridge, Nov. 17, 1875. This post he resigned in 1890. He graduated as third Wrangler in 1866; M.A. of the University of Cambridge in 1869; LL.D. of the University of St. Andrews in 1876. Professor Stuart has taken a leading part in popular education. He inaugurated the system of courses of educational lectures of a University standard in connection with Cambridge and Oxford, in Nottingham, Sheffield, and many other towns, on the system indicated by his experiments, and recommended by him to the universities. He has been instrumental in the foundation and establishment of several local colleges; has taken special interest in women's education, having originated the Ladies' Lectures in 1867, and the Cambridge Higher Examination for Women in 1868. He has been a consistent friend of all movements for the amelioration of the condition of women, and honorary Secretary of "La Fédération Britannique Continentale et Générale pour le relèvement de la moralité publique." He has taken an active part in the organisation of university education, and especially in its adaptation to the wants of the engineering profession, having founded extensive workshops and drawing offices in the University of Cambridge. He is an Associate Member of the Institute of Civil Engineers, and has been Representative of the University and the governing bodies of the colleges at Bristol, Nottingham, Liverpool, Sheffield, and Aberystwith. He is the author of "Six Lectures to the Workmen of Crewe," "A Chapter of Science," "Science and Religion, a Lecture," "The New Abolitionists," "A Letter on University Extension, addressed to the University of Cambridge," and a number of articles, speeches, and pamphlets on educational, scientific, and social questions. Professor Stuart contested Cambridge University in 1882 unsuccessfully. On the death of Professor Fawcett, in Nov., 1884, he was unanimously chosen by the Liberal Party of Hackney as his successor, and was returned to Parliament by a majority of 6,000. At the general election of 1885, Hackney being divided into seven districts, Professor Stuart stood for the Hoxton Division of Shoreditch, and was elected by a majority of 1,037. He was again returned (as a Gladstone Liberal) in 1886, and in 1892 was re-elected. He married in 1890 Laura Elizabeth, daughter of J. J. Colman, M.P., Norwich.

STUBBS, Charles William, D.D., Dean of Ely, was born Sept. 3, 1845, and is descended from the same Yorkshire stock as Bishop Stubbs, of Oxford. He received his earlier education at a Quaker school at Southport, and was afterwards sent to the school of the Liverpool Royal Institution, when he was contemporary with the present Bishop of Ripon. In 1864 he proceeded to Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge (Divinity Prizeman and Scholar of his college). He graduated in 1868, having obtained honours in the mathematical tripos. He subsequently won the Le Bas University Prize for an essay on "International Morality," which was published by Messrs. Macmillan. Ordained in 1868, he held the curacy of St. Mary's, Sheffield, from that year till 1871, during which period he became intimately acquainted with the labour question among the Sheffield grinders. In 1871 he became Vicar of Granborough, Bucks, on the presentation of the late Sir Harry Verney, and took a prominent part in North Bucks in the agricultural labourers' agitation (1872), of which Joseph Arch was the leader. Whilst at Granborough, his church, on Sunday evenings, became a rallying-ground for the labourers who crowded to hear him; and he published a volume of sermons and addresses on "Village Politics." He held the appointment of Commissioner of Education to the Government of Siam (1878-1881), and published a report on the training of Siamese students. In 1881 he was preferred to the Vicarage of Stokenham, Devon, by Mr. Gladstone. In the same year he was Select Preacher before the University of Cambridge, and in 1883 he occupied the pulpit of St. Mary's at Oxford. These university sermons are published under the title of "Christ and Democracy." In 1888 Canon Warr preferred him to the Rectory of Wavertree. At St. Bridget's, the parish church of Wavertree, he has carried on an active Liberal and Broad Church propaganda, throwing open his pulpit to many leading Liberal preachers. In May, 1894, Dr. Stubbs was appointed Dean of Ely, and the honorary degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by Cambridge University. Dr. Stubbs is author of "Christ and Democracy," "The Conscience, and other Poems," "The Land and the Labourers," "The Church in the Villages," "God's Englishmen," "For Christ and City," "God and the People," "Selections from Mazzini," "Christ and Economics," "St. Nicholas at the Port, a Vision of the City," &c. Dr. Stubbs has been one of the editors of the Liverpool Pulpit since its inauguration. He has also taken great interest in secondary education in Liverpool, and is one of the founders of the Greenbank School in Sefton Park, and chairman of the School Committee and President of the Royal Institution, Liverpool.

STUBBS, The Right Rev. William, D.D., and Hon. D.C.L. of Oxford, Bishop of Oxford, born at Knaresborough, June 21, 1825, was educated at the Grammar School, Ripon, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took a first-class in classics and a third in mathematics, in Easter Term, 1848, and was immediately elected to a Fellowship at Trinity College. He was ordained in 1848, became vicar of Navestock, Essex, in 1850, and Librarian to Archbishop Longley, at Lambeth, in 1862. He was a Diocesan Inspector of Schools in the diocese of Rochester from 1860 till 1866, when he was appointed Regius Professor of Modern History at Oxford. In 1867 he was elected Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, of which he became an honorary Fellow in 1888; in 1876 an honorary Fellow of Balliol; and in 1878, an honorary student of Christ Church. On Nov. 20, 1868, he was elected a Curator of the Bodleian Library; and in 1872 was chosen a member of the Hebdomadal Council. In 1875 he was presented to the Rectory of Cholderton, Wilts. In 1879 he was appointed Canon Residentiary of St. Paul's; and in consequence resigned the rectory of Cholderton. In 1884 he was consecrated on St. Mark's Day to the See of Chester, from which See he was translated to Oxford, being confirmed Jan. 15, 1889. He published, in 1850, "Hymnale secundum usum Sarum;" in 1858, "Registrum Sacrum Anglicum;" in 1860, "Tractatus de Sancta Cruce de Waltham;" edited in 1863, "Mosheim's Institutes of Church History;" in 1864 and 1865, "Chronicles and Memorials of Richard I.," published by the Master of the Rolls; in 1867, the "Chronicle," ascribed to Benedict of Peterborough, in the same series; in 1868-71, the "Chronicle of Roger Hovedon;" in 1872-3, the "Memorial of Walter of Coventry;" in 1874, "Memorials of St. Dunstan;" and, in 1876, the "Works of Ralph de Diceto;" and several other books issued by the Master of the Rolls; in 1870, "Select Charters and other Illustrations of English Constitutional History, from the Earliest Period to the Reign of Edward I.;" and published, in 1871, 1875, and 1878, "The Constitutional History of England, in its Origin and Development," 3 vols. Dr. Stubbs is Honorary LL.D. of Cambridge, Edinburgh, and Dublin, and doctor in utroque jure of Heidelberg; he is the President of the Surtees Society, and a Vice-President of the Yorkshire Archæological Society, an honorary member of the Royal Irish Academy and of the Historical Society of Massachusetts, a foreign member of the Bavarian Academy, a corresponding member of the Prussian Academy, of the Royal Danish Academy, of the American Academy of Arts, of the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences of the Institute of France, of the Royal Society of Sciences at Göttingen, and of the Imperial University of Vladimir at Kieff.

SULLIVAN, Sir Arthur Seymour, Mus.D., was born in London, May 13, 1842. His father was principal Professor at Kneller Hall, the training school for British military bands. He received his first systematic instruction in music at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, under the Rev. Thomas Helmore, and he was still a chorister when, at the age of fourteen, he gained, the first time it was competed for, the Mendelssohn Scholarship. After two years' study under Mr. (afterwards Sir Sterndale) Bennett, and Mr. (afterwards Sir John) Goss, he studied at Leipzig for three years at the Conservatorium. Upon his return to England in 1861, he brought with him his music to Shakespeare's "Tempest," which was performed for the first time at the Crystal Palace. His next work was the cantata "Kenilworth," produced at the Birmingham Festival in 1864. This was followed by the Symphony in E (Crystal Palace), 1865; overture, "In Memoriam" (Norwich), 1866; overture "Marmion" (Philharmonic), 1867; oratorio "The Prodigal Son" (Hereford), 1868; overture "Di Ballo" (Birmingham), 1869; "On Shore and Sea" (International Exhibition), 1871; Festival "Te Deum," to commemorate the recovery of the Prince of Wales (Crystal Palace), 1872; oratorio "The Light of the World" (Birmingham), 1873; and the sacred musical drama "The Martyr of Antioch" (Leeds), 1880; and "The Golden Legend," a dramatic cantata (Leeds), 1886. Sir Arthur Sullivan has produced also the following popular and successful operas and operettas: "Cox and Box," 1866; "Contrabandista," 1867; "Thespis," 1872; "Trial by Jury," 1875; "The Sorcerer," 1877; "H.M.S. Pinafore," 1878; "The Pirates of Penzance," 1879; "Patience," 1881; "Iolanthe," 1882; "Princess Ida," 1884; "The Mikado," 1885; "Ruddigore," 1887; "The Yeomen of the Guard," 1888; "The Gondoliers," 1889; "Haddon Hall," 1892; "Utopia," 1893; and "The Chieftain," Dec., 1894. He was also musical editor of "Church Hymns," for which he composed several of the best-known tunes. He has written also the incidental music to the following of Shakespeare's plays: "The Tempest," "The Merry Wives of Windsor," "The Merchant of Venice," and "Macbeth." The honorary degree of Doctor of Music was conferred upon him by the University of Cambridge in 1876, and a like honour by the University of Oxford in 1879. Sir Arthur Sullivan was Principal of the National Training School (now the Royal College) of Music from its foundation in 1876 to 1881. Sir Arthur conducted the Leeds Triennial Musical Festival in 1880, 1883, 1886, and 1889; and in 1885 and 1886 he conducted the Philharmonic Concerts in London. In 1888 he was President of the Birmingham and Midland Institution, and is a member of a large number of foreign learned and musical societies. He was British Commissioner for music at the Paris Exhibition in 1878, when he was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour. He is also a Knight of the Order of the House of Coburg, and received from H.M. the Sultan of Turkey the Order of the Medjidieh, 1888. He was knighted by the Queen at Windsor, May 24, 1883.

SULLY, James, M.A., LL.D., born at Bridgwater, Somersetshire, in 1842, was educated in the Independent College, Taunton, the Regent's Park College (one of the affiliated colleges of the University of London), and the University of Göttingen. He is M.A. and Gold Medallist of the University of London, where he graduated in 1866 and 1868. He is also honorary LL.D. of the University of St. Andrews. He took to a literary career in 1871, beginning as a contributor to the Saturday, Fortnightly, and Westminster Reviews. He is the author of "Sensation and Intuition: Studies in Psychology and Æsthetics," 1874; "Pessimism: a History and a Criticism," 1877; "Illusions" (International Scientific Series), 1883; "The Outlines of Psychology," 1884; "The Teachers' Handbook of Psychology," 1886; and "The Human Mind," 1892. He is also the writer of articles on "Æsthetics," "Dreams," and "Evolution," in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." These writings, as their titles suggest, are mainly occupied with the modern science of Psychology, as developed, more especially in Germany, by help of the physiology of the brain and nervous system. At the same time they have a distinctly practical bearing, discussing such questions of the day as the Aims of Art, the Value of Human Life and of Social Progress, and the Principles of Education. Mr. Sully has served as Examiner in Philosophy (Mental and Moral Science) to his own University, and has held a similar office in the University of Cambridge, and the Victoria University. He has also held for several years the post of Lecturer on the Theory of Education at the College of Preceptors, Bloomsbury Square. In 1892 he was appointed to the Grote Chair of the Philosophy of Mind and Logic at University College, London.

SULLY-PRUDHOMME, René François Armand, French poet, was born in Paris, March 16, 1839, and educated at the Lycée Bonaparte. He afterwards became a lawyer's assistant, and published his first volume of poems in 1865. It attracted considerable attention, and the poem "Le Vase Fêlé" was pronounced a masterpiece of its kind. M. Sully-Prudhomme has since published several volumes of poems, mostly of a philosophical tendency: "Les Épreuves," 1866; "Les Solitudes," 1869; "Les Destins," 1872; "Les Vaines Tendresses," 1875; "La Justice," 1878. He has also published (1869) a very remarkable translation of the "De Natura Rerum," of Lucretius. One of his latest works is "Reflexions sur l'Art des Vers," 1892. A general edition of his works, in 3 vols., appeared in 1883-84. In 1881 he was elected a member of the Académie Française, and was promoted officer of the Legion of Honour in 1888.

SUMNER, The Right Rev. George Henry, D.D., Bishop of Guildford, youngest son of the Rt. Rev. Charles Richard Sumner, Bishop of Winchester, 1827-1868, was born at Windsor, July 3, 1824, and was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, whence he graduated in 1845, taking his M.A. in 1848. In 1847 he was ordained Deacon, and in 1848 Priest. His title for Orders was that of Crawley, near Winchester, and in 1850 he was preferred to the Rectory of Old Alresford, which he held until 1885, for the last twenty-seven years of the time acting as Rural Dean, and as Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury and Bishop of Winchester during their lifetime. In the year 1866 he was elected Proctor in the Lower House of the Convocation of Canterbury for the Archdeaconry of Winchester, which office he held until his appointment as Archdeacon of Winchester, in 1884, gave him an official seat in Convocation. A year after he was elected Prolocutor of the Lower House in succession to Lord Alwyne Compton, appointed to the Bishopric of Ely; on which occasion he had the degree of D.D. conferred upon him by decree of Convocation of the University of Oxford. The Bishop of Winchester also conferred upon him a Canonry of Winchester. He resigned the Rectory of Old Alresford, and entered upon the canonical residence at Winchester. In the year 1888 he was appointed by the Crown Bishop Suffragan of Guildford, which office he now holds. In the year 1869 the Bishop edited a volume of essays, published under the title of "Principles at Stake," which passed through two editions; and, in 1881, he edited "Our Holiday in the East," by Mrs. George Sumner, which also passed through two editions. In 1876 the Bishop published a "Life of Charles Richard Sumner, D.D., Bishop of Winchester;" and, in 1890, a "Churchwardens' Manual," showing their rights, privileges, and duties. In 1848 he was married to Mary Elizabeth, younger daughter of Thomas Heywood, Esq., of Hope End, Ledbury.

SWANWICK, Anna, is the youngest daughter of the late John Swanwick, Esq., of Liverpool, a descendant of Philip Henry, the celebrated Nonconformist divine. She was born in 1813; left school at the age of thirteen, and after some years of private study, repaired to Berlin, where she studied, not only German, but Greek and Hebrew. On her return to England she joined her family, which then resided in London; and in 1843 she published a volume of translations, entitled "Selections from the Dramas of Goethe and Schiller." Her translation of Schiller's "Maid of Orleans" was published in 1847; and in 1850 the volume containing her translation of the first part of "Faust," with other masterworks of Goethe, "Tasso," "Iphigenia," and "Egmont." In 1878 appeared her translation of the two parts of "Faust," 4to, with Retchs's illustrations, which was followed by a smaller edition in 1879. She was strongly urged by the late Baron Bunsen to undertake the translation of the Great Dramas. Acting upon his suggestion she translated the Æschylean Trilogy, published in 1865, which was followed, in 1873, by her translation of the complete dramas of Æschylus, with Flaxman's illustrations. A fourth and revised edition has since been published. Impressed with the low standard of female education which prevailed in England during her younger days, Miss Anna Swanwick has taken an active part in the establishment of Ladies' Colleges and other educational centres. She sympathised also most deeply with those who were labouring to raise the people to a higher level, moral and intellectual, and for many years she superintended classes of young working men and women, whom she instructed in various departments of knowledge.

SWEATMAN, Rt. Rev. Arthur, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Toronto, was born in London, Nov. 19, 1834. He was educated at London University College, and is an honour graduate of Christ's College, Cambridge. In 1862 he was appointed to the curacy of St. Stephen's, Canonbury, and to the Mastership of the Modern Department of the Islington Proprietary School. On the invitation of Bishop Hellmuth, he accepted, in 1865, the Head Mastership of Hellmuth Boys' College, London, Ontario, and at a later date became Clerical Secretary to the Synod of the Diocese of Huron, and Secretary to the House of Bishops. Resigning his educational charge, he became assistant Rector of St. Paul's, Woodstock, and Archdeacon of Brant; and, during the Bishop of Huron's absence in England, acted as his commissary. In March, 1879, he succeeded Bishop Bethune in the See of Toronto, and in the same year received the degree of D.D. from Cambridge; and in 1882 that of D.C.L. from Trinity University, Toronto.

SWEDEN and NORWAY, King of. See Oscar II.

SWETE, The Rev. Henry Barclay, D.D., Fellow of Caius College, was born at Bristol, March 14, 1835. He entered at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, in 1854, and received the Carus Greek Testament Prize in 1855, and the Members' Prize in 1857, and graduated B.A. in the Classical Tripos in 1858. He was Professor of Pastoral Theology at King's College, London, 1882-1890, and is now Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. He has published the following works:—"Early History of the Doctrine of the Holy Spirit," 1873; "Theodorus Lascaris Junior: De Processione Spiritus Sancti oratio apologetica," 1875; "History of Doctrine of the Procession of the Holy Spirit," 1876; "Commentary of Theodore of Mopsuestia on the minor Epistles of S. Paul," 1880-82 (2 vols.); "Articles in the Dictionary of Christian Biography," 1877-86; "The Old Testament in Greek, according to the Septuagint" (3 vols.) (1887-94); "The Akhmîm Fragment of the Apocryphal Gospel of S. Peter," 1893.

SWINBURNE, Algernon Charles, poet and essayist, son of the late Admiral Charles Henry Swinburne, by Lady Jane Henrietta, daughter of George, third Earl of Ashburnham, and grandson of Sir John Edward Swinburne, Bart., of Capheaton, Northumberland, was born in Chester Street, Grosvenor Place, London, April 5, 1837. He entered as a commoner at Balliol College, Oxford, in 1857, but left the University without taking a degree. He afterwards visited Florence, and spent some time with the late Walter Savage Landor. His first productions, "The Queen Mother," and "Rosamond," two plays, published in 1861, attracted but little attention. They were followed by "Atalanta in Calydon, a Tragedy," in 1864; "Chastelard, a Tragedy," in 1865; and "Poems and Ballads," in 1866. The latter work was very severely, though not very discerningly, censured, and was consequently withdrawn from circulation by Messrs. Moxon. Mr. W. M. Rossetti then published "Poems and Ballads: a Criticism," and Mr. Swinburne himself, "Notes on Poems and Reviews." Among his later works are, "A Song of Italy," and "William Blake: a Critical Essay," 1867; second edition, 1868; "Siena: a Poem," 1868; the second part of "Notes on the Royal Academy Exhibition," 1868, the first part of which was written by Mr. W. M. Rossetti; "Ode on the Proclamation of the French Republic, Sept. 4, 1870;" "Songs before Sunrise," 1871; "Bothwell, a Tragedy," 1874; "Essays and Studies," 1875; "Erechtheus," 1876; "A Note on Charlotte Brontë," 1877; "Poems and Ballads: second series," 1878; "A Study of Shakespeare," 1879; "Studies in Song," 1881; "Tristram of Lyonesse," 1882; "A Century of Roundels," 1883; another volume of "Prose Miscellanies," and "The Life of Victor Hugo," 1886; "The Armada," 1888; "A Study of Ben Jonson," 1890; "Astrophil, and Other Poems," and "Studies in Prose and Poetry," 1894. Mr. Swinburne is, in the opinion of many, the greatest living English poet, and would doubtless be made laureate were the literary alone to elect to that position. He has for some years been in weak health, and lives in retirement with Mr. Theodore Watts at Putney.

SYBEL, Professor Heinrich von, one of the most eminent of living German historians, born at Düsseldorf, Dec. 2, 1817, studied history for four years in Berlin under the famous Von Ranke, was Privatdocent at the University of Bonn, and became extraordinary Professor there in 1844. The following year he was appointed ordinary Professor at Marburg, and in 1847 elected a member of the States of Hesse, and deputy in the Diet of Erfurt. Summoned to Bavaria in 1856, by Maximilian II., he became a member of the Munich Academy of Sciences, and was sent on several scientific missions. In 1861, however, he returned to Bonn as Professor, and was elected by the electors of Crefeld a member of the Chamber of Deputies in Berlin, being more recently returned to the Constituent Diet of the North German Confederation. He was appointed Director of the Prussian State Archives in Berlin in 1875. His principal works are "History of the French Revolution," which has been translated into English by Mr. Walter C. Perry from the third German edition, and a "History of the Establishment of the German Empire by William I." He is also the author of "History of the First Crusade," 1841; "Origin of Royalty in Germany," 1845; "The Rising of Europe against Napoleon I.," 1860; "Minor Historical Writings," 4 vols., 1863-69; "Prince Eugène of Savoy;" a preface to Löbel's "Gregory of Tours," and to "Memoirs of Uechtritz;" and various other historical works.

SYLVESTER, Professor James Joseph, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S., was born Sept. 3, 1814, in London. He was educated at two private schools in London, at the Royal Institution, Liverpool, and at St. John's College, Cambridge, where he passed the Senate House Examination as second Wrangler, but was precluded by religious disabilities from graduating. He became Professor of Natural Philosophy at University College, London, Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia, U.S.; Professor of Mathematics, after an interval of ten years, at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich; Professor, after an interval of five years, at the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Maryland, U.S. In Dec., 1883, he was elected Savilian Professor of Geometry and Fellow of New College, Oxford. He has published some hundreds of Memoirs in the Royal Society's Transactions, in Crelle's Journal, in the Acta Mathematica, in the London and Dublin, and in the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, in the London and Edinburgh Philosophical Magazine, in the Comptes Rendus of the Institute of France, in other English, French, Belgian, and Italian Journals, and in the American Journal of Mathematics, of which he was the founder and first editor. He received the Royal Medal of the Royal Society in or about 1860, the Copley Medal in 1880, and in 1887 the De Morgan Medal of the London Mathematical Society. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society, Hon. Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge (1880), Hon. D.C.L. Oxford, LL.D. of Dublin and Edinburgh, and D.Sc. of Cambridge, a Foreign Member of the Royal, or Royal and Imperial Academies of Sciences of Naples, Rome, and Göttingen, and Vienna; a Corresponding Member of the Institute of France, and of the Imperial and Royal Academies of Berlin and St. Petersburg, Member Ordinary or Correspondent of many other learned bodies in Europe and the United States, and Officer of the Legion of Honour. He has given a theory of Versification in a volume published under the title of "Laws of Verse;" is the inventor of the Plagiograph, the Geometrical Fan, and other kinematical instruments. He introduced into England, and greatly generalised, Peaucellier's method of Linkages, on which he gave a lecture at the Royal Institution. On Dec. 12, 1885, in an inaugural lecture delivered before the University of Oxford, he made known his newly-discovered Theory of Reciprocants, which has given rise to a large literature on the subject. His latest memoir is on a Universal funicular solution of Buffon's "Problem of the Needle," published in the Acta Mathematica, June, 1890.

SYMONS, George James, F.R.S., was born in London in 1838, and was educated privately. Before he was twenty-one he had been elected Member of the Meteorological Society, had given several lectures upon the subject, had commenced a series of observations with standard instruments, the records of which were supplied to Mr. Glaisher, F.R.S., for insertion in the "Quarterly Reports" of the Registrar-General; and had started, in 1857, an organization for the observation of thunderstorms and the record of injuries by lightning. In 1859 he was elected a Member of the General Committee of the British Association, and is now a Member of the Council. In 1860 he became a Member of the Scottish Meteorological Society, issued its first separate publication "Notes on the Solar Eclipse of July 18, 1860," and accepted the invitation of Admiral FitzRoy, F.R.S., to become one of his assistants at the Meteorological Office, where he continued until nearly the time of his chief's death, being occupied principally with preparing for publication the records of the Anemometers at Bermuda and Halifax. During these years he devoted all his non-official time to collecting details of the fall of rain, and commenced the organization known as the British Rainfall system, which now includes nearly 3,000 observers. The results have been published in 33 successive volumes of British Rainfall, and in 28 volumes of the Meteorological Magazine, which have been compiled and edited under his direction. With the above exception, Mr. Symonds has written few books, but his papers and reports communicated to scientific societies in this and other countries, and his letters to The Times on Meteorological subjects, are to be numbered by hundreds. In 1872 he was elected Membre de la Soc. Mét. de France, and has served three times on the Council. In 1873 Mr. Symons was elected Hon. Secretary of the (now) Royal Meteorological Society, which office he has held ever since, excepting during 1880 and 1881, when he was President. In 1875 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Colonial Institute; and during that and the subsequent year drew up a complete summary of the statistics and bibliography of the meteorology of our Colonial Empire. The results of that inquiry were embodied in a paper which he read before the Royal Colonial Institute in 1877. In the autumn of 1875 serious floods occurred, and he submitted to the Institution of Civil Engineers a paper "On the Floods in England and Wales, and on Water Economy," for which he was awarded a Telford Premium. In 1878, on the initiative of the Meteorological Society, a conference of delegates from various scientific societies was formed to consider "the desirability or otherwise of issuing a code of rules for the erection of lightning conductors." The work of the conference extended over four years, Mr. Symons acting throughout as Honorary Secretary, and editing the "Report of the Lightning-Rod Conference." In 1878 Mr. Symons was Président Etranger of the Congrès International de Météorologie held in Paris, and in 1889 Vice-Président of a similar meeting. In 1879 he was elected Fellow, and in 1880 became Registrar of the Sanitary Institute, which office, with its greatly developed duties, he still holds. He was a Juror of the Health Exhibition (Section for Water Supply), 1884, in which year he was elected Membre Corresp. Etranger de la Soc. Roy. de Médicine Publique de Belgique, and in 1886 he was elected Korrespondirendes Mitglied der Deutschen Met. Gesellschaft. In the autumn of 1886 the first Session of the Congrès International d'Hydrologie was held at Biarritz; and Mr. Symons was appointed Vice-Président Etranger, and subsequently Juror of the Exhibition. He afterwards visited the thermal stations of the Pyrenees, and this drew his attention to the question of the constancy or otherwise of the temperature of those waters. After full inquiry, and with the cooperation of the Royal Society, he designed special thermometers, and revisited all the principal stations in the autumn of 1887, determining the temperatures with all possible precision. Mr. Symons was elected F.R.S. in 1878; and when, in 1884, a Committee was appointed to report upon the Eruption of Krakatoa he was chosen as its Chairman, and subsequently as Editor of the Report. In 1891 Mr. Symonds received from the President of the French Republic the Cross of Knight of the Legion of Honour.

T.

TAAFFE, Count Edward Francis Joseph, an Austrian statesman, was born at Prague, Feb. 24, 1833. He is Viscount Taaffe of Corren, and Baron of Ballymote, Sligo, in the Irish peerage, and was brought up along with the present Emperor Francis Joseph. He entered the Imperial service in 1857 as Secretary of the Hungarian Government, and was appointed Governor of Salzburg in 1863. In 1867 he became Austrian Minister of the Interior, and Vice-President of the Cisleithan Ministry. At the end of 1869 he served as Minister President; and in 1871 accepted the office of Governor of the Tyrol and Vorarlberg. He has shown great ability in mediating between conflicting creeds and nationalities; and has publicly expressed his disapproval of the anti-Semitic agitation. He emphasized his political position when, in 1892, at a meeting of the Reichsrath, he said: "To sum up, and before everything else, it is necessary to exist somehow." In February, 1893, however, he put forward a carefully elaborated political programme which met with general opposition.

TAIT, Patrick Macnaghten, F.S.S., F.R.G.S., son of the late William Tait, Esq., was born in Edinburgh, and educated in his native city, having for some time been under the late Principal Tulloch. He first entered the Scottish Union Insurance Office, Edinburgh, of which Sir Walter Scott was a Director, and in 1851 proceeded to India; was in India during 1857, 1858, and 1859, the years of the Mutiny, when he raised the Rifle Company of the Calcutta Volunteer Guards, in which corps he held a command. Subsequently he travelled in India, Ceylon, China, Japan, Canada, and the United States of America. He has contributed largely to the Edinburgh Review, and Calcutta Quarterly Review, also to the Examiner, Life, and other London weekly papers. He is the author of numerous papers read before different societies, including the British Association, the Institute of Actuaries, and the Royal Statistical Society, amongst which may be mentioned, "Observations on Existing Tables of Mortality of Europeans in India," 1855; "Mortality of East Indians," published in the Calcutta Review for Dec., 1858; "Mortality of Christian Females in India," published in the Calcutta Review for March, 1859; "The Mortality of Eurasians," 1864; "The Population and Mortality of Calcutta," 1867; "The Population and Mortality of Bombay," 1869; "Anglo-Indian Vital Statistics," 1874; "The Theory and Practice of Accident Insurance on Sea and Land;" "Original D and N Tables for Joint Lives in India;" "Vital and other Statistics Applicable to Musicians," 1880; "Vital and other Statistics of Eastbourne," 1885; "On the Value of European and Native Life in India," 1888.

TAIT, Professor Peter Guthrie, M.A., whose father was private secretary to the late Duke of Buccleuch, was born at Dalkeith, April 28, 1831, and educated at the Academy and University of Edinburgh, and at Peterhouse, Cambridge, where he was Senior Wrangler and First Smith's Prizeman. In 1852 he was elected Fellow of Peterhouse, and in 1854 was appointed Professor of Mathematics at Queen's College, Belfast, where he remained until 1860, when he was elected Professor of Natural Philosophy in Edinburgh. Professor Tait has published a number of scientific and other works, amongst which are "Dynamics of a Particle," 1856; "Quaternions," 1867, translated into French by the late Dr. Gustav Plarr, 1882; "Thermo-Dynamics," 1868; "Recent Advances in Physical Science," 1876; "Heat" and "Light," 1884; "Properties of Matter," 1885; besides a large number of papers contributed to different periodicals, among which may be mentioned those on "Knots," on the "Kinetic Theory of Gases," and on "Thermo-electricity." In conjunction with Lord Kelvin (then Sir William Thomson), he published in 1867 a "Treatise on Natural Philosophy." He was also, with the late Professor Balfour Stewart, the joint author of the essay called "The Unseen Universe." To the Challenger Reports Professor Tait has recently contributed an experimental discussion of the "Pressure Errors of the Challenger Thermometers," and of the "Physical Properties of Water." Another experimental work, which he carried out in conjunction with the late Dr. Andrews, deals with the "Volumetric Relations of Ozone." His latest papers, "On Impact," and "On the Path of a Rotating Spherical Projectile," have very obvious bearings on the game of golf.

TALBOT, The Rev. Edward Stuart M.A., born in London, 1844, is the son of the Hon. J. C. Talbot, Q.C., one of the leaders of the Parliamentary Bar, and of Caroline, daughter of the first Lord Wharncliffe. He was educated at Charterhouse, and Christ Church, Oxford, where he obtained a first-class Lit. Hum., 1865; and first-class Law and Modern History, 1866. He was ordained in 1867 and 1870. He was elected senior student of Christ Church in 1866, and obtained the Ellerton Prize Essay in 1869, on the "Influence of Christianity on Slavery." In 1870 he was appointed first Warden of Keble College, Oxford, and was Select Preacher in 1873 and in 1883. He was Examiner in the Final Classical Honour Schools in 1874-76, and was appointed examining Chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury in 1883. In 1889 he retired from the wardenship of Keble College, and was appointed to the Vicarage of Leeds. In 1890 he was appointed Hon. Chaplain to the Queen. He is author of "The Preparation in History for Christ." in "Lux Mundi," 1889. Mr. Talbot married in 1870, Lavinia, third daughter of the fourth Baron Lyttelton.

TALMAGE, Thomas de Witt, D.D., was born at Bound Brook, New Jersey, Jan. 7, 1832. He studied at the University of the City of New York, and graduated at the New Brunswick, (N.J.) Theological Seminary in 1856. On ordination he was chosen pastor of the Reformed Dutch Church at Belleville, N.J.; from 1859 to 1862 he had charge of a church in Syracuse, N.Y.; and from 1862 to 1869 of one in Philadelphia. During the Civil War he was chaplain of a Pennsylvania regiment, and he is now chaplain of the 13th New York Regiment. Since 1869 he has been pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church at Brooklyn, N.Y. Thrice during this period his church edifice has been destroyed by fire, once in 1872, once in 1890 and again in 1894. In 1884 he received the degree of D.D. from the University of Tennessee. Dr. Talmage is a popular lecturer and preacher, and his sermons are weekly reported in a large number of newspapers. He visited England in Nov. 1889, and afterwards made a Continental tour, and visited Palestine. He was in 1894 again making an extended tour in foreign lands. From 1873 to 1876 he edited the (N.Y.) Christian at Work; in 1877-78 the (Chicago) Advance; and later Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine, and The Christian Herald. He has published "The Almond-Tree in Blossom;" and "Crumbs Swept Up," 1870; "Abominations of Modern Society," 1872; "One Thousand Gems," 1873; "Old Wells Dug Out;" and "Around the Tea-Table," 1874; "Sports that Kill;" and "Every-Day Religion," 1875; "Night Sides of City Life," 1878; "Masque Torn Off," 1879; "The Brooklyn Tabernacle," 1884; "The Battle for Bread;" and "The Marriage Ring," 1886, besides several volumes of collected sermons and a number of lectures, addresses, and magazine articles.

TASCHEREAU, The Most Rev. Elzear Alexandre, D.C.L., Cardinal and Archbishop of Quebec, was born at Sainte Marie de la Beauce (thirty miles from Quebec), Feb. 17, 1820. He was educated at the Seminary of Quebec and in Rome, receiving the tonsure at the age of eighteen. In 1842 he was ordained a priest at Quebec, and from that year until 1854 occupied the chair of Moral Philosophy at the Quebec Seminary. He resumed his studies in Rome in 1854, and in 1856 the degree of Doctor of Canon Law was conferred upon him by the Roman Seminary. Returning to Quebec he was Director of the Petit Séminaire until 1859, when he became Director of the Grand Séminaire and a Member of the Council of Public Instruction for Lower Canada. He was made Superior of the Grand Séminaire and Rector of Laval University in 1860, and Vicar-General of the Diocese of Quebec in 1862. In 1866 he again became Director, and in 1869 was re-elected Superior of the Grand Séminaire. He was consecrated Archbishop of Quebec in 1871; and in 1886 was made a Cardinal, being the first Canadian to receive the beretta.

TAUCHNITZ (Baron), Bernhard Christian, publisher at Leipzig, celebrated for his editions of Greek and Latin Classics, Hebrew and Greek Bibles, but best known to English travellers and writers for his continental editions of British authors, is a member of an old family of booksellers and printers, Karl Tauchnitz, half a century ago, having made himself famous for his cheap editions of the Classics. He was born at Schleinitz, near Naumburg, in 1816. He founded an independent establishment in 1837, and, in 1841, began his series of English authors. At that time there was no International copyright, yet he resolved to obtain the sanction of the authors to the republication of their works, and to pay them for permission to include them in his series. This collection consists of nearly 2,700 volumes, and is continually increasing. In order to mark his appreciation of the endeavours of Tauchnitz to familiarize in Germany the chefs d'œuvre of a literature of which he himself was so great an admirer, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, the brother of the late Prince Consort, raised him to the rank of Baron. In 1872, on the retirement of Mr. Crowe, he was appointed British Consul-General for the kingdom of Saxony, and in 1876 for the other Saxon Principalities. In 1877 he was called by the King to the House of Peers of Saxony. His eldest son, Baron C. C. Bernhard, a Doctor of Laws, and British Vice-Consul, has been a partner in the house since 1866.

TAYLOR, The Rev. Charles, D.D., LL.D., Master of St. John's College, Cambridge, and late Vice-Chancellor of the University, was born in Middlesex, May 27, 1840, and was educated at King's College School, London, and St. John's College, Cambridge. He proceeded to the degree of B.A. in 1862, and in the same year became an editor of the Oxford, Cambridge, and Dublin Messenger of Mathematics. In 1863 he published his first work on "Geometrical Conics." He was elected Fellow of St. John's College in 1864, and Master of the same, 1881, and shortly afterwards received the degree of D.D., jure dignitatis. He is the author of numerous articles on Hebrew, geometrical and other subjects; of the Kaye Essay for 1867, on the citations from the Old Testament in the New, published under the name, "The Gospel in the Law," 1869; and of the following works: "The Dirge of Coheleth," 1874, a monograph giving a new and literal interpretation of the 12th chapter of Ecclesiastes; "Sayings of the Jewish Fathers," in Hebrew and English, edited for the Syndics of the Cambridge University Press, 1877; an "Introduction to the Ancient and Modern Geometry of Conics, with Historical Notes and Prolegomena," 1881. In the Prolegomena he proves that the modern period properly begins with Kepler, who distinctly formulated the principles of infinity and continuity, which differentiate the modern from the ancient geometry. He has given a course of lectures at the Royal Institution on the "History of Geometry," 1886; also on the lately discovered Διδαχὴ τῶν δώδεκα ἀποστόλων, 1885; these were published in April, 1886, under the title "The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, with illustrations from the Talmud, two Lectures on an Ancient Church Manual discovered at Constantinople." More recently he has published "An Essay on the Theology of the Didache," 1889; and 'The Witness of Hermas to the Four Gospels," 1892. He was joint editor of the "Messenger of Mathematics" from 1862 to 1887. Dr. Taylor received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Harvard (Cambridge, Mass.), 1886; and was made Vice-Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, 1887 and 1888.

TAYLOR, The Rev. Isaac, M.A., Litt.D., LL.D., Canon of York, born May 2, 1829, at Stanford Rivers, is the eldest son of the late Isaac Taylor, author of the "Natural History of Enthusiasm." Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, he obtained the Silver Oration Cup, and graduated as a Wrangler in 1853. In 1854 he edited a translation of Becker's "Charicles." He was ordained in 1857 to a country curacy, and published in 1860 "The Liturgy and the Dissenters." Removing to London, where he successively held two West-End curacies, he published in 1864 a work on the Etymology of Local Names, entitled "Words and Places, or Etymological Illustrations of History, Ethnology, and Geography." In 1865, he undertook the charge of one of the poorest parishes in Bethnal Green. His plans and labours for the benefit of his destitute parishioners were described in a little book entitled "The Burden of the Poor." In 1867 he published "The Family Pen; Memorials, Biographical and Literary, of the Taylor Family of Ongar." In 1869 he accepted the incumbency of a church at Twickenham. In 1873 he read a paper before the Philological Society on "The Etruscan Numerals," and in 1874 brought out a volume entitled "Etruscan Researches." Presented in 1875, by Earl Brownlow, to the Rectory of Settrington, in Yorkshire, he undertook systematic researches into the origin and history of the Alphabet. The first-fruit of these studies appeared in 1879, in a book called "Greeks and Goths, a Study on the Runes." Shortly afterwards he published, at Berlin, a paper "Ueber den Ursprung des glagolitischen Alphabets," in which he discussed the origin of the earliest Slavonic alphabet. In 1879 he received from the University of Edinburgh the degree of LL.D., honoris causâ, in recognition of his discoveries and philological attainments. In 1883 Dr. Taylor published, in two large volumes, his most important work, entitled "The Alphabet, an Account of the Origin and Development of Letters." In consideration of its merits the Board of Classical Studies at Cambridge unanimously recommended its author for the degree of Doctor in Letters. In the same year, 1885, he was collated to a Canonry and Prebendal Stall in York Minster, and two years later was appointed Rural Dean. In 1887 he read a paper at the Manchester meeting of the British Association on "The Origin and Primitive Sect of the Aryans," which was afterwards enlarged into a volume, published in the Contemporary Science Series in 1889. The winter of 1887-88 he spent in Egypt, whence he wrote to the St. James's Gazette a series of letters recording conversations with Egyptians on politics and religion. These letters, with additional chapters on the tenets of Islam, were republished in the autumn of 1888, in a volume entitled "Leaves from an Egyptian Note Book," with the object of dispelling prejudices as to the beliefs and practices of our Mahommedan fellow subjects in India and elsewhere. In 1888 he also published "Domesday Survivals," "The Ploughland and the Plough," and "Wapentakes and Hundreds" in "Domesday Studies." Canon Taylor, who was one of the founders of the Alpine Club, is a frequent contributor to learned periodicals, especially on subjects connected with Aryan and Ural-Altaic Philology, Onomatology, Ethnology, Palæography, Epigraphy, and Comparative Mythology. In 1865 he married a daughter of the Hon. H. Cockayne-Cust.

TAYLOR, General Sir Richard Chambre Hayes, K.C.B., born in Dublin, March 19, 1819, second son of the Hon. and Rev. Edward Taylor, younger son of the First Earl of Bective, by Marianne, daughter of Colonel the Hon. Richard St. Leger, was educated at Hazelwood School and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and entered the army as Ensign of the 79th Highlanders in 1835. He served in various colonies and in the Crimean War, including the battles of the Alma and Balaklava, siege and fall of Sebastopol (in command of his regiment), also in the Indian Mutiny, including the siege and capture of Lucknow, operations in Oude and Rohilcund, Trans-Gogra campaign, actions of Rooyah-Allygunge, Bareilly, Shahjehanpore, Punniar, Mahomdee, Rampoorkussia, passage of the Gogra (commanded column), and was frequently mentioned in despatches. He was Assistant-Adjutant-General, Shorncliffe and Dover Division, from July, 1860, to July, 1865; Inspecting Field Officer and Assistant-Adjutant-General, Home District, from May, 1867, to April, 1871; Inspector-General of Recruiting from August, 1873, to Dec., 1876; Deputy-Adjutant-General of the Forces from Dec., 1876, to Oct., 1878; Adjutant-General of the Army from August, 1882, to Nov. 1882; Governor of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, from Jan. 1883, to August, 1886. He was promoted Colonel, May, 1858; Major-General, March, 1868; Lieutenant-General, Oct., 1877; General, April, 1883; and nominated C.B. 1857, and K.C.B., 1882; Retired list, Aug., 1886.

TAYLOR, William Mackergo, D.D., LL.D., was born at Kilmarnock, Scotland, Oct. 23, 1829. He graduated at the University of Glasgow in 1849, and at the divinity School of the United Presbyterian Church at Edinburgh in 1852. For two years he was pastor of a small church at Kilmaurs, Ayrshire, and in 1855 went to Liverpool to take charge of a newly-organised Presbyterian Church, which under his care become a large and influential church society. Visiting the United States in 1871, his preaching while there was received with so much favour that he was called to succeed the late Dr. Joseph P. Thompson in the pulpit of the Broadway Tabernacle (New York City), one of the most prominent Congregational Churches in America, and of this church he has been, since 1872, the pastor. In 1876 and 1886 he was lecturer at the Yale Seminary, and in 1880 at Princeton Seminary. From 1876 to 1880 he was editor of The Christian at Work. He has published "Life Truths" (sermons), 1862; "The Miracles," 1865; "The Lost Found and the Wanderer Welcomed," 1870; "Memoirs of the Rev. Matthew Dickie," 1872; "Prayer and Business," 1873; "David, King of Israel," 1876; "Elijah the Prophet;" and "The Ministry of the Word" (Yale lectures), 1876; "Songs in the Night," 1877; "Peter the Apostle;" and "Daniel the Beloved," 1877; "Moses the Lawgiver," 1879; "The Gospel Miracles in Relation to Christ and Christianity" (Princeton lectures); and "The Limitations of Life" (sermons), 1880; "Paul the Missionary," 1882; "Contrary Winds" (sermons), 1883; "Jesus at the Well," 1884; "John Knox, a Biography," 1885; "Joseph the Prime Minister;" and "The Parables of Our Saviour," 1886; "The Scottish Pulpit," 1887; "Ruth the Gleaner" and "Esther the Queen," 1890; "The Miracles of Our Saviour Expounded," 1890; and "The Boy Jesus and other Sermons," 1893. The degree of D.D. was conferred upon him by both Yale and Amherst Colleges in 1872, and that of LL.D. by Princeton College in 1883. In the spring of 1892 he had a stroke of paralysis, in consequence of which he resigned his pastoral charge in the following fall, but was made Pastor Emeritus, an honorary position which he holds for life.

TCHERNAIEFF, Michael Gregorovitch, a Russian general, born Oct. 24, 1828, entered the Russian military service in 1847, distinguished himself greatly in the Crimean war, and attained the rank of a General of Infantry. On the conclusion of the Crimean war he was first appointed chief of the staff of a division in Poland, and in 1858 he was sent to Orenburg in the capacity of Aide du Chef de la ligne du Syr Daria. In 1859 he commanded an expedition on Lake Aral, to support the Khirgiss tribes, at war with the Khivans. After a period of service as Quarter-Master-General of the left flank of the line held by the army of the Caucasus, Tchernaieff for some time acted as chief of the staff of the corps at Orenburg. Next he was placed in command of an expeditionary force consisting of 1,000 men, with instructions to march from Orenburg, through the passes of the mountains bounding Siberia on the south, and across the steppes of Turkestan, and to effect a junction with another detachment under Colonel Verevkin which had set out from Semipalatinsk, in Siberia. The junction occurred in the vicinity of the town of Tchemkend, then occupied by the Khokanians. This town Tchernaieff took by assault, and immediately afterwards unsuccessfully attacked (Oct. 1864) the important city of Tashkend, about 80 miles south of Tchemkend, and also in possession of the Khokanians. Having wintered at Tchemkend he renewed successfully the attempt on Tashkend (June 27, 1865). It is said that he had received specific instructions to content himself with the position of Tchemkend, and to refrain from any further efforts to extend the Russian domination further southward. Tchernaieff disobeyed his orders, took Tashkend, and was afterwards welcomed most enthusiastically at St. Petersburg, and received a sabre of honour from the Emperor in recognition of his military enterprise; but from that date he was not actively employed in the Russian service. After a time he retired from the army, and passed a legal examination qualifying him to adopt the profession of a notary, when the Emperor begged him to re-enter the army. He did so in compliance with the Imperial request, and was reinstated in his rank. After vainly waiting a whole year for active employment, he again retired from the army, and purchased the Ruski Mir, a journal which boldly advocated Slav interests, and of which, after he had quitted the military service altogether, in July 1874, he became the recognised editor. When in 1875 the insurrection in Herzegovina broke out, he opened a subscription in its behalf, and afterwards, in the summer of 1876, he went to Belgrade and took the command-in-chief of the Servian army. The campaign was most disastrous to the Servians, although their army was largely reinforced by Russian volunteers. Tchernaieff's proclamation of Prince Milan as King of Servia was much censured at the time as a rash and foolish act. General Tchernaieff left St. Petersburg Sept. 12, 1882, for Tashkend, to take up the reins of Government there. Owing to complaints against the arbitrary nature of his government, he was recalled in 1884, but was subsequently made a Member of the Council of War in St. Petersburg. Two years later he was compelled to retire from the Council owing to his opposition to the projected Central Asian Railway.

TEALE, Thomas Pridgin, M.A., M.B., Oxon., F.R.S., F.R.C.S., was born at Leeds, June 28, 1831, and is the son of Thomas Pridgin Teale, F.R.S., some time surgeon to the General Infirmary at Leeds, and one of the first members of the General Medical Council nominated by the Queen. He was educated at the Leeds Grammar School, Winchester, Brasenose College, Oxford, and King's College, London. He has been a "Crown nominee" on the General Medical Council since the year 1876, and is now serving his fourth period of five years. He was lecturer on Anatomy and Surgery in the Leeds School of Medicine, 1856 to 1876; Surgeon to the General Infirmary at Leeds, 1864 to 1884; and subsequently Consulting Surgeon. He was President of the Health Section of the Social Science Congress at Huddersfield, 1883; President of the Public Health Section of the British Medical Association at Liverpool, 1883; President of the Association of Sanitary Inspectors of Yorkshire, 1888-94; and President of the Leeds Philosophical and Literary Society, 1889-91. He is the author of "Dangers to health, a pictorial guide to Domestic Sanitary Defects," first published in 1879, now in the 4th edit. This work has been translated into French, Spanish and Italian, and into German by H.R.H. the Princess Christian, and is now in its 2nd edition. "Hurry, Worry, and Money, the Bane of Modern Education," being the Presidential address in the Health Section of the Social Science Congress at Huddersfield, 1883; "Economy of Coal in House Fires," 1886; "The Principles of Domestic Fireplace Construction," a lecture delivered at the Royal Institution, 1886; "Dust and Fresh Air: How to keep out the one and let in the other," a lecture delivered at the Society of Arts, 1892; and many contributions to Medical Literature. He married, in 1862, Alice, daughter of the Rev. W. H. Teale, M.A., Rector of Devizes. She died in 1891.

TECK (Prince and Duke of), His Highness Francis Paul Charles Louis Alexander, G.C.B., only son of Duke Alexander of Würtemberg and the Countess Claudine Rhédey and Countess of Hohenstein, was born on Aug. 27, 1837. His Highness served in the Austrian army, was Major in the Austro-Italian Campaign, 1859, and was mentioned in despatches, but resigned after the campaign in 1866. He served on the staff of Lord Wolseley in Egypt in 1882, and received the Egyptian medal and the Khedive's star, was mentioned in the despatches, and was made colonel, unattached, and is now a general in the British Army. His Highness is general à la suite of the Würtemburg dragoon regiment, "Queen Olga;" honorary colonel, 1867, of the First City of London Artillery Volunteers; honorary colonel, 1874, of the 24th Middlesex Rifle Volunteers, "Post Office;" and President of the Royal Botanic Society of London. His Highness married, on June 12, 1866, H.R.H. The Princess Mary Adelaide, daughter of H.R.H. Prince Adolphus Frederick, Duke of Cambridge, the seventh son of his Majesty King George III. He has issue, their Serene Highnesses, all born at Kensington Palace, the Princess Victoria Mary Augusta Louise Olga Pauline Claudine Agnes, born May 26, 1867, married July 6, 1893, to H.R.H. the Duke of York, K.G., the Prince Adolphus Charles Alexander Albert Edward George Philip Louis Ladislaus, born Aug. 13, 1868 (lieutenant in the 17th Lancers), married in Dec. 1894, to Lady Margaret Grosvenor, the Prince Francis Joseph Leopold Frederick, born Jan. 9, 1870 (lieutenant 1st Royal Dragoons), and the Prince Alexander Augustus Frederick William Alfred George, born April 14, 1874, and gazetted to the 7th Hussars in Nov. 1894.

TEGETMEIER, William B., F.Z.S., of German extraction, born at Colnbrook, Bucks, in 1816, was educated for the medical profession at University College, London. Mr. Tegetmeier is well known as a writer on natural history. He is the author of "The Poultry Book," "Pigeons," "The Natural History of the Pheasants," "Monographs of the Cranes," "Pallas's Sand Grouse," "Poultry for the Table and Market," "The Cottager's Manual of Poultry-keeping," &c., and as having republished many rare ornithological treatises, as "Boddaert's Planches Enluminées" and "Moore's Columbarium." He has devoted much attention to the variation of species, and greatly assisted Darwin in the preparation of his volumes on "The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication," and other works. Mr. Tegetmeier has contributed articles to the "Encyclopædia Britannica" and "The Ibis;" and is the author of two text books on "Domestic Economy," written at the request of the School Board of London and for the Government Training Colleges. He has been for many years on the staff of the Field newspaper.

TEMPLE, The Right Rev. Frederick, D.D., Bishop of London, son of an officer in the army, born Nov. 30, 1821, was educated at the Grammar School at Tiverton, and proceeding to Oxford, became Scholar of Balliol College, and took his degree of B.A. in 1842 as a double first-class. He was elected Fellow and Mathematical Tutor of his college, and, having been ordained in 1846, was appointed Principal of the Training College at Kneller Hall, near Twickenham, in 1848. This post he resigned in 1855; and having held an Inspectorship of Schools during the interval, was appointed, on the resignation of Dr. Goulburn, in 1858, Head Master of Rugby School. Dr. Temple, who was a Chaplain to the Queen, gained some notoriety in 1860 as the author of the first of the seven "Essays and Reviews," which caused so much controversy soon after their appearance. At the general election of 1868, Dr. Temple took an active part in Warwickshire in support of Mr. Gladstone's measure for the disestablishment of the Irish Church; and the Premier nominated him to the Bishopric of Exeter, in succession to the late Dr. Philpotts—an appointment which caused considerable commotion in clerical circles. The confirmation of Dr. Temple's election took place Dec. 8, 1869, at the church of St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside, when Bishop Trower, as the representative of a portion of the clergy who were opposed to Dr. Temple, because he was the author of one of the "Essays and Reviews," instructed counsel to oppose the election. Counsel were accordingly heard on both sides, and Dr. Temple's election was confirmed by the Vicar-General. Dr. Temple received episcopal consecration at Westminster, Dec. 21, 1869, together with the bishops-elect of Bath and Wells, and of the Falkland Islands. Dr. Temple published "Sermons preached in Rugby Chapel, in 1858-60," in 1861. In April, 1883, he was elected Bampton Lecturer at Oxford for the ensuing year. On the death of Dr. Jackson in Jan., 1885, Dr. Temple was appointed Bishop of London, and was succeeded at Exeter by Dr. Bickersteth.

TEMPLE, Sir Richard, Bart., G.C.S.I., M.P., D.C.L. (Oxon.), LL.D. (Cantab.), of the Nash, Kempsey, near Worcester, was born in 1826, and entered the third class of the Bengal civil service in 1846. He was Secretary to Sir John Lawrence in the Punjab, and First Assistant to the Financiers, James Wilson and Samuel Laing; and eventually was appointed Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, and the Political Resident at Hyderabad. He was Foreign Secretary to the Governor-General, and Finance Minister of India from 1868 to 1874. In Jan., 1874, he was appointed to superintend the relief operations in the famine-stricken districts of Bengal. He became Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in 1875; was created a Baronet in Aug., 1876; and was appointed Governor of the Presidency of Bombay in Jan., 1877, which office he held till March, 1880. He was appointed K.C.S.I. in 1864. He returned home in 1880 in order to accept the candidature offered to him by the Conservative party for East Worcestershire, but was defeated. He sat for the Southern or Evesham division of Worcestershire from 1885 to 1892, since which he has sat for the Kingston division of Surrey; has been Vice-Chairman of the London School Board; and has been President of the Social Science Congress. He is still the Financial Member of the London School Board. He was nominated an Extra Knight Grand Commander of the Order of the Star of India, Jan. 1, 1878. He is the author of "India in 1880;" "Men and Events of my Time in India," 1882; "Oriental Experience," 1883; "Cosmopolitan Essays," 1886; "Palestine Illustrated," 1888; the memoir of "John Lawrence," in the series of "English Men of Action;" and that of James Thomason for the Clarendon Press series of "Rulers of India."

TENNIEL, Sir John, artist, born in London, in 1820, was educated at Kensington. At a very early age he showed a taste for art, and whilst a boy his first picture was exhibited, and sold at the Gallery of British Artists in Suffolk Street. He studied art in his own way, and may be said to have been entirely self-taught. He was a successful candidate in one of the Cartoon competitions in Westminster Hall in 1845, painted a fresco in the Palace at Westminster, and has produced many pictures since, chiefly for private collections. In 1851 he became a member of Punch's "Staff," and from that time has contributed to the illustration of that periodical. For many years he has, without the break of a single week, produced the political cartoon, and may thus claim a place not only as an artist but as an historian of the time. He has illustrated, wholly or in part, many Christmas books and other works; amongst which may be mentioned "Æsop's Fables," "Lalla Rookh," "The Ingoldsby Legends," and Once a Week. He is also the illustrator of "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," and its sequel, "Through the Looking Glass;" but has long since entirely discontinued making drawings for "book illustration;" has been for many years a Member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours, and received the honour of knighthood in 1893. A selection of his best-known Punch cartoons will shortly be exhibited at the rooms of the Fine Art Society.

TERBY, François Joseph Charles, was born on Aug. 9, 1846, at Louvain, Belgium, in which city he was educated; and in 1869 he obtained the degree of Docteur ès Sciences. As early as 1862 he had begun making astronomical and occasional meteorological observations; and these he has never abandoned, though for some years he was lecturer on physics at the University of Louvain. He has now in his private observatory an eight-inch equatorial by Grubb, which he devotes chiefly to planetary and lunar work. His papers have mostly been inserted in the publications of the Royal Academy of Belgium. Dr. Terby is a member of the Commission d'Inspection de l'Observatoire Royal de Belgique; Correspondent of the Academy of Sciences of Belgium; and Foreign Member of the Royal Astronomical Society of London.

TERRY, Edward O'Connor, was born in London, March 10, 1844, and made his first histrionic attempt as an amateur with the "Thespian Dramatic Club," and showing promise as an actor, entered the profession in 1863. He played at Woolwich, Rochester, Sheffield, and Belfast. On leaving Belfast he became a member of Mr. Charles Calvert's company at the Prince's Theatre, Manchester. In 1867 he made his début in London, at the Surrey Theatre. In 1868 he appeared at the Lyceum Theatre, under the management of the late Mr. E. T. Smith. After remaining the season, he accepted an engagement from Mr. Swanborough for the Strand Theatre, where he played Paul Pry for ninety-five consecutive nights, the longest run of the play on record. He next became a member of the Gaiety company, in 1876, where he has played in "Little Don Cæsar de Bazan," "Bohemian Gyurl," "Little Doctor Faust," "Robbing Roy," "Forty Thieves," and "Bluebeard." Latterly he has given up burlesque, appearing in comedy parts, as Walkinshaw in "The Rocket;" Montague Joliffe in "In Chancery," &c. In May, 1885, he fulfilled his last engagement at the Gaiety, and travelled in the provinces, where he has produced a new farcical comedy entitled "The Churchwarden," adapted from the German by himself, and presented for the first time (in London) at the Olympic Theatre, Thursday, Dec. 16, 1886. Mr. Terry is now proprietor of a new theatre called by his name, which was erected in the Strand during 1887; in which house he produced and played in "Sweet Lavender," which was performed 670 consecutive times. Mr. Terry was invited to speak at the Church Congress at Cardiff, and read to an audience of over 2,000 a paper on "Theatres as an Amusement for the People," and was

TERRY, Miss Ellen Alice, actress, was born at Coventry, Feb. 27, 1848, and made her first appearance on the stage at the Princess's Theatre under the management of Mrs. Charles Kean, playing the parts of Mamillius in "Winter's Tale" and Prince Arthur in "King John," and remained with the Keans until they gave up management in London. Miss Terry next appeared at the Royalty Theatre, and afterwards at the Haymarket, learning her first steps in legitimate comedy in this the London Comedy Theatre. Then followed a short engagement at the Queen's Theatre, with Mr. and Mrs. Wigan at the head of affairs, playing in the "Taming of the Shrew," and acting for the first time with Mr. Henry Irving. Leaving the stage for seven years she returned to the Queen's Theatre, making her reappearance as Philippa Chester in Charles Reade's "Wandering Heir." In 1875 Miss Terry was engaged by Mr. Bancroft to play at the Prince of Wales' Theatre. In 1876 Lord Lytton's play "The House of Darnley" was produced by Mr. John Hare, at the Court Theatre, and in this play Miss Terry took the principal character. She remained at the Court Theatre until Mr. Hare gave up its direction. On Mr. Irving taking the management of the Lyceum Theatre, he was enabled to secure the services of Miss Ellen Terry, who made her first appearance at that theatre on Dec. 30, 1878, playing Ophelia to the Hamlet of Mr. Irving. "Hamlet" was followed by "The Lady of Lyons," in which she played Pauline. Her subsequent parts have been Portia, Viola, Beatrice, Juliet, Henrietta Maria in Mr. W. G. Wills's "Charles I.," Camma in Tennyson's "Cup," and Ruth Meadows in "Eugene Aram." She went on American tours with Mr. Irving in 1883, 1884, 1887, 1893, and 1894, and won great applause. During 1889 she visited Germany, and after her return had the honour of appearing before the Queen at Sandringham. Her later appearances have been as Marguerite in the late W. G. Wills's "Faust," which was revived in 1894, as Lucy Ashton in "Ravenswood," as the heroine in "A Dead Heart," as Queen Catherine in "Henry VIII.," Lady Macbeth, and Cordelia, as Rosamonde in "Becket," 1893, and as Guinevere in "King Arthur," 1895. Miss Terry's son plays under the name of "Gordon Craig," and made a spirited appearance in "A Dead Heart."

THEEBAW, ex-King of Ava (Burmah), whose Burmese titles are Theebaw Min, His Most Glorious and Excellent Majesty, &c., is the eleventh king of the Alompra Dynasty, founded in 1853 by the first Burmese King of that name. He was born in 1858, and succeeded his father, Mindong Min, in Oct. 1878. He was placed on the throne by the intrigues of the favourite Queen of the late King, who assumed the position of Dowager-Queen, and caused Theebaw to be proclaimed, at the same time forming an alliance between Theebaw and her second daughter, Soo Pyah Lat, whom he married shortly after his accession. His reign was unfortunately remarkable for palace orgies and for the murder of his relatives, followers, and servitors. Anarchy and misrule reigned throughout his kingdom. Theebaw sought to injure British trade and influence by placing the control of the whole commerce of his country and the taxation of the frontier in the hands of French agents, and took away the teak forests from British concessionnaires to give to French monopolists. For some time he endeavoured to establish relations with foreign agents, and to contract agreements or alliances with the object of creating a situation full of embarrassment for the English Government. In Nov. 1885, an ultimatum was despatched to King Theebaw, but the proposals for an amicable settlement were refused. General Prendergast then sailed up the Irrawaddy to his capital, and proclaimed his deposition and the annexation of Upper Burmah to England. Theebaw surrendered on Nov. 29, and shortly afterwards was sent first to Rangoon, thence to British India, where he still remains.

THIBAUDIN, Jean, a French General, was born at Moulins-Engilbert (Nièvre), Nov. 13, 1822, and received his military education at Saint-Cyr. He first saw active service in Africa, and afterwards went through the Italian campaign. On the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war he was sent as Lieut.-Colonel to serve under Gen. Frossard, took part in the battles of Forbach and Rezonville, and was taken prisoner after Bazaine's capitulation of Metz. He succeeded, however, in escaping, and made his way back to the French army, where, under an assumed name, he commanded a regiment.

After the conclusion of peace he was promoted colonel, and in 1882 became general. In 1883 he succeeded Gen. Billot as Minister of War, and at once appeared as a prominent Radical, hostile to the Orleans Princes. By his order the Duc d'Aumale and the Duc de Chartres were placed on the retired list. On the visit of the late Alfonso XII., king of Spain, to Paris, in Sept. 1883, Gen. Thibaudin was thought to be compromised in the hostile demonstrations that took place, and he was dismissed from the Ministry (Oct. 5, 1883). In 1885 he resumed his duties as a member of the Committee of Infantry. In December, 1886, he was appointed Commandant of Paris. In 1885 and 1889, he presented himself first as a Radical, then as a Radical-Boulangist, for election to the Chamber of Deputies, but on both occasions he was defeated.

THISELTON-DYER, William Turner, C.M.G., C.I.E., M.A., Ph.D., F.R.S., son of the late W. G. Thiselton-Dyer, M.D., was born in the parish of St. James, Westminster, July 28, 1843, and educated at King's College School, where he was First Class Mathematical Scholar, at King's College, and at Christ's Church, Oxford, where he became Junior Student in 1863. He obtained a Second Class in Mathematics, a First Class in Natural Science in the Final Schools, 1867, the B.Sc., London, 1870, and the M.A., Oxford, in 1873. He is also Hon. Fellow of King's College, London. He has held successively the following appointments: Professor of Natural History at the Agricultural College, Cirencester, 1868; Professor of Botany at the Royal College of Science for Ireland, 1870; Professor of Botany, Royal Horticultural Society, 1872; Assistant-Director of the Royal Gardens, Kew, 1875; and Director, 1885. At the International Phylloxera Congress, Bordeaux, 1881, he was the representative of New South Wales, South Australia, and Victoria. He was a Royal Commissioner for the Melbourne Centennial International Exhibition of 1888. In 1873 and several succeeding years Mr. Thiselton-Dyer delivered in the Schools of the Science and Art Department, South Kensington, courses of instruction in Botany to teachers in training. In these a new treatment of the subject was developed; the leading types of vegetable organisms were described and practically demonstrated, and for the first time the same methods of class exposition were applied to the vegetable kingdom as were more or less in general use for the animal kingdom. Mr. Thiselton-Dyer was Examiner in Botany in the Science and Art Department, South Kensington, in 1873-85. He examined in Botany and Vegetable Physiology in the University of London during the years 1878-1883, and was a Member of the Senate in 1887-90. At Kew he has been specially occupied with the development of botanical work, and the organization of botanical departments in the Colonies and India. He has published "Flora of Middlesex," 1869 (with Dr. Trimen); an English edition of "How Crops Grow," 1869 (with Professor Church); and an English edition of "Sachs's Text Book of Botany," 1875 (with Mr. A. W. Bennett). Mr. Thiselton-Dyer married, in 1877, a daughter of Sir J. D. Hooker, K.C.S.I., late Director of Kew Gardens.

THOMAS, Annie. See CUDLIP, MRS. ANNIE HALL.

THOMAS, Brandon, was educated by a private tutor and at a private school, but his family suffering great pecuniary losses, he was at an early age apprenticed to a Liverpool shipwright. Subsequently he became a clerk to a firm of timber merchants at Hull, and while in this employ he made his mark as a reciter and gave promise of his powers as a dramatist. In 1879 he was induced to try his fate as an actor in London, and his first part was given him by Mr. John Hare, when he appeared as Sandy McPibroch in the "Queen's Shilling." For a long period subsequent to this first appearance, he was only able to obtain small parts and matinée engagments, and was at last glad to proceed to America in Miss Rosina Vokes's Company. He played leading light comedy parts, and his talents were at once recognized by the transatlantic public. Mr. Thomas is the author of the following plays, in the leading rôles of several of which he has appeared:—"Comrades," 3 acts (appeared Dec. 1882, at the Old Court Theatre); "The Colour Serjeant," 1 act (Feb. 1885); "The Lodgers," 3 act farce (Jan. 1887); "A Highland Legacy," 1 act (Nov. 1888); "The Gold Craze," 4 acts (Nov. 1889); "A Lancashire Sailor," 1 act (June, 1891); "Charley's Aunt," 3 acts (Feb. 1892); "Marriage," 3 acts (May, 1892). "Comrades" and "Marriage" were written in collaboration, and "A Lancashire Sailor" and "A Highland Legacy" formed, with the "Pantomime Rehearsal," a programme of three short plays which under the title of the "Triple Bill," was for some time substituted for the customary three-act play constituting an evening's entertainment.

THOMAS, Charles Louis Ambroise, a French musical composer, born at Metz, Aug. 5, 1811, is the son of a distinguished professor of music. He entered the Conservatoire in 1828, and there gained many prizes, including the grand prize of Rome at the competition of 1832. After his return from Italy, he produced the following works amongst others:—"La Double Échelle," 1837; "Le Perruquier de la Régence," 1838; "Le Panier Fleuri;" "La Gipsy," ballet, composed conjointly with Benoist, 1839; "Carline," 1840; "Le Guerillero," 1842; "Le Caid," his first great success, 1848; "La Songe d'une Nuit d'Été," 1850; "Raymond," 1851; "La Cour de Célimène," 1855; "Psyché," 1856; "Le Carnaval de Venise," 1857; "Le Roman d'Elvire," 1860; "Mignon," 1866; "Hamlet," an opera represented for the first time on the stage March 8, 1868, and the hundredth repetition of which was prevented by the burning of the old Opera House in the Rue Lepeletier, Oct. 23, 1873; "Mignon," altered into an opera for the Baden Theatre, 1869; "Gilles et Gilletin," "Françoise de Rimini," another opera, 1877, and "La Tempête," a ballet in four acts, 1889. M. Ambroise Thomas has also composed a Requiem Mass, fantasies, nocturnes, rondos, &c. He was elected a member of the Académie des Beaux Arts in succession to Spontini, in 1851; was appointed "Officier d'Instruction Publique" in Dec. 1869; and replaced Auber as Director of the Conservatoire de Musique in 1871. He has been a Commander of the Legion of Honour since 1868, and "Grand Officier" since Jan. 1, 1881.

THOMAS, Theodore, musician, was born at Esens, Hanover, Germany, Oct. 11, 1835. He first played in public at the age of six. In 1845 his family removed to the United States, and for two years he played violin solos at concerts in New York. He then travelled for a time in the South, and returning to New York in 1851, he played at concerts and at the opera; at first as one of the principal violinists, and afterwards as orchestral leader, until 1861. In connection with others he began a series of Chamber Concerts in 1855, which were continued until 1869. His first symphony concerts were given in 1864-65, and extended (excepting from 1869 to 1872) until he left New York, in 1878, to take the direction of the College of Music at Cincinnati. He remained in Cincinnati until 1880, when he resigned this position and returned to New York. With brief intervals he was conductor of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society from 1862 to 1891, and of the New York Philharmonic Society from 1878 to 1891. From 1866 to 1878 he gave a series of summer concerts nightly in various cities; and in 1869 he made his first concert tour in the Eastern and Western States, which he has repeated from time to time since. He has conducted eight music festivals in Cincinnati (1873, 1875, 1878, 1880, 1882, 1884, 1886, and 1889), two in Chicago (1882 and 1884), and one in New York (1882). In the winter of 1885-86 he organised a series of popular concerts in New York, and during the same season was conductor of the American Opera Co. In 1891, Mr. Thomas left New York to take the Conductorship of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and the Directorship of the Music of the World's Columbian Exposition, and has since then resided in Chicago. Mr. Thomas has unquestionably done more than anyone else to raise the musical standard in America during the past thirty years.

THOMAS, William Luson, director of the Graphic, was born on Dec. 4, 1830, and was educated privately. He is the younger brother of the late George H. Thomas, the well-known artist. At the age of sixteen he went to Paris; then to New York; afterwards to Rome, where he studied drawing with his brother. In 1848 he returned to London, and was articled pupil to James W. Linton, the wood engraver; and two years afterwards commenced business on his own account, with great success. He employed his spare time in painting, and was elected an Associate of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, and a few years afterwards full member; since which time he has been a constant exhibitor. The Institute deciding to alter their laws and admit all artists' works at their exhibition, it was proposed to build a new gallery for the advancement of Water-Colour Art in Piccadilly, and invite the senior society and the Royal Water-Colour to amalgamate. Mr. W. L. Thomas was very active in this attempt, viz., to have only one large Water-Colour Exhibition, but, unfortunately for the advancement of Water-Colour art, was not successful; he, however, succeeded in obtaining the principal portion of the large capital required, and was elected Chairman of the Piccadilly Art Galleries Co. The building embraces the picture galleries of the Institute and Prince's Concert Hall. In 1869 he established the Graphic, and was decorated by the French Government "Officier de l'Instruction Publique."

In 1890 he attempted the even more formidable task of starting a daily illustrated paper—the Daily Graphic, which is now firmly established.

THOMPSON, Edmund Symes, M.D., is the third son of the late Theophilus Thompson, M.D., F.R.S., Physician to the Hospital for Consumption, Brompton; author of "Annals of Influenza;" Clinical Lectures on "Pulmonary Consumption," &c. Dr. E. S. Thompson was born in London on Nov. 16, 1837, and was educated (for nine years) at St. Paul's School and at King's College Hospital. At the M.B. examination of the University of London he obtained the Scholarship and Gold Medal in Medicine, and high honours (third) in the three allowed subjects. He took the M.D. Lond. in 1860, and was appointed, in the same year, Assistant-Physician to King's College Hospital. In 1864 he was elected Assistant-Physician to the Hospital for Consumption at Brompton; Physician in 1871; and Consulting Physician in 1889. In 1867 he became Professor of Physic in Gresham College (founded A.D. 1574); Fellow and (for four years) Secretary of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society; Fellow and (for three years) Secretary and Vice-President of the Medical Society of London; and F.R.C.P. in 1868. He is editor of the 2nd edition (with additional chapters) of "Lectures on Pulmonary Consumption," and author of "Influenza, an historical Survey"; "Gout in relation to Life Assurance"; "Essays on the Influence of Cod-liver Oil;" on "Sciatica;" on "Mediastinal Growths;" on "Indigestion in early Phthisis;" on "The Elevated Health Resorts of the Southern Hemisphere;" "Gresham Lectures;" on "Coughs and Colds;" on "South Africa as a Health Resort;" on "Winter Alpine Health Resorts;" on "Sea Voyages;" &c.

THOMPSON, Edward Maunde, F.S.A., Hon. LL.D. of St. Andrews, Hon. D.C.L. of Oxford and of Durham, born May 4, 1840, in Jamaica, was educated at Rugby. He was appointed an Assistant in the British Museum in May, 1861, became Assistant-Keeper of the MSS. in 1871, and was appointed Keeper of the MSS. in succession to Mr. Bond, in 1878, and Principal Librarian and Secretary in 1888. Mr. Thompson, who is a barrister of the Middle Temple, has edited "Chronicon Angliæ, 1328-1388" (in the Rolls Series), 1874; "Letters of Humphrey Prideaux" (for the Camden Society), 1875; "Chronicon Adæ de Usk, 1377-1404" (for the Royal Society of Literature), 1876; "Correspondence of the Family of Hatton" (for the Camden Society), 1878; "Diary of Richard Cocks, in Japan, 1615-1622" (for the Hakluyt Society), 1883; jointly with Professor Jebb, the facsimile of the "Laurentian Sophocles" (for the Hellenic Society), 1885; "Chronicon Galfridi le Baker de Swynebroke, 1303-1356," 1889; and "Adæ Murimuth Continuatio Chronicorum, 1303-1347," with "Robertus de Avesbury de gestis mirabilibus Regis Edwardi Tertii" (in the Rolls Series), 1889. In 1890 he wrote an introduction to the "Guide to the Exhibition Galleries of the British Museum." He is joint editor of the publications of the Palæographical Society, and in 1893 published a "Handbook of Greek and Latin Palæography" in the International Scientific Series.

THOMPSON, Francis, the son of a medical man in Lancashire, and the nephew of the Rev. Edward Healy Thompson, one of the Oxford seceders to the Roman Catholic Church, was educated at Ushaw College, near Durham. Subsequently, while studying medicine at Owens College, Manchester, he decided to devote himself to literature. Coming to London, he endured a time of suspense which was ended by the acceptance o his first contributions to Merry England. Mr. Thompson's poems soon won the admiration of Mr. Browning, Mr. Coventry Patmore, and others; and his first volume, when it appeared at the end of 1893, ran instantly through edition after edition, and attracted an admiration not often expressed towards a poet by his contemporaries.

THOMPSON, Sir Henry, F.R.C.S., born at Framlingham, Suffolk, Aug. 6, 1820, and educated at University College, London, was appointed Assistant Surgeon of University College Hospital, London, in 1853, Surgeon in 1863, Professor of Clinical Surgery in 1866, and Consulting Surgeon in 1874. In 1884 he held the post of Professor of Surgery and Pathology to the Royal College of Surgeons, London. He gained the Jacksonian Prize of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1852, with an essay on "The Pathology and Treatment of Stricture of the Urethra;" and the same prize in 1860, with an essay on "The Healthy and Morbid Anatomy of the Prostate Gland," both which, together with his "Clinical Lectures" and his work on "Practical Lithotomy and Lithotrity," have run through numerous editions here, and have been translated into all the chief European languages. After performing a difficult but successful operation upon the late King of the Belgians, in 1863 he was appointed Surgeon Extraordinary to his Majesty, and to the present King in 1866. He is an honorary member of the Society of Surgery in Paris, of the French Society of Hygiene, and of that of Italy; also an honorary member of l'Accademia de' Quiriti at Rome, and of the Royal Society of Fine Arts of Antwerp, besides numerous other foreign societies; he became an officer of the Order of Leopold in 1864, and a Commander of the same Order in 1876. He was knighted in 1867. Two articles written by him in the Contemporary Review, in 1874, drew public attention to the subject of cremation. Sir Henry has since written other articles on the same subject; and, in the Contemporary Review in 1872, a paper on "The Prayer for the Sick: hints towards a serious attempt to estimate its value." At various times he has written on matters relating to Food and Diet, in the Nineteenth Century; also a work entitled "Food and Feeding," the seventh edit. of which has just been issued. Sir Henry Thompson studied painting under Mr. Elmore and Mr. Alma Tadema, and he has frequently exhibited pictures at the Royal Academy, in the Salon of Paris, and elsewhere. He is also known as the author of two novels which appeared about nine or ten years ago under the pseudonym of "Pen Oliver;" the former entitled "Charley Kingston's Aunt;" the second "All But," which met with considerable success. More recently he has written a small work entitled "Diet in relation to age and activity," followed by "Modern Cremation, its History and Practice," of which several editions have appeared. He has been President of the "Cremation Society of England" since 1874, when it was founded, and has taken an active part in advocating the practice here and abroad. For many years he has devoted himself at several times (first in 1874) to the object of exposing the inefficient method of certifying the cause of death in all cases adapted throughout Great Britain, and the total neglect of it in many. He was at length mainly instrumental, by letters to The Times on the well-known case of Matilda Clover, whose death had been caused by criminal poisoning in 1892, in securing public attention to the subject, and by means of a deputation to the Home Secretary bringing it under the notice of the Government, who ordered a select committee of inquiry on "Death Certification." The result was a report completely justifying the allegations made, and adopting the remedies which had been suggested. It forms a blue book issued under the above title in 1893.

THOMPSON, The Rev. John, A.M., was born in the city of Carlisle more than sixty years ago. He is to a large extent a self-made man. Losing his father at the age of four, his early training was conducted by a kind and prudent mother; for a few years his own hands ministered to his necessities. During leisure hours, he studied Latin and Greek under the freely-given skilful tuition of a ministerial friend. He entered Glasgow College in 1843, and left it in 1848, after taking the degree of M.A. In Greek classics he obtained two prizes, and in Moral Philosophy one, awarded by the votes of his fellow-students. During his Theological Course at the United Presbyterian Divinity Hall, in Edinburgh, he obtained four scholarships, varying in value from £15 to £31 10s. He was ordained to the Holy Ministry in West Calder United Presbyterian Church in 1852. There he laboured more than six years; was then translated to St. Paul's, Birkenhead; and thence, after fourteen years, was removed in 1872 to Westmoreland Road Presbyterian Church, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Mr. Thompson gave his chief strength to ministerial work, and was favoured with much success. At his ordination in West Calder the membership of his Church was 250; at his removal it was 375. At his induction in St. Paul's Church, Birkenhead, the members were 33; at his leaving they were 153. In 1872 the members of Westmoreland Road Church were about 130; in the end of 1889 they were over 600. Occasionally Mr. Thompson has done a little literary work. Several articles from his pen have appeared from time to time in some of our religious periodicals. He published "Life-Work of Peter the Apostle," in 1870; and "Life and Writings of John the Apostle," in 1882. He was unanimously chosen Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England by the Synod of 1890. There he delivered an inaugural address on "The Spiritual Success of Christianity," a proof of its divine origin and a stimulus to ministerial activity. His presidency over the deliberations of the Synod gave general satisfaction. Mr. Thompson is a Liberal in politics; and is never reluctant to take his place on a Liberal platform. Thirteen years ago he was elected as a Liberal candidate to a seat on the Newcastle-on-Tyne School Board. For six years he has been Chairman of the Works Committee; and throughout his career he has done everything in his power to secure for England the benefits of a liberal education.

THOMPSON, Joseph, F.R.G.S., African explorer, was born at Penpont in 1858, and at the age of twenty, visited Central Africa in company with the late Keith Johnston, and assumed the command of the expedition on the death of his chief. In 1884 he began his famous journey to Masai Land, and was successful in reaching the north-eastern corner of Lake Victoria Nyanza. He published a description of his journey under the title of "Through Masai Land." In 1888 he started on an expedition to Morocco, during which he crossed the Atlas chain of mountains in six different places. In 1889 he published "Travels in the Atlas and South Morocco." He has received the Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society, and is also Gold Medallist in geology and zoology at the University of Edinburgh.

THOMPSON, Sir Ralph Wood, K.C.B., Permanent Under-Secretary for War.

THOMPSON, Professor Silvanus Phillips, F.R.A.S., was born in York, June 19, 1851, and educated chiefly at Bootham School, York, the Flounders Institute, Pontefract, and the Royal School of Mines. He took the degree of B.A. (Lond.), 1869; B.Sc. (Lond.), first (bracketed in Honours), 1866; and D.Sc. (Lond.), 1878. He was appointed Science Master, Bootham School, York, 1874; Lecturer in Experimental Physics, University College, Bristol, 1876; Professor of Experimental Physics in the same college, 1879; and Principal of, and Professor of Physics in, the City and Guilds Technical College, Finsbury, 1885. He is the author of "Elementary Lessons in Electricity and Magnetism," 1881, 43rd thousand in 1889; "Dynamo-electric Machinery," 1885, 4th edition in 1890; "Gilbert of Colchester; an Elizabethan Magnetizer," privately printed for the "Sette of Odd Volumes;" "Monodies," with W. C. Braithwaite, 1892, and with T. Eustace, "Electrical Tables and Memoranda." In 1891, at the British Association Meeting at Cardiff, he delivered the Operatives' Lecture on "Electricity in Mining." Professor Thompson has made numerous scientific researches in electricity, magnetism, acoustics, and optics. He is Vice-President of the Physical Society of London, Membre de Conseil de la Société de Physique (Paris), Hon. Member of the Physical Society of Frankfurt-am-Main Member of Council of the Institution of Electrical Engineers, Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society, and Hon. Sec. of the Gilbert Club.

THOMSON, Prof. Joseph John, M.A., F.R.S., was born on Dec. 18, 1856, at Manchester, and is the son of Mr. J. J. Thomson, of Manchester. He was educated at the Owens College, Manchester, and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was 2nd Wrangler in the Mathematical Tripos, 1880. He was elected Professor of Experimental Physics in the University of Cambridge, in 1884. He is the author of a treatise "On the Motion of Vortex Rings," 1883; "The application of Dynamics to Physics and Chemistry," 1888; and of various papers in the Transactions of Scientific Societies. He is Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and Fellow of the Royal Society.

THORBURN, Sir Robert, K.C.M.G., was born March 28, 1836, at Juniper Bank, in the County of Peebles, Scotland, and is the son of the late Robert Thorburn, Esq., of Juniper Bank, and Alison, daughter of the late Robert Grieve, Esq., of Kailatar, Perthshire, Scotland. He was educated in Edinburgh; went to Newfoundland in 1852; settled at St. John's, the capital of the island, where he has followed mercantile pursuits, and is now engaged in business. He was appointed Member of the Legislative Council of Newfoundland, Feb. 14, 1870, but resigned his seat in that body in 1885, when he entered the House of Assembly, and became Premier, which office he held till the close of 1889. Sir Robert Thorburn represented the Colony of Newfoundland at the Colonial Conference in London in 1886, when he received the honour of knighthood, and, being senior member of the Conference, had the honour of reading and presenting the address of the Conference to her Majesty the Queen. He is now a member of the Legislative Council of Newfoundland.

THORNE, Richard Thorne, C.B., M.B., F.R.S., was born Oct. 13, 1842, at Leamington, Warwickshire, and is the eldest living son of the late Mr. T. H. Thorne, J.P., banker, Leamington. He is Bachelor of Medicine (double first-class), University of London; Fellow of the Royal Society; Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, London; was appointed a Medical Inspector to H.M. Privy Council Office in 1871; and Principal Medical Officer to the Local Government Board in 1892. He is Lecturer on Public Health to St. Bartholomew's Hospital Medical School; Examiner in Public Health to the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge; and Stewart Prizeman of the British Medical Association, 1893. He was appointed delegate to represent the British Government at the International Sanitary (Cholera) Conferences of Rome, 1885; of Venice (Paris sitting), 1892; of Dresden, 1893; and of Paris, 1894; appointed H.M. Plenipotentiary to sign the Treaty of Dresden, 1893; was President of the Epidemiological Society of London, 1887-89; and Milroy Lecturer to the Royal College of Physicians of London, 1891; is Hon. Memb. Royal Academy of Medicine of Rome; and Corresponding Member of the Royal Italian Society of Italy. He is the author of a paper "On the Origin of Infection," published in the Transactions of the Epidemiological Society, 1878; "The Progress of Preventive Medicine during the Victorian Era, 1837-87;" "Diphtheria; its Natural History and Prevention," 1891; "Report on the Use and Influence of Hospitals for Infectious Diseases," published in the Tenth Annual Report of the Medical Officer of the Local Government Board; and of a large number of official reports on the causation of epidemic diseases, and on the health of towns, published in the Reports of the Privy Council Office and of the Local Government Board.

THORNTON, The Right Hon. Sir Edward, G.C.B., P.C., D.C.L., LL.D., is the son of the late Right Hon. Sir Edward Thornton, G.C.B., who was for some time Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in Portugal, and upon whom the title of Count de Cassilhas, in that kingdom, had been conferred by King John VI. of Portugal. Sir Edward Thornton, who succeeded to the title of Count de Cassilhas (in the kingdom of Portugal) on the death of his father about 1850, entered the diplomatic service in 1842, when he was attached to the mission at Turin. He was appointed paid attaché in Mexico in 1845, and Secretary of Legation to the Republic of Mexico in 1851. From April, 1852, till Oct., 1853, he acted as Secretary to the late Sir Charles Hotham's special mission to the River Plate. He was appointed Chargé d'Affaires and Consul General to the Republic of New Granada in May, 1854, but was transferred to the Republic of Uruguay in Sept. of the same year. He was appointed Minister Plenipotentiary to the Argentine Confederation of 1859; in July, 1865, he was sent on a special mission to the Emperor of Brazil, and in the following month he was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Emperor of Brazil. He retained this post until Sept., 1867, when he was transferred in the same capacity to the court of the King of Portugal. He, however, did not proceed thither, but was appointed in the following Dec. to the post of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington. In recognition of his diplomatic services he was made a Companion of the Bath (civil division) in Feb., 1863; and a Knight Commander of the same order, Aug. 9, 1870. He was sworn of the Privy Council, Aug. 19, 1871. Sir Edward Thornton was appointed Ambassador at St. Petersburg in May, 1881, and to the Sultan of Turkey, Dec. 1, 1884. This post he actually held from February till October, 1886, and he retired on a pension at the end of the same year. He was created a G.C.B. in Aug., 1883.

THORNYCROFT, John Isaac, F.R.S., M. Inst. C.E., and naval architect, eldest son of Thomas and Mary Thornycroft, was born on Feb. 1, 1843, in the Via Felice, Rome, in which ancient city his parents were then studying classic art. His mechanical training was commenced at an early age by his father, who made a locomotive, on which his children rode round his studio. The cylinders of this locomotive were afterwards adapted by his eldest son to form the engines of a very successful model steamer, which contained several of the most important elements to which the success of the modern torpedo boat is due,—the closed stokehole and fan, by means of which air could be forced through the fire, and the relatively large size and low position of the propeller. Rather later, when eighteen years of age, he constructed a small steam launch, the Nautilus, which was the first steam launch on the Thames that attained sufficient speed to keep up with racing crews. In 1863 he designed the Ariel, which was built at Chiswick, where he started, almost as an amateur, boat-builder. The Ariel was an example of a very fast steamboat, which was surpassed in speed by only the Miranda. The exact performance of the Ariel was measured by Sir Frederick Bramwell in 1872, and made a considerable sensation when published at a meeting of the Naval Architects. This boat may be considered as the progenitor of the torpedo boats of the present day. The closed stokeholes, however, were perfected by Mr. Thornycroft only in 1876, in the Gitana, a yacht on the Lake of Geneva, which has never yet been beaten by a boat of similar size.

After building the Ariel Mr. Thornycroft went for nine months as a draughtsman to Palmer's Shipbuilding Co., on the Tyne; he then went to Glasgow to go through the engineering course at that University, and obtained the certificate of proficiency in less than the usual time. On leaving the University he spent nine months at Mr. John Elder's, of Govan, in studying the method of shipbuilding on the Clyde. He then returned to Chiswick, and became a builder of torpedo boats. In this profession he rapidly took the first place; and he has constructed a very large number of such boats for the British and foreign governments. Among some of the more recent inventions of Mr. Thornycroft we may mention a speed indicator which he has perfected during the last few years, and a water-tube boiler, which combines great economy of fuel with lightness of structure, and has been fitted in many torpedo boats with marked success. The turbine propeller, also designed by Mr. Thornycroft for shallow draught vessels, is gaining ground and gives results which cannot be obtained by the use of the paddle-wheel. Mr. Thornycroft was elected F.R.S. in 1893, and is Vice-President of the Inst. Naval Architects.

THORNYCROFT, W. Hamo, R.A., sculptor, son of Thomas and Mary Thornycroft, was born in London, March 9, 1850. He was brought up in a remote part of Cheshire, and educated at Macclesfield Grammar School, and at University College School, London. At the age of seventeen he began to work in his father's studio, and in 1869 was admitted a student at the schools of the Royal Academy. In 1871 he first exhibited at the Royal Academy, and in the same year proceeded to Italy, where the nature of his art received considerable modification from study of the works of the Renaissance. In 1875 Mr. Thornycroft gained the biennial Gold Medal of the Royal Academy for a group of "A Warrior bearing a Wounded Youth from the Field of Battle." In 1880 he made his first great success, with a statue of "Artemis," which he executed in marble for the Duke of Westminster, and which is now at Eaton Hall. In Jan., 1881, Mr. Thornycroft was elected A.R.A., and for the exhibition of the same year produced his statue of "Teucer," which was purchased from the Chantrey Fund, and is now, in bronze, in the South Kensington Museum. Since then his most important works have been, the statue of "The Mower," 1884; "The Memorial to the Poet Gray," at Pembroke College, Cambridge, 1885; and the statue of "The Sower," 1886. Also in 1885 he executed a bust of Samuel Taylor Coleridge for Westminster Abbey; also a memorial to Sir John Gosse for the crypt of St. Paul's, and was commissioned by the Government to execute the National Memorial to General Gordon which now adorns Trafalgar Square. A replica of this statue, but with different sculptural treatment of pedestal, he executed for Melbourne also. In 1888 he exhibited his statue of "Medea" and was elected a Royal Academician. He executed, in 1890, a public statue of John Bright, for Rochdale. In the same year Mr. Thornycroft exhibited at the Academy his diploma work, a marble relief, entitled "The Mirror," and some small bronzes. Among his most recent works may be mentioned his statue of "Summer," 1893, and a bronze statue of a "Mower," 1894. In 1884 Mr. Thornycroft was married to Agatha, daughter of Homersham Cox, Esq., lately County Court Judge of Tonbridge.

THOROLD, The Right Rev. Anthony Wilson, D.D., Bishop of Winchester, younger son of the late Rev. Edward Thorold, rector of Hougham-cum-Marston, Lincolnshire, by Mary, only daughter of Thomas Wilson, Esq., M.D., of Grantham, was born at Hougham, June 13, 1825, and educated at Queen's College, Oxford (B.A. 1847; M.A. 1850; D.D., by diploma, 1877). He was rector of St. Giles-in-the-Fields, London, from 1857 to 1868; a member of the Schools Inquiry Commission in 1864; minister of Curzon Chapel, Mayfair, in 1868; and was elected on the first School Board for London in 1870. He became vicar of St. Pancras, Middlesex, and rural dean, in 1869; canon residentiary of York in 1874; examining chaplain to the Archbishop of York the same year. On the recommendation of Lord Beaconsfield, he was nominated by the Crown to the bishopric of Rochester, in succession to Dr. Claughton, who had been translated to the newly-constituted See of St. Albans. He was consecrated in Westminster Abbey, July 25, 1877, and was made Bishop of Winchester in March, 1891, in succession to the Right Rev. E. Harold Browne, who resigned. He is the author of several devotional works, of which one, "The Presence of Christ," has gone through twenty editions.

THORPE, Professor Thomas Edward, F.R.S., was born at Harpurhey, near Manchester, Dec. 8, 1845, being the son of a Manchester merchant. He was educated at private schools, at Owens College, Manchester, and at the Universities of Heidelberg and Bonn. He was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry at Owens College in 1869; Professor of Chemistry in Anderson's College, Glasgow, in 1870; Professor of Chemistry in the Yorkshire College at Leeds in 1874; and Professor of Chemistry at the Royal College of Science, South Kensington, in 1885. He is a F.R.S., and a Member of Council, 1890 and 1894, a Vice-President and Treasurer of the Chemical Society of London, a Member and Vice-President of the Council of the Society of Chemical Industry, a Fellow of the German Chemical Society, and of the Physical Society of London, Ph.D. of Heidelberg, and B.Sc. of the Victoria University, Manchester, D.Sc. (Hon.) of Trinity College, Dublin, formerly Examiner in Chemistry at, and now Fellow of, the University of London, and Examiner to the Victoria University, and the Science and Art Department, South Kensington. He was the first Longstaff Medallist of the Chemical Society of London, a Royal Medallist of the Royal Society (1889), and one of the Bakerian lecturers, and is a corresponding member of the Philosophical Societies of Glasgow and Leeds. Professor Thorpe is the author of upwards of 100 memoirs on Chemistry and Physical Chemistry, published in the "Philosophical Transactions," the Proceedings of the Royal Society, and the Journal of the Chemical Society, and the British Association Reports. He is also the author of a "Dictionary of Applied Chemistry," 3 vols.; "Inorganic Chemistry," 2 vols.; "Qualitative Analysis;" "Quantitative Analysis;" "Chemical Problems;" "Essays in Historical Chemistry;" and editor of "Coal: its History and Uses." He has likewise written various articles in Watts' "Dictionary of Chemistry," and is a frequent contributor to Nature and other scientific periodicals. Professor Thorpe was a member of the Solar Eclipse Expeditions of 1870, 1878, 1886, and 1893, when he had charge of the party sent to the West Coast of Africa. He has acted as one of the Secretaries of the Chemical Section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, was a Vice-President of the Section at the Jubilee Meeting at York in 1880, a Member of the Council, and President of the Chemical Section at the Leeds Meeting in 1890.

THRING, Lord Henry, K.C.B., born at Alford, Somerset, on Nov. 3, 1818, is the second son of the Rev. J. G. D. Thring, and Sarah, daughter of the Rev. J. Jenkyns, of Evercreech, Somerset. He was educated at Shrewsbury, and Magdalen College, Cambridge: was third in the First Class of Classical Tripos, and fourteenth Junior Optime, 1841; B.A., 1841; M.A., 1844; called to the Bar in 1845, Inner Temple; was appointed Counsel to the Home Office in 1860, and Parliamentary Counsel in 1868. He was made K.C.B. in 1873, and a Peer in 1886, on his retirement from office. He has published works on the Succession Duty Act; "The Law of Joint Stock Companies;" "Practical Legislation;" essays in the "Manual of Military Law," on "Insurrection" and the "Customs of War;" and various articles in reviews. He married, in 1856, Elizabeth, daughter of the late John Cardwell, Esq., of Liverpool, and has one child, Katherine Annie.

THURLOW (Lord), The Right Hon. Thomas John Hovell-Thurlow-Cumming-Bruce, P.C., F.R.S., fifth baron Thurlow, of Thurlow, County Suffolk, was born in London on Dec. 5, 1838. He is the son of the third Baron, by Sarah, only daughter of Peter Hodgson, Esq., and succeeded his elder brother as the fifth Baron on April 22, 1874. Lord Thurlow is a descendant of a Norfolk family, which dates back several centuries. Amongst his ancestors was William Thurlow, of Burnham-Ulp, in Norfolk, who died in the year 1590. The Barony of Thurlow was created in 1792, and the first Baron was Edward Thurlow, who was born in 1732, and died in 1806. It was in recognition of his high legal merits that the first Lord Thurlow was created a peer, and occupied the woolsack, as Lord Chancellor, for close on twenty years. The present Lord Thurlow entered the diplomatic service in the year 1858, and in the year following became attached to the Embassy at Paris. During 1860-1 Lord Thurlow was attached to the Earl of Elgin's special mission to China. He was present at the capture of the Taku forts and of Pekin, and was one of the recipients of the China Medal. In 1862 he was appointed private secretary to the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, and in 1864 was attached to H.M. Embassy at Vienna. During the years 1865-6 he was private secretary to Sir Frederic Bruce, H.M. Minister at Washington. Subsequently he was appointed second secretary in the diplomatic service, proceeding to the Hague in December, 1866. He resigned that appointment in July, 1870, and retired from the diplomatic service. He is a Justice of Peace and Deputy-Lieutenant for the counties of Elgin, Nairn, Stirling and Suffolk, and was a Lord-in-Waiting upon the Queen from September, 1880, to June, 1885, and from February to May, 1886. From the April to the August of the last-mentioned year he occupied the position of Paymaster-General; and was also, in that year, appointed to represent her Majesty as Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, which holds its annual meetings in Edinburgh. He was then also appointed a Privy Councillor. In 1864 he married Lady Elma, the only surviving child of the eighth Earl of Elgin by his first wife, Elizabeth Mary, who was the only daughter of Charles Lennox Cumming-Bruce, Esq., M.P., of Roseisle, Dunphail and Kinnaird, N.B. Lord Thurlow assumed in the right of his wife, and by Royal license in July, 1874, the additional names of Cumming-Bruce. Lord Thurlow has six children, and his heir, the Honourable James Bruce, was born in 1867.

THURSTON, Sir John Bates, K.C.M.G., High Commissioner and Consul-General for the Western Pacific, was born in 1836, followed the nautical profession till 1866, when he became Consul at Fiji and Tonga, and was very popular there; and became the chosen and special adviser of the King and Chiefs of Fiji to confer with her Majesty's Commissions as to the cession of Fiji. In 1874 he was Colonial Secretary and Auditor-General of Fiji, and in 1879 was Secretary to the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific; and, in 1887, became Governor and High Commissioner for the Western Pacific.

THURSTON, Professor Robert H., LL.D., formerly of the United States Naval Engineer Corps, late Professor of Engineering, was born in Providence, R.I., Oct. 25, 1839. He is the son of Robert L. Thurston, who built his first engine in 1821, and founded the Providence Steam Engine Company in 1837. R. H. Thurston was educated at Brown University, and received, during youth, a useful practical education in his father's workshops. When he left college, in 1859, he was familiar with the work of the draughtsman, designer, pattern-maker, moulder, the forge, and machine shop. He also did a considerable amount of work in the design and construction of the Sickles and the Greene engines, which were built by the firm. Then the war broke out, calling the best men of the country into the army and navy. Mr. Thurston applied for appointment in the engineer corps of the navy, passed examination in the summer of 1861, and was ordered to duty on board the Unadilla, was senior assistant, and had charge of the engines during action. January, 1866, found Mr. Thurston at the office of the Commandant of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, reporting to Admiral Porter for duty in the Department of Natural and Experimental Philosophy, as an acting assistant Professor. He was six years continuously on duty at the Naval Academy. In July, 1871, Mr. Thurston accepted an appointment at the school of mechanical engineering at Hoboken, and for fourteen years filled the chair of engineering in the Stevens Institute of Technology, resigning his commission in the navy in 1872. He organized, about 1873, or earlier, what was probably the first mechanical laboratory for research in engineering that was ever founded; and, for the dozen years succeeding, kept it employed constantly in the investigation of problems of practical importance. He was, meantime (1875-8) a member of the U.S. Board appointed to test iron, steel, and other metals, directed the greater part of the work completed by that board, and, as its secretary, edited its reports. His investigation of the laws of friction and of properties of the alloys of copper, tin and zinc, which resulted in the determination, by a new and ingenious method, of the relative values of all combinations of those elements, were perhaps the most strikingly original and famous of these researches. In July, 1885, Professor Thurston took charge of Sibley College, reorganized it, created a department of mechanical engineering, readjusted the older departments, and saw immediate results in the rapid growth of Sibley College. Dr. Thurston was the first President of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, has been for many years a member of the American, French, Scotch, German and Austrian Societies of Civil Engineers, of the British Institution of Naval Architects, the American Institution of Mining Engineers, of which he is also Past Vice-President, the American and British Associations for Advancement of Science, three times Vice-President of the former, and once of the latter (Montreal, 1884), and of other scientific and technical associations at home and abroad. He is a member of the "Loyal Legion," and is Officier de l'Instruction Publique de France, and was given the degree of LL.D. by his alma mater, Brown University, on the thirteenth anniversary of his graduation. He has been an extensive writer, on professional subjects mainly, his papers numbering something like 250, and he writes some articles of a speculative character. He is the author of many books, including a "History of the Steam Engine," a three-volume treatise on "The Materials of Engineering," a treatise of "Friction and Lost Work," &c.

TICHBORNE, Charles Robert, LL.D., Ph.D., Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry and the Chemical Society, Member of the Council of the Royal Irish Academy, and Licentiate of the Royal College of Surgeons of Ireland, was educated at Birmingham, and is the son of William S. Tichborne, a descendant in the direct line from Sir Robert Tichborne, whose name appears on the death-warrant of Charles the First. Charles Tichborne studied chemistry under Professor Hofmann, and shortly afterwards went to superintend the Laboratories of the Apothecaries' Hall of Ireland, with which body he has been associated for many years. He is now Deputy-Governor of that body. He was appointed, in 1872, Lecturer on Chemistry to the Carmichael College of Medicine, and in 1874-75 he was Extern Examiner in Chemistry to the University of Dublin. He is at the present time an Examiner under the conjoint board of the College of Surgeons and Apothecaries' Hall. On the retirement of Sir Dominic Corrigan, Mr. Tichborne was elected President of the Pharmaceutical Society of Ireland, and was afterwards made Professor to that Society's School of Chemistry. He is at present a gas examiner for the Board of Trade, and one of the County Analysts. Mr. Tichborne began very early in life to write scientific papers, some of the most important of which are the following:—"Official reports upon the Chemical Section of the International Exhibition, Dublin, 1864;" "Detection of Cantharides in Medico-legal Investigations," described in Taylor's Principles of Medical Jurisprudence. He contributed to the columns of the Cornhill Magazine a description of the naturally-formed mummies found in St. Michan's Church, Dublin. This was transferred to the pages of the Pall Mall Gazette, Sept. 6, 1866. In 1868 appeared an analysis of the well-known Schwalheim Waters, in which the author discovered lithium; these waters had previously been examined by Liebig, and, in 1869, Tichborne described, in the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy, a new body, which he called colophonic hydrate. As far back as 1871 the Royal Irish Academy voted £50 to aid him in his researches upon Molecular Dissociation. In 1870-71 he published many papers on dust as a ferment, and particularly street dust. These researches are briefly described in De Chaumont and Parkes' "Manual of Hygiene." His papers on subjects connected with Pharmacy are too numerous to mention, but many of the processes in the British Pharmacopœia are based upon his investigations. He also published, in connection with Dr. Prosser James, a work entitled "The Mineral Waters of Europe." Professor Tichborne invented an instrument for scientifically determining the relative hardness of stones, which was most favourably received by the Institute of Civil Engineers, and about 1888 he patented, in association with a syndicate, the collection, liquefaction, and utilization, of the carbolic acid gas given off during fermentation. This Tichborne process is being successfully carried into operation in the largest brewery in the world, Messrs. Guinness's, of Dublin, and in some of the large breweries and distilleries in London and Paris. Professor Tichborne's latest researches have been in connection with purification of coal gas, and are to be found in the Journal of Gas Lighting (1893). Professor Tichborne is well known amongst art circles as an amateur musician. He married, in 1861, Sarah, the daughter of Surgeon Wilkinson, of Black Rock, co. Dublin, and has one son and three daughters.

TILDEN, Professor William Augustus, D.Sc., F.R.S., was born in London, on the 15th August, 1842. Having passed through many schools, public and private, he was sent to a business house in London, to be made into a Pharmaceutical Chemist. Here he attended the lectures on Physics, Chemistry, and Botany, at the Pharmaceutical Society's School in Bloomsbury Square, and in 1860 followed Hofmann's lectures at the Royal College of Chemistry. About this time he won the first Bell Scholarship awarded by the Pharmaceutical Society, and after attending courses of lectures on Physics by Tyndall, and Geology by Ramsay, at the School of Mines, he entered, in 1862, the research laboratory of the late Dr. Stenhouse, in the capacity of junior assistant. A year later he was appointed Demonstrator of Chemistry in the laboratory of the Pharmaceutical Society, where he remained seven years. In 1871 he obtained the D.Sc. degree (Lond.), and in 1872 was appointed Senior Science Master at Clifton, and there remained till 1880, when he was appointed the first Professor of Chemistry at Mason College. Dr. Tilden was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1880. In 1892, he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Sciences from the University of Dublin on the occasion of the celebration of its 300th Anniversary. He has more than completed three years' service as President of the Institute of Chemistry of Great Britain and Ireland; he is also a Vice-President of the Chemical Society of London, and a Member of Council of the Royal Society. In 1893 he was elected an Honorary Member of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, Corresponding Member of the College of Pharmacy of Philadelphia, Honorary Member of the Society of Public Analysts, and in April, 1894, was appointed Professor of Chemistry in the Royal College of Science, London. During his residence in Birmingham he held office as President of the Birmingham Teachers' Association (1884), and of the Philosophical Society (1886); as Vice-President of the British Association (1886), and President of the Chemical Section of the British Association at its meeting in Bath (1888). Dr. Tilden was for three years Chairman of the Academic Board in the early days of the Mason College. He is the author of some fifty papers in the "Transactions of the Chemical Society," the Phil. Trans. of the Royal Society, the "Berichte" of the German Chemical Society, and other journals. He has also published several text-books.

TILLETT, Benjamin, Labour Leader, was born in Bristol in 1859, and went to work in a brickyard before he was eight years old. At twelve he was for six months "boy" on board a fishing-smack. After being apprenticed to a bootmaker, he ran away to sea, joined the navy, and after a short period of service was discharged invalided. Subsequently he shipped in merchant vessels, and went several voyages. He then settled in the midst of the London Docks, and began to form the Dockers' Union among the dock-labourers who were then the most wretched and ill-paid of unskilled labourers. During the great Dock Strike he worked energetically and successfully as an organiser of his Union, which is now large and prosperous. "Ben" Tillet is a ready speaker of the demagogue type. At the General Election of 1892 he stood for West Bradford, but was beaten by a Liberal and a Conservative though he polled a large number of votes. He was tried at Bristol in the earlier part of 1893 on the charge of inciting to riot, but acquitted. He has given important evidence before the Parliamentary Commission on Pauper Immigration, and before the Lords' Committee on Sweating. During the close of 1894 and beginning of 1895 he defended himself in the Times against the severe strictures of Mr. W. H. Mallock, who accused him in effect of complete ignorance of Economics. He is an Alderman of the London County Council.

TINWORTH, George, was born near Camberwell Gate, on Nov. 5, 18—. His father was a wheelwright, but the boy at an early age showed a talent for drawing, and afterwards developed powers as a wood-carver, and it was accordingly decided that he should be brought up as an art-worker. At the age of eighteen he entered the Lambeth School of Art, and studied modelling under Mr. Bale. In the year 1864 he entered the Academy Schools, and gained the Second Silver Medal in the antique, and the First Silver Medal in the life school. On the death of his father he entered the Lambeth Pottery. He was twenty-three years old, and soon began to make his mark as a modeller of terra cotta panels and a worker in stoneware. Of panels, Mr. Tinworth has modelled over a hundred. Among his best-known work may be mentioned "The Preparing for the Crucifixion," the "Release of Barabbas," 28 panels in the Guards' Chapel, executed for Mr. Street, R.A., and the altar-panel in York Minster, which last was executed in 1876. More recently he has executed a memorial to the late Mr. Spurgeon, 16 feet long, with statue in centre, and a statue of Bradlaugh for the town of Northampton. A statue in Vauxhall Park is also by him; it was presented by Sir Henry Doulton, Mr. Tinworth's employer. Mr. Tinworth has gained many honours at various exhibitions, viz., the bronze medal at Vienna in 1873, an American medal in 1876, a silver medal and decoration in Paris in 1878, a gold medal at Nice in 1884, a gold medal in Tasmania, and a medal in America in 1894.

TISZA, von Borosjenö Koloman, late Prime Minister of Hungary, was born at Geszt, Dec. 16, 1830, and educated for the Civil Service, but his career was blocked at the outset by the Revolution of 1848. For some years he devoted himself to travel, and in 1859 first became known as an opponent of the Government policy of religious intolerance. In 1860 his party gained some independence; he then obtained a seat in the Hungarian Parliament, and succeeded Count Teleki as a leader of the Moderate Radicals. In 1875, carrying over this branch to the united Liberals under Deák, he became Minister of the Interior, and subsequently Prime Minister of the Hungarian Cabinet. In the critical period of 1876-8, he opposed Russia and Panslavism, being less vacillating than Count Andrassy, who kept hesitating between the views of Russia and Germany on the Eastern Question. He resigned with his co-ministers when Austrian finances were insufficient to meet the expenses of the Bosnian occupation, but eventually returned to his former position. In March, 1890, he resigned the Premiership, and was succeeded by Count Szapary.

TODD, Sir Charles, K.C.M.G., M.A. (Cantab.), F.R.S., F.R.A.S., &c., Postmaster-General, Superintendent of Telegraphs, and Government Astronomer, Adelaide, South Australia, was born at Islington, July 7, 1826, and entered the Government Service at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, in 1841. In 1848 he was appointed Assistant Astronomer at Cambridge, under the late Rev. Professor Challis. In 1854 he was appointed Assistant Astronomer at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, and in the following year he was offered, by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Lord John Russell, and accepted, the appointment of Government Astronomer and Superintendent of Telegraphs in South Australia, and left for that colony in July, 1855, where he introduced the Electric Telegraph System. In January, 1870, the Colonial Government, having decided upon amalgamating the Postal and Telegraph Services, appointed Mr. Todd Postmaster-General, in addition to his duties as Superintendent of Telegraphs and Government Astronomer. Under his direction the telegraph was rapidly extended throughout the colony, his greatest work being the construction of a line from Adelaide through Central Australia, then a terra incognita, to Port Darwin, on the north coast, 2,000 miles long, to meet the cable of the Eastern Extension Telegraph Co. This work was carried out, in the face of great natural difficulties, in the space of about twenty months, being completed towards the end of 1872, in which year Mr. Todd rode across the Continent and thoroughly organised the service; and, on his return to Adelaide, received from her Majesty the honour of the Companionship of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. Shortly after this, the South Australian section, 1,000 miles long, of the telegraph line from Adelaide to Perth was constructed under Mr. Todd's immediate direction. As Government Astronomer, Mr. Todd has carried out an extensive series of Astronomical and Meteorological Observations, the latter affording much valuable information on the climate of Australia, including the dry interior, and the north coast. He determined the position of the eastern boundary line of the colony, or 141st meridian; and, in conjunction with Messrs. Ellery & Russell, the Government Astronomers of Victoria and of New South Wales, he made a careful telegraphic determination of the difference of longitude between Singapore, Adelaide, Melbourne, and Sydney. In 1886 Cambridge University conferred upon him the degree of M.A., honoris causâ; and in 1889 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London. He is a Member of the Council of the Adelaide University; one of the Governors of the South Australian Public Library; has been President of the Royal Society of South Australia; and is a Member of the Council of the Adelaide School of Mines, &c. He was made a K.C.M.G. in 1893.

TODHUNTER, John, M.D., was born in Dublin, on Dec. 30, 1839, and educated in Quaker Schools. At the age of sixteen he entered on a mercantile career in his father's offices at Dublin and Limerick. Afterwards, in 1861, he became a student of Trinity College, Dublin, and studied medicine, taking the degree of B.A. in 1865, M.B. and M.Ch. in 1866, M.D. in 1871. He completed his studies in Paris and Vienna, and then returned to Dublin to practise. From 1870 to 1874 he was Assistant Physician to the Cork Street Fever Hospital, and at the same time held the Chair of English Literature in Alexandra College, Dublin. Resigning these appointments in 1874, he came to London, where he has since devoted himself to literature. His published works comprise: "The Theory of the Beautiful, a Saturday Lecture," 1872; "Laurella, and other Poems," 1876; "Alcestis," 1879; "A Study of Shelley," 1880; "The True Tragedy of Rienzi," 1881; "Forest Songs and other Poems," 1881; "Helena in Troas," a play in Greek form, produced at Hengler's Circus in May and June, 1886, and afterwards performed at Exeter; "A Sicilian Idyll," produced at Bedford Park, St. George's Hall, the Vaudeville Theatre, and Aubrey House, Campden Hill, between 1890 and 1893; and "The Poison Flower," acted with the "Sicilian Idyll" at the Vaudeville, in 1891. Dr. Todhunter has recently produced a modern drama in prose, "The Black Cat," played by the "Independent Theatre Society" at the Opera Comique in Dec. 1893; and "A Comedy of Sighs," acted, under Miss Florence Farr's management, at the Avenue Theatre in March, 1894.

TOLSTOI, Count Lyof Nikolaivitch, usually called Count Leo Tolstoi, the most eminent living Russian novelist and social reformer, is a descendant of Count Peter Tolstoi, the friend and comrade of Peter the Great, and was born on Aug. 28, 1828, at Yasnaia Poliana, in the Government of Toula, but was left an orphan at an early age. He received the usual education of a Russian noble, first privately and afterwards at the University of Kazan. He spent the subsequent years in study till 1851; when, at the age of 23, he entered the army and accompanied his brother to the Caucasus. On the outbreak of the Crimean War (1853) he was called to Sebastopol and saw active service there, taking the command of a mountain battery and assisting in the defence of the citadel. Resigning his commission at the close of the war (1856), he devoted himself to literature. His "War and Peace" (1860), a tale of the invasion of Russia by Napoleon in 1812, is regarded by Russians as his masterpiece; but "Anna Karenina," which appeared in 1876, is better appreciated abroad. Matthew Arnold spoke most enthusiastically in its praise a few months before his death, and George Meredith says that Anna, the beautiful but unfaithful wife, who ends her guilty passion by suicide, is the most perfectly depicted female character in all fiction. Since the publication of this last work, Tolstoi has given himself up to the earnest working out of the problems of life, the attainment of a higher religious and moral philosophy. He makes "Return not Evil" the keystone of the Christian faith, and insists that the literal interpretation of the Sermon on the Mount is the only rule of Christian life. His religious views are set forth in "Christ's Christianity" and "My Religion." His "Kreutzer Sonata," with its strange theory of morals, was published in 1890. In Oct. 1892, Count Tolstoi deposited his memoirs and diaries with the Curator of the Rumyanzoff Museum, on condition that they should not be published till ten years after his death. In Nov. he legally made over his whole fortune to his wife and children. In 1893 he published "The Kingdom of God Within Us," a work on the social question; and in 1894, "Patriotism and Christianity," a criticism of the Franco-Russian Alliance, which appeared in the Daily Chronicle. Count Tolstoi is married, and has nine children living.

"TOM BROWN." See HUGHES, THOMAS, Q.C.

TOMLINSON, Professor Charles, F.R.S., F.C.S., was born in London, Nov. 27, 1808. His father becoming embarrassed, enlisted in the Army; and after serving in Holland, died on his passage to India, leaving his widow in poverty, and two children, Charles being the younger. She could provide them with only the mere rudiments of education, and at the age of twelve the boys were sent out into the world to earn their own living. The elder, meeting with friends, was able to obtain a University education; the younger, during many years, had to serve in very subordinate offices, but being fond of reading, he devoted his scanty leisure to study, and derived assistance from the London Mechanics' Institution, under the genial management of Dr. Birkbeck. In 1830 an opportunity offered for further improvement. He became assistant in a classical school, and a few years later, his brother being appointed to a curacy near Salisbury, it was suggested that a good day-school for boys was much wanted in that city. Accordingly the two brothers started such a school, the one undertaking the classical, and the other modern languages and the science department. The introduction of experimental science into schools was at that time a novelty, and the lectures on Chemistry and Physics, delivered on two evenings in every week, not only interested the boys, but attracted many members of the boys' families. Charles even made some attempts at original research, and published papers in Thomson's Records of Science, and also in the Magazine of Popular Science. Some of these papers formed the basis of a work published in 1838, entitled the "Student's Manual of Natural Philosophy." This work was well adapted to the time, and had a rapid sale. Parker, the publisher of the Saturday Magazine, invited Charles to contribute to that work, which he did to a large extent during many years. Parker found Charles so useful to him, that he invited him to settle in London, so as to increase his literary and scientific connection with his publishing house. This offer was accepted, but before leaving Salisbury, Charles married a highly cultivated lady, who during many years rendered him most valuable assistance in his literary work. Mr. Tomlinson's connection with Parker's house brought him into contact with various scientific men, and led to his appointment as Science Lecturer in King's College School. Mr. Tomlinson was one of the first members of the Cavendish Society, and undertook much literary work for it. He also wrote a number of scientific treatises for the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, also several of the treatises in Weale's Series, and many articles on Technology in several Cyclopædias. Mr. Tomlinson's original researches in science are contained in numerous memoirs and papers in the Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society (of which he became a Fellow in June, 1867); the Philosophical Magazine; Jamieson's New Edinburgh Philosophical Journal; The Journal of the Chemical Society (of which he is also a Fellow); the Reports of the British Association (of which he is a Life Member); The Journal of the Society of Arts; The Pharmaceutical Journal; The Chemical News; Nature; the Proceedings of the Geologists' Association, and some others. He was also one of the original founders of the Physical Society. Mr. Tomlinson holds the opinion that the culture of a scientific man is very imperfect unless combined with a taste for literature. All through life it has been his business to become acquainted with the best books of the best authors in various languages. In 1874 he published a volume on "The Sonnet;" and in 1877 a translation of Dante's "Inferno," accompanied by an essay on Dante and his translators. This led to his appointment as Barlow lecturer on the Divine Comedy at University College, which he held during three years, according to the founder's bequest, giving twelve lectures in each year. In 1881 he published a volume containing original Sonnets, and also Translations from the Italian and Spanish. In 1887 he brought out a second edition of his translation of Goethe's "Hermann and Dorothea" (the first edition being published in 1849), including a long critical and historical introductory essay. In 1887 he published a volume of "Essays Old and New," and, on completing his eightieth year, a volume entitled "Essays by an Octogenarian." These latter and some subsequent essays first appeared in a weekly paper, The Christian Life, and were severally reprinted for private distribution. Mr. Tomlinson is a Member of the Dante Society, and also of the Goethe Society; and has contributed various literary papers to the Transactions of the latter. He is also the author of a volume well known to chess players as "Amusements in Chess," and has contributed various papers to chess periodicals. In 1891 his chess poems were collected, and published in a small volume. He has also during the last few years contributed many articles of literary and scientific interest to the weekly publication, Notes and Queries.

TOMLINSON, Herbert, B.A., F.R.S., was born at York, on Nov. 18, 1845, and was educated at St. Peter's School, York, and at Christ Church, Oxford. In 1868 he graduated B.A., both in the Mathematical and Natural Science Honour Schools; in 1870 he was Whitworth Exhibitioner, and in the same year was appointed Demonstrator of Natural Philosophy at King's College, London, which post he still retains. In 1889 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in consideration of his original researches in physics. As a writer of natural science, Mr. Tomlinson is well known through his numerous contributions to the Proceedings of the Royal Society, the Philosophical Magazine, &c.; the most important of which relate to the influence of stress and strain on the Physical Properties of Matter. The following papers may be enumerated:—"Effect of Magnetization on the Electrical Conductivity of Iron" (Proceedings of the Royal Society, 1875); "Increase in Resistance to the Passage of an Electrical Current produced in Certain Wires by Stretching" (ibid., 1877); "Alteration of Thermal Conductivity of Iron and Steel caused by Magnetism" (ibid., 1878); "Moduli of Elasticity" (Philosophical Transactions, 1883); "Electrical Conductivity" (ibid.); "Relations between Moduli of Elasticity, Thermal Capacity, and other Physical Constants" (Proceedings of the Royal Society, 1885); "Alteration of the Electrical Conductivity of Cobalt, &c., by Longitudinal Traction" (ibid., 1885); "Internal Friction of Metals" (Philosophical Transactions, 1886); "Coefficient of Viscosity of Air" (ibid); "On Certain Sources of Error in Connection with Experiments on Torsional Vibrations" (Philosophical Magazine, 1885); "Temporary and Permanent Effects on some of the Physical Properties of Iron produced by raising the Temperature to One Hundred Degrees C." (ibid., 1886; "Effect of Change of Temperature on the Internal Friction and Torsional Elasticity of Metals" (abstract in Proceedings of the Royal Society, 1886); and "Effects of Magnetization on the Elasticity and the Internal Friction of Metals" (Philosophical Transactions, vol. cxxix., p. 1).

TOOLE, John Laurence, comedian, son of Mr. Toole, the civic toast-master, born in London, March 12, 1833, was educated at the City of London School, and became a clerk to a wine merchant, but soon quitted this occupation; having been smitten with the "bias dramatic," he was induced to join the City Histrionic Club, where his qualifications for the dramatic profession were soon recognised, and he found a favourable opportunity for appearing before a public audience at a benefit to Mr. F. Webster, at the Haymarket Theatre, July 22, 1852. Having successfully passed this ordeal, he resolved to become an actor, and began his professional career under Mr. Charles Dillon, at the Queen's Theatre, Dublin, where he achieved a great success. After further testing his powers at Belfast, Edinburgh, and Glasgow, he accepted, in 1854, an engagement at the St. James's Theatre, London, under the management of Mrs. Seymour, and sustained a variety of characters in low comedy with considerable success. This was followed by an engagement with his old manager, Mr. C. Dillon, who had the Lyceum for a short term, and on the opening of the New Adelphi Theatre by Mr. Webster, Mr. Toole became the leading comedian. He has for more than thirty years been a popular favourite, whether it be in the broad region of farce, or in those more important parts in which tears and laughter equally predominate; such as "Caleb Plummer," in the version of Mr. Dickens' "Cricket on the Hearth," or the honest fisherman, Joe Bright, in the drama "Through Fire and Water." For several years Mr. Toole has been in the habit of making a professional tour in the provinces, where he is as great a favourite as in the metropolis. In July, 1874, he went on a "starring" tour to the United States, and made his American début at Wallack's Theatre, New York, (Aug. 17). He re-appeared at the Gaiety Theatre, London, Nov. 8, 1875. On Nov. 17, 1880, he undertook the management of the Folly Theatre, which he has reconstructed in accordance with all the requirements of the authorities, and renamed, calling it after his own name—Toole's Theatre. In 1888 he published his "Reminiscences." In March, 1890, he started for a tour in Australia, which proved most successful. His most recent success was as Walker, in Mr. Barrie's play "Walker, London."

TOURGEE, Albion Winegar, Ph.D., LL.D., American author and jurist, was born at Williamsfield, Ohio, May 2, 1838. He studied at Rochester University, 1859-61; entered the Union Army and served throughout the Civil War. At its close he settled at Greensboro, N.C., where he resided until 1880. He was a member of the N.C. Constitutional Conventions of 1868 and in the year 1875, and was one of the Commissioners to codify and revise the State laws. He was elected Judge of the Superior Court of the State in 1868, and held that position until 1874. He edited The Continent, a weekly magazine, New York, 1882-84. He has been a professor of the Buffalo Law School since 1889, and wrote "A Bystander's Notes," which appeared in The Chicago Inter-Ocean, from 1888 to 1893. He is the author of several professional works: "The Code with Notes" (N.C.), 1877; "A Digest of Cited Cases" (N.C.), 1879; "Statutory Decisions of the North Carolina Reports," 1879. He is the author of the following novels: "Toinette" (now entitled "A Royal Gentleman"), 1874; "A Fool's Errand," 1879; "Figs and Thistles," 1879; "Bricks without Straw," 1880; "John Eax," 1882; "Hot Ploughshares," 1883; "Black Ice," 1886; "Button's Inn," 1887; "With Gauge and Swallow," 1889; "Pactolus Prime," 1890; "Murvale Eastman," 1891; "A Son of Old Harry," 1892; "Out of the Sunset Sea," 1893. Miscellaneous Works, "An Appeal to Cæsar," 1884; "The Veteran and his Pipe," 1887; "Letters to a King," 1888. Since 1888 he has been a frequent contributor to The North American Review, Forum, and other magazines. His residence has been at Mayville, a village at the head of Lake Chautauqua, Chautauqua county, N.Y., since leaving the South.

TRACY, The Hon. Benjamin Franklin, American statesman, was born at Oswego, N.Y., April 26, 1830. He received an academic education, studied law and began its practice as soon as he was of age. In 1853 and 1856 he was elected District Attorney of Tioga, his native county, and in 1862 was a member of the New York legislature. He was appointed in 1862, by Governor Morgan, on a committee to organize recruiting for the United States Army, and later commanded a regiment in the field, taking part in the battles of the Wilderness and Spottsylvania; and subsequently being in charge of the rendezvous and prison-camp at Elmira, N.Y. When mustered out at the close of the war he was brevetted a Brigadier-General of Volunteers. He settled at Brooklyn, N.Y. (which has since been his home), and resumed his law practice. From 1866 to 1873 he was U.S. District Attorney for the district in which he lived; and from Dec. 1881, to Jan. 1883, he sat in the Court of Appeals (the highest judicial body in New York), to fill a vacancy. In 1882 he was nominated by his (the Republican) party as a Judge of the Supreme Court, but was not elected. From March, 1889 to 1893, he was a member of President Harrison's Cabinet, holding the portfolio of Secretary of the Navy.

TRAIL, James W. H., F.R.S., F.L.S. was born at Birsay, in the mainland of Orkney, on 4th March, 1851. His father, the Rev. Samuel Trail, D.D., LL.D., was at that time minister of the parishes of Birsay and Harray, in Orkney, being subsequently appointed Professor of Systematic Theology in the University of Aberdeen, and, in 1874, Moderator of the Church of Scotland. He was educated at home in Orkney, in the Grammar School of Old Aberdeen, and in the Univerity of Aberdeen, taking the degrees of M.A. in 1870, and M.D. in 1879. In the years 1873 and 1875 he was the Naturalist of an expedition sent to survey several of the tributaries of the Amazon River in North Brazil, and made considerable collections of plants and animals, most of which were presented to the National Herbaria and Museums, and to the University. In 1877 he was appointed Professor of Botany in the parent University. He has published numerous papers on the fauna and flora of Scotland, on new palms from the Amazon, on galls, &c.; and he has taken an active part in educational progress in the north of Scotland.

TRAILL, Henry Duff, D.C.L., youngest son of the late James Traill, a stipendiary magistrate of the Metropolitan District, was born at Blackheath, Aug. 14, 1842, and educated at Merchant Taylors' School, whence he proceeded as Probationary Fellow to St. John's College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1864. He was called to the Bar by the Society of the Inner Temple in 1868, and joined the Home (now South-Eastern) Circuit. He adopted the journalistic and literary profession in 1871, and has been an extensive contributor to the Pall Mall Gazette (under the original management), the St. James's Gazette, the Daily Telegraph, the Saturday Review, &c. He published in 1881, "Central Government" (the English Citizen series); in 1882, "Sterne" (the English Men of Letters series), and "Recaptured Rhymes," a re-issue of (principally) light political verse contributions to various newspapers and periodicals; in 1884, "The New Lucian," a series of Dialogues of the Dead; and "Coleridge" (English Men of Letters); in 1886, "Shaftesbury (the first Earl)," a monograph contributed to the series called English Worthies; in 1888, "William III." (Twelve English Statesmen); in 1889, "Strafford" (English Men of Action); in 1890, "Saturday Songs," a reprint of political verse contributions to the Saturday Review; in 1891, a life of the Marquis of Salisbury in "Reid's Prime Ministers of Queen Victoria." In the latter year he began to edit a series of works entitled "Capitals of the World," and in 1893, "Social England, A Record of the Progress of the People." One of his last works is a story with the title "Two Proper Prides."

TRAQUAIR, Dr. Ramsay Heatley, F.R.S., Keeper of the Natural History Collections in the Museum of Science and Art, Edinburgh, is the son of the late Rev. James Traquair, Parish Minister of Rhynd, Perthshire, and Elizabeth Mary Bayley, his wife, and was born at the Manse of Rhynd, July 30, 1840. Dr. Traquair received his school education in Edinburgh, and in 1857 entered the University of Edinburgh as a student of medicine. After a course of five years' study he received the degree of Doctor of Medicine in Aug., 1862, and, on that occasion, a Gold Medal was awarded to him for his thesis on a biological subject, viz., the "Asymmetry of the Pleuronectidæ." From 1863 to 1866, Dr. Traquair acted as Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Edinburgh, under the late eminent Professor Goodsir, and, from 1866 to 1867, as Professor of Natural History in the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester. In the autumn of 1867 he was appointed by the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education to the Professorship of Zoology in the Royal College of Science, Dublin, from which post he was transferred, in 1873, to the Keepership of the Natural History Collections in the Museum of Science and Art, Edinburgh. He has also held the Swiney Lectureship in Geology at the British Museum, for a period of five years (1883-88). Dr. Traquair's attention was early drawn to the study of the structure of fishes, and among the extinct forms of the palæozoic rocks he soon found a rich and extensive field for original investigation. He has published more than sixty papers on Fossil Ichthyology, of which the most important are "On the Structure and Affinities of Tristichopterus alatus," Trans. Roy. Soc., Edin., 1875; "On the Agassizian Genera Palæoniscus, Amblypterus, Pygopterus, and Gyrolepis," Qu. Journ. Geol. Soc., 1877; "The Structure and Affinities of the Platysomidæ," Trans. Roy. Soc., Edin., 1879; "Report on Fossil Fishes collected by the Geological Survey of Scotland in Eskdale and Liddisdale," Trans. Roy. Soc., Edin., 1881. He is also engaged in monographing the Fishes of the Old Red Sandstone and Carboniferous Rocks of Great Britain for the Palæontographical Society. Of Dr. Traquair's contributions to the structure of recent fishes the two most important are his graduation thesis, "On the Asymmetry of the Pleuronectidæ," published in Trans. Linn. Soc. for 1865, and his "Cranial Osteology of Polypterus," Journ. Anat. and Phys., 1870. Dr. Traquair received the Neill Medal of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, in 1876; in 1881, was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of London; and in 1893 the University of Edinburgh conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. in recognition of his services to science. Dr. Traquair married in 1873 Phœbe Anna, daughter of the late Dr. William Moss, physician, Dublin, and has two sons and a daughter.

TREVELYAN, The Right Hon. Sir George Otto, Bart., P.C., D.C.L., born July 20, 1838, at Rothley Temple, Leicestershire, is the only son of the late Sir Charles Edward Trevelyan, Bart., K.C.B., and Hannah More Macaulay, sister of Lord Macaulay. He was educated at Harrow School and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was second in the first-class in classics. He was elected member for Tynemouth, in the Liberal interest in 1865, and for the Border Burghs in 1868. Mr. Trevelyan was appointed Civil Lord of Admiralty, in Mr. Gladstone's Government, in Dec., 1868, but resigned office in July, 1870, on a point of conscience connected with the Government Education Bill. He advocated a sweeping reform of the Army, including the abolition of the purchase of commissions, both in and out of Parliament, and was for many years the foremost supporter of the extension of the County Franchise. Mr. Trevelyan succeeded Mr. Shaw-Lefevre as Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty in Nov., 1880, and held that office until his appointment, after the murder of Lord Frederick Cavendish, as Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland (May 9, 1882). This arduous post he held through two most trying years, and in Oct., 1884, he joined the Cabinet as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. On the formation of Mr. Gladstone's third Government in 1885, he was appointed to the new post of Secretary for Scotland, but resigned on March 27, 1886, in consequence of disagreement with the Prime Minister's proposed scheme for Ireland. He failed to secure re-election after the dissolution of 1886, but in 1887 he was returned as member for the Bridgeton Division of Glasgow. In August, 1892, he again became Secretary for Scotland in Mr. Gladstone's Administration. He is the author of "Letters of a Competition Wallah," republished from Macmillan's Magazine in 1864; "Cawnpore," in 1865; "The Ladies in Parliament, and other Pieces," collected and published in 1869; "The Life and Letters of Lord Macaulay," 2 vols., 1876, 2nd edit., 1877; and "The Early History of Charles James Fox," 1880.

TREE, Herbert Beerbohm, actor and manager, son of the late Mr. Julius Beerbohm, a grain merchant, was born in London, in 1853, and educated partly in England and partly in Germany. In 1870 he entered his father's office, but shortly afterwards became devoted to amateur acting, gradually drifting into the profession, and made his début on the regular stage (Globe Theatre, London), in 1878, in the character of "Grimaldi." After touring for some time in the provinces he appeared in London in "The Two Orphans" and "The Congress at Paris." In March, 1884, he made a hit in the part of the "Rev. Robert Spalding" in "The Private Secretary," at the Prince of Wales's, and shortly afterwards played the part of the spy "Macari" in "Called Back." His great versatility and subtlety as an actor made him so famous that he determined to try managership on his own account, and in 1887 he took the "Comedy Theatre," where he produced "The Red Lamp," and played the part of an old Russian spy to perfection. Among his most successful productions at the "Haymarket" which he took in the autumn of 1887, are: "A Man's Shadow;" "Captain Swift;" "The Village Priest;" "Beau Austin;" "The Ballad-Monger;" "The Merry Wives of Windsor;" "The Pompadour;" "The Dancing Girl," 1891; "Hamlet," 1892; "Hypatia," 1892; "A Woman of No Importance," and "The Tempter," 1893; "The Charlatan," "A Bunch of Violets," and "John-a-Dreams," 1894. In all these pieces Mr. Tree has taken principal parts, and has been supported by Mrs. Beerbohm Tree, an accomplished actress, whom he married when she was a governess at Queen's College, Harley Street. Mr. Tree frequently makes known his views on the actor's art. In December, 1891, he read a paper to the members of the Playgoer's Club, on "Some interesting Fallacies of the Modern Stage," and in May, 1893, he lectured at the Royal Institution on "The Imaginative Faculty." He also defended the art of "John-a-Dreams" in the columns of the Times during November and December, 1894, against various puritanical attacks. He is at present in America with his company (Jan., 1895), and has made a very favourable impression in New York. Before leaving England he was entertained at a banquet by many of his most important admirers.

TRIMEN, Henry, M.B., F.R.S., F.L.S., was born in London, Oct. 26, 1843, and was educated at King's College. He graduated M.B. at the University of London, 1865; was Curator at the Anatomical Museum of King's College, 1866-7; and Lecturer on Botany at St. Mary's Hospital Medical School, 1867-72. He entered the Botanical Department of the British Museum, as Senior Assistant, May, 1869, and held that appointment till Dec., 1879. He was appointed Director of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Ceylon, Jan., 1880, which post he still holds. He was editor of the Journal of Botany, 1872-79; and author of "Flora of Middlesex" (with Mr. Thiselton-Dyer), 1869; of the botanical portion of "Medicinal Plants," 4 vols., 1875-80; of a "Systematic Catalogue of the Plants of Ceylon," 1885; and of a "Handbook to the Flora of Ceylon," 1893; and of numerous papers on various branches of botanical science in the publications of the learned societies and scientific periodicals. Dr. Trimen has paid special attention to the economic aspects of Botany, particularly to the sources of drugs and other products, especially of tropical countries. In 1883, he was employed by the Madras Government to report on the botanical and cultural problems presented by the cinchona plantations in the Nilgiri Hills; and he has been the means of introducing into cultivation in Ceylon many useful and valuable products of other countries.

TRIMEN, Roland, F.R.S., F.L.S., F.Z.S., F.Ent. S., zoologist, was born in London, Oct. 29, 1840, and was educated at a private school near Brighton, and at King's College School in London. He voyaged to the Cape (on medical advice), 1858-59; and was appointed to the Cape Civil Service, July, 1860. He served in the Audit, the Colonial Secretary's, the Governor's, and the Crown Lands Offices, until 1876, when he was appointed Curator of the South-African Museum, Cape Town. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, June, 1883; and is the author of "Rhopalora Africæ Australis; a Descriptive Catalogue of South-African Butterflies" (London and Cape Town, 2 vols., 1862-66), and "South-African Butterflies; a Monograph of the Extra-Tropical Species" (London 3 vols., 1887-89); also of various memoirs on Entomology, Ornithology, and Botany in the Transactions or Proceedings of the Entomological, Linnean, and Zoological Societies of London, the Quarterly Journal of Science, and other publications. He was President of the South-African Philosophical Society, 1883-85; and Commissioner of the Botanic Gardens, Cape Town, 1876-90. He was Chairman of the Phylloxera Commission, Cape Town, 1886; and represented the Cape at the Bordeaux Phylloxera Congress of 1881, and at the Congress of Zoologists held in Paris in August, 1889.

TRISTRAM, The Rev. Henry Baker, D.D., LL.D., F.R.S., C.M.Z.S., son of the late Rev. Henry Baker Tristram, Vicar of Eglingham, Northumberland, was born May 11, 1822, and educated at the Grammar School of Durham, and at Lincoln College, Oxford (B.A. 1844, 2nd Class Lit. Hum.; M.A. 1846). In 1845 he was ordained to the Curacy of Morchard-Bishop, Devonshire, which he was obliged to resign in less than two years in consequence of ill-health. At that juncture Admiral Sir Charles Elliot was about to proceed to Bermuda as Governor, and Mr. Tristram accompanied him as Chaplain and Secretary. He resided at Bermuda three years, and then accepted, in 1849, the small rectory of Castle Eden, co. Durham. In 1855 the state of his health again induced him to seek a milder climate. He spent that winter in the city and neighbourhood of Algiers, making excursions into the Northern Sahara. A second year was occupied in researches beyond the range of the Atlas Mountains, guarded by an escort granted by Field-Marshal Randon, Governor-General of Algeria, and a third year spent on board a yacht in the Mediterranean afforded him the first opportunity of visiting Palestine. In 1860 he was collated by Bishop Longley to the Mastership of Greatham Hospital and Vicarage of Greatham, which he held till 1875, when he was appointed to a residential Canonry in Durham Cathedral by Bishop Baring. In 1863 he again visited the Holy Land, making scientific observations and identifying Scripture localities. In 1873 he made a similar tour to Moab, and in 1881 made an extensive tour through Palestine and the Lebanon, into Mesopotamia and Armenia. In 1879 he declined the offer made to him by the Earl of Beaconsfield of the Anglican Bishopric in Jerusalem. In 1891, during a tour round the world, he spent some months in exploring the little-visited interior districts of Japan, in which country he has a daughter engaged in high educational missionary work. He is a Member of the Convocation of the Province of York, and Provincial Grand Master of "Mark Masons" for the two northern counties, and D. Prov.-Gov. Master Parson of the Province of Durham. He was President of the Biological Section of the British Association at Nottingham, 1893. Dr. Tristram is the author of "The Great Sahara," 1860; "The Land of Israel, a Journal of Travels with Reference to its Physical History," 1865, 4th edit., revised, 1884; "The Natural History of the Bible," 7th edit., 1883; "The Ornithology of Palestine," 1867; "A Winter Ride in Palestine," published in "Vacation Tourists," 1864; "Scenes in the East," 1870; "The Daughters of Syria," 3rd edit., 1874; "The Seven Golden Candlesticks," new edit., 1881; "Bible Places, or the Topography of the Holy Land," 1871, 11th thousand, 1884; "The Land of Moab," 2nd edit., 1874; "Pathways of Palestine," 1st series, 1881, 2nd series, 1883; "Incidents in Bible History chiselled on Ancient Monuments," 1875; "Genesis and the Brick Kiln," 1878; "Fauna and Flora of Palestine," 1884, for the Palestine Exploration Fund; Contributions to The Contemporary Review, "Smith's Dictionary of the Bible," and many scientific periodicals.

TROCHU, Louis Jules, a French general, was born in Bretagne, March 12, 1815, and received his education in the Military Academy of St. Cyr. In 1837 he entered an artillery regiment as Lieutenant. His talents soon attracted attention, and in particular that of Marshal Bugeaud, who, in recognition of his bravery displayed in the battles of Siddi-Yussef and Isly, made him his Adjutant, and intrusted him with most important commissions. His services, circumspection, and bravery in the Crimean War, gained for him the rank of a General of Division. In that capacity he received a command in the Italian campaign of 1859. On the conclusion of peace he was relegated to the Ministry of War, and received the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour. Niel had intended him for his successor as Minister of War, but the latter's celebrated brochure on French military affairs had drawn down upon him the displeasure of the Imperial Court. Before the war of 1870-71, General Trochu held command of the Army division in Toulouse, which Niel and Lebœuf had held before him. In the crisis which followed the battle of Sedan, he was made Governor of Paris and Commander-in-Chief of all the forces destined for the defence of the capital, which he held until the city surrendered to the German hosts. In Oct., 1871, he was elected President of the Council-General for Morbihan; but he afterwards resigned that post, and he has lived in retirement since Jan., 1873. His pamphlet on "L'Armée Française en 1867" reached its 20th edition in 1870. In 1873 he published a work entitled "Pour la Vérité et pour la Justice," in justification of the Government of the National Defence, and in 1879 "L'Armée Française en 1879."

TURKEY, Sultan of. See ABD-UL-HAMID II.

TUPPER, The Hon. Sir Charles, Bart, C.B. (1867), K.C.M.G. (1879), G.C.M.G. (1886), M.D., L.R.C.S., Edinburgh, was born July 2, 1821. He is LL.D. of Cambridge and Edin., and M.A. and D.C.L. of Acadia College, Nova Scotia. He is Governor of Dalhousie College, Halifax (appointed by Act of Parliament in 1862); was President of the Canadian Medical Association from its formation, 1867, until 1870, when he declined re-election. He was a member of the Executive Council and Provincial Secretary of Nova Scotia from 1857 to 1860, and from 1863 to June 30, 1867; and Prime Minister of that Province from 1864 until he retired from office with his Government, on the Union Act coming into force on July 1, 1867; he was a delegate on public business from the Nova Scotia Government, 1858 and 1865, and from the Dominion Government, March, 1868; leader of the delegation from Nova Scotia to the Union Conference at Charlottetown, 1864; to that in Quebec in the same year; and to the final Colonial Conference in London to complete terms of Union in 1866-67; he holds patent of rank and precedence from Her Majesty as an Executive Councillor of Nova Scotia; was sworn as a Privy Councillor of Canada, June, 1870, and was President of that body from that date until July 1, 1872, when he was appointed Minister of Inland Revenue, which office he held until Feb. 22, 1873, when appointed Minister of Customs.

He resigned office with Sir John Macdonald in Nov., 1873, and on the return of Sir John to power, was appointed Minister of Public Works in Oct., 1878, and Minister of Railways and Canals in 1879. He represented the County of Cumberland, Nova Scotia, in Parliament for thirty-two years—in the Nova Scotia Assembly from 1855 until the Confederation in 1867, and thence in the Commons of Canada to 1884, when he resigned his seat in Parliament, and was appointed High Commissioner for Canada in London. He was appointed by the Dominion Government Executive Commissioner for Canada of the Antwerp Exhibition, 1885, and of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, 1886, of which he was also appointed Royal Commissioner by the Queen. He received, in 1886, the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws (Cambridge), and the same day had conferred on him the honorary freedom of the Worshipful Company of Fishmongers of London. Just previous to the Federal elections of Feb., 1887, he re-entered the Cabinet as Finance Minister, which position he retained until May 24, 1888, when he was re-appointed High Commissioner for the Dominion of Canada in London. Sir Charles was appointed one of Her Majesty's plenipotentiaries to the Fisheries Conference in Washington in 1887, the result of which Conference was the signature of a treaty on Feb. 15, 1888—subject to ratification—for the settlement of the matters in dispute between Canada and the United States in connection with the Atlantic Fisheries. Sir Charles carried a Bill through the Canadian Parliament for the ratification of a Treaty, where it was passed in both Houses without division. He was created a baronet under patent dated Sept. 13, 1888.

TURNER, Hon. George, Premier of Victoria, is a Melbourne lawyer, and entered political life in 1889, when he was returned as representative of St. Kilda to the Legislative Assembly. In 1891 he took office as Commissioner of Customs, and continued to hold this post while Mr. Shiels was reconstructing the Munro ministry. He has been successively Solicitor-General, Commissioner of Trade and Customs, and Minister of Health. In 1894 he became the Leader of the Opposition, and the Patterson Government was overthrown on his motion. His party returned to power at the general election, and he became Premier on Sept. 27. He is well known as an organiser.

TURNER, Professor Sir William, M.B., LL.D., D.Sc., D.C.L. Oxford and Durham, F.R.S. London and Edinburgh, F.R.C.S. London and Edinburgh, was born in Lancaster in 1832. He received his medical education at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, where he obtained a scholarship, and in 1853 he became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. As a student he gained an Exhibition and Gold Medal at the University of London, and took his degree in Medicine in 1857. In 1854 he was appointed Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Edinburgh, and in 1867, on the death of Professor John Goodsir, he became Professor of Anatomy. In addition, he holds the office of Honorary Professor of Anatomy to the Royal Scottish Academy. He has at various times held the following appointments: Examiner in Anatomy in the Universities of London, Oxford, and Durham; Lecturer on Anatomy and Physiology in the Royal College of Surgeons of England; Dean of the Faculty of Medicine in the University of Edinburgh, and President of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh. For many years he has represented the University of Edinburgh on the General Council of Medical Education; and in December, 1889, he was elected by the Senate of the University as one of their representatives on the University Court. He was made, in 1881, a Member of the Royal Commission to inquire into the working of the Acts affecting the Medical Profession. He has written numerous articles on anatomy, both human and comparative, in the Transactions of various learned societies, in the Reports of H.M.S. Challenger, and in different journals, more especially in the Journal of Anatomy and Physiology, of which he is one of the founders and editors. Some years ago he was awarded by the Royal Society of Edinburgh the Neill Medal for his contributions to Scottish Natural History. He is a member of many scientific societies, and has received the honorary membership of the Royal Irish Academy, the Anthropological Societies of Berlin and Paris and the Royal Medico-Chirurgical Societies of London and Edinburgh. The Universities of Oxford, Glasgow, Dublin, and Durham have also conferred on him Honorary Degrees, and he has been elected a member of the Athenæum under the rule which admits those who have attained eminence in Science, Literature, the Arts, or Public Service. In 1886 he received the honour of Knighthood, and is D.L. of the City and County of Edinburgh. He joined the Volunteer force at its institution in 1859, and held for thirty years a commission in the Queen's Rifle Volunteer Brigade, Royal Scots, when he retired with the honorary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel.

TÜRR, Gen. Stephen, born at Baja, in Hungary, in 1825, became a lieutenant in the Austrian army in 1848. His regiment was stationed in Italy, and his rooted dislike of the House of Hapsburg inspired him with a strong sympathy for the Italian cause. The Revolutionary Government of Hungary having called upon all Hungarians serving under the Austrian flag in Italy to desert to the Piedmontese, he went over to the latter from Buffalora, in Jan. 1849, and was appointed Colonel of the Hungarian Legion in the Sardinian service. After the disaster of Novara, the greater part of the Hungarian Legion followed their Colonel in Baden, where a revolutionary movement had taken place, and throughout the struggle Colonel Türr commanded not only the remnant of his legion, but also three Baden battalions. After the insurrection had been put down, the Hungarians took refuge in Switzerland, and the Federal Government aided many of them to start for the United States; but Colonel Türr being too ill to go, lived for four years on a small pension granted to him by the Sardinian Government. On the outbreak of the Russian war, he vainly endeavoured to serve under Omar Pacha, but succeeded in taking part as a volunteer in several of the battles in the Crimea, especially in that of the Tchernaya, and received a commission from Colonel McMurdo, the officer in command of the British transport service. While engaged in the performance of his duty, and in connection with this employment in the autumn of 1865, he was arrested at Bucharest by the Austrians as a deserter, and sent under escort to Cronstadt to be tried there. His illegal arrest caused great excitement throughout Europe, and was protested against by the British and French Governments. After a long incarceration he was tried by court-martial, and sentenced to death; which sentence was, however (owing to the urgent remonstrance of the British Government), commuted to perpetual banishment. In the Italian war in 1859 he was appointed a member of Garibaldi's staff, with the rank of colonel, and was always at the general's side during this campaign, until he was seriously wounded in the left arm at Brescia. In the spring of 1860, when Garibaldi planned his Sicilian expedition, Colonel Türr again served under him in the capacity of aide-de-camp, and before Palermo was promoted to the rank of General of Division. The brilliant part he played in the War of Liberation was acknowledged by the Government of Victor Emmanuel, who promoted him to the rank of general of division in the army of Italy in 1861, and confided to him the military command of the town and province of Naples. He is the author of "Arrestation, Procès, et Condamnation du Général Türr," 1853; and also of "The House of Austria and Hungary," 1865. He married the Princess Adeline Wyse Bonaparte, a cousin of Napoleon III., Sept. 10, 1861, and took up his residence at Pallanza. Since his marriage he has made two journeys to Roumania, with a view of creating difficulties for Austria in the East of Europe. These political journeys were, however, thought to be compromising to the Italian Government, and, accordingly, Colonel Türr resigned his commission in 1864. He returned to Hungary after the war of 1866. In 1870 he busied himself in trying to effect an alliance between France, Italy, and Austria. During the Russo-Turkish war he was violently hostile to Russia. In June, 1886, he obtained, under the patronage of the late Ferdinand de Lesseps, the concession for piercing a canal through the Isthmus of Corinth. The work was at first retarded by financial difficulties, but was finally accomplished in 1893.

TWAIN, Mark. See CLEMENS, S. L.

TWEEDMOUTH, Lord, The Right Hon. Edward Marjoribanks, P.C., born in London July 8, 1849, is the eldest son of the late Lord Tweedmouth. He was educated at Harrow, and at Christ Church, Oxford, which he left without taking a degree. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1874, and married in 1873 Lady Fanny Spencer Churchill, third daughter of the 7th Duke of Marlborough. In 1880 he was elected member for Berwickshire in the Liberal interest, and in 1883 moved the Address in answer to the speech from the Throne. In February, 1886, he was appointed Comptroller of her Majesty's Household, second whip to the Liberal Party, and sworn a Privy Councillor. In 1883-84 he served as Chairman of the Select Committee on Harbour Accommodation, and was a member of the Royal Commission on Trawling. He was again returned for Berwickshire in 1886 and in 1892. In August of the latter year he was appointed Patronage Secretary and Chief Liberal Whip. In March, 1894, shortly after the retirement of Mr. Gladstone from office, he succeeded to his father, the first Lord Tweedmouth, who died at that time. In March, 1894, he was appointed Lord Privy Seal, and in May Chancellor of the Duchy. He is regarded as one of the mainstays of his party, and is supposed to be peculiarly in the confidence both of Mr. Gladstone (whose intimate friend he is), and of Lord Rosebery.

TWISS, Sir Travers, Q.C., D.C.L., F.R.S., son of the late Rev. Robert Twiss, LL.D., of Pembroke College, Cambridge, and Trevallyn, Denbighshire, born in Westminster, March 19, 1809, was educated at University College, Oxford, where he graduated in high honours in 1830, and became Fellow and Tutor of his college. From 1835 till 1839 he was one of the Public Examiners at Oxford in Classics and Mathematics; in 1838 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society; from 1842 till 1847 was Professor of Political Economy in the University of Oxford; from 1852 till 1855 Professor of International Law in King's College, London, which office he resigned upon being appointed Regius Professor of Civil Law in the University of Oxford. In 1840 he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, and was admitted an advocate in Doctors' Commons. In 1849 he was appointed Commissary-General of the City and Diocese of Canterbury, in 1852 Vicar-General of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and in 1858, on the advancement of the Right Hon. Dr. Lushington to the office of Judge of the Arches Court of Canterbury, was appointed Chancellor of the Diocese of London. In 1862 he was appointed Advocate-General of the Admiralty. On the transfer of the testamentary and matrimonial jurisdiction from the ecclesiastical to the civil courts, Dr. Twiss was created a Queen's Counsel, was elected a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn, became Queen's Advocate-General in August, and was knighted in Nov., 1867. He has written various works, amongst which may be mentioned "Epitome of Niebuhr's History of Rome," 1837; "The Oregon Question examined with Respect to Facts and the Law of Nations," 1846; "View of the Progress of Political Economy in Europe since the 16th Century," 1847; "The Relation of the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein to the Crown of Denmark and the Germanic Confederation," 1848; "The Letters Apostolic of Pope Pius IX., considered with reference to the Law of England and the Law of Europe," 1851; "Lectures on the Science of International Law," 1856; "The Law of Nations, considered as Independent Political Communities," 1861, 2nd edit., 1884; "Law of Nations in Time of War," 1863, 2nd edit., 1875; translated into French and published in Paris in 1886; "The Black Book of the Admiralty," 1874. He has edited Livy (1840), and Bracton (1876-1883), and Glanville (1892) for the Rolls Series. In 1872 Sir Travers Twiss resigned all his appointments, and has since devoted himself to literary and scientific pursuits, being a frequent contributor to the Nautical Magazine, the Law Magazine and Review, the "Encyclopædia Britannica," and La Revue de Droit International, being also a Vice-President of L'Institut de Droit International, established in 1872, and of the Association for the Reform and Codification of the Law of Nations, established in 1873. At the request of King Leopold II. of the Belgians Sir Travers drew up in 1884 a Constitution for the Free State of the Congo, and at the request of Earl Granville he assisted at the West African Conference at Berlin in 1885, as legal adviser of the British Embassy during the Conference. He has served on several Royal Commissions, amongst others on that of 1852 to inquire and report on the regulations of the College of Maynooth, in Ireland; on that of 1867 to inquire into the Laws of Neutrality; on that of 1868 to inquire into the Laws of Naturalisation and Allegiance; on that of 1869 to inquire into the Law of Marriage in Great Britain and Ireland and in the British Colonies. He was also a member of the Royal Commission on Rubrics, and was one of the Arbitral Commissioners who settled the boundary line between the Provinces of New Brunswick and Canada. In 1887 he was a member of the International Jury appointed by King Leopold II. to award the King's Prize of 20,000 francs for the best treatise on the study of Geography, and the King conferred upon him in the same year the dignity of a Grand Commander of the Order of Leopold.

TYLOR, Edward Bennett, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., was born at Camberwell, Oct. 2, 1832, and educated at the School of the Society of Friends, Grove House, Tottenham. His work has been specially devoted to the study of the races of mankind, their history, languages, and civilisation. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1871, received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of St. Andrews in 1873, and of D.C.L. from the University of Oxford in 1875. In March, 1883, he was appointed Keeper of the Oxford University Museum. Later in the same year (Oct.) he was appointed Reader in Anthropology. In 1888 he was elected the first Gifford Lecturer by the University of Aberdeen, delivering a two-years' course on "Natural Religion." Dr. Tylor is President of the Anthropological Society. He is the author of "Anahuac, or Mexico and the Mexicans," 1861; "Researches into the History of Mankind," 1865; and "Primitive Culture: Researches into the Development of Mythology, Philosophy, Religion, Art, and Custom," 2 vols., 1871; 3rd ed., 1891. A more recent work is an educational handbook of the Science of Man, "Anthropology: an Introduction to the Study of Man and Civilisation, 1881." Since this date Dr. Tylor has written very little except a "Life of Dr. Rolleston," 1884; and a preface to Roth's "Aborigines of Tasmania," 1890.

U.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, President of. See CLEVELAND, THE HON. GROVER.

UNWIN, Professor William Cawthorne, B.Sc., F.R.S., M.I.C.E., M.I.M.E., was born at Coggeshall, in Essex, in 1838, and is the son of William Jordan Unwin, LL.D., for many years Principal of Homerton College. He was educated at the City of London School, and was apprenticed in the works of Sir William Fairbairn at Manchester, 1855 to 1862. Professor Unwin was Instructor at the Royal School of Naval Architecture, South Kensington, 1868-72; Professor of Mechanical and Hydraulic Engineering, Royal Indian Engineering College, Coopers Hill, 1872-84; and since that time has been Professor of Engineering, Central Institution of the City and Guilds Institute, at South Kensington. He is the author of "Wrought Iron Bridges and Roofs," 1869; "The Elements of Machine Design," 1877, edit. 11, 1890-91; "The Testing of Materials of Construction," 1888; and of various papers in the Proceedings of Societies. In 1893 he delivered the Howard lecture on the "Development and Transmission of Power from Central Stations."

UPINGTON, Sir Thomas, K.C.M.G., Q.C., eldest son of the late S. Upington, Esq., of Lisleigh House, co. Cork. Sir Thomas was born Oct. 28, 1844, and was educated at the Cloyne Diocesan School, Mallow, and at Trinity College, Dublin, of which university he is a Master of Arts. He was called to the Irish Bar in 1867, and soon after became Secretary to the then Lord Chancellor of Ireland (Lord O'Hagan, K.P.). On his retirement from that office in 1874 he settled at the Cape of Good Hope, where, in 1878, he was elected a Member of the Legislature for the division of Colesberg, almost simultaneously with his appointment as Attorney-General for the Colony during the administration of the late Sir Bartle Frere. He resigned that office in 1881, was subsequently elected Leader of the Opposition in the Cape Parliament, and on the retirement of the Ministry then in office, in 1884, he became Prime Minister of the Cape Colony; that position he resigned in 1886, but elected to hold the office of Attorney-General, which position he occupied till July, 1890. He was appointed a Puisne Judge in the Supreme Court at the Cape in 1892. He was a Member of the Commission appointed to inquire into the Native Laws and Customs of the Cape Colony; is interested much in the defence of the important post of the Cape; and is Lieut.-Colonel commanding a volunteer regiment in Cape Town. He is also one of Her Majesty's Counsel for the Colony, and was one of the delegates to the historic Colonial Conference in 1887.

V.

VAMBÉRY, Professor Arminius, born at Duna-Szerdahely, in Hungary, in 1832, of very poor parents, was at an early age obliged to leave the shelter of the paternal roof and seek his own livelihood. He studied in the Latin school of Pressburg, and devoted his leisure hours to the study of foreign languages. In order to complete his knowledge of oriental languages he went to the East; and, taking up his residence in Constantinople, visited many parts of the East, and travelled in the disguise of a dervish, by routes unknown to Europeans, through the deserts of the Oxus to Khiva, and thence by Bokhara to Samarcand, in 1861-64. His "Travels and Adventures in Central Asia" appeared in London in 1864. He has been appointed Professor of Oriental Languages at the University of Pesth. From that town he has for many years written frequent letters to the Times and other English papers, warning England against the designs of Russia. He has more than once visited England on a lecturing tour; the last occasion being in 1885, when he was in London at the same time as M. Lessar, whose diplomacy he endeavoured to counteract. His more recent works are "Cagatai Language," and an account of his "Wanderings and Adventures in Persia," 1867; "Sketches of Central Asia," 1868; "Uigur Linguistical Monument," 1870; "History of Bokhara from the Earliest Period down to the Present," 1873; "Central Asia and the Anglo-Russian Frontier Question," 1874; "Mahommedanism in the Nineteenth Century," 1875; "Sketches of Manners and Costumes in Oriental Countries," 1876; "Etymological Dictionary of the Turco-Tartar Languages," 1878; "Primitive Civilisation of the Turco-Tartar Peoples," 1879; and "Theibaniname," 1885. An interesting account of his "Life and Adventures," written by himself, with a dedication to the boys of England, was published in English in 1889. Since that date he has published works in Hungarian, and has written an introduction to the "Voyages and Adventures of Ferdinand Mendez Pinto," in the Adventure Series, 1891.

VAN DYKE, Henry, D.D., American author and preacher, was born at Germantown, Pa., Nov. 10, 1852. He graduated at the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute in 1869, Princeton College in 1873, Princeton Theological Seminary in 1877, and studied for two years at the University of Berlin. In 1879 he was called to the United Congregational Church of Newport, R. I., and in 1882 to the Brick Presbyterian Church, one of the historic churches of New York City. In 1889 he was appointed Preacher to the University at Harvard, and in 1893 elected to deliver the Lyman Beecher Lectures on Preaching at Yale. He has been a contributor to the North American Review, Forum, Century, Harper's, and Scribners', and has taken active part in religious works among the colleges. His published works are: "The Reality of Religion," 1884; "The Story of the Psalms," 1887; "The National Sin of Literary Piracy," 1888; "The Poetry of Tennyson," 1889; "God and Little Children," 1890; "Straight Sermons," 1893; "The Christ-Child in Art; a Study of Interpretation," 1893. All of these, with two exceptions, have been republished in London, and had repeated editions.

VAPEREAU, Louis Gustav, author, born at Orleans, April 4, 1819, studied at the seminary and college of his native city, and, in 1838, carried off, at a competition between all the colleges of France, the prize for Philosophy, established by M. de Salvandy. Admitted into the Normal School, he applied himself to various studies, with a special view to teaching philosophy. On quitting that establishment he remained a year in Paris, and in 1842 became Private Secretary to M. Victor Cousin, whom he assisted in his "Pensées de Pascal." He presided over a class on Philosophy at the College of Tours in 1843, and defended philosophy, violently attacked in a treatise entitled "Du Caractère Libéral, Moral, et Religieux de la Philosophie Moderne," published in 1844. Though his course of lectures was frequently denounced, he retained his professorial chair for ten years, and, in addition, presided over the German course at the same college for five years, and began to study law. In consequence of the restrictions with which the teaching of philosophy was fettered, in 1852, M. Vapereau repaired to Paris, completed his law studies, and became "avocat" in 1854. About that time Messrs. Hachette intrusted to him the direction of the "Dictionnaire des Contemporains," which occupied his whole attention for four years, the first edition appearing in 1858. M. Vapereau continued to labour at this great undertaking, and the "Supplément" was published in 1859; a new edition of the work, revised and considerably augmented, in 1861, the "Supplément" to the new edition in 1863, the third edition, in a great measure rewritten, in 1865, the fourth edition in 1870, the fifth edition in 1880, with a "Supplément" in 1886, and the sixth edition in 1891-93. Since 1859 M. Vapereau has issued yearly "L'Année Littéraire et Dramatique," an annual review of the principal productions of French literature, and the tenth volume contains a general table of the ten previous years. M. Vapereau subsequently brought out another important work, a "Dictionnaire Universel des Littératures." He was nominated Prefect of the Cantal by the Government of the National Defence in Sept., 1870. He was Prefect of the department of Tarn-et-Garonne from March 26, 1871, till March 31, 1873. He returned to the University as Inspector-General of Public Instruction (primary education), Jan. 23, 1877, and he was decorated with the Legion of Honour, Feb. 7, 1878. He retired from his Inspector-Generalship in 1888, when that office was abolished, and was given the title of Honorary Inspector-General. In a preface, dated Nov., 1891, to the last edition of his noble "Dictionary of Contemporaries" he announces his intention of handing over his editorial work to others, as he desires to devote the remainder of his life to more personal literary studies.

VAUGHAN, The Very Rev. Charles John, D.D., Dean of Llandaff, and late Master of the Temple, is the son of the late Rev. E. T.

Vaughan, Vicar of St. Martin's, Leicester. Born in 1816, he was educated at Rugby and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he closed a brilliant collegiate career by taking his B.A. degree in 1838 as Senior Classic and Chancellor's Medallist, being bracketed with Lord Lyttelton. He was elected to a Fellowship at Trinity College in 1839, and having held the living of St. Martin's, Leicester, for three years, became Head Master of Harrow School in 1844; and held that post till the close of 1859, when he resigned. Early in 1860 he was offered, but refused, the Bishopric of Rochester, and shortly afterwards was appointed to the Vicarage of Doncaster, which he held until 1869, when he was appointed to the Mastership of the Temple. He resigned this latter post, after prolonged illness, in 1894. In 1879 he was appointed Dean of Llandaff. This appointment did not vacate the Mastership of the Temple. In May, 1882, Dr. Vaughan was appointed one of the Deputy Clerks of the Closet in Ordinary to her Majesty. He has published "Memorials of Harrow Sundays," "Doncaster Sermons," "Temple Sermons," "University Sermons" (Oxford and Cambridge), "Lectures on the Revelation of St. John," "Lectures on the Epistle to the Philippians," "Epistle to the Romans" (with Notes), "Heroes of Faith" (Hebrews xi.), "The Church of the First Days" (Lectures on the Acts), "Epistle to the Philippians" (for English readers), "Epistle to the Hebrews" (with Notes), "Christ Satisfying the Instincts of Humanity," "Twelve Discourses on Liturgy and Worship," "Notes for Lectures on Confirmation," and a long series of other works.

VAUGHAN, His Eminence Herbert, Cardinal, D.D., late Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford, and now Roman Catholic Archbishop of Westminster, eldest son of the late Lieut.-Colonel Vaughan of Courtfield, Herefordshire, born at Gloucester, April 15, 1832, received his education at Stonyhurst College, Lancashire, on the Continent, and in Rome, where he entered the Accademia dei nobili Ecclesiastici. He was ordained a priest at Lucca, Oct. 28, 1854, and, returning to England, joined the Oblates of St. Charles, a congregation of secular priests founded at Bayswater by the late Cardinal Manning. From the Oblates he was sent to St. Edmund's College, near Ware, of which he was Vice-President until 1862. He went in 1863 to America in order to gather funds for founding a Missionary College. In 1869 he founded, and is still President-General of, St. Joseph's Foreign Missionary College, Mill Hill, Middlesex, and towards the close of the year 1871 accompanied to Maryland the first detachment of priests who were sent from that institution on a special mission to the coloured population of the United States. On the death of Bishop Turner he was elected Bishop of Salford, and consecrated in his cathedral by the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster, Oct. 28, 1872. At Salford he published a series of pastoral letters, and has since identified himself prominently with the crusade against intemperance, with rescue work among children, and the cause of commercial education, in the interests of which he built St. Bede's College. On March 29, 1892, he was elected by the Pope, and on the recommendation of the Propaganda, to the See of Westminster, left vacant by the death of Cardinal Manning. On May 12 he took possession of his See and received the pallium on Aug. 16. He was summoned to Rome in Jan., 1893, to be created a Cardinal, and was received with great distinction during his stay. Cardinal Vaughan, who has acquired a considerable reputation as a preacher, has published several pamphlets, and is the proprietor of the Tablet newspaper and of the Dublin Review. A recent speech of his, in which he dwelt upon the validity of Anglican Orders, led to a long controversy in the Times and other papers during the autumn of 1894.

VELEY, Victor Herbert, M.A., Oxon., F.R.S., was born at Chelmsford on Feb. 10, 1856, and is the son of Frederick Thomas and Louisa Veley, descended from the family of Develay of Yverdon, Switzerland. He was educated at Rugby School, where he was Natural Science Exhibitioner in 1875, and at University College, Oxford. Here he obtained a First Class in the Honour School of Natural Science (1878), and was Public Examiner in the same school in 1887-90. He was appointed Demonstrator and Lecturer at the University Museum, Oxford, in 1887, Lecturer of Queen's College in 1891, and Tutor to the Delegacy of the Non-Collegiate Students in 1890. He has published numerous memoirs on theoretical, physical, and applied chemistry in the Philosophical Transactions and Proceedings of the Royal Society, the Journals of the Chemical Society and of the Society of Chemical Industry and the Philosophical Magazine. The most important are the following:—"The Rate of Decomposition of Ammonium Nitrate" (Jour. Chem. Soc., 1883); "Some Sulphur Compounds of Calcium" (Jour. Chem. Soc., 1885); "The Lime Process for Purification of Coal Gas" (Jour. Soc. Chem. Indust., 1885); "The Conditions of Evolution of Gases from Homogeneous Liquids" (Phil. Trans., 1888); "The Conditions of Chemical Change between Nitric Acid and Metals" (Phil. Trans., 1891); "The Variations of Electromotive Force of Cells consisting of certain Metals and Nitric Acid" (with G. J. Burch) (Phil. Trans., 1891); "The Inertness of Quicklime" (Jour. Chem. Soc., 1893-4); and "The Phases and Conditions of Chemical Change" (Phil. Mag., 1894).

VENN, John, Sc.D., F.R.S., is the eldest son of the late Rev. Henry Venn, Prebendary of St. Paul's, who was for many years Hon. Sec. of the Church Missionary Society. He was born at Hull, Aug. 4, 1834, and was educated at the Grammar School, Highgate, the Islington Proprietary School, and afterwards at Caius College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1857, and obtained a Fellowship in the same year. He took Orders in 1858, and for some years held curacies at Cheshunt, Herts, and Mortlake, Surrey; but later (in 1883) he abandoned the clerical calling. Since 1862 he has resided mostly at Cambridge, being Lecturer in Moral Sciences at Caius College, and frequently an Examiner in the same subjects in the university. In 1869 he held the office of Hulsean Lecturer. In 1883 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is the author of "Logic of Chance," 1866, 1876, 1888; "Symbolic Logic," 1880; "Empirical Logic," 1889; and various papers in scientific and other periodicals. In 1891 he edited for the Cambridge Antiquarian Society the Register of Baptisms, &c., in St. Michael's Parish Church, Cambridge, between the years 1588-1837. He married, June 21, 1867, Susanna Carnegie, eldest daughter of the Rev. C. W. Edmonstone, M.A.

VERBEEK, Reinier Dirk M., mining engineer, was born at Maarsen, Holland, Sept. 5, 1841, studied at the University of Liége, Belgium, and at the Mining Academies of Clausthal, Hanover, and Freiberg, Saxony, whence he received his degree of Mining Engineer in 1864. He is the author of several papers on the mining laws of the Netherlands, and on the mineral wealth of the Indian Archipelago, and was the first to draw public attention to the occurrence of gold in workable quantities in the Isles of Sumatra and Borneo. For many years he has resided in the Dutch East Indies, and in 1875 became Superintendent of the Geological Survey of Sumatra, and as such has published important maps and memoirs. When the Krakatao eruption occurred he was naturally selected by the Government as head of the commission appointed to examine and report upon the geological and other phenomena of that great convulsion; the report, and splendid atlases of maps, sections, and drawings which he subsequently issued, are permanent proofs of his energy and ability. M. Verbeek is Ingénieur-en-chef des Mines, and Chevalier du Lion Neerlandais.

VERDI, Giuseppe, composer, is the son of an innkeeper, born at Rancola, in the duchy of Parma, Oct. 9, 1814, received his first lessons from an organist in Milan, where he resided from 1833 till 1836; studied diligently under Lavinga, and in 1839 published his earliest work, a musical drama, entitled "Oberto di San Bonifazio." His principal compositions are serious operas, and the "Lombardi," one of his first productions, made a strong impression throughout Italy, and laid the foundation of his fame. His best known operas are "Nabucodonosor," "Ernani" (founded on Victor Hugo's tragedy), the "Due Foscari," "Attila," "Macbeth," the "Masnadieri" (founded on the "Robbers" of Schiller), "Louisa Miller," "Rigoletto," the "Trovatore," "La Traviata," "Un Ballo in Maschera" (performed in London in 1861), and "Don Carlos" (performed at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, in 1867). The "Masnadieri," written for Her Majesty's Theatre, and produced in 1847, with Jenny Lind as heroine, proved a failure in London, though it has since been successful in Italy. The "Trovatore" and "La Traviata" have had great success, not only in Italy, but in Germany, France, and England. Signor Verdi's more recent operas are "Giovanno d'Arco," in 1868; "La Forza del Destino," in 1869; and "Aida," performed at the Scala, Milan, in 1872. His celebrated "Requiem Mass," composed in honour of his great countryman Manzoni, was first performed in the church of San Marco at Milan, May 23, 1874. He was elected a member of the Italian Parliament in 1861, and in 1871 he went to Florence in order to assume the post offered him by the Italian Minister of Public Instruction, for the improvement and reorganisation of the Italian Musical Institute. M. Verdi, who is a member of the Legion of Honour, was elected corresponding member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, Dec. 10, 1859; was made Grand Cross of the Russian Order of St. Stanislaus in 1862; Foreign Associate of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, June 15, 1864; and Grand Officer of the Order of the Crown of Italy in 1872, in which year the Viceroy of Egypt conferred on him the Order of Osmanieh. King Victor Emmanuel, by a decree dated Nov. 22, 1874, created Signor Verdi an Italian Senator. In May, 1875, he was nominated a Commander of the Legion of Honour, and the Italian Minister at Paris was charged to present him with the insignia of the order, accompanied by a flattering letter from the Duc Decazes. In the same year he was decorated with the Cross of Commander and Star of the Austrian Order of Franz-Joseph. Signor Verdi completed, in 1878, a new opera in five acts, entitled "Montezuma," which was given for the first time at La Scala, Milan. This was followed in 1886 by "Otello," which was reproduced at the Lyceum in London, in 1889. In 1893, "Falstaff," a new opera, was produced at Milan, and received with great enthusiasm. At its reproduction in Paris in 1894 Verdi himself was present. On his return from Paris to his native country, in April, 1880, he received the Order of the Crown of Italy.

VERDON, Sir George Frederic, K.C.M.G., C.B., F.R.S., is the eldest son of the Rev. Edward Verdon, B.A., perpetual curate of St. Ann's, Tottington, Bury, Lancashire, was born Jan. 21, 1834, and educated at Rossall College, went to Melbourne in 1851, and engaged in commercial pursuits. He was afterwards called to the Bar at Melbourne in 1863, was elected to the Municipal Council of Williamstown, and appointed Chairman. He was one of the first members of the Volunteer force established in 1854 for the defence of the colony, and at the head of his company was engaged in suppressing an outbreak of convicts in 1857; and received the thanks of the Government and of the Commander-in-Chief for this service. In 1859 he was elected member for Williamstown, and in the following year became a Minister of the Crown, having been appointed Treasurer, which office he held with little interruption until 1868. As Honorary Secretary to the Board of Visitors of the Astronomical Observatory, and as a member of the Government, he was enabled to secure the satisfactory establishment of the Observatory on a permanent footing, and to aid in the acquisition of a complete set of instruments, of which the great Melbourne telescope forms part. In 1866 the Government and Legislature of Victoria resolved upon sending a Minister of the Crown to England for the purpose of bringing the subject of the defence of the colony before the Home Government, and Mr. Verdon was selected for the mission, in which he was completely successful. He received the decoration of C.B. for this service. Shortly after his return to Victoria, Mr. Verdon was appointed the permanent representative of that colony in England as Agent-General, with the consent of all political parties. He was elected F.R.S. in 1870, and an Associate of the Institute of Civil Engineers. He was nominated a K.C.M.G. on the occasion of his retiring from the office of Agent-General for the Colony of Victoria in 1872. He has been for many years President of the Trustees of the Public Library, Museums, and National Gallery of Victoria, and was the official representative of the British Royal Commission of the International Centennial Exhibition held at Melbourne 1888-89, and was presented by the Commission with a silver writing service, "in recognition of the great public services which he rendered as their representative."

VERLAINE, Paul, French poet, was born at Metz on March 30, 1844. His father was a captain in the Engineers. He began to write poetry at an early age, and was at first classed with the Parnassians, but afterwards became a principal exponent of "symbolism" and "decadence." Eccentricity of form and the choice of unusual themes are the characteristics of his poetry, which at different times has enjoyed a measure of popularity. M. Verlaine has published "Poèmes Saturniens," 1865; "Fêtes Galantes," 1869; "La Bonne Chanson," 1870; "Sagesse," 1881; "Les Poètes maudites," comprising Tristan Corbière, Arthur Rimbaud, and Stephane Mallarmé, 1884; "Jadis et Naguère," 1885; "Louise Leclercq, le Poteau," etc., prose stories, 1886; "Les Memoires d'un Veuf," 1887; "Romances sans Paroles," 1887; "Amour," 1888; "Parallèlement," 1889; "Dédicaces," 1890; "Chansons pour Elle," 1891; "Bonheur," 1891; "Mes Hôpitaux," a collection of notes and conversations written in the various hospitals in which this modern follower of Villon has spent much of his life. This book was published in 1891. In 1893 M. Verlaine visited England, and delivered some lectures on poetry.

VERNE, Jules, a popular French writer, born at Nantes, Feb. 8, 1828, was educated in his native town, and afterwards studied law in Paris. Turning his attention to dramatic literature, he wrote a comedy in verse entitled "Les Pailles Rompues," which was performed at the Gymnase in 1850. This was followed by "Onze Jours de Siège," a three-act comedy, brought out at the Vaudeville, and "l'Oncle d'Amérique," and by several comic operas. But his fame rests chiefly on his scientific romances, the first of which appeared in 1863, under the title of "Cinq Semaines en Ballon." Its success led the author to produce many similar works, now numbering nearly 60, of which the following have been translated into English, and other languages, even into Japanese and Arabic: "Five Weeks in a Balloon: a Voyage of Exploration and Discovery in Central Africa," 1870, 2nd edit., 1874; "A Journey to the Centre of the Earth," 1872; "Twenty Thousand Leagues under the Sea," 1873; "Meridiano: the Adventures of three Englishmen and three Russians in South Africa," 1873; "From the Earth to the Moon direct in Ninety-Seven Hours Twenty Minutes; and a Trip Round It," 1873; "The Fir Country: or Seventy Degrees North Latitude," 1874; "Around the World in Eighty Days," 1874; "A Floating City, and the Blockade Runners," "The English at the North Pole," "Dr. Ox's Experiment," 1874; "Adventures of Captain Hatteras," "The Mysterious Island," "The Survivors of the Chancellor," 1875; "Michael Strogoff, the Courier of the Czar," 1876; "The Child of the Cavern," "Hector Servadac, or the Career of a Comet," 1877; "Dick Sands, the Boy Captain," 1878; "Le Rayon Vert," 1882; "Kéraban-le-têtu," 1883; "L'Étoile du Sud," "Le Pays de Diamants," 1884; "L'Archipel en Feu," "Le Billet de Loterie," "Robur le Conquérant," "Le Chemin de France," "Deux Ans de Vacances," 1888; "Famille sans Nom," 1889; "Mathias Sandorf," "Nord contre Sud," "César Cascabel," "The Purchase of the North Pole," 1890; "Claudius Bombarnac," and "Le Château des Carpathes," 1892.

VEZIN, Hermann, actor, was born in 1829 in Philadelphia, U.S., of German parents, his father being a distinguished merchant of that city. He was intended for the legal profession, and took the degrees of B.A. and M.A. at the University of Pennsylvania. Having a passion for the stage, he came to England, and obtained, through the kindness of Mr. Charles Kean, an engagement in the Theatre Royal, York. He made his London début at the Princess's Theatre under Mr. Charles Kean's management. Having visited America professionally in 1857, he returned to England a year later, and after a few provincial engagements, appeared at the Surrey Theatre, London (1859), as Hamlet, Macbeth, Othello, Shylock, King John, and Louis XI. During Mr. Phelps's management of Sadler's Wells (1860), Mr. Vezin appeared as Orlando, Marc Antony, Romeo, and Cassio. In 1864 they produced Westland Marston's comedy of "Donna Diana," at the Princess's Theatre, London. In 1870 he alternated Othello and Iago with Mr. Phelps. Later he produced Mr. W. G. Wills's romantic drama "Hinko," at the Queen's Theatre. In 1873 Mr. Vezin played with Phelps, Toole, and Mathews, at the Gaiety Theatre. At Drury Lane, 1876, he played Macbeth for the benefit of the Philadelphia Centennial. On the production at the Crystal Palace, 1876, of Sophocles' "Œdipus Colonus," the title part was assigned to Mr. Vezin. On Sept. 11, 1876, he made his first appearance at the Haymarket, in Mr. W. S. Gilbert's drama of "Dan'l Druce." After acting Dan'l Druce 106 times, he created the character of De Taldé in an English adaptation of "The Danicheffs," produced at the St. James's Theatre, 1877. In 1878 he first played, at the Court Theatre, Dr. Primrose in Mr. W. G. Wills's drama of "Olivia," founded on the "Vicar of Wakefield." Since that time Mr. Vezin has constantly acted both in London and the provinces. In 1863 he married Mrs. Charles Young.

VIAUD, Louis Marie Julien, known as "Pierre Loti," French naval officer and man of letters, was born at Rochefort on Jan. 14, 1850, and is descended from an old noble Huguenot family long settled in that district. He went to school in his native town, entered the navy in 1867, and went several voyages in the Pacific. He was promoted to the rank of midshipman in June, 1873, and to that of lieutenant in Feb., 1881. He served through the Tonkin campaign with distinction, but was retired from active service in Oct., 1883, owing to the publication of a series of letters descriptive of the cruelties practised by the French soldiers at Hué, which he was so imprudent as to send to the Figaro. After this he served on board the Atalanta, and in the early days of Feb., 1884, was allowed to resume his duties. He was decorated with the Legion of Honour in July, 1887, and, under his pseudonym of "Pierre Loti," was presented for election as a member of the French Academy in opposition to Emile Zola. At the time of the election he was serving on board the Formidable off Algiers, and was thus freed from the necessity of paying the many official visits which usually fall to the lot of candidates for election to the French Academy. He was elected by 18 votes out of 35 on May 21, 1891, and succeeded the celebrated romancist, Octave Feuillet. His speech on election contained an attack upon the realism of Zola. As an author he is indeed the very antithesis of that writer, and his books, with their dreamy and melancholy beauty of style and subject, mark a revival of the spirit of romanticism and mysticism in French literature. His works, which have run through many editions, are "Aziyadé" (Stamboul, 1876-77), 1879; "Rarahu," a Polynesian idyll, 1880, reprinted under the title of "Mariage de Loti," in 1889; "Le Roman d'un Spahi," 1881; "Fleurs d'Ennui," a volume containing some of his finest work, such as "Pasquala d'Ivanovitch;" "Mon Frère Ives," of which there is an English translation, 1883; "Les Trois Dames de la Kasbah," 1884; "Pêcheur d'Islande," also translated into English, and into German by the author's friend, Carmen Sylva, and awarded the Prix Vitet by the Academy, 1886; "Madame Chrysanthème," 1887; "Propos d'Exil," 1887; "Japonneries d'Automne," 1889; "Au Maroc," 1890; "Le Roman d'un Enfant," an autobiography, 1890; "Le Livre de la Pitié et de la Mort," 1891; "Fantôme d'Orient," a sequel to "Aziyadé," 1892; and "Matelot," 1893. "Pierre Loti" has recently been travelling in the Sinaitic Peninsula and in the Holy Land, and his next book will be entitled "Le Désert." His works are mostly in the form of diaries, and are undoubtedly descriptive of many personal experiences.

VIARDOT-GARCIA, Madame Michelle Pauline, vocalist, daughter of the great tenor, Emanuel Garcia, and sister of the lamented Madame Malibran, born in Paris, July 18, 1821, at four years of age spoke four languages, and at seven was able to play the pianoforte accompaniments for the pupils to whom her father gave lessons. After sharing the family migrations, first to England, and afterwards to the United States, she returned to Europe in 1828, and her education was continued at Brussels. In consequence of her manual facility on the piano, she became one of Liszt's most accomplished pupils. Her father died in 1832 before her voice was formed, and her sister being constantly absent on professional tours, her studies, which included various branches of the arts, drawing and painting, as well as music and singing, were directed by her own tastes and the counsels of her mother. She made her first appearance in London at the Opera-house in 1839, in the character of Desdemona. Her voice, like that of her sister, combined the twofold register of soprano and contralto, embracing a compass of three octaves. At the close of the season she joined the Italian operatic company, then acting at the Odéon, in Paris, and was equally successful. In 1841 she reappeared in England, singing with Mario in Cimarosa's opera "Gli Orazi e Curiazi." Her next engagement was at Vienna; and Rubini, on forming an operatic corps for St. Petersburg, selected her for his prima donna. She afterwards appeared at Berlin, and when Jenny Lind quitted the German Opera, Madame Viardot-Garcia proved herself an able successor in the répertoire, which she greatly extended. Her name is associated with the first performances of "Les Huguenots," in which she took the part of Valentine, and of "Le Prophète," in which she performed the part of Fidès, an exquisite impersonation. Madame Viardot is also celebrated for her singing of Spanish songs. She retired from the stage in 1862, and devotes herself to composition. In April, 1840, she was married to M. Louis Viardot, Director of the Paris Italian Opera (he died in May, 1883).

VICTORIA ALEXANDRINA (Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, and Empress of India), only child of the late Duke of Kent and of the Princess Louisa-Victoria of Saxe-Coburg (relict of the Hereditary Prince of Leiningen, and sister of Leopold, Prince of Saxe-Coburg, afterwards King of the Belgians), was born at Kensington Palace, May 24, 1819; her parents, who had been for some time residing abroad, having hastened to England in order that their child might "be born a Briton." The Duke of Kent died Jan. 23, 1820, and the general education of the young Princess was directed, under her mother's care, by the Duchess of Northumberland, wife of the third Duke. Until within a few weeks of her elevation to the throne her life was spent in comparative retirement, varied by tours through different parts of the United Kingdom. Queen Victoria succeeded her uncle William IV., June 20, 1837, as Victoria I., and her coronation was celebrated in Westminster Abbey, June 28, 1838. Her Majesty was married Feb. 10, 1840, to his late Royal Highness Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, by whom Her Majesty had issue: 1. H.R.H. Victoria Adelaide Mary Louisa, Princess Royal, born Nov. 21, 1840, married Jan. 25, 1858, to H.R.H. the Crown Prince Frederick William of Prussia (he died June 15, 1888); 2. H.R.H. Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, born Nov. 9

1841, married March 10, 1863, the Princess Alexandra of Denmark; 3. H.R.H. Princess Alice Maud Mary, born April 15, 1843, married July 1, 1862, to Prince Louis of Hesse-Darmstadt (H.R.H. died Dec. 14, 1878); 4. H.R.H. Prince Alfred Ernest Albert, born Aug. 6, 1844, created Duke of Edinburgh, May 24, 1866, married Jan. 23, 1874, the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, sister of the present Emperor of Russia; 5. H.R.H. Princess Helena Augusta Victoria, born May 26, 1846, married July 5, 1866, to Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein; 6. H.R.H. Princess Louise Caroline Alberta, born March 14, 1848, married to the Marquis of Lorne, March 21, 1871; 7. H.R.H. Prince Arthur William Patrick Albert, Duke of Connaught, born May 1, 1850, married March 17, 1879, the Princess Louise Margaret Alexandra Victoria Agnes, third daughter of Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia; 8. H.R.H. Prince Leopold George Duncan Albert, Duke of Albany, born April 7, 1853, married April 2, 1882, the Princess Helen Frederica Augusta, daughter of the Prince of Waldeck and Pyrmont (H.R.H. died March 28, 1884); and 9. H.R.H. Princess Beatrice Mary Victoria Feodore, born April 14, 1857, married July 23, 1885, to Prince Henry Maurice of Battenberg. The first domestic grief which Her Majesty suffered was the loss of her mother, the Duchess of Kent, after a short illness, March 16, 1861, followed by the sudden death of the Prince Consort, to the great grief of the entire kingdom, Dec. 14 in the same year. Her Majesty's intense sorrow for her irreparable loss, although it has in a great degree disqualified her from appearing in public, and at court ceremonials, and has imposed on her the habits of a life of comparative seclusion, has, however, never been allowed by her to interfere with the performance of her important duties as a sovereign. Neither has it checked the exercise of that anxious interest which Her Majesty has ever since her accession to the crown steadfastly manifested for the social welfare of her people. It is a source of great pride to her subjects, and must doubtless tend in no small degree to assuage Her Majesty's abiding grief, that not only in her own vast dominions, but throughout the civilised world, Her Majesty's name is never mentioned save in terms of sympathy, affection, and respect as a Christian woman and as a queen. It would occupy much more space than our limits admit to give even a brief outline of the political events of Her Majesty's reign, and we can therefore merely glance at its more prominent features. On succeeding to the throne, Her Majesty found the Whig and Conservative parties nearly evenly balanced in the House of Commons. Lord Melbourne and his colleagues continued to hold office until Sept., 1841, when, owing to their increasing unpopularity, arising mainly from a want of financial ability, or at least of financial success, they were obliged to give place to the late Sir Robert Peel. Although he was pledged to maintain the corn-laws, he found himself compelled in 1845, to acquiesce in their repeal, which was carried into effect at his instance in 1846. The effect of this change in Sir Robert Peel's policy caused a disruption in the Conservative party, and led to the accession to power of Lord John Russell, who was succeeded in Jan., 1852, by the Earl of Derby. In the following Dec. the Conservative party, beaten on their own budget, resigned, and gave place to Lord Aberdeen and the Coalition Cabinet, which in Feb., 1855, was dismissed for having mismanaged the Russian War. It was succeeded by Lord Palmerston's first administration, which was defeated on the Conspiracy to Murder Bill, in March, 1858, and Lord Derby held power for the second time, until June, 1859, when Lord Palmerston formed his second Cabinet. On his death, Nov., 1865, the ministry was remodelled, Earl Russell assuming the post of Premier. His ministry having decided upon introducing a Reform Bill, the duty of conducting it through the House of Commons devolved upon Mr. Gladstone. Having been defeated on an important clause in June, 1866, ministers resigned. Lord Derby formed his third administration, and during the session of 1867 carried a Reform Bill, thereby settling a question which had long been a stumbling-block impeding the progress of legislation. The Conservatives being placed in a minority at the general election of 1868, Mr. Disraeli resigned office, and was succeeded as Prime Minister by Mr. Gladstone. The chief events of Mr. Gladstone's administration were the disestablishment of the Irish Church, the passing of the Irish Land Act, and the Elementary Education Act, the abolition of purchase in the army, the negotiation of the Treaty of Washington respecting the Alabama Claims, and the passing of the Ballot Act. At the general election of Feb., 1874, the Conservatives again came into power, and a new administration was formed by Mr. Disraeli, afterwards Lord Beaconsfield. By virtue of the power conferred by an Act of Parliament passed in the previous session, Her Majesty was, on Jan. 1, 1877, proclaimed Empress of India, by the Governor-General, at the durbar at Delhi, before an imperial assemblage of all the governors, lieutenant-governors, heads of Government, princes, chiefs, and nobles of India. On the defeat of the Conservatives at the general election of 1880, Mr. Gladstone formed another Liberal administration, which continued in office until June, 1885, when it was succeeded by a Conservative Government under Lord Salisbury. After the general election of Nov., 1885, the Liberals again came into power, and the spring of 1886 was devoted by Mr. Gladstone to the consideration of the Irish question. His Home Rule Bill, however, met with so much opposition that the government decided to appeal to the country, and the result of the general election of July, 1886, was an immense Conservative majority. Lord Salisbury's second Government came into power on Aug. 3, 1866. In April, 1882, an attempt on the Queen's life was made at Windsor by one Roderick Maclean, who after trial was ordered to be confined during Her Majesty's pleasure. "The Early Days of His Royal Highness the Prince Consort," compiled under the direction of Her Majesty, by Lieut.-General the Hon. C. Grey, was published in July, 1867, and was followed, in 1869, by "Leaves from the Journal of our Life in the Highlands;" and in 1874, by the first volume of Mr. (now Sir) Theodore Martin's "Life of H.R.H. the Prince Consort," of which the fifth and concluding volume appeared in 1880. In 1885, Her Majesty published a second volume, entitled "More Leaves from the Journal of our Life in the Highlands." In 1887, Her Majesty celebrated the Jubilee of her accession to the throne. A Thanksgiving Service was held in Westminster Abbey, and was attended by Her Majesty and all the Royal Family, the Indian Princes, the King of Denmark, the King and Queen of the Belgians, the King of Saxony, the King of the Hellenes, the Crown Prince of Austria, the Crown Prince of Portugal, the Infante Don Antonio of Spain, Prince Ludwig of Baden, the Crown Prince of Greece, the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, the Queen of Hawaii, with her attendants in cloth of gold, and representatives from every nation upon earth. The service in the Abbey was conducted by His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury in the presence of 10,000 spectators. Since her Jubilee Her Majesty has travelled abroad more than formerly, and has generously patronised music and the drama, on many occasions summoning eminent singers and actors to perform before her at Windsor and even at Balmoral. She has paid several visits to Florence or to such places in the South of France as Hyères, and has made prolonged stays there. In 1892 the Queen addressed a letter to the nation thanking her subjects for the sympathy they had shown her at the time of the Duke of Clarence's death. Lord Salisbury's government went out of office in 1892, and the Queen summoned Mr. Gladstone to form a cabinet. In March, 1894, on Mr. Gladstone's retirement from office, Lord Rosebery became Premier, and some changes took place in the ministry. On her return from Florence in 1894 she was present, at Coburg, on April 19, at the marriage of the Grand Duke of Hesse and Princess Victoria Melita of Coburg, her granddaughter. She spent some time at Coburg and did not again reach Windsor till April 28. Later Her Majesty met with a most enthusiastic reception in Manchester, where, on May 21, she opened the Ship Canal in person.

VILAS, William F., American statesman, was born at Chelsea, Vermont, July 9, 1840. The family removed to Madison, Wisconsin, in 1851, and he graduated from the Wisconsin State University in 1858, and from the Albany (N.Y.) law school in 1860. He entered the Federal Army at the outbreak of the Civil War, and soon rose to the rank of colonel. Since the close of the war, he has been a successful and prominent lawyer in Wisconsin. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1884-85, and chairman of the National Democratic Convention which nominated Mr. Cleveland to the Presidency in 1884. From 1885 to 1889 he was Postmaster-General of the United States, and since 1891 has been a U.S. Senator from Wisconsin.

VILERS, Charles Marie Le Myre de, was born in 1833 of a good Norman family. He began his career in the navy at the age of sixteen, and when but twenty-six received the Cross of the Legion of Honour. He subsequently entered the Civil Service, acting as Sous-Préfet at Joigny and Bergerac, and was promoted in 1877 to the office of Directeur des Affaires Civiles et Financières in Algeria. For his gallantry in the siege of Paris, on the special recommendation of Admiral Sassiet, he obtained the rosette of the Legion of Honour. In the early part of 1879, the Cabinet of M. Waddington determined to appoint a Civil Governor to Cochin China, and the choice falling on M. de Vilers, he left for Saigon in June of that year, being entrusted as Plenipotentiary to the Court of Annam. He made himself extremely popular there, and introduced many most useful reforms, repressing a serious insurrection and causing to be constructed the first railway in the colony. In 1882 he became embroiled with the chief of the Naval Department with respect to the appointment of an officer, and was recalled to France, where he lived quietly until 1885, when M. de Freycinet was desirous of bringing the war with Madagascar to an end, and concluded a treaty with that country which was duly ratified by the French Parliament, but would need most careful and delicate handling to carry out its clauses. In the spring of 1888 M. de Vilers set out for Antananarivoas Minister Plenipotentiary, being fully aware of the arduous nature of his task. The Malagasy Prime Minister, a clever and astute diplomatist, soon found he had a stubborn and expert antagonist to deal with, and as the terms of the treaty had been left somewhat vague, the Résident Général had to assert the rights of his country. The Queen's Consort requiring funds to meet the indemnity due to France, had resolved on establishing a National Bank, and entered into communication with an English syndicate for a loan of 30,000,000 francs. The French Envoy disputed the right, and insisted on his applying to the French for the loan. After much discussion the Prime Minister accepted the offer made by the Comptoir d'Escompte at Paris, which advanced 15,000,000 francs at 6 per cent., to be repaid within 25 years by levies on the customs of certain selected seaports. The next question that arose between M. de Vilers and the Malagasy Government was on account of a mission to Europe entrusted by it to an Englishman in the service of the Hovas. This was General Willoughby, whom M. de Vilers desired to see banished from the island, and he had at last the satisfaction of seeing him embarked for Zanzibar. M. de Vilers openly displayed his ill-feeling towards the English element in Antananarivo, especially against the missionaries, who are very influential there. From the first he kept entirely aloof from the British colony, and endeavoured to prevent British enterprise from getting a footing in the island. The Résident Général refused to recognise the right of the Hova Government to grant the exequatur to representatives of foreign powers, alleging that the French Envoy alone had the right to do so. In 1887 Mr. Haggard, the British Consul, took no notice of this requirement of M. de Vilers, and applied for it to the Hovas Minister. Many interviews took place, and at last the French Envoy broke off all negotiations, hauled down the tricolour, despatched his escort of marines to Tamatave, and prepared to leave the capital with all his staff. The Prime Minister, fearing the consequences of his leaving, immediately sent for the French Plenipotentiary, and complied with all his demands; but it is nevertheless a question which will always be mooted, and has more than once nearly caused a rupture between the two countries. In 1888 M. de Vilers returned to France, and was promoted to be Grand Officer of the Legion of Honour. He went back to Madagascar, and a few months later resigned his appointment there, and was elected Deputy for Cochin China in Sept. 1889. In 1893 he was sent to negotiate the convention with Siam, and successfully achieved it. In Sept. 1894, he was once more sent as Envoy to settle affairs in Madagascar, and reached Antananarivo in Oct. With his accustomed promptitude he had at once started thither on his arrival at Tamatave. On Tuesday, Oct. 9, he, M. Rauchot, and the Vicomte D'Anthouard had an audience of the Queen and the Prime Minister, and opened negotiations and put forward demands which, if acceded to, would have the effect of constituting Madagascar a French dependency.

VILLIERS, The Right Hon. Charles Pelham, P.C., brother of the late Earl of Clarendon, born Jan. 3, 1802, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, was called to the Bar, at Lincoln's Inn in 1827. He has been an examiner in the Court of Chancery and a Poor-Law Commissioner, is a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for Herts, and has been one of the members in the House of Commons for Wolverhampton since 1835. He joined the Liberal Government, and was appointed Judge-Advocate-General in 1853; was President of the Poor-Law Board, and became a member of Lord Palmerston's second Administration in 1859. Mr. Villiers, as an independent Liberal member, was one of the most able and eloquent leaders of the anti-corn-law agitation, and to the triumph of the cause his earnest speeches and persistent motions in Parliament contributed. Having been at the general election in 1847 returned for South Lancashire and Wolverhampton, he refused to abandon his old constituents. In the session of 1865 he introduced a very important measure in connection with the poor-law administration, the Union Chargeability Bill, which was carried through Parliament, and has become law. He resigned the Presidency of the Poor-Law Board in July, 1866. A marble statue of Mr. Villiers was unveiled by Earl Granville in Wolverhampton on June 6, 1879. The unveiling was preceded by a meeting under the presidency of the mayor in the Agricultural Hall, where speeches in eulogy of the public services of Mr. Villiers, especially in connection with the anti-corn-law movement, were delivered by Earl Granville, Sir Robert Peel, M.P., Mr. Staveley Hill, M.P., and Mr. Alderman Fowler. At the last three general elections Mr. Villiers has been returned unopposed for Wolverhampton. He is the oldest member in the House of Commons.

VILLIERS, Frederic, born in London in 1852, was educated in the north of France. Afterwards he studied in the Schools of Art at South Kensington, and became a student of the Royal Academy in 1870. In 1876, as special artist and correspondent to the Graphic, he went through the Servian Campaign with Mr. Archibald Forbes. He was with the armies of the Timok, Drina, Eber, and with Tchernaieff on the Morava; was decorated with the Order of the Takova, and received a war medal for this campaign; was recalled in November to Constantinople. He then travelled in Roumelia and Bulgaria, examined the Turkish army, re-crossed the Servian lines and returned with the Turkish troops to Constantinople. Having been ordered to go into Russia, he, in January, started for Kisheniff, and saw the mobilization of the Russian troops in Bessarabia. Mr. Villiers returned to England in Feb., 1877. The day on which war was declared between Turkey and Russia, he started for Bucharest, where he joined Mr. Forbes and was present at all the chief engagements. When the armistice was declared, he was the only English correspondent who accompanied the Russian army to enter Constantinople, and was present at San Stefano when peace was signed and announced to the Russian Guard by the Grand Duke Nicholas on Sunday, March 3, 1878. Mr. Villiers received the Cross for the passage of the Danube and the war medal. In June of that year he went to Malta, and was present at the review of the Indian Contingent by the Duke of Cambridge. In November he left England for Afghanistan. He went through the first part of that campaign till the signing of the Treaty of Gandamuk; then left for Australia; was at the opening of the Sydney Exhibition; travelled through New Zealand, and returned to England viâ San Francisco and New York, thus making a journey round the world. Mr. Villiers left England for Egypt immediately on receipt of the news of the massacres at Alexandria, of June 11, 1882; was on H.M.S. Condor during the bombardment of that city; and landed with the Marines. Afterwards he followed the army to Ismalia; was at the first fight at Tel-el-Mahouta, and was with the Highland Brigade during the night march and subsequent attack on Tel-el-Kebir. Mr. Villiers remained in Cairo till the trial and banishment of Arabi and his confederates. He received for this campaign the order and rosette of the Medijieh, and the Egyptian war medal from the hands of the Khedive. In May, 1883, he was one of the English correspondents invited to attend the coronation of the Czar at Moscow; received silver medal and badge. In Feb., 1884, Mr. Villiers left for Suakim, to join General Graham, who had gone to avenge the defeat of General Baker at the first battle of Teb. Mr. Villiers was present at the Arab defeat at the second battle of Teb. On March 13, he was at the battle of Tamai, and subsequently, as special correspondent of the Daily News, accompanied Admiral Sir W. Hewett on his mission to the court of King John of Abyssinia. In the autumn of 1884 and the spring of 1885, Mr. Villiers was with the Nile Expedition for the relief of Khartoum, being present at the battles of Abu-Klea and the advance upon Metemmeh. Returning to England, he started almost at once for Ireland, where he witnessed the manœuvres of the Evolutionary Squadron in Bantry Bay, in June, 1885. A period of rest followed, and in Nov. 1885, Mr. Villiers started for Servia, and was with the Servian forces at all the chief encounters with the Bulgarians. An armistice being declared, he started on his homeward journey. At Venice, he found a telegram from the proprietors of the Graphic, telling him to go to Burmah. He accomplished the journey from Venice to Rangoon in one month—arriving just in time to accompany Lord Dufferin on his journey up the Irrawaddy to Mandalay. When Lord Dufferin returned to India, Mr. Villiers left for Constantinople to await the development of events in the Balkan Peninsula. He eventually joined the Greek army and was in Athens during the blockade of the Greek ports. As a peaceful solution of the Turko-Greek question took place, Mr. Villiers returned to England. Since 1887 he has been lecturing in England, the United States and Canada, on his varied experiences during the last decade. In Aug. 1889, Mr. Villiers was invited by the Governor-General of Canada to accompany his Excellency on his official tour through the Dominion, and journeyed from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast over the Canadian Pacific Railroad, visiting all the principal towns and Indian reservations of the far west. During the Chino-Japanese War he represented a leading illustrated paper in China.

VINCENT, Bishop John Heyl, was born in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, Feb. 23, 1832. He was brought by his parents to Pennsylvania in his sixth year, and lived for fourteen years on the banks of the Susquehanna, near Lewisburg. He taught school in Chilisquaque township and on the Juniata River for about four years. His education was pursued in Lewisburg and Milton Academies, and in the Newark (N.J.) Wesleyan Institute. He completed his four years course of theological study in the Newark conference in April, 1857. From there he went to Illinois, where he served as pastor at Joliet, Galena, Rockford, Mount Morris, and Chicago. He established the Sunday School Quarterly in 1865 in Chicago, and in 1866 the Sunday School Teacher, containing the first issues of the modern lesson system which has become international. He became Sunday School Secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which office he filled for twenty years. With Hon. Lewis Miller of Akron, Ohio, he established the Chautauqua Assembly in 1874, and has been Superintendent of Instruction, or Chancellor up to the present time. He was elected and consecrated (Methodist Episcopal) Bishop in New York in 1888. He is the author of "The Church School and its Officers," "The Sunday School Normal Guide," "The Modern Sunday School," "A Study in Pedagogy," "The Revival and after the Revival," "Better Not," a series of "Chautauqua Text Books" in history, "To Old Bethlehem," "The Home Book," "The Church at Home," "Studies in Young Life," "In Search of His Grave, an Easter Study," &c., &c. He visited Europe in 1862-63, 1872, 1878, 1880, 1886-87, 1891, and 1893. He visited Egypt and Palestine in 1863 and 1887. His Episcopal residence is Topeka, Kansas; his post-office address for all Chautauqua correspondence, Buffalo, N.Y.

VINCENT, Colonel Charles Edward Howard, C.B., was born May 31, 1849, at Slinfold, Sussex, being the second son of the late Rev. Sir Frederick Vincent, 11th Bart. He was educated at Westminster School, and the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. He was appointed Ensign in the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers in 1868; retired as Lieutenant in 1873; and was appointed Captain in the Royal Berks Militia in the latter year; but resigned in 1875 to assume the Lieut.-Colonelcy of the Central London Rangers, which commission he resigned in 1878, on his appointment as Director of Criminal Investigations. He entered at the Inner Temple in 1873; was called to the Bar in 1876; went the South Eastern Circuit; and practised in the Divorce Division; and entered at the Paris Faculté de Droit in 1877. He took over the control of the Police Gazette in 1883; and was Chairman of the Metropolitan and City Police Orphanage in 1880-83. Colonel Vincent was Special Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph in Berlin in 1871; received the thanks of the War Office for his reports upon Russia in 1872; gave numerous lectures upon Foreign Armies at the Royal United Service Institution between 1872 and 1878; was Military Commissioner of the Daily Telegraph at the outbreak of the Turco-Russian War in 1877; and assembled a Conference upon the requirements of the Volunteer Force, leading to considerable reforms, in 1878, and obtained like results by his parliamentary action, in 1887. He was appointed, March 4, 1878, to reorganise the Detective System of the Metropolitan Police with the designation of Director of Criminal Investigations, and with absolute control over the criminal administration. This post he resigned in 1884, in order to enter Parliament, and was appointed Colonel Commandant of the Queen's Westminster Volunteers. In 1888 he was elected to the Metropolitan Board of Works for St. George's, Hanover Square, and in 1889, and again in 1892, was returned unopposed for the same constituency to the London County Council. He is a magistrate for Middlesex, Westminster, and Berkshire, a Deputy-Lieutenant for London, and has travelled over the whole world. In 1885 he was returned as Conservative Member for the Central Division of Sheffield by a majority of 1149, and by 1195 in 1886, and again in 1892. In Parliament he is identified with the Fair Trade Movement, United Empire Trade, and British Labour Questions, while Acts for The Probation of First Offenders, Saving Life at Sea, Reformatory Schools, and the appointment of a Public Trustee, are due to his initiation. In 1886 he was created a Companion of the Bath, and is also a knight of the Orders of the German Crown and of the Crown of Italy. His published works are "Stoffel's Reports upon the Prussian Army," 1871; "Elementary Military Geography, Reconnoitring and Sketching," 1872; "Russia's Advance Eastward," 1873; "The Law of Criticism and Libel," 1876; "The Improvement of the Volunteer Force," 1878; "Procédure d'Extradition," 1880; and "A Police Code and Manual of Criminal Law," since adopted as the text book of all English-speaking police. Colonel Vincent married, 1882, Ethel Gwendoline, daughter and co-heiress of Geo. Moffatt, Esq., M.P., of Goodrich Court, Herefordshire, and authoress of "40,000 Miles over Land and Water," and "Newfoundland to Cochin China."

VINCENT, Sir Edgar, K.C.M.G., was educated at Eton, and passed an examination for the appointment of Student Dragoman at Constantinople in Oct., 1877, but did not take up the appointment. He was subsequently appointed 2nd Lieutenant in the Coldstream Guards (1877), and resigned (1882). In May, 1880, he was appointed Private Secretary to Lord E. Fitzmaurice, Commissioner for Eastern Roumelia, and in June, 1881, Assistant to Her Majesty's Commissioner for the evacuation of the territory ceded to Greece by Turkey. He was appointed British, Belgian, and Dutch Representative on the Council of the Ottoman Public Debt at Constantinople, March, 1882; President of the Council of Ottoman Public Debt at Constantinople, March 13, 1883; and Financial Adviser to the Egyptian Government, Nov. 4, 1883. He has received the first class of the Medjidieh, and was made a K.C.M.G. in Aug., 1887. It was mainly owing to his efforts that Egyptian Finance was restored to prosperity. When the financial difficulties of Egypt were overcome, Sir Edgar Vincent resigned the post of Financial Adviser and was appointed Governor of the Imperial Ottoman Bank. As evidence of the progress of Egyptian credit during the six years that he was Financial Adviser, it may be stated that the selling value of Egyptian securities in 1893 was £76,251,678, and in 1889 had risen to £103,362,730, this result having been obtained with a diminution of the charges of the Egyptian Government and of the tax-payer. While in Egypt, Sir Edgar Vincent undertook and carried out with success a reform of the Egyptian currency. Since his appointment, Turkey has regularly paid the Russian War Indemnity, thus removing one of the chief political dangers to the Ottoman Empire. Turkish credit has been greatly improved, and Turkish stocks now rank closely after Egyptian. All sums due on the debt have been regularly met, and an average sum of 2,000,000 Turkish pounds has been annually redeemed by means of the various sinking funds. Turkey has now been removed from the list of countries in embarrassed financial circumstances, and has entered resolutely the path of economic progress. Railways in Turkey have been increased from 960 in 1889 to 2,000 miles in 1893. Sir Edgar Vincent married in Sept., 1890, Lady Helen Venetia Duncombe, daughter of the first Earl of Feversham.

VINE, Sir John Richard Somers, C.M.G., F.S.S., F.R.G.S., eldest son of the late John Vine and Eliza, his wife, daughter of William Somers, was born at Wells, Somerset, on Dec. 10, 1847. He was educated at the Grammar School, Spalding, and subsequently at a private school in Cambridge. He entered the newspaper and printing office of a relative when very young, and has served in every grade of the journalist's profession on country and London newspapers. In Oct., 1871, he joined the editorial staff of Messrs. Waterlow and Sons, and became superintending editor to that Company in 1876. He was Private Secretary at the Mansion House to the Lord Mayors of London, 1871-75. During that period he acted as Secretary to, amongst other organisations, the Bengal Famine Relief Fund in 1874, and to the British Fund for the relief of the inundated Departments of the South of France, in 1875. He was appointed City and official agent to the International Fisheries, Health, and Inventions Exhibitions, 1883-85, and to the Royal Commissioners for the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, 1886, and was knighted in that year "in regard of his many valuable public services in the course of that and preceding years." In the year 1886, he was invited by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to be the Assistant Organising Secretary to the proposed Imperial Institute as the National Memorial of the Queen's reign, and accepted the post. In Dec., 1888, he was despatched by H.R.H. the President, and the Organising Committee, on a mission to the principal British Colonies, which occupied him nearly two years (1889-90). During this tour, which was of a most comprehensive nature, the interest of India and of the Colonies in the work of the Institute was aroused, and the practical co-operation of those dependencies promised . On the occasion of th State inauguration of the Institute by the Queen on May 10, 1893, he was created a Companion of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George "in recognition of his services to that Institution." From 1889 to the present time he has acted as Honorary Secretary of the National Leprosy Fund. He is a prominent Freemason, being a Past Grand Deacon of England, and founder and first elected master of the "Savage Club Lodge." He has been for some years Honorary Secretary to the "Savage Club." He is author of "English Municipal Institutions, their growth and development statistically illustrated" (first published in 1878); "The English Municipal Code" (first published in 1882); and other statistical works, and editor and compiler of several "Year-Books." To him is also due—as stated in the official preface—"the conception and general outline" of "The Imperial Institute Year-Book" (first published in 1892), and now a recognized and authoritative annual record in respect of the British Empire. He is a Commissioner of Lieutenancy for London and a knight of several foreign orders (including those of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, Franz-Josef of Austria, and Kamemeha of Hawaii).

VINES, Sydney Howard, was born in London, Dec. 31, 1849. He was educated privately, and began the study of Medicine at Guy's Hospital in 1869, but soon became attracted by purely scientific subjects. Having gained an Open Scholarship at Christ's College, he went up to Cambridge in Oct., 1872. He graduated B.Sc. at the University of London in 1873, and D.Sc. in 1879. He took his Cambridge degree in 1876, and was shortly afterwards elected Fellow and Lecturer of Christ's College. He was elected to a Readership in Botany in 1884, and took his D.Sc. degree at Cambridge in the same year. In 1888 he was elected to the Sherardian Professorship of Botany at Oxford, and was admitted a Fellow of Magdalen College at the same time. He was elected Fellow of the Linnean Society in 1878, and Fellow of the Royal Society, and an Hon. Member of the Physical Society of Edinburgh in 1885. He has written a book entitled "Lectures on the Physiology of Plants," published by the Cambridge University Press in 1886; and he is an editor and one of the founders of the "Annals of Botany" (published by the Clarendon Press, Oxford).

VIRCHOW, Rudolf, a celebrated German pathologist, anthropologist, and politician, was born at Schivelbein in Pomerania, Oct. 13, 1821, and studied Medicine at Berlin. In 1849 he was appointed Professor of Pathological Anatomy at Würzburg, and soon became one of the foremost exponents of the so-called Würzburg School. In 1856 he returned to Berlin as Professor; here he did excellent work in the newly-founded pathological institute, which at once became the centre of independent research amongst the younger men of science. He has always taken a great interest in politics, and has contributed important speeches to the parliamentary debates. His attitude has from the first been ultra-liberal. He passes as the originator of the celebrated phrase "Kulturkampf," or the war of the State against a reactionary church. In 1887 he was deprived of the rectorate of Berlin University, owing to the violence of his political opinions, but was reinstated in 1892. At the Naturalists' Conference at Innsbruck in 1869, he was one of the founders of the German Anthropological Society. In 1873 he became a member of the Academy of Sciences. He has also taken a great interest in the spreading of scientific knowledge amongst the people, and has been since 1866 part editor of a series of popular lectures, to which he has contributed essays on various historical and scientific subjects. His principal works are: "Cellular Pathology," 4th edit., 1871; "Morbid Tumours," 3 vols., 1863-66; "Collection of Treatises on Scientific Medicine," 1856; "Collection of Treatises on Public Medicine and Epidemiology," 2 vols., 1879; "Goethe as a Naturalist," 1861; "Four Lectures on Life and Illness," 1862; "The Education of Women," 1865; "The Function of Science in the New National Life of Germany," 1871; "Free Knowledge in the Modern State," 1877; "The Necropolis of Koban in the Caucasus," 1883; and "Alimentation and Well-being," 1889. His "Archives of Pathological Anatomy and Physiology, and of Clinical Medicine," founded in 1847, has, latterly, reached the 120th volume.

VIRTUE, The Right Rev. John, D.D., Roman Catholic Bishop of Portsmouth, was born in London, April 28, 1826. He was ordained priest in Rome by Cardinal Patrizi in 1851, having previously studied at St. Edmund's College, Hertfordshire, and the English College, Rome. Poplar was the scene of his first missionary labours, and in 1853 he went with the Apostolic Nuncio (afterwards Cardinal) Bedini, as his secretary, to the United States and Canada. On his return, in acknowledgment of his services, he was made Chamberlain of Honour to Pope Pius IX., April 18, 1854. Monsignor Virtue went to Aldershot Camp on temporary duty in 1855; but he was appointed Chaplain to the Forces June 24, 1855, a post which he held for twenty-seven years. He was mentioned in general orders in 1864 for "distinguished and meritorious conduct during the epidemic of yellow fever in Bermuda," and was promoted from the fourth to the third class of Army Chaplains (Feb. 2, 1865) for the services he had rendered. Monsignor Virtue was six years stationed at Malta. He was re-appointed Chamberlain of Honour to Pope Leo XIII. April 5, 1878, was appointed the first Bishop of Portsmouth by Apostolic brief of June 13, 1882, and was consecrated by the Cardinal Archbishop on July 25. He has edited a "Prayer Book for the Army," 1859; and a revised edition of Bishop Challoner's "Meditations," 1880; and has contributed various articles to the Dublin Review and the Month. He represented the English Hierarchy at the Centennial celebration at Baltimore, United States, in 1889.

VOGEL, Sir Julius, K.C.M.G., was born in London in 1835. After attending London University School, he became at sixteen a pupil of Dr. Percy's metallurgical laboratory at the Royal School of Mines, where he studied more particularly the chemical art of assaying and testing gold and silver. He went out to Melbourne with a high certificate of proficiency, intending to employ his acquirements in the gold fields of Australia, then lately discovered. Fate, however, had decreed a more extensive field of usefulness for him. He was elected a Member of the Provincial Council, and became head of the Provincial Government, a position he resigned in 1869. He also became a Member of the New Zealand House of Representatives, and removed in 1869 to Auckland. Mr. Vogel joined the ministry of Mr. (now Sir) William Fox, of Wellington, in 1869, taking the office of Colonial Treasurer, Postmaster-General, and, finally, Commissioner of Customs. After acting also as Minister in Mr. Waterhouse's Government, and holding the leadership of the Lower House, Mr. Vogel became Prime Minister at Mr. Waterhouse's resignation, which followed after a few months. He held that office until 1876, when he resigned, because his health was not equal to his arduous duties. He became Agent-General for New Zealand at the end of 1876, and held that office until 1881, when he resigned. He held office as Member of the Government, and head of it, for a period of seven years, with an interval of only four months. Through Sir Julius Vogel's exertions, extended over three years, the Colonial Stocks Act (for inscribing Colonial Stocks) was devised, and finally passed both Houses of Parliament of Great Britain. Lord Carnarvon, in moving the second reading in the House of Lords, specially referred to Sir Julius's services in connection with the measure. Sir Julius Vogel's policy in New Zealand was the means of introducing 100,000 immigrants, and constructing 1,200 miles of railway in the colony during the ten years ending 1881. He visited the colony in 1883 and again in 1884, and joined the Government of Sir Robert Stout, known as the Stout-Vogel Government. He continued in office until the end of 1887, and shortly afterwards returned to England. He was made a C.M.G. in 1871, and the K.C.M.G. was conferred on him in 1875. He is the author of several pamphlets: a New Zealand handbook; several papers in the Nineteenth Century and the Fortnightly, chiefly concerning the Federation of the Empire, a subject on which he has always taken great interest. He latterly wrote a novel, "A.D. 2000." He was married, in 1867, to Mary, eldest daughter of W. H. Clayton, Esq., Colonial Architect.

VOGT, Professor Karl, M.D., philosopher and author, born at Giessen, July 5, 1817, was educated there under Liebig, and removing to Berne in 1835, studied Physiology, and graduated M.D. He devoted his attention to Geology and Zoology under Agassiz, and became Professor of Zoology in the University of his native town. Having distinguished himself in the Frankfort Parliament of 1848, he, from motives of prudence, retired into Switzerland, and delivered in the canton of Neufchatel some lectures "On Man, his Place in Creation, and in the History of the Earth." They have been translated into English, and published under the auspices of the Anthropological Society. Dr. Vogt, who is Professor of Natural History in the University of Geneva, a Correspondent of the Institute of France (Académie des Sciences), Foreign Associate of the Anthropological Society of Paris, and an honorary Fellow of the Anthropological Society of London and Berlin, has published several works, amongst which may be mentioned "Manual of Geology," "Zoological Letters," "Lettres Physiologiques," translated into French, Italian, and Russian; "Les Mammifères," translated into French, English, Italian, and Russian; "Anatomie Comparée Pratique," in German, French, and Russian, and various lectures on animals and some descriptions of travel. He is part-author with Emile Yung of a "Traité d'Anatomie Comparée Pratique," 1883-86.

VOGÜE, Vicomte Eugène Melchior de, was born on Feb. 24, 1848; became Secretary to the Embassy, first at Constantinople, and subsequently at St. Petersburg, where, at the Winter Palace in 1878, he was married to the daughter of General Annenkoff. He retired from the diplomatic service in 1881, and has since devoted his time to literature; writing much in the Revue des Deux Mondes, and the Journal des Débats. He has also written "Syrie, Palestine, Mount Athos," 1876; "Histoires Orientales," 1879; "Le Fils de Pierre le Grand," 1884; "Histoires d'Hiver," 1885; "Le Roman Russe," 1886; "Souvenirs et Visions," 1887; "Remarques sur l'Exposition du Centenaire," 1889. Vicomte Melchoir de Vogüe was elected a Member of the Académie Française in Nov., 1888. He was promoted Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1879.

VOYSEY, The Rev. Charles, B.A., was born in London, March 18, 1828, being the youngest son of the late Mr. Annesley Voysey, architect. He was educated partly by private tuition, partly at Stockwell Grammar School, and afterwards at St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, where he took his B.A. degree in 1851. From 1852 to 1859 he held the curacy of Hessle, near Hull, after which he was Curate (under the Crown) of Craigton, Jamaica, for fifteen months. In 1861 he was appointed Curate of Great Yarmouth, but in the same year was transferred to St. Mark's, Whitechapel. Being ejected from that curacy in consequence of a sermon against endless punishment, he was recommended by the Bishop of London (Dr. Tait) to the curacy of the well-known Victoria Dock parish, under the Rev. H. Boyd, Vicar. After six months' service there he was invited by the patron and Vicar of Healaugh, Yorkshire, to accept the curacy of that parish, and at the expiration of six months the Vicar resigned and presented Mr. Voysey to the benefice (1864). Mr. Voysey began his career as a religious reformer by the publication of a sermon entitled "Is every Statement in the Bible about Our Heavenly Father strictly True?" This was soon followed, in 1865, by The Sling and the Stone, which first appeared in monthly parts, and was continued through several years; up to the present time ten volumes have been issued. The opinions expressed were denounced as heretical by the ultra-orthodox parties in the Anglican Church, and eventually in the spring of 1869 legal proceedings were instituted by the Archbishop of York's secretary against Mr. Voysey. The case was heard in the first instance in the Chancery Court, York Minster, Dec. 1, 1869, when judgment was pronounced against Mr. Voysey, and on appeal, confirmed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which sentenced the appellant to be deprived of his living, and to pay the costs, Feb. 11, 1871. In October of that year, Mr. Voysey began holding Theistic services, and preaching in London, first at St. George's Hall, then at Langham Hall, and since April, 1885, at the Theistic Church, Swallow Street, Piccadilly. The religious movement with which he is associated was at first called the "Voysey Establishment Fund," but in 1880, at his own request, his supporters and congregation enrolled themselves into the "Theistic Church," which has been properly settled by an elaborate Trust Deed. For the first three years of his preaching in London, Mr. Voysey's sermons were published weekly in the Eastern Post, and frequently in other papers in England, in America, and in India. Every sermon which he has preached since Oct., 1871, has been printed and circulated in many parts of the world. The issue is 1,200 a week, and the total number of sermons, including reprints, is over 1,000,000. The work of the Theistic Church in twenty-two years has cost over £36,000, and a further sum of £2,053 has been collected for charities. Mr. Voysey is the author of an original work, entitled "The Mystery of Pain, Death, and Sin;" and he has recently issued what may be regarded as a standard work on the religion which he upholds, entitled "Theism, or The Religion of Common Sense."

W.

WACE, The Rev. Henry, D.D., Principal of King's College, London, was born in London, Dec. 10, 1836, and educated at Marlborough, Rugby, King's College, London, and Brasenose College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1860, taking a second class both in classics and mathematics. He proceeded to D.D. at Oxford in 1883; and in the previous year received the honorary degree of D.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He was ordained in 1861; served as Curate at St. Luke's, Berwick Street, from 1861 to 1863; at St. James's, Piccadilly, from 1863 to 1869; and was Lecturer at Grosvenor Chapel, South Audley Street, from 1870 to 1872. In 1872 he was elected, by the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn, Chaplain of that Society; and, in 1880, was promoted by them to the office of Preacher of Lincoln's Inn. He preached the Boyle Lectures for 1874 and 1875, on the subject of "Christianity and Morality." In 1879 he preached the Bampton Lectures at Oxford on the "Foundations of Faith." He was Select Preacher at Cambridge in 1878, and at Oxford from 1880 to 1882. In 1875 he was appointed Professor of Ecclesiastical History in King's College, London; and, in 1881, he was nominated by the Bishop of London a Prebendary of St. Paul's. He was appointed one of the Archbishop of Canterbury's chaplains in April, 1883; and, in November, the same year, Principal of King's College, London. In 1884 he was appointed one of the Honorary Chaplains to the Queen, and became Chaplain in Ordinary in 1889. In conjunction with the late Sir William Smith, he is the editor of the "Dictionary of Christian Biography, Literature, Sects, and Doctrines, during the First Eight Centuries," 4 vols., 1877-87; and he is the editor of "The Speaker's Commentary on the Apocrypha;" and also, in conjunction with the late Dr. Schaff, of a few of the volumes of the "Post-Nicene Library of Translations from the Fathers." He is also the author of Lectures preached in 1881 at St. James's, Piccadilly, on "The Principal Facts in the Life of Our Lord, and the Authority of the Evangelical Narratives;" of a volume of discourses on "Some Central Points of Our Lord's Ministry," 1890; and a series of essays on "The Christian Faith and some recent Agnostic Attacks," 1894.

WADE, Sir Thomas Francis, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., elder son of Colonel Thomas Wade, C.B., born about 1820, entered the army as Ensign in the 81st Foot in 1838, and served afterwards in China and elsewhere in the 42nd Highlanders and the 98th Foot, from which he retired as Lieutenant in 1847. In 1843 he was appointed Interpreter to the garrison of Hong Kong, and in 1847 Assistant Chinese Secretary; in 1852 he was made Vice-Consul at Shanghai, where he acted as Inspector of Customs for the Chinese Government. In 1855 he was appointed Chinese Secretary at Hong Kong, and in the same year he was sent by the late Sir John Bowring on a special Mission to Cochin China. Owing to his familiarity with the native character and language, he was attached to Lord Elgin's Mission to China in 1857-59, and in the last-named year he was appointed Chinese Secretary to our Mission in China. In this capacity he accompanied Lord Elgin's Special Mission to Pekin in Oct., 1860. In 1861 he was nominated a C.B. (Civil Division); in the following year he became Chinese Secretary and Translator to the British Legation in China, and was acting Chargé d'Affaires at Pekin, from June, 1864, to Nov., 1865, and again from Nov., 1869, to July, 1871, when he was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary and Chief-Superintendent of British Trade in China. He was advanced to the rank of K.C.B. in Nov., 1875, for his exertions in negotiating important treaties with the Chinese Government, and obtaining trading facilities in that empire. He retired on a pension in 1883. In 1889 he was made a G.C.M.G. Sir Thomas Wade is the anthor of "Tzŭ-Erh Chi" (Progressive Course), 1867, which deals with both colloquial and documentary Chinese, and is of great value to students of the Chinese language.

WAKEFIELD, Bishop of. See How, The Right Rev. William Walsham.

WALDERSEE, General Count Von, Chief of the General Staff of the German Army, was born in 1832; entered the army in 1850, and served with distinction through the War of 1866, and through the Franco-German campaign. In 1882 he became Quartermaster-General, and acted as Deputy Chief of the General Staff on behalf of the aged Count von Moltke, on whose resignation he succeeded to the position of Chief of the General Staff. Count Waldersee married an American lady who had received the title of Princess Maria von Noer, as the morganatic consort of the late Prince Frederick of Schleswig-Holstein.

WALDSTEIN, Charles, Litt.D., Ph.D., L.H.D., Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and University Reader in Classical Archæology, Professor of Archæology in the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, Greece, Member of the Imperial Archæological Institutes of Berlin, Rome, and Athens, &c., was born in New York, on March 30, 1856, and is the son of Henry Waldstein, merchant of that city. Educated at first at New York, then for three years, from 1867 to 1870, travelling in Europe with tutors and at schools in Switzerland and Germany, he in 1870 prepared for Columbia University, New York, at the school of Mr. Leggett in that city. He entered the University there at the early age of 15. He went in the autumn of 1873 to the University of Heidelberg, where he took Ph.D. in Philosophy, Archæology, and Political Science in 1875, and thence went to study at Leipzig. In 1876 he came over to study at the British Museum, and since then has remained in England. In 1878 he gave a course of lectures on Greek Art in the British Museum, under the patronage of King's College, London, published a work on the "Balance of Emotion and Intellect," and contributed articles to the Nineteenth Century. Early in 1880 he was invited to give a course of lectures on Greek Art before the University of Cambridge; was made a Lecturer there, and in 1883 appointed to the newly-created Chair of Classical Archæology, which he still holds. In the same year he succeeded Prof. Sidney Colvin as Director of the Fitz William Museum, a post he held for six years, until he gave it up in order to take the Directorship of the American Archæological School at Athens; the University of Cambridge granting him leave of absence during the winter months. He resigned the Directorship of the American School of Athens in 1892, since then living at Cambridge, and only spending the holidays in Greece in order to complete the important excavations of that School of which he is still a Professor. He is one of the leading excavators of the day, having directed extensive excavations in Greece at the Ancient Platæa, Eretria, where he has found the supposed tomb of Aristotle, and at the Argive Heraeum. These works are still carried on, having been directed by him for the last three years. He has been made, in recognition of his work, honorary member of several foreign learned bodies, and Knight Commander of the Hellenic Order of the Redeemer. Besides "The Balance of Emotion and Intellect," published in London in 1878, he has written "Essays on the Art of Phidias," Cambridge, 1885; "Catalogue of Casts in the Museum of Classical Archæology, London, 1889; "Excavations at the Hereion of Argos," London, 1892; "The Work of John Ruskin, &c.," London, 1894. Most of these have appeared in American editions. He has published about thirty articles and memoirs in the special Archæological Journals of England, America, and the Continent, and has been a frequent contributor to the Nineteenth Century, Harper's, and the Century Magazine.

WALES (Prince of), H.R.H. Albert Edward, K.G., K.P., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., P.C., heir-apparent to the British Crown, eldest son of Her Majesty and the late Prince Consort, born at Buckingham Palace, Nov. 9, 1841, received his early education under the Rev. Henry M. Birch, rector of Prestwich, Mr. Gibbs, barrister-at-law, the Rev. C. F. Tarver, and Mr. H. W. Fisher, and having studied for a session at Edinburgh, entered Christ Church, Oxford, where he attended the public lectures for a year, and afterwards resided for three or four terms at Cambridge for the same purpose. His Royal Highness spent most of the summer of 1860 in a visit to the United States and Canada, where he was most enthusiastically received, was in 1858 gazetted to a colonelcy in the army, and joined the camp at the Curragh in June, 1861. Accompanied by Dean Stanley, the Prince travelled in the East, and visited Jerusalem in 1862. His Royal Highness is a K.G., a Field Marshal and Colonel-in-Chief of the Household Cavalry Brigade, Colonel of the 10th Hussars, and has the titles of Duke of Cornwall (by which he took his seat in the House of Lords in Feb., 1863, in the Peerage of England); Duke of Rothesay, Baron of Renfrew, and Lord of the Isles, in Scotland; and Earl of Dublin and Carrick, in Ireland; and enjoys the patronage of twenty-nine livings, chiefly as owner of the Duchy of Cornwall. His Royal Highness married, March 10, 1863, the Princess Alexandra of Denmark, by whom he has issue. (See memoir of H.R.H. the Princess of Wales.) The Prince of Wales became President of St. Bartholomew's Hospital in April, 1867. Towards the close of the year 1871 His Royal Highness was attacked with typhoid fever, and for some weeks his life was despaired of; but he slowly recovered, and was able to take part in the memorable "Thanksgiving Service" in St. Paul's Cathedral, Feb. 27, 1872. He was elected Grand Master of the Freemasons in England in succession to the Marquis of Ripon in 1874, and on April 8, 1875, was admitted to the office at a Lodge held in the Albert Hall, South Kensington. On May 5, 1875, he was installed at the Freemasons' Hall as First Principal of the Royal Arch Freemasons. In 1875-76 His Royal Highness visited India. The great interest he took in the Paris Exhibition of 1878 contributed in no slight degree to render it a success. His Royal Highness attended the Court festivities held at Berlin in March, 1883, to celebrate the "Silver Wedding" of the Crown Prince with the Princess Royal of England. On this occasion he was nominated by the Emperor as a Field-Marshal in the German Army. In 1885 the Prince, in company with the Princess, made a tour through Ireland. In 1889 the Prince, with the Princess and their sons, visited the Paris Exhibition; and in Oct. of the same year he was present at the wedding of the Duke of Sparta at Athens. In May, 1891, His Royal Highness was made a grandfather by the birth of the Duchess of Fife's daughter. He was appointed a member of the Poor Law Commission in 1893, and attended its sittings with great assiduity. In the summer of this year and in 1894 the Prince raced his yacht the "Britannia" in most of the chief regattas round the coast, and secured many victories. He was present, in April, 1894, at the wedding of Princess Victoria Melita, at Coburg, and, with the Princess of Wales, attended the marriage of the late Tzar's daughter at St. Petersburg. In July, 1894, as in the Jubilee year, the Prince and Princess were present at the Welsh Eisteddfodd, on which occasion the Princess was admitted a Bard. During the autumn of 1894 the Prince, the Princess, and the Duke of York hastened to join the Russian Imperial family at the time of the death of the late Tsar, and the Prince, by his courteous attention to Russian etiquette and constant attendance at the prolonged funeral ceremonies, won the affection of the Russians to a marked degree. His Royal Highness has taken a great personal interest in all the Exhibitions recently held at South Kensington, and was Executive President of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, opened by the Queen in May, 1886. He also originated the Royal College of Music, and was the chief mover in the Jubilee scheme of an "Imperial Institute," which after some opposition he at last succeeded in establishing in 1893. In 1888 the Prince and Princess celebrated their silver wedding.

WALES, Her Royal Highness Alexandra Caroline Marie Charlotte Louise Julie, the Princess of, is the daughter of Christian IX., King of Denmark, and was born at Copenhagen, Dec. 1, 1844, and was married at Windsor, on March 10, 1863, to His Royal Highness Albert Edward Prince of Wales, and has had five children: Abert Victor Christian Edward, Duke of Clarence and Avondale, born at Frogmore Lodge, near Windsor, Jan. 8, 1864, died Jan., 1892; George Frederick Ernest Albert, born at Marlborough House, June 3, 1865, married Princess Mary of Teck, July, 1893; Louise Victoria Alexandra Dagmar (Duchess of Fife), born at Marlborough House, Feb. 20, 1867; Victoria Alexander Olga Marie, born at Marlborough House, July 6, 1868; Maud Charlotte Marie Victoria, born at Marlborough House, Nov. 26, 1869. Her Royal Highness, who during the last year or two has been kept much out of society by ill-health, was able to proceed to Russia at the time of the death of Alexander III., and to make a prolonged stay with her sister the Tsarina, with whom she attended the funeral ceremonies at St. Petersburg.

WALFORD, Mrs. Lucy Bethia, novelist, is the daughter of the second son of Sir James Colquhoun and Luss, tenth baronet of the name, and brother of the unfortunate Sir James who was drowned in Loch Lomond, within sight of his own door, some years ago. Her mother was the daughter of E. Fuller-Maitland, Esq., of Stanstead, Essex, and this lady—as is little known—was the writer of the principal portion of those verses, now in every hymn-book, and usually attributed to H. Kirke White,

> Oft in danger, oft in woe,
> Onward Christians, onward go.

Of these Kirke White wrote only the first six lines, and the poem was finished by Miss Frances Fuller-Maitland, then only in her sixteenth year. From both parents Mrs. Walford thus inherits literary tastes, as her father's comprehensive sporting work, "The Moor and the Loch," lately gone into its seventh edition, is considered a classic among lovers of the rod and the gun. It was not until four years after her marriage, in 1869, to Mr. Alfred Saunders Walford, that Mrs. Walford published "Mr. Smith," her first serious attempt. It was sent anonymously to Mr. John Blackwood, and by him was accepted and published at once. Mr. Blackwood, on the success of "Mr. Smith," urged Mrs. Walford to write for the "Maga" (Blackwood's Magazine), and the result was a series of short tales, beginning with "Nan: a Summer Scene," which has lately been brought out under this heading in book form. They comprehended "Bee or Beatrix;" "Lady Adelaide;" "Fashion and Fancy;" "Eleanor: a Tale of Non-Performers;" and "Mattie: the History of an Evening;" all which made their first appearance in Blackwood. "Pauline," Mrs. Walford's first Blackwood serial novel, ran its course in 1877; "Cousins," her third novel, was published by the same firm in 1879. "Troublesome Daughters" followed in 1880; "The Baby's Grandmother" was the Blackwood serial in 1885; and "A Stiff-necked Generation" completed its course in the same pages in 1888

Alongside of these, her larger works, Mrs. Walford wrote a series of biographical essays for Blackwood, which were afterwards published under the title of "Four Biographies from Blackwood;" "Dick Netherby," a one-volume tale of humble Scottish life, for Good Words, in 1881; and "Dinah's Son," on the same lines, for Life and Work, also in 1881; "The History of a Week" formed the Christmas number of the Graphic in 1885; and all these have also been re-published in book form. Other novelettes are "A Mere Child," "The Havoc of a Smile," "A Sage of Sixteen," "A Pinch of Experience," "The One Good Guest," and two collections of short magazine stories. In 1891 Mrs. Walford's novel, "The Mischief of Monica," formed the serial for the year in Longman's Magazine, and was re-published by the same firm, who have brought out several succeeding editions. Messrs. Longman also published in the autumn of 1892 "Twelve English Authoresses," being a collection of biographical essays written for Far and Near, an American monthly, and contemporary with this appeared a small volume of "Stories for Grown-up Children," illustrated by T. Pym. In 1894 "The Matchmaker" ran as a serial for the year in Longman's Magazine. Most of Mrs. Walford's tales have been translated into other languages.

WALKER, Frederick William, High Master of St. Paul's School, only son of Mr. Thomas Walker, of Tullamore, was born in London, July 7, 1830, and educated at Rugby, under Dr. Tait. He was Scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, 1849 (first-class in Classics, and second-class in Mathematics, Moderations, 1852; first-class in Classics, and second-class in Mathematics, Final Examination, 1853), Boden Sanscrit Scholar, Vinerian Law Scholar, and Tancred Law Scholar, 1854; and Fellow and Tutor of Corpus Christi College. He was called to the Bar, Lincoln's Inn, 1857; and was appointed High Master of Manchester Grammar School, 1859; Public Examiner at Oxford, 1868; and High Master of St. Paul's School, London, 1877. Under Mr. Walker's mastership the school has been removed from St. Paul's Churchyard to West Kensington.

WALKER, John James, M.A., F.R.S., President of the London Mathematical Society (Nov., 1888-90), Member of the Physical Society, was born Oct. 2, 1825, at Kennington, Surrey, and is the son of John Walker, B.A., by Ann, sister of Ed. Fricker, Surgeon, Cheltenham. He was educated at London High and Plymouth New Grammar Schools, of which his father became Head Master vice Rev. L. Macauley (appointed to Repton), and Trinity College, Dublin (with which he had an hereditary connection, his great-grandfather, Matthias Walker, Clerk, his grandfather, John Walker, a Fellow, and his father, having been graduates of Dublin University), first-class Mathematics and Logic at previous Exam., 1845; Sen. Mod. Mathematics and Physics Degree Exam., 1849; second Bishop Law's Prizeman, 1850; M.A., 1857. From 1853 to 1862 he was Private Tutor to the present Lord Ardilaun, Captain B. L. Guinness, and Lord Iveagh; 1865-1888, Afternoon Lecturer in Applied Mathematics and Physics, University College School; and 1868-1882, Vice-Principal University Hall, London; 1871-1883, Examiner in Mathematics and Natural Philosophy for Hibbert Trust Scholarships. He is the author of papers and reviews in the Philosophical Magazine ("Iris seen in Water," 1853, reprinted in Annales de Chim. et de Physique, tome XXXIX), Cambridge and Dublin, and Quarterly Journals of Mathematics, Messenger of Mathematics, London Mathematical Society Proceedings, British Association Reports, 1859-63; Proceedings of the Royal Society; Philosophical Transactions; and Nature. Since 1888 Mr. Walker has devoted himself entirely to research in Pure and Applied Mathematics. In 1842, when residing in Somersetshire, he was fortunate in discovering, raising, and cleaning a fine specimen of Ichthyosaurus Tenuirostris, from the lias near Long Sutton, on the property of the then Earl of Burlington, late 7th Duke of Devonshire, a careful drawing of which was accepted by the late Sir R. Owen as an illustration to his British Fossil Reptiles.

WALKER, J. T., General, R.E., C.B., F.R.S., LL.D., was born on Dec. 1, 1826, and is the son of John Walker, Esq., Madras Civil Service. He entered the H.E.I.C. Military Academy at Addiscombe in 1843, and obtained a commission in the Bombay (now Royal) Engineers. He served at the siege of Mooltan, and in the battle of Goojerat, and the advance to Peshawur. Immediately after the annexation of the Punjab to British territory he made a survey of the Trans-Indus frontier, from Peshawur down to Dera Ishmael Khan. He served against the mutineers in 1857, and at the siege of Delhi, and was appointed an assistant in the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India in 1853, and became Superintendent of the Survey in 1861; and Surveyor-General in 1878. He supervised the publication of nine quarto volumes of the Account of the Operations of the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India, and the annual reports of the survey for 22 years, and retired in 1884. General Walker has contributed various papers to the Journals of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and to the Royal Geographical Society, and the articles "Oxus," "Pontoons," "Surveying," and "Tibet," to the ninth edition the Encyclopædia Britannica.

WALKINGTON, Miss Letitia Alice, M.A., LL.D., was born in Belfast, but has lived nearly all her life in Strandtown, about two and a half miles out of Belfast. Her father, Mr. T. R. Walkington, comes of a family that has been well known for several generations in Antrim and Down. In 1695 Edward Walkington was consecrated Bishop of Down and Connor. Her mother is the daughter of the late Prussian Consul, G. von Heyn. Miss Walkington was educated at home by a governess, Miss Bessel, until sixteen, and then went to a boarding-school, first in England and then in Paris. She did not, however, begin to study seriously until more than a year after she had left school. She matriculated in 1882 in the Royal University of Dublin. After doing so, she studied at the Methodist and Queen's Colleges, Belfast, and with a barrister, Mr. Thos. Harrison, and took her B.A. degree in 1885, and M.A. in 1886, taking the Logic, Metaphysic, and Political Economy Honour Group for both degrees. In 1888 she took the LL.B., and in 1889 the LL.D. degree. Miss Walkington was the first lady who took the last three degrees. Several ladies have since taken the M.A., but only one, Miss F. Gray, has taken the law degrees. Miss Gray, Miss Hamilton, B.A., and Miss Walkington, have organised university classes to prepare young ladies for the Intermediate and R.U.I. examinations, hoping thereby to supply a want, as there is nothing of the kind for girls in Belfast, except in close connection with the principal schools. Their success, as far as numbers are concerned, testifies that the want was really experienced. In 1889 Miss Walkington was invited to take part in the "Congrès International des Œuvres et Institutions Féminines," in connection with the Paris Exhibition.

WALKLEY, Arthur Bingham, son of the late Mr. A. H. Walkley, of Bristol, was born there on Dec. 17, 1855. He was educated at Warminster Grammar School, and, after matriculating at Oxford as Exhibitioner of Balliol College in 1873, was elected mathematical scholar of Corpus Christi, graduating in honours in 1877, in which year he was appointed, after an open competitive examination, to a clerkship in the Department of the Secretary to the Post Office. Under the pseudonym of "Spectator" he became dramatic critic of the Star on the foundation of that journal, and subsequently of the Speaker, and is a regular contributor to the literary columns of other newspapers and reviews. He is the author of a collection of theatrical essays entitled "Playhouse Impressions," 1892.

WALLACE, Alfred Russel, D.C.L., F.R.S., &c., born at Usk, Monmouthshire, Jan. 8, 1823, was educated at the Grammar School, Hertford, and articled with an elder brother as land surveyor and architect, but gave up that profession in order to travel and study nature. In 1848 he visited the Amazon with Mr. Bates. Returning in 1852, he published his "Travels on the Amazon and Rio Negro," and a small volume on "Palm Trees of the Amazon and their Uses." In 1854 he visited the Malay Islands, where he remained eight years. He has since published "The Malay Archipelago," 2 vols., 2nd edit., 1869, and a volume of essays entitled "Contributions to the Theory of Natural Selection," 1870, as well as a large number of papers in the publications of the Linnæan, Zoological, Ethnological, Anthropological and Entomological Societies. In 1868 he was awarded the Royal Medal of the Royal Society, and in 1870 the Gold Medal of the Société de Géographie of Paris. In 1875 he printed a small volume "On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism." His elaborate work, in two volumes, on "The Geographical Distribution of Animals" was published in 1876, in which year he was President of the Biological Section at the meeting of the British Association at Glasgow. In 1878 he published a volume on "Tropical Nature," containing his latest views on the colours of natural objects, on sexual selection, the geographical distribution of animals and plants, and allied topics. In 1880 he published another important work, "Island Life," in which the principles established in the "Geographical Distribution of Animals," are applied to the faunas and floras of the chief islands of the globe, &c. Since then Mr. Wallace has turned his attention to social and political problems, and in 1882 published a volume on "Land Nationalisation, its Necessity and its Aims," in which he gives a sketch of the whole subject of land-tenure; and proposes a practical scheme of occupying ownership under the State in order to remedy the numerous evils of the present system which he has pointed out. To advocate this scheme a Land Nationalisation Society has been formed, of which Mr. Wallace is president. He has also put forth a scheme for the Nationalisation of the Church of England. In 1881 he was awarded a Civil List pension of £200 a year in recognition of the amount and value of his scientific work. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by the University of Dublin in 1882, and that of D.C.L. by the University of Oxford in 1889. The first Darwin Medal of the Royal Society was awarded to him in 1890; he also received the Founder's Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society in 1892, and the Gold Medal of the Linnæan Society in the same year. Mr. Wallace is an opponent of compulsory vaccination, and in 1885 published his "Forty-five Years of Registration Statistics," proving vaccination to be both useless and dangerous. In the latter part of the same year he brought out a small volume entitled "Bad Times: an Essay on the Present Depression of Trade." The last two works are illustrated by means of diagrams and tables. He has also written many pamphlets, articles, and letters to the daily press on the land and other social questions. New editions of his earlier works have recently appeared; and in 1893 he contributed a volume on "Australia and New Zealand" to the new issue of Stanford's "Compendium of Geography and Travel."

WALLACE, Robert, D.D., M.P., was born in the parish of St. Andrews, Fifeshire, June 24, 1831, and educated at Geddes Institution, Culross, the High School, Edinburgh, and the Universities of St. Andrews and Edinburgh, graduating M.A. in the former in 1853. He entered the Church, and became successively Minister of Newton-upon-Ayr, in Dec., 1857; Minister of Trinity College Church, Edinburgh, in Dec., 1860; Examiner in Philosophy, in the University of St. Andrews, in April, 1866; Minister of Old Greyfriars, Edinburgh, in Dec., 1868; D.D. of the University of Glasgow in 1869; and Professor of Church History in the University of Edinburgh, in Dec., 1872. He quitted the clerical profession in Aug., 1876, when he became editor of the Scotsman in succession to the late Dr. Russel. He resigned the editorship in Nov., 1880, and was called to the Bar in Nov., 1883. After the dissolution of 1886 he opposed Mr. Goschen for East Edinburgh, and was elected as a Gladstone Liberal by a large majority. He was re-elected in 1892. In 1893 he was appointed editor of the London Scotsman, which had only a short-lived existence.

WALLER, Mrs. Mary Lemon, artist, the wife of Mr. S. E. Waller, the artist, was born at Bideford in Devonshire, and is the daughter of the Rev. Hugh Fowler, M.A. Any talent she at first exhibited appeared to lie rather in the direction of literature and music than of art. Her first efforts were with the pen, and writing some quaint little stories she was inspired with the desire to illustrate them. These juvenile efforts were succeeded by attempts with the pencil at portraiture of her family and friends, which appeared to indicate so unusual an ability that the young lady was sent to the School of Art at Gloucester, where she underwent a course of freehand drawing and study from the antique under Mr. J. Kemp. A careful drawing of the Discobolus secured, in 1871, admission to the Royal Academy Schools, where she remained studying hard for two or three years. Her introduction to artistic life as an exhibitor also took place in 1871, as she in that year painted, and got accepted at the Dudley Gallery, a study called "An Unexpected Meeting," a child curiously regarding a snail, in a garden walk. This was a decided success, but it was not until some years later that Mrs. Waller appeared as an exhibitor at the Royal Academy, with a charming portrait of her little two years old son. Since then she has been a pretty regular contributor to the parent institution. Her chief works have been a head portrait of Lord Armstrong in the Academy, 1883, and a full-length of his Lordship, presented to the town of Newcastle in the same year, a work which was not publicly exhibited. In 1884 a portrait of Mildred, daughter of Colonel Tryon, was Mrs. Waller's Academy contribution, and the following year her "Little Snow-white," a fair-haired, blue-eyed child, sitting in a wood, fairly fascinated the public, and greatly added to the artist's reputation. Other works followed in due succession. "The Secret of the Sea" and "Rita, Daughter of Wilberforce Bryant, Esq.," 1886; "Dorothy, Daughter of J. G. Leeming, Esq.," 1887; "Leila," 1888, and in the same year "Eve," a child with an apple, exhibited at the Institute, Piccadilly, and reproduced in the Christmas number of the Illustrated London News; "Perdita," a portrait, in 1889, and in the Grosvenor Gallery, "Girl Fencing;" whilst in the Academy (1890) she had "Gladys, Daughter of Major Lutley Jordan," a work rich in the qualities of the art of portraiture. Other works of hers are "Mrs. Montague," in the Grosvenor Gallery, 1888, and "The Rev. Alfred Gatty, D.D.," Sub-Dean of York, and, in the Academy of 1893, a portrait of the Countess Fitzwilliam.

WALLHOFEN, Madame, née Pauline Lucca, a celebrated singer, born of Jewish parents in Vienna, in 1842. When still a child her beautiful voice attracted attention and procured for her a musical training by Uschmann and Lévy. She made her debut at Olmütz in 1859; and in 1860 sang at Prague in the opera of the "Huguenots," and in "Norma." Her genius elicited the admiration of the great composer, Meyerbeer, who, in 1861, procured for her an engagement in Berlin. In 1863 she appeared at Covent Garden for the first time; and she soon made herself a name in all the European capitals. In Berlin she received the appointment of Court singer; but resigned it in 1872, and went for a two years' tour through the United States. Since her return she has resided chiefly in her native city, Vienna. She married, in 1865, the Baron von Rohden, from whom she was divorced; and married Herr von Wallhofen.

WALLIS, Henry, member of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours, was born in London, Feb. 21, 1830, and studied in the Art School of Gleyre, Paris, and also at Rome and Venice. His first picture (in oil colour) was exhibited at the British Institution, 1851. He exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1854, and succeeding years, pictures in oil representing incidents in the lives of celebrated personages, subjects from the poets, landscapes, and scenes of Venetian life of the period of the fifteenth century. His most celebrated work was "The Death of Chatterton." He joined the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours in 1879, the pictures exhibited at the gallery of the society being mainly scenes from "The Merchant of Venice," and Italian and Oriental subjects. He has contributed papers to artistic and other journals on the history of painting and on ceramic art, also reviews of books on art.

WALLON, Henri Alexandre, was born at Valenciennes, Dec. 23, 1812; was member of the Faculty of Letters, Paris, in 1840, and successor to M. Guizot at the Sorbonne, in 1850, where he lectured on history and geography. In 1860 he gained the Gobert Prize of the French Academy for his work on Joan of Arc. He was a member of the National Assembly in 1849, but resigned in 1850. After the fall of the Empire he was again returned, as a moderate Conservative, by the department of the Nord, but he joined the Lavergne group on the question of the Constitutional Laws. To his moderation and vigour was due the definite establishment of the Republic,—indeed, he is still commonly called Father of the Republic —and accordingly M. Buffet, on forming his administration in March, 1875, nominated him Minister of Public Instruction. It was he who proposed the clauses which first gave constitutional shape to the Republic. M. Wallon is a member of the Institute, and Secrétaire perpétuel de l'Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres. He was a candidate for the seat in the French Academy that had been vacated by M. Claude Bernard, but M. Renan defeated him by 19 to 15 (June 13, 1878). He was promoted to be a Commander of the Legion of Honour in 1886. M. Wallon is a sound historian. His chief works are "Richard II.," "Histoire de l'Esclavage dans l'Antiquité" (3 vols.); "Jeanne d'Arc;" "St. Louis et son Temps" (2 vols.); "De l'Autorité de l'Evangile" (1 vol.); "Le Tribunal Révolutionnaire de Paris" (6 vols.), 1886; "La Révolution du 31 Mai et le Fédéralisme en 1793" (2 vols.); "Les Représentants du Peuple en Mission et la Justice Révolutionnaire dans les Départements en l'an II." (5 vols., 1889-90).

WALPOLE, Spencer, LL.D., late Lieut.-Governor of the Isle of Man, eldest son of the Rt. Hon. S. H. Walpole, and his wife, Isabella, daughter of the Rt. Hon. Spencer Perceval, was born Feb. 6, 1839, and educated at Eton. He entered the War Office in 1858, and has been private Secretary to the Rt. Hon. T. Sotheron Estcourt, and to his father. He was made one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Fisheries in 1867, and was appointed Lieut.-Governor of the Isle of Man in 1882. He held that position till 1893, when he was made Secretary to the Post Office. He received an honorary LL.D. degree from the University of Edinburgh in 1890. He is the author of the "Life of the Rt. Hon. Spencer Perceval," 1873; "The Electorate and the Legislature," 1881; "Foreign Relations," 1882; "A History of England from the Conclusion of the Great War in 1815," vols. 1 and 2 (1878), vol. 3 (1880), vols. 4 and 5 (1886); the "Life of Lord John Russell" (1889); and "The Land of Home Rule" (1893); and he has been a contributor to periodical literature. Mr. Walpole married, in 1867, Marion, the youngest daughter of Sir John Digby Murray, Bart.

WALPOLE, The Right Hon. Spencer Horatio, born in 1806, was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he obtained the first prize for English declamation and another for the best essay on the character and conduct of William III. Having been called to the Bar in 1831, by the Society of Lincoln's Inn, of which he is a Bencher, he obtained a large practice in the Courts of Chancery, and became a Q.C. in 1846. He was returned in the Conservative interest for Midhurst in Jan., 1846, and represented that borough till Feb., 1856, when he was elected one of the members for the University of Cambridge. He distinguished himself in the debate which took place in 1849 on the Navigation Laws, and in the discussions on the Ecclesiastical Titles Bill in 1851. On the accession of Lord Derby to office in 1852, Mr. Walpole sacrificed his practice at the Chancery Bar to accept the post of Secretary of State for the Home Department, and in that capacity carried through Parliament the measure for embodying the militia. After leaving office Mr. Walpole became Chairman of the Great Western Railway. He held the seals of the Home Office in Lord Derby's second administration in 1858, but resigned in March, 1859, owing to a difference in opinion with his colleagues with regard to the Reform Bill. He was appointed Secretary of State for the Home Department in Lord Derby's third administration in 1866, and resigned May 9, 1867, retaining a seat in the Cabinet without office. He retired with his colleagues in 1868. Mr. Walpole resigned his seat for the University of Cambridge in Nov., 1882.

WALSH, The Right Rev. William Pakenham, D.D., Bishop of Ossory, Ferns and Leighlin, was born at Mote Park, county of Roscommon, Ireland, May 4, 1820, and is the son of Thomas Walsh, and Mary Pakenham Walsh. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin; was Vice-Chancellor's Prizeman; Biblical Greek Prize; Divinity Prizeman; Theological Society's Gold Medallist of Dublin University; B.A., 1841; M.A., 1853; B.D. and D.D., stip. con., 1873; ordained Deacon, 1843; Priest, 1844; Curate of Ovoca, 1843; of Rathdrum, 1845; Chaplain of Sandford, 1856; Donellan Lecturer, T.C.D., 1861; Canon of Christ Church, Dublin, 1872; Dean of Cashel, 1873; and elected Bishop of Ossory, 1878. The following is a list of his published works:—"Donellan Lectures," 1861, T.C.D.; "The Moabite Stone," 1874; "The Forty Days of the Bible," 1874; "The Angel of the Lord," and "Daily Readings for Holy Seasons," 1876; "Ancient Monuments and Holy Writ," 1878; "Heroes of the Mission Field," 1879; "The Decalogue of Charity," 1882; "Echoes of Bible History," 1886; "The Voices of the Psalms," 1891. He married, in 1861, Clara, daughter of Samuel Ridley, Esq., Muswell Hill, London; secondly, in 1879, Annie Frances, daughter of Rev. J. W. Hackett, A.M., Incumbent of St. James's, Bray, co. Dublin.

WALSH, The Most Rev. Dr. William J., Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, and Primate of Ireland, was born in Dublin in 1841, and was educated at St. Laurence O'Toole's Seminary in that city, and afterwards at the Catholic University of Ireland, under the rectorship of Dr. Newman, and at Maynooth. He completed his academic course in 1864, but being too young to be ordained, he passed into the Dunboyne Establishment, where he spent three years in special ecclesiastical studies. During that period he became Assistant-Librarian at Maynooth College, and in 1867 he was appointed Professor of Theology. In 1878 he became Vice-President of the College, and on the death of Dr. Russell, in 1880, Dr. Walsh was unanimously chosen President by the Irish bishops. Acting for the bishops as trustees of the College, he gave evidence before the "Bessborough" Commission of 1869-70, explaining the refusal of the bishops, as tenants of the Duke of Leinster, to sign the "Leinster Lease," a form of agreement under which it was sought to induce tenants to "contract themselves out" of the protection of the Land Act of 1881. By this evidence on the transaction, which had resulted in the eviction of the bishops by the Duke of Leinster, Dr. Walsh exercised no little influence in the framing of the Land Act of 1881. In 1883, through his exertions, a Commission was appointed to inquire into the working of the Queen's Colleges of Ireland. For some time he was a Senator of the Royal University of Ireland, a position which he resigned in protest against the examination arrangements of that body. He became a Member of the Chapter of Dublin on the accession of Cardinal MacCabe to the archiepiscopal throne. On the death of that prelate in Feb. 1885, Dr. Walsh was elected Vicar Capitular; and in the June of the same year he was appointed to the See of Dublin. Since his appointment as Archbishop he has taken an active interest in the leading questions of the day in Ireland. He has warmly advocated an amicable settlement of the Land Question through the establishment of some system of arbitration for the settlement of disputes between landlords and tenants. He was a witness before the Parnell Special Commission of 1888-89, in connection with which he also had a prominent part in the exposure of the forger, Richard Pigott. But the principal subject of Dr. Walsh's public action, outside the strictly religious sphere, has been the Irish education question: he has made many suggestions for its settlement, the keynote of his numerous letters and addresses on the subject being a demand for equality between Roman Catholics and Protestants in Ireland in the matter of educational endowments and privileges. During the last few years he has taken an active part in the settlement of trade disputes and strikes in Dublin: he opportunely intervened in the great strike on the Great Southern and Western Railway in 1890, and secured its amicable settlement, a public service for which he has received the honorary freedom of the city of Cork. His interest in the cause of temperance is warm and practical; in addition to a widespread temperance organisation in the diocese of Dublin, there has been created under his guidance a similar organisation throughout all the dioceses of his archiepiscopal province. Dr. Walsh has contributed many articles to the periodical press, especially to the Contemporary Review, the Dublin Review, and the Irish Ecclesiastical Record. He is also the author of several works on subjects of general public interest in Ireland, as well as on important branches of theological and scriptural science. Of his published works the principal are an ethical treatise on "Human Acts;" a "Harmony of the Gospel Narrative of the Passion;" "The Liturgical Music of the Office and Mass of the Dead;" a "Grammar of Gregorian Music;" a "Plain Exposition of the Land Act of 1881;" a volume of "Addresses" on various subjects of general interest; "Addresses on the Irish University Question;" and his most recently published work, a "Statement of the Chief Grievances of the Catholics of Ireland in the Matter of Education, Primary, Intermediate, and University."

WALSHAM, Sir John, Bart., late British Minister at Pekin, born at Cheltenham in 1830, is the eldest son of Sir John James Walsham. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A., and was for some time employed in the Audit Office, but was appointed to a clerkship in the Foreign Office in 1854. He was made Acting Consul in Mexico in 1859, Secretary of Legation in 1861, and Chargé d'Affaires in 1863. In 1866 he was transferred as Second Secretary to Madrid; was appointed to the Hague in 1870, and promoted to be Secretary of Legation in Pekin, Oct. 1873, but did not proceed. From 1875 to 1878 he was Acting Chargé d'Affaires in Madrid, and then went to Berlin as Secretary of Embassy. In 1883 he was transferred to Paris, and acted as Minister Plenipotentiary during the absence of the ambassador. From Nov. 1885, to April, 1892, he was Envoy to China, and also to the King of Corea, but in the latter year was transferred to Bucharest. C.M.G., Feb., 1895.

WANKLYN, James Alfred, M.R.C.S., London, 1856, chemist, was born at Ashton-under-Lyne, in the year 1834. He studied chemistry under Bunsen at Heidelberg, and became Demonstrator of Chemistry in the University of Edinburgh in 1859, was Professor of Chemistry at the London Institution from 1863 to 1870, and Lecturer on Chemistry and Physics at St. George's Hospital from 1877 to 1880. He has held office as Public Analyst for the county of Buckingham, and for the boroughs of Buckingham, Peterborough, Shrewsbury, and High Wycombe. In the year 1856, whilst he was assistant to Dr. Frankland, he turned his attention to the organo-metallic bodies, and, treading in the footsteps of that eminent chemist, produced cadmium-ethyl by the well-known method of acting upon iodide of ethyl by the metal. Next year he devised an original and entirely new method of obtaining the organo-metallic bodies, and produced first sodium-ethyl, and continuing the work during the next few years, formed potassium-ethyl, lithium-ethyl, calcium-ethyl, and strontium-ethyl. These substances are the most combustible known to chemists, and possess the unique property of decomposing carbonic acid at ordinary temperatures, and by their action on carbonic acid yield propionic acid, as was shown in 1858 when Professor Wanklyn made propionic acid, in that manner giving the first example of the artificial production of an organic substance directly from carbonic acid. In 1861, in conjunction with Dr. Lyon Playfair, he communicated to the Royal Society of Edinburgh a paper "On a Mode of taking the Density of Vapours of Volatile Liquids at Temperatures below the Boiling Point." Subsequently he pursued, conjointly with Dr. Emil Erlenmeyer, a series of researches which, besides settling the formula of mannite and the relation of the sugar group to the alcoholic series, afforded one of the earliest complete studies of isomerism among the alcohols. In 1867, he prepared propione, by the action of carbonic oxide on sodium-eythl, and together with the late Mr. E. T. Chapman and Mr. Miles H. Smith, invented the well-known Ammonia process of Water Analysis. Some years later, conjointly with Mr. W. J. Cooper, he brought out the moist combustion process. In 1871 he conducted for the Government an investigation into the quality of the milk supplied to the London workhouses. Conjointly with Mr. W. J. Cooper, he made periodical analyses of the London Water Supply, which were regularly published by the late Government's Water Examiner in his official returns. Mr. Wanklyn is the author of five text-books for Chemists and Medical Officers of Health, viz.: a "Treatise on Water Analysis;" a "Treatise on Milk Analysis," 1873; a "Treatise on Tea, Coffee, and Cocoa," 1874; "Bread Analysis," 1881; and "Air Analysis," 1890, the two last-named books being the joint production of Mr. W. J. Cooper and himself. He is also the author of "The Gas Engineer's Chemical Manual," 1886. In 1869 he was elected a corresponding member of the Royal Bavarian Academy of Sciences. He was also elected an honorary member of the University of Edinburgh Chemical Society; but he belongs to none of the English scientific societies.

WARD, Adolphus William, LL.D., Litt.D., born at Hampstead, Dec. 2, 1837, was educated in Germany (where his father held consular and diplomatic appointments), and at Bury St. Edmunds Grammar School. In 1854, he entered at Peterhouse, Cambridge, of which college he became a Fellow in 1860, having graduated in the Classical Tripos of the previous year. In 1866 he was appointed Professor of History and English Literature at Owens College, Manchester. He held various examinerships in the Universities of Cambridge and London, and was, in 1879, created an hon. LL.D. of Glasgow, and in 1883 a Litt.D. of Cambridge. He took an active part in the movement for the foundation of the Victoria University, Manchester, 1889; and afterwards successively held, in the new University, the offices of Chairman of the General Board of Studies, and of Vice-Chancellor. In December, 1888, he was appointed Principal of Owens College. Dr. Ward is the English translator of Curtius' "History of Greece," 5 vols., 1868-73; and author of the following works: "A History of English Dramatic Literature to the Death of Queen Anne," 2 vols., 1875; "The House of Austria in the Thirty Years' War," 1869; "Chaucer," 1880; and "Dickens," 1882, in Morley's "English Men of Letters" series. He edited the Globe edition of "Pope's Poetical Works," 1869; the Clarendon Press edition of Marlowe's "Doctor Faustus" and Greene's "Friar Bacon," 1878; second edition, 1887; third edition, 1892; the Chetham Society's edition of Byron's Poems, vol. i., 1894; and has contributed to the Dictionary of National Biography, the Encyclopædia Britannica, the Quarterly, Edinburgh, and English Historical Reviews, Herbst's Encyclopædie der neueren Geschichte, the Saturday Review, the Manchester Guardian, and other journals. He is an Hon. Fellow of Peterhouse, and Hon. Member of the German Shakespeare Society. In 1879 he married his cousin, Adelaide Laura Lancaster.

WARD, Mrs. Herbert D., nee Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, American writer, was born at Boston, Massachusetts, Aug. 31, 1844. Most of her life has been devoted to benevolent work, to the advancement of women, and to temperance and kindred topics. In 1876 she delivered a course of lectures before the students of Boston University. She began to write for the press at the age of thirteen, and her contributions to periodicals during the past twenty-five years have been very numerous. In addition to these she has published: "Ellen's Idol," 1864; "Up Hill," 1865; "The Tiny Series," 4 vols., 1866-69; "The Gypsy Series," 4 vols., 1866-69; "Mercy Gliddon's Work," 1866; "I Don't Know How," 1867; "The Gates Ajar," 1868; "Men, Women and Ghosts," 1869; "Hedged In," 1870; "The Silent Partner," 1870; "The Trotty Book," 1870; "Trotty's Wedding Tour," 1873; "What to Wear," 1873; "Poetic Studies," poems, 1875; "The Story of Avis," 1877; "My Cousin and I," 1879; "Old Maid's Paradise," 1879; "Sealed Orders," 1879; "Friends: a Duet," 1881; "Beyond the Gates," 1883; "Dr. Zay," 1884; "Burglars in Paradise," 1886; "The Madonna of the Tubs," 1886; "The Gates Between," 1887; "Jack the Fisherman," 1887; "A Lost Winter," poem, 1889; and "The Struggle for Immortality," 1889. In 1889 she was married to Herbert D. Ward, and, in conjunction with him, she published in 1890 "The Master of the Magicians" and "Come Forth." Her "Memoirs of Austin Phelps," her father, was issued in 1891.

WARD, Professor H. Marshall, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.L.S., Professor of Botany in the Forestry School, Royal Indian Engineering College, Coopers Hill, is the eldest son of Francis Marshall Ward, Esq., and was born in 1854, and educated at the Owens College, Manchester, and at Christ's College, Cambridge. He commenced his scientific career as a field-botanist, after the model of the older school of naturalists, his studies being incited by his early life having been spent in the country. About 1870 he came under the influence of Darwin's writings and teachings, and in 1874 he entered more formally on a scientific career by attending Professor Huxley's Biology course at South Kensington. His success there, and in the subsequent course in Laboratory Botany then being organised by Mr. Thiselton Dyer, led to his proceeding to the Owens College, and afterwards to Cambridge. Since that period he has been distinguished especially as a Cryptogamic and Physiological Botanist and Pathologist, a career for which his early training in experimental science, and in habits of observation in the country, helped to fit him. In 1875 he was sent to the Owens College, Manchester, and obtained distinctions under Professors Roscoe, Gamgee, and Williamson. In 1876 he gained an entrance Scholarship in Natural Science at Christ's College, Cambridge, by open competition, and remained a scholar of that College until 1879, when he took his B.A. degree, having obtained First-Class Honours in the Natural Science Tripos for that year. He proceeded to the M.A. degree in 1885, and in 1892 was made Doctor of Science of the University of Cambridge. Meanwhile he had assisted in the teaching of Botany at South Kensington, and at the Owens College, and had delivered a course of lectures on Botany at Newnham College, Cambridge. Besides coming under the influence of the late F. M. Balfour and others at Cambridge, he had also studied in Germany during vacation, and especially in the laboratories of Professor Sachs of Würzburg; he had also published the results of original investigations into the embryology of Angiospermous flowering plants, the researches having been carried out in the laboratory at Würzburg and in the Jodrel laboratory at Kew. Immediately after taking his degree in 1879, Mr. Ward was appointed by the Colonial Government to proceed to Ceylon on a scientific mission, to investigate and report upon the causes of the coffee leaf disease, which was then devastating that island. This investigation occupied two years, and he returned to England in 1882, having meanwhile published several important Reports and Memoirs on his discoveries connected with the parasitic fungus which caused that disease, and the measures necessary to combat its ravages, as well as on other botanical subjects. During his travels in the tropics he also made observations and collected material and notes for subsequent publications. Some of the principal were on the structure and morphology of Asterina, and of Meliola, and other tropical fungi, and especially of the curious epiphyte Strigula, an epiphyllous lichen. On his return in 1882 he was forthwith made a Berkeley Fellow of the Owens College, Victoria University, and in 1883 he was appointed Assistant Lecturer in Botany in that University; and in the same year he was also elected to a Fellowship at Christ's College, Cambridge; and in 1885 he was appointed to the official position he now holds as Professor of Botany in the then newly-founded Forestry School at Coopers Hill. Professor Marshall Ward is a Fellow of the Royal Society, and has served on the Council of the Linnean Society, and on the Scientific Committee of the Horticultural Society, of both which Societies he is also a Fellow. In 1890 he was selected to deliver the Croonian Lecture before the Royal Society, and in 1892 served as the delegate of that body at the International Botanical Congress at Genoa. He has also lectured for the Royal Institution, the Sunday Lecture Society, and various public institutions. He was for several years Recorder of Section D of the British Association, of which body he is now a member of Council; and has been an Examiner in Botany in the Universities of London and of Edinburgh. He has also examined in Botany for the Natural Sciences Tripos and other examinations in the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford, and for the Civil Service Commissioners, and the Science and Art Department. He is a Governor of the South-Eastern Agricultural College at Wye, in Kent, having been appointed such by the University of London in 1893. Professor Marshall Ward is the author of numerous scientific memoirs read before the Royal Society and the Linnean Society, and published in the "Philosophical Transactions" and the "Proceedings" of the Royal Society, or in the "Transactions" and the "Journal" of the Linnean Society, and in the "Annals of Botany," the "Quarterly Journal of Microscopical Science," Nature, and elsewhere. These memoirs comprise investigations into the embryology, and physiology and pathology of plants, and especially the biology of Fungi, Bacteria, and other Cryptogams, the nature of parasitism, fermentation, and other subjects connected with the diseases of plants. The earlier of these researches were made in the laboratories at Kew and Würzburg, and in those of the late Professor De Bary at Strasburg, and of the Owens College, while the later ones have been made in the laboratory at Coopers Hill. Of these, the following are the most important:—"The Structure and Life-history of Entyloma Ranunculi;" "Histology and Physiology of Fruits and Seeds of Rhamnus" (with Mr. Dunlop); "Tubercular Swellings on the Roots of Vicia Faba;" "The Tubercles on the Roots of Leguminosidæ," &c.; "A Lily Disease;" and papers on the Potato Disease and on the Rust of Wheat; and on "The Ginger Beer Plant, and the Organisms composing it." His more recent investigations have been concerned particularly with the bacteriology of water, and the action of solar and electric light as agents for destroying bacteria, the results of which have appeared in a series of papers read before the Royal Society during recent years. For his researches into the biology of fungi and bacteria, the Royal Society, in 1893, awarded him a Royal Medal. In addition to the more special memoirs referred to, he is the author of the following books:—"Timber and some of its Diseases" (Nature Series), "The Diseases of Plants" (Romance of Science Series), "The Oak" (Modern Science Series), and the new edition of Laslett's "Timber and Timber Trees." He also translated Sach's "Lectures on the Physiology of Plants," for the Oxford Clarendon Press, and wrote the article "Schizomycetes," in the Encyclopædia Britannica, the "Notes on British Trees," in Schlich's "Manual of Forestry," the lecture on "Diseases of Conifers" for the Conifer Congress of the Royal Horticultural Society, and that on "Symbiosis and Symbiotic Fermentations" for the Institute of Brewing in 1892, and has been a frequent contributor to the pages of Nature, the Gardeners' Chronicle, the Journal of Botany, and other periodicals. Professor Marshall Ward married, in 1883, the daughter of the late Francis Kingdom, Esq., of Exeter.

WARD, John Quincy Adams, American sculptor, was born at Urbana, Ohio, June 29, 1830. In 1850 he entered the studio of the late H. K. Brown, an eminent sculptor, where he remained six years. In 1861 he opened a studio in New York, where he modelled his "Indian Hunter," "The Good Samaritan," Commodore M.C. Perry, with reliefs, "The Freedman," and many busts and small works. In 1869 he built a studio in Forty-ninth Street, New York, where he made the "Citizen Soldier," and statues of Shakespeare, Gen. Reynolds, Gen. Washington, Gen. Israel Putnam, an equestrian statue of Gen. Thomas, Gen. Daniel Morgan and Lafayette. He built a larger studio in 1882, where he has made the colossal statue of Washington for the New York Sub Treasury building, a colossal statue of President Garfield, with three typical figures on the pedestal; "The Pilgrim;" a statue of Henry Ward Beecher, with accessory statues, a seated statue of Horace Greeley, &c. He visited Europe in 1872, and again in 1887. For three years he was Vice-President, and for one term President, of the National Academy of Design.

WARD, Mary Augusta, or as the author of "Robert Elsmere" prefers to give her name on the title-page of her books, Mrs. Humphry Ward, is a granddaughter of Dr. Arnold, of Rugby. Matthew Arnold was his eldest son. The second son, another Thomas Arnold, the father of Mrs. Ward, at one time held an educational position in Tasmania. There he married the granddaughter of Governor Sorell, and there, at Hobart, several of his children were born, among them (in 1851) his eldest daughter, Mary Augusta. Mrs. Ward, who at that time devoted much attention to early Spanish literature and history, contributed a large number of articles on Spanish subjects to the "Dictionary of Christian Biography," edited by Dr. William Smith and Dr. Wace. She also, up to 1885, wrote many critical articles for Macmillan's Magazine. Her first volume was a child's story—"Milly and Olly," 1881, illustrated by Mrs. Alma Tadema. Her first novel was "Miss Bretherton," 1884, which was favourably received but made no particular noise in the literary world. The story is a mere sketch by the side of the later novel. Mrs. Ward's next volume was the translation (1885), itself a work of fine art, of that very remarkable book, Amiel's "Journal in Time." In Feb., 1888, she published her novel of "Robert Elsmere," which was widely read and much discussed. In five months it passed, in the three volume form, through seven editions; and since that time over 60,000 copies of the one volume edition have been sold in this country, and about half-a-million in America, the sale in this latter case consisting largely of course of pirated editions. It has been translated into German, Dutch, and Danish. In the spring of 1890 Mrs. Ward took part in founding a scheme known as University Hall. University Hall has been much misunderstood. It is in reality a settlement among the poor, combined with a lecturing and teaching system devoted to the interests of modern theism and to a free and historical treatment of the Bible. The new settlement was opened to residents in October, 1890, and in November a meeting, inaugurating the work of the hall, was held at the Portman Rooms, at which Dr. Martineau, Mr. Stopford Brooke, Mrs. Ward, and others were the speakers. The address delivered by Mrs. Ward was afterwards reprinted in pamphlet form. The settlement has now eleven or twelve residents, and the lectures on biblical criticism are well attended. Mrs. Ward remains the Honorary Secretary of it. During 1892 appeared another notable tendenz novel by Mrs. Humphry Ward, entitled "David Grieve," which was followed in 1894 by "Marcella;" a study of modern socialism. She was married in 1872 to Mr. Thomas Humphry Ward, M.A., formerly a tutor and Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford (see following memoir).

WARD, Thomas Humphry, M.A., is a son of the late Rev. Henry Ward, formerly Vicar of St. Barnabas, King Square, E.C., and was born at Hull in 1845. He was educated at Merchant Taylors' School, and at Brasenose College, Oxford, where he graduated (1st class Final Classical School) in Mich. Term, 1868. Before this he had been a candidate for the Civil Service of India, and in 1886 was placed first in the Open Competition. He resigned, however, without proceeding to India, and in Feb. 1869, was elected Fellow of Brasenose, of which College he was Tutor from 1870 to 1880. He then engaged in literary work in London. In 1880-1, with the aid of the principal critical writers of the day, he brought out "The English Poets: Selections with Critical Introductions" (4 vols.); in 1884 he published "Humphry Sandwith, a Memoir;" in 1885 he edited "Men of the Reign;" and, in 1887, the 12th edition of "Men of the Time." In 1886, with the help of various writers on Art, he brought out, "English Art in the Public Galleries of London," a work illustrated with 120 photogravures; and in 1887 he published "The Reign of Queen Victoria: a Survey of Fifty Years of Progress." In this work he had the assistance of Mr. Matthew Arnold, Prof. Huxley, Lord Wolseley, Sir Henry Sumner Maine, and others. It should be added that as an undergraduate, he was (with the late Edward Nolan and R. S. Copleston, now Bishop of Colombo) joint author of "The Oxford Spectator." Mr. Humphry Ward is a member of the staff of the Times. In 1872 he married the eldest daughter of Mr. Thomas Arnold, Mary Augusta, the authoress of "Robert Elsmere" [q.v.].

WARE, The Right Rev. Henry, D.D., Bishop Suffragan of Barrow-in-Furness, was born in London in 1830, and is the youngest son of Martin Ware, Esq., of Russell Square, London, and Tilford House, Farnham, Surrey. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; B.A. (Wrangler and First Class in Classics), 1853; D.D., 1889; Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, 1855-63; Vicar of Kirkby Lonsdale, 1862-88; Proctor in Convocation from 1867; Canon of Carlisle, 1879-83; and again 1888-93; Bishop Suffragan of Barrow-in-Furness (Diocese of Carlisle) 1889.

WARINGTON, Robert, F.R.S., F.C.S., F.I.C., &c., eldest son of Robert Warington, F.R.S., was born in London Aug. 22, 1838, and educated at home. He has pursued chemistry from his boyhood; has held appointments, first as Teacher of Chemistry at the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester; and from 1867 to 1893, as an Analytical and Research Chemist under Sir J. B. Lawes, F.R.S. He is the author of forty papers describing original investigations in Analytical and Agricultural Chemistry; the most important of these have been on Tartaric and Citric Acid; on the absorptive power of soil; on nitrification; and on the composition of rain, drainage, and well-waters. He is the author of a small manual of Agricultural Chemistry, "The Chemistry of the Farm," which has a large circulation.

WARNER, Charles Dudley, L.H.D., D.C.L., American writer and journalist, was born at Plainfield, Massachusetts, Sept. 12, 1829. He graduated at Hamilton College in 1851; studied law and was admitted to the Bar in 1856. He practised law until 1860, when he began journalism and became editor of the Hartford (Conn.) Press, which in 1867 was absorbed by the Courant, of which he has ever since been an owner. He has travelled in Europe and the East and over his own country; and for a few years, in addition to his editorial duties in Hartford, he conducted the "Editor's Drawer," and now writes the "Study" in Harper's Magazine. He has contributed to the Atlantic, Century, Harper's, and other leading magazines, and has published "My Summer in a Garden," 1871; "Saunterings," and "Back-Log Studies," 1872; "Baddeck and That Sort of Thing," 1874; "My Winter on the Nile among the Mummies and Moslems," 1876; "Being a Boy;" and "In the Levant," 1877; "In the Wilderness," 1878; "Captain John Smith," and "Washington Irving," 1881; "Roundabout Journey," 1883; "Their Pilgrimmage," 1886; "On Horse-back," 1888; "South and West and Comments on Canada," and "A Little Journey in the World," 1889; "As We were Saying," 1892; "The Work of Washington Irving," and "As We Go," 1893; and, in conjunction with S. L. Clemens (Mark Twain), "The Gilded Age," 1873.

WARR, Prof. George Charles Winter, M.A., was born on May 23, 1845, at Oakville, Toronto, and is the son of the late Rev. Canon Warr, M.A., Vicar of Childwall, Lancs. His maternal grandfather was Henry Denny, of Waterford, Ireland, founder of the firm of H. Denny and Sons. He was educated at the Royal Institution School, Liverpool, and at the University of Cambridge, as a foundation scholar of Christ's and subsequently of Trinity College. He was first Bell (University) Scholar in 1866, Porson and Members' Prizeman in 1868, third in the First Class of the Classical Tripos in 1869. He was elected by competition to a Fellowship at Trinity College (1870), but refused it on the ground of the religious tests then in force, to which he objected as restricting liberty of conscience, and as debarring Nonconformists from the benefits of the national universities. Mr. Warr otherwise took a prominent part in the Liberal movement which led to the abolition of the tests in 1871. He was Secretary of the Cobden Club (1871-4), and he has been active in popular educational work. He was on the staff of St. Paul's School (1870-2), Lecturer at Garrick Chambers (1872-81), and was elected to the chair of classical literature in King's College, London (1881), having previously been classical teacher in the same college. He is also Professor of Latin at Queen's College, London, and assisted Bishop Barry in founding the Ladies Department of King's College in 1877. He has advocated the establishment of a Teaching University in London, and in connection therewith, the restoration of Gresham College according to the founder's design, as a department of research and higher (post-graduate) instruction. In 1883 he wrote the "Tale of Troy," a classical masque founded on Homer, which he produced with the co-operation of the late Sir Charles T. Newton, at Cromwell House; this was followed in 1886 by the "Story of Orestes," from Æschylus. The mise-en-scène was designed by Sir Frederick Leighton, P.R.A., Mr. E. J. Poynter, R.A., Mr. G. F. Watts, R.A., Mr. Henry Holiday, Mr. George Simonds, and Mr. Walter Crane. The two plays, with introduction and sonnets by the author, and the music (chiefly composed by Sir Walter Parratt), are published in a volume entitled "Echoes of Hellas" (Marcus Ward, 1888), elaborately illustrated by Mr. Crane. Mr. Warr has translated from the German Teuffel-Schwab's "History of Roman Literature" (Bell, 1890). He has contributed articles to the Classical Review, and poems and translations to the Academy, and has in the press a work on the Greek Epic. He married, in 1885, Constance Emily, daughter of the late Thomas Keddy Fletcher.

WARRE, The Rev. Edmond, D.D., Head Master of Eton College, was born in 1837, and was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was a scholar. He obtained a First Class in Classical Moderations in 1856, and in the final Classical Schools in 1859. He was elected Fellow of All Souls in the same year, and retained his Fellowship three years. In 1860 he went to Eton as Assistant Master, a post which he held under Drs. Goodford, Balston, and Hornby, until the appointment as Provost of the last named in 1884. At that date, Mr. Warre was designated by general opinion as the most likely successor to the vacant post for which his services and his great popularity at Eton seemed specially to qualify him. He was accordingly elected Head Master by the governing body, and shortly afterwards he took his degree of D.D. at Oxford. He became one of her Majesty's Honorary Chaplains in 1885.

WARREN, Sir Charles, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., F.R.S., late Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, is the son of the late Major-General Sir Charles Warren, and was educated at Cheltenham College, Sandhurst, and at Woolwich. He entered the Royal Engineers in 1857, became Captain in 1869, Major and Lieut.-Colonel in 1878, and Colonel in 1882.

From 1867 to 1870 he conducted a series of excavations in Palestine, chiefly round the walls of the enclosure of the Temple of Jerusalem; and wrote "Underground Jerusalem," 1876; "The Temple or the Tomb," 1880; and, in conjunction with Captain Conder, "Jerusalem," 1884. In 1876 he was Special Commissioner to settle the boundary of the Orange Free State; and, in the following year, to settle the Land Question of West Griqualand. He commanded the Diamond Field Horse during the Galeka War of 1878, and the Field Force in Bechuanaland during the same year. During the Zulu War he organised a volunteer force for the assistance of the Transvaal and Natal, he acting in the capacity of Commander-in-Chief and Administrator of Griqualand West. Major Warren returned to England in 1880, and was appointed Instructor of Surveying at Chatham; and in 1882 he went to Egypt, and was engaged in special duty in restoring in the desert the authority of the Khedive, and bringing to justice the murderers of Professor Palmer's party. From 1884-5, Colonel Warren was commander of the Field Force in Bechuanaland; and in 1886 he was commander of the forces at Suakim; and subsequently in the same year Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, an office which he resigned in 1888. In 1889 he was appointed to command the troops in Straits Settlements with the temporary rank of Major-General.

WATERHOUSE, Alfred, R.A., was born July 19, 1830, at Liverpool. He studied architecture in Manchester, where he began to practise his profession, after travelling, chiefly in Italy. His first considerable work was the Manchester Assize Courts, the result of a hardly-contested competition. In that city he has also been the architect of the County Gaol, the Owens College, the National Provincial Bank of England, and the Town Hall, the result of another competition. In Liverpool, his works comprise the London and North Western Hotel; the Seamen's Orphanage; the Turner Memorial Home; the New Royal Infirmary, and University College; in London, the Natural History Museum; the Prudential Assurance Company's Office in Holborn; the New University Club; the New St. Paul's School; the Central Institution of the City and Guilds of London Institute; the National Liberal Club; the New Weigh House Chapel. Balliol College at Oxford, Caius and Pembroke at Cambridge, have been partly rebuilt from his designs. At Leeds the Yorkshire College of Science has been erected from his designs. The Hotel Métropole, Brighton, is also an example of his work. Among mansions may be mentioned Heythrop, Oxon, Eaton Hall, Cheshire, Iwerne Minster, Dorset, as his most conspicuous works. Mr. Waterhouse was honoured by receiving a grand prize for architecture at the Paris Exhibition of 1867, and a "Rappel" at that of 1878. He is a Member of the Royal and Imperial Academy of Vienna; an Associate of the Académie Royale des Sciences, des Lettres, et des Beaux-Arts de Belgique; an Associate of the Royal Academy of Arts at Brussels, Antwerp, Milan and Berlin; also Correspondant d'Académie des Beaux-Arts (Institut de France). He was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy of Arts, England, Jan. 16, 1878, and became a full member on June 4, 1885. He received the Royal Gold Medal of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1878; and has filled the President's chair of the same body during 1888, 1889, and 1890. He is a member of the Organising Committee of the Imperial Institute, and is also one of those composing the Westminster Abbey Commission.

WATERLOW, Sir Sydney Hedley, Bart., was educated at the Grammar School, Southwark, and at the age of fourteen was apprenticed to the late Mr. Thomas Harrison, Government printer; at eighteen he was placed in charge of the Cabinet Printing Press at the Foreign Office, Downing Street, and at twenty he went abroad, and was engaged in the well-known establishment of Messrs. Galignani. In 1844 he joined his father and brothers in business at London Wall, and for the next twenty years devoted himself to the extensive business of the firm now known as Waterlow and Sons, Ld. In 1855 he was elected for the Ward of Broad Street in the Common Council, and while a member of the Police Committee devised the scheme of over-house telegraph wires for the use of the police. In 1863 he was elected Alderman for the Ward of Langbourn, and in the same year took an active part in promoting the scheme for Artisans' Dwellings. In 1866-67 he served the office of Sheriff of London and Middlesex, and received the honour of knighthood. In the following year he agreed to contest the county of Dumfries in the Liberal interest, and greatly astonished the Conservative party by being returned at the head of the poll for a county which had been held by them uncontested for eighty years. In 1870 Sir Sydney was appointed on the Royal Commission for inquiry into Friendly and Benefit Building Societies, and took an active part in establishing such societies throughout the kingdom on a satisfactory footing. In 1872 he was elected Lord Mayor of London, and appointed to the Royal Judicature Commission; in the same year he instituted the now annual Hospital Sunday Fund, of which he is the Vice-President, and the Queen, in recognition of his many services to commerce and philanthropy, created him a baronet. In the following year he was elected treasurer of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, and discharged the duties of his office in a manner that has conferred lasting benefit on the Institution. He resigned in 1892. In 1874, at the general election, he successfully contested Maidstone, but lost his seat in 1880, and was elected for Gravesend, which he continued to represent until the general election of 1885. In 1881-2 he worked on the Committee on Artisans' and Labourers' Dwellings, a subject in which he has always taken a keen interest. After resigning his alderman's gown in 1883, Sir Sydney made a tour round the world. His services to the working classes of England are well known, and have gained the appreciation which they deserved. Sir Sydney was also treasurer of the "City and Guilds of London Institute for the Advancement of Technical Education," and is a member of the Royal Commission for the Exhibition of 1851. In 1889 he gave to the "London County Council" his estate at Highgate, comprising buildings and about 29 acres of land for the use of the public as a Park for ever; it is now known as Waterlow Park.

WATHERSTON, Edward James, Goldsmith, born in 1839, is principally known for his persistent advocacy of the remission of the plate duties, abolished in 1890; and for his unwearied exertions, together with the late Mr. Edward James Smith, to effect the purchase of the interests of the Metropolitan Water Companies (1878-80). He is a pioneer in the causes of Technical Education and Free Libraries; was lately Captain (F.O.C.) in the Queen's Westminster Rifle Volunteers. Member of the Society of Arts, 1877; Liveryman of the Goldsmiths' Company, 1864; Secretary of the Economic Section of the Social Science Association, 1877; and one of the governing body of the Birkbeck Institution. Mr. Watherston is the author of "Taxation of Silver Plate," "Our Railways: should they be Private or National Property?" "Our Railways: Rates and Fares," "Our Iron Highways," "The Progress of British Commerce," "Elementary Education at Home and Abroad," "Technical Education," "The Industrial Employment of Women in France, with England," "The Industrial Employment of Women Abroad and at Home," "French Silk Manufactures, and the Industrial Employment of Women," "Societies of Commercial Geography," "The Essence of Art: Is it Genius or Ingenuity?" "Manual or some Form of Technical Instruction, a Necessary Element of a Compulsory System of Education," "Gems and Precious Stones."

WATKIN, Sir Edward William, Bart., M.P., is the eldest son of the late Mr Absalom Watkin, who was born in London, but settled in Manchester, in 1800, and carried on business as a merchant in that town, from 1809 till his death in 1861. His son, Mr. Edward William Watkin, was first employed in his father's counting-house (ultimately becoming a partner), until the year 1845, when he was appointed to the secretaryship of the Trent Valley Railway. This led to his joining the London and North Western Co., and to his various positions as General Manager, and afterwards as a Director and Chairman of the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway, and President of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada; Chairman of the South Eastern Railway, and Director of the Great Western and Great Eastern Companies. In 1839-40 he became one of the directors of the Manchester Athenæum, and was one of the Secretaries of the committee which was organised to extricate the institution from its pecuniary embarrassments. He suggested and carried out the great literary soirées of that institution, which were held in the Free Trade Hall, and presided over by Mr. Charles Dickens, Mr. B. Disraeli, and Serjeant Talfourd, in the years 1843, 1844, and 1845 respectively. In 1843 he wrote a pamphlet entitled "A Plea for Public Parks," and became one of the honorary secretaries of the committee which followed, through whose efforts the three existing parks (viz., the "Queen's, "Peel" and "Philip's") were obtained for Manchester and Salford. In 1843, he and a few other members of the Manchester Athenæum started the "Saturday half holiday" in Manchester, which resulted in the general closing of the warehouses for business at two p.m. every Saturday. In 1845, Mr. Watkin was one of the originators of the Manchester Examiner newspaper. In 1861 he undertook a private mission to Canada, at the desire of the Duke of Newcastle, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, with the object of bringing the five British Provinces into union, and the establishment of a connection between Canada and the Atlantic by an independent railway system, which he successfully accomplished. Mr. Watkin was first elected to Parliament in 1857, but was afterwards unseated. He was returned to Parliament, unopposed, for Stockport, in 1864, and again returned at the head of the poll in 1865. He was defeated, however, by a narrow majority in 1868, and contested East Cheshire unsuccessfully in 1869. Whilst in Parliament, in 1866-67, he obtained, as the Chairman of two Select Committees, important alterations in the laws affecting railways, and especially the change in the law of limited liability, which enabled companies to reduce the capital by mere resolution, and without winding up. In 1868 he received the honour of knighthood. Sir E. Watkin was again returned to Parliament at the general election of Feb. 1874, for the united boroughs of Hythe and Folkestone, and was returned unopposed for the same borough, at the general election of 1880. In that year he was created a baronet. He was High Sheriff of Cheshire, 1874. He has done much to improve the harbours of Boulogne and Calais, so as to establish fixed services by large steamers to increase the comfort of the transit, and to have already reduced the time between London and Paris to seven hours; this movement is progressing. The proposed tunnel under the Channel to connect England and France is an enterprise with which he has been connected in conjunction with the late Michel Chevalier, M. Léon Say, and other eminent French and English public men. Assuming the experiment to succeed, Mr. Watkin has recommended Mr. Gladstone to approach the European and American powers with a view to the complete neutralisation of the work, believing that this would do away with the military alarms on the question raised of late years. At present the works near Shakspeare's Cliff, Dover, are kept in repair and ventilation, but Government has not yet shown any desire to give the sanction necessary for their completion. It is understood that Sir Edward has investigated the question of connecting the south coast of Scotland and the north coast of Ireland by a submarine tunnel. He has advocated the extension of harbour and other public works as a means of extending employment and augmenting the trading capacity of the country in competition with foreign nations. In 1885, 1886, and 1892, Sir E. Watkin was returned for the Hythe division of Kent. In 1892 he married Ann, widow of H. Ingram, founder of the Illustrated London News.

WATKINS, The Venerable Henry William, M.A. of Oxford, London, and Durham, and Honorary D.D. of Durham, was born in 1844, and educated at King's College, London, of which he is a Fellow and a member of Council, and at Balliol College, Oxford, of which he was sometime a Scholar. After a distinguished University career, he graduated at London and Oxford, and was ordained in 1871 to the curacy of Pluckley, Kent, on the nomination of Dr. Plumptre, late Dean of Wells. In 1873, he was presented to the vicarage of Much Wenlock, in Shropshire, and quitted the living two years later to become Censor, Chaplain, and Lecturer on the Greek Testament and on Hebrew, at King's College, London. Shortly afterwards he was appointed first professor of Logic and Moral Philosophy in the same College. In 1878, Dr. Watkins was elected to the Wardenship of St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, and the Bishop of London; and while there, he accepted the work of the poor and unendowed parish of St. Gregory the Great. Soon after Dr. Lightfoot was consecrated to the Bishopric of Durham in 1879, Dr. Watkins was appointed one of his examining chaplains; and, in 1880, was collated to the Archdeaconry of Northumberland with a Canonry in Durham Cathedral. On the division of the See, in 1882, he was transferred to the newly-constituted Archdeaconry of Auckland; and, a few months later, on the death of Archdeacon Prest, to that of Durham. On his first arrival in Durham, he accepted a Professorship of Hebrew in the University, and found leisure to devote some of his energies to the restoration of the parish of All Saints at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, where he laboured as Senior Curate at a nominal salary, among one of the most neglected and degraded of populations. During Bishop Lightfoot's illness, the Archdeacon acted as his commissary, and on the election of Bishop Westcott to the See of Durham, he was again appointed Examining Chaplain. Archdeacon Watkins has contributed several papers at Church Congress Meetings at Sheffield, Swansea, Derby, Wolverhampton, and Manchester, on "Science and Religion," on "The Church and Democracy," on "Elasticity of Worship," and other subjects, which have been published separately, and he has also delivered several Charges as Archdeacon of Northumberland and Durham. Besides these, Archdeacon Watkins has contributed to Dr. William Smith's "Dictionaries of the Bible and of Christian Biography;" and wrote a Commentary on the Gospel according to St. John, for Bishop Ellicott's "New Testament for English Readers." He was appointed Bampton Lecturer at Oxford for the year 1890, and delivered the course on "Modern Criticism Considered in its Relation to the Fourth Gospel." The Archdeacon was married in 1883 to the elder daughter of Sir Henry Thompson, a lady who is well known both as an artist and a philanthropist, and who is the author of "The Public Picture Galleries of Europe," a work which has passed through several editions.

WATKINSON, The Rev. William L., Wesleyan Minister, was born at Hull, Aug. 30, 1838. Entered the Ministry 1858, and has travelled in the Ministry in Nottingham, Manchester, Bolton, Harrogate, London, and in other towns. He is the author of the Fernley Lecture "On the Influence of Scepticism on Character," delivered in 1887 (now in the 8th edit.); "Mistaken Signs;" "The Beginning of the Christian Life;" "The Programme of the Christian Life;" "Noon-day addresses," delivered in Manchester and Leeds; and various other works. In 1891 he published "The Transfigured Sackcloth and other Sermons," and in 1894 began to edit the "Life Indeed" series.

WATSON, The Rev. Henry William, D.Sc., F.R.S., was born in London, Feb. 25, 1827, and is the son of the late Thomas Watson, Esq., R.N. He was educated at King's College, London, and obtained a Mathematical Scholarship there on its first establishment, and entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1846; was elected Scholar thereof in 1848; and took his B.A. degree in 1850; being Second Wrangler and Smith's Prizeman. He was elected Fellow of Trinity College, and appointed Assistant Tutor thereof in 1851; and was appointed Second Master of the City of London School, 1854; Mathematical Lecturer at King's College, London, 1856; Assistant Master of Harrow School, 1857; and was presented to the Rectory of Berkswell, near Coventry, 1865. He acted as Moderator and Examiner in the Cambridge Mathematical Tripos 1860 and 1861 respectively, and as Additional Examiner in the year 1877. For many years he has acted as Assistant Examiner to the Civil Service Commissioners; and has been occasional Examiner for the degree of D.Sc. in the University of London. He is the author of "A Treatise on Geometry," in Longman's text-books of Science Series, 1871; "A Treatise on the Kinetic Theory of Gases," published by the Clarendon Press, Oxford, 1876; and sundry Mathematical and Physical papers in the Philosophical Magazine and the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics, and elsewhere. He is joint author of "Watson and Burbury's Treatise on Generalised Coördinates applied to the Kinetics of a Material System;" "Watson and Burbury's Electricity and Magnetism," part 1, Electrostatics, 1885; part 2, Magnetism and Electrodynamics, 1889; Article "Molecule" in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica." He was appointed in 1879, a representative governor for the University of Cambridge, of King Edward VI's School, Birmingham, and was joint founder of the Birmingham Philosophical Society in 1879, and President of the same, 1880 and 1881. The Rev. H. W. Watson was elected Fellow of the Royal Society in 1881, and Examiner in Mathematics in the University of London in 1893.

WATSON, Thomas Henry, architect, born Nov. 1, 1839, obtained three silver medals in 1860 at the Royal Academy of Arts, the Gold Medal in 1861. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1862; was awarded the Travelling Studentship of the Royal Academy 1863, and the Soane Medallion of the Royal Institute of British Architects, 1864. He graduated at the Institute in the Class of Distinction 1866, was President of the Architectural Association in 1871, was elected District Surveyor of St. George's, Hanover Square, North, in 1875, and Fellow of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1877. Has carried out numerous works in London and many country houses. Among them may be mentioned North Court and other buildings, Somerhill, Kent, the seat of Sir Julian Goldsmid, Bart., M.P.; Rickmansworth Park, the seat of J. W. Birch, Esq.; Newton Park, Somerset, for Earl Temple; Crowe Hall, Bath; Chalfont Park, Bucks, for Captain Penton, M.P.; Rapkins, Sussex, for Thomas Woolner, R.A., and works to the Villa Aurelia, Rome.

WATSON, William, the poet, was born in Wharfedale, Yorkshire, and as a boy gave promise of literary genius. He suffered, however, for years from neglect of the reading public, until in 1892 his poem on "Wordsworth's Grave" forced the critics to recognise in him something more than a "minor poet." Partly owing to their own classic beauty and absence of affectation, and partly owing to the clever methods of publishing to which their author has recourse, Mr. William Watson's poems are now eagerly bought by bibliophiles and the general public. In 1893 appeared his "Lachrymæ Musarum," a noble tribute to the memory of Lord Tennyson. His other works are: "Epigrams of Life, Art, and Nature;" "The Prince's Quest;" a collection of love lyrics; "The Eloping Angels;" "Excursions in Criticism," reprinted mostly from the Spectator to which he frequently contributes, 1893; and "Odes and other Poems," Dec., 1894. Mr. Gladstone conferred on Mr. Watson the civil pension of £200, rendered vacant by the death of Lord Tennyson, and this very unexpected act of patronage has led many to imagine that Mr. Watson is Poet Laureate designate. This pension has recently been increased.

WATTERSON, Henry, American journalist and statesman, was born in Washington City, Feb. 16, 1840. He was educated by private tutors, and began his career as an editorial writer on the press of the national capital; but his professional work was interrupted by the Civil War, in which he served on the Confederate side. After the war, he succeeded George D. Prentice, the founder and editor of the Louisville Journal, and, in conjunction with W. N. Haldeman, the founder of the Louisville Courier, he consolidated all the newspapers of that city into the Courier-Journal, which, under his management, has become a leading American newspaper. He is a recognised authority in the Democratic party, although for many years he had to contend against a majority of his party associates. He successfully opposed the reactionary movement of the Southern extremists against the reconstructory amendments to the Constitution, and of the Western extremists as to the national currency. He was one of the leaders of the Democrats in 1872 who sought to elect Horace Greeley to the Presidency. He was among the friends of the late Samuel J. Tilden, and presided over the National Democratic Convention, which nominated him for President. He has sat in each succeeding National Democratic Convention for the State of Kentucky, acting in those of 1880 and 1888 as Chairman of the Platform Committee, and exercising a decisive influence in shaping the party policy. He was one of the first prominent Democrats to identify himself with Free Trade ideas and to demand of Congress "a tariff for revenue only," and for fifteen years has been regarded as the embodiment of tariff reform in the United States. In the National Democratic Convention of 1892, he declined to serve on the Platform Committee; opposing the Tariff Clause of its report in open Convention, and reversing it in favour of a report made by a minority of one in Committee by a vote of nearly two-thirds of the Convention. He has steadily refused office, but in the political crisis of 1876–77 he accepted a seat in Congress, serving with distinction and declining a re-election. He is a constant public speaker and lecturer, a voluminous contributor on economic subjects to the reviews, and an active and familiar figure in the councils of his party. He delivered the dedicatory oration on the official opening of the Columbian Exposition at Chicago in 1893. He is the author of many tracts and pamphlets, and a volume of sketches, entitled "Oddities of Southern Life and Character," 1892. He has travelled extensively, and has in the press (1893) a collection of foreign letters.

WATTS, George Frederick, R.A., painter, born in London in 1817, first exhibited at the Academy in 1837. In addition to portraits, he made some historical attempts such as "Isabella finding Lorenzo dead," from Boccaccio, in 1840, and a scene from "Cymbeline," in 1842. At Westminster Hall, in 1843, his cartoon of "Caractacus led in triumph through the Streets of Rome," obtained one of the three highest class prizes of £300, and created sanguine hopes for his future career. Having spent upwards of four years in Italy, he again obtained, in 1847, the highest honours at the competition in Westminster Hall. His two colossal oil-pictures, "Echo," and "Alfred inciting the Saxons to prevent the Landing of the Danes," which secured for him one of the three highest class prizes of £500, were, with the pictures of Mr. Pickersgill and Mr. Cross, purchased by the Commissioners. The latter is in one of the committee-rooms of the new Parliament Houses. Mr. Watts exhibited his "Paolo and Francesca," and "Orlando pursuing the Fata Morgana," at the British Institution, in 1848, and his full-length portrait of Lady Holland, at the Royal Academy in the same year. "Life's Illusions," a picture of the class of "Fata Morgana," exhibited in 1849, was followed in 1850 by "The Good Samaritan," painted in honour of Thomas Wright, of Manchester, and presented by the artist to the Town Hall of Manchester. For the Houses of Parliament Mr. Watts has executed one of the frescoes in the Poet's Hall, "St. George overcomes the Dragon," from Spenser, finished in 1853, and he has painted in fresco the west end of the new hall at Lincoln's Inn. For some time he has exhibited regularly at the Royal Academy and Grosvenor Gallery. His principal productions have been portraits and ideal or mythological subjects, such as the well-known "Love and Death;" "Endymion;" "Orpheus and Eurydice;" "Daphne;" and (1886) "Hope." In 1882 an exhibition of Mr. Watts' works was held at the Grosvenor Gallery. Mr. Watts has painted for his own house some forty portraits of the most eminent of his contemporaries in public life, literature and art; and these he is understood to have bequeathed to the nation. He executed a portrait of Lord Tennyson, in 1890. In 1886 Mr. Watts married Mary, third daughter of the late Charles Edward Fraser Tytler, Esq., of Aldourie, Inverness-shire. In 1880 the honorary degree of D.C.L. was conferred upon Mr. Watts by the University of Oxford, and that of LL.D. was offered by the University of Cambridge in 1882 and conferred the following year. In 1885 Mr. Gladstone was empowered to bestow the honour of a baronetcy upon Mr. Watts, which honour was declined by him. He is a member of foreign academies, and has received the Cross of the Légion d'honneur.

WATTS, Theodore, poet and critic, was born at St. Ives in 1836, but has spent most of his life in London. He received a somewhat elaborate private education at Cambridge. Originally trained as a naturalist, his father having been an active member of scientific societies, he was afterwards brought up to the law, and passed his legal examination in 1863. He first attracted the attention of the literary public as a writer of sonnets. One of the chief of those who took an interest in his early poetical work was Dante Rossetti, whose intimate friend Mr. Watts became. Under Mr. Rossetti's influence he made a critical study of the Old Masters in Florence, Venice, and Rome. After Rossetti's death he expounded the principles of his art in the Nineteenth Century and elsewhere. Mr. Watts became literary and artistic critic to the Examiner at a time when that paper was being brilliantly conducted by Professor Minto, who numbered among his contributors such men as Mr. Swinburne and Mr. W. Bell Scott. When Prof. Minto left the Examiner Mr. Watts retired also, and became one of the chief writers in the Athenæum, in the columns of which, as well as in "Encyclopædia Britannica," edit. IX., he founded a school of poetical criticism which aims at testing literary efforts by the light of first principles only. Mr. Watts's articles in the "Encyclopædia" are to be reproduced in volume form under the title "Poetics;" and his "Reminiscences of George Borrow" are shortly to be reprinted from the Athenæum. Mr. Watts has been a busy contributor to The Quarterly Magazine, The Nineteenth Century, and Ward's "English Poets." He is specially noticeable as an expounder of the Romantic Movement, and in "Aylwin, a Poetic Romance," he has endeavoured to carry into scenes of contemporary life those principles of purely romantic art which have heretofore been expressed only in pictures of the past. His art as a writer of sonnets is discussed in Rossetti's "Letters to Hall Caine," and in the preface to Mr. W. Sharp's "Sonnets of this Century," as well as in other works on that form of poetry. Mr. Watts is an intimate friend of Mr. Swinburne, who for some years has lived in his house at Putney Hill.

WAY, The Hon. Samuel James, Chief Justice of South Australia, Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court, Chancellor of the University of Adelaide, and in 1890 appointed Lieut.-Governor of S. Australia, is the son of the Rev. James Way, and was born at Portsmouth, April 11, 1836. He was privately educated, and went to South Australia early in 1853. He was called to the South Australian Bar, March 28, 1861; appointed Q.C., Sept. 12, 1871; elected to the House of Assembly, Feb. 10, 1875; appointed Attorney-General, June 3, 1875; appointed Chief Justice, March 18, 1876; elected Vice-Chancellor of the University of Adelaide, April 28, 1876; and Chancellor, Jan. 26, 1883. The Hon. S. J. Way has administered the Government of South Australia five times—in 1877, 1878, 1879, 1883, 1889; is a member of the Executive Council; author of the "Report of the Commission on the Destitute Act, 1881," published in Adelaide, 1885 (an elaborate treatise on Poor Relief in South Australia), and other official publications.

WEBB, Charles Locock, Q.C., of the Equity Bar, was born on the 26th Nov. 1822, at Chard, Somerset, and is the eldest son of Samuel Webb and Mary Ann, his wife, only daughter of Charles Locock of the same place. He was educated at private schools and became a student at the Middle Temple on 15th April, 1847. He was called to the Bar on the 17th April, 1850, and became Q.C. on the 25th June, 1875. He was appointed a Middle Temple Bencher on the 9th May, 1879. In 1889 he was Autumn Reader and an Examiner for Scholarships in Constitutional Law and International Law from 1887 to Trinity term, 1892. He was one of the Examiners for Scholarships in Equity in 1892. He is author of "Practice of the Supreme Court, and Appeals to the House of Lords," (1877). In 1868 he contested, in the Conservative interest, the Borough of Hackney, and in 1865 and 1874 that of Bodmin.

WEBBER, The Right Rev. William Thomas Thornhill, D.D., Bishop of Brisbane, is the son of the late William Webber, surgeon, of Norwich, by Eliza, daughter of the late Sir Isaac (?) Preston, Bart. He was born in Upper Grosvenor Street, Grosvenor Square, London, Jan. 30, 1837, and educated first at Tonbridge School, and afterwards at Norwich under the late John Woolley, D.C.L. (who was subsequently head of Sydney University), and at Pembroke College, Oxford. (B.A. 1859, M.A. 1862, D.D. honoris causâ, 1885.) He was ordained by the Bishop of London (Dr. Tait), deacon, 1860, and priest, 1861. He was assistant curate at Chiswick from 1860 to 1864, when he was put in charge of the newly-constituted district and parish of St. John the Evangelist, Red Lion Square, Holborn, which he held up to 1885. Here he built the noble church in Red Lion Square, together with clergy-house attached, and schools with accommodation for 700 children in three departments. The site, church, clergy-house, schools, etc., cost £49,000. This large sum of money was collected and administered by Mr. Webber, in the course of an exceedingly busy life of public usefulness. He was one of the Governors of Sion College, 1882-85, and represented Finsbury on the London School Board, 1882-85; was Chairman of the Local Managers of the Board Schools, 1877-85, and Guardian of Holborn Union, 1874-83. He was also connected very prominently during these years with the Charity Organisation Society, the Working Men's Club and Institute Union, the Girls' and the Young Men's Friendly Societies, and many other institutions and societies. On the resignation of Bishop Hale he was appointed to the vacant See of Brisbane, and was consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral by the Archbishop of Canterbury (Dr. Benson), on St. Barnabas' Day, 1885. When the Bishop took charge of the diocese in 1885 there were but 33 clergy and 39 churches; these, as the result of five years' work, have been increased to 67 clergy and 75 churches.

WEBSTER, Sir Richard Everard, Q.C., M.P., Attorney-General, second son of the late Thomas Webster, Esq., Q.C., was born Dec. 22, 1842. He received his education at King's College and Charterhouse Schools and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he gained a Foundation Scholarship, and graduated in both the Mathematical and Classical Tripos. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1868, and joined the south-eastern (then home) circuit. He was afterwards appointed to the ancient but honorary offices of Tubman and Postman in the Court of Exchequer at Westminster. He was made Queen's Counsel in 1878, and is believed to be the only man who has for many years past received that honour at so early an age. He has been extensively engaged in most of the heavy commercial and railway cases of the day, and, besides having a large general practice, he has appeared in numerous appeal cases in the House of Lords. He is one of the Governors of the Charterhouse. He contested Bewdley at the election of 1880. In June, 1885, he was appointed Attorney-General in the first Government of Lord Salisbury, not having up to that date been in Parliament. He held the same office from 1886 to 1892. From July to Nov., 1885, he represented Launceston, and at the general election of 1885 he successfully stood for the Isle of Wight, defeating Mr. Ashley, the former Liberal member, by a majority of 436. In 1886 he was again returned by a majority of 1,258, and still represents that constituency. When Attorney-General in the late Conservative Government, he appeared in behalf of the Times before the Parnell Commission. In 1893 he was one of the British representatives in the Behring Sea Arbitration case. He married in the year 1872, Louisa Mary, the only daughter of the late William Calthrop, Esq., M.D., of Withern, in the county of Lincoln; she died in the year 1877.

WEDMORE, Frederick, born at Richmond Hill, Clifton, July 9, 1844, is the eldest son of Mr. Thomas Wedmore, a Justice of the Peace and merchant of Bristol. He is of an old Quaker family, and was educated at a Quaker private school, and studied afterwards at Lausanne and Paris. Resolved upon the pursuit of journalism or literature, he entered, for a while, a Bristol newspaper office, but in 1868, came to London and wrote occasionally in the Spectator. His novels of "A Snapt Gold Ring," and "Two Girls," published in 1871 and 1874, were, at the time, well reviewed, but are understood to be works on which Mr. Wedmore sets small store. He has never been willing to reprint them, and it is no doubt by his volumes of short stories, "Pastorals of France" and "Renunciations," that Mr. Wedmore takes serious rank as an imaginative writer. But about the time of the appearance of the first of these volumes "Pastorals of France" (1877) he had become known to the public by his contributions to Art-history and criticism; "Studies in English Art," showing his familiarity with the earlier masters of the English School, the "Masters of Genre Painting" (1880), evincing an appreciation of Dutchmen such as Terburg and Metzu, and of the elegant and penetrating art of the French Eighteenth Century; while, a little later, "The Four Masters of Etching," and a much-remarked study in the Nineteenth Century of the great French etcher, Meryon, proved Mr. Wedmore's knowledge of the principles and history of the art of Etching. Mr. Wedmore occasionally contributes papers on art or dramatic subjects to the Academy, and all the more important art criticisms in the Standard, with which journal he has been connected since 1878, have for years been known to proceed from his pen. He has nevertheless found time to produce an original study on the chief French novelist, Balzac, in the "Great Writers" series (1889), to edit the English edition of M. Michel's "Rembrandt" (1893), and to write, in the magazines, one or two more short stories, which have now been republished in volume form. Of these, "The Fitting Obsequies" and "The Vicar of Pimlico" are of the same character as "Renunciations." It should be added that Mr. Wedmore visited America and lectured at Harvard and the Johns Hopkins University in 1885. He is married to the youngest daughter of the late Mr. John Peele Clapham, a Yorkshire magistrate and Treasurer of County Courts of the West Riding; and by her he has one daughter.

WEIR, Harrison William, born at Lewes, May 5, 1824, at an early age showed a great inclination for drawing animals and birds, and the study of natural history. He was, in 1837, articled to Mr. George Baxter, to learn designing on wood, colour-printing, and wood-engraving. This proving quite a different kind of work to what it was represented, he used means to have his articles cancelled, but having in vain endeavoured to get released from his engagement, he of necessity served his time; thus seven years of his life, as far as the work of an artist was concerned, were entirely wasted, and therefore he, in his profession, is self-taught. He was elected a member of the new Society of Painters in Water-Colours in Feb. 1849, and some time before exhibited his first picture, the "Dead Shot," at the British Institution. He also exhibited in Suffolk Street and at the Royal Academy, his pictures of animals, birds, domestic poultry, fruit, &c., being much sought after. Among his best are, "Startled," "The Forester," "A Servant of all Work," with several of birds singing; "The Christmas Carol"—a robin, published by the Illustrated London News. Mr. Weir's first wood drawings appeared in the Illustrated London News, also The Pictorial Times; he was one of the original staff of the Field, and also the Graphic, and now of Black and White. He has been connected, either by his pencil, pen, or both, with over one hundred and twenty books, his best known being "Routledge's Natural History," "Poultry Book," "Funny Dogs with Funny Tales," "The Adventures of a Bear," also those of "A Dog," and "A Cat." His latter works, which are written by himself as well as illustrated, are, "Everyday in the Country," "Animal Stories, Old and New," "Bird Stories, Old and New;" but what he considers his chief book is, "Our Cats, and All About Them," a quite original production, and one that will last as a work of reference, the standard of excellence being given in it, as laid down by Mr. Harrison Weir for judging at shows. He also gives rules for breeding cats: among others the tortoise-shell Tom, which has proved successful. He has furnished illustrations for the British Workman, The Cottager, Band of Hope Review, the Children's Friend, Chatterbox, Little Folks, Poultry, and Fanciers' Gazette, and numerous others; he has laboured to improve children's books and books for the poorer classes. He is a Fellow of the Royal Horticultural Society, and has been a Member of the Fruit Committee some years, having himself been awarded Silver Medals for excellence in fruit growing. He has paid considerable attention to the management and varieties of poultry and pigeons, and has gained several cups and other prizes, besides acting as judge at poultry shows for over thirty years. He has also acted as judge of cage birds at the large shows for the same period. He established the first Cat Show at the Crystal Palace, which he intended should induce the owners of cats, through the medium of winning prizes, to take more interest in the breeding and welfare of their cats. The exhibition has so far attained its objects as to have enhanced the pecuniary value of the cat. One curious fact remains to be told, and that is, although he has planned and carried out such a large amount of work during his career of half a century, he has during nearly the whole time been an invalid, his nervous prostration often lasting many days, and for the last thirty years he has not been a day without pain. At 22 years of age he married the eldest daughter of J. F. Herring, the well-known horse painter.

WELLDON, The Rev. James Edward Cowell, son of the late Rev. E. J. Welldon, Senior Assistant Master of Tonbridge School, was born April 25, 1854, educated at Eton, and obtained the Newcastle Scholarship there in 1873. He was Scholar and afterwards Fellow, of King's College, Cambridge; Bell Scholar in 1874; Browne's Medallist in 1875 and 1876; Craven Scholar in 1876; Senior Classic and Senior Chancellor's Medallist in 1877. After living some time abroad he was appointed Lecturer, and subsequently Tutor, of King's College, Cambridge. He became Master of Dulwich College in 1883, and Head Master of Harrow School in 1885. He is Chaplain to the Queen; Member of the Royal Commission on a Teaching University for London: and has several times been Select Preacher at Oxford and Cambridge; and Speaker at various Church Congresses. He is the author of "Translation of Aristotle's Politics," of his "Rhetoric" and "Nicomachean Ethics," "Sermons preached to Harrow Boys;" and "The Spiritual Life and other Sermons."

WELLS, Henry Tanworth, R.A., was born in London in Dec. 1828. His first practice in art was as a miniature painter. When only seventeen years of age he exhibited at the Royal Academy a portrait of "Master Arthur Prinsep," a brother of Mr. Valentine Prinsep, the painter. Steadily, if at first slowly, the young artist advanced in this difficult branch of art. From the year in which he first exhibited till 1866 he never ceased to be represented as a miniaturist on the walls of the Academy; and down to 1860 he usually exhibited eight works annually —the largest number allowed. In this long series were a portrait of Princess Mary of Cambridge, painted for Her Majesty, 1853; a group of the painter himself and his wife in tourist costume, 1860; together with full lengths of the Duchess of Sutherland, and Frances, Countess of Waldegrave. In the Academy Exhibition of 1861 he made his first appearance as an oil-painter. A prominent place was awarded in 1865 to his "Preparing a Tableau Vivant"—a portrait group of three sisters; and he also contributed a landscape entitled "Outskirt of a Farm-yard at Twilight." In 1866 he painted his large picture of "Volunteers at a Firing Point," and in May that year he was elected A.R.A. Since that time he has been a constant exhibitor of portrait pictures, some of which are large compositions; as "The Rifle Ranges at Wimbledon," 1867; "The Earl and Countess Spencer and their Friends at Wimbledon," 1868; "Letters and News at the Loch Side," 1868; "Lord Chancellor Hatherley, with his Attendants in Procession through the House of Lords," painted on a large scale for the Fishmongers' Company; "Lord Chancellor Selborne," for the Mercers' Company; a large hunt-picture, entitled "A November Morning at Birdsall House, Yorkshire," 1875; "Mr. Robert Jardine, with Greyhounds," 1876; "The Old Stonebreaker," and the "Laurel Walk," 1879. In 1880 he exhibited his large painting of "Victoria Regina," representing the Queen in the early morning of June 20, 1837, receiving news of the death of William IV., and the homage of Archbishop Howley and the Lord Chamberlain. In 1882 was exhibited "Friends at Yewden," a group of Academicians (including the painter himself) and other friends, painted for the collection of Mr. G. C. Schwabe. This was followed by two subjects of labour, "Loading at a Quarry," 1884; and "Quarrymen of Purbeck," 1885. In 1887 appeared his largest canvas, "The Queen and her Judges," representing the ceremonial of the opening of the Royal Courts of Justice. Since that date he has sent many portraits to the Royal Academy Exhibitions. Mr. Wells was elected a Royal Academician in June, 1870. He married Joanna Mary Boyce, an accomplished artist, who died in 1861.

WELLS, Sir Thomas Spencer, Bart., M.D., is the eldest son of the late Mr. Wells, of St. Alban's Hertfordshire, by Harriet, daughter of the late Mr. Wright, of Richmond, Surrey. He was born in 1818 at St. Alban's, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He gained his first medical experience in the Infirmary and School of Medicine at Leeds, and subsequently studied in the Anatomical School at Dublin, and at St. Thomas's Hospital. He was admitted a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1841, and in 1844 was elected one of the honorary fellows created by the new charter. Having become an assistant Surgeon in the Navy, he saw some active service, both afloat and ashore, before and during the Crimean war; and he was sent out in 1854-5, under the auspices of Mr. Sydney Herbert, as chief surgeon of auxiliary hospitals at Smyrna, and at Renkioi on the Dardanelles. Returning to England at the close of the Russian war, he revived the operation with which his name is chiefly associated—namely, ovariotomy, and became Surgeon to the Samaritan Hospital for Women. He was President of the College of Surgeons in 1882-83, and delivered the Hunterian Oration 1882. He is a Fellow of the Royal Medical and Chirurgical Society, and surgeon to Her Majesty's Household, and at the third centenary of the University of Leyden and the eighth of the University of Bologna, he had conferred upon him the degree of an honorary M.D. Her Majesty, in April, 1883, conferred upon him the honour of a baronetcy in acknowledgment "of the distinguished services which he has rendered to the medical profession and to humanity." Sir Spencer Wells is the author of several important surgical works, especially on those branches of operative surgery to which he has specially devoted himself. He married, in 1853, Elizabeth, daughter of the late Mr. James Wright, solicitor, of New-Inn, London, and of Sydenham, Kent. His son (Arthur Spencer) was educated at Wellington College, and Trinity College, Cambridge, and is Private-Secretary to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

WELLWOOD, Lord, The Honourable Henry James Moncreiff, is the eldest son of Lord Moncreiff of Tullibole (1st baron), and was born in Edinburgh on April 24, 1840. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy; and subsequently at Harrow, and Trinity College, Cambridge; where, in 1861, he graduated B.A., LL.B. (1st class Law honours). He was called to the Scottish Bar in 1863; held the office of Advocate-Depute 1865-66; and again 1868-74; and 1880-81. In 1881 he was appointed Sheriff of the counties of Renfrew and Bute; which office he held till November 1888, when he was appointed a Senator of the College of Justice (a Lord of Session) under the title of Lord Wellwood. Lord Wellwood is a Liberal Unionist in politics. He is the author of a work on "Revision in Criminal Cases," 1877. He married first, on April 3, 1866, Susan Wilhelmine, third daughter of Sir William H. Dick Cunynghame, Bart., of Prestonfield (she died in 1869); and, secondly, on March 26, 1873, Millicent Julia, daughter of Colonel F. D. Fryer, of Moulton Paddocks, Newmarket. She died in 1881.

WEMYSS and MARCH (Earl of), The Right Hon. Francis Wemyss Charteris, eldest son of Francis Wemyss Charteris, eighth Earl of Wemyss, was born in 1818, and educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford (B.A., 1841). In the same year he was returned to the House of Commons for the Eastern division of Gloucestershire, which he represented until 1846, when he resigned his seat, having abandoned the support of the protective Corn Laws, and became a convert to the Free Trade measures of Sir R. Peel. In Aug., 1847, he was returned as a Liberal Conservative for Haddingtonshire, which he continued to represent until his succession to the peerage; was a Lord of the Treasury under the Aberdeen ministry, 1852-55, retiring with the Peelite party in Feb. of that year from the administration of Lord Palmerston. As Lord Elcho, he took a very conspicuous part in the Volunteer movement, and he is an authority on various questions connected with the national defence and armaments. He is Colonel of the London Scottish Volunteers, and, as Chairman of the Council of the National Rifle Association, he frequently presided over the Wimbledon Rifle Meetings. He is an A.D.C., and has been a Deputy-Lieutenant of Haddingtonshire since 1846. He succeeded to the Earldom of Wemyss on the death of his father, Jan. 1, 1883. His lordship is the author of "Letters on Military Organisation," 1871.

WERE, The Right Rev. Edward Ash, D.D., Bishop Suffragan of Derby, was born at Clifton, Bristol, Nov. 14, 1846, and is the youngest son of Thomas Bonville Were, Esq., and Frances Anne Were, daughter of William Wright, Esq., of Clifton. He was educated at Rugby, under Dr. Temple, from 1860 to 1865; gained the 2nd Exhibition in 1865; entered at New College, Oxford, 1865; took first class in Classical Moderations, 1867; and second class in Final School of Lit. Hum., 1869; B.A., 1870; M.A., 1872; Hon. D.D., 1889; was Assistant Master at Winchester College, from 1870 to 1880; Vicar of North Bradley, Wilts, from 1880 to 1885; Examining and Private Chaplain to the Bishop of Southwell, from 1885 to 1889; Vicar of St. Werburgh's, Derby, 1889; consecrated, in Westminster Abbey, Nov. 1, 1889, Bishop Suffragan of Derby for the diocese of Southwell.

WEST, Sir Algernon, K.C.B., son of Martin West, Esq., and Lady Maria West, was born April 4, 1832, was educated at Eton, and was appointed Private Secretary to Sir Charles Wood and the Duke of Somerset at the Admiralty, and Private Secretary to Sir Charles Wood and the Marquis of Ripon at the India Office. He was also Private Secretary to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone when Prime Minister in 1868; was Deputy Director of Indian Military Funds; appointed Commissioner of Inland Revenue in 1873; served on a Royal Commission on the Legal Departments; was appointed Deputy Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue in 1877; and Chairman of the Board in 1881. From this last post he retired in 1892. Sir Algernon West was formerly a Gentleman Usher of her Majesty's Privy Chamber; and is J.P. for Middlesex. He married Mary, daughter of Hon. George and Lady Caroline Barrington; and was created a C.B. in 1880, and K.C.B. in 1886.

WEST, The Hon. Sir Lionel Sackville. See SACKVILLE, BARON.

WESTCOTT, The Right Rev. Brooke Foss, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Durham, was born near Birmingham, in Jan., 1825, and was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he was successively Scholar and Fellow, and where he took his B.A. degree in Jan., 1848, as 23rd Wrangler in mathematical honours, and was bracketed first (with Dr. Scott of Westminster) in the First Class of the Classical Tripos, and was second Chancellor's Medallist. His university career was more than ordinarily distinguished, as he obtained the Battie University Scholarship in 1846; carried off Sir William Browne's medals for the Greek Ode in 1846, and again in the following year; and obtained the Bachelor's Prize for Latin Essay in 1847, and again in 1849. He obtained the Norrisian Prize in 1850, and was ordained deacon and priest in the following year by the Bishop of Manchester. He was elected Fellow of his college in 1849, and proceeded M.A. in 1851, B.D. in 1865, and D.D. in 1870. Dr. Westcott received from Oxford University the honorary degree of D.C.L. in 1881, and that of D.D. from Edinburgh University at its Tercentenary Commemoration in 1883; and from the University of Durham in 1890. He held an Assistant Mastership in Harrow School from 1852 to 1869, under Dr. Vaughan and Dr. Montagu Butler. In 1868 he was appointed Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Peterborough, and to a canonry of Peterborough Cathedral in 1869, when he left Harrow. He was elected Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, Nov. 7, 1870, on the retirement of Dr. Jeremie. Dr. Westcott was nominated honorary chaplain to the Queen in 1875, and a chaplain in ordinary in 1879. In May, 1881, was published under the title "The New Testament in Greek," the result of the 28 years' joint labours of Drs. Westcott and Hort upon the Greek text; volume II., containing the introduction, was published at a later date. On Oct. 21, 1882, he was elected to a fellowship at King's College, Cambridge. Dr. Westcott resigned his residentiary canonry at Peterborough in May, 1883; he was appointed one of the Archbishop of Canterbury's chaplains in the following month, and in October of the same year he was nominated to the canonry of Westminster, vacated by Canon Barry, then Bishop Designate of Sydney, Australia. In March, 1890, he was nominated to the Bishopric of Durham, in succession to his friend, Bishop Lightfoot, and consecrated to the See on May 1. He was one of the Company for the Revision of the Authorised Version of the New Testament. He sat on the late Ecclesiastical Courts Commission, and took a considerable share in the drawing up of the report. Dr. Westcott has published Commentaries upon the Gospel of St. John (reprinted from the "Speaker's Commentary"), upon the Greek Text of the Epistles of St. John and upon the Epistle to the Hebrews. "The Paragraph Psalter," arranged by him for the use of choirs, was published in 1879. His theological works further include "An Introduction to the Study of the Gospels," "The History of the Canon of the New Testament," "The Gospel of the Resurrection, "The Bible in the Church," "A History of the English Bible, "The Historic Faith, being Short Lectures on the Apostles' Creed," "The Revelation of the Risen Lord," "The Revelation of the Father," "Christus Consummator," "Social Aspects of Christianity," "The Gospel of Life," and "The Incarnation and Common Life;" and contributions to Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," and "Dictionary of Christian Biography."

WESTLAKE, John, Q.C., LL.D., was born at Lostwithiel, Cornwall, Feb. 4, 1828, and entered Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A. 1850, being sixth Wrangler, and sixth in the first class of the classical tripos. He was Fellow of his college, 1851-60, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn, 1854; became Q.C. 1874, and a Bencher of Lincoln's Inn; Honorary LL.D., Edinburgh, 1877. In 1885 he was elected Liberal M.P. for the Romford division of Essex, but was defeated in 1886 when he stood as a Unionist. Mr. Westlake has published "A Treatise on Private International Law, or the Conflict of Laws," 1858, 2nd ed., entirely re-written, 1880, 3rd ed., 1890; also many contributions to periodicals and Transactions. He was one of the founders and editors of the Revue de Droit International et de Législation Comparée, published at Brussels; a member of the Institute of International Law, and one of its Vice-presidents at the Munich meeting, 1883; Foreign Secretary of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science, and President of its Jurisprudence Department at the Birmingham meeting, 1884; and has been Professor of International Law in the University of Cambridge, in succession to Sir H. S. Maine, from 1888. Mr. Westlake married, in 1864, Alice, daughter of Thomas Hare, Esq., author of a "Treatise on Representation." Mrs. Westlake was a member of the London School Board from 1876 to 1888.

WESTMINSTER, The Dean of. See BRADLEY, THE VERY REV. G.G.

WEYMAN, Stanley John, romancist, was born at Ludlow, Shropshire, on Aug. 7th, 1855. He was educated at Shrewsbury School, and Christ Church, Oxford, and took his B.A. degree in 1877. He read for the Bar after leaving College, was called at the Inner Temple in Jan. 1881, and joined the Oxford Circuit, on which he practised for eight years. In 1889 appeared his first romance, entitled, "The House of the Wolf," which is based on episodes in French history. His health was at that time very poor, and he was obliged to spend some time abroad and relinquish his practice. In 1890 he published "The New Rector," a novel of the school of Anthony Trollope. This was succeeded by "The Story of Francis Chudde." In 1893 he established his reputation as a writer of romance by the publication of his celebrated novel, "A Gentleman of France," since translated into French, German and Swedish. In 1894 appeared "The Man in Black," "Under the Red Robe," a story referring to the age of Richelieu, and "My Lady Rotha," a story of the Thirty Years' War in Germany. Mr. Weyman is now writing a romance of the French Revolutionary epoch, entitled "The Red Cockade." He is unmarried, and lives at Ludlow.

WHEATLEY, Henry Benjamin, was born at Chelsea on May 2, 1838, and is the posthumous son of Mr. Benjamin Wheatley, book auctioneer, of 191, Piccadilly, London. He was educated privately, and was clerk to the Royal Society from 1861 to 1879, when he was appointed Assistant Secretary to the Society of Arts, a position which he still holds. He was also Assistant Secretary to the Royal Commission appointed for the British Section of the Chicago Exhibition, 1893. He was one of those who, under the lead of Dr. F. J. Furnivall, founded the Early English Text Society in 1864. He acted as Hon. Secretary from the foundation until 1872, and edited some of the publications of the Society. He published in 1862 a little book on "Anagrams," &c.; in 1870 "Round about Piccadilly and Pall Mall;" in 1880 "Samuel Pepys and the World he lived in;" and in 1889 "Remarkable Bindings in the British Museum." In 1884 he edited "Wraxall's Historical and Posthumous Memoirs" (5 vols. 8vo). In 1891 he completed for Mr. John Murray a work in three volumes, 8vo., entitled "London, Past and Present," which was based upon Peter Cuningham's "Handbook of London." He wrote as the first publication of the Index Society (1879) a pamphlet under the title of "What is an Index?" He is general editor of the Book-Lovers' Library, for which series he has written "How to form a Library" (1886), "How to Catalogue a Library," "The Dedication of Books to Patron and Friend" (1887), and "Literary Blunders" (1893). He has read papers before the Philological, New Shakespere, Folk-Lore, and Bibliographical Societies, and the Society of Arts, which have been printed in their Transactions. He was appointed Inspector of the Cambridge University Library by the Library Syndicate in the years 1877, 1878, 1879, and 1882, and reported to the Syndicate on the condition of the Library. Mr. Wheatley published in 1894 a new and complete edition of "Pepys's Diary" from the original MS.

WHISTLER, James Abbott McNeill, President of the Society of British Artists, born of American parentage, in 1835, and educated in the Military Academy at West Point on the Hudson, U.S.A. In 1857 he came to Europe, and entered the studio of Gleyre, in Paris. He began his artistic life as an etcher; and probably by his etchings, numbering between two and three hundred, he will be best remembered. But his paintings, especially his portraits—that of Señor Sarasate, for instance—have elicited the warmest admiration.

WHITAKER, William, B.A. (London), F.R.S., F.G.S., Assoc. Inst. C.E., was born in London, May 4, 1836, and educated at St. Alban's Grammar School, and at University College, London. He was appointed to the Geological Survey, April 1, 1857, and is the Senior Officer of the English Branch. He has written many Geological Survey Memoirs, notably "The Geology of the London Basin," 1872; and "The Geology of London, and of Part of the Thames Valley," 2 vols., 1889; also many papers in the Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society, in the Geological Magazine, and in other scientific publications, ranging from 1860 to 1893. Mr. Whitaker was Murchison Medallist of the Geological Society, 1886; and received a medal from the Society of Arts in 1890. He was editor of the Geological Record for several years, and is hon. member of the Geological Societies of Manchester and of Liverpool, and of various other local societies.

WHITE, The Hon. Andrew Dickson, American educator, was born at Homer, New York, Nov. 7, 1832. He graduated at Yale in 1853, and then travelled in Europe until 1856, when he returned to the United States and, after studying history for a year at Yale, became, in 1857, Professor of History and English Literature in the University of Michigan. This position he resigned in 1862 on account of ill-health. From 1863 to 1866 he was a member of the State Senate of New York. In 1867 he was chosen the first President of Cornell University (Ithaca, N.Y.), and he remained there until the condition of his health compelled him to retire in 1885. He visited Europe in 1867-68 for the purpose of examining into the organization of schools of agriculture and technology, and of purchasing books and supplies for Cornell. In 1871 he was appointed one of the U.S. Commission on Santo Domingo, and in the same year was Chairman of the N.Y. State Republican Convention. From 1879 to 1881 he was the American minister to Germany, and in 1888 was elected a Regent of the Smithsonian Institution in place of the late Asa Gray. He is also a non-resident professor of the Stanford University, in California. In 1892 he became American minister to Russia. President White gave very largely of his own means to Cornell University, and endowed the school of history and political science in that institution with his own valuable library, comprising 30,000 vols. and 10,000 pamphlets. Besides contributions to periodicals he has written "Outlines of a course of Lectures on History," 1861; "A Word from the North-west," 1863; "Syllabus of Lectures on Modern History," 1876; "The Welfare of Science," 1876; "Paper Money Inflation in France," 1876; "The New Germany," 1882; "On Studies in General History and in the History of Civilization," 1885; "A History of the Doctrine of Comets," 1886; and "European Schools of History and Politics," 1887. When in America his home is at Ithaca, New York.

WHITE, The Rev. Edward, was born in London, May 11, 1819, and educated at Mill Hill Grammar School and Glasgow College, where he gained the first honours in the Logic Class. His first settlement in the Congregational ministry was at Hereford, where he remained ten years; he then removed to London, and became minister of St. Paul's Chapel, Hawley Road, Kentish Town, where he remained for thirty-seven years. From 1859 to 1864 he was the editor of the Christian Spectator, and he has published the following books: "The Mystery of Growth," "The Minor Moralities of Life," and "Life in Christ." It is by the last-named that he is chiefly known: it has been translated into French and Danish, and has had a very wide circulation in America and in all English-speaking countries. The leading idea of the work is a revival of a doctrine prevalent in the Ante-Nicene Church, that man's soul is not now necessarily immortal, and therefore it must cease to exist unless renewed in eternal life through the work of redemption in Christ. Mr. White was chosen Merchants' Lecturer (an ancient Nonconformist foundation) in 1880, and Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales in 1886, and, in the same year, Professor of Homiletics in New College, London.

WHITE, William Henry, C.B., LL.D., F.R.S., &c., was born at Devonport, Feb. 2, 1845, and educated at the Royal School of Naval Architecture, South Kensington, when that institution was under the direction of the Lords of the Council, the Admiralty supporting it. He graduated at the head of the list of students in 1867, and received the highest diploma as naval architect (Fellow of the Royal School of Naval Architecture); was at once appointed to the Constructive Department at the Admiralty, where he remained until 1883, rising through the various grades to the rank of Chief Constructor. He was appointed Professor of Naval Architecture at the Royal School in 1870, and held that position there and at the Royal Naval College, concurrently with his Admiralty appointment, until 1881. He resigned his position in the Admiralty in March, 1883, receiving a special letter of thanks from the Lords Commissioners for past services. From 1883 to Oct. 1885, he was engaged in the organization and direction of the shipbuilding department of the Elswick Works of Sir William Armstrong & Co. During that period he designed and built a number of war-ships for foreign navies, with speeds exceeding any previously attained. He was invited by the Admiralty, in 1885, to assume the office of Director of Naval Construction, which he now holds, in conjunction with that of Assistant Controller of the Navy. He is the professional chief of the Royal Corps of Naval Constructors. During the period Mr. White has occupied this position there has been unprecedented activity in shipbuilding for the Royal Navy. The special programme of construction proposed by Lord Northbrook in 1885 was in its early stages at the date of Mr. White's appointment, and he had responsible charge of its execution. In 1888, the Imperial Defence Act provided for the construction of a special squadron for the protection of trade in Australasian waters, at a cost of £850,000. All these vessels were built from his designs and under his supervision. In 1889, the Naval Defence Act authorised the construction of 70 vessels at an estimated cost of £21,500,000, and during a period of five years. This great scheme has been successfully carried though, and on April 1, 1894, nearly all the vessels included in it were completed for service, the few not actually completed being in the later stages of progress. Altogether, during the eight years 1886-93, 131 ships have been added to the Royal Navy, or are in progress, for which Mr. White is the responsible designer. These ships carry nearly a thousand guns of considerable power, besides a very large number of smaller guns. Their aggregate displacements exceed 500,000 tons, and the combined power of their engines exceeds 900,000 H.P. Their total cost, exclusive of armaments, approaches 27 millions sterling. Such a rate of expenditure on new construction has probably never been reached before. Amongst the vessels designed by Mr. White are the largest, swiftest, and most powerful battle-ships and cruisers existing in modern war-fleets. His services in connection with the Naval Defence Scheme were recognised (in 1891) by her Majesty conferring on him the distinction of C.B. Mr. White is (an honorary) LL.D. of Glasgow University, a Fellow of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, Vice-President of the Institution of Naval Architects, Past-President of the Institute of Marine Engineers, Member of Council of the Institution of Civil Engineers and the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, Honorary Member of the Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland, the North-East Coast Institution of Engineers and Shipbuilders, and the Society of Engineers; Member of the Iron and Steel Institute, the Association Technique Maritime of France, the Royal United Service Institution, and the Royal Institution; Fellow of the Royal School of Naval Architecture, the Imperial Institute, and the Society of Arts. He is the author of a "Manual of Naval Architecture," which has become a standard work, and has been translated into German and Italian, and officially approved as a text-book for the English, German, Italian, and other navies; also, of a "Treatise on Shipbuilding," and of numerous memoirs and papers on the science and practice of shipbuilding, either published separately, or appearing in the "Proceedings" of the societies of which he is a member.

WHITEHEAD, Sir James, Bart., M.P., J.P., F.S.A., of Highfield House, Catford Bridge, Kent, is the younger son of the late Mr. James Whitehead, of Appleby, Westmoreland. He was born in 1834, and was educated at the Appleby Grammar School, at that time one of the leading schools of the North. He was engaged for many years in the Bradford trade, in the City of London. In 1879 he was largely instrumental in founding the Rowland Hill Benevolent Fund for Aged and Distressed Post-Office Servants, of which he is a trustee. For many years he has taken an active part in political matters, his views being those of an advanced Liberal; and in 1880, amongst other constituencies, he was unanimously invited to contest the Western Division of Kent. At that time, however, he declined to stand, his health being so precarious as to necessitate a prolonged voyage; and in 1881 he retired from business. In 1882 a requisition signed by nearly all the electors of the Ward of Cheap was presented to him, and he was elected Alderman of that ward without a contest. In 1884-5 he served the office of Sheriff of London and Middlesex, and was decorated by the King of the Belgians with the Knight Officership of the Order of Leopold, on his visit to Brussels in connection with the Congo Free State. In the same year the King of Servia invested him with the Knight Commandership of the Order of Takovo, for assistance given to the Servian Minister in this country, and for his warm advocacy of a Balkan Federation. In 1885 he was Master of the Fanmakers' Company. He is one of her Majesty's Lieutenants for the City of London; a Deputy-Lieutenant for the county of Westmoreland; and a Justice of the Peace for Kent, Westmoreland, and the County of London. He was for some time Chairman of the Visiting Justices of Holloway Prison, and one of the Visitors of the City of London Asylum, at Stone. He is a Governor of Queen Anne's Bounty, and of St. Bartholomew's, St. Thomas's, and other hospitals. He is a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and of the Royal Historical, the Royal Statistical, and other learned societies. In 1884 he was induced to become the Liberal candidate for North Westmoreland; and after the Redistribution Bill in 1885, and again in 1886, he contested that constituency; on each occasion suffering defeat by a small majority at the hands of the Hon. Wm. Lowther. He is an extensive traveller, having visited most of the countries of Europe, the United States, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and other British Colonies and dependencies, and is an ardent educationist, especially in regard to technical, agricultural, and higher commercial education. In Sept., 1888, he was elected Lord Mayor of London. On Nov. 9, he abolished the "circus" element, substituted a "state procession" for a "show," and instead thereof entertained 10,000 poor people. On the same evening his speech in favour of strengthening the Navy largely influenced the decisions of the Government in their proposals to that end. On the departure from England of Mr. Phelps, the American Minister, he gave a farewell banquet of great splendour to distinguished representatives of law, science, art and literature. When the Freedom of the City was conferred upon the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, and later upon Prince George of Wales, he gave banquets in their honour. He induced the Corporation to entertain the Shah on his visit to England, and was subsequently decorated with the Persian Order of the Lion and the Sun. In connection with the Paris Exhibition, he raised a fund and sent over seventy-five representative artisans to examine and report on the various exhibits connected with their respective crafts, for the instruction of their fellow-workmen and the improvement of English trade. He also visited Paris by special invitation, and was entertained by both the President of the Republic and the President of the Municipal Council of Paris. In return he himself gave a grand banquet to the Prime Minister and other distinguished Frenchmen. For his services in connection with the French Exhibition, he was at the end of the year decorated with the Commandership of the Legion of Honour. Arising out of this visit to Paris was the fund which he inaugurated for sending poor persons bitten by rabid animals to the Pasteur Institute, and for acknowledging in a practical form the gratuitous services of M. Pasteur to Englishmen. In recognition of his services to the Royal Agricultural Society, when acting as Chairman of the London Committee, he was presented with the Society's Gold Medal; and for his efforts towards the restoration of orchids in our homesteads and cottage gardens, and education in fruit-growing, he was presented with the Freedom of the Fruiterers' Company, and was immediately advanced to the office of Master. The great Fruit Show held in the London Guildhall in the autumn of 1890 was organised by him, and in many other ways he has contributed to the advancement of fruit culture in these countries. For the famine in China he raised a larger sum than was ever collected for sufferers in any foreign country, with the exception of the fund organised after the capitulation of Paris; and, as a mark of appreciation, he received a magnificent Tablet of Honour from the Viceroy of the two Kiang provinces of China. As chairman he established and organised a penny-a-week collection in London factories, shops, workshops and warehouses in aid of the Hospital Saturday Fund, from which a permanent increase of £30,000 or more is expected in the income of the hospitals. To meet the deficiency in the equipment of the Metropolitan Volunteers, he raised another fund by which he was enabled to award to all the Metropolitan regiments sums sufficient to complete their equipment and to pay off all debts which had been incurred by them in the purchase of accoutrements. In July, 1889, he established the Mansion House Association on Railway and Canal Traffic, to watch over the interests of Agriculture and Commerce in the revision of railway rates; and since his election to Parliament he has taken a prominent part in this and other important commercial matters; and has been the acknowledged representative of the Traders and Agriculturists in the matter of railway rates. When, in Sept., 1889, the prolonged Dock Strike had dislocated the trade of London, he formed a small Committee of Mediators which was ultimately enabled to bring the conflict to a close. In addition to these more noticeable features, his mayoralty was distinguished by an extraordinary activity in educational, philanthropic, and other meetings of public utility, by an unusual number of banquets and entertainments; and by an entire abstention from political controversy. At the end of his year he was created a baronet on the recommendation of Lord Salisbury; not, as has often happened, in connection with a royal visit, but "for highly valuable services during an eventful mayoralty." In 1889 he was further decorated by the King of Servia with the Grand Cordon of St. Sava for his efforts in the cause of education. In Jan., 1890, he retired from his candidature in North Westmoreland; but in March he was induced to accept a unanimous invitation to stand for Leicester, for which he was returned unopposed at the General Election of 1892. In 1890-91 he served the office of High Sheriff of the County of London, in succession to Mr. Alfred de Rothschild, and in May of 1891, he organised and carried through a large Conversazione and Exhibition in the Guildhall, at which the Prince of Wales was present, in celebration of the Jubilee of Penny Postage and in aid of the Rowland Hill Benevolent Fund. In 1860, he married Mercy M. Hinds, the fourth daughter of the late Mr. Thomas Hinds, of Bank House, St. Neot's, Hunts.

WHITEHOUSE, Frederic Cope, fourth son of the Right Rev. A. J. Whitehouse, D.D. (Oxon.), LL.D. (Cantab.), second Bishop of Illinois; born in New York, Nov. 9, 1842, educated at Columbia College, New York, graduated with highest honours; studied in France, Germany, and Italy; called to the Bar 1870. He has been known as Cope Whitehouse since 1881, from researches relating chiefly to the credibility of the Greek historians, the scientific knowledge of the ancient world, and the Semitic traditions associated with the name of Joseph. He discovered the Raiyan depression in the Egyptian desert, established its identity with the lost lake Mœris of the Ptolemaic maps, and drew plans for its restoration, claiming it as the missing factor in Egyptian prosperity; and, by putting Goshen to the south of Memphis, explains in a new and material sense the Semitic traditions, Hebrew and Arabic. Numerous papers by him, or relating to his works, have been published (see catalogue of British Museum), in various European languages including Greek, and in Arabic. He is a member of many learned societies, and was created Commander of the Osmanieh, 1888, for his services to Egyptology and exertions on behalf of the better control of the Nile.

WHITNEY, Mrs. Adeline D. (Train), American writer, was born at Boston, Sept. 15, 1824; and has published "Mother Goose for Grown Folks," 1860 (2nd edit., enlarged, 1882); "Boys at Chequasset," 1862; "Faith Gartney's Girlhood," 1863; "The Gayworthies," 1865; "Leslie Goldthwaite," 1866; "Patience Strong's Outings," 1868; "Hitherto," 1869; "We Girls," 1870; "Real Folks," 1871; "Pansies" (poems), 1872; "Other Girls," 1873; "Sights and Insights," 1876; "Just How: a Key to the Cook-Books," 1878; "Odd or Even?" 1880; "Bonnyborough," 1885; "Holy-Tides" (poems), and "Homespun Yarns" (collected stories), 1886; "Daffodils" (poems), 1887; "Bird-Talk" (poems), 1887; "Ascutney Street," 1890; and "A Golden Gossip," 1891. She was married to Seth D. Whitney, in 1843, and has since resided at Milton, Massachusetts.

WHITNEY, The Hon. William Collins, American Statesman, was born at Conway, Massachusetts, July 5, 1841. A.B. (Yale Coll.), 1863. He studied law at the Harvard Law School and began its practice in 1865 in New York City, where he still resides. From 1875 to 1882 he was Corporation Counsel of New York, and from 1885 to 1889 was in the Cabinet of President Cleveland as Secretary of the Navy.

WHYMPER, Edward, artist, author, and traveller, second son of the well-known engraver and water-colour painter, was born in London, April 27, 1840, and educated at Clarendon House School, and under private tuition. He was trained as a draughtsman on wood, but preferring active to sedentary employment, undertook a series of journeys which eventually changed the course of his life. In 1861 he ascended Mont Pelvoux (then reputed to be the highest mountain in France), and discovered from its summit another mountain 500 feet higher—the Pointe des Écrins—which is the loftiest of the French Alps, and was subsequently ascended by Mr. Whymper in 1864. Between the years 1861-5, in a series of expeditions remarkable for boldness and success, he ascended one peak after another of mountains till then reputed to be inaccessible. These expeditions culminated in the ascent of the Matterhorn (14,780 feet), July 14, 1865, on which occasion his companions, the Rev. Charles Hudson, Mr. Hadow, and Lord Francis Douglas, and one of the guides, lost their lives. In 1867 he travelled in N. W. Greenland with the intention of exploring its fossiliferous deposits, and, if possible, of penetrating into its interior. This journey was characterised by Sir Roderick Murchison as "truly the ne plus ultra of British geographical adventure on the part of an individual." No account of it has been published, although upon it Mr. Whymper obtained cones of magnolia, and the fruits of other trees, which demonstrated the former existence of luxuriant vegetation in these high northern latitudes. This fine collection of fossil plants was described by Professor Heer in the Transactions of the Royal Society in 1869; and the first set was secured for the British Museum, where a selection is now exhibited. In 1871 Mr. Whymper published an account of his Alpine journeys, under the title "Scrambles amongst the Alps in the Years 1860-69," London, 1871. In recognition of the value of this work, its author received from the King of Italy the decoration of Chevalier of the Order of SS. Maurice and Lazarus. In May, 1872, he again left Copenhagen for North Greenland, and spent the season among the mountains, returning on Nov. 9 to Denmark, bringing back from this, his second exploring journey in Greenland, rich collections, among them fine specimens of fossil wood. In the years 1879-80, Mr. Whymper travelled in the Republic of Ecuador, exploring, ascending, and measuring the Great Andes on and near the Equator. On that journey he made the first ascents of Chimborazo (20,517 feet), Sincholagua, Antisana, Cayambe and Cotocachi. The results were published in 1891-2, in three volumes, namely: 1. "Travels amongst the Great Andes of the Equator" (containing the narrative of the expedition); 2. "Supplementary Appendix to Travels amongst the Great Andes of the Equator," (containing descriptions of 133 new genera or species discovered on the journey); and 3. "How to use the Aneroid Barometer" (giving the results of prolonged investigation into the behaviour of this instrument in the field and under the air-pump). On the publication of these works, the Patron's Medal was awarded to Mr. Whymper by the Royal Geographical Society.

WICKHAM, Very Rev. Edward Charles, Dean of Lincoln, was born on Dec. 7, 1854, at Brook Green, Hammersmith, where his father, the Rev. Edward Wickham, formerly Fellow of New College, Oxford, and Chancellor's Prizeman, had a large and well-known school. His mother was the daughter of the Rev. C. White, Rector of Shalden and nephew of Gilbert White of Selborne. He was educated at Winchester College, from which he passed in 1852 to New College, Oxford, becoming in due course Scholar and Fellow. He was placed in the first class in the First Public Examination in 1854, and in the second class in the Second Public Examination in 1856, gaining the Chancellor's Prize for latin verse (1856), and a latin essay (1857). He became B.A. in 1857, M.A. in 1859. After spending two years as a tutor at Winchester College, he became Tutor of New College in 1859, and resided there till 1893, when he was elected to the Head-mastership of Wellington College in succession to the present Archbishop of Canterbury. This office he held till 1893. He was ordained Deacon in 1857, Priest in 1859. He was select preacher to the University of Oxford 1866, 1867, and 1883-85, and one of H. M. preachers at Whitehall in 1872 and 1873. In 1894 he was nominated to the Deanery of Lincoln. He was married in 1873 to Agnes, eldest daughter of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P. He has published several editions of Horace, the chief one being an edition of his whole poems in two volumes, printed at the Clarendon Press in 1874 and 1891. His other works are a volume of "Wellington College Sermons" (Macmillan, 1887), and "Notes on the Catechism, &c." (Rivington and Percival, 1892.)

WIEDEMANN, Professor Gustav Heinrich, born in Berlin, Oct. 2, 1826, where he has studied physics and chemistry since 1844; in 1850 he established himself as private teacher of physics; in 1854 he became Professor-in-Ordinary of physics at the University of Basel; 1863 at the Carolinum Technical Academy at Brunswick; 1866 Professor at the Technical Academy at Karlsruhe; 1871 Professor of physical chemistry; and 1887 Professor of physics at the University of Leipzig. His researches mostly concern the science of electricity and magnetism. Among other things they touch upon the relation between the transmission of heat and electricity, electric endosmose, the relation between the mechanical and magnetic condition of bodies, as well as the dependence of the latter on chemical combination. He wrote "Lehre von Galvanismus und Electro-magnetismus," 2 vols., 1860-61; and "Die Lehre von der Electricität," 4 vols., 1882-1885. Since 1877 Professor Wiedemann has edited the Annalen der Physik und Chemie, founded in 1790, continued by Gilbert and Poggendorff, and now cited as "Wiedemann's Annalen."

WILBERFORCE, Canon Albert Basil Orme, famous as an advocate of temperance and latterly as an eloquent preacher, is a son of the late Bishop of Winchester, and was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, where he graduated B.A. in 1865, M.A. in 1867. After taking orders, he was curate of Cuddesdon between 1866-67; chaplain to the Bishop of Oxford, 1866-70; curate of St. Jude, Southsea, 1861-71; chaplain to his father at Winchester, 1870-73; and from 1871-94 Rector of St. Margaret's, Southampton, a fine church built for him by his parishioners. In the autumn of 1894, on being appointed a Canon of Westminster, he was presented to the living of St. John's Church, Westminster.

WILBERFORCE, The Right Rev. Ernest Roland, D.D., Bishop of Newcastle, is the third surviving son of the late Right Rev. Samuel Wilberforce, successively Bishop of Oxford and of Winchester, by Emily, eldest daughter and heiress of the late Rev. John Sargent of Lavington House, near Petworth, Sussex. His lordship was born at Brighstone, in the Isle of Wight, Jan. 22, 1840, and educated at Harrow, and at Exeter College, Oxford (B.A. 1864, M.A. 1867, D.D. 1882). He was ordained deacon in 1864 by his father, as Curate of Cuddesdon, Oxfordshire; and was admitted with priest's orders by him in the following year. In 1866 he was appointed Rector of Middleton Stoney, Oxfordshire; but he resigned the living in 1869, and became domestic Chaplain to his father. He was appointed, by Mr. Gladstone, Vicar of Seaforth, near Liverpool, in 1873; and was nominated to a Canonry in Winchester Cathedral, with mission work attached to it, in 1878. He held the post of Sub-Almoner to her Majesty from 1871 till 1882, when he was appointed first Bishop of the newly-created See of Newcastle-on-Tyne. His lordship married, first, in 1863, Frances, daughter of Sir Charles Anderson, Bart. (she died 1870), and secondly, in 1874, Emily, only daughter of the late Very Rev. George Henry Connor, Dean of Windsor, and has issue, by his second marriage, three sons and three daughters.

WILDE, Henry, F.R.S., was born at Manchester, Jan. 19, 1833. His tastes led him in early life to engage in electro-mechanical pursuits, and enabled him, in 1858—1864, to make some improvements in lightning conductors and electric telegraphs, for which he obtained several patents. In 1864 he made the discovery that quantities of magnetism and electricity, indefinitely small, will induce quantities of these forces indefinitely great. To demonstrate this principle he constructed, in 1865, an electro-magnetic induction machine, or "dynamo," as the machine is now known, the electro-magnet of which was excited by an initial amount of magnetism sufficient to sustain a weight of forty pounds only, while the electro-magnet was excited to a degree estimated to sustain a weight of 25 tons. The electric current generated from this machine fused a rod of platinum two feet long and one-fourth of an inch in diameter, and produced from carbon points a powerful electric light for the first time from an electro-magnet excited entirely by magneto-electricity. (Proceedings of the Royal Society, 1866; Philosophical Transactions, 1867.) In 1869 he discovered the property of the alternating current to control and render synchronous the rotations of the armatures of a number of magneto-electric or "dynamo" machines, by which their united effect can be obtained without the use of mechanical gearing. (Philosophical Magazine, 1870.) Through his various inventions he successfully applied his discoveries to the production and employment of the electric search-light in the Royal Navy, as a protection against torpedoes and for other purposes; in which branch of the service, after lengthened trials at Spithead in 1874-75, by a joint War Office and Admiralty Committee, it was definitely adopted. His methods of producing, regulating, and projecting electric light have also been utilized in the navigation of the Suez Canal during the night, by which the carrying capacity of the canal has been nearly doubled. He has also largely applied his discoveries and inventions for generating electricity to the electro-deposition of metals from their solutions (1867—1880), which have superseded the voltaic battery in the electro-plating industries of Birmingham, Sheffield, and the United States, to the great advantage of the health and comfort of the operatives employed therein.

In 1878 he discovered some definite quantitative relations subsisting between astronomical and chemical phenomena, which revealed some remarkable multiple relations among the atomic weights of the natural groups of elements. The new atomic relations bear a much closer resemblance to homologous series in organic chemistry than had hitherto been observed; and just as Liebig predicted the existence of the homologous series of amides, and the properties of their compounds ten years before they were actually discovered, so the missing members of homologous series of elements have also been predicted. (Proceedings and Memoirs of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, 1878—1886). Mr. Wilde has been engaged in important experimental researches in terrestrial magnetism, and by his invention of the magnetarium has succeeded in reproducing the principal phenomena of the earth's magnetism. (Proc. Roy. Soc. 1890-94.) He has also made other contributions to theoretical and experimental physics, in the Philosophical Magazine, and in the Proceedings and Memoirs of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society. On the expiration of the several patents for his inventions relating to the generation of electricity he retired from the exercise of his profession of "Electrical Engineer," which style and title he was the first to adopt. He takes an active interest in the advancement of science and the higher education, and has given substantial aid to institutions for the promotion of these objects. For his discovery of the indefinite increase of the magnetic and electric forces from quantities indefinitely small, the Executive Council of the International Inventions Exhibition, London, 1885, awarded him a Gold Medal, although not an exhibitor. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1886, is President of the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, and a Governor of the Owens College, Manchester.

WILDE, Oscar, was born in Dublin in 1856, and is the son of Sir William R. Wills Wilde, M.D., Surgeon-Oculist to Her Majesty, Antiquarian, Statistician, and man of letters; and of Jane Francesca, Lady Wilde, known as a poetess, and woman of letters. Oscar Wilde was educated at Portora Royal School, Enniskillen; proceeded to Trinity College, Dublin, of which he became Scholar; and, having obtained the Berkeley Gold Medal for Greek, went to Oxford in 1874. He obtained first Demyship at Magdalen College; a First Class in Moderations, 1876; and a First Class in Greats; and the Newdigate Prize for an English poem on "Ravenna," 1878. He came to London, 1879, and was the originator of the Æsthetic movement. He published a volume of Poems in 1880; proceeded to America in 1881, where he delivered over 200 lectures on art. He subsequently lectured on art in England and in Paris. His drama of "Vera" was produced in New York in 1882; "The Happy Prince and other Fairy Tales" was published in 1888. He is also the author of "Dorian Gray," a novel of modern life; "The Portrait of Mr. W. H.;" a new theory about "Shakespeare's Sonnets;" "Intentions," a volume of essays and dialogues on art, containing the developed principles of his æstheticism; "The House of Pomegranates," a collection of "coloured poems in prose," as Mr. Wilde has himself described it; "The Sphinx," a long rhymed poem; and "Lord Arthur Savile's Crime," a volume of short stories. His blank-verse tragedy, "The Duchess of Padua," was produced in New York in 1891; and in 1892 he made his début in London as dramatist, with a brilliant comedy entitled "Lady Windermere's Fan." This was followed, in 1893, by a comedy entitled "A Woman of No Importance," which also achieved success. His one-act tragedy, written in French, entitled "Salomé," was prohibited by the Lord Chamberlain in London on account of the Biblical character of the subject. On account of this prohibition Mr. Wilde announced his intention of becoming a French citizen. The play has since been produced in Paris by Madame Sarah Bernhardt. His last dramatic successes are "An Ideal Husband," and "The Importance of Being Earnest." Mr. Wilde has travelled a great deal in Greece and Italy. He married, in 1884, Constance, daughter of Horace Lloyd, Esq., Q.C. Issue:—Cyril, born 1885; Vivian, born, 1886.

WILHELMINA, Hélène Pauline Marie (Queen of the Netherlands), the only child of King William III., by Queen Emma, his second wife, sister to the Duchess of Albany, was born at La Haye on Aug. 31, 1880, and succeeded to the throne, on the death of her father, on Nov. 23, 1890; her mother having, shortly before, in consequence of the King's illness, been appointed Queen Regent.

WILKINSON, The Right Rev. George Howard, Bishop of St. Andrews, was educated at Oriel College, Oxford (B.A. 1855; M.A. 1859). He was curate of Kensington, 1857-59; perpetual curate of Seaham Harbour, 1859-63, and of Auckland, Durham, 1863-67. In 1867 he was appointed incumbent of St. Peter's, Great Windmill Street, London; and in 1870 he became vicar of St. Peter's, Eaton Square. He was also an honorary canon of Truro Cathedral, and examining chaplain to the Bishop of that diocese. He was select preacher at Oxford 1879-81. In January, 1883, he was appointed to the See of Truro, which had become vacant by the promotion of Dr. Benson to the Archbishopric of Canterbury; and he was consecrated by the new Primate, in St. Paul's Cathedral, on April 25. On Feb. 9, 1893, he was elected Bishop of St. Andrews, Dunkeld, and Dunblane. He is the author of several works on devotional and other religious subjects.

WILKINSON, James John Garth, F.R.G.S., eldest son of James John Wilkinson, of Durham, born in Acton Street, Gray's Inn Lane, London, in 1812, was educated at a private school at Mill Hill, and Totteridge, Herts. He translated "Swedenborg's Animal Kingdom," 1843-4, and has written "Swedenborg: a Biography," 1849; "The Human Body and its Connection with Man," 1851; "The Ministry of Health," about 1856; "Unlicensed Medicine," a pamphlet; "Improvisations from the Spirit," 1857; "On the Cure, Arrest, and Isolation of Smallpox, by a New Method; and on the Local Treatment of Erysipelas, and all Internal Inflammations; with a Postscript on Medical Freedom," 1864; "Our Social Health," 1865; also, "Human Science, Good and Evil, and its Works, and Divine Revelation and its Works and Sciences," 1876; "The Greater Origins and Issues of Life and Death," 1885; "Revelation, Mythology, Correspondences," 1887; "Oannes according to Berosus: a Study in the Church of the Ancients," 1888; "The Soul is Form and doth the Body Make: Chapters in Psychology," 1890; "The African," 1891; "Epidemic Man and his Visitations," 1892.

WILKINSON, The Right Rev. Thomas, D.D., Roman Catholic Bishop of Hexham and Newcastle. He is the son of George Hutton Wilkinson, Esq., Recorder of Newcastle, and its first County Court Judge, who married Miss Elizabeth Jane Pearson, heiress of Harperley Park, a large estate in the county of Durham. He was born at Harperley on April 5, 1825. His early education was in the house of the Rector of Ovingham, on the river Tyne, and at the age of thirteen he went to Harrow. Having finished his studies there he spent four years at the University of Durham. His intention then was to take orders in the Church of England, and he joined a community of young men preparing for orders at the church of St. Saviour's in Leeds. After many doubts as to his religious position, unsatisfied by the arguments of Dr. Pusey and others whom he consulted, he, with several of his companions at St. Saviour's, was received into the Roman Catholic Church on Dec. 29, 1846. After a course of theological studies at Oscott, he was ordained priest at Ushaw College, near Durham, on Dec. 23, 1848. From that time till 1871 he led an uneventful life of constant toil among a mining population, first at Wolsingham, then at Crook, both places in the immediate neighbourhood of his father's estate. In 1865 he was elected Canon of the Chapter of Hexham. At length, in 1871, owing to the constant labours of his missionary life, his health broke down, and he was compelled to seek absolute rest. In 1887, his health having been partially restored, he was again brought to the front. Dr. Bewick, Bishop of Hexham and Newcastle, had died in 1886, and Provost Consitt, the Vicar Capitular, was administrator of the diocese during the vacancy, in July, 1887. In the election of a successor to the latter, the unanimous choice of the Chapter fell on Canon Wilkinson, who from that time governed the diocese till the arrival of the new Bishop, Dr. O'Callaghan, in March, 1888, becoming then Vicar-General and Provost of the Chapter. In consequence of the feeble health of Dr. O'Callaghan, Provost Wilkinson was in May, 1888, appointed by the Pope Bishop-Auxiliary with administrative powers, and was consecrated at Ushaw College on July 25. On the resignation of Dr. O'Callaghan he was made Bishop of Hexham and Newcastle, and was enthroned in his Cathedral Church at Newcastle on Feb. 18, 1890.

WILKS, Samuel, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., born at Camberwell, June 2, 1824, was educated at University College, London. He was created M.D. of the London University in 1850; became a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in 1856; a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1870; Physician to Guy's Hospital and Lecturer on Medicine; President of the Pathological Society; a Member of the Senate of the University of London, and of the General Medical Council; Vice-President of the Royal College of Physicians; and Physician to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. Dr. Wilks is the author of "Lectures on Pathological Anatomy," and "Lectures on Diseases of the Nervous System," and a "Biographical History of Guy's Hospital." He was formerly editor of the "Guy's Hospital Reports." He was member of the Medical Commission on the Contagious Diseases Act, 1868; a member of the Royal Commission on Contagious Diseases Act, 1871; was formerly Examiner in Medicine at the Royal College of Surgeons and at the University of London. Dr. Wilks has contributed papers on Alcoholism and Vivisection to the Contemporary Review and the Nineteenth Century. He delivered the Harveian Oration at the Royal College of Physicians, June 26, 1879.

WILLARD, E. S., was born at Brighton in 1853, and from an early age was bent on becoming an actor. His family had a certain old-fashioned horror of the theatre, and it was with much difficulty that the stage-struck boy induced them to let him enter upon a dramatic career. Mr. Willard obtained his first engagement at the Theatre Royal, Weymouth, and served an orthodox seven-years apprenticeship as a "stock" actor, playing every imaginable part from Macbeth to Claude Melnotte. During this period of his life he met Mr. Sothern at Glasgow, and went on tour with him, playing Captain De Boots in "Dundreary Married and Settled," Sir Edward Trenchard in "Our American Cousin," and Mr. Smith in "David Garrick." On Boxing Day, 1875, he made his first appearance before a London audience, at Covent Garden, as Alfred Highflyer in "A Roland for an Oliver." He was then for some years in the country, played a variety of parts, and fell in with such actors as Charles Mathews, Phelps, Toole, Helen Faucit, and Barry Sullivan. In 1881 he returned to London, and took part with Miss Helen Barry in a series of matinées at the Imperial Theatre. In the September of that year he was engaged to play Clifford Armytage in "The Lights of London," at the Princess's. This was "the first of the long series of gentlemanly villains that promised to claim Mr. Willard as their perpetual impersonator." He next played Philip Royston in "The Romany Rye," and The Spider in "The Silver King" at the same theatre, Mr. Wilson Barrett taking the title-rôle in the latter play. This latter part made Mr. Willard famous; and he followed it up by such notable impersonations as the wicked lawyer in "Hoodman Blind," the title-rôle in "Jim the Penman," and Geoffrey Delamayn in "Man and Wife." In 1888 Mr. Willard became lessee of the Shaftesbury Theatre, and as an "actor-manager" achieved a popular success in Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's "Middleman," in which play he created the part of Cyrus Blenkarn, the potter. "The Middleman" was succeeded by two other notable plays, "Dick Venables" and "Judah," in both of which Mr. Willard appeared in the title-rôle. On Nov. 10, 1890, Mr. Willard, having taken an engagement under Mr. A. M. Palmer, the New York manager, appeared in "The Middleman" at Palmer's Theatre, N.Y. Between this year and 1894 he made three consecutive tours in the United States, adding Hamlet to his repertory at Boston in October, 1893, and bringing out "John Needham's Double," by Joseph Hatton, "Wealth," by Henry Arthur Jones, "A Fool's Paradise," by Sydney Grundy, and "The Professor's Love Story," by J. M. Barrie. In the summer of 1894 he returned to London, and brought out the latter play at the Comedy, and then at the Garrick Theatre, where it enjoyed a long run.

WILLARD, Miss Frances Elizabeth, was born Sept. 28, 1839, at Churchville, near Rochester, New York. She is a graduate of the North-Western University, Chicago; and took the degree of A.M. from Syracuse University. In 1862 she was Professor of Natural Science at the North-West Female College, Evanston, Ill.; 1866-67 she was Preceptress in the Wesleyan Seminary, Leima, New York; 1868-70, travelled abroad; 1871, was President of the Women's College of North-Western University, and Professor of Æsthetics in the University; 1874, Corresponding Secretary of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union; 1878, President of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Illinois, and editor of the Chicago Daily Post; 1879, President of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union, the largest society ever organised, conducted and controlled exclusively by women. She made the tour of the Southern States in 1883, and introduced the Women's Christian Temperance Union, for the cause of Total Abstinence. In 1884 she helped to establish the Prohibition (of intoxicating drinks) Party, and was a member of its executive committee, which nominated Governor John P. St. John of Kansas for President of the United States. In 1887 Miss Willard was elected President of the Women's Council of the United States, formed from confederated societies of women; and in the same year she was elected to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopalian Church, but was not admitted to a seat, women-delegates never having received the privilege of admission. She is the author of the "Home Protection Movement," to give women in America the ballot on all temperance questions, and of the following works:—"Nineteen Beautiful Years," 1863; "Hints and Helps in Temperance Work," 1875; "Women and Temperance," 1883; "How to Win," 1886; "Women in the Pulpit," 1888; "Glimpses of Fifty Years: The Autobiography of an American Woman." The first edition of this work consisted of fifty thousand copies. She is the chief contributor to the Union Signal, Chicago, the official organ of the National Women's Christian Union. She is associated with Joseph Cook as editor of Our Day (Boston). She is one of the Board of Directors of the Women's National Temperance Hospital, Chicago; and the Women's Temperance Temple, Chicago. She has recently published her reminiscences, which contain an instructive account of the austerely Puritan surroundings among which she was brought up.

WILLIAM II., Frederick William Victor Albert, King of Prussia and Emperor of Germany, is the grandson of her Majesty the Queen of England, being the son of the Empress Frederick. He was born in Berlin, Jan. 27, 1859; was educated at Cassel, and passed through the ordinary discipline of that establishment until 1877, when he entered the University of Bonn. He succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, the late Emperor Frederick, June 15, 1888. His Majesty was married in Berlin, Feb. 27, 1881, to Augusta Victoria, Duchesse de Sleswig-Holstein-Sonderbourg-Augustenbourg, a niece of Prince Christian, and has six children. In Aug., 1889, and again in 1890, the Emperor paid a visit to the Queen at Osborne. On his return to Berlin in 1889 he received visits from the King of Sweden, the King of Denmark, the King of Italy, the Emperor of Austria, and the Czar of Russia. Subsequently he visited Athens, to be present at the marriage of his sister, the Princess Sophie, to the Crown Prince of Greece; thence he proceeded to Constantinople on a visit to the Sultan. In 1891 he paid state visits to Heligoland and to Amsterdam, and then crossed to England accompanied by the Empress. In July the imperial pair were splendidly entertained in London and the country, and the Emperor was presented with the Freedom of the City. In 1892 the Emperor met the late Czar at Kiel, and the interviews were of a cordial character. In July the Emperor visited Norway, and took part in a whaling expedition, and in the autumn he visited Cowes and took part in the yachting competition, at the same time visiting the Queen at Osborne. In October he paid a visit to the Emperor of Austria. In April, 1893, he attended the Silver Wedding of the King and Queen of Italy, and paid a visit to Leo XIII. In the summer he crossed to Cowes and won the Queen's Cup. During 1894 he visited the King of Italy at Venice, and in April paid a friendly visit to the Emperor of Austria. In August, 1894, he came to Cowes, but was not, as before, victorious in the race for the Queen's Cup. He afterwards visited Aldershot, and was present at a sham fight. While at Aldershot he called on the ex-Empress of the French. On Oct. 26, 1894, the Emperor accepted the resignation of Count von Caprivi, whom he had himself chosen to succeed Bismarck. The Emperor is indeed in no sense dependent on particular ministers. He aims at personal government in a manner unusual in this age of constitutionalism. Thus he has initiated many laws, notably those for the repression of drunkenness and immorality, brought before the Reichstag in 1892; and in his frequent speeches to the army or to his subjects he has shown himself a conscious imitator and ardent admirer of his warlike and despotic ancestry. In a famous and characteristically Prussian speech, delivered in 1892 at the annual banquet of the Brandenburg Diet, he urged all grumblers against him and his government to shake the dust of the Fatherland off their feet as soon as possible, and at the same time reaffirmed his determination to press forward "on the path Heaven had laid out for him," knowing that "He, our old ally of Rossbach and Dennewitz, will not now leave me in the lurch." On a subsequent occasion he urged the sons of Prussia, to "trustfully await the results which I may succeed in achieving in the course of the toilsome years to come." The Emperor, in addition to being a firm governor, is a man of the most varied interests and activities. In 1890 he inaugurated an International Labour Conference. In 1892 he interested himself in Primary Education, and introduced a Primary Education Bill, which he afterwards abandoned in the face of violent popular opposition. In 1893 he let it be plainly understood that he intended the new Army Bill to become law. Army matters naturally interest him more than any others. He has constantly issued orders of the day to the army or made them speeches, tending to keep up an intensely martial spirit among them. His latest rescript (Jan. 1895) bids them crown the standards of certain regiments engaged in the Franco-German war with oak-leaves on public occasions. But he is at bottom no hater of France or condemner of things French. At the time of President Carnot's death he showed his sincere sympathy with France by setting free two French officers imprisoned as spies in German fortresses, and he is reported to be a constant reader of French literature. German colonial politics have partially engrossed his attention during recent years. In 1890 he personally took possession of Heligoland, ceded to him by England, and considers it of great strategic importance. He has also concluded commercial treaties with Austria, Switzerland, Italy and other powers. To the cause of German culture, especially to science, he has been a liberal patron, and in recent years has ennobled many prominent scientific men. He is a good violinist, and recently composed a song, "Sang an Ægir," which has had an enormous sale. He has even ventured into the domain of theology, and has published a collection of sermons delivered by him to the men of his yacht Hohenzollern, and in Feb., 1892, he presented a richly-bound copy of the same to the Pope.

WILLIAMS, Charles, was born at Coleraine, Ireland, May 4, 1838, of a family originally of Penrhyn and Worcestershire. He was educated at Belfast Academy under Dr. Bryce, and at Greenwich under Dr. Goodwin, and was appointed leader-writer and reviewer on the Evening Herald in 1859. He became a special correspondent of the Standard in Oct., 1859, and was senior special correspondent of that journal till Jan. 1, 1870, when he accepted the first editorship of the Evening Standard, but he resigned in 1872 to resume his old post. He retired from the Standard in 1874, in consequence of a change of management. Mr. Williams saw some service while young in South and Central America, and in 1859-65 was a devoted volunteer, while he accompanied the head quarters of the army of the Loire at the beginning of the second phase of the Franco-German war, and was one of the first two correspondents in Strasburg after the fall of that city in 1870. In 1877 he went to Armenia as correspondent on the staff of Ghazi Mukhtar Pacha, and published an account of his experience in a work entitled "The Armenian Campaign: a Diary of the Campaign of 1877 in Armenia and Kurdistan," London, 1878. He served afterwards as a special correspondent at the defence, by Mukhtar Pacha, of the lines of Constantinople, and was with the head-quarters of General Skobeleff at the moment when the Treaty of San Stefano was signed. He subsequently went through the task of recording the phases of the Berlin Congress, and in Nov., 1878, proceeded to Afghanistan, where he visited Candahar, and wrote some "Notes on Frontier Transport in India." He accompanied the Nile expedition, and attracted some attention by a severe criticism of Sir Charles Wilson for his conduct of the force told off to advance upon Khartoum. He was the only English correspondent with the Bulgarians under Prince Alexander in the 1885 campaign against Servia. Altogether he has taken part in seven campaigns. Among his works are a short treatise on "England's Defences," a "Life of Sir Evelyn Wood," essays on military questions in the United Service Magazine, and some reprints on ecclesiastical questions; besides articles and stories in Temple Bar, and other periodicals. He was for a time the managing editor of the Evening News, and was unanimously elected chairman of the London District of the Institute of Journalists for the year 1893-4, during which the Conference of that body met in London.

WILLIAMS, Sir Edward Leader, M.Inst.M.E., and M.Inst.C.E., was born on April 6, 1828. His father was the engineer of the River Severn Navigation, and it was on those works that he began his professional career, which has from the first been mainly devoted to river and canal improvements. He worked under his father from 1844 to 1850, when he was appointed engineer on the Great Northern Railway, at that time being cut through Lincolnshire. He was then employed on the improvement of Shoreham Harbour, and afterwards was for several years attached to the works of the Admiralty Pier at Dover. In 1856 Mr. Leader Williams was appointed engineer to the River Weaver Trust. Here he completed important and extensive works, during the latter course of which he was appointed engineer to the Bridgewater Navigation Company, which had bought the Bridgewater Canals and the Mersey and Irwell Navigation from the Bridgewater Trustees. During his tenancy of this new position, Mr.

Leader Williams had under consideration the possibility of so improving the Mersey and Irwell navigation as to open it to large sea-going vessels. On June 27, 1882, a meeting was held at the house of the late Mr. Daniel Adamson, which led to the formation of a Provisional Committee "to consider the question of providing a waterway for large vessels from Manchester to the sea." Mr. Hamilton H. Fulton, C.E., and Mr. Leader Williams were subsequently invited to assist in a preliminary survey of the Irwell and Mersey Navigation, and were then appointed as joint engineers to the projected undertaking. But they differed considerably as to the best course to be pursued: Mr. Fulton advocating a tidal waterway, whilst Mr. Leader Williams suggested a scheme for using the tidal estuary for some distance, and from that point cutting a canal with four sets of locks to raise ships gradually to the level of Manchester (i.e., some sixty feet above the sea). Mr. Williams's scheme at last triumphed, and on Sept. 26, 1882, it was resolved to construct what is now known as the Manchester Ship Canal. For twelve years, till the formal opening of the canal by the Queen in the summer of 1894, Mr. Leader Williams has been its chief engineer. He has had to surmount every variety of obstacle, but the triumphant completion of his vast design marks him out as one of the ablest and most practical men in his profession. He received the honour of knighthood in July, 1894.

WILLIAMS, J. Carvell, M.P., of Crouch End, Hornsey, is the eldest son of the late Mr. John Allen Williams, of Stepney, by his marriage with Mary, daughter of the late Mr. John Carvell, of Lambeth, and was born in 1821. He was educated at a private school, and afterwards spent some years with a firm of proctors in Doctors Commons, where he acquired considerable knowledge of ecclesiastical matters. It was the opposition of the Nonconformists to the Factories Education Bill of Sir James Graham in 1843, and afterwards to the Minutes of Council on Education, which first brought Mr. Williams into prominence. In 1847, when but twenty-six years of age, he was appointed Secretary to the "British Anti-State-Church Association," afterwards designated the "Society for the Liberation of Religion from State Patronage and Control," but popularly known as the "Liberation Society." That office he held for thirty years, and on his resigning in 1877, he was appointed Chairman of the Society's Parliamentary Committee, and Deputy Chairman of the Executive Committee; which offices he still holds. At the general election of 1885 he stood as the Liberal candidate for the newly-created Southern Division of Nottingham, and was returned by a majority of 363. During the short time that Parliament lasted he succeeded in passing the Act for extending the hours within which marriages may be celebrated from twelve (noon) to three o'clock in the afternoon. At the dissolution of 1886 he was defeated by the Conservative candidate whom he had previously opposed; but shortly after he was invited to become the Liberal candidate for the Mansfield Division of Nottinghamshire, in prospect of the retirement of Mr. Cecil Foljambe. At the election in 1886 he was returned for that constituency by the large majority of 2,496. He is an active member of the Committees of the Dissenting Deputies for protecting the civil rights of Dissenters, the Congregational Union, the National Liberal Club, and other public bodies, and is also President of the Hornsey Liberal Association. Ecclesiastically, he is a Congregationalist, and has been deacon of churches at Surbiton and Stroud Green. He is one of the authors of "Disestablishment" in the "Imperial Parliament Series" (edited by Mr. Sydney Buxton, M.P.). He has also written several pamphlets on the Burials question, and various political tracts, and is a contributor to some of the public journals; besides being one of the editors of the Liberator. In 1849 Mr. Carvell Williams married Anne, the third daughter of the late Mr. Richard Goodman, of Hornsey, by which union he has had five sons and daughters; of whom only one survives.

WILLIAMS, The Hon. Sir Roland Vaughan, B.A., Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, is a son of the late Right Hon. Sir Edward Vaughan Williams, formerly one of the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas, and was born in 1838. He was educated at Oxford, where he graduated B.A., and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Michaelmas Term, 1864, when he chose the South-Eastern (then the Home) Circuit, also practising as a special pleader, and at the Surrey Sessions. He received the honour of silk in 1889, and became a Judge in succession to Mr. Manisty in 1890. He has for some years presided with severe impartiality over the Bankruptcy Court. A recent rumour to the effect that he was to be removed thence called forth violent protests from the press. Sir R. Vaughan Williams married, in 1865, Laura S., youngest daughter of the late Mr. Edmund Lomax, of Netley, Surrey.

WILLIAMSON, Professor Alexander William, Ph.D., F.R.S., LL.D., Dublin and Edinburgh, born May 1, 1824, was educated chiefly in his father's house, by masters in London, Paris, and Dijon; and for a very short time at Kensington Grammar School, and at foreign schools. From the age of seventeen he studied in the Universities of Heidelberg and Giessen, under Gmelin and Liebig. At Giessen he published his first chemical researches. He afterwards spent three years in Paris studying the higher mathematics. In 1849 he was appointed Professor of Practical Chemistry in University College, London; and in 1855, Professor of Chemistry in the same college, while still retaining the Chair of Practical Chemistry. Soon after his first appointment at University College, Professor Williamson published his researches on "Etherification and the Constitution of Salts." The result of these researches had a considerable influence on the theories of chemical action, and they have been since adopted by the chief English and foreign chemists. For these important and successful labours the Royal Medal of the Royal Society was awarded to him in 1862. He has twice been President of the Chemical Society. In 1873 he was elected President of the British Association for the Advancement of Science. The same year he was elected Foreign Secretary of the Royal Society, a Corresponding Member of the French Academy, and a Fellow of the Berlin Chemical Society. In 1874 he was elected Treasurer of the British Association, on the retirement of Mr. Spottiswoode. In Nov., 1875, the Royal Academy of Science at Berlin elected him a corresponding member of the Section of Physics and Mathematics. He was appointed member of the Senate of the University of London. In April, 1876, he was appointed Chief Gas Examiner to the City of London. The University of Dublin conferred on him the honorary degree of LL.D. in 1878. The University of Edinburgh conferred on him the degree of LL.D. since. He is a member of the Royal Society of Edinburgh and of the Royal Irish Academy. Professor Williamson took an active part in promoting the establishment of degrees of science at the University of London; and for some years held, conjointly with the late Professor Wm. Allen Miller, the office of Examiner in Chemistry. He is also a corresponding member of the Reale Accademia dei Lincei in Roma, LL.D. of Glasgow, of the Royal Society of Science at Göttingen, and of the Reale Accademia delle Scienze di Torino. Dr. Williamson has lately taken an active part in promoting the formation of a Teaching University in London. In 1887 Professor Williamson resigned his professorship at University College, and was elected Emeritus Professor. In 1889 he resigned his post of Foreign Secretary to the Royal Society. He has written "Chemistry for Students;" various papers on "Etherification;" "The Development of Difference the Basis of Unity," being the inaugural lecture to the Faculty of Arts at University College on his appointment there in 1849; "On the Atomic Theory;" "The Composition of the Gases evolved by the Bath Spring called King's Bath;" a paper "On a New Method of Gas Analysis," jointly with W. J. Russell, Ph.D.; "On the Unit Volume of Gases;" "On the Classification of the Elements in relation to their Atomicities;" "Experimental Science the Basis of General Education;" "A Plea for Pure Science;" "Address to the British Association" at Bradford, 1873. He married, in 1855, the third daughter of Professor T. Hewitt Key, F.R.S., of University College.

WILLIAMSON, Benjamin, A.M., F.R.S., D.C.L., Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Dublin, was born in 1827, at Cork; educated at Kilkenny College and Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated in 1848 as First Senior Moderator in Mathematics and Mathematical Physics. He was elected Fellow of Trinity College, in 1852, and appointed a College Tutor in 1858. In 1871 he published "A Treatise on the Differential Calculus," which reached, in 1892, its 8th edition. In 1872 he produced a companion volume on the "Integral Calculus," of which the 6th edition was published in 1891. In 1884, in conjunction with F. A. Tarleton, F.T.C.D., he brought out a "Treatise on Dynamics," of which a 2nd edition appeared in 1889. Mr. Williamson was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1879; and, in 1884, was appointed to the Professorship of Natural Philosophy in his University. In 1892 the honorary degree of D.C.L. was conferred on Mr. Williamson by the University of Oxford. Mr. Williamson contributed several articles to the 9th edition of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," of which may be mentioned those on the "Infinitesimal Calculus," "Calculus of Variations," "Variable Complex," and "MacLaurin." He also contributed articles to the Quarterly Journal of Mathe- matics, Hermathena, as well as to other scientific journals.

WILLIAMSON, Charles Norris, journalist and author, was born at Exeter, Devonshire, in 1857, being the son of the Rev. Stewart Williamson, a Nonconformist minister. He was educated at University College School, London, and passed into University College, where he took up the science course. For three years he devoted himself to the study of engineering, going through a practical training in a Lambeth workshop, and undertaking engineering work in Belgium and France. In 1880 Mr. Williamson abandoned engineering for journalism; and after the usual difficulties and struggles, obtained a post on the editorial staff of the Examiner. When the Examiner came to an end Mr. Williamson joined the editorial staff of the Graphic, on which he remained for several years. Resigning his appointment in 1889, Mr. Williamson formed a company and collected capital to produce a new illustrated paper; and in February, 1891, he brought out Black and White, remaining Managing Director and Managing Editor until July, 1893, when he resigned his offices. On the death of Thomas Carlyle, in 1884, Mr. Williamson wrote, in collaboration, "Memorials of the Life and Letters of Thomas Carlyle" (two volumes); and he has been a constant contributor to the London press.

WILLIAMSON, Professor William C., biologist and geologist, LL.D., F.R.S., Member of the Royal Swedish Academy, and many other learned societies, was born at Scarborough on Nov. 24, 1816; his father was for some time head-gardener to the then Earl of Mulgrave at Lyth Castle near Whitby. Having laboured indefatigably in exploring the geology and zoology of the coast of Yorkshire, and made a rich collection of its fossils and recent shells, he was, in 1828, appointed Curator of the well-known Museum of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Scarborough, amongst the collections of which much of his son's early youth was beneficially spent. Destined for the medical profession, he was articled as a pupil to a medical man in his native town, but at the same time he carried on various researches. He contributed to Lindley and Hutton's Fossil Flora numerous figures and descriptions of the new fossil plants obtained from the deposits of Gristhorpe Bay, and at the same time he discovered that the generalisation of Smith, viz., that strata could be identified by means of their fossil contents, required to be carried much further, since thin zones of each stratum formed boundary lines, having their distinctive fossils. These observations were recorded in three memoirs, published by the Geological Society of London, "On the Vertical Distribution of the Organic Remains of the Yorkshire Coast." These new observations have since been confirmed by other observers. He also contributed one memoir to the Zoological Society of London on the "Birds of the Yorkshire Coast," as well as published a description of the well-known Tumulus and its contents, then recently opened on Gristhorpe Cliff. In 1835 he accepted the Curatorship of the Museum of the Manchester Natural History Society. On reaching Manchester, his attention was at once directed to the local geology, and soon resulted in the publication, in the Philosophical Magazine, of a Memoir on the Remarkable Limestones of Ardwick, which occupied the uppermost part of the Carboniferous strata in that neighbourhood. In 1838 he resumed his medical studies, first in the Manchester Medical School, Pine Street, and afterwards in the University College of London; and in Jan., 1841, commenced as a medical practitioner in Manchester. Soon after that, he began a series of investigations amongst the Recent Foraminifera, the results of which were a succession of memoirs on their minute organisation, culminating, in 1848, in the publication, by the Ray Society, of his monograph on the Recent Foraminifera of Great Britain, and in a memoir on the minute organisms found in the marine mud of the Levant. This latter memoir contained the first announcement of the existence in some of the deeper seas of what is now known as the Foraminiferous Ooze. The study of some histological features of human bones and teeth led to an examination of the scales and bones of recent and fossil fishes. Two memoirs on these subjects were published in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, in which he announced his conclusion that the scales and dermal teeth of fishes were the homologues of the oral teeth of the mammalia, the latter being but the relics of the dermal system so extensively developed in fishes. The publication of these two memoirs led to his election as a F.R.S. In 1855 he visited Paris for the purpose of studying the Diseases of the Ear under M. Merrière, the distinguished French aurist, and on his return he founded at Manchester the still flourishing Institution for Diseases of the Ear, to which for ten years he acted as Senior Surgeon. In 1851 the Owens College of Manchester began its career, when Mr. Williamson was elected its first Professor of Biology and Geology. But the strain of three such subjects was too great for their duties to be performed by one man, and he first resigned the chair of Geology, and still later that of Zoology; and for many years past his academic labours have been confined to the Professorship of Botany. Circumstances then drew his attention to the Carboniferous Plants of Lancashire and Yorkshire. The result of these later studies has been the publication, in the Philosophical Transactions, of nineteen memoirs, "On the Organisation of the Fossil Plants of the Coal Measures." On receiving the sixth of this series, the Royal Society recognized them by awarding him their Royal Medal. The Wollaston Gold Medal of the Geological Society was awarded to Dr. Williamson in 1890. At the meeting of the British Association at Southport he was President of the Geological section. Dr. Williamson in 1884 and 1885 was President, and for several subsequent years Vice-President, of the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester. The University of Edinburgh conferred upon him the degree of LL.D. The Göttingen Academy of Sciences elected him one of its foreign members; the Royal Society of Sweden elected him to the place left vacant by the death of Asa Gray. He is an honorary member of the Physical and Natural History Society of Geneva, of the Royal Microscopic Society of London, and Corresponding Member of the Quekett Microscopical Club. In March, 1892, Professor Williamson was elected Emeritus Professor of Botany in the Owens College on his retirement from his academic labours, and his removal to London, where he now resides; and where he has commenced a new series of memoirs on the carboniferous plants, in conjunction with Dr. Scott, the Honorary Director of the New Botanical Laboratory, the first of which was read at the Royal Society on Feb. 8, 1894.

WILLS, The Hon. Sir Alfred, a Judge of the Queen's Bench Division, was born in 1828; entered the Middle Temple, by which Inn he was called to the Bar in 1851; was made Q.C. in 1872; and appointed Judge in 1884. He was made President of the Railway Commission in 1888.

WILSON, Sir Charles Rivers, G.C.M.G., C.B., was born in London, Feb. 19, 1831, and educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford. He was appointed Clerk in the Treasury in Feb., 1856; was Private Secretary consecutively to Mr. James Wilson and Mr. George Alexander Hamilton, Secretaries of the Treasury; Acting Private Secretary to Mr. Disraeli, when Chancellor of the Exchequer, from Aug., 1867, to Feb., 1868; Private Secretary to Mr. Lowe, Chancellor of the Exchequer, from Dec., 1868, to April, 1873; and was appointed Comptroller-General of the National Debt Office in April, 1873. Mr. Wilson represented (with the late Professor Graham) her Majesty's Government at the International Coinage Commission in 1867, and acted as Secretary to the Royal Commission appointed to examine the question of an International Coinage in 1868. On the return of Mr. Cave to England from his financial mission to Egypt, Mr. Rivers Wilson, at the request of the Khedive, went to Egypt in March, 1876, with the view of his acceptance of a financial post in that country; but after the issue of the decree of May 7, 1876, by which an arbitrary readjustment of the Public Debt of Egypt was proposed, he returned to England, and resumed his post at the National Debt Office. On July 29, 1876, he was appointed one of the British Government Administrators of the Suez Canal Company; on Jan. 22, 1877, he was appointed a Royal Commissioner for the Paris Exhibition of 1878; on March 30, 1878, he was appointed Vice-President, and in the absence of M. de Lesseps acted as President, of an International Commission of Inquiry, instituted by the Khedive, at the instigation of the foreign governments, to examine the resources of Egypt, and propose measures for remedying the financial disorder in that country. The Report of the Commission, Aug. 19, 1878, traced the whole of the mischief to the system of personal administration by the Viceroy, and proposed that his Highness should surrender his estates and those of his family to make good the deficit in the revenue, and pay the large floating debt of the country. The immediate consequence of the presentation of their Report was an acceptance by the Khedive of all its conclusions, and a formal announcement to Mr. Rivers Wilson of the determination of his Highness to abandon his actual system of government for one more in conformity with European experience, and to govern in future by means of a responsible ministry. The formation of the new cabinet was entrusted to Nubar Pacha, who offered to Mr. Rivers Wilson the post of Finance Minister. With the consent of her Majesty's Government, Mr. Rivers Wilson accepted this position

(Sept., 1878) until Jan. 1, 1881, when he would have been at liberty to return to his office of Comptroller-General of the National Debt Office. In April, 1879, however, the Khedive struck the blow he had long been meditating. He dismissed Mr. Rivers Wilson and M. de Blignières; and soon afterwards Mr. Rivers Wilson was recalled by the English Government in order to resume his duties at the National Debt Office. He was created a K.C.M.G. in Jan., 1880. On April 5 in that year the new Khedive, Tewfik Pacha, signed a decree appointing Sir Rivers Wilson President of the International Commission of Liquidation. In Oct., 1880, he received the royal licence and authority to accept and wear the insignia of the First Class of the Turkish Order of the Medjidieh. In May, 1881, Sir Rivers Wilson was appointed a Royal Commissioner for the negotiation of a Treaty of Commerce with France; and in March, 1885, he was one of the delegates who assembled in Paris for drawing up an Act relative to the navigation of the Suez Canal. He was also one of the British delegates at the Monetary Conference at Brussels in Nov. and Dec., 1892. He was made a G.C.M.G. on March 15, 1895.

WILSON, Sir Charles William, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., C.B. (Civ.), D.C.L. (Oxon), LL.D. (Edin.), M.E. (Dublin), F.R.S., F.R.G.S., &c., a Colonel in the Royal Engineers, was born in March, 1836, and entered the Royal Engineers in 1855. After passing through the usual grades, he became Colonel in 1883, and was granted the rank of temporary Major-General in 1893. Before that date, however, he had gained distinction of a special kind, first as Secretary to the North American Boundary Commission, then for his surveys of Jerusalem and the Sinaitic Desert, then by his work in connection with the Palestine Exploration Fund, then as Director of the Topographical Department of the War Office, then by his organization of the Intelligence Department, in which he served as Assistant Adjutant-General, then as Director of the Survey of Ireland, then as British Commissioner on the Servian Boundary Commission, and then as Consul-General appointed in pursuance of the Anglo-Turkish Convention in Asia Minor, a post which he held from 1879 to 1882. He served in the Egyptian Expedition of 1882, for which he obtained a Medal and a Bronze Star; and was afterwards attached to Lord Dufferin's Special Mission in Egypt. When the Soudan Expedition was sent out, Sir Charles Wilson was appointed Chief of the Intelligence Department. He was present at the actions of Abu Klea and Gubat, and when Sir Herbert Stewart received his fatal wound, the command of the Desert Column devolved upon Sir Charles Wilson. He led the advance to the Nile, fought the action at Metammeh, and commanded the force in its attempt to reach Khartoum and to rescue General Gordon; the story of which he has told in his book "From Korti to Khartoum." For his services he was thanked by Government, and in 1885 was made a K.C.B. He is now Director-General of the Ordnance Survey of the United Kingdom.

WILSON, George Fergusson, F.R.S., F.C.S., descended from old Scotch families, was born at Wandsworth Common, March 25, 1822, and was educated at private schools, at Wandsworth and at Streatham. He has made many useful inventions which have been patented, some of which still hold their own, but the invention for which he is best known is the distillation of glycerine. Before this invention, glycerine, even that sold at very high prices, was so impure as to be for most purposes comparatively useless; by distillation in a current of superheated steam, Mr. G. F. Wilson obtained for the first time pure glycerine, now of the greatest value. On Nov. 30, 1854, a short paper by him "On the value of steam in the decomposition of neutral fatty bodies," was read before the Royal Society, and printed in the Proceedings; and at the meeting of the British Association in Glasgow, in 1855, he read a paper on distilled glycerine, which concluded with a prophecy that "Pure glycerine will yet take its place among the most valued of modern products; and produced, as it will be, in great quantities, it will be recognised in the arts as well as in medicine as a new, real blessing to mankind." Mr. G. F. Wilson has long been known in the Horticultural World for his orchard house cultivation; and for exhibiting lilies, for which, between 1867 and 1883, he received twenty-five first-class certificates. He filled many posts in the Royal Horticultural Society; and was for a time Treasurer; member of the Expenses Committee; Chairman of the Fruit and afterwards of the Floral Committee; and member of the Scientific Committee. Mr. G. F. Wilson became a member of the Society of Arts in 1845, and was eight years on the Council; he lectured twice before the Society. He was made a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1855, of the Chemical Society in 1855, of the Linnæan in 1875, and of the Institute of Chemistry at its commencement. He became a member of the Athenæum Club in 1867.

WILSON, Miss Hilda, was born in Monmouth, in 1860. Her father was a music-master. Possessing considerable talent, Mr. Wilson's services were held in such request as to necessitate his removal to the cathedral city of Gloucester; and the change of residence afforded his young daughter many more educational privileges, as far at least as art was concerned, than her birthplace could by any possibility have furnished. The Choral Society where, as time advanced, she could take part in rehearsing choruses of the great masters, opened up a way for her first appearance in public, for at one of its concerts, Hilda Wilson, a girl of fourteen years of age, first sang before a general audience. She came in 1879 to London to study at the Royal Academy of Music, where she was instructed in the art of singing by Mr. William Shakespeare. A year after she was permitted to enter upon public duties, and consequently was enabled to accept the offer of an engagement as one of the contralto soloists at the Gloucester Festival of 1880. Returning to the Academy, she prosecuted her studies with so much zeal as to win the "Westmoreland Scholarship," two years in succession, besides obtaining the "Parepa-Rosa Gold Medal," together with the silver and bronze Medals awarded at annual examinations of the institution. Upon leaving in 1882, she was elected an "Associate" of the Academy. In 1883 Miss Wilson again sang as second contralto at the Gloucester Festival; and in the year following, served in the same capacity at the Worcester "Music Meeting." In 1887 she was, however, engaged as principal contralto at the Norwich Festival, and in 1888 appeared as leading contralto at the Lincoln, Gloucester, and Leeds festivals. Since then she has made constant appearances at the leading concerts in London and the provinces.

WILSON, The Ven. James Maurice, was born in 1836. His father, the Rev. E. Wilson, who was a double first-class at Cambridge in 1825, and a Fellow of St. John's, was for many years Vicar of Nocton, Lincoln, and honorary Canon of Lincoln. Mr. Wilson was educated at King William's College, Isle of Man, and at Sedbergh Grammar School, and went up to St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1855. He was bracketed for the 2nd Bell Scholarship in 1856, with Henry Sidgwick, who was afterwards Senior Classic. He took his degree in 1859, as Senior Wrangler. He was appointed by Dr. Temple to the post of Natural Science Master at Rugby, and in that capacity, and subsequently as Senior Mathematical Master, he worked at Rugby for twenty years. During those years he was an occasional contributor to the Geological and Astronomical Societies' Journals, and founded the Temple Observatory at Rugby. His chief Astronomical work is one in which he was associated with two other amateurs, the "Handbook of Double Stars." In 1879 he was offered the Headmastership of Clifton College, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Percival. Since that time until 1890, when he retired from that position, he has been more before the world as the Head Master of a large and very active school, and as a preacher and writer, than as a scientific man. A volume of his school sermons in two series, of which the second appeared in 1891, has been published by Macmillan; also volumes of Essays and Addresses and Contributions to Religious Thought. He is understood to have taken much interest in Bristol, in its religious and philanthropic and educational work. He was Chaplain to the present Bishop of London, from 1885 to 1890. In 1890 he was presented to the living of Rochdale in the Diocese of Man, and in the same year became Archdeacon of Man and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Man.

WILSON, Hon. William L., LL.D., American statesman, was born in Jefferson Co., Virginia, May 3, 1843, and was educated at Charlestown Academy and at Columbian College, District of Columbia (where he graduated in 1860) and at the University of Virginia. He served in the Confederate Army during the Civil War and for several years afterwards was Professor in Columbia College. He subsequently resigned, and practised law at Charlestown. In 1882 he became President of the West Virginia University, but relinquished this position upon entering Congress in 1883, of the lower branch of which he has since been a member. Mr. Wilson was chairman of the Committee which framed the new Revenue Bill, which became law in August, 1894, and the measure hence became known as "The Wilson Tariff." The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him by Columbia University in 1883, and by Hampden-Sidney College in 1886.

WINTER, John Strange. See STANNARD, MRS. ARTHUR.

WOLF, Rudolf, Astronomer, was born at Zürich, Switzerland, on July 17, 1816, and became Professor at the Swiss Polytechnic and Director of the Zürich Observatory. He is widely known for his work upon Solar spots. The following are among his principal works:—"Neue Untersuchungen ueber die Periode der Sonnenflecken und ihrer Bedeutung," 1852; "Geschichte der Astronomie," 1877; "Geschichte der Vermessungen in der Schweiz," 1879; "Handbuch der Astronomie, ihre Geschichte und Litteratur," 1890; and his "Astronomische Mittheilungen," 1856-90.

WOLFF, The Right Hon. Sir Henry Drummond, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., P.C., is son of that eminent missionary and traveller the late Rev. Dr. Joseph Wolff, Vicar of Isle-Brewers, Somersetshire, by Lady Georgiana Mary Walpole, daughter of Horatio, second Earl of Orford, of the present creation. He was born at Malta, Oct. 12, 1830, and was educated at Rugby, under Dr. Tait, and on the Continent; he entered the Foreign Office in 1846, and was made a permanent clerk in 1849. He was an Attaché at Florence in 1852-53, during part of which time he was acting Chargé d'Affaires. In July, 1856, he was attached to the late Earl of Westmorland's special mission to Belgium. In 1858 he was appointed Assistant Private Secretary to the Earl of Malmesbury, and afterwards to Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, and the following year was promoted to an Assistant Clerkship in the Foreign Office. In the same year he was appointed a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, and also Secretary to the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands. In that and the two following years he sat as a member of several Commissions of inquiry into the civil administration, taxation, and education of the Ionian Islands and their inhabitants, and in 1862, was a Commissioner to represent the interests of those islands at the Great Exhibition of that year. He was nominated a K.C.M.G. in 1862, and retired on a pension in June, 1864, on the cessation of the British Protectorate over the Ionian Islands. In 1874 he was elected M.P. for Christchurch in the Conservative interest. He was a member of the Royal Commission on Copyright. In 1878 he was appointed Her Majesty's Commissioner in Eastern Roumelia to represent Great Britain in the preparation of an autonomous constitution for that province. For this service he was appointed a K.C.B., having previously been in succession C.M.G., K.C.M.G., and G.C.M.G. At the election of 1880 he was elected M.P. for Portsmouth. As such he was one of the active group known as the Fourth Party. In June, 1885, he was sworn a Privy Councillor, and in the August following appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the Sultan of Turkey, on a special mission with particular reference to the affairs of Egypt, and High Commissioner in Egypt on Nov. 2. In 1888 Sir Henry Drummond Wolff was appointed Minister to Teheran. He accompanied the Shah on his recent visit to England, and returned to Teheran in Oct., 1889. In 1889 he was made G.C.B. on account of his services in the opening of the River Karun, and at Constantinople and Teheran. In 1891 he was appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Bucharest, and in 1892 Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary at Madrid. He is J.P. for Hampshire and Middlesex, and a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and the Royal Colonial Institute; is the author of a work on "The Residence of the First Napoleon at Elba," of a translation of a work by M. de Lesseps on "The Suez Canal," and of the "Letters of Memnon," on the same subject, of "The Mother Country and the Colonies," and other pamphlets and articles. He married the only daughter of the late Mr. Sholto Douglas.

WOLSELEY (Viscount), Field-Marshal Sir Garnet Joseph, K.P., G.C.B., G.C.M.G., D.C.L,, LL.D., son of Major G. J. Wolseley, of the 25th Regiment of Foot, was born at Golden Bridge House, near Dublin, June 4, 1833, and was educated at a private school and under tutors. He entered the Army as Ensign in March, 1852; became a Captain in Jan., 1855; Major of the 90th Foot in March, 1858; Lieut.-Col. in the Army in April, 1859; and Colonel in June, 1865. He served with the 80th Foot, in the Burmese War of 1852-53, where he was severely wounded, and for which he received a Medal. Afterwards he achieved distinction in the Crimea, where he served with the 90th Light Infantry. At the siege of Sebastopol he was severely wounded, after which he received the Legion of Honour, and the fifth class of the Turkish Order of the Medjidieh. He was also at the siege and capture of Lucknow, and the defence of Alumbagh, where he was made brevet Lieut.-Col. and mentioned with commendation in despatches. In 1860 he served on the staff of the Quartermaster-General throughout the Chinese campaign, for which he received a Medal and two Clasps. He was appointed Deputy Quartermaster-General in Canada in Oct., 1867, and commanded the expedition to the Red River; was nominated a Knight Commander of the Order of SS. Michael and George in 1870; and was Assistant Adjutant-General at headquarters in 1871. He was appointed in Aug., 1873, to command the troops on the Gold Coast during the Ashantee War, with the local rank of Major-General. On Sept. 12, 1873, he and his staff embarked at Liverpool for the West Coast of Africa. After defeating the enemy, Sir Garnet Wolseley, on Feb. 5, entered Coomassie, and received the submission of the King. The success of the expedition justified the confidence which had been reposed in the Commander-in-Chief. On his return to England Sir Garnet Wolseley received the thanks of Parliament and a Grant of £25,000 for his "courage, energy, and perseverance," in the conduct of the Ashantee War; was created a K.C.B.; and was presented with the freedom of the City of London and a splendid sword of the value of 100 guineas, Oct. 22, 1874. He was appointed to command the Auxiliary Forces in April, 1874. At the commencement of the following year he was despatched to Natal to administer the government of that colony and to advise upon several important points connected with the management of native affairs and the best form of defensive organization. On Oct. 2, 1875, he landed at Portsmouth, accompanied by his staff, on his return from the Cape of Good Hope. He remained in command of the Auxiliary Forces till Nov., 1876, when he was nominated a member of the Council of India. On July 12, 1878, he was appointed the Administrator of the Island of Cyprus, under the style of Her Majesty's High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief in the same island. In June, 1879, he was sent to South Africa, as Governor and High Commissioner of Natal and the Transvaal, to reorganise the affairs of Zululand, and on that occasion conducted the operations against Sikukuni, whose stronghold he destroyed. Returning in May, 1880, he was appointed Quartermaster-General at the head-quarters of the Army, and in April, 1882, succeeded Sir Charles Ellice as Adjutant-General of the Army. He was Commander-in-Chief of the Expeditionary Force sent to Egypt in 1882; received the thanks of Parliament; and was gazetted (Nov. 20) Baron Wolseley of Cairo, and of Wolseley, in the county of Stafford. For his services in Egypt, he received from the Khedive, Tewfik Pacha, the Grand Cordon of the Osmanieh. He was also promoted to the rank of General in 1882. On the 12th of May, 1883, he was appointed to the Hon. Colonelcy of the 23rd Middlesex V.B. (now the 2nd V.B. Royal Fusiliers), in succession to Sir Charles Russell, V.C., deceased. He was made D.C.L. of Oxford, and LL.D. of Cambridge. In June, 1883, the University of Dublin conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. In 1884-85 he was Commander-in-Chief in Egypt, and conducted the operations undertaken for the relief of Khartoum, for which services he received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, was made K.P., and raised to the dignity of Viscount Wolseley, of Wolseley, in the county of Stafford. He retired in 1890 from being Adjutant-General to the Forces, and was succeeded by Sir Redvers Buller; Lord Wolseley having been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Forces in Ireland. This position he still holds. In 1894 he was appointed a Field-Marshal, and received his baton in the autumn from the Queen at Windsor. Lord Wolseley is the author of "Narrative of the War with China in 1860," to which is added the Account of a Short Residence with the Tai-Ping Rebels at Nankin, and a Voyage thence to Hankow," 1862; "The Soldier's Pocket Book for Field Service," 1869, 2nd edit. 1871; new edit. 1882; "The System of Field Manœuvres best adapted for enabling our Troops to meet a Continental Army," printed in "Essays written for the Wellington Prize," 1872; "France as a Military Power in 1870 and 1878" in the Nineteenth Century, Jan., 1878. Recently (1894) he published an important biography of the Duke of Marlborough.

WOOD, General Sir Hy. Evelyn, V.C., K.C.B., G.C.M.G., is the youngest son of the late Rev. Sir John Page Wood, Bart., of Rivenhall, some time Vicar of Cressing, Essex, and Rector of St. Peter's, Cornhill, by Emma Caroline, youngest daughter of Mr. Sampson, of Croft West, Cornwall, a captain, R.N., and an admiral in the Portuguese service. He was born at Cressing in Feb., 1838, entered the Navy in 1852, served with distinction as aide-de-camp to Captain Sir William Peel, in command of the Naval Brigade in the Crimea (1854-55). At the unsuccessful assault on the Redan (June 18, 1855), while carrying one of the scaling-ladders, he was severely wounded; he was mentioned with praise in Lord Raglan's despatches. He obtained the Crimean Medal with two Clasps, the 5th class of the Order of the Medjidieh, and a Turkish Medal; and was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour. He next entered the army as cornet 13th Light Dragoons; was promoted to the rank of lieutenant in 1856; captain in 17th Lancers in 1861; and major in 1862. In the Indian campaign of 1858 he served as a brigade-major, and was present at the actions of Rajghur, Sindwaho, Kharee, and Baroda, for which he gained a Medal, and was twice mentioned in despatches. In 1859 and 1860 he commanded the 1st Regiment of Beatson's Irregular Horse, and received the thanks of the Indian Government for his pursuit of the Rebels in the Seronge jungle; he also won the Victoria Cross for valour. He raised the 2nd Regiment of Central India Horse. In Sept., 1873, being a lieutenant-colonel 90th Infantry, he accompanied Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley to the Ashantee War, and organised a native force, which he commanded, with other troops, in the affairs of Essaman, and on the road from Mansu to the River Prah, following the retreat of the Ashantee army from the coast. Lieutenant-Colonel Wood afterwards commanded the right wing of the army in the battles of Amoaful (wounded) and Ordahsu and the capture of Coomassie. For these services he was several times mentioned in despatches, and was nominated a C.B. (1874), promoted to the brevet rank of colonel, and received the Medal with Clasp. Having distinguished himself in both the naval and the military services of the country, he joined the Hon. Society of the Middle Temple in April, 1870, and was called to the Bar in Easter Term, 1874, shortly after his return from the Ashantee War. He served throughout the Zulu War of 1879 in command of No. 4 column. As political agent he raised a contingent of 1,000 friendly Zulus, known as "Wood's Irregulars." Two days after the British reverse at Isandlwana he surprised and defeated a force of several thousands of the enemy, and then maintained an advanced position in the enemy's country, for which he was specially commended by the High Commissioner. He defeated the Zulus in the action of Kambula on March 29, and in April was made brigadier-general. He led the advance to Ulundi with a flying column, and was present in the engagement there on July 4. On his return to England he was received by the Queen in person, and was created a K.C.B. (Sept., 1879). On Nov. 1, 1879, the Bar of England entertained him at a banquet in the hall of the Middle Temple; he was given a sword of honour by the county of Essex, and was made J.P. for the county. He served in the Transvaal War of 1880-81, with the local rank of major-general; was nominated one of Her Majesty's Commissioners for settling the Transvaal territory in April, 1881; created G.C.M.G.; and was re-appointed to command the troops in the Chatham district in 1880. He commanded the 2nd brigade, 2nd division, in the expedition to Egypt in 1882, and for his distinguished services received the thanks of Parliament. In Dec., 1882, he was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Egyptian Army, ranking as chief of the Pachas, or Sirdar. He commanded the line of communication in the Nile Expedition, 1884-5, Grand Cordon of the Medjidieh, Khedive's Star, and Medals. He commanded the Eastern district from April 1, 1886, to Dec., 1889, and the Aldershot District from Jan. 1, 1889 till Oct. 8, 1893, and is now Quartermaster-General to the Forces. He received the Grand Cross of the Bath in 1891.

WOOD, Thomas Waterman, American painter, was born in Montpelier, Vermont, in Nov., 1823. Without the stimulant of artistic surroundings, he early developed a love of art, and as soon as his means would permit, studied his profession in the studio of Chester Harding in Boston. After painting portraits in Canada, Washington, and Baltimore, he went to Europe and received great benefit from the earnest study of the great masters. On his return from abroad he painted portraits in Nashville and Louisville, and set up his easel in New York in 1866 as a figure-painter. He first exhibited at the National Academy of Design in 1858, was elected an Associate in 1869, and an Academician in 1871. He was President of the American Water Colour Society from 1878 to 1887; Vice-President of the National Academy of Design from 1879 to 1891; and has been President of that Institution since that date. Mr. Wood's reputation rests mainly upon his figure pictures, but much of his time is occupied in painting portraits.

WOODALL, William, M.P., was born in 1832, and educated at Liverpool. He is senior partner in the Washington China Works, at Burslem, and is Chairman of the Sneyd Colliery. Was first elected to Parliament as member for Stoke-on-Trent at the general election of 1880, and represented that constituency until the dissolution of 1885, when he was elected for Hanley, being returned unopposed in 1886, and re-elected in 1892, as a Gladstone Liberal. Mr. Woodall was for twelve years Chairman of the Burslem School Board, and is still Chairman of the Free Library, the School of Art, and the Endowed Schools in that town; was a member of the Royal Commissions on Technical Education, and on the education of the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind. In Mr. Gladstone's government of 1886 was appointed Surveyor-General of Ordnance, and in 1892 became Financial Secretary to the War Office. He is an ardent advocate of Women's Suffrage, and of Disestablishment. Mr. Woodall is also one of the Trustees of the Savage Club, and is an occasional contributor to journalism and the magazines. He is a J.P. for Staffordshire and a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour.

WOODFORD, Charles Morris, was born at Gravesend, Kent, Oct. 30, 1852; and is the son of Henry Pack Woodford, of Gravesend. He was educated at Tonbridge School, 1864-70; was elected a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society in 1885; a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society of Australasia (N. S. Wales Branch) in 1888; Member of the Council in 1889; a Fellow of the Linnean Society of New South Wales in 1889; Corresponding Member of Zoological Society in 1889; and was awarded the Gill Memorial by the Royal Geographical Society in 1890, for "Three Expeditions to the Solomon Islands, and the important additions made to our typographical knowledge and natural history of the islands." His works published are: a paper on the "Exploration of the Solomon Islands," read before the Royal Geographical Society, March 26, 1888, published in the "Proceedings" of the Society, June, 1888; a paper on "A Third Visit to the Solomon Islands," read before the Royal Geographical Society, April, 1890, published in the "Proceedings," July, 1890; "General Remarks on the Zoology of Solomon Islands, and Notes on Brenchley's Megapode," published in the "Proceedings" of the Zoological Society, May 1, 1888; and a book entitled, "A Naturalist among the Head Hunters," 1890.

WOODS, Sir Albert William, K.C.M.G., C.B., F.S.A., was born in 1816, and is a son of Sir William Woods, who filled the office of Garter King-of-Arms from 1838 until his death in 1842. He entered the College of Arms as Portcullis Pursuivant in 1838, was appointed Lancaster Herald in 1841, and became Registrar of the College in April, 1886. He was advanced to the office of Garter Principal King-of-Arms, Oct. 25, 1869, in succession to Sir Charles George Young deceased, and received the honour of knighthood on the 11th of the following month. He was attached to the missions for investing the King of Denmark, the King of the Belgians, and the Emperor of Austria with the Order of the Garter, and, as Garter, was joint plenipotentiary for investing the King of Italy, the King of Spain, and the King of Saxony. Sir A. W. Woods holds the office of Registrar and Secretary to the Order of the Bath, Registrar to the Order of the Star of India, King-of-Arms to that of St. Michael and St. George, and Registrar to that of the Indian Empire.

WOODS, Henry, R.A., born April 23, 1847, at Warrington, in Lancashire, is eldest son of the late Mr. William Woods, of that town, was educated at the local grammar school, entered the Warrington School of Art as a pupil at nine years of age, and remained there until he went to London, in the winter of 1864, having obtained a "National Scholarship" in the Art Training Schools at South Kensington. Mr. Woods held that scholarship for three years, working in the Antique and Life Schools, and at the Study of Stained Glass. When he left South Kensington, the latter study was not proceeded with, but he began to illustrate for various periodicals, painting during the greater part of his time. When the Graphic started, Mr. Woods was one of the first members of its staff. His first picture exhibited at the Royal Academy was a little landscape at the first exhibition held at Burlington House. Since then he has been a regular exhibitor. His first pictures of any importance were Thames subjects—"Going Home," "Haymakers," &c. In 1876 Mr. Woods first went to Venice, and joined the group of artists who have made modern Venetian subjects so popular; his earliest pictures of everyday Venetian life were, "A Venetian Ferry" (purchased for the Cape Town Gallery); "Street Trading in Venice;" "A Gondolier's Courtship;" "The Ducal Courtyard;" and "Preparing for the Festa." He was elected Associate of the Royal Academy in 1882. Since then Mr. Woods has painted, "Bargaining for an Old Master," "Preparations for First Communion," "Il Mio Traghetto," "Cupid's Spell," "Choosing a Summer Gown," "The Water-wheels of Savassa," &c. In the Royal Academy, 1890, Mr. Woods exhibited "On the Riva of the Giudecca;" "In the Shade of the Scuola San Rocco;" and "La Promessa Sposa," and his subsequent exhibits in the Academy have been chiefly inspired by Venetian themes. One of his last pictures is entitled "Waiting for a Ferry, Venice," 1894. Mr. Woods is a resident in Venice.

WOODWARD, Henry, LL.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.Z.S., F.R.M.S., V.P. Pal. Soc., Keeper of the Department of Geology, British Museum (Natural History), is the sixth son of the late Samuel Woodward, of Norwich, author of "The Geology of Norfolk," 1833; a "Synoptical Table of British Organic Remains," 1830; &c. His eldest brother Mr. B. B. Woodward, B.A., Lond., F.S.A., was for some years Librarian to Her Majesty at Windsor Castle. His second brother, Dr. S. P. Woodward, F.G.S., for seventeen years in the Department of Geology, British Museum, was a geologist and naturalist of eminence, and author of a "Manual of the Mollusca" (1851-56), which has reached a sale of upwards of 12,000 copies. The subject of the present notice was born at Norwich, Nov. 24, 1832. His father died when he was only five years of age. Henry Woodward was educated at the Norwich Grammar School, and at the Grammar School, Botesdale, Suffolk. Thence, in 1846, he went to reside with his brother, Dr. S. P. Woodward, at that time Professor of Natural History at the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester, where he entered as an out-door student at the College, and worked diligently for three years. There he imbibed that knowledge of geology and love of natural history which, inherited from his father, needed only opportunity and encouragement to develop. In Jan., 1858, Professor Owen, the Superintendent of the Natural History Departments in the British Museum, wrote offering him a junior assistant's post in the Geological Department, under Mr. G. R. Waterhouse, where his brother, Dr. S. P. Woodward, was already a senior assistant. His ready acceptance of this small post evinced his anxiety to take up geology as a profession, and he entered on his new duties with alacrity. In 1859 he was made a second-class assistant; in 1865 a first class; and in 1867 he entered the first class upper section, a proof that his services met with favourable official recognition. In the spring of 1860 he accepted an invitation to join Mr. Robert MacAndrew, F.R.S., on a dredging expedition to the south coast of Spain and the Mediterranean; and at Malaga and Gibraltar he made excellent zoological and geological collections. In 1863 he again joined MacAndrew in a dredging expedition along the north coast of the Spanish Peninsula from Bilbao to Coruna. Excursions were also made into the interior to Vittoria, Burgos, &c. In 1864 Mr. Woodward commenced, and still continues to edit the Geological Magazine, a monthly journal of Geology, now in its thirty-first year. Dr. Woodward's contributions to scientific literature number over 200; he has also published a monograph on the "Fossil Merostomata," and one on "Carboniferous Trilobites," in the volumes of the Palæontographical Society; a Catalogue of British Fossil Crustacea, published by the Trustees of the British Museum; articles on "Mollusca" and "Crustacea," in Cassell's Natural History; and on "Crustacea," in the Encyclopædia Britannica. In 1873-74 Mr. Woodward was elected President of the Geologists' Association, and in Feb. 1894, President of the Geological Society of London. In 1873 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and in 1878 the University of St. Andrews conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. On June 23, 1880, on the retirement of Mr. George R. Waterhouse, the Principal Trustees of the British Museum appointed Dr. Henry Woodward Keeper of the Department of Geology, in which he had served as an assistant for twenty-two years; a promotion which has been received with satisfaction among scientific men generally. In 1857 Mr. Woodward married Ellen Sophia, only child of M. F. Page, Esq., of Norwich, by whom he has two sons and five daughters. Dr. Woodward's eldest son, H. P. Woodward, F.G.S.; is now Government Geologist for Western Australia, and the younger, M. F. Woodward, is Demonstrator in Biology in the Royal College of Science (formerly the Royal School of Mines), South Kensington.

WOOLLEY, Celia Parker, American writer, was born at Toledo, Ohio, in 1848, When she was quite young her parents removed to Coldwater, Mich., where, excepting a few months spent at the Lake Erie Seminary (Painesville, Ohio), she was educated, graduating from the Coldwater Seminary in 1866. Her literary career began with occasional contributions to periodicals. For eight years she was the Chicago correspondent of the Christian Register (a Boston Unitarian weekly); in 1884 Lippincott's published her first short story, and a few others have followed in the same magazine. Her first novel was issued in 1887, and was received with great favour. It was brought out under the title of "Love and Theology," a name changed in later editions to "Rachel Armstrong." She has since published two others: "A Girl Graduate," 1889; and "Roger Hunt," 1892. In 1868 she was married to Dr. J. H. Woolley, and in 1876 went to Chicago. She is an active member of the Women's Club, of which for two years she was President, and before which she frequently lectures. For a period of nearly three years she was assistant editor of Unity, the organ of radical Unitarianism in the West. Mrs. Woolley's mind has always been chiefly engaged in religious and ethical questions, and in Sept., 1893, she accepted a call to the pastorate of the Unitarian Church, Geneva, Illinois, in the duties of which she is now (1894) engaged.

WORCESTER, Bishop of. See PEROWNE, THE RIGHT REV. JOHN JAMES STEWART.

WORDSWORTH, The Right Rev. John. D.D., Bishop of Salisbury, eldest son of the late Right Rev. Christopher Wordsworth, D.D., Bishop of Lincoln, and nephew of the late Bishop of St. Andrew's, and therefore great nephew of the poet, was born at Harrow, Sept. 21, 1843, and educated at Ipswich, Winchester School, and at New College, Oxford, where he graduated in 1865. In 1866 he became a Master at Wellington College, and in 1867 was elected Fellow, and in 1868 Tutor, of Brasenose College, Oxford. He was appointed Prebendary of Lincoln in 1870, Select Preacher at Oxford, 1876; Bampton Lecturer, 1881; Oriel Professor of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture, 1883; and Canon of Rochester in the same year. On the death of Dr. Moberley in 1885 he was appointed Bishop of Salisbury. The Bishop has interested himself in a variety of subjects of a literary and religious character, of which the following are the principal. His chief publications are noticed under each head. 1. Latin Classical Literature.—"Lectures Introductory to a History of Latin Literature," 1870; "Fragments and Specimens of Early Latin," 1874. 2. The Latin New Testament.—He has long been engaged upon a critical edition of St. Jerome's Vulgate for the Oxford Press, and has published nearly the whole of the four gospels, in conjunction with the Rev. H. J. White, V.P. of the Salisbury Theoretical College. Subsidiary to this are a series of "Old Latin Biblical Texts," Oxford, 1883, &c., and "The Corbry St. James's," in the first volume of the "Studia Biblica," Oxford, 1885. 3. The Education Question.—He published several pamphlets at Oxford on the subject of religious education in the Universities, and has since interested himself largely in the cause of voluntary schools, particularly during a school crisis at Salisbury in 1888-9. His Bill for Freedom of Religious Instruction in Board Schools, passed the House of Lords in 1893. His "Prayers for all in College" reached a second edition in 1890. 4. The Old Catholic Movement.—He attended his father at the second Old Catholic Congress held at Cologne in 1872, and has since continued a warm friend of the work. He was present at the Congress of Cologne in 1890, and Lucerne in 1892, and has personally visited the chief centres as well as the leaders of the different Churches in Holland, Germany, Austria, and Switzerland. After the Lambeth Conference of 1888, he was appointed to translate the Encyclical Letter into Greek and Latin, and was asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury to act as Episcopal adviser to Count Campello and the Italian Reformers. In this capacity he has assisted in the revision of the Italian Liturgy (Italian, Bennett Bros., Salisbury; English, Gilbert & Rivington, for Anglo-Continental Society, 1893). 5. Liturgical Questions.—The Bishop was one of the five assessors of the Archbishop in the well-known case of Read v. the Bishop of Lincoln. His Charge of 1891 on "The Holy Communion" reached a second edition in 1892, and contains in its preface some observations on the judgment in that case. Several of the forms for occasional services put out in the Diocese of Salisbury are worthy of attention, particularly that for "Consecration of Churches," &c., and for "Commemoration of Founders, Benefactors, and Worthies of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury." His article on the "Te Deum," in Julien's "Dictionary of Hymnology," contains a large amount of material. He is likewise President of the "Henry Bradshaw Society," and of the "Mediæval Music Society." 6. Church History and Doctrine.—His chief work is one on the relation of Christianity to other Religions, entitled "The One Religion: or Truth, Holiness, and Peace desired by the Nations, and revealed by Jesus Christ," being the Bampton Lecture for 1881, which reached a second edition in 1887. His articles on "Constantine the Great and his Sons," and the Emperor Julien in Smith & Chetham's "Dictionary of Christian Biography" may also be mentioned. 7. Sermons.—He published a small volume of "University Sermons on Gospel Subjects," in 1878, and many single sermons, amongst which two may be mentioned, "On Christian Dicipline of the Will, with a note on Spiritism," and "I am the Door," at a Theological College festival, both in 1893.

WORMS, The Right Hon. Baron Henry De, P.C., F.R.S., M.P. for East Toxteth Division of Liverpool, third son of the late Baron de Worms, of Park Crescent, W., was born in London, Oct. 20, 1840; and educated in Paris and at King's College, London, of which he is a Fellow. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in June, 1863, and practised as a Barrister for about three years. In 1880 he became member for Greenwich, and from that time he took an active part in the debates in the House, especially those relating to Foreign Affairs. He directed attention to the then imperfect administration of the Royal Patriotic Fund, and made certain recommendations which were afterwards embodied in an Act of Parliament. Mr. Gladstone, in acknowledgment of the services thus rendered, made the Baron a Royal Commissioner of the Patriotic Fund. At the general election of 1885, consequent upon alterations caused by the Redistribution Bill, he withdrew from Greenwich, and successfully contested East Toxteth, for which constituency he was returned unopposed in 1886, and was again elected in 1892. In both Lord Salisbury's Governments, he has held the office of Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade. He was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies in Jan., 1888 (to 1892); President of the International Conference on Sugar Bounties in 1887-88; and British Plenipotentiary, in which capacity he signed the Treaty on behalf of Great Britain for the abolition of the Bounties. In Jan. 1889, he became a member of the Privy Council, and in the same year was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society. He is the author of "The Earth and its Mechanism;" "England's Policy in the East;" and "The Austro-Hungarian Empire," the latter being an exposition of Count Beust's policy; and edited the "Memoirs of Count Beust," to which he wrote the preface.

WORTHY, Charles, is the eldest son of the late Rev. Charles Worthy, B.A., Queen's College, Oxford, and for many years Vicar of Ashburton with Buckland, who died in 1879, and of Elizabeth, his wife, first cousin of the late Charles Richardson, LL.D., the Lexicographer (see "Men of the Time," sixth edition). He was born at Snayle Tower, Exeter, Dec. 28, 1840; educated at Exeter Grammar School, and subsequently by his father and private tutors. He was appointed to a commission in the 82nd Regiment in 1858, and proceeded to India in the following year. His health failing him Mr. Worthy retired from the service in 1864, and turned his attention to the History and Antiquities of Devonshire, his native county. Since 1871 he has been a constant contributor of periodical articles on general antiquarian, historical, and genealogical matters, to magazines and newspapers. From 1876 to 1886, he was a member of the Council of the Devonshire Association, and the author of many papers in its "Transactions." Prior to 1879, he was for some time Honorary Local Secretary at Ashburton, under the Science and Art Department, and received the thanks of the Lords of the Committee of Council, "for valuable assistance rendered," in 1884. He has also twice received the thanks of the Chapter of the College of Arms, 1882-1884; those of the Trustees of the British Museum in the latter year; and the thanks of the Society of Antiquaries under their great seal, 1873 and 1879. In 1875 he published "Ashburton and its Neighbourhood," "The Antiquities and History of Fourteen Parishes on the Borders of Dartmoor," fcap. 4to; "The Manor of Winkleigh, the Ancient Seat of the Honour of Gloucester," 8vo, 1876; "Local Guide to Ashburton and Dartmoor," 1879; "Memoir of Walter Stapledon, Bishop of Exeter (1308);" "Notes on Bideford and the House of Granville," (reprinted from Transactions of the Devonshire Association, 1876 and 1884). He was coadjutor to the late Stephen Tucker, Somerset Herald, from 1879-1882. His first volume of "Devonshire Parishes," "The Antiquities, Heraldry, and Family History of Twenty-eight Parishes in the Archdeaconry of Totnes," appeared in 1887. In the following year he published an epitome of English armoury under the title of "Practical Heraldry;" volume 2 of "Devonshire Parishes" appeared in 1889. He also revised the last edition of Murray's "Hand-book for Devonshire," 1887; and printed a pamphlet on "The Life of Lord Iddesleigh, with a Genealogical History of the Northcote Family," Jan. 1887, which ran to a second edition within three days. In 1889, he reviewed portions of White's "Devonshire," for which he had previously written, in 1879, "An Analysis of the Exeter Domesday," and the "History of the Restored Cathedral of Exeter." In 1892, he reviewed and edited Messrs. E. and C. Black's "Devonshire Guide Book." In 1893, he published the "History of the Suburbs of Exeter," with "A Digression on the Noble Houses of Redvers and of Courtenay, Earls of Devon;" and, during the same year, he re-wrote and edited the 12th edition of Black's "Guide to Kent."

One of his most recent works, "Devonshire Wills," with historical notices of several West of England families, was published in 1894, and another "Folk Tales of the West," is now in course of publication (Jan., 1895).

WRENFORDSLEY, The Hon. Sir Henry Thomas, Knight, was educated in France, and having been called to the English Bar, practised for some years on the old Norfolk Circuit. He contested the City of Peterborough, in the Conservative interest, in 1868; and again, in 1874, but without success. In 1876, he was appointed acting Deputy County Court Judge for the Metropolitan districts of Marylebone, Brompton, and Brentford. In 1877, he became Puisne Judge in the Colony of Mauritius; and, in June, 1878, he left the Bench, and became Procureur-General. Before leaving the Colony, he received a vote of thanks from the Legislative Council in respect of his public services in connection with the passing of the Labour Law, and reforms introduced into the judicial administration of the Colony. In 1880, he was appointed to the Chief Justiceship of Western Australia, and received the Dormant Commission from the Crown to administer, in case of need, the Government of that Colony. He was appointed Delegate to represent the Colony at the Intercolonial Conference held at Sydney in 1881; and subsequently, he administered the Government from February to June, 1883. During that period, he organised and started the first Expedition to the Kimberley, or northern district, and named the first town "Derby," by permission of the Secretary of State. A further expedition was despatched for the purpose of extending the telegraph system about 900 miles further north. He received the honour of Knighthood and several public addresses before leaving the Colony In 1883, Sir Henry proceeded in H.M.S. Diamond, to Fiji, as Chief Justice of that Colony and also held the appointment of Judicial Commissioner for the Western Pacific. In 1884, he left Fiji on leave, in consequence of bad health. Before leaving the Colony, he was entertained by the leading merchants and others at the largest banquet ever given in that part of the Pacific. Subsequently, and by permission of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, he became acting Puisne Judge in the Colony of Tasmania. In consequence of the action of the Colonial Office in having filled up his appointment in Fiji, Sir Henry was called to the Bar of Victoria and became a Queen's Counsel. In 1888, he was invited by the Government of Victoria to act as a Judge of the Supreme Court in the absence of one of the Judges, for which duty he received the thanks of the Colonial Government. In 1890 he was appointed by the Secretary of State, acting Chief Justice of Western Australia, and he held that appointment at the time when that Colony received a new Act of Constitution, and became for the first time a responsible Government Colony. In 1891 he was appointed Chief Justice of the Leeward Islands. Sir Henry has thus served the Crown as a Judge of the Supreme Court in six of Her Majesty's Colonies; viz., Mauritius, Western Australia, Fiji, Tasmania, Victoria, and Leeward Islands besides having held the appointments of Procureur-General in Mauritius, and Deputy Governor in Western Australia.

WRIGHT, Charles Romley Alder, D.Sc. (Lond.), B.Sc. (Vict.), F.R.S., was born at Southend, Essex, on Sept. 7, 1844, being the son of the late Romley Wright, C.E. and Elizabeth Alder, of Hull. As a boy, Dr. Alder Wright was greatly attracted by chemical and physical science, attaining some degree of proficiency by self tuition; so that when subsequently he attended classes at Owens College, Manchester (1861-5), he was enabled to take and maintain throughout his entire curriculum the highest place in the examination lists. He graduated as B.Sc. (Lond.) in 1865, and as D.Sc. (Lond.) in 1870. After taking the former degree he became Assistant to Prof. (now Sir Henry) Roscoe, F.R.S., whom he assisted in the prosecution of the earlier portion of his classical researches on Vanadium. During 1866-7, Dr. Alder Wright filled the position of Chemist in the works of the Runcorn Soap and Alkali Co., Weston, Cheshire, and was engaged in technical work of various descriptions. In 1867 he came to London as Assistant, first to the late Dr. A. Bernay, of St. Thomas' Hospital, and subsequently to the late Dr. A. Matthiessen of St. Mary's and St. Bartholomew's Hospitals, with whom several scientific memoirs were published conjointly. During 1869-71, he was engaged in co-operating with Mr. (now Sir) Lowthian Bell, F.R.S., in the prosecution of his elaborate investigations on the Chemistry of Iron Smelting. In 1871 he was appointed Lecturer on Chemistry, Physics, and Practical Chemistry in the medical school of St. Mary's Hospital, London, which appointment he still holds; since which he has been in constant practice as Consulting Technical Chemist, besides devoting much time to original chemical research. In 1881 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, and has held the posts of Examiner in Chemistry to the University of Durham, and to the Royal College of Physicians, and in the subjects of "Iron and Steel" and "Soap Manufacture" to the City and Guilds of London Institute. Since the publication, in 1866, of his first research made in the laboratories of Owens College, Dr. Alder Wright has contributed to the various scientific societies upwards of seventy reports and memoirs on the results of various investigations in pure science, besides numerous minor researches, and many papers on theoretical and technical subjects. These investigations include work done in almost every department of Chemical Science, especially in Inorganic, Analytical and Organic Chemistry, Chemical Physics, and various branches of Technical and Applied Chemistry. His technical researches include investigations connected with the metallurgy of iron, aluminium, various alloys, the manufacture of alkali and of soap, the preparation of waterproof paper and canvas goods ("Willesden" products), novel insulating materials, and disinfectants. In connection with these subjects, several patents have been taken out for processes, some of which are in successful operation; and various communications have been made to the Royal Institution, the Society of Arts, and the Society of Chemical Industry in the form of a series of lectures and papers. The chief books and monographs, &c., published by Dr. Alder Wright are the following;—"Metals and their Chief Industrial Applications" (Lectures delivered at the Royal Institution), 1878; series of articles in "Muspratt's Dictionary" on Coal Tar Distillation and the products thence derived, Anthracene, Benzine, &c., 1874; Monograph on "Iron and Steel" and other articles, Ency. Brit., 1879-81; Cantor Lectures, Society of Arts, on "Manufacture of Toilet Soaps," 1885; "The Threshold of Science," 1892; Monographs on "Soap," "Sulphur," and "Sulphuric Acid" (Thorpe's "Dictionary of Applied Chemistry"), 1893; "Fixed Oils, Fats, Butters, and Waxes, and the Manufacture therefrom of Candles, Soap, and other Products," 1894.

WRIGHT, The Hon. Sir Robert Samuel, M.A., B.C.L., was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he had a distinguished career. He took a First Class in Classical Moderations in 1859, and in Literæ Humaniores in 1860. In 1859-62 he gained three University prizes, the Latin Verse prize, the English Essay, and the Arnold Essay; he was elected to a Fellowship at Oriel, of which he is now an honorary Fellow, and he gained the Craven Scholarship in 1861. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in June, 1865, and joined the Northern Circuit. He has held the office of common law junior counsel to the Treasury for several years. He succeeded the late Baron Huddleston, as one of the Justices of the High Court in Dec., 1890.

WURTEMBURG, Charles Paul Henry Frederick William II. (King of), was born at Stuttgart on Feb. 25, 1848, and is the son of Prince Frederick. He succeeded to the throne on Oct. 6, 1891. He is colonel of several regiments in Wurtemburg, Russia, and Germany, and Proprietary Colonel of an Austrian Hussar regiment. He married, first, the Princess Marie of Waldeck-and-Piermont (Feb. 15, 1877), and second, the Princess Charlotte of Schaumburg-Lippe (April 8, 1886), who was born Oct. 10, 1864. By his first marriage he had one daughter, the Princess Pauline Olga Helen Emma, born Dec. 19, 1877.

WYNDHAM, Charles, was born in 1841, and was educated for the medical profession. He went to America in 1862, and made his first appearance as an actor at Washington with John Wilkes Booth (the assassin of President Lincoln), playing Osric to his Hamlet, and subsequently, Glavis to his Claude Melnotte. On the termination of his engagement he returned to the army, in which he had already served as a surgeon, and was concerned in some engagements that took place in the Civil War. He was attached to the 19th Army Corps, having at one time the medical charge of a brigade, and at another, charge of a regiment. On returning to England he went to Liverpool, to the Old Amphitheatre, where his success was such that it led to a highly remunerative engagement of several months' duration. In May, 1868, he made his first London appearance as Sir Arthur Lascelles in "All that Glitters is not Gold." He returned to America in 1869, and appeared with distinction at Wallack's Theatre as Charles Surface in "The School for Scandal." Coming home again, he re-appeared at the St. James's Theatre in 1872, then under Mr. Stephen Fiske's management, as Rabagas. A provincial tour followed this engagement, and in 1873 he played "the lead" at the Royalty, appearing there notably in the character which he revived in 1886 in "Wild Oats." A version of Mr. Bronson Howard's comedy "Saratoga," called "Brighton," was produced at the Court Theatre in 1874, with Mr. Wyndham in the principal character. In 1875 he went to Berlin and produced a version of "Brighton" in German. From 1876, the Criterion Theatre, under Mr. Wyndham's management, was distinguished by pieces of lively character, until, in 1886, he made trial of old comedy. In the year 1887, another visit to Germany was paid, embracing the cities of Berlin, Frankfort, and Liegnitz, during which "David Garrick," in German, under the title of "Auf Ehrenwort," was played, and proved such a success that an invitation from the Emperor of Russia extended the tour to St. Petersburg and Moscow. On the occasion of his performance in the Russian capital, Mr. Wyndham was presented by the Czar with a magnificent sapphire and ruby ring in recognition of the pleasure which his acting had afforded His Majesty. Two years later another tour to America followed, when Boston, New York, Chicago, Cincinnati, Baltimore, Washington, and Philadelphia were visited, the répertoire including such plays as "David Garrick," "The Candidate," "Wild Oats," "Still Waters Run Deep," and an eccentric comedy, written specially for Mr. Wyndham by F. C. Burnand, editor of London Punch, and entitled "The Headless Man," when fresh laurels were gathered, resulting in a cordial invitation on the part of the American public to revisit the United States at no very distant date. One of the latter characterisations with which Mr. Wyndham has identified himself is Young Marlow, in "She Stoops to Conquer."

Y.

YEAMES, William Frederick, R.A., was born in Dec., 1835, at Taganrog, on the Sea of Azoff, South Russia, of which port his father, Mr. William Yeames, was Her Britannic Majesty's Consul. The family belonged originally to the county of Norfolk. During the years 1842 and 1843 he travelled with his family through Italy. After returning to Russia and spending the winter at Odessa, the family went to Dresden, and there remained till the spring of 1848, when it removed to London. Mr. Yeames received his first instruction in art from Mr. George Scharf, who taught him drawing and anatomy. The young artist also practised drawing from casts in the studio of Mr. J. Sherwood Westmacott. In 1852 Mr. Yeames left England, in order to advance his art education in Italy, and studied at Florence, first for two years under the direction of Professor Pollastrini, of the Florence Academy, afterwards under Signor Raffaelle Buonajuti. Subsequently he spent eighteen months in Rome, and at last, in 1858, he returned to England. In 1859 he exhibited at the Royal Academy a portrait and "The Staunch Friends," a subject-picture of a jester and monkey. In 1861 he was represented there by works entitled "Il Sonetto," with illustrative lines from "Petrarch," and "The Toilet;" in 1862 by "Rescued," a boy saved from drowning; in 1863 by "The Meeting of Sir Thomas More with his Daughter after his Sentence of Death;" in 1864 by "La Reine Malheureuse," Queen Henrietta Maria taking refuge from the fire of the Parliament ships in Burlington Bay; in 1865 by "Arming the Young Knight;" and in 1866 by "Queen Elizabeth receiving the French Ambassadors after the News of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew." In June, 1866, he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy. Since then he has exhibited "The Dawn of the Reformation"' 1867; "The Chimney Corner," and "Lady Jane Grey in the Tower," 1868; "The Fugitive Jacobite" and "Alarming Footsteps," 1869; "Maunday Thursday," and "Love's Young Dream," 1870; "Dr. Harvey and the Children of Charles I.," 1871; "The Old Parishioner," 1872; "The Path of Roses," 1873; "The Appeal to the Podestà," "Flowers for Hall and Bower," and "The Christening," 1874; "Pour les Pauvress" and "The Suitor," 1875; "La Contadinella," "The Last Bit of Scandal," and "Campo dei SS. Apostoli, Venice," 1876; "Waking" and "Amy Robsart," 1877; "When Did You Last See Your Father?" 1878; "La Bigolante; Venetian Water Carrier," his diploma work, deposited on his election as an Academician, 1879; "The Finishing Touch;" Green-Room at Private Theatricals, 1880; "Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush" and "Il Dolce far Niente," 1881; "The March Past," "Prince Arthur and Hubert," and "Welcome as Flowers in Spring," 1882; "Tender Thoughts," 1883; and "St. Christopher," 1887. Recently he has painted some portraits. His latest success was "Le Roi s'Amuse," (Henry III. of France and his pet dogs), in the Academy of 1894. Mr. Yeames was elected a Royal Academiciam, June 19, 1878.

YEATS, W. B., Irish poet, was born on June 13, 1865, at Sandymount, Dublin, and is the son of J. B. Yeats, portrait painter and illustrator. He spent the greatest portion of his childhood in Sligo with his grandparents, but joined his father and mother in London when about nine years old, and then for some years attended the Godolphin School, Hammersmith, as a day scholar, spending his holidays usually in the West of Ireland. When he was fifteen he removed with his parents to Dublin, and there attended the Erasmus Smith School in Harcourt Street. When about nineteen he began studying art at the Royal Dublin Society, but soon gave up this for literature, contributing articles and poems to the Dublin University Review, and other Irish periodicals. In 1888 he moved to London, and in 1889 published his first book of verse, "The Wanderings of Oisin" (Kegan Paul, Trench & Co.), and his first book of prose, "Fairy and Folk Tales" (Walter Scott). The latter is a compilation from the Irish Folk-Lorists, with notes based on Mr. Yeats's own investigations in the West of Ireland. He has since published "Stories from Carleton" (Walter Scott, 1890), a compilation; "Irish Tales" (Putnam's, 1891), a compilation; "John Sherman and Dhoya" (T. Fisher Unwin's Pseudonym Library, 1891), two stories about the West of Ireland; "The Countess Kathleen and Various Legends and Lyrics" (T. Fisher Unwin, 1892); "The Celtic Twilight" (Laurence & Bullen, 1893), a volume of essays mainly about Irish fairy lore; "The Poems of William Blake" (Laurence & Bullen), a compilation; "The Land of Hearts Desire," a one-act play in verse, acted at the Avenue Theatre, London, for the six weeks beginning March 29, 1894; and, together with Mr. Edwin J. Ellis, "The Works of William Blake" (B. Quaritch, 1893), a book in three volumes, the first of which gives for the first time a complete collection of Blake's writings, and the other two an analysis and exposition of the philosophy of his so-called prophetic works. Mr. Yeats has also been a frequent contributor to the National Observer and the Bookman, and has published poems in the two books of the "Rhymer's Club."

YEO, Gerald F., M.D., F.R.S., F.R.C.S., second son of Henry Yeo, Esq., J.P., of Howth, was born in Dublin in 1845; educated at Trinity College, Dublin; graduated in the Dublin University as Moderator in Natural Science in 1866, and in 1867 took the M.B. and M.Ch. degrees. In 1866 an essay by him on Renal Disease was awarded the Gold Medal of the Dublin Pathological Society. He then studied for a year in each of the Great Schools of Paris, Berlin, and Vienna; and on his return to Ireland in 1870 he was appointed Demonstrator of Anatomy in the Medical School of Trinity College. He then took the M.D. and Sanitary degree, and also the qualifications of the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons in Ireland. He taught Physiology in the Carmichael School of Medicine for two years, and then left Ireland; as in 1875, he was appointed Professor of Physiology in King's College, London. In 1877 he was made Assistant Surgeon to King's College Hospital, and became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. While in Dublin he published in the Local Medical Journals, numerous papers, chiefly of a pathological nature. Since coming to London his works—with the exception of a paper on Cerebral Surgery and a report on Bovine Pleuro-pneumonia, have been almost exclusively physiological. Some of his researches were communicated to the Royal Society and have appeared in the Transactions and Proceedings of that body; but the greater part of his contributions were published in the Journal of Physiology. He is the author of a well-known "Manual of Physiology for the Use of Students of Medicine." He has held the post of Examiner in the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and London, the Royal College of Surgeons of England, and the Royal Veterinary College. He acted as Honorary Secretary of the Physiological Society from its foundation in 1875 until 1889. It is a strange coincidence that the only two medical men of the same surname in England should both be at King's College, London; but Mr. Gerald Yeo is not in any way related to Dr. Isaac Burney Yeo.

YEO, Professor I. Burney, M.D., descended from an ancient Cornish family already settled in Cornwall in the reign of Edward III., was born at Stonehouse, Devonshire, and educated privately, until, in 1858, he became a student in King's College, London, where he rapidly distinguished himself, and obtained three scholarships in succession and other distinctions. At the Doctor of Medicine's examination, in the London University, he obtained the number of marks qualifying for the Gold Medal. In 1866 he was appointed Resident Medical Tutor in King's College; this post he resigned in 1871 and began practice in Mayfair, having about that time been elected one of the physicians to the Brompton as well as to King's College Hospitals. He was elected Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians (1876), Hon. Fellow and Professor of Clinical Therapeutics in King's College, London (1885), and Physician to King's College Hospital. Dr. Yeo has contributed largely to medical literature, and has furnished numerous lectures, commentaries, &c., to the Lancet, British Medical Journal, &c. Dr. Yeo has devoted himself, with much success, to the examination and development of methods of treating disease, the branch of medical science known as therapeutics. His well-known work on "Climate and Health Resorts," has gone through three editions, and had for its object the investigation of the influence of climate and mineral water and baths in the cure of disease. This work was followed by a treatise on "Food in Health and Disease," since become the accepted authority on subjects connected with diet and regimen in health, as well as diseased states. Dr. Yeo's last contribution to medical literature (1893) is a "Manual of Medical Treatment, or Clinical Therapeutics," a work dealing adequately with the wide subject of the best methods of treating all forms of what are known as Medical Diseases, as distinguished from Surgical Maladies. The article on "Nutrition and Food, including the Treatment of Obesity and Leanness," in Hare's "System of Practical Therapeutics," published in America, is from the pen of Dr. Burney Yeo. In 1882 he published some lectures on Consumption, in which he drew attention, prominently, to the dicovery of Professor Koch, aud pointed out the probability that this disease is propagated by contagion, a view which is now generally accepted. He is the translator of Oertel's "Respiratory Therapeutics" in Ziemssen's "Handbook of General Therapeutics," and of articles in Ziemssen's "Cyclopædia of Practical Medicine." He has also contributed several articles to the Fortnightly and Contemporay Reviews, and to the Nineteenth Century. Dr. Yeo has been for more than ten years the Medical Adviser in London to the Life Association of Scotland.

YONGE, Charlotte Mary, only daughter of the late W. C. Yonge, Esq., of Otterbourne, Hants, a magistrate for Hampshire, was born in 1823. She is the authoress of several works of fiction, in which the plot is made to enforce, in a plain and sober manner, the doctrines of what is called the High-Church school of opinion. Her best known works are, "The Heir of Redclyffe," "Amy Herbert," "Katherine Ashton," "Heartsease," "Dynevor Terrace," "The Daisy Chain," "The Young Stepmother; or, a Chronicle of Mistakes," "Hopes and Fears; or Scenes from the Life of a Spinster," "The Lances of Lynwood," "The Little Duke," "Clever Women of the Family," "Prince and the Page: a Story of the Last Crusade," and "Dove in the Eagle's Nest." Most of these have gone through several editions, and have been reprinted in a cheap form. It has been stated in the public papers, that she gave £2,000, the profits of her "Daisy Chain," for the building of a Missionary College at Auckland, New Zealand, aud devoted a great portion of the proceeds of "The Heir of Redclyffe" to the fitting out of the missionary schooner Southern Cross, for the use of Bishop Selwyn. Miss Yonge has also published "Marie Thérèse de Lamourons," a biography abridged from the French; "The Kings of England," "Landmarks of History; Ancient, Middle Ages, and Modern," forming a compendium of Universal History for young people; "History of Christian Names and their derivation," 1863; "The Story of English Missionary Workers," in "Macmillan's Sunday "Library," 1871; "Lady Hester," 1873; "Life of John Coleridge Patteson, Missionary Bishop of the Melanesian Islands," 2 vols., 1873; "Stories of English History," 1874; "Stories of Greek History for the Little Ones," 1876; "Aunt Charlotte's German History for the Little Ones," 1877; "Aunt Charlotte's Roman History for the Little Ones," 1877; "Unknown to History; a Story of the Captivity of Mary of Scotland," a novel, 2 vols., 1882; "Stray Pearls; Memoirs of Margaret de Ribaumont, Viscountess of Bellaise," 2 Vols., 1883; "The Two Sides of the Shield," and "Nuttie's Father," 1885; "The Reputed Changeling," 1890; "The Penniless Princess," and "That Stick."

YORK, Archbishop of. See MACLAGAN, MOST REV.

YORK, H.R.H. George Frederick, Duke of, is the second son of the Prince and Princess of Wales, and was born at Marlborough House on June 3, 1865, just seventeen months after his elder brother, the late Duke of Clarence. As boys, the two brothers were inseparable companions, and they entered the Navy together as cadets on June 5, 1877. After two years spent on the training ship Britannia, Prince George and his brother started for a three years tour round the world in the Bacchante, of which a record has been published. In May, 1883, the Duke of York became a midshipman on board the Canada, on the North American station. He passed his examinations with great credit, and became a lieutenant in 1885. In 1890 he was entrusted with the separate command of the gunboat Thrush on the West Indian Station, and opened the Jamaica Industrial Exhibition during that year. In 1891 he was raised to the rank of commander, and in the October of the same year, while staying with his brother in Dublin, contracted a dangerous fever. Early in 1892 the Duke of Clarence died during the pneumonia and influenza epidemic of January, and Prince George became heir to the throne, and was raised to the peerage as Duke of York, a title which had been long in abeyance. In the May of the following year his engagement to the Princess Mary of Teck (Princess "May") was publicly announced, and the marriage was celebrated on July 6 in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. At the ceremony, which was very brilliant, all the members of the Royal Family were present together, with the present Emperor of Russia, at that time Tsarewitch, and the King and Queen of Denmark. A son and heir was born to the Duke and Duchess on June 23, 1894, and was christened after the patron saints of these islands and his grandfather, Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David. The ceremony took place on July 16. In January, 1894, the Duke of York was compelled to decline an invitation to visit Australia which was conveyed to him through the Governor of Victoria, but in November he was present with the Prince of Wales at the funeral of the Tsar in St. Petersburg. In June, 1894, the University of Cambridge conferred their Hon. LL.D. degree upon him.

YOUNG, Sir Allen, C.B., arctic navigator, formerly commanded a ship in the merchant service, which he entered in 1846, and among the many officers of that service who did good work and gained credit at Balaclava during the Russian War, there was no commander whose services were more warmly acknowledged by the late Lord Lyons than were those of Captain Allen Young. Subsequently he volunteered and filled a responsible position on board Lady Franklin's little ship, the Fox, in McClintock's memorable voyage (1857-60), when the problem of the fate of Franklin and his companions was solved. As an officer of the Royal Naval Reserve his commission bears date from the first creation of the force. In 1875, principally at his own expense, he made in his yacht, the Pandora, a gallant though unsuccessful attempt to accomplish the North-West Passage, and to throw some further light on the proceedings of the lost expedition under Franklin, by a search for their records on King William's Land. Again, in 1876, he refitted the Pandora for a second attempt, with the same objects in view; but the Admiralty, having been unexpectedly called upon to communicate with the depots of the Government Expedition in Smith's Sound, Captain Young readily responded to an invitation to fulfil that important duty, which he did at no small risk, and in a manner which was deemed thoroughly satisfactory. In recognition of this service the Queen conferred on him the honour of knighthood, March 12, 1877. An account of the "Two Voyages of the Pandora in 1875 and 1876" was published in London in 1879. In 1882 he commanded the Hope, sent out in search of the Eira arctic ship, which had been lost in Franz Joseph Sound, and rescued the crew of the latter vessel. During the Egyptian War he was present at the operations at Suakim as commissioner afloat to the National Aid Society. Sir Allen Young was created C.B. in 1881, and is Knight Commander of the Imperial Order of Franz Joseph of Austria, Commander of the Order of the Dannebrog, Denmark, and of the Order of the North Star of Sweden, Officer of the Oaken Crown of the Netherlands, and a younger Brother of the Trinity House; besides holding two arctic medals, and the Egyptian War Medal and the Khedive's Star.

YOUNG, Sir Frederick, K.C.M.G., was born in the year 1817, and is the son of the late Mr. George Frederick Young, who represented the shipping interests in the House of Commons as a member for Tynemouth, from 1832 to 1838, and afterwards sat for Scarborough from 1851 to 1852. He had for his grandfather, on the paternal side, Vice-Admiral William Young, who commanded the line-of-battle ship Foudroyant, a stately craft carrying 98 guns, in the days when men-of-war were still picturesque, if not so destructive as they are now, and when our naval commanders relied more upon the pluck of their men than upon the metal of their armament. This gallant admiral was appointed by Lord Keith its naval commander, to superintend the disembarkation of the troops which formed the Egyptian Expedition in March, 1801, and in his cabin died Sir Ralph Abercrombie, who received his mortal wound at the battle of Alexandria. Sir Frederick's mother was of Kentish origin, being Mary, daughter of Mr. John Abbott, of Canterbury. The first work of public utility which calls for notice in this sketch, is one which redounds to the credit of both Sir Frederick and his father. The project of obtaining Victoria Park, and, after rescuing it from the possible spoliation of the speculative builder, throwing it open as a place of popular recreation, originated with Mr. George Frederick Young, who was the author of the scheme. Sir Frederick (then Mr.) Young was asked to act as Honorary Secretary and Treasurer to the Committee then formed to prosecute the scheme. It was not accomplished in a day. Mr. Young, Sen., drew up a memorial for presentation to the Queen, and the matter being undertaken with spirit, it roused such interest that the young secretary soon obtained 30,000 signatures, and the memorial was presented in due course. The agitation thus begun was kept alive for three or four years, constant communications passing between the promoters, Lord Duncannon, and prominent Government officials, until, at last, vested interests were satisfied, the delays of red-tape surmounted, and Victoria Park, as a magnificent open space for the recreation of overcrowded East Londoners, was thrown open to the people. Sir Frederick was also chiefly instrumental in securing Epping Forest for the public, and the domain was made for ever secure from the land-grabber by being placed under the guardianship of the Corporation of the City of London. He was actively engaged in the establishment of the People's Palace, and has taken a benevolent interest in the Emigration Question. In 1869 he embodied his views upon that subject, in a pamphlet entitled, "Transplantation;" and in the following year was elected Chairman of the National Colonial Emigration League. Imperial Federation, of which he was one of the earliest advocates, has likewise largely engaged his attention, and received his support. He was a member of the Executive Committee of the Imperial Federation League granted under the auspices of the late Hon. W.E. Foster, M.P., in 1884. He is the author of several works relating to the Colonies generally, including, among others, "Reasons for Promoting the Cultivation of New Zealand Flax:" "Transplantation: the True System of Emigration;" "Long Ago and Now;" "New Zealand: Past, Present, and Future;" "England and her Colonies at the Paris Exhibition;" "On the Political Relations of Mother Countries and Colonies;" "An Address on Imperial Federation;" and "Emigration to the Colonies;" and was editor of an important work entitled "Imperial Federation," published in 1876. His latest work is "A Winter Tour in South Africa." Sir Frederick Young derives his title from the fact that his services on behalf of "The Colonies" have caused him to be created a Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Order of St. Michael and St. George. He was for many years Honorary Secretary, and since Assistant Vice-President of the Royal Colonial Institute. He is also on the Commission of the Peace for Middlesex, Westminster, the County of London, and the Liberty of the Tower, and a Deputy-Lieutenant of the Tower Hamlets. He married, in 1845, Cecilia, daughter of Mr. Thomas Drane, of Torquay, but she died in 1873.

YOUNG, The Right Hon. George, a Scotch Lord of Session with the courtesy title of Lord Young, eldest son of the late Alexander Young, Esq., of Rosefield, co. Kirkcudbright, born in 1819 and educated at Edinburgh, was called to the Scotch Bar in 1840, appointed Solicitor-General for Scotland in 1852, and retired in 1866. On the return of Mr. Gladstone to power in 1868, he again became Solicitor-General for Scotland, and in Oct., 1869, he was appointed Lord Advocate in the place of the Right Hon. J. Moncrieff. Mr. Young was Sheriff of Inverness-shire from 1853 till 1860, and of Berwick and Haddington from 1860 till 1862. In April, 1865, on the retirement of Sir W. Dunbar, Bart., he was elected member in the Liberal interest for the borough of Wigton, and was again returned in 1865 and 1868. He was defeated at the general election of Feb., 1874, but in the same month he was, on Mr. Gladstone's recommendation, created a Lord of Session and one of the Lords of Justiciary in Scotland.

YOUNG, Sydney, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.C.S., F.I.C., third son of Edward Young, a Liverpool merchant and Justice of the Peace for the county of Lancashire, was born on Dec. 29, 1857, at Farmworth, near Widnes, Lancashire. His early education was conducted at a private school in Southport, and at the Royal Institution, Liverpool. After spending two years in business, Sydney Young entered the Owens College in 1876, and studied there for five years, becoming an Associate of the College in 1880. He matriculated with honours at the London University in 1877, passed the 1st B.Sc. with honours in physics in 1879, and was awarded the Scholarship in Chemistry at the final B.Sc. examination in 1880. He obtained the degree of Doctor of Science in 1883. During his stay at the Owens College, a chemical society was founded by the students, and he and Arthur Smithells, now Professor of Chemistry at Leeds, were elected joint Secretaries of the Society. It was at this time that Prof. Carnelly made the discovery that ice, when exposed to very low pressures, could not be liquefied even on the application of great heat, and, at Sir Henry Roscoe's suggestion, Mr. Young showed the experiment to the Society, and, at the same time, drew attention to the probable explanation of the behaviour of ice under these conditions. In conjunction with Prof. Ramsay he afterwards obtained an experimental verification of this explanation. After undertaking an investigation on "Alcoholic Thiorides" at the Owens College, Mr. Young spent a year in Prof. Fittig's laboratory at the University of Strasburg, and there carried out a research on "Ethyl-valero-lactone" and other compounds. In 1882 Dr. Young was appointed Lecturer and Demonstrator of Chemistry in University College, Bristol, and during the following five years he was engaged in original work, chiefly in physical chemistry, jointly with Prof. Ramsay. On the retirement of Dr. Williamson in 1887 from the professorship of chemistry at University College, London, Prof. Ramsay was appointed as his successor, and Dr. Young was then elected to the Chair of Chemistry in University College, Bristol, a post which he still retains. Dr. Young was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society in 1893; a Fellow of the London Chemical Society in 1881, and a member of the Council in 1894; a Member of the Berlin Chemical Society in 1882; a Member of the London Physical Society in 1886, and a member of the Council in 1894; a Fellow of the Institute of Chemistry in 1888; President of the Bristol Naturalists' Society in 1894, and of the Physical and Chemical Section of the Society in 1893. He was appointed External Examiner in Chemistry for the Victoria University in 1893. Dr. Young is the author of numerous memoirs in Inorganic, Organic, and Physical Chemistry, which have been published by the Royal Society, the London and Berlin Chemical Societies, the Physical Society, the Society of Chemical Industry, and in the Philosophical Magazine and Nature. Many of the researches are on the vapour pressures, specific volumes and critical constants of inorganic and organic compounds, and on the Generalisations of Van du Wauls regarding corresponding temperatures, pressures, and volumes. He is also the author of "Questions on Physics" (Rivingtons, now Longmans), and of articles on "Distillation," "Sublimation," and "Thermometers," in Thorpe's "Dictionary of Applied Chemistry."

Z.

ZANARDELLI, Giuseppe, an Italian statesman, was born in 1826, in Brescia. He became a student in the Ghislieri College at Pavia, and took his degree as Doctor of Law in 1848. He enrolled himself in the legion of students which was formed at that time, and took part in the war of independence. Returning to Brescia after August, 1848, he there prepared the rising which took place in March, 1849. He escaped, and in consequence of the amnesty granted by the Austrian Government, subsequently returned to Brescia, where, from 1851 to 1859, he lived as a private teacher of jurisprudence. When Lombardy became free, in 1859, Zanardelli sat in the Piedmontese Legislature in several Parliaments for Isco. In 1866 he became commissario regio of the Province of Belluno, under the Ministry of Ricasoli. In 1869 he sat on the commission of inquiry into the tobacco Regia. At the Lombard Bar Zanardelli enjoyed a very high reputation as an advocate. After the Ministerial crisis of 1876 he became Minister of Public Works in the first Depretis Cabinet, which portfolio he resigned in Nov., 1877, in consequence of differences with Depretis, which made it impossible for him to sign, as Minister of Public Works, the Railway Convention arranged by the latter. He was appointed to the Home Office in the Cairoli Ministry in March, 1878, and went into opposition on its fall. He was Minister of Justice and Cults under the various Crispi Ministries, and the new Italian Penal Code, which came into force on Jan. 1, 1890, is chiefly due to him. In 1894, on the fall of the Giolitti Ministry, he tried to form a Cabinet, but had to give place to Signor Crispi.

ZANGWILL, Israel, was born in London of poor Jewish parents in 1864, but his early childhood was passed mainly in Plymouth and in Bristol, where he attended the Red Cross Street Middle Class School, reaching the highest class but one before his parents returned to London, in his ninth year. The boy was placed in the Jews' Free School, an immense institution in Spitalfields, where in due course he became head boy, thrice carrying off the scholarships and medals founded to commemorate the admission of Jews into Parliament. He remained at the school as a teacher, and after the laborious work of the day studied for a degree at London University, where he graduated B.A. with triple honours before he was twenty-one. He also took the highest possible teachers' certificate. He had scribbled from childhood, and in his sixteenth year a prize-serial from his pen ran through a London weekly, but it was not till he had graduated that he was able to turn seriously to literature. He began a political skit with a friend which developed into a long fantastic romance called "The Premier and the Painter," which was published in 1888, and has passed through several editions. Before its publication his desire to introduce reforms in the scholastic routine had brought him into conflict with the authorities, and he resigned his position, and, being penniless, was about to canvass for advertisements, when he found a less humble journalistic opening. Two years later he founded Ariel, or the London Puck, which had a short life of a couple of years, during which Mr. Zangwill also came into notice as a speaker in the debates of the Playgoers' Club. The death of Ariel, and the publication, in 1891, of "The Bachelors' Club," which was an instant success on both sides of the Atlantic, enabled Mr. Zangwill to devote himself to literature, and in 1892 he enrolled himself among the serious novelists by his "Children of the Ghetto," a study from the life of a section of humanity hitherto neglected or distorted in fiction, which provoked especial controversy in America. Mr. Zangwill's other works are: "The Old Maids' Club," 1892, a mélange of prose and verse; "The King of Schnorrers: Grotesques and Fantasies," 1894; and a trio of smaller books entitled respectively "The Big Bow Mystery" (1891), "Merely Mary Ann" (1893), and "Ghetto Tragedies" (1893). In his new novel, "The Master," Mr. Zangwill abandons the Ghetto. Mr. Zangwill has also tried his hand at other departments of literature, his causerie "Without Prejudice," which mingles prose and poetry, being a regular feature of the Pall Mall Magazine, while his commedietta "Six Persons" has had a long run at the Haymarket Theatre.

ZANZIBAR, Sultan of. See HAMED BEN THWAIN.

ZELLER, Eduard, German theological and philosophical writer, was born at Kleinbottwar in Würtemberg, Jan. 22, 1814, and studied at Tübingen and Berlin. In 1847 he became Professor of Theology at Berne, in 1849 at Marburg, and in 1862 Professor of Philosophy at Heidelberg; and subsequently in Berlin, where he has since remained. His principal works are: "Platonic Studies," 1839; "The History of Greek Philosophy," 4th edit. 1876; "Critical Study of the History of the Apostles," 1854; "State and Church," 1872; "Strauss, his Life and Writings," 1874; and his chief work "The History of German Philosophy since Leibnitz," 1873. Several sections of his "History of Greek Philosophy," which is still the standard work on the subject, and widely used in the English Universities, have been translated into English by the late Miss S. F. Alleyne. One of his latest works (1886) is entitled "Friedrich der Grosse als Philosoph."

ZENKER, Dr. Wilhelm, was born in Berlin, May 2, 1829, and educated wholly in that city, where also he obtained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in 1850. He was for many years a teacher of natural science, but has now retired. He has written many memoirs on very various subjects, of which may be quoted "De natura sexuali generis Cypridis," 1850; "Memoir on the Depression in Northern Africa found by Gerh. Rohlfs," in the Zeitschrift für Erdkunde, 1872; "Der Venusdurchgang, 1874," 1874; "Meteorologischer Kalender," 1886; "Die Vertheilung der Warme auf der Erdoberfläche," 1888.

ZIMMERMANN, Agnes, was born at Cologne on July 5, 1847; at four years of age she came to England, and after studying under her father and one or two private masters, was entered at nine years of age as a student at the Royal Academy of Music, where Cipriani Potter was her master at the piano, and Dr. Steggall taught her harmony. On Cipriani Potter's retirement, in 1860, Herr Ernst Pauer became the young student's piano master, and she then began to study composition under Professor Macfarren. She continued to work hard, and while yet a pupil composed several works, instrumental and vocal, which were performed at the Royal Academy Students' Concerts. In 1860 she obtained the King's Scholarship, and the same honour fell to her in 1862; in the following year she won the Silver Medal and on Dec. 5 she made what may be fairly termed her first appearance, at a Crystal Palace concert. In 1864 Miss Zimmermann went to Germany, where she played at the Leipzig Gewandhaus Concerts, before the Court of Hanover, and elsewhere. Returning to England, she grew rapidly in public favour. In 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882 and 1886 Miss Zimmermann played at many public concerts in Germany—at Hamburg, Düsseldorf, Brunswick, Berlin, Frankfurt, Leipzig, Halle, &c., as well as privately to the Courts at Dresden, Berlin, Darmstadt and Brussels. For many seasons she has regularly taken part in the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts, and has played in most of the provincial cities and at the principal places in Scotland. Miss Zimmermann's own compositions are well known to musicians, and her editions of Beethoven's and Mozart's Sonatas are standard works among students. She is now engaged on an edition of Schumann's works, the first volume of which was published in 1890.

ZIMMERN, Helen, was born in the free Hanse Town of Hamburg, March 25, 1846, but has lived in England since 1850, and is a naturalized British subject. She is the author of "Stories in Precious Stones," 1873; "Schopenhauer, his Life and Philosophy," 1876; "Gotthold Ephraim Lessing, his Life and his Works," 1878; "Half Hours with Foreign Novelists," 1880; "Tales from the Edda," illustrated by Kate Greenaway, 1882; and a paraphrase of the Persian poet, Firdusi, issued under the title of "The Epic of Kings," and illustrated with etchings by Alma-Tadema, R.A., 1882; "Life of Maria Edgeworth," 1883; "The Hanse Towns," 1889; an edition of the "Comedies of Goldoni," 1892; and a translation of the "Pentamerone," new edition, 1893. She also writes much for periodicals and for English, American, German, and Italian newspapers.

ZOLA, Emile, French realistic novelist, born in Paris, April 2, 1840, passed his infancy in Provence with his father, the originator of the canal which bears his name at Aix. He then studied in the Lycée Saint-Louis, in Paris, and obtained employment in the well-known publishing firm of Hachette & Co. He gave up that situation about 1865, in order to devote his attention exclusively to literature. He has been an industrious contributor to the newspaper press, and has written the following works of fiction:—"Contes à Ninon," 1863; "La Confession de Claude," 1865; "Le Vœu d'une Morte," 1866; "Les Mystères de Marseille;" "Thérèse Raquin;" "Manet," a biographical and critical study, 1867; "Madeleine Férat," 1868; and his famous series, now completed, of political, social, and physiological studies, entitled, "Les Rougon-Macquart, Histoire naturelle et sociale d'une Famille sous le second Empire," which has been called his "Human Comedy;" the earlier volumes are entitled respectively "La Fortune des Rougon," "La Curée," "Le Ventre de Paris," "La Conquête de Plassans," "La Faute de l'Abbé Mouret," "Son Excellence Eugène Rougon," and "L'Assommoir" (1874-77.) The last-named volume created a great sensation, and has passed through many editions. M. Zola has since written novels, entitled, "Une Page d'Amour," 1878; "Le Bouton de Rose," a three-act comedy played at the Palais Royal in 1878; "Nana," 1880; "Pot Bouille," 1882. His later works are:—"La Joie de Vivre," "Au Bonheur des Dames," "Germinal," "L'Oeuvre," "La Terre," "La Bête Humaine," "L'Argent," "La Débâcle," 1892, which vividly describes the War of 1870-71, and "Le Docteur Pascal," which sums up the history of the Rougon-Macquart clan, and contains their genealogical tree philosophically drawn out. In 1888 M. Zola was appointed a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and in 1891 (April) was made President of the French Society of Men of Letters. During recent years Mons. Zola has repeatedly offered himself as a candidate for election to the Forty Immortals of the French Academy, but that eminently conservative body of literary men has repeatedly refused to receive him in its midst. He is reported to have written his little Roman Catholic Idyl "Le Rêve" with a view to propitiating men who could not tolerate his realism, but, be that as it may, he was not elected in 1891, when Pierre Loti was chosen instead of him, nor indeed subsequently. In 1893 M. Zola visited London on the invitation of the Institute of Journalists, whom he addressed on the subject of "Anonymity in Journalism." He was present at a reception given by the Corporation at the Guildhall. During 1894 he published "Lourdes," a work containing lurid descriptions of the pilgrimages made to the Pyrenean town of that name. It created a great stir among certain religious circles, and when M. Zola subsequently visited Rome and sought admission to the presence of the Pope, Leo XIII. refused him an audience. However, the great realist is now understood to be busy on a work descriptive of the Papal court and its surroundings, which will be called "Rome." Another novel promised by him is to be entitled "Paris." Immense editions of Zola's works have been published, though in many countries his translators have been prosecuted and punished as criminals by

ZORRILLA, Manuel Ruiz, was born in Castile, in 1834. He was a Madrid barrister and a deputy in the Cortes, when the share he took in the June revolt, 1866, earned him a condemnation, and he was compelled to seek refuge beyond the French frontier. In the Provisional Government of Admiral Topete, after the Revolution of 1868, he was minister of Public Works, and caused much discontent when he ordered that church property should be taken into the custody of the State. He was Law Minister to Marshal Serrano in 1869, and, as President of the Parliament, advocated the Duke of Aosta's candidature to the throne. This advocacy was successful and on the accession of the Duke under the title of Amadeo I., Zorrilla was his righthand man. For his services he received, almost alone among non-royal personages, the famous order of the Annunziata, which ranks with the Golden Fleece and the Garter. When Amadeo abdicated, Zorrilla went to Portugal with him. He went back to Spain, but having allied himself openly with the Republicans, his position grew intolerable under King Alfonso, and in consequence he left the country. Since that time he has professed extreme Republican opinions, and is supposed to have been at the bottom of every conspiracy that has disturbed the peace of Spain between 1876 and 1879. He lived in England, France, or Switzerland, according to the needs of the moment, and his intrigues were a perpetual source of anxiety to every Spanish Government in turn. In March, 1879, the Sagasta Cabinet gave him permission to re-enter Spain, but he refused to do so so long as his political allies continued under their various disabilities. In 1888 he addressed a manifesto to the Republican party in Madrid, and demanded that the Constituent Cortes should re-assemble. After trying for five years to maintain political agitation in Spain, he offered himself as a Republican candidate at the elections held in Madrid on March 6, 1893. He met with what was considered unheard of success, and was returned for the capital with five other Republican deputies and only two Conservatives.
